Ādī Śaṅkara says beautifully: If you imbibe even a little of Bhagavad Gītā, if you drink even a drop of Gaṅgā water, if you think even once about that great Master Śrī Kṛṣṇa, you will never have to face death.

oṃ tatsaditi śrīmadbhagavadgītāsu upaniṣatsu brahmavidyāyāṃ yogaśāstre śrīkṛṣṇārjunasaṃvāde arjunaviṣādayogo nāma prathamo'dhyāyaḥ || 1 ||

Thus ends the first chapter named Arjunaviṣāda Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Arjuna's Dilemma,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 2
Sāṅkhya Yogaḥ

You are God

It is here that we enter into the real Gītā. It is from here that Bhagavān or God, Narāyaṇa tarts speaking and singing the Gītopaniṣad into the listening of Nara Arjuna, and through Arjuna into the listening of the whole of humanity.

Until now Kṛṣṇa was speaking as a man, as Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa, in His human form, but it is only from here that Kṛṣṇa sings as Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, in His divine state as Bhagavān, the universal Kṛṣṇa.

In the first chapter, Kṛṣṇa does not say a word to interrupt Arjuna. He allows Arjuna to speak fully into His listening for one whole chapter of Arjunaviśāda yogaḥ. He keeps quiet and remains in the space of integrated listening even on seeing the depth of Arjuna's confusion and depression. He consciously analyzes the root of Arjuna's thoughts, his root thoughts patterns to determine the platform of confusion and powerlessness upon which Arjuna is standing.

Look in! When was the last time you really listened to your own words? We never ever really listen, either to ourselves or to others. When you really start listening to yourself, you will naturally become more aware of the words you give to yourself and others. You will also have the ability to listen to others' words with integrity.

Listening is directly connected to your ability to handle reality as it is, without creating your own unconscious ideas and conclusions.

Please listen, the moment you start talking to somebody, when you don't have listening, you start coming to your own conclusion even before the information is cognized in you, either by rejecting that person or taking that person as a big threat. Both will lead you to suffering.

That is why the very first step of Hindu spiritual practice is sṛavana, Integrated Listening. It is possible to become a successful businessman just by studying the first few chapters of Gītā. You can reach the peak possibility of your profession and of your life just by learning the art of integrated listening from Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Once you provide your integrated listening to yourself and others, you will automatically be able to speak into the listening of others and thus communicate to enrich yourself and commune to enrich others as well.

When you experience the words you utter to you and to others as the extension of your life, they directly affect you. When the words uttered by you are not listened to, the completion is disturbed. If you are talking, and a few people in front of you are completely restless and not listening to you, you will never be able to express the complete ideas, which you are about to express. You will not be able to have completion in your delivery. Even in your house, if the person to whom you are talking to is not in the space of listening, the ideas you are going to express will never be delivered. It may lead to an argument, but it may never lead to intelligence transfer. Information transfer is argument. Intelligence transfer is Listening. In arguments, information can be transferred, but never intelligence. Only in integrated listening can intelligence be transferred.

Listening makes you God

We hear mechanically at best; we never really listen with integrity. Hearing is not listening.

Integrity, the power of words starts with listening, continues with listening. Human beings miss life when they miss listening. For a person who wants to begin life, the first thing he needs to learn is listening. Listening is God. Just by listening you experience God.

In Vedānta, the first principle is śṛavana or Integrated Listening; the second principle is manana or Intranalyzing, analyzing the truth for the sake of internalizing it not for rejecting it; and the third principle is nidhidhyāsana or Living and radiating the truth!

Any transmission of knowledge, energy or experience happens between a Master and disciple only when the disciple gives his or her listening. Even Hindu Ṛṣis start with this chant:

śrunvantu viśve amṛtasya putrāḥ vedāhamehaṃ puruśam mahāntaṃ ||

Oh! Sons of Immortality, please listen!

Here, Kṛṣṇa is giving His integrated listening to Arjuna. He is interested in the real problem and not in expressing what He knows. He wants Arjuna to learn the ability to give integrated listening to himself, to have the clarity of mind. He is interested in enriching him to find a solution to his own problem. He allows Arjuna to speak so that He can listen and transmit the ultimate knowledge and experience of completion to him.

One needs intelligence and the space of completion to listen. Unless you start living completion, you will not even be able to maintain listening. Even listening is achieved with completion. Completion brings listening to you. Only an enlightened master, a complete incarnation like Kṛṣṇa can listen, only He can speak into the listening of others. In the first chapter He listens fully and completely. Even in this second chapter named Sāṅkhya Yogaḥ, He allows Arjuna to speak into His listening in many verses.

Right listening means allowing the words to enter in your inner space automatically; letting them cognize without you constantly interfering with your incompletions.

Kṛṣṇa knows that His right listening will cause Arjuna's listening to himself. And Arjuna's listening will initiate Kṛṣṇa's speaking into the listening of Arjuna, moving him with the power of His words, burning all his self-doubting patterns. Arjuna then, will not only be reawakened to his powers, but will also cause these powers for others, and will expand to his peak possibility; enriching himself and the world with enlightenment.

Understand, sitting in completion with listening is Upaniṣad. This is the subtlest and most powerful of all communications. At this level, communication becomes communion.

Sitting in completion in the space of listening is Upaniṣad. So, please move to the space of Upaniṣad. Sit in Upaniṣad, in the space of listening. When you are in completion, you can sit even facing the wall for twelve years that Bodhidharma did. He was facing the wall of the cave sitting for twelve years, because he was in completion. When you are in incompletion, even watching a movie facing the television, you can't sit more than ten minutes; you go on changing channels.

The essence of all the Hindu scriptures is called Upaniṣad or 'just sitting.' It is the ultimate technique. When you sit with the Master, the Upaniṣad, the sitting happens; some strange process starts happening in you, which can neither be called a technique nor a no-technique. It is literally like cooking or boiling.

Here Kṛṣṇa allows Arjuna to verbalize, He allows him to speak into His pure listening, so that to begin with, Arjuna himself will develop the ability to have integrated listening and understand his problem. Once Arjuna cognizes and expresses his confusion, he can relapse into silence and commune with the Master of completion in the space of Upaniṣad.

Drop the Powerlessness and Stand Up

2.2 Bhagavān Krsna says: Where from have these impurities descended on you at this critical time, Arjuna! You behave unlike a nobleman and this will keep you away from realization.

क्लैब्यं मा स्म गमः पार्थ नैतत्त्वय्युपपद्यते ।
क्षुद्रं हृदयदौर्बल्यं त्यक्त्वोत्तिष्ठ परन्तप ॥ २-३॥

2.3 Do not yield to fear, Pārtha! It does not befit you. Drop this faint powerlessness of heart and stand up, O Parantapa, destroyer of enemy.

Arjuna was distraught with pity and despair. His pity was for his opposition that consisted of kinsmen, elders, teachers, relatives and friends. He despaired at the thought of what would happen if he did have to kill them. He had collapsed in his chariot and his bow and arrow had slipped from his hands.

Kṛṣṇa allowed Arjuna to exhaust himself, physically, emotionally and spiritually. He listened to him carefully, completely. Kṛṣṇa wanted to give Arjuna time to open his mind, heart and being to Him, Arjuna's friend, guide and master, so that His answers would penetrate Arjuna's very being.

Then He spoke for the first time, as if opening His being directly. Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says, 'My dear Arjuna, how have you acquired these impurities? They do not at all befit a man who knows the value of life. They lead not to higher planes but to infamy, akīrti karam arjuna.'

śrī bhagavān uvāca

kutas tvā kaśmalam idaṁ viṣame samupasthitam | anārya juṣṭam asvargyam akīrti karam arjuna || 2.2 ||

This verse is connected to the next one.

'O Pārtha! Do not yield to this degrading impotence. It does not befit you. Give up such petty powerlessness of heart and arise, O Parantapa, destroyer of enemy.'

klaibyaṁ mā sma gamaḥ pārtha naitat tvayy upapadyate | kṣudraṁ hṛdaya daurbalyaṁ tyaktvottiṣṭha parantapa || 2.3 ||

Kṛṣṇa gives the direction to the whole Gītā with this one truth to awaken Arjuna from his delusory incompletions. Kṛṣṇa is the true Master and does not beat around the bush. Understand that Kṛṣṇa is not a philosopher; He addresses the dilemma of Arjuna straightaway.

Kṛṣṇa asks Arjuna directly, 'How did such impurities, such incompletions come upon you? They are not for a man like you. They will not lead you to higher planes but only defame you.' In the next verse He asks Arjuna to give up this powerlessness and asks him to arise, addressing him as 'Parantapa, destroyer of the enemy.'

Kṛṣṇa knows Arjuna's root thought pattern. Please understand that Arjuna is not depressed because of a spiritual search. It is just that he does not want a solution; he wants only support.

Understand, asking for solutions and asking for support are two different things. What Arjuna needs is support, not a solution. This is why Kṛṣṇa does not speak of spirituality in these two verses. Arjuna's root thought pattern originates from fear and worry. His maṇipūraka cakra (navel center) and svādiṣṭhāna cakra (being center), energy centers within the body that get locked due to worry and fear, are now completely locked. Because of his fear pattern, he has deep seated incompletions, stress and worry.

Kṛṣṇa addresses Arjuna's deep fear and powerlessness straightaway without any philosophy, and asks him to give up his foolish weakness and get up and fight - tyaktvottiṣṭha parantapa. He does not offer any consolation, just a straightforward scolding, and a slap to awaken him!

Kṛṣṇa Hits Arjuna's Root Pattern

If Arjuna had been in a mood of stotra, meaning devotional surrender that he reaches only later on, these two verses would have served as sūtra or techniques for him. Had he been without fear and expressed full faith and devotion in Kṛṣṇa, these two verses would have been enough to wake him up and stand powerfully. The entire Gītā would have been encapsulated here, making it needless to continue for eighteen chapters.

Sāstra, stotra and sūtra (wisdom, devotion and technique) all three can be a means to enlightenment for people of corresponding aptitudes. These are not exclusive, in that one must be practiced to the exclusion of another. The same person may be in a state to receive a stotra today and a śāstra tomorrow. At this point, Arjuna is in the state to be intellectually convinced and Kṛṣṇa employs śāstra as the right approach. Since he was not in the mood of stotra, not yet ready with devotion and faith, Kṛṣṇa had to create the śāstra or method, to bring him to the stotra state. The whole issue was due to his root pattern of fear plus worry and powerlessness because of this fear.

All our depression, worry patterns are nothing but root pattern of a deep fear of life, a deep self doubt, fear of expansion and fear of losing something. You need to stand up and complete with your root thought patterns to be rid of them. Please understand, even your ignorance is nothing but your fear of expansion. Many times, you continue to pretend to be in ignorance, because of your fear of failure.

There are many levels of fear: fear of losing our wealth and status, fear of losing a limb or our health, fear of losing our near and dear ones and fear of the unknown or death. That is why Kṛṣṇa says that Arjuna is not behaving as an ārya, a word that can be interpreted as a nobleman; an integrated human, not a particular race or caste. Hindu literatures say that an ārya is one who is evolved, cultured, integrated and authentic, a prince amongst men.

Arjuna is confronted with all the four fears: fear that he may lose whatever he possesses, that he may be maimed in the war, that he may lose his near and dear ones, and fourth, that he may lose his very life. These fears have in turn led to his powerlessness of heart. Understand, all your fears, all your anxieties, all your patterns are directed only in one line and this is the fear of your possibilities.

Your bigness frightens you. You always believe that you are suffocated by your smallness. No! You are suffocated by your bigness. Whenever bigness is demanded of you, whenever you feel you are being 'forced' to expand, you shrink even further into your comfort zone. Arjuna's tiredness, his weakness, his powerlessness all these are nothing but the resistance he has to seeing his own bigness.

That is why, when someone tells you that you are weak, poor and a sinner, it is so easy to accept it. But if someone tells you that you are Divine, you are powerful, you are complete, your whole identity starts trembling with fear. Arjuna trembles and collapses totally fearing his bigness, shrinking into his weak-heartedness.

But life always demands your expansion, because expansion is the natural law of life. Here, Kṛṣṇa, the source of life, demands Arjuna to stand up and expand into his powerfulness, and give up his degrading powerlessness unbefitting an ārya prince, who is also famous as parantapa, conqueror of enemies. But Arjuna is carrying such a deep fear of life, especially fear of life in the form of other people because people are the most living expression of Life. The whole Kaurava army and his dear ones are the people who now represent his deepest fears of life.

The more you engage with life, the greater the expansion that will be demanded of you. Whenever you are feeling weak, tired, and powerless, the first thing you should do is this: immediately take on ten responsibilities and commit to fulfill them within an impossibly short time. Shake your inner space so powerfully with that commitment that there will be no way for weakness and tiredness to grow inside you.

Later on in the Gītā, in the eleventh chapter, after beholding Kṛṣṇa's cosmic vision, Arjuna realizes who Kṛṣṇa truly is; that He is beyond everything and beyond his imagination, his comprehension. He is not surprised any longer that all the deities worship Him and surrender to Him. Kṛṣṇa then repeats the same words that He says now, after which the Gītā ends and Arjuna engages in the war.

These same words uttered by Kṛṣṇa later on, when Arjuna is in the state of stotra, a state of pure devotion and faith, become the sūtra, the technique of enlightenment for Arjuna. When you are in devotion, you will just live life. You will not have any fear. Fear is always out of powerlessness. When you are in love, you will not know anything called fear or worry. That stage is yet to happen. Since Arjuna is not yet in the devotional state now, these words are only plain wisdom.

The master needs to first prove that he is God in order to make you understand that you are God. Here Kṛṣṇa does the same thing by repeating that He is all of this. Kṛṣṇa later explains His glory and that all the deities, Vedas, the scriptural wisdom, are worshipping at His feet; the whole world is in Him. He makes these incredible statements that would appear egoistic to a normal person. And yet Kṛṣṇa says all this, even at the risk of being misunderstood. He repeats that He is God to make you realize that you are God. With authority He states, 'I am God' to make you realize that you are God.

Continuously human beings resist expansion. Incarnations happen on the planet to remind human beings about their possibilities, to expand human consciousness. That is why again and again they are doubted. Arjuna is Nara, human being who resists his expansion, and Śrī Kṛṣṇa is Narāyaṇa, Divine Incarnate who reminds him of his highest possibility of expansion that he is God, that Nara is the reflection of Narāyaṇa, who is mirroring the infinite inner space of God. It is the authority with which Kṛṣṇa is seen transmitting the Gītā that makes it a scripture. 'I am the Divine,' says Kṛṣṇa. 'If you believe in Me, you too shall realize your inner divinity.' It is this profound yet simple message that has resounded so deeply in the hearts, minds and beings of generations of Hindus, in turn establishing the scriptural sanctity of the Gītā.

Possibility of Sudden Enlightenment

Here all the verses of the Gītā are reduced to just two verses by Kṛṣṇa. He straightaway addresses and completes the root pattern where Arjuna is stuck, that is in his need for name and fame or rajas. A man who is centered on sattva, goodness, who has neither greed nor lethargy but a neutral attitude, will work out of compassion. A man who is centered on rajas will work only for name and fame. A man who is centered on tamas, lethargy, will work only for sensual pleasures.

Duryodhana works only through tamas, which explains his cruel and gross behavior. Dharmarāja Yudhiṣṭira works through sattva, out of compassion. Here Arjuna is centered on rajas, therefore he is working only for name and fame. This is why Kṛṣṇa asks him not to work in this way as it would ultimately bring Arjuna a bad name, akīrti karam arjuna.

This is how He straightaway puts His hand on the tumor, the tumor that is the subtle root pattern working within Arjuna.

Here Kṛṣṇa tries the first method of sudden enlightenment, the immediate liberation, the ultimate possibility but Arjuna is not mature enough to receive it or comprehend it. So Kṛṣṇa now starts the process of explaining it to him step-by-step.

Kṛṣṇa is God and So are You

There are two ways in which people react to the sanctity and divinity of Kṛṣṇa in Bhagavad Gītā. To one set of people, Kṛṣṇa has no special qualification to be called divine and these people may not even believe in anything such as the Divine. As atheists or agnostics, the only way such people can be convinced is initially through the rationale of the dialogue in the Gītā. The dialogue surpasses anything written in any language at any point in time in its clarity and wisdom. The message of Kṛṣṇa is universal and timeless. Those who do not accept and understand, it just means that as of now, it is not their time to accept, understand and transform.

The laws of nature do not change just because we do not accept and understand them. The earth was always round and never flat and it always revolved around the sun and not the other way around, even when the societal leaders denied these truths and killed people for expounding these truths. Understanding the divinity of Kṛṣṇa is a step to intranalysing and living one's own divinity. That possibility of divinity is what completes and liberates. That is why Ādī Śankaracārya, the enlightened Master says in the verses of Bhaja Govindaṁ, 'Even a little reading of the Bhagavad Gītā will liberate you from death.'

Surrender Is Not Based On Powerlessness na hi prapaśyāmi mamāpanudyād yacchokamucchoṣaṇamindriyāṇām

avāpya bhūmāvasapatnamṛddhaṃ rājyaṃ surāṇāmapi cādhipatyam || 2.8 ||

2.8 Even if I were to attain unrivalled dominion and prosperity on Earth or even lordship over the Gods, how would that remove this sorrow that burns my senses?Despite what Kṛṣṇa had said with total clarity, that Arjuna should get up and fight, Arjuna now recounts all his previous arguments. It is as if he had not listened to Kṛṣṇa at all or gave his right listening.

He once again implores Kṛṣṇa, 'You, as the Lord of the Universe, have the right to destroy what you please. You destroyed the demons Madhu and Keśin and many other enemies. You are justified because you are the Lord. How can I, a mere mortal, be bold enough to wage war against my grandfather and my teacher, with the intent to kill them? They are ones I should worship, not destroy. I shall be condemned if I fight them.

Take Decisions out of Completi

Arjuna is now pleading Kṛṣṇa, 'Oh Lord, leave me now! I will beg and eat becoming a sannyāsi.' He continues, 'It is better for me to seek alms as an ascetic or even a beggar than kill these elders - śreyo bhoktuṁ bhaikṣyam apīha loke (2.5). Once my hands are stained with their blood, how can I enjoy worldly pleasures? I am confused as to which would be better, for them to slay me or for me to slay them, yadvā jayema yadivā no jayeyuḥ (2.6). How can we live after slaying our kinsmen and elders? - yān eva hatvā na jijīviṣāmas.'

Understand, Bhagavān is not against Arjuna's sannyāsa. He does not want Arjuna to take sannyās out of powerlessness. Arjuna says, 'Oh Lord, leave me. I will beg and eat - bhoktuṁ bhaikṣyam.' No! I tell you, Arjuna would not have become a sannyāsī. He would have gone and asked for food in a royal way, 'Hey, give me food.' If somebody doesn't give, he would have picked up his Gāṇḍiva bow and arrow to shoot the person for his food.

To become a sannyāsi, Śrī Kṛṣṇa says, 'Go to sannyāsa out of completion.' Bhagavān is only saying one thing, 'Out of completion, take any decision.' Bhagavān denies Arjuna even his decision to take sannyāsa because Arjuna takes that decision out of powerlessness pattern. He accepts Arjuna's decision to fight, because he took the decision out of powerfulness, completion. Whether it is sannyās or fight, powerlessness never leads your life to any next steps.

Arjuna says further, 'Now I am confused about my duty and have lost all composure because of misery and weakness - kārpaṇya doṣhopahata svabhāvaḥ (2.7). I can see no solution to my dilemma. Even if I slay these people and gain control over the earth, or even control over the heavens, what good will it do me? In this condition, I ask you to tell me, for certain, what is best for me, yat śreyaḥ syān niścitaṁ brūhi tanme. Now I am your disciple and the soul is surrendered unto you. Please instruct me - śiṣyas te'haṁ sādhi māṁ tvāṁ prapannam (2.7).'

Here Arjuna says, 'My soul is surrendered unto you - māṁ tvāṁ prapannam.' This is a lie. Had his soul been truly surrendered to Kṛṣṇa, he would simply have followed what Kṛṣṇa said and would not have waited for an intellectual explanation. Arjuna says his soul is surrendered to Kṛṣṇa but when Kṛṣṇa asks him to do His bidding, he is not ready to do so and is confused. Surrender out of confusion is not surrender, as you do not even know if you are doing the right thing.

Understand that surrender after clarity, intelligence of śāstras, out of completion, is true surrender. Here Arjuna surrenders only verbally as he says that he is confused, that his mind is bewildered, sammūḍha cetāh. You must either do what you think is right or do as the master instructs. Here Arjuna wants the master to say what he wants to hear, not what the master wants to say. So, although Arjuna says he has surrendered, he has not done so.However, only out of compassion, Kṛṣṇa continues to enrich, express and teach him the Truth. Here begins the śāstras. The two verses that Kṛṣṇa speaks bidding Arjuna to give up his powerlessness and stand up and fight are sūtra, techniques. But as Arjuna is not ready to receive them, he has to commence the śāstra, the background knowledge.

At this point Arjuna has not yet completely surrendered to Kṛṣṇa. He is powerless. He is in dilemma. He knows that his duty is to defeat his enemies and kill them if needed, but his enemies are his kinsmen, his elders and his teachers. The root pattern of his relationship attachment with them, makes him hesitate. Arjuna brings up all that he knows from scriptures, from tradition and from hearsay, doing whatever he can to avoid the unpleasant decision to fight his own kith and kin.

Kṛṣṇa, fully aware of Arjuna's dilemma, moves forward in his mission to destroy that identity, his root pattern. The master is a surgeon who removes the cancer of ego, the root thought pattern. This is what Arjuna does throughout the Gītā dialogue. To give Arjuna credit, he stays through this surgery. Many weaker men would have run away from the operation theatre, this battlefield, with no desire to let go of their identities. The greatness of Arjuna lies in his integrity, his authenticity and his powerful determination, his decision to listen to his Master and be guided by Him.

Arjuna Decides to Surrender Powerlessness

So, Arjuna implores his Master, 'Kṛṣṇa, please tell me what to do. I am your disciple. You are my refuge.' Arjuna's integrity lies in not making any decision when he is in the space of powerlessness. When you are in the space of powerlessness, the only one decision you have to make is to come out of powerlessness. No other decision should be made. When you are in powerlessness, any decision made leads to more and more powerlessness, more and more suffering, and more and more incompletion.

In his deepest powerless moments, the only decision Arjuna takes is to come out of his powerlessness. He declares to Kṛṣṇa that he is His disciple and exposes his inauthenticies to Kṛṣṇa. It is this readiness to surrender to the Master that brings completion to Arjuna and enriches him to take the responsibility to win the war, which in reality is the war within himself.

This is the war that each one of us is fighting each day with our powerlessness, if we are truly aware. This is the war that we need to fight to drop our root pattern, our mind, and the identity that binds us to all the bondages upon this earth. Whatever you think is yours and whatever you think is you, is different from the truth. It is the Master who can lead you through the path of this self-completion, as Kṛṣṇa is now leading Arjuna. To be led, you need the attitude of surrender, the decision to surrender your powerlessness.

2.11 Bhagavān says: You grieve for those who should not be grieved for and yet, you speak words of wisdom. The wise grieve neither for the living nor for the dead.

न चैव न भविष्यामः सर्वे वयमतः परम् ॥ २-१२॥
na tvevāhaṃ jātu nāsaṃ na tvaṃ neme janādhipāḥ na caiva na bhaviṣyāmaḥ sarve vayamataḥ param 2-12

2.12 It is not that any at any time in the past I did not exist; so did you and these rulers exist, and we shall not ever cease to be hereafter.

देहिनोऽस्मिन्यथा देहे कौमारं यौवनं जरा ।
तथा देहान्तरप्राप्ति र्धीरस्तत्र न मुह्यति ॥ २-१३॥
dehino'sminyathā dehe kaumāraṃ yauvanaṃ jarā
tathā dehāntaraprāptir dhīrastatra na muhyati || 2.13 ||

2.13 Just as the spirit in this body passes through childhood, youth and old age, So does it pass into another body; the man centered within himself does not fear this.

Once again, having lamented about what he is being forced to do, and not wishing to do what he is expected to do, Arjuna, like a petulant child sits down saying, 'Govinda, I am not going to fight, na yotsya iti govindam (2.9).' It is as if Arjuna is waiting to be persuaded. He is seeking an explanation.

Kṛṣṇa says to him gently and smilingly, 'While speaking learned words, you are mourning for what is not worthy of grief - aśocyān anvāśocas tvaṁ prajñā-vādāṁś ca bhāṣase. Those who are wise lament neither for the living nor for the dead - gatāsūn agatāsūṁś ca nānuśocanti paṇḍitāḥ (2.11).'

Again, Kṛṣṇa addresses Arjuna's incompletion directly, 'O Arjuna! You speak as if you are intelligent, enlightened, prajñā-vādāṁś.' You speak the words without having experienced them. Therefore, your words do not carry conviction. Your emotion, your being, shows that you are not enlightened, that you have not understood. A truly enlightened person will never worry for the living or the dead.' If you worry for somebody living or dead, you cannot be an intelligent person. What is death and life after all? There are thousands, rather millions, who have lived and gone.

Kṛṣṇa's First Enriching Words are Sānkhya

Kṛṣṇa is the greatest follower of Sāṅkhya Yoga. Please understand, when you are in a crisis, the first few words you utter are the words with which you solve your own problem. When somebody asks you for advice, what comes up first? The words that you use to enrich yourself, will only come out to enrich others.

Kṛṣṇa would have been more shocked than Arjuna because He has never seen this dimension of Arjuna shivering, shaking. It would have been a shock even for Kṛṣṇa when Arjuna drops his Gāṇḍiva bow and says, 'I am not interested in fighting!' Kṛṣṇa has never seen this powerless, weak side of Arjuna.

Trusting Arjuna, He went all the way as a peace ambassador to the assembly of Kauravas. The great war of Mahābhārat was the first World War because at that time, the whole of humanity, fifty-four deśas (countries) were divided into two parts. The whole world was participating. Either you are on the side of Duryodhana, the Kaurava clan or on the side of Arjuna, the Pāṇḍava clan. And suddenly, Arjuna is saying, 'I am not waging the war!' How will you handle this? The first idea with which He is sorting out Arjuna's problem is Sāṅkhya Yoga. This means Kṛṣṇa Himself was practicing Sāṅkhya yoga. He is a person established in the knowledge of completion.

You are Responsible for Everything

When you truly realize your Self, when you are complete, enlightened, you will be aware of when you will die and how you will die. It will then make no difference to you whether your body is alive or dead. Living and dying are no longer issues in which you feel you need to play a part. They are progressions of nature and being enlightened and complete, you flow with Nature.

When you take responsibility for how you think and feel, instead of leaving the responsibility to destiny, society, media and others, if you take the responsibility, you can awaken your inner power of leadership, you can make your non-mechanical parts of the brain to function. When you don't take responsibility, others take it on their own and make you a follower. Society and all other power-hungry people who are interested in controlling you, take the responsibility for your body, mind and brain if you don't take the responsibility.

It is possible to be conscious of previous births; it is even possible to have a conscious birth, coming into this world fully conscious and aware. For that to happen, we need to drop our root thought pattern and merge with Nature. We need to responsibly surrender our existence to Nature. When we do so, Nature responds and opens up. When you take responsibility for all the happenings in and around you, a new energy and a new possibility opens up in you. The first step to realize the divine in you is to take responsibility. Decide whether you are reason or not, you are taking responsibility for all happenings in and around you, because it is affecting you.

You Exist in Past, Present and Future

Kṛṣṇa continues: 'Never was there a time when I did not exist, nor you and all these kings, and never in the future shall any of us cease to be.'

With this verse begins the essence of the whole Gītā. This is ātmajñāna, Self-realization, the knowledge of completion. If you can understand this one verse, you can become enlightened straightaway and enter into eternal bliss.

If you think our souls will also die with our bodies, you are wrong. We were there before our birth and will remain after death. It is not true that any of us will not be in the future.

You existed in the past, exist in the present and will exist in the future. Your face and body may change but you continue to exist. Then why do we think we will die and why do we fear death? If what Kṛṣṇa says is true, why are we worried about this life and about death? You need to first understand the concept of the past, present and future to able you to understand what Kṛṣṇa says.

You need to understand the concept of time. Time is like a shaft continuously moving from the future on the right into the past on the left. The future is on your right and the past is on your left. The future is continuously moving into the past; every moment and every second it is turning into the past. The present is the point where the future and the past meet. Your mind as such is nothing but movements between the past and the future.

You cannot have any thoughts if you stop thinking about the past and the future. Your thoughts consist of nothing but the constant movements between the past and the future. The more your thoughts shift from past to future or future to past, the higher the frequency of thoughts. The less you shift from past to future or future to past, the lesser the number of thoughts. Try to think of something in the present, you will find that you cannot. You can think of it only by taking it into the past or future. You are either worrying about the future or remembering the past.

The higher the frequency of thoughts, the more you are caught in the physical and material world. For example, if you have 100 Thoughts Per Second (TPS,) it means you have jumped 100 times back and forth between the past and future in one second! If you have 80 TPS, it means you have jumped 80 times between these two dimensions. The higher the frequency, the more you will be away from the present and more problems you have. If the number of thoughts reduces, you fall into the present moment.

The past, present and future, all the three put together are eternal, nitya or ātman. Only when you come to the present moment do you experience ātman, your true Self, but as of now you are constantly shuttling between the past and future. When the number of thoughts reduces, you will not even be aware of the passage of time. For example, when you are with someone you love, even two or three hours will seem like a short while. But, when you are with someone whose company is boring, even a short time seems very long.

Time is more psychological than chronological. That is why, in our scriptures or Vedas, we have the word kṣaṇa to describe the unit of time. Kṣaṇa does not denote one second, but is defined as the gap or time interval between two thoughts. The larger the kṣaṇa or the gap between two thoughts, the more in the present we are. Each person's kṣaṇa will be different depending on how busy his mind is. When our TPS is lower, we will naturally be in completion, in ecstasy, in bliss. When the number of our thoughts is high, we are in hell. Hell and heaven are nothing but the number of thoughts that we entertain, that's all.

With a higher frequency of thoughts, you think you are the body. When the frequency of thoughts reduces, you think you are the mind and just emotion. When the thoughts become zero, you realize you are ātman, Self; you are there in the past, present and future. Only a man whose TPS is zero can realize what Kṛṣṇa says - You will be there forever. But right now the frequency of thoughts is very high. You do not have the patience or the energy to understand who you are, your base and your nature.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'You were there in the past, you are in the present and you will be in the future; you do not die.' When Kṛṣṇa says, 'You are the eternal soul,' He means that as a being, you are beyond time, but as of now, you are caught in the mind between the past and the future. He says beautifully, 'We existed before our birth and will remain after our death. Whatever dies, can never live. Whatever lives can never die.'

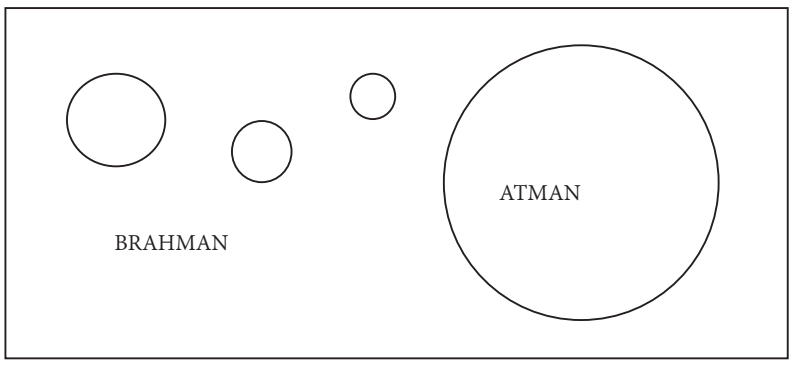
Here, your deep consciousness says that something is living in you. This you wrongly attribute to your body and mind. You are not the body or the mind. As long as you are caught in the past and the future incompletions, you think that you are the body and mind. The moment you come down to the present moment, you are in the eternal space of completion, you experience that you are beyond the body, beyond the mind.

Completion, the Eternal Space in the Present

Anything which does not allow, anything which stands in between you and the present moment, acting as a barrier, which does not allow you to connect completely with life and with other people in your life in the present moment, is incompletion.

Kṛṣṇa does not mean that we existed in the form that we are here now, or that He was present always as Kṛṣṇa in the form we imagine Him to be, with a flute in His hand and a peacock feather on His head. He means that our spirits which are eternal, always existed and will always exist. In our spiritual state, that of our soul, we are divine, one with the universal energy, Brahman.

The gist of the second chapter, Sāṅkhya Yoga is that you are the soul, that you are complete, that you are divine and that you are God.



Completion is the only methodology where you can complete with your past and future incompletions. You need to know that when you do completion now, don't think that only your future will be in completion and complete. No! Even your past gets altered. Even your past becomes complete. The moment you create the space of completion, what Kṛṣṇa declares, 'You are the eternal soul, beyond any limiting influence of your body and mind,' becomes reality in your life.

Kṛṣṇa is established in the space of Sāṅkhya knowledge. Kapila Muni, the founder of Sāṅkhya, does not elaborately talk about God, but he talks about the methodology to reach God. He feels, 'What is the use to tell how the idli (traditional Hindu dish) will look, how it will taste. Just serve them.'

A person in a no-mind, no-thought state has infinite time, as the time between thoughts is infinite. His spirit is at liberty to stay free without taking another body as long as he chooses, or more correctly, as the universe chooses. All enlightened masters are in this category. When the spirit leaves the mind-body system, it be- comes one with the universal energy.

Imagine a number of circles drawn on a whiteboard.

Think of the whiteboard space as the universal energy. Individual body-mind systems are represented by the circles drawn on the whiteboard. The white space enclosed in the circles is the spirit and this is the same energy as the white space outside the circles. The space within or inner space is the individual soul, ātman and the space outside or outer space is Brahman.

When a body-mind dies, when an individual dies, all that happens is that these perimeter lines get erased, that is all. The space within the circle merges with the space outside the circle. White merges with white. Energy merges with energy.

When the spirit, the energy, is ready to move into another mind-body system, it enters another circle. It is a continuous, ongoing process and a natural process. One who cognizes this process and accepts it is an integrated and authentic person living in the space of completion. Kṛṣṇa refers to him as 'dhīraḥ', one who is firm, centered, aware, and complete.

The Only Reality is Impermanence

2.18 These bodies of material energy are perishable. The energy itself is eternal, incomprehensible and indestructible. Therefore, fight, O Bhārata.

Kṛṣṇa says here that the sensory experiences, mātrā-sparśhaḥ are all temporary. Feelings of hot and cold - śītoṣṇa, sweet and sour, wet and dry, experiences of pain and pleasure - sukha-duḥkha, as well as other experiences of like and dislike are all temporary, anityāḥ. These experiences do not affect the centered person who is qualified to be enlightened, so amṛtatvāya kalpate. These sensory experiences are anitya or impermanent and unreal. Moreover, they are relative. What may be considered hot by one person may not be perceived as hot by another.

What Kṛṣṇa says here, and what has been experienced by the wise sages of the East for thousands of years, is only now being grasped by scientists and researchers. It is now accepted by medical science that the body-mind dies many deaths before its final exit. Cells within our body die in thousands every day and get reborn. Over a period of a few years, every single cell in the body-mind system is replaced and renewed. What you were two or three years ago is not what you are today. Every single cell in your body-mind system, and therefore, every single bone, muscle, tissue, artery, vein, limb and body part is new, completely different from what it was two or three years ago.

The body-mind continually ceases to exist and gets recreated. It is not permanent. Separate from the body-mind system is our spirit that lives on eternally. The spirit remains the same throughout our life with no change, despite all the changes in the body-mind system. It continues to be, to exist, even after our death. The spirit does not die with the body. It lives on. It is permanent and true. When one understands this difference between what is eternal, nityā, and what is transient, mithyā, one becomes a seer and knower of Truth.

Make Your Perception Pure and Patternless

Nityā and mithyā do not translate into real and unreal. In the same way māyā , loosely translated as illusion, is not unreal. Māyā and mithya are real and perceived by our senses but they refer to things that are not true, that are not lasting. They are factually real but truthfully unreal. That which is true will always be true; it cannot cease to exist. Truth here refers to the state of permanence, of being eternal.

A living master is not present as you feel, and a dead master is not absent as you think. The presence of a dead master, an enlightened dead master, is permanent and always real. A living Master's form is not His only presence. He is present in His absence as well. Our perceptions through our senses may be real but not necessarily true. A dream is very real when it happens. You may get angry, frightened, excited, lustful, and such when you dream. Your body responds to these emotions and your senses react to what you observe in the dream. Yet the moment you start witnessing the dream, you awaken. You cannot dream when you become aware. The dream is not true, though it seemed real.

The same happens when you are awake and daydreaming. You are awake but you fantasize. Even when you think you are fully awake, what you perceive through your senses may not be what you interpret it to mean. Your mind always filters through its own lens of the root pattern or ego. You judge whatever you perceive through your conditioned memories and then selectively put together pieces of what you perceive, to support your judgment.

If there is fire burning and you sit at a distance and just go on gazing at the fire, you will feel the heat in your body. If you just turn your eyes away while maintaining the same distance, you will not see the burning and no more experience the burning in your body. How? The seeing has reduced the distance between you and the fire. That is perception and reality.

This is what Śrī Kṛṣṇa means when He says, 'O son of Kuntī, contact with sense objects causes heat and cold, pleasure and pain, and these have a beginning and an end.'

Understand, a pattern is any action that is unfulfilled as per your fantasy, either because of an outside hindrance or an inside hindrance, and is incompletion.

The way your patterns react and respond to the facts is perception. Perception is nothing but processed facts. There are three levels of perception:

No pattern, no perception - that is the worst.

Pattern with perception - that is okay.

Perception but with no pattern - that is the best.

If only facts are playing a hundred percent role, you don't have any pattern. These are the nonresponders who are soaked in dullness. They neither have patterns nor have consciousness. The vast eleven lakh (one hundred and ten million) army of Kauravas signifies this dull unconscious space of 'no pattern, no perception.' They lived in stupid materialism with their life philosophy as stupid atheism. That is why Duryodhana is never attacked by any pattern or dilemma that overpowers Arjuna.

Then, there are responders who have 'patterns with perceptions.' The moment Arjuna sees the vast Kaurava army, his whole body and being shivers with the fear pattern. His patterns do not let him see the army as army and just fight as per his natural perception of himself as a warrior. He sees relatives, friends and teachers and wants to escape the war; he wants to shrink from life.

Ultimately, we have the Lord of all perceptions, the one with complete consciousness, Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa Himself. His very existence is the pure space of perception. He is the destroyer of all patterns, who enriches Arjuna in destroying and completing with the army of root patterns by transforming Arjuna's own perception.

Sāṅkhya - Best Enriching Philosophy of Completion

The best enriching philosophy on the planet Earth is Kapila's Sāṅkhya. Kapila is established in completion - the space of pure perception. No patterns are involved in the processing of information through the senses. The fire is seen as the fire. Not even an iota of the idea of heat or cold is superimposed on it. Superimposing any idea on life takes away the joy of life.

The great news for human beings is that māyā (illusion) can be transformed. Perception can be transformed. You can become enlightened. Perception can reach completion. When you bring completion into the perception, a moment of perception can literally bring enlightenment.

That is the reason why the great masters have always urged their disciples to wake up. Jāgṛat is the word used to awaken them. This is not the call to wake up from sleep but the call to wake up into completion. It is the call to emerge from the non-existent reality of processed facts or patterns into the truly existent Truth of Self-experience.

Most of the time we exist in our past or future. We are constantly caught in the experiences of the past, under the excuse of learning from them. But in actuality, we are caught in guilt, regret or pleasure from remembering the past memories. The future is just as unreal as the past. Yet, we build castles, we plan, we dream, and we fantasize about the future without the capacity to execute any of it. We are not even sure we will take our next breath. How can we control events of the future when we cannot control our next breath? The futility of our constant movement between past and future and back again is the greatest wonder of all.

Bring integrity in your thinking. Your eyes, your senses will not forget the reality even at that moment, and will not cognize heat or cold, pain or pleasure. Many times, due to lack of integrity our mind and body cognize their own facts, their own concepts.

The only truth, the only true reality, is the truth of this very moment. As long as we are in this present moment, we have a pure perception without any patterns, only then we are truly complete and integrated. The present moment never ceases to exist. In fact, that is all that does exist. The present moment alone is sat, truth, everything else is asat, untruth.

One who realizes this truth and acts out of completion, says Kṛṣṇa, is enlightened. We are all made of body, mind and spirit. The body is tangible; we can feel its boundaries. When a part of the body is sick, we can feel the discomfort. As long as we feel the body working smoothly, we say we are in good health.

Our mind is subtle. We do not feel the mind in the same way as we feel the body. We do not feel its boundaries. Yet, we feel the effects of the mind: thoughts, desires, emotions etc. Modern scientific studies have shown that what we term as mind is spread all over the body. Mind and its intelligence are inbuilt into our cellular structure. Recent studies have shown that it is our root thought patterns not genetics, which in turn arise from our earliest experiences of powerlessness, which define the birth and development of our mind, and in turn influence the cellular structure. Earlier it was believed that genetic modifications to the cellular structure influenced the way we cognized.

The process where we perceive or receive information through five senses, internalize it with our root thought patterns, and respond based on our patterns is cognition. Now it is proven that it is our root thought pattern that leads to our cognition and thereafter determines our genetics.

Even subtler is the spirit. In fact, many people question this entity called spirit. What is this thing called spirit or soul? We cannot see it and we cannot touch it. Becoming aware of this subtle spirit or soul is just what Self- realization is all about.

In these verses, Kṛṣṇa says first that the spirit pervades the body - avināśi tu tad viddhi yena sarvam idaṁ tatam. His definition of body is the body-mind system. Secondly, He states that the body and mind are destroyed at death - antavanta ime dehā nityasyoktāḥ śārīriṇaḥ. Thirdly, He declares that the spirit does not die at death - vināśam avyayasyāsya na kascit kartum arhati. Fourthly, He explains that the spirit is beyond our mental comprehension - anāśino ʻprameyasya.

When death happens, bodily functions stop and the senses, which are a function of the mind, stop working. The entire body-mind system is then left by itself and it degenerates. This part is clear to all of us who have seen death. What is unclear or unknown to us is that there is something within us that does not perish at death. Kṛṣṇa clarifies here that this is the Self, ātman, the energy that never dies.

What is death? Is it the spirit leaving the body that causes death, or is it that death forces the spirit into leaving the body? The body-mind system is perishable, that it has a definite shelf life and comes with an expiry date. However, beyond this expiry date, there is something that lives on and that is the spirit. This spirit is energy; it is the energy of life.

Kṛṣṇa urges Arjuna to fight saying, 'Therefore, fight, O Bhārata, tāsmad yudhyasva bharāta', with the full understanding that what he thinks of as real is unreal, that what he thinks of as permanent, nitya is impermanent, anitya and what he thinks he is about to destroy can, in truth, never be destroyed.

Kṛṣṇa tells him to open his eyes and see with pure pattern less perception; that what he is about to do will only destroy that which is going to perish anyway. Even if he wants to, Arjuna cannot destroy the imperishable, avināśi spirit that lives on.

Arjuna's concern about the death of his kinsmen and elders arises out of his root pattern of fear and insecurity about his own death. He does not realize his true imperishable nature and therefore he is afraid of dying. By extension of this fear, he is afraid of others' deaths as well, especially at his own hands. Kṛṣṇa tells him that there is no such thing as death and that death is unreal, anāśinaḥ.

All our lives we see people around us dying. Death is the only certainty in this otherwise uncertain world. Everyone, whether a beggar or a prince, must die. When we wake up from a dream, we don't mourn our dream lives, as real as they felt at the time. Do we? No. In the same way, when we awaken into the highest state of consciousness, we have the same experience that this 'real' life was only a dream. There is nothing to mourn or fret over. The lineage of all enlightened masters has again and again supported Kṛṣṇa's declarations with their own direct experience. The body is just the shell that houses your spirit. Even when the body perishes, you do not. It is impossible because you are eternal, nitya; you are bliss, ānanda.

Kṛṣṇa is firmly stating this reality that there is no such thing as death, nābhāvo vidyate sataḥ. He says what dies or seems to perish is unreal, nāsato vidyate bhāvo; it had no permanent existence anyway. What does have existence, what is truly real, exists now, has always existed and will exist forever.

When you drill with integrity and authenticity, normal perception itself is nothing but perception of God. Because any perception will directly lead you to the space of the root of all actions, including perception. You will see that the ultimate perception, what Kṛṣṇa declares as your true nature of eternal existence and indestructible energy becomes your reality.

Sāṅkhya is reality. What exists as reality is perceived by you without the interference, perversions created by your powerless patterns. Sāṅkhya is the philosophy of reality, ultimate existentialism. Completion will lead you to experience that Sāṅkhya, the reality, existential reality - tattva satya, satya tattva.

You Are Immortal

2.25 The Self is said to be unmanifest, unthinkable and unchangeable. Knowing this to be such, you should not grieve.

The first thing that comes out from Kṛṣṇa is sāṅkhya yogaḥ. In Sāṅkhya, you are recognized as a soul. The idea taught to you about you is: you cannot be cut by weapons, you cannot be burnt by fire, you cannot be made wet by water, and you cannot be blown away by air. Nothing can do 'nothing' to you. Nothing can be done to you by anything. Understand, the moment Bhagavān is opening His mouth, you are given an amazing introduction about you.

There is No Death in Reality

Kṛṣṇa directly addresses some of Arjuna's earlier doubts in these verses. Arjuna has claimed that destroying his people, svajanam will bring him untold grief, not only in this world but in future births as well. Kṛṣṇa explains to Arjuna that all his fears are misplaced. There is no death in reality. What is seen as death is the destruction of the impermanent body. No one therefore can kill another person or be killed by another person. Both are illusions.

The spirit that occupies the body lives on forever. It occupies the body temporarily, but by itself the Self is eternal, indestructible, and has no births and deaths. It is the body, the sheath that covers it, that dies and is reborn. The spirit or the Self lives on forever.

What Kṛṣṇa says here is radically different from what any other scripture has said. Kṛṣṇa denies the concept of death here. He says there is no such thing as death. He is not saying: be good, and you will be taken care of when you die and if you are bad, you will suffer. He says there is no death, that's all.

Here Kṛṣṇa is talking to someone who has witnessed death. So, He has to explain to him that death does not exist. It is the individual's attachment to the body that creates the illusion that the individual also perishes with the body. Attachment to the body is the most intense of all attachments. We also get attached to material possessions as well as our relationships. The potential loss of these leads to fears similar to that of losing one's body. One who understands that all these attachments are temporary and are the cause of all our suffering, understands the truth. Understanding this truth removes all fears.

It is easy to misinterpret these verses and propose that if there is no one really killing or being killed, then what stops us from mindless killing? That is not what Kṛṣṇa intends. One who truly understands that death is not the end of the path, but only a milestone in the journey, is not perturbed by death when it happens naturally or when it is caused for a purpose. These truths are spoken to Arjuna who already understands the basic truths of yama (the first step of yoga philosophy by Patañjali), the principles of satya (truth), ahiṁsā (non-violence), aparigraha (living in non-possessiveness), asteya (non-stealing) and brahmacarya (living without fantasies or living like God). Arjuna fully understands the implications of killing and that as a kṣatriya it is his dhārmic responsibility that requires him to slay his enemies

Here Kṛṣṇa reveals to him a more subtle level of truth that he hasn't yet grasped. Arjuna shies away from killing, not because of his conviction of ahimsā, non-violence, but because of his root thought pattern that he identifies with the people he has to destroy. His hesitation is from his delusory incompletions, ignorance, attachment and fantasy, not from the wisdom of non-violent compassion

Kṛṣṇa's message to Arjuna is as it would be to someone who has to uphold dharma at all costs. However, it would not be a blind acceptance of orders, it would not be a powerless action driven by fear and greed. It would not be killing for gain and or killing out of fear that one would be killed. It would be an ultimate powerful action from the space of completion; born out of the knowledge that such destruction is needed for universal good and that such destruction would lead to creation.

You may ask, 'If nothing is destroyed and nothing can be destroyed, is there no sin in killing at all? So is Kṛṣṇa indifferent to mass violence? No, He is not. For one thing, Kṛṣṇa speaks as an enlightened Master from an existentialist perspective and declares that, even when the body perishes, the spirit lives on, and therefore, there is no death.

Completion with Violence

Violence and killing are not merely physical acts. They are psychological compulsions acted out of incompletion in the physical realm. The ruler of a country who orders warfare against others is the violent one, even if he hides behind his throne. Violence of the mind carries on as the vāsana or desires; the essence of the spirit, that incarnates from birth to birth. That is the horror that does not end with death. The spirit is violated, degraded, and degenerated by this attitude of violence.

A violent man is always a coward, an inauthentic person who does not have the courage to face the truth. He does not have the sensitivity to treat others as he expects to be treated. He goes out-of-integrity, losing his power of words, isolating himself in a cocoon of lies, using the excuse of defending himself, and commits violence against others.

When we become aware and conscious that the person next to us is actually an expression of the energy of God, how can we possibly respond with violence? It has nothing to do with whether someone is family, part of our culture, religion or nation or part of our history, habits or beliefs. The other person may oppose all that we believe in. Yet he is as much a part of this Universe as we are. That is why Kṛṣṇa says, 'O Pārtha, how can that man slay or cause others to be slain, who knows him to be indestructible, eternal, unborn, unchangeable?'

How can violence develop in us when we recognize ourselves to be God, which automatically enables us to be aware that every other living being, animate and inanimate too is God's image? If this message of Kṛṣṇa is truly understood, there can be no violence in this world, no self-hatred and no killing at all. You will not even kill an insect. You will not kill even in self-defense because once you are in completion, your space of completion is transmitted to the other being and that being will not even attack you.

Understand what Kṛṣṇa says and you will never have fear, either for yourself or for others. You are imperishable, you are complete; everyone around you is imperishable, complete. Shed your fear and violence and be complete. Let enriching others and love for others fill your being.

Any root pattern you carry can be destroyed if you just have love for people. Decide to go on enriching everyone who is happening in your life. When you enrich others, be very clear, you are constantly getting enriched. Decide life is for others. Life is for enriching. Enriching is life.

Enriching is the power that unlocks the power of Living, ātma śakti in you. Enriching is you taking the responsibility with integrity and authenticity that you are continuously committed to enriching, which is expanding yourself and life in and around you.

Just decide that life is for others. All the best things will be showered on you. You will get back to the space you were in when you were born - the purest space of life, the imperishable space. This is the jumpstart technique for enlightenment. Decide from this moment, 'Life is for Others. Life is for Enriching.' All your insecurity, fear, anger, greed, all your root patterns will become rootless patterns. Kṛṣṇa is giving this jump-start technique of enlightenment to Arjuna so that he enriches himself and others and fights to destroy the very root of his root pattern of fear and violence.

Do not Fear Death, You Are Imperishable

Kṛṣṇa continues with Sāṅkhya, the knowledge of completion: Just as man casts off his worn-out clothes and puts on new ones, the Self casts off worn-out bodies and enters newer ones, anyāni saṁyāti navāni dehī (2.22).Weapons do not cleave the Self, fire does not burn It, water does not moisten It, and wind does not dry It. The Self can neither be broken, nor burnt, nor dissolved, nor dried up. It is eternal, all pervading, stable, immovable and ancient.

These verses are amongst the most quoted verses of Bhagavad Gītā. Here, in very few words, Kṛṣṇa expounds upon the entire truth of life and death, mind, body and spirit. He clarifies why we should accept death gladly, as a matter of fact and course, instead of grieving over it. He says this so simply that even an innocent child can understand this truth.

Do we grieve over a dirty shirt that we have cast away when we know we will have a new one? Do we say, 'Oh, I am so attached to this shirt. I cannot let it go. Let me keep wearing it. I shall be heartbroken if I have to take off this shirt?' If only we understand that a body needs to be changed when it grows old, in just the same way as the shirt does when it is dirty, there would be no grief, no attachment.

Kṛṣṇa goes on to explain further what that unchanging continuity is. What is the nature of that spirit? How is it that it is everlasting? Kṛṣṇa says, 'O Arjuna, the Soul is not destroyed at all. No astra, no brahmāstra, no nuclear weapon can destroy the energy within the body. Fire cannot burn It, water cannot wet It, and air cannot dry It. It is not made of the elements and cannot be destroyed by the elements. It is the energy behind the elements that creates the elements. How can It then die?' 'It cannot be disintegrated in any manner, by breaking, dissolving, burning or drying, acchedyo 'yam adāhyo 'yam akledyo 'soṣya eva ca. It is eternal. It transcends all the elemental powers. It pervades the Universe, nityaḥ sarva gataḥ sthānuṛ (2.24). It has been there always, sanātanaḥ. Therefore, It never can be destroyed.'

An understanding of the truth that Kṛṣṇa unveils here is the key to immortality. It is the key to liberation from the bondage of life and death. It is the doorway to enlightenment. 'Do not fear death, nānuśocitumarhasi (2.25).' Kṛṣṇa says, 'neither yours nor that of others. It is just a passage. It is the disappearance of this material body. However, you are beyond this material body. Even if the body perishes, you live on, so you do not have to worry or fear.'

What survives death is the sacred spirit in you that can never be destroyed. This spirit is not matter; it is pure energy. How can you destroy energy? Science states that energy can only appear in another form; it cannot be destroyed. It is the energy behind the elements; It is that source which creates the elements. It is the energy that has always been and will be, never created, never destroyed. It is unchanging, eternal and all pervading. The experience of every enlightened being verifies the truth that Kṛṣṇa is uttering.

'When you are that spirit, that energy,' asks Kṛṣṇa, 'what is there to grieve about? When you are the Divine yourself, what can you fear? What more can you ask for?' Once we understand what Kṛṣṇa says, that death is like changing a wornout garment, our fears will disappear. Why do we need that garment at all? We will feel freer, fully liberated when we do not have that garment. Going beyond the garment is going beyond the pattern of body-mind. It is going beyond the root of the root pattern, the cycle of life and death, saṁsāra. It is going to the ultimate liberation, in this life itself. It is the ultimate relaxation.

Death Is But A Passage

2.30 O Bhārata, This that dwells in the body of everyone can never be destroyed; do not grieve for any creature.

When you understand what Kṛṣṇa is saying in these verses you get over any fear of death. In fact you will celebrate death. There is a beautiful incident from the life of THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM BHAGAVAN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM. When He was delivering a discourse in Bharat, news arrived that His father had died. He continued with the discourse. Later that night, many of His disciples traveled with Him to Tiruvannamalai where the body lay. If you see the videos of this event, you will find that BHAGAVAN's mother never once cried. She was a very traditional person, brought up in a rural environment that sets great importance on how one should behave socially. When one's husband dies one is naturally heartbroken; especially as in the case of BHAGAVAN's mother and father, who were very close to each other. His departure would have been a great loss to her. She understood the meaning of these verses of Kṛṣṇa without BHAGAVAN ever having to explain them to her. When BHAGAVAN told her that her husband is now in the energy form that is eternal, she trusted His words implicitly and joined Him in celebrating his release. Many of BHAGAVAN's followers have seen the video recording of this event. It was made specifically to explain what Kṛṣṇa is saying here. They could see it in action and get over any fear that they may have still have about death.

We are not talking about philosophers and saints here. We are talking about ordinary people whose lifestyle was all about fear of death and grief at death. They understood very easily what Kṛṣṇa is saying. They understood that the spirit lives on after the body perishes and death is indeed an event to celebrate and not to grieve. It is only the scholars who have a mere intellectual understanding of what Gītā says with no trust in Kṛṣṇa, and still suffer from the fear of death. Kṛṣṇa's words are not about logic; they are about trust in the Master.

Death is inevitable for the born, jātasya hi dhruvo mṛtyur; and birth is certain for the dead, dhruvaṁ janma mṛtasya ca. Whether the spirit lives on after the body perishes and locates itself in another body may be a debatable point to some. Kṛṣṇa says that this is not a reason to lament death, na tvaṁ śocitum arhasi (2.27). In either case, death can be a passage that one can look forward to.

Whether the spirit goes to a region called hell or another region called heaven is as debatable a point as whether there is an undying spirit at all, or whether that spirit reincarnates. You may believe whatever you like to believe. We all know death is inevitable. Yet for many It is a wonder.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'One sees It as a wonder - āścarya-vat paśyati, another speaks of It as a wonder - āścarya-vad vadati, another hears of It as a wonder. Yet, having heard, none understands It at all - śrutvāpy enaṁ veda na caiva kaścit (2.29).

Bringing the dead back to life is not a wonder or miracle. The real wonder and mystery though, is the transformation of individuals instilling in them the truth of completion to live integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching, and causing these four powers of words, thinking, feeling and living as reality. This indeed is the miracle that only a true Master can perform.

Those who are authentic enough to accept and be complete with the truth of the eternal nature of the spirit are the fortunate, the blessed. Those who fight and grieve are the wretched, the miserable, the incomplete. You cannot fight life or death. They are both beyond you, out of your control. You can marvel at them and be happy and joyous. Or you can keep questioning and doubting them and be miserable. This is the choice and free will you have.

Fear of Unfulfilled Desires

It is not death that frightens us. It is leaving our incomplete desires and unlived life that frightens us. The problem is that we do not know how to live a fulfilled life in the space of completion. All our desires are partially fulfilled or incomplete because, before when they are fulfilled, we move on to other desires. The hangover of that past incomplete desire continues to chase us as a pattern in the present. The simple fact is that we do not know how to be complete, joyful.

Every thought, every desire you have is a commitment you have given to yourself. Every thought you complete is a word you have given to you. You have to honor it. You cannot entertain any thought of fear or greed, doubt or denial because you are literally sitting under a kalpataṛu, a wish-fulfilling tree, all the time.

Start creating the right inner software, the right inner space, by bringing integrity as the principle of life. Integrity means not just fulfilling, but honoring the words you give to others. The first step to integrity is completing with all the negative words you created within you about you and life and completing all of them.

Completion means feeling empowered, feeling powerful, without any hangover, without feeling powerless, during and after every situation in your life. If you are powerful, you won't be violent. You will not be in guilt, fear or carry incomplete desires.

Kṛṣṇa reveals that to be truly complete, joyful, to be eternally blissful, is to cognize the truth that you are indestructible, that your spirit lives on, and that life and death are but a mere passage. When you cognize this truth and start living it with integrity and authenticity, you will be living death. If not, you will be dead living.

Death is not an end; it is a passage of sorts. The truth is that the spirit is not satisfied with mere material pleasures. However much you please your senses, you cannot achieve satisfaction, you cannot achieve completion. The more you enjoy through your senses, the more the need for enjoyment. It never stops. Discontentment with material pleasures alone is hardwired into the human psyche.

People are really confused about the concept of spirituality. Spirituality is not something intangible or something mysterious. Understand, you do not need a separate time to practice spirituality. All you need is a cognitive shift to practice spirituality. The ideas based on which you make decisions only decide whether you are growing spiritually or not. It is not the number of hours that you sit with closed eyes, or the number of praṇāyāma or suryanamaskār you do, or the number of times you do japa (chanting).

It is this cognitive shift in your ideas based on which you make decisions, that decides whether you are growing spiritually or not. God is not waiting for your bank balance report. It is not that for every japa you do, it gets put in the bank balance and God says, 'Wow! He has done five lakh japa! Now let Me appear in front of him!' No! It is just like your greed for money. The number of times you chanted the mantra is just like your greed. Spirituality does not need a separate time for you to practice it. It just needs the cognitive transformation, the cognitive shift, for you to practice.

Spirituality is the total understanding and cognition of completion with life materially, physically, emotionally, relationally and in all senses without any incompletion and responding to life with the four tattvas, spiritual principles of integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching. These tattvas arise out of the space of completion.

Completion makes you integrated; completion makes you authentic; completion makes you responsible; completion makes you enrich yourself and others. This completion arises out of our ability to be complete with the present moment. That is when our mind stops flitting from the incompletions of past to the future, from regrets to speculation. The present moment is the only moment when we are truly alive. That is the only moment we are awake. The rest of the time we are in deep sleep, even if our eyes are open; we are in virtual death. Yet, we, the walking dead are afraid to die.

Kṛṣṇa declares to Arjuna, 'O Bhārata, whatever is permanent and real was unmanifest before it became manifest in the middle - avyaktādīnī bhūtani vyakta-madhyāni bharāta and again it will become unmanifest - avyakta-nidhanāny eva. Therefore, what is the need to lament, tatra kā paridevanā (2.28).'

Everything is in a state of becoming something else. At every moment we die and are reborn; millions of cells in our body-mind system die every day and are reborn. Yet, through all this change there is continuity. There is a continuity that we cannot see, touch or feel. What we see as manifested, as this body and mind, hides from us the process of constant change that happens within us, as well as the continuous thread that holds the whole process together.

Kṛṣṇa works on Arjuna at two levels. At one level He talks to Arjuna at the super conscious plane educating him on what the ultimate Truth is.

He talks to Arjuna about how the undying and indestructible spirit lives on. Here, Kṛṣṇa addresses Arjuna's fears about killing his svajanam, his relatives, elders and teaches him that what he considers to be the end of life for these people is just one step in their journey.

Kṛṣṇa then descends to the practical level at which Arjuna exists and begins addressing his svadharmam, Arjuna's own dharma, the natural path of his responsibility. Kṛṣṇa explains to Arjuna why, from a societal point of view, he should not run away from the battlefield, but instead, stay on and fight as behaves a warrior. Kṛṣṇa here addresses Arjuna as the kṣatriya, the warrior.

To Fight is Your Responsibility, O Arjuna

When Kṛṣṇa refers to Arjuna as a kṣatriya, he is referring to the entire personality of Arjuna, the great warrior, which has been decided only partly by birth and mostly by training based on his aptitude. Arjuna is the quintessential warrior, the kṣatriya, who knows no fear, and yet is now disturbed by issues of whether he is doing right or wrong by fighting against his kinsmen. The code of the kṣatriya and all soldiers even today, is a professional code as well. Once you are in the army, you fight irrespective of who the enemy is. Rights and wrongs no longer apply.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Fight! You are a kṣatriya. By fighting as your own responsibility demands, svadharmam api cāvekṣya (2.31). you earn merits and go to heaven. If you run away from this war you commit a sin for being out-of-integrity with your responsibility, hitvā pāpam avāpsyasi (2.33). You will also be termed a coward and people who know you will laugh at you, akīrtiṁ cāpi bhūtani kathayiṣyanti te 'vyayām (2.3). You will be dishonored, and for a kṣatriya, dishonor is far worse than death, sambhāvitasya cākīrtir maraṇād atiricyate (2.34).

'Do not worry about victory or defeat. If you are defeated and slain you will ascend to heaven. If you are victorious, you will enjoy material benefits in this world itself. Therefore, O Kaunteya, fight as it is your responsibility as a kṣatriya.'

hato vā prāpsyasi svargaṁ jitvā vā bhokṣyase mahīm | tasmād uttiṣṭha kaunteya yuddhāya kṛta-niścayaḥ || 2.37 ||

Kṛṣṇa says to treat pain and pleasure, gain and loss, victory and defeat all the same. He says to fight without worrying about the outcome. To fight is your responsibility. You shall incur no sin.

sukha-dukḥe same kṛtvā lābhālābhau jayājayau | tato yuddhāya yujyasya naivaṁ pāpam avāpsyasi || 2.38 ||

When the Paramātma, supreme Soul says this, it means that Arjuna does not have to worry about right and wrong, about sin or merit. Isn't fighting, isn't killing people a sin, you may ask. Then why is it that Kṛṣṇa encourages Arjuna, not merely encourages, but actually forces Arjuna to fight and kill? What is the operative logic here, you may ask.

There is no logic. Kṛṣṇa's exhortation is beyond human rationale. It is not what you do that matters; it is who you are being that matters. It is your space that matters. Whether you are being complete or incomplete matters. An enlightened Master can do no wrong even if he kills, because when he kills, it would be with completion, not with compulsion for personal benefit. On the other hand, any average person with incompletions, even while doing an act of kindness, he may be doing something wrong.

Kṛṣṇa is not worried about what you do, He is concerned only about who you are being. If your actions are from completion, if they are innocent of motives, whatever you do is right. If what you do is motivated by patterns of fear and greed, pain and pleasure, victory and defeat, you can do nothing right. Whatever you do for gain is sinful.

Understand, if the gap between who you are and who you want to be is without responsibility, it is greed. If it is with responsibility, it is possibility. When there is no responsibility-bridge, it is greed. When you are building the responsibility-bridge to achieve what you want to be, then it becomes a possibility; it is no more greed.

Kṛṣṇa is enriching Arjuna with the bridge of responsibility to expand Arjuna's shrinking identity as a kṣatriya. Even Śrī Rāma had to build the bridge to reach Sītā. When you add responsibility to greed, the gap suddenly reduces. The gap reduces drastically. Responsibility infused into thinking removes the agitation and disconnection with you.

We always feel that responsibility is a burden. No! It is a power. Responsibility directly leads you to leadership consciousness. As long as you feel responsible only for your family, you remain as the head of your family. When you feel responsible for the community, you become a leader of the community. As your feeling of responsibility expands, your leadership quality also expands. The decision to feel responsible for the whole Cosmos is Enlightenment. Feeling responsible for the Whole and declaring to live by your feeling is responsible declaration, known in Hindu spiritual practice as nidhidhyāsana.

Responsible declaration unlocks the power of feeling in you. But the moment you hear that you are responsible for everything happening around you, you think, 'If I feel responsible for all the garbage on the streets, I will be stuck cleaning it up the whole day. I will not be able to do anything else.'

Understand the science of feeling. You can feel anything as joy or anything as pain; it is your freedom. Even the greatest achievement can bring pain to you, and even the worst experience can be a joyful learning. You have the ability to decide how you want to feel.

Whenever you feel empowered, you are joyful. Whenever you feel powerless, you experience suffering. All your suffering pain, anger, guilt, fear, jealousy, frustration is nothing but powerlessness expressing in different ways. When you feel responsible for everything that happens in your life, you will feel that everything is joyful because nothing can make you powerless. So, empower yourself with responsibility and unlock the power of feeling.

By unlocking the power of feeling, you will always act from a space of power and completion and start focusing on the solution, not the problem; without worrying about its outcome. As Kṛṣṇa says, you will begin holding success and failure, pain and pleasure the same and just fulfill your responsible declaration. With responsibility, your inner space expands and opens up new possibilities and you gain higher control of your life. Ultimately, you raise yourself to the next level of success and evolve into a new being.

When you take responsibility to fulfill what others expect from you, the whole Cosmos expresses through you. You will have extraordinary powers, because it is directly seva, enriching others. Whenever you enrich others with a feeling of responsibility, without having any other motive, the Cosmos celebrates your Existence. It just celebrates your Existence. Kṛṣṇa, as the transcendental Parabrahman, is not concerned about the practical and societal consequences of Arjuna walking out of the battlefield. He is only concerned about what that would do to Arjuna's inner self. He wants Arjuna to reclaim his inner space, which is occupied by his self-doubt. If Arjuna had truly been steeped in ahiṁsa, non-violence, Kṛṣṇa would have never attempted to persuade Arjuna into violence. Arjuna however, was trying to avoid fighting, not because of any moral and conscientious objection, but out of his root thought pattern of emotional attachment to his kinsmen and others arising out of his own identification with them.

In these verses, Kṛṣṇa is trying to bring Arjuna out of his root pattern, his dilemma, and his confusion, which has obscured his normally clear vision. Kṛṣṇa is trying to get Arjuna to transcend his conditioned actions based on fear and greed relating to the killing of his kinsmen, his svajanam. He is getting him to act out of completion, out of his svadharmam, without worrying about the outcome.

Experience Matters Not Knowledge

2.43 Men of little knowledge are very much attached to the flowery words of the Vedas that recommend various fruitful actions for elevation to heavenly planets, resulting in high birth, power, and so forth. 2.45 O Arjuna! Be you above the three attributes that the Vedas deal in: free yourself from the pairs of opposites and be always in sattva (goodness), free from all thoughts of acquisition or preservation, be established in the Self.

yāvānartha udapāne sarvataḥ samplutodake
tāvānsarveṣu vedeṣu brāhmaṇasya vijānataḥ || 2.46 ||

2.46 The sage who has known the Self has little use for the Hindu scriptures as these are like a pool of water in a place that is already in flood.

Kṛṣṇa begins His teachings of Karma yoga to Arjuna in these verses. These verses should be read carefully by those who believe solely in scriptural authority, based on their superficial understanding of what has been said.

Kṛṣṇa unequivocally says here, 'Forget the Vedas.' He says, 'All the knowledge contained in the Vedas is of as much use as water in a flood to one who has realized himself. The Vedas are limiting; they concern the three attributes, satva, rajas and tamas, the attributes of calmness, aggressive action and lazy inaction. The time has come now to move beyond these attributes; at least move from rajas into the state of satva, calmness.'

'Do not quote to Me what the scriptures say,' Kṛṣṇa says. He continues, 'Do not tell me about what you should do and should not do in this life through rituals and practices that will please the deities and ancestors so that you will benefit materially in this life and spiritually in some after-life. All this is for people with limited understanding of their own Self, people who have not experienced the Truth. These are the people who still hanker after fulfilling sensual pleasures and achieving name and fame.'

'Move beyond them to the single-pointed determination of yoga that I shall teach you,' Kṛṣṇa says, 'and be established in a state where you are no longer concerned about creation, preservation and destruction. You will be beyond these and reach the state of Parabrahman.'

Only a master, the Master of the Universe, can say such things and get away with it. Kṛṣṇa's authority as He speaks these words is compelling. He is casting away the divinely transmitted scriptures, the Vedas, to instill truth in the inner space of Arjuna. It is the truth as spoken by the Divine who Himself has all the knowledge contained in the Vedas.

The Vedas, the collection of knowledge as directly experienced by the great sages, the Ṛṣis, was conveyed for generations by word of mouth and was referred to as Śruti, 'that which was heard'. The real meaning of the Śruti is that it was heard internally, not as an external expression. The moment an experience is expressed, it is no longer the truth of that experience.

All the great scriptures, Vedas, Upaniṣads and Gītā, exist at different levels of understanding, seven levels, to be precise, depending on the energy level that one dwells in. At the highest level one understands that all that there is, is INFINITE, each one infinitely powerful. There is no experiencer, experienced or experience as separate entities at the highest energy level; ALL is INFINITE.

Kṛṣṇa refers to that truth here in these verses, the truth of the highest energy. 'Do not be carried away by the apparent ritualistic approach of the Vedas as propounded by half learned scholars,' the Master says, 'go beyond; go beyond duality, nirdvando. All these seem to bring joy but are transient; that joy is the brief intermission between periods of sorrow. Go beyond the three attributes, nistrai-guṇyo bhavārjuna and seek the firm truth of the INFINITE, the union, that is yoga,' He says to Arjuna.

'There is something beyond the superficial understanding,' Kṛṣṇa says, 'that will take you beyond the three human attributes of sattva (calmness), rajas (active action) and tamas (passive inaction) and into liberation arising out of true understanding. At that stage you will be beyond creation, preservation and destruction, as these would have no meaning in the understanding of the permanence of the Ultimate energy - nirdvando nitya-sattva-stho niryoga-kṣema ātmavān (2.45).'

Kṛṣṇa finally says, 'Once you understand and realize Brahman, all the knowledge of the Vedas that you quote so passionately, will be of as much relevance to you as a lake in the midst of an ocean.'

Kṛṣṇa is leading Arjuna step by step as if teaching a baby to walk. One by one the Master demolishes Arjuna's conflicting patterns, arguments and fears, dispelling his dilemma. These first baby steps address Arjuna's intellect, for that's all Arjuna has been using till now. Kṛṣṇa shows Arjuna how inadequate and meaningless his cognition and intellectual knowledge is. It is all borrowed, with no experiential backing. He now seeks to lead him into experiential knowledge.

Act Without Worry About Results

कर्मण्येवाधिकारस्ते मा फलेषु कदाचन ।
मा कर्मफलहेतुर्भूर्मा ते सङ्गोऽस्त्वकर्मणि ॥ २-४७॥
karmaṇyevādhikāraste mā phaleṣu kadācana
mā karmaphalaheturbhūrmā te saṅgo'stvakarmaṇi || 2.47 ||

2.47 You have a right only to work, but never to its outcome. Let not the outcome be your motive; but do not move into inaction.

योगस्थः कुरु कर्माणि सङ्गं त्यक्त्वा धनञ्जय ।
सिद्ध्यसिद्ध्योः समो भूत्वा समत्वं योग उच्यते ॥ २-४८॥
yogasthaḥ kuru karmāṇi saṅgaṃ tyaktvā dhanañjaya siddhyasiddhyoḥ samo bhūtvā samatvaṃ yoga ucyate || 2.48 ||

2.48 O Dhanañjaya! Do what you have to do with no attachment to outcome, being centered in yoga. Be balanced in success and failure. Evenness of mind is yoga.

The entire teaching of Bhagavad Gītā can be summarized in the above two verses. The sheer brilliance of the wisdom of the universal Master is reflected in these verses.

Kṛṣṇa says many, many things in these few words. He says, 'You have the right and responsibility to work. You have no responsibility or right to the results of that work. Do not focus on the result and make it either a pattern of greed to chase or fear to stay away from. Do what you have to do with a centered mind, a complete inner space without worrying about whether you will succeed or fail.'

karmaṇy evādhikāras te mā phaleṣu kadācana | mā karmaphala hetur bhur mā te saṅgo'stv akarmaṇi || 2.47 ||

Nothing more can be said or ever needs to be said about why and how one should perform. Many people wrongly communicate and misunderstand these verses. There are people who stay away from work that they fear may end in adverse negative results. As long as the results can be positive either to themselves or others, they will carry out and complete what they are assigned sincerely. But when they think that something bad may happen, that they may fail, they will stop doing whatever they are doing.

One of the biggest problems human beings have is this - you love to be successful, but you deeply believe that you are a failure. This is one of the biggest paradoxes. This shows the lack of integrity in your thinking.

Understand, some of your actions may be a failure, some of your decisions or dimensions may be a failure, but YOU are never failure, because you are still breathing.

There are others who feel that doing nothing and disengaging from all action or akarma is the best solution, since all actions result in reactions and they accumulate karma. Of course, almost all of us go on blindly doing whatever we are told to do when we see money or material rewards in front of us.

Do My Work with Integrity and Authenticity

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Stop! Who do you think you are? You are here to do My work. You have no right to take the results that are Mine.'

His position is similar to that of a landowner who has sharecroppers working on the land. The sharecroppers have no right to anything but their sustenance wages. They need not worry about whether the land will yield well or not. All that they need to do is honor the work they have committed to and fulfill their own responsibilities to their peak capability in caring for the land. They just need to be in integrity and authenticity to their work. That's all. The landlord is the owner and ultimate beneficiary.

Awareness of what Kṛṣṇa says here is the solution to all our day-to-day problems. Do what you have to do as your right and responsibility, without worrying about the results. Do not act with hopes of a certain reward. Do not stop doing what you need to do because you are afraid of what may lie ahead. Please understand, when you are inauthentic, when you lack integrity in your work, be there and take the heat; constantly bring integrity to your thinking, authenticity to your feeling, responsibility to your actions, enriching to your lifestyle. You will see, you will realize an extraordinary space in your life, what Kṛṣṇa calls as being balanced in success and failure and being complete in yoga, siddhy-asiddhyoḥ samo bhūtvā samatvaṁ yoga ucyate (2.48).

With integrity, you will literally clean your inner space of the constant unwanted beliefs that you carry, like the strong belief that you will be a failure. This continuous belief holds you from taking responsibility for your actions, makes you worry about the results, and leads you towards failure. When you start thinking with integrity, you will diagnose those self-fulfilling negative prophecies that you constantly give to yourself.

When even a small thing happens, you immediately declare failure. We go on doing this. The first thing to do is to declare your integrity, not your failure. When you start thinking with integrity, you will diagnose your own self-fulfilling negative prophecies.

If you have a strong idea or self-doubt what you are doing is going to be a failure, the moment you think that it is a failure, it is a commitment and word you are giving to you. Do you understand? So if you give that word, you naturally have to fulfill it. Do you want to fulfill that word? No. Then tell yourself that I am not going to fulfill it. It means that whenever you have a thought, 'I am a failure,' you should know, "This is a commitment I am making to me, and I have to honor it." You may say that it comes on its own. Then complete it. Consciously disown and complete with it.

Not fulfilling your everyday commitments will only make the weeds hide behind your unconscious patterns. Swami Vivekananda is very clear, yoga can happen in you, only along with responsible actions. Karma yoga does not happen without responsible actions.

Sometimes, you execute actions the whole day, but there is no feeling of responsibility for it. When you have not lost the inspiration to take responsibility, nothing is lost. If you take responsibility, even death cannot come near you. Death waits for you to complete your responsibility. So for anybody who wants to live long, just practice authentic responsibility for your actions. Do not worry about the outcome of your work - mā karmaphala hetur bhur (2.47).

When you take responsibility with authenticity, consciousness starts growing more intensely in the body. Shrinking does not happen. Consciousness growing in your body is enlightenment.

Many of you in corporate life are focused on results. You will do something only if you think that it will be effective. You get caught in the result even before you start. So how do you define what is effective? Ninety percent of the time effectiveness is interpreted as something that benefits our self-interest. Even if it benefits the organization, we do it because our performance will be recognized and we will be rewarded. We learn this lesson early in life. Our elders teach us this rule from infancy. 'Do this and we shall reward you; do that and we will punish you.' We are all brought up with the deep root pattern of what is good for us and what is bad for us, what will be successful or what will be a failure. Both success and failure, siddhya-asiddhyoḥ are based on anticipated rewards or punishments.

Sometimes, you take up failure as a self-sympathy creating mechanism. Or you think that you have to work for success, but failure is natural. No! Success is natural; you have to work for failure. Bring integrity; you will understand that success is the natural flow of your life just like Nature.

Integrity Teaches Responsibility In Action

Society operates on this principle of greed and fear to prevent us from doing actions that it does not want us to do. Religions do the same. Society threatens you with legal punishment here and now; religion threatens you with punishment in the hereafter, in hell.

When you clean your inner space with the power of integrity, you will realize that all the contradictions, conflicts and confusions you carry are responsible for your whole life, for all reactions you attract from others and society. You are responsible for all your actions, the reactions you attract from others and the happenings of life. Integrity will automatically teach you responsibility. You will understand that for everything happening in and around you, you are responsible.

You are not in integrity with yourself, when you say one thing and do another. You do not walk your talk. But, when you do walk your talk and your talk is in integrity and authenticity, then your words will become reality. You will have vāk siddhi - the power to manifest your word as reality. But if the talk itself is lacking integrity, then your walk and your actions will also be out-of-integrity and you lose self-confidence. Ultimately it is all about the truth of integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching from your space of completion.

Integrity is the first lesson of spiritual life. Integrity is not just a simple vow, a simple word. Integrity is all about ironing out your thinking, aligning your thinking. If you bring integrity to your inner space, you will realize that even accidents are attracted by you. You are attracting everything in your life, whether it is wealth or poverty, right or wrong. You are responsible for your life.

When you are in completion, with integrity, without internal conflict or contradictions, whatever you project on the cosmos is a project for the cosmos. Simply cosmos does it. When you are integrated, the outer world obeys you just like that. That is the power of integrity. Nothing is political or accidental on the planet Earth. Everything runs on the natural law of life, dharma of these four principles.

Be Complete In Yoga, Drop All Attachments

What Kṛṣṇa says here is the law of Nature. Nature just is. Nature just acts as per these four cosmic principles. Nature does not think about end results, successes or failures, rewards or punishments.

No, Kṛṣṇa is not talking about acting in selfishness; the universal Master is talking about acting from the space of completion. He says, 'Be centered and complete in yoga, and drop all attachment to results; do what you have to do.'

yoga-sthaḥ kuru karmāṇi saṅgaṁ tvaktvā dhanañjaya | siddhy-asiddhyoḥ samo bhūtvā samatvaṁ yoga ucyate || 2.48 ||

Yoga is union, union of man and divine. Yoga is completion with the divine. Yoga is your realization of your own Self, your realization that you are divine. It is the state of completion, the state of truth, the state of the present, when all that you do will be in righteous consciousness, dharma. When you perform with this completion, and with no expectations, you will do what is right and just.

Suffering Happens When We Link Thoughts

Our thoughts are unconnected, illogical and unpredictable. It is only when we link thoughts together that problems start and suffering happens. We remember a few out of hundreds of events and try to create a link between these few. Ninety percent of what we cognize and experience is never recorded by our conscious memory; it just slips into our unconscious. Within the ten percent of what we retain, what stays in our memory is always that which falls outside the pattern. If it is part of a normal pattern we will almost always ignore and forget the event. If your spouse is always in a grumpy mood, it is no surprise if he or she is in a grumpy mood today too. But if your spouse is especially caring and loving today, then that would be a miracle and noteworthy.

The trouble is that our mind picks up these exceptions, because that is what it remembers and uses to form a pattern. It forgets all other evidence and remembers only the exceptions. It then expects that exception to happen again. When it does not happen we are unhappy; if it does, we are happy till the next time when it does not happen.

So, do not link thoughts and create a shaft of thoughts. Unclutch from your thoughts by bringing integrity and weed out all your negative self-fulfilling patterns, and automatically the mind will drop. This is the way to stay in the present.

Some of you misunderstand the word 'Unclutched' as 'not to do anything.' You think that to drop the mind is to be passive, inactive, doing nothing. No, not at all! You can be doing nothing and yet occupy your mind fully. That is what they mean by saying that an idle mind is the devil's workshop. When you have nothing to do, what you end up doing is creating fantasies.

Constantly listening to your own inner space is the beginning of integrity. If your inner space says that there is nothing more to listen, if only silence is there, then that is the end of integrity. You have achieved integrity. As long as you are hearing something from your inner space, it is lack of integrity. Go on listening. Even while you are in action, karma - sitting, driving, talking or walking, listen to you.

Inaction, akarma is not what is advised. Understand: When you experience integrity and your mind drops, when thoughts cease, and your energy level is high, you cannot be inactive. You will act spontaneously out of sheer necessity. Physical and mental idleness are never produced by a no-thought mind or inner space. One must not link idleness with calmness. One with a no-thought mind, one who is complete in yoga, dwells in peace, calmness and harmony, the space of restful awareness, but is always aware and alert to act spontaneously in the way that would best suit each situation in every moment.

With a no-thought mind comes great awareness and energy; idleness or lethargy is far from it. An incomplete, confused, restless and overworked mind is constantly occupied with chatter and fantasies that can result in apathy and idleness. Integrity is the basic requirement for Unclutching. When you are in a state of an unclutched inner space, you are in completion and you are in the present moment, where regrets of your past and expectations of the future are absent from your mind. Whatever you do in such a state of completion would be the right thing to do. You are not influenced either by fear or greed regarding the outcome. You do what you have to do, naturally. That is why Kṛṣṇa says that you must act with responsibility in the present moment of completion. He says, 'Do not get attached to the results of your action, nor get attached to inaction, thinking that it could be an easy way out of this problem.'

Be Steady with Authenticity in Action

दूरेण ह्यवरं कर्म बुद्धियोगाद्धनञ्जय ।
बुद्धौ शरणमन्विच्छ कृपणाः फलहेतवः ॥ २-४९॥ dūreṇa hyavaraṃ karma buddhiyogāddhanañjaya
buddhau śaraṇamanviccha kṛpaṇāḥ phalahetavaḥ || 2.49 ||

2.49 O Dhanañjaya, beyond the yoga of wisdom is action. Wretched are those whose motive is the outcome; surrender yourself to wisdom of completion.

बुद्धियुक्तो जहातीह उभे सुकृतदुष्कृते ।
तस्माद्योगाय युज्यस्व योगः कर्मसु कौशलम् ॥ २-५०॥
buddhiyukto jahātīha ubhe sukṛtaduṣkṛte
tasmādyogāya yujyasva yogaḥ karmasu kauśalam || 2.50 ||

2.50 Endowed with the wisdom of evenness of mind, move away from both good and evil deeds in this life; Therefore, devote yourself to yoga. Authenticity in action is yoga.

कर्मजं बुद्धियुक्ता हि फलं त्यक्त्वा मनीषिणः ।

karmajaṃ buddhiyuktā hi phalaṃ tyaktvā manīṣiṇaḥ

2.51 The wise, having abandoned the outcome of their actions and possessed of knowledge, are freed from the cycle of birth and death. They go to the state that is beyond all sorrow.

यदा ते मोहकलिलं बुद्धिर्व्यतितरिष्यति ।

yadā te mohakalilaṃ buddhirvyatitariṣyati

2.52 When your wisdom takes you beyond the delusion, you shall be indifferent to all what has been heard and what is yet to be heard.

श्रुतिविप्रतिपन्ना ते यदा स्थास्यति निश्चला । समाधावचला बुद्धिस्तदा योगमवाप्स्यसि ॥ २-५३॥
śrutivipratipannā te yadā sthāsyati niścalā
samādhāvacalā buddhistadā yogamavāpsyasi || 2.53 ||

2.53 When you are not confused by what you have heard and your wisdom stands steady and unmoving in the Self, you shall attain yoga, Self-realization.

Kṛṣṇa emphasizes what He has said before and ends with a punchline. He says, 'Act without attachment. Do not worry about success or failure in results. Center yourself in wisdom of completion that takes you beyond action and the desire for fruits of action. Once you are centered in wisdom of completion you will act wisely. Once you give up attachment to results, you will be freed from the cycle of birth and death and you will be beyond sorrow.'

In the next verse, Kṛṣṇa begins initiating Arjuna into yoga with the second tattva of authenticity or śraddha. Kṛṣṇa is the greatest strategist of life. Here, He begins revealing the truth of authenticity, the strategy of life, the strategy that will make Arjuna succeed and expand.

Kṛṣṇa declares, 'yogaḥ karmasu kauśalam.' Yoga is authenticity in action.' It is not just 'perfection in action'.

buddhi yukto jahātīha ubhe sukṛta-duṣkṛte | tasmād Yogaya yujyasva yogaḥ karmasu kauśalaṁ || 2.50 ||

Authenticity is you being established in the peak of your energy, the peak of your capability, and responding to life from who you perceive yourself to be for you and who you project yourself to be for others, and what others expect you to be for them. Authenticity in your thinking means raising you to the peak. Raising you, again and again, higher and higher, expanding you more and more.

The moment you listen to 'expanding you more and more, continuously,' do you feel, 'Oh, God! Then it is unending process? I will never be able to rest at all!' If you cherish this idea in you, then you are death-oriented; you are entertaining death in your heart. The idea you entertain in your life invites different happenings of life. So, don't blame, if you get any killer diseases in your life, because you invited them. Understand, first thing you need to do is break that pattern.

Kṛṣṇa gives the ultimate winning strategy of life to Arjuna - to stand up with the courage of authenticity in all his actions, yogaḥ karmasu kauśalam. He urges Arjuna to devote himself to yoga, buddhau Yogad dhanañjaya buddhau śaraṇaṁ anviccha (2.49) - to bring authenticity in his action, to expand himself to the peak of his energy. Arjuna can complete his root pattern of fear only when he raises and expands himself fighting as a kṣatriya warrior. Only then Arjuna will be authentic. The state of fear can be born in you only when you are inauthentic. Every time inauthenticity is allowed in you, it leaves a powerful fear in you. Arjuna's inauthenticity in not raising himself to his responsibility and to others' expectation of him as a warrior, led him to be death-oriented and collapse with fear.

Life is expansion. When you feel, 'Wow, I am going to expand, expand, expand! Authenticity is the best principle,' then understand, you are entering into akśardhām—eternal life. Break the pattern of, 'Am I never going to rest or what?' Why do you need rest? Increasing the speed of running is rest. Make it into flying! That is rest. You see, when you drive or run on the road, there is friction. If you want bliss, joy, peace, don't reduce the speed of life; reduce the friction. Just take off! Your body, mind, inner space, consciousness, whatever you feel about you, go on expanding, expanding, expanding. That is the only way life can continue to ooze in you, overflow in you.

Don't say, 'No, I can expand. Now I do two hours of work, which I will make into four hours; not more than that. Then I will rest.' Make it into twenty-four hours and few more minutes and penetrate into time. Whenever you need more time to do more work, stop the time, complete the work, and allow time to move. You can do! Something has to grow in your body - either life or death. You cannot be in neutral gear; you cannot say 'pause'. Life has no 'pause' button. It has 'fast-forward', 'rewind', 'play' button, even a 'stop' button, but it has no 'pause' button. Either life has to grow in your body or death has to grow in your body. The inauthenticity which you entertain is death for you.

Everything should only be from authenticity. Pick up authenticity as your strategy plan in every moment of your life. Whether it is to do with health, creativity, solving relationship problems, creating wealth or achieving inner fulfillment, have authenticity as your strategy plan.

Kṛṣṇa then adds, 'When you are centered in wisdom of completion you will no longer be deluded by what you hear. When you are no longer deluded by what you have heard, you are liberated.' Kṛṣṇa's immediate reference here is to the scriptures, the Vedas. He chides Arjuna and says, 'Don't be confused by what you hear, even if it is supposed to be divine knowledge, the Vedas. Remember: If you are really centered in wisdom, you can never be deluded; you will be in completion.'

'So,' Kṛṣṇa says, 'let the Vedas say what they want, but put what you hear, see, and read to the test of wisdom to go beyond delusion.' Kṛṣṇa is the Vedas, the source of all knowledge. He himself declares this in Gītā and yet He asks Arjuna to experiment and be guided by his inner wisdom, not by what he merely hears.

Only one who is so sure about the truth can say, 'Do not listen to what I say and how I act, but listen to your inner voice of truth born out of your own experience.' One can write hundreds and thousands of pages but they will be meaningless in the presence of these words.

Understand: Integrity is not just ethics. It is your constitutional right and your first responsibility. What you can do is your right. What you can't do is the law. If you understand how much integrity adds to you, if you experience the powers given to you when you live integrity, only then you will realize that integrity is not just your responsibility, it is your right.

When you feel integrity is your responsibility, you are in the zone of practice; you are a seeker. When you understand integrity is your right, you are in the zone of enlightenment. Kṛṣṇa is taking Arjuna on the path of enlightenment through simple steps initiating him into the tattva of integrity and authenticity.

He says, 'Don't be inactive, do what you need to do. Do it with no expectations and no attachment to results. Do it with a centered mind, and in wisdom of your own inner calling, and not because of something you have heard. You will then go beyond all suffering and be liberated.' These steps are so simple that everyone can practice them; in fact everyone should practice them. Stay fully in the space of completion, and based on the truth of integrity and authenticity, act. You can never go wrong.

With integrity you experience the space of positivity. With authenticity you experience the space of possibility. Only a man who lives authenticity is a liberated one, a yogi, the one devoted to authenticity in action. Only when you surrender yourself to practice integrity in thinking and authenticity in action - yogaḥ karmasu kauśalam - you will realize that you are responsible for success and failure, for good or bad, for everything you experience. You drop your attachments and your fear patterns, and experience self-realization - tadā yogam avāpsyasi (2.53).

2.54 O Keśava. What is the description of the one who stays in completion and is merged in the awareness of truth and wisdom? How does one of steady wisdom speak, how does he sit, how does he walk?

2.58 As the tortoise withdraws its limbs from all sides, when a person withdraws his senses from the sense-objects, His wisdom becomes steady.

2.59 From the body, the sense objects turn away, but the desires remain; his desires also leave him on seeing the Supreme.

Arjuna is now curious and wants to know more. He asks Kṛṣṇa, 'You are telling me all this, that is wonderful. You tell me that I must perform without expectations and attachment and that I must be complete in wisdom. I would like to live that way and move on the path of wisdom. Pray, tell me what kind of a person is this, the one who always stays in the steady space of completion - sthita prajñasya kā bhāṣā samādhi-sthasya keśava (2.54).

How does he behave, walk and talk? Let me model myself on him.' For the fifth time Arjuna expresses authentic interest in what Kṛṣṇa is saying. Arjuna has realized that whatever he said earlier had arisen from his confusion, his patterns. Arjuna is intelligent enough to know that he does not know. When Kṛṣṇa tells him to behave in a manner befitting the code of the warriors, this piece of advice certainly makes good sense to Arjuna, since this is the conditioning that he has been brought up in. However, what Kṛṣṇa says further confuses Arjuna. Kṛṣṇa says to do what you have to do without being concerned about the outcome. This is a strange idea to Arjuna. He has rarely done anything in his life without thinking about what is going to happen as a result of his action.

Arjuna is the greatest of marksmen. Once he fixes his bow on a target, he never misses. He is conditioned with the pattern to first define his target and then act. Kṛṣṇa has confused him totally now. Kṛṣṇa says, 'Release your arrow; where it lands is my business.' At least, this is how Arjuna understands what Kṛṣṇa says. Arjuna has enough trust in Kṛṣṇa not to ignore this instruction from the Divine. So he asks, 'Tell me who is it who acts without any interest in the outcome? Who is it who is not concerned about the result, whether it is good or bad, painful or joyful, and how do I identify such a person?'

Kṛṣṇa responds, 'This man is free from desires and emotions. He has neither greed nor fear. He has no patterns. He is always complete in himself. Pleasures through the senses do not interest him. He has withdrawn his senses from the external or outer world and has integrated them inwards into his inner space, directed them towards that supreme Truth that is beyond all pleasures, attachments, emotions and sense objects. Once he realizes that truth, even the longing for that truth leaves him.' Kṛṣṇa thus describes the realized yogi, the sthita prajñaya to Arjuna so that he too may emulate him and realize himself.

Seek the Unattached

The whole Universe is a holographic structure. For example, if there is a ten-by-ten meter hologram or a picture, on cutting it into several ten-by-ten millimeter ones, the same picture will be there inside it. That is a hologram. It means that whatever is in the macrocosm, the whole universe, is also there inside your body, the microcosm. If you dissect, dissect, and go into a small atom, the brahmāṅda (macrocosm) will be there in piṇḍāṅda (microcosm). Whatever is there in the piṇḍāṅda is there in the brahmāṅda. The cosmos functions with the principle of a hologram.

Responsibility is the DNA, which awakens the cosmic hologram in you. If you want to experience the macrocosm hologram in the microcosm, awaken responsibility. The macrocosm and microcosm are just mirroring each other's possibility. When we feel the responsibility for existence, we become existence and existence feels responsible for us. When we let go of our patterns, when we listen to the Universe and feel responsible, the Universe feels responsible for us and gives us all that we need to live with abundance.

But the problem is that we don't listen and we don't take responsibility and destroy our own possibility. We do not stop with our needs but get greedy with our wants as well. There is no way all our wants can be fulfilled without taking away the needs of other beings in this Universe. Feel responsible. You are the microcosmic hologram of the macrocosmic diagram. Once we choose to live based on responsibility, we know our real present needs and not futuristic wants. We rise into the present moment of completion. Desires based on past and future dissolve. We then realize that we too are the brahmāṅda, Universe and that we can have all that we need as all that belongs to the Universe belongs to us also.

Kṛṣṇa aptly provides the analogy of the tortoise, kurma to illustrate how to withdraw one's senses inwards and how to be centered and steady in wisdom of completion in the Self, tasya prajñā pratiṣṭhitā (2.58). The tortoise follows its instincts to obey nature; it lives in completion. It moves when its sensors report that there is no danger, and it withdraws completely into its shell when it senses threat. Its entire cycle of life is tuned to the wisdom of nature. It is celebrated in all ancient cultures for its longevity and steadiness.

Man is obviously a different being from the rest of the animals. He alone has the power to decide whether he follows the wisdom of nature inherent in him as in all other beings, or rejects it and decides to be 'unintelligent.' An animal, when it indulges in any act, whether of mating, caring, killing or saving its own life, does all and any of these with tremendous focus. The animal always lives in its present moment. Not so the human. For the human, where his body is his mind never is. You are responsible for everything. If you feel that you are poor, take responsibility for it. If you feel that you are sick, take responsibility for it. Responsibility makes everything, from an ordinary desire to have a good meal tomorrow to your desire to be in desirelessness become a reality. Everything is realized when you take responsibility.

2.67 He loses his awareness of the present moment when his mind follows the wandering senses, just as the wind carries away a boat on the waters.

Kṛṣṇa continues to explain to Arjuna how difficult it is to control the senses and what happens when one loses control of the senses.

It is like this: Once a monkey spotted a jar full of nuts. The jar was big and heavy with a long and narrow neck. The monkey put his hand into the jar and grabbed lots of nuts, but he was unable to withdraw his fist from the jar. He thought he was trapped with his hand in the jar. He didn't realize that all he needed to do was to let go of the nuts, and he would be free. His greed enslaved him.

Kṛṣṇa says that our senses are turbulent, and however much we try to control them, they stay out of control. Some of the greatest sages, the Ṛṣis, have been known to succumb to sensual pleasures. There is the legendary story of Viśvāmitra, a great sage, who, in the midst of his intense penance, was seduced by the celestial maiden Menakā.

Kṛṣṇa says that the only way is to integrate one's mind on Him once the senses are under control and the mind is steady. The mind cannot be stopped. Thoughts cannot be stopped as long as the body exists. You can bring integrity to your thinking by doing completion with your root patterns. Thus integrating your mind on something that transcends sensory pleasures, it will become quiet by itself. Once the mind discovers the bliss of this completion, it will never want to stray again.

You can never destroy thoughts or suppress them. You can only complete with thoughts by doing self-completion with them, and gradually the mind will settle down. Lack of integrity is nothing but suppressing your thoughts and putting all your problems under the carpet.

Please understand, however much you try to push the incomplete conversations with you under the carpet, they do not die. The incompletions pushed under your inner space, say, 'No, no, no! Why are you asking too many questions? Somehow I will win. Keep quiet!' Without completing, if you push your own questions under the carpet, they will not die or keep quiet. Today or tomorrow, you have to face those questions. You have to face that part of you.

When you do completion and settle into the present moment, with no expectations and no attachments, you will find that your inner space becomes quiet and your senses slow down.

Be Complete in the Present Moment

Kṛṣṇa says that from attachment springs desire, from desire arises anger, from anger arises delusion, from delusion comes loss of memory, and from loss of memory develops loss of discrimination which then leads to one's destruction. The only way to stop this, the Lord says, is to control one's senses, complete with oneself and surrender to Him, the Universal energy, and achieve everlasting peace.

The map has been so clearly laid down by the greatest Master, not because He wants you to follow it, but because in His infinite grace and compassion He is making you aware of what is in store for you if you do. He teaches that if you do not control your senses, you will be destroyed.

Go through each of these stages laid down by the Master. The path will be crystal clear. Each one of us develops attachment, liking, hatred and dislike for many things through our experiences. These likes and dislikes stay in our unconscious memory as root thought patterns and even without any conscious awareness on our part, drive us into actions through desires or into inaction through fears. When the desires are fulfilled, there is temporary satisfaction; then the desires grow. When the desires do not get fulfilled we are disappointed, we get angry.

We should be angry with our own selves for having had the desires or for not having worked with authenticity, wholeheartedly at the peak of our capability towards fulfilling the desire, but we actually get angry with other people who we think are responsible for our failures. Rarely do we admit that we are the cause of our failures. We normally say, 'Why admit our fault when there are literally millions out there who can carry it for us?' So we create fantasies and delusions about shifting responsibility and gradually erase the memory of our own responsibility for our actions. The vicious cycle is now almost complete. The moment we fail to take responsibility for our actions, we lose all our powers of intellectual discrimination between right and wrong and resign ourselves to being unaware and unconscious. This is a one-way road to disaster. We do not realize that blaming others will make us feel more and more powerless.

Kṛṣṇa reveals two very important truths here in the last two verses. One is that you can never be peaceful unless you are complete, conscious. The other is that you cannot be complete if you are led by your senses. Therefore, as long as your senses lead you into what you think is a pleasurable journey; you cannot really be happy or peaceful. It is just another trick your mind is playing on you.

Your happiness is not real happiness. It is just a gap between two periods of sorrow. What you hear, what you think you hear, what you see, what you think you see, and so on, all these sense inputs are unreliable, incomplete cognitions. Every single thing that you receive as your inputs through your senses is an impure perception with patterns and colored by the filter of your mind and you get to know only what they want you to know.

With anybody who succeeded, till that success happened, he only failed. But if he had held on to his past record, success would not have happened in his life. This journey never stops all through your life unless you make a serious attempt to complete with it. Your mind, on its own, would never want to stay in the present moment, which is the only moment of truth. Self-completion, svapūrṇatva is the only direct method to reclaim your space of completion. This is your basic right. Reclaim it.

Understand, you can make whatever you can visualize as reality. With integrity and authenticity, visualize yourself in the space of non-falling, moving only from completion to completion, fulfillment to fulfillment. Your past is history. Your past record is the dumping ground of all your regrets and guilt. There is no greater sin that you can commit than carrying past records of these regrets and guilt.

Or your mind dwells in the future, a future that does not exist. You speculate, and dream creating stories and arguments, building a case for your future. If you are questioned, you would say, 'I need to plan.' How much of what you plan is based on present reality? There is nothing wrong at all if you are grounded in reality and plan to progress in that reality. That is chronological planning which is necessary if you live in the world. For example, it is planning the day ahead, with what time you will wake up, what time you will have the meeting and then return home etc. But most of the time what you do has nothing to do with reality. You either worry about things that you have no control over and plan how to escape such worries, or desire things not in your reach out of sheer greed. Just think with integrity, feel with authenticity and act with responsibility.

Drop the past records. The past track never gives you the confidence, the possibility. Unless you see the possibility, life does not flow in you. Excitement does not happen in you. The past records always bring deep sorrow, because by nature, past records are death. Possibility, by nature, is Life. The past record is neither as bad as you remember, nor worthy of being remembered. Possibility is life. Life is possibility, not past record.

Our senses aid us very ably to see only the past records and project them as worries and desires. They make us believe that all this is real and make us react to situations as if they are real. It is the same way that we get up from a nightmare sweating profusely out of fear. Although just a dream, it makes us sweat. In the same manner, these projections of our mind, even when we are fully awake, appear real to us.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Get away from your senses; escape from their control; ground yourself in the completion of the present. Only then can you be at peace. How can there be happiness for one without peace, aśāntasya kutaḥ sukham? (2.66).'

What is this present moment? What is this completion? When we do the self-completion process, our mind and inner space becomes integrated and authentic and stops moving back and forth between the past and future, it will by itself land in the present moment. The present moment is what we are doing now. If you are reading this book, don't half read this book and half listen to music; don't half read this book and half talk with someone. Either be complete and focus completely on what you are reading or don't read at all. This is what Kṛṣṇa says will lead you into peace and very soon to being steady - prasanna-cetaso hy āśu buddhiḥ paryasvatiṣṭhate (2.65). When you are complete, your senses are in your control instead of you being under their control. You become peaceful, you are in bliss.

eṣā brāhmī sthitiḥ pārtha naināṃ prāpya vimuhyati

2.72 O Pārtha, this is the state of Brahman; none is deluded after attaining this. Even at the end of life, one attains oneness with Brahman when established in this state.

In His concluding words in this chapter, Kṛṣṇa clarifies to Arjuna once again, how to reach liberation, how to become one with Brahman which is one's true and natural state. We have seen that a person not centered in self-completion cannot be peaceful or happy or wise. A person who is led by his senses cannot be self-complete. A person who is in control of his senses is firmly in control of his mind and emotions. Only such a person is truly awake.

Kṛṣṇa says that such a person is in sleep when others are awake, yasyāṁ jāgrati bhūtāni sā niśā paśyato muneḥ (2.69). The realized person, although he may appear to be living and actively participating in the activities of the same world that we live in, is in reality, in a state of passive alertness or restful awareness. This means that his senses are not immersed in worldliness and he is centered and complete in his Self. He is dead and asleep to this world because he has moved beyond his senses. A truly realized person is also awake when others are asleep, yā niśā sarva-bhūtānāṁ tasyāṁ jāgrati saṁyamī (2.69). Even in his sleep he is aware, in what is called the state of supta chittam.

We can experience four states of mind - wakefulness, dream, deep sleep and the state of Self-awareness. When we are awake, we are aware of the 'I' and 'mine' and are ruled by our mind, senses and thoughts. We are controlled by our delusion, māyā. Māyā arises from our identification with the 'I' and 'mine.'

However, a person who is in the space of completion is still as the waters in the bed of the ocean. Though there are waves in the surface, they do not disturb the bed of the ocean. Even when desires assail him, they are mere waves in the periphery of his consciousness, and do not disturb him at all. He has abandoned all attachment to 'I' and 'mine.' He is without thoughts and desires and when thoughts and desires come to him, they merge into him without disturbing him. How this is possible? The 'Muni,' one who is still, in silence, is one who is in total control of his senses. When the senses are controlled, when the ego is out of action, all thoughts and desires are just witnessed. The 'Muni' does not get involved in these thoughts and desires. He does not even try to stop or suppress them, as he knows it is impossible. He just lets them be watching them go past, just like the ocean watches impassively as other waters merge into it.

We are all enlightened because we are all a holographic part of the reality of the Universe, Brahman. All that we lack is the awareness of the truth of our enlightenment. What prevents you from realizing that you are enlightened is your root pattern, ego. This ego is not necessarily about any arrogance. It is the perception of who you think you are, your inner-image; what you project yourself to be for others, your outer-image; and what others expect you to be for them, others' image. It is the collection of thoughts, experiences and emotions that go to make up that 'I' and 'mine.'

This identity is that of the body and mind, not of your spirit. Therefore, it perishes with your body and is transient. This identity with the transient reality of who you think you are and what yours is, is māyā. Māyā is the illusion that creates a barrier between you and your completion with your enlightened state. A person who is in control of his senses, his mind and thoughts, lives in the present moment, in full awareness of his true nature and is one with Brahman. For such a Muni, the knowledge of Advaita, the space of infinity with Brahman, becomes a living reality. He conquers all the wrong self-identification with his inner and outer identities. Such a person who is self-aware is fully awake even when he is asleep.

Kṛṣṇa completes His description of the person established in yoga whose profile Arjuna has asked for. Kṛṣṇa concludes by saying that a person steeped in yoga is complete in reality and is one with Brahman - eṣā brāhmī sthitiḥ pārtha. He says that this person is liberated even if he were to reach that state at the end of his life - brahma-nirvānaṁ ṛcchati (2.72).

Kṛṣṇa is in the process of enriching Arjuna what he truly is and how he can realize that truth. Control over the senses, being in the state of restful awareness instead of letting the senses control you, surrendering to the Universe instead of fighting the Universe, dropping one's mind and identity; staying in the space of completion are the surest ways to realize the truth, the truth that you indeed are God.

The science of completion is the essence of Sāṅkhya Yoga. Completion makes you experience the Sāṅkhya of life. In this second chapter of Gītā on Sāṅkhya Yoga or Transcendental Knowledge of Completion, Śrī Kṛṣṇa who is the space of completion Himself, sets Arjuna on the path of completion.

ॐ तत्सदिति श्रीमद्भगवद्गीतासूपनिषत्सु ब्रह्मविद्यायां योगशास्त्रे श्रीकृष्णार्जुनसंवादे साङ्ख्ययोगो नाम द्वितीयोऽध्यायः ॥ २॥

oṃ tatsaditi śrīmadbhagavadgītāsu upaniṣatsu brahmavidyāyāṃ yogaśāstre śrīkṛṣṇārjunasaṃvādesāṅkhyayogo nāma dvitīyo'dhyāyaḥ || 2||

Thus ends the second chapter named Sāṅkhya Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Knowledge of Completion', of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Karma Yogaḥ

Beauty of Purposelessness

The whole of Existence, the whole Universe, is purposeless. Of course, it would be very shocking to hear this. At a very young age, we are taught and socially conditioned to believe that life has some purpose. We are always made to run towards some goal, towards some purpose.

'What is life without purpose?' you may ask. We feel that any activity, let alone one's entire life, has to have a purpose, a definition, and an end point. Only then does it become meaningful. That purpose is what drives us, motivates us.

'All our life we have been brought up to believe that we are here for a purpose. As children we are expected to do well at school, and later at college. Once we grow up, we are supposed to get married and bring up our children. In each phase of our life, we have specific templates that society has set up for us. How can we let them down? How can we believe that all these expectations are wrong, and that there is no purpose to life?'

The more you run towards a goal, the more you are considered a successful person. The greater the speed, the more you are respected. From birth, again and again, you are taught that life has a purpose and a goal. Life without purpose seems meaningless to us. Understand that this is only what you have been brought up to believe. This is not the truth of Existence. Life does not need a defined goal to make living worthwhile, meaningful and happy. The absence of purpose makes our life meaningful. The absence of goals in life makes living worthwhile.

The Universe, Nature has no purpose. It just is. It exists. A river runs downhill towards the ocean because it is its nature to run downhill. It is not because it has a purpose, to meet the ocean. Our life too, has no purpose. We were not born for a purpose. We were born to live, to enjoy life and to be happy. Instead, we set ourselves up for unhappiness; we set goals for ourselves, and almost always these goals are based on fantasies and not on realities. In the process, we stop enjoying life.

The more you run towards the goal, the more you miss life itself. A person who is continuously bothered about goals will never be able to enjoy and enrich his life. He lives in the future and ignores the present. When we are complete in the present moment, the here and now, we do not need a goal to guide us.

Just the space of completion in the present moment will help us decide what needs to be done at each point in time. When the present moment is taken care of with completion, the future gets resolved on its own. As long as the path is right, whatever destination we reach will be right. We do not need to define the destination; the right path defines its own destination.

However, we constantly worry about the future, relating it with the past. We continuously postpone our happiness without enjoying the present. For example, when you are studying you think, 'When I get a job, I will be happy.' When you have your job you think, 'After marriage my life will be happy.' After marriage, you think, 'When I have kids and my own house, I will be happy.' After achieving that you think, 'When the kids grow up and all my responsibilities are over, I will be happy.' By the time your responsibilities are over, when you want to relax, your being is so conditioned to running that you can't relax.

With this default cognition, we are constantly running to stay in the same spot. Happiness is where we are, not where we think we should be. We do not understand what it is to relax. We feel we need to lose our happiness before we can start searching for it. The tension of running after something out of compulsion has become a part of our being. Resting is no longer relaxation. When we run behind goals, all that seems to matter is the achievement of that goal. Any sacrifice seems to be worth it, including those we claim we love and care for.

Only a Complete Being can Relax

The more you run, the more titles you receive. You are called a 'multi- dimensional personality.' This is just another name for schizophrenics. Only a person who has deeply experienced himself, who is complete in himself, who rests in himself, who experiences inaction in action can be a multidimensional personality. Only such a person understands himself and his many personalities, and is comfortable and complete with all of them.

Only a Kṛṣṇa, a complete being can be a multidimensional personality. Only a man who completely rests in himself, who knows how to relax within himself, can be a multidimensional personality. A person who runs to satisfy society, who is compelled to run by society, can never experience peace. Society doesn't want you as you are. It wants you as it thinks you should be. If you are a doctor, a lawyer, or an accountant, if you are useful to society in some way, then you are rewarded; otherwise you are made to feel inadequate and incomplete. You are respected just for your title, not for what you are. The more titles you have, the more respect you get.

3.3 Bhagavān says, O sinless Arjuna, as I said before, in this world there are two paths; Self-knowledge for the intellectual and the Path of Action for the yogi.

na karmaṇāmanārambhān naiṣkarmyaṃ puruṣo'śnute
na ca saṃnyasanādeva siddhiṃ samadhigacchati || 3.4 ||

3.4 A person does not attain freedom from action by abstaining from work, nor does he attain fulfillment by giving up action.

In the previous chapter on Sāṅkhya Yogaḥ, Kṛṣṇa tells Arjuna that knowledge of the Self is the supreme path to enlightenment. He explains the nature of the indestructible Self. Kṛṣṇa tells Arjuna to shed all root patterns of fear, abandon his desires and go beyond success and failure; to practice authenticity in action, to be unattached and steady in completion of the Self, the state of Brahman Arjuna is still in the space of inauthenticity. He is confused as to what he should do. At one level, he understands what Kṛṣṇa says to him. However, the explanation about the spirit living on while the body dies, and the idea that all those he is about to fight and destroy have already been destroyed in the cosmic sense, does not appeal to him. Arjuna is a warrior. To him, what is seen in front of him is what exists. He sees all his elders and relatives arrayed against him in battle and he has to make a choice to kill or be killed. This is the physical reality that he faces.

Kṛṣṇa tells him not to take this reality seriously. He says all the living people in front of him are already dead, and therefore he is committing no sin by killing them again. In fact, if he does not fight them, he is being out of integrity; by running away from the battle as an inauthentic coward. He also tells Arjuna that he has the right to do his duty but no right to its results. 'Let not the fruit of action be your motive and let not your attachment be to inaction either,' Kṛṣṇa warns him.

Violence Asks for Single Instruction

Arjuna is totally confused. He tells Kṛṣṇa, 'I do not understand what you are saying. First, you tell me to fight. Then you tell me to shed anger. You say I must kill my enemies, who are my elders and relatives, but then you say I should not worry about the end result.' Arjuna says, 'All I need to know is whether I should act or not. You say knowledge is superior to action and yet you say I must act. What should I do?' he asks.

Arjuna is clearly in violence. Asking, expecting or thinking only one act can be important is violence. Only violence asks for instruction without inspiration. A violent person cannot be inspired. He can only be instructed. You see, in the beginning of Gītā when Arjuna says, 'Leave me, I am going and becoming sannyāsi.' Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says, 'No!' He asks him to fight. Later, when Arjuna is asking, 'Why should I act? How can I fight?' Bhagavān tells him about sannyāsa, how to become a sannyāsi. Arjuna is supposed to fight, but he is being taught the knowledge of completion with Sāṅkhya Yoga. He is being taught to meditate with one full chapter for dhyāna yoga and he is being taught the different great aspects of sannyāsa yoga, Karma-Sannyāsa Yoga, Jñānakarma-Sannyāsa Yoga.

This is the beauty of Hinduism. No single instruction can work because the root pattern of asking for a single instruction is violence. Why? Because we feel either we should be alive or the other person should be alive. The mentality of fighting and violence always excludes. The root of the problem should be solved. Anything that talks about one and only one solution is born out of survival instinct, never out of inspiration.

Fulfillment in Purpose is an Illusion

Just understand, whatever you think of as your purpose in life, whether it is money or relationships or name and fame, even if you have fulfillment in that dimension, you will not rest, you will not be complete.

A management consultant said, 'If you place a ladder somewhere and climb as fast as you can, you will quickly reach the top of the ladder. But unless the ladder is placed where you want, where you reach will be of no consequence.' Climbing as fast as you can is efficiency. We all think we are very efficient. Placing the ladder where you want is effectiveness. Not all of us know where to place the ladder. So, the consultant says to focus on where to place the ladder.

But the truth is it does not matter where you place the ladder as long as you enjoy the climb. As long as your 'why' is with the right context, with completion as your root cognition, 'what' and 'where' does not matter. More than your actions, it is the space from which the actions are done, and the context and reason from which the actions are done that matter. The trouble is that we spend the entire climb obsessed with where we will reach and what we will do there. If we spend that time enjoying and being enriched by the journey, any destination we reach will be the right destination. The destination is not important; the journey is. The goal is not important; the process is.

Root thought pattern is nothing but this first social conditioning, this strong cognition which imbalances you from your purposeless space and gives birth to the mind, the idea that there is some purpose to life. Life has no purpose. Even if you achieve whatever you want, you can't take it with you. You can't carry even a single dollar when you leave. Nothing will come with you. There is no exchange offer. If you give fifty rupees in India, you will get one dollar in USA. But no matter how much money you give in this world, you cannot get a single rupee in heaven. In one night's dream you can live even 20 years of life. Don't you sometimes have such dreams where in one night's dream you live 20 years of life? Then why can't your dream be reality because of its consistency? This whole life time span, which you think is reality, may be part of the dream. There is no scale to prove reality and the dream. When you leave the body, all you see now as multi-colour will become black and white.

Nothing can be carried with you at the time of leaving the body. You can't cash your cheques! You can't talk to your relatives. Your car will not be useful to you anymore. When you are not able to take anything with you, what is the purpose of life then? The moment you accept the beauty of purposelessness, you will realize the meaning of living.

Life Has No Purpose but Only Meaning

Life has no purpose, but it has meaning. Purpose means goal orientation. You always think about the goal; you keep running and one day you just drop dead. The more goal-oriented you are, the more you will miss life and the more you will be incomplete. Purpose is different from meaning. Come to this present moment of completion and the path itself is life; the path itself is meaningful. There is no such thing as, 'in the end you will be happy.' You always postpone joy and so you always postpone living. Life is lived in a very superficial way because you think life has a purpose.

For the man who works just for his salary, only payday will be a beautiful day. He will be happy only on that day. He sells 29 days every month for that one day of happiness. Take your salary but let it not be the only goal in your life. Let it not play a major role in your consciousness. That is what Kṛṣṇa means by these words: karmaṇy evādhikāras te mā phaleṣu kadācana (2.47) - you can do only your duty, you have no right to its fruit. If you think of the fruit, you will lose the joy of doing, living, enriching. The meaning of living is experienced only when you understand the beauty of purposelessness.

Your Inner Space is the Space of Completion

Two things you need to understand from this: One, He says, let your inner space not be contaminated by the purpose of life. Inner space is your mind and how you feel about yourself, about things and life inside you. When you close your eyes, what comes into your mind is your inner space. If your inner space is filled with the purposes of life, be very clear you are running behind something which will never give you completion. He says, 'Let your inner space not be disturbed or filled with purposes or incompletions.'

By nature, your inner space is the space of completion, it is filled with energy; your inner space, what you refer to as ātman, spirit or soul, is filled with blissful energy. The more you empty yourself of goals or incompletions, the more the space for completion and bliss.

For example, a room is filled with space. The more furniture you put in it, the more space will leave the room. A room is not empty; no place is empty. It is filled with space. The room is filled with the energy of ether. The more furniture you bring in, the more ether will be pushed out; the lesser will be the ether energy. In the outer space, if you furnish your home, it will look very nice. But if you furnish your inner space, it will look very ugly.

Completion straightaway gives you whatever you want and takes away whatever is not. The whole problem of humanity is what you want outside is not with you and what you don't need inside in your inner space is with you. You need to empty your inside, which is filled with unnecessary furniture. You need to have all the necessary things outside.

Creating the inner space of completion with integrity and authenticity will immediately do that job. Completion will clear out all unnecessary things from your inner space. It will get you all that you need in the outer world. Don't furnish your inner space. Let your inner space be empty. Of course then, it will never be empty. It will be filled with completion, pūrṇatva. It will be filled with bliss. The more complete inner space you create, the more blissful your life will be. That is what Kṛṣṇa means by saying, 'Don't be attached to results.'

If you continuously think about the result, you will never be able to perform your action with completion. You will always be goal-oriented and you will never enjoy and enrich the path of completion. Not enjoying and enriching the path is the worst hell you can be trapped in.

You can easily miss life's possibility by having a purpose to Life. Unless your thinking itself becomes integrated to your positivity, unless your working itself becomes authentic to the peak of your possibility, unless your life itself becomes the responsibility to enrich yourself and others, unless that itself becomes completion and bliss, you cannot experience what Kṛṣṇa says in this verse: karmaṇy evādhikāras te mā phaleṣu kadācana (2.47).

Purpose can be fulfilled, but through purpose, your life can never be fulfilled. When you carry purposes in your life, you are not living; purposes are living through you, that's all. In your childhood somebody gives you some purpose like, 'You should become a lawyer or a doctor.' You are given a purpose and that purpose is fulfilled through your life, but you will never feel fulfilled or complete.

Never make the mistake of thinking that you will be fulfilled when your purpose is fulfilled. Your fulfillment is completely different from the fulfillment of your purpose. If you want to experience fulfillment, the space of completion, you have to work in a totally different dimension of your life. If you want completion of your being, listen to what Kṛṣṇa says here.

Kṛṣṇa's Technique for Success in Inner-Outer Worlds

The entire Gītā is only about this one idea: how to furnish your outer space with the ultimate luxuries and how to keep your inner space in the ultimate bliss.

Kṛṣṇa is the only one who has produced a formula for inner space and outer space together. He teaches you how to keep your inner space in eternal bliss and keep your outer space in ultimate luxury at the same time. You can't expect this from a Buddha because Buddha gave up the outer space. He lived with just three pieces of clothing and he lived the life of a monk. So he taught us how to remain simple and blissful.

Here He says, 'Not merely by abstaining from work can one achieve freedom from action. Nor can fulfillment come by giving up action.' You can't achieve freedom from action by moving away from work.

na karmanāṅ anārambhān naiṣkarmyaṁ puruṣo 'śnute | na ca sannyasanād eva siddhiṁ samadhigacchati || 3.4 ||

Abstaining from work or moving away from work cannot give you freedom from action. It puts you in the biggest bondage. To have freedom from action, your inner space needs to be purified. Your inner space should become empty to allow the natural space of completion in you. You need to remove furniture of incompletions from your complete inner space. Renouncing furniture in the outer world is not going to help you. Only removing furniture from the inner world is going to enrich you.

Please understand, whether you are hiding something inside you from life or trying to hide something outside you from life, your own incompletions will destroy you. You don't need a separate punishment. Life is too powerful to cheat it with your logic. It functions with a simple, natural law of Existence, a natural dharma. The power of the natural law of Existence is such that nobody needs to teach you. By your very birth if you start growing, you will get it.

The inauthentic idea that life has a purpose should be renounced. Life is a possibility, not purpose. That is why Kṛṣṇa says, 'Just by renouncing, just by outer renunciation, authenticity in action can never be achieved.' What is authenticity? Building your own identity to the peak possibility and renouncing the identity built on purpose. What do you want to become? Every one of you, deep down, has a fantasy about becoming all-powerful, all-knowing, sarvajña. So now build that peak inner image, project the peak outer image, and take the responsibility to fulfill others' image of you.

Authenticity in action is the strategy plan for your life. The quality of cunningness may be useful for a short time like a few days, a few years, a few lives, but not for all lives. If you learn and develop the quality of authenticity in action, it is the strategy planning for life after life. Authenticity will help you identify your real enemy. Your real enemy is not the powerlessness you experience in moving away or running after a purpose; it is ignorance of your purposelessness. One more thing, if you renounce the outer world, you will think about the outer world even more.

Please understand, renouncing your identity in the inner space, or emptying your inner space and creating the space of completion and creation is the real thing to be achieved. That is yogaḥ karmasu kauśalam - authenticity in action. That is what Kṛṣṇa says here: once you have renounced in the inner space, it doesn't matter what you do in the outer world. Nothing will touch you.

To Act Is Human Nature

na hi kaścitkṣaṇamapi jātu tiṣṭhatyakarmakṛt

3.5 Surely, not even for a moment can anyone remain without doing anything. He is always in action, despite himself, as this is his very nature.

कर्मेन्द्रियाणि संयम्य य आस्ते मनसा स्मरन् ।
इन्द्रियार्थान्विमूढात्मा मिथ्याचारः स उच्यते ॥ ३-६॥

3.6 He who restrains the sense organs, but who still thinks of the objects of the senses, is deluded and is called a hypocrite.

3.7 He who begins controlling the senses with the mind and performs selfless work through the organs of action is superior, O Arjuna.

नियतं कुरु कर्म त्वं कर्म ज्यायो ह्यकर्मणः । शरीरयात्रापि च ते न प्रसिद्ध्येदकर्मणः ॥ ३-८॥ niyataṃ kuru karma tvaṃ karma jyāyo hyakarmaṇaḥ śarīrayātrāpi ca te na prasiddhyedakarmaṇaḥ || 3.8 ||

3.8 Do your prescribed work, as doing work is better than being idle. Even your own body cannot be maintained without work.

People ask, "If life is purposeless, I may as well just lie down and relax. Who will give me food? Who will pay my bills?' Please understand, you can never lie down forever. You may lie down for the next four or five days or for a week at the most, because you always go to the extreme, like a pendulum. After that, you will not be able to lie down. By your very nature you will start doing some work. When Kṛṣṇa says life is purposeless, He is not asking you to just lie down and relax in your house. He is saying, 'Let your body and mind work without disturbing your inner space of completion. You don't have to sell your inner space to enjoy the outer place. You don't have to sell your inner bliss to have outer comforts.'

Here, Kṛṣṇa assures you, 'By your very nature, your body and mind will work. If you just keep quiet, it is enough.' Just keep quiet. Automatically your body and mind will do the right thing. If you just get out of your system, it is enough, the Divine will get in. All we need to do is just get out for the Divine to enter. 'By nature,' He says, 'sarvaḥ prakṛti-jair-guṇaiḥ' - by their very nature your body and mind know the right thing to do.' The problem is that you never trust your body and mind. You always trust your ego and it finally dumps you. Yet you never trust your body and mind. Be very clear, your body and mind will do their work. All you need to do is keep quiet and relax from your ego. Don't think your inner space is needed for outer work. The person who understands what nitya (eternal) is, and what anitya (ephemeral) is relaxes into Existence and is always in eternal consciousness. He always resides in nitya ānanda - eternal bliss.

Karma Yogi Works with Courage of Authenticity

Śrī Kṛṣṇa says, 'A karma yogi, one who lives the path of authenticity in action, is a man who relaxes into nitya ānanda and does his work from the space of completion.'

Just relax into your inner space and be complete, you will automatically be guided. You always think, 'If I relax mentally thinking life is purposeless, how will I know what is right and what is wrong? How will I finish my work on time?'

When you worry about what is right and what is wrong, you will not make small mistakes, you will commit big blunders. The person who doesn't worry may make small mistakes. But the person who continuously worries will never make small mistakes; he will commit big blunders. And to take this leap of faith needs the courage of authenticity. Even if you make one or two mistakes, what is wrong? Taking the risk and jumping into the space of completion, and living without worry and self-doubt is what courage of authenticity, the courage to enter spiritual life.

When you take the jump, you will naturally make some small mistakes. Don't worry about them. Putting up with that mistake is penance, tapas. Penance is nothing but accepting and completing with the small mistakes you make and restoring your integrity and authenticity when the conscious transition happens in your being.

Decide consciously, 'From today onwards, I will live without worry and incompletions. I complete with all my worries and incompletions.' Life is too short to be spent worrying about your incompletions. Don't bother about the goals; just drop them. The moment you understand the beauty of purposelessness, all the wounds you have created in your inner space will be healed. You will fall into the comfort of eternal bliss.

Please listen, the quality of your life will be judged only based on the quality of your inner space, not the quality of your outer space. When you leave your body and enter your next life, nobody is going to keep a count of the car you drove, of the house you lived in or your bank balance. These details will not come with you. How you lived and the quality of your inner space is what will carry forward with you. That is why the scriptures state, 'You are going to carry with you only the saṃskāra (root thought patterns), the karma (unfulfilled desires) and the vāsana (mindset) of your inner space—not the outer space.'

Master Your Senses

Please be very clear, again and again Kṛṣṇa declares:

karmendriyāṇi saṁyamya ya āste manasā smaran | indriyārthān vimūḍhātmā mithyācāraḥ sa ucyate || 3.6 ||

If you can't create completion in your inner space, even if you control your body or your senses, you are just a hypocrite. Your life will not be a complete, blissful life. Not only will it not be a spiritual life, it will not even be life. The meaning of living is bliss, but there is no purpose. The more you think about purposes, the more worries you will create; the more will you try to squeeze the most out of life. But life is much more intelligent than you. When you try to squeeze the maximum out of life, it just slips through your fingers. Life is like a river. If you place your hands in the river and keep them open, the river will always be there in your hands. But if you try to hold it, you will have only empty hands. If you just allow it to happen it will continuously flow through you. The moment you try to possess it, you will have only empty hands. You will not be able to have life itself.

The moment you experience in your inner space that nothing is going to be with you permanently, a deep healing, a breeze enters your consciousness. Your whole inner space is healed. You have so many wounds of incompletions in your inner space. Wounds created by your incomplete desires, by your failures, and by your near and dear ones. All these wounds will be healed with this one medicine. This one understanding that life is purposeless, that whatever you achieve is just nothing, and that nothing is going to be with you, is enough.

A small story about Alexander: Alexander, who committed so many murders, can never be called 'the Great.' Please be very clear: never teach your kids that Alexander is great. You are inspiring them to commit murders. Unconsciously, you are putting all these ideas into their heads. Of course, fortunately or unfortunately, he met an enlightened Master in Bharat. Somehow, his teacher in Greece gave him the idea, 'Bring one enlightened Master and the Vedas from Bharat, and I will change the whole society.'

So Alexander decided he would take at least one enlightened person from Bharat. He invited him to his country. The Master just laughed and said, 'No, no! I don't want to come anywhere. I am happy here.' Alexander said, 'No! Please come with me. I will give you a big palace and all the comforts. Here you are living like a beggar without clothes or food.' The Master just laughed and said, 'No. I am quite happy here, I don't want to come.'

You know the next step a king will take. First, he tried to entice him. When it did not work out, the next step, he tried the fear factor. He simply took out his sword, pointed it at the Master and said, 'If you are not ready to come, you will be killed.'

Faced with the naked sword, the master just laughed. Laughing now is very easy, but laughing when faced with a naked sword is very difficult, especially when the person who is holding the sword is a king; if he kills nobody will even question him.

But in front of the naked sword, the Master laughed and said, 'Fool! You are a liar.' He straightaway looked into the eyes of Alexander and said, 'Fool! You are a liar.'

For the first time Alexander was shaken. He asked the master, 'Are you not afraid?'

The Master replied, 'Afraid of what? You can never kill me. You may destroy this body, but you cannot kill me.'

That is the courage of authenticity and the confidence of integrity gained by the spiritual experience of completion as we study in sāṅkhya yogaḥ:

naiʾnaṁ chindanti śastrāṇi naiʾnaṁ dahati pāvakaḥ | na caiʾnaṁ kledayantyāpo na śoṣayati mārutaḥ || 2.23 ||

It means: ātman or the soul cannot be killed or destroyed; it cannot be burned. This had become an experience for the Master. That is why he had such courage and confidence. He just laughed.

Slowly, Alexander started thinking, 'If he can laugh in front of my naked sword, how courageous he must be!' For the first time he was shaken, because he had never seen anybody who could laugh in front of a naked sword, in the face of death. Even he was afraid.

All the so-called great warriors are cowards. They kill others before they are killed, that's all. They live in constant fear of death. Alexander was totally shaken and shocked to see the courage of this Master. He asked him, 'Please tell me something. How are you so courageous, so bold?'

The Master asked him in return, 'Tell me, why did you come to Bharat?' Alexander replied, 'To conquer Bharat.' The Master continued, 'After that, what are you going to do?' Alexander replied confidently, 'I will conquer the next country.'

The Master again asked, 'After that, what are you going to do?'

Alexander continued, 'I will conquer the next country.' The Master persisted, 'And after that?'

Alexander replied as if the answer was obvious, 'I will conquer the whole world.' The Master questioned further, 'After that?'

Alexander replied, 'I will relax and enjoy.'

The Master said, 'Fool! Don't you see, that is what I am doing now in front of your eyes? Why do you need to go around and conquer the whole world to relax and enjoy?'

Only a man who has understood the impermanence of life can relax and surrender totally even in the face of death. The Master gave a glimpse of the Truth to Alexander.

That is why Alexander said to his ministers, 'After my death, during the funeral procession, please let both my hands hang out of the coffin, visible to all. Let people know that even the great Alexander could not carry anything with him'.

You need to understand three things. The first thing is the courage of authenticity, the space of possibility and confidence of integrity, the space of positivity radiated by an enlightened person, the one established in the space of completion.

The next thing is the purposelessness of our running. Why was Alexander running? To relax and enjoy, to be complete in the Self. This Master was already doing the same thing.

The third thing is that we are not going to carry anything with us when we leave. Even if the whole world worships you as a king, you cannot carry that with you. You have to go empty handed.

Never think that having comforts in the outer world will give you inner completion. All developed countries are filled with depression. They have the best roads, the best infrastructure, but their people are depressed. Never think outer space will give you inner space. If you want inner space, you need to work towards creating it. You need to understand the science of completion and the creation of inner space.

Science of Creating the Right Inner Space

Here, Kṛṣṇa is giving you the science of creating the right inner space. Let us see how we work, or how our mind moves.. You continuously worry about whether to choose material life or spiritual life. You are always stuck somewhere on the material path or somewhere on the spiritual path. You try to move but you are always caught in the dilemma of whether to go this way or that way.

Mind is nothing but dilemma. Whatever you choose, whether material life or spiritual life, you will always feel you are missing the other part. You will continuously feel you are missing something. As long as you think you are the mind, as long as you live with the mind, you will have this problem of material life verses spiritual life.

Just like people have goals in material life, they have goals in spiritual life too. There are so many people who say, 'I should meditate for seven hours daily. I should become enlightened. I should become that, I should do this.'

Please listen, goals in material life and in spiritual life; both drive you mad. If you want to become mad, continuously think of some goal. But if you can just withdraw into your being, you will just forget about the goal. And you can still work. By withdrawing into your being, you stop trying to locate a purpose somewhere all the time and running towards it.

The man who runs behind the material goals, will always feel he is missing the spiritual goal. That is why all rich communities invariably follow spiritual masters. They carry a deep guilt and fear that they are missing spirituality. The person who travels along the material path feels he is missing the spiritual life and the person who travels along the spiritual path feels he is missing the material life. Both are trying to fulfill each other cerebrally. The materialist fulfills the spiritualist's ideal and the spiritualist fulfills the materialist's ideal.

The space of completion or incompletion, purposelessness or purposefulness does not work logically. It explodes in all dimensions. A man who is in the space of incompletion can fall vertically down. A man in the space of completion flies vertically up. He starts experiencing the ultimate bliss of spiritual life and the ultimate happiness of material life and something more. Only he enters into eternal bliss or Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Travel with completion or incompletion is not horizontal, it is vertical. Whether you fall vertically down or fly vertically up, your idea of horizontal or linear traveling is wrong.

As long as you are caught up with material goals or spiritual goals, you travel only in one horizontal direction of incompletion, because you think you are body or mind. Sometimes people say, 'I don't want spiritual life. I don't want these four tattvas, life principles.' It is like saying, 'I don't want to breathe. I don't want blood circulation.' You need to understand that there is no such thing as spiritual life and normal life. Life has no purpose. Life is life. The more you are caught up with purposes, the more you think you are the body or the mind. When you realize the purposelessness of it all, you will straightaway fall into the depths of your being.

Do Work with Devotion and Drop Expectation

By nature, man has to work. The senses have to be engaged in some action. Even if you try and control them and do nothing externally, the very act of restraint is an action in itself.

Kṛṣṇa says very beautifully, 'By nature, the senses are tuned to be extrovert.' 'Extrovert' is not something negative. Extrovert senses will always be alive, creative, active and contributing. All great creative persons took the responsibility for their extrovert senses. If you want to be wealthy, have the company of wealthy people, or make the people in your company wealthy. If you want to be spiritual, have the company of spiritual people, or make the people in your company spiritual. There is no other way. Intranalyze this: to experience the reality of your choice in your life, you should first work to transform and enrich the reality of others around you.

Kṛṣṇa says, your senses, by nature are programmed to go out. You are programmed to work, to go out. Going out can happen only in two ways: either to enrich or to swindle. Surely, swindling others is not going to transform you. Only enriching others is going to transform you.

The choice is really about how to work. Here, Kṛṣṇa gives the answer to that. He says that we should perform work with devotion with authenticity in our actions, only to enrich, and without attachment to the results, karmendriyaiḥ karma-yogam asaktaḥ sa viśiṣyate (3.7). Work without unnecessarily being bothered about whether or not it will fetch the results that you expect.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Drop the very desire, and drop the very expectation.' We wonder, 'How can we function if we drop expectations?' Kṛṣṇa is not saying you should not plan and or you should do something without thinking. He is saying, 'Plan, but plan chronologically, not psychologically.'

You see, there are two things: chronological planning and psychological planning. Chronological planning is planning on a timescale. You decide to get up at a particular time, finish the list of tasks you planned at the office by a certain time, and so on. This is a practical way to organize your work in a way that it can give the best results. This is fine.

But what do we do? We don't stop at this. We review the plan in our head over and over again, thinking in different ways about whether we will be able to manage it. We start internally preparing for eventualities, expecting results from our plan even before the action. We keep supposing, 'What if this happens? What if that happens?' Psychological planning boosts your ego, your root pattern. It makes you feel great and worthy. It makes you stay serious and feel that you are handling great things.

It is very unfortunate, but we carry a strong pattern that we should be ready to accept failure, because failure is a part of life. Then you are constantly giving a commitment to you that there is going to be failure. You always internally prepare yourself for failure. When you prepare, you usually remind yourself of the worst possibilities and then prepare tools and weapons to handle it.

It is the power of completion that empowers you to face the worst eventualities. Preparation for the worst eventualities mentally strengthens your belief in failure. Are you successful in handling any eventualities by preparation? So, from today, decide, you will not mentally prepare yourself for the worst eventualities. You will spend all your energy removing the weed of the worst eventuality from your inner space. Now have awareness inside. You have never handled the worst possibilities because of preparation. You always handled the worst possibilities because of your completion. If you are in the space of completion, you face the worst possibilities in completion and win.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'One who does devotional work with authenticity, without attachment, and controlling the senses - yas tva indriyāṇi manasā niyamyārabhate Arjuna, is superior to one who merely pretends to be in control of his senses and acts in renunciation, karmendriyaiḥ karma- yogam asaktaḥ sa viśiṣyate (3.7).'

There are people of the intellectual type who are philosophers, who are well versed in all the scriptures, who look down upon the devotional and emotional practitioners. Intellectuals believe that their dry understanding of the non-duality of the Self is superior to that of those who fall at the feet of the Divine. Kṛṣṇa firmly says, 'No, it is not so!' Kṛṣṇa says that what makes the difference is your space of completion that brings lack of expectations of either failure or success, the sense of purposelessness that defines your state.

Sannyāsa (renunciation) is a state, not a label. The state of renunciation is not a state of doing nothing. You can never sit without doing anything. Even if you sit still in one place, you are sitting, you are breathing, is it not? The internal functions in your body are happening. Maintaining this very body requires that work be done. The breath that you take in carries prāna, the life energy that sustains you. Constantly, air that is laden with prāna goes in, leaves the prāna inside and comes out. So, you cannot say you are not doing anything.

You may think it is better not to do any work rather than to analyze what work you should do, how to do it, whether it will suit you etc. You can take this as an excuse for laziness, for your tamas. Tamas means laziness, lethargy. When Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am not the doer, it is just the senses performing the actions according to their nature,' you say, 'Why should I even bother to do anything?' Be very clear, by your very nature, you will act. Your body and mind are by nature, forced and programmed to do something. Just try to sit with a completely blank mind, with no mental activity. Just relax and try this simple exercise. You will initially try not to think about anything and try to be aware if any thought comes to your mind. But, after a few moments, you will find yourself having some random thoughts, about something from the past or the future. By nature, your mind will think about something or the other. If you try to force silence upon your mind, you will be forcing a dead silence, the silence of suppression. How long can you sustain that? The moment you drop your guard, your mind will express its nature and start wandering.

So, neither expression nor suppression is the solution. Only completion is the solution. It is better to complete with yourself to bring integrity to the nature of the senses and the mind, and be engaged with authenticity in action, with a sense of devotion to enrich others and yourself. Be aware that when you are in action, it is the senses acting. Then you will not get attached to the action or its result. Then you are free; you are liberated from the bondage of action. Action binds you only when you consider yourself the doer and have expectations about things being a certain way.

Selfless Enriching Liberates

3.9 Work has to be performed selflessly; otherwise, work binds one to this world. O son of Kuntī, perform your work for Me and you will do it authentically, liberated and without attachment.

yajñaśiṣṭāśinaḥ santo mucyante sarvakilbiṣaiḥ
bhuñjate te tvaghaṃ pāpā ye pacantyātmakāraṇāt || 3.13 ||

3.13 Those who eat food after selfless enriching are free of all sins. Those who prepare food for sense enjoyment do grievous sin.

There are two techniques by which one can liberate oneself from attachment to work. One is by telling oneself, 'I am not the doer.' By continuously reminding yourself that it is the senses and not you who is doing something, you distance yourself from the action. This is what Kṛṣṇa explains in the previous verses.

The other way is by surrendering the fruits of one's work to the Divine, to the ultimate life force that is conducting this Universe. This is the technique that Kṛṣṇa talks about here. Bhagavān says, 'O Kaunteya, perform your work for Me and you will do it with authenticity, liberated and without attachment, tad-arthaṁ karma kaunteya mukta-saṅgaḥ samācara (3.9).

When you do work as a sincere, humble offering to the Divine, the very attitude of this surrender will make you do the job authentically to your peak capability and you will be liberated. When you are excessively bothered about the results, you actually think you are the doer of the action. That is why you get attached to the work and its results. This is when you start getting stressed and tensed about results. Naturally, when you are tensed, you are not performing at your maximum efficiency because so much of your valuable energy is getting wasted in being tense.

When you see that Existence is purposeless and you are living in the loving, caring arms of Existence, you will relax and surrender to that very Existence. When you are in this relaxed mood, you can function at your best and enjoy every moment of life without feeling like the doer and therefore not worrying about making small mistakes. Real surrender happens when this understanding becomes your experience.

Surrender - The Ultimate Relaxation

Utmost integrity and authenticity is enough for surrender. Nothing else is needed. Surrender has a tremendous power, a tremendous energy. Whether you surrender to an idol or to a person or to your Guru, or even a rock, is not important. What is important is surrender itself.

Vivekananda says beautifully: 'When you pray to God, your prayers actually awaken your own inner potential and it showers blessings on you.' Even if you see logically, surrender helps you to simply relax. When you are relaxed, you can work beautifully, with intelligence, rather than with your pre-programmed intellect. Understand, Existence loves you and understands you better than you understand yourself. See the example of Arjuna; Kṛṣṇa knew Arjuna better than Arjuna knew himself. The very trust, the very connection enabled Arjuna to relate with Kṛṣṇa, who took him to the Ultimate consciousness.

Have simple trust in Existence, in the intelligence of the life force. This is the very life force, the energy that is keeping you alive. This is the energy behind the marvelous functioning of your brain, of your digestive system, of your nervous system. This is the energy that runs our solar system, all the galaxies and the entire Universe so smoothly. Imagine, is it possible for so many billions of stars and planets to move in such beautiful order even if you had the most modern traffic control system in place? There is such a beautiful order, in what appears to be chaos when seen superficially.

Enrich Others Because They Are Part Of You

Enrich others for the sake of enriching. When you enrich others at your own expense, by denying yourself, you function at the level of the Universal energy; you function as part of the principle of Vasudaiva kuṭuṁbakaṁ meaning 'The whole world is my family' as said by Kṛṣṇa; you operate out of compassion. Then there is no compulsion or no moral injunction to give. There is no expectation that you will go to heaven if you give and to hell if you don't.

Many times even your enriching others has a selfish motive. You think, 'If I enrich, I may get this, this, and this back.' Do not enrich with purpose. Let enriching be a purposeless happening. Because everyone is part of you, enriching every being is nothing but enriching some part of you. Only then are you practicing the tattva of enriching Vasudaiva kuṭuṁbakaṁ, the whole world as your family. Enrich others. Anything you see, anything you experience is extension of you. Anybody whom you experience in your life is extension of you. Your wife is the extension of your unbending logic. Your husband is the extension of your confusion. So, when you enrich them, the parts of you are enriched. When they feel completion, part of you will become complete.

Kṛṣṇa says that enriching should be practiced because everyone is part of us. Nobody is separate from us. Only then does enriching become a selfless sacrifice, yajña bhāvitaḥ. There is a joy, a bliss that enters your being when you act out of sacrifice, selflessly to enrich others. The bliss is always there, but when you are free from the filtering root pattern and mind, you start experiencing that bliss. The garbage of expectations disappears and bliss is experienced.

This was the principle on which various sacrificial rituals came into existence in the Hindu culture. These were instruments of mass meditation. The energy of the cosmic space (ākāśa) was captured by the vibrations of the air created by chanting mantras. This energized air fueled the sacred fire in the sacrificial fire pit (homa kunḍa). This energy was transferred to pots of water by physically linking the pots to the fire pit through many threads. This energized holy water was then sprinkled on bodies, deities and the earth to complete the energy cycle. All five energy points: space, air, fire, water and earth were connected through such a ritual to benefit humanity.

It was only a metaphoric offering of all that was sacrificed to the fire. During these rituals, great kings and nobles who performed the rituals gave away to those who lacked material wealth. These rituals helped to maintain material balance. We very conveniently forget an important fact and take life happening for us with others for granted. Anything you receive without enriching, is stolen.

Kṛṣṇa explains enriching beautifully to Arjuna, iṣṭān bhogān hi vo devā dāsyante yajña bhāvitaḥ | tair dattān apardāyaibhyo yo bhuṅkte stena eva saḥ || 3.12 ||

'Satisfied with the selfless enriching, the celestial beings certainly bestow upon you the desired enjoyments of life. He who enjoys the things given by them without offering anything to the celestial beings is certainly a thief, 'yo bhuṅkte stena eva saḥ' Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says, 'If you don't do yajña and give back to the divine energy, you are certainly a thief.' Kṛṣṇa does not mean just pouring some offerings into a fire; He also means doing the proper authentic action. For example, if you are cutting a tree, you have to plant at least five trees. If you are taking water from the river, you should make sure that the recycled water is purified and added to the river.

Constantly enriching the source and keeping it alive for the next generation is yajña. Do not touch anything which you can't replace, like sources which can be exhausted but not replenished. Do not use nonrenewable energy sources. Use only renewable energy sources. That is part of enriching yajña. If you are not enriching, but only taking and enjoying, you are a thief. Asteya (non-stealing), one of the important vows of sannyāsa, can be maintained only by enriching. Only when you continuously enrich others will non-stealing be maintained. Enriching is where life happens to you. Enriching means infusing all the three tattvas of integrity, authenticity, responsibility into satya, truth.

Life happens to us with others. Whether it is sannyāsa or saṃsāra, the joys of spirituality or the joys of the world, everything happens with company, with sanga. Understand, whether it is satsanga or dussanga, good or bad association, you need a sanga. Whether it is basic food or the ultimate luxury, everything happens to you with others. If you don't enrich others, it is stealing and life does not happen to you. Decide to enrich everyone you see with these tattvas; in just a few months you will see that you are surrounded by gods and you are living in heaven. Go on enriching people.

Enriching Sacrifice or Sin

अन्नाद्भवन्ति भूतानि पर्जन्यादन्नसम्भवः ।
यज्ञाद्भवति पर्जन्यो यज्ञः कर्मसमुद्भवः ॥ ३-१४॥ annādbhavanti bhūtāni parjanyādannasambhavaḥ
yajñādbhavati parjanyo yajñaḥ karmasamudbhavaḥ || 3.14 ||

3.14 All beings grow from food grains, from rains the food grains become possible, the rains become possible from selfless sacrifice of enriching.

कर्म ब्रह्मोद्भवं विद्धि ब्रह्माक्षरसमुद्भवम् ।
तस्मात्सर्वगतं ब्रह्म नित्यं यज्ञे प्रतिष्ठितम् ॥ ३-१५॥ karma brahmodbhavaṃ viddhi brahmākṣarasamudbhavam
tasmātsarvagataṃ brahma nityaṃ yajñe pratiṣṭhitam || 3.15 ||

3.15 Know that work is born of the Creator and He is born of the Supreme. The all-pervading Supreme is eternally situated in sacrifice of enriching.

एवं प्रवर्तितं चक्रं नानुवर्तयतीह यः ।
अघायुरिन्द्रियारामो मोघं पार्थ स जीवति ॥ ३-१६॥

evaṃ pravartitaṃ cakraṃ nānuvartayatīha yaḥ aghāyurindriyārāmo moghaṃ pārtha sa jīvati || 3.16 ||

3.16 O Pārtha, he who does not adopt the prescribed, established cycle lives a life full of sins. Rejoicing in sense gratification, he lives a useless life.

The subtlest, most powerful and all-pervasive cosmic energy is invoked through the slightly less subtle air element when we chant the mantra and we connect and enrich the still, less subtle fire energy through the fire ritual. Energy is then transferred to water, a grosser energy, and then the water in the pots is poured over plants, idols and humans as well as the earth, which is the grossest form of energy.

When we chant the mantra, it is a very powerful way to enrich the world, through our integrity and authenticity. You take responsibility for the words, and for making the mantra into reality. When you take responsibility for the words you utter and start working, you enrich the world mystically and physically, metaphysically and physically. A physical action is a gross expressed action, something that can be seen on the physical plane.

Enrich to Relate with Expressed and Unexpressed God

Enriching is the way in which you relate with the expressed component of God, the expressed part of God. Integrity and Authenticity are the ways in which you relate with the unexpressed, avyakta part of God. Responsibility and Enriching are the ways in which you relate with vyakta, the expressed part of God.

Integrity and Authenticity are the right ways to relate with the unexpressed part of God, avyakta. Responsibility and Enriching are the right ways to relate with the expressed part of God, the world, vyakta. If you do not enrich, you actively create a selfish pattern and your offerings bring that same result. Be very clear, either you give or you swindle. There is no middle.

Kṛṣṇa says that rains become possible from the enriching sacrifice, yajñād bhavati parjanyo and the enriching sacrifice is born of actions, yajñaḥ karma-samudbhavaḥ (3.14).

Rain is a grosser form of energy that is activated by the subtler unexpressed energies which are influenced by our authenticity in actions and integrity in words, thoughts and vibrations.

Rain is the cause, the source which is responsible for the growth of food grains. Food is the enrichment needed to sustain our bodies and minds, which give rise to further authentic action and integrated thinking. So, you see this cycle now, of how the subtle energy, avyakta, the unexpressed part of God manifests itself in the grosser world as vyakta, the expressed part of God, and how the actions in the grosser world affect the subtler elements.

If we just understand this, we will realize that everything that we do and experience is caused by our own actions. We realize that we are the source of everything, and therefore responsible for everything that is happening. We invite our destiny. As we sow, so shall we reap.

Enriching is sowing the seed for the fruit to happen. Integrity is the root, authenticity is the tree, responsibility is the fruit, enriching is sharing the fruit to create more fruits. Every person who eats the fruit is responsible for sowing the seed for more fruits to happen.

Understand, this is what Kṛṣṇa says, 'O Pārtha, he who does not adopt the prescribed, established cycle lives a life full of sins, aghāyur indriyārāmo. Rejoicing in sense gratification, he lives a useless life, moghaṁ pārtha sa jīvati (3.16).'

If you are rich, be the ground on which the seed can be sown. If not, at least pour water for the seed to become a tree. If not, at least be a gardener to weed out the unnecessary things for the seed to become fruit again. Either offer your time, talent, or treasure. If you have eaten the fruit, it is your responsibility to make the seed again into a fruit. After eating the fruit, be responsible to sow the seed and make sure the seed again brings more fruits for more people to enjoy.

Power of Creating the Space of Enriching

Bliss attracts fortune. You need to know an important lesson, when you decide to become responsible, the whole Cosmos simply listens to you; it simply follows you. With responsibility, even if you sit in one corner, your very space changes the way the world responds to you. Swami Vivekananda says beautifully, 'In Bharat, even if we want wealth, we sit under a tree and create the space. It happens around us.' He said these words in America, the country which teaches you that you have to work hard to accumulate wealth.

If you sit with yourself, you may accumulate peace but not even a piece of bread. Yet, He says, 'In Bharat, even to accumulate wealth, we just sit and create the space, and it happens.' So, when you take responsibility, sit by creating the space and be ready to sacrifice. The world will simply move based on your word. The world will move as you want.

When the energy flow, the space in us becomes complete, it has the property of influencing and causing external incidents as we want. Whether you believe it or not, accept it or not, like it or not, want it or not, you are deeply connected to Existence. You are an integral part of Existence, not an independent island as you think.

Every subtle movement or subtle thought in one part of the Universe causes a counter-effect at that same moment elsewhere in the Universe. Our thoughts and energy flow have the capacity to create and attract incidents and people of the same nature. It is interesting that modern science is coming up with some startling evidence that reveals some of these truths now.

Dr. Masaru Emoto, a Japanese doctor and research scientist is renowned for his book, The Hidden Messages in Water. He conducted extensive experiments on water samples taken from all over the world. He took similar samples of water and exposed the water to different influences. To one set of samples, he spoke positive words such as 'love' and 'gratitude,' to some he recited Buddhist chants. To another set, he spoke words such as 'anger' and 'war'. Then he froze the different water samples so that he could photograph their crystal form. In the samples that had been exposed to positive energy, beautiful clear crystals were formed, like diamonds. The water exposed to negative energies did not form into crystals; they looked like a tumor: dark, cloudy and without any distinct geometrical pattern.

Several hundred experiments were conducted to prove the effects of the vibrations created by our words and thoughts on matter. Water being the most common molecule in our bodies, we can now see the obvious and dramatic effect our thoughts have on ourselves and others. It doesn't stop there. Our thoughts have the capacity to affect the oceans and the seas.

Science is beginning to touch what our Hindu seers have declared thousands of years ago about collective consciousness. What we do in any plane, physical or mental, expressed or unexpressed, affects our consciousness. And since we are all a part of the common fabric called Existence, our consciousness is a part of the collective consciousness, which also gets affected by our thoughts and actions.

So we can actually even influence the weather by our thoughts. This is what Kṛṣṇa means when He says that rains are caused by sacrifice - yajñād bhavati parjanyo and enriching sacrifice is born of actions - yajñaḥ karma-samudbhavaḥ (3.14). It is an ultimate statement that proves the power of Enriching, the power of living.

When a large number of people collectively integrate their thoughts and align their actions to enrich others with no expectations and with full faith in the abundance of the Universe, the Universe responds. Rain falls, grains grow, and abundance results.

At a young age, we were trained in 'mathematical logic' but never in 'Existential logic'. Mathematical logic is very straightforward and should be applied only where it is appropriate. In matters concerning life and relationships, mathematical logic will only cause chaos. With it, we will always look to conclude with a 'good' or 'bad' judgment. There is something deeper than this and that is Existential logic. This comes with a mature understanding and flowering from within.

Your integrity, the thoughts and energy directly affect your body, your cell structure, your decisions, your capacity to fulfill your decisions, the outer world incidents, and even accidents. So, you have to complete until your negative commitments are dropped. But even if you have millions of negativities, if you just multiply it by zero, the whole thing will become zero. Master's initiation is like multiplying by zero.

Currently, you are always centered in either greed or fear. Every action is performed either out of desire or out of fear. It becomes very easy for others to exploit you because of this. You become very vulnerable. Some people have become so selfish that they care only about their personal pleasure or pain. Only when life hits at them there, they understand the constitution of life, not otherwise. They create a powerless space that attracts similar incidents into their life. They also corrupt the energy flow of their inner space this way.

If you are sensitive enough to understand life and the facts, and the truth, the Cosmos does not teach you in a very hard way; it teaches you in a mild way. If you can change your inner space from this incomplete space to the space of completion, the space of bliss, or ānanda, then the energy flow in your inner space will start brimming and your thoughts will become declarations of integrity, which is like multiplying all your past negativity by zero. Then you will be complete in the present moment.

When you do this, you have the power to control external incidents because you and Existence have a very deep connection at the energy level. This is the thread you need to catch in order to understand that bliss attracts fortune. When you are blissful, when your inner space is not one of worry, fear and greed patterns but one that is in the space of completion in the present, you will automatically attract the best of things.

When you throw a pebble into a lake, ripples start from that point to the edge of the lake. Similarly, your thoughts have a permanent effect on the Universe. Imagine if the lake were infinite light. Ripples with a continuous effect would be created, even though the magnitude of each ripple would be different.

The Universe is a huge wave of 'Tathāstu - so be it!' So everything is as you create, as you organize, as you arrange. Put a little intelligence, time and energy into creating the right space in you. If you carry the space of many births, you will have many births. If you carry the space of a soul, you will have a soul. If you carry the space of no-soul, you will not have a soul.

Decide to create the space for the best possibility. You have a soul, and it can do anything you want. This is the best space. Create it. That will be your reality. Every action has a cause and an effect. Using the same principle, you can actually create the desired effect by just causing its visualization in your inner space. For example, when you meditate, if you visualize you are bliss, bliss is bound to happen in and around you as an effect. It would seem that the cause has created the effect. But in life, cause and effect are actually a cycle, each generating and being generated by the other.

Understand, anything that has not made its effect completely in you is cause. Anything caused which has made its completion in you is effect. Anything which has not caused its complete effect in you is cause. This is the endless cycle Kṛṣṇa refers to when He says that work originates with the Creator, who in turn originates from the supreme Existence, and therefore all sacrifices are from the Supreme to the Supreme.

Live the tattvas intensely. Bring them into your life layer by layer. Your body will listen to you. Your mind will listen to you. The world will listen to you. The Universe will listen to you. Humanity will listen to you. You will enrich the Universe and the Universe will enrich you.

Acting Without Attachment

यस्त्वात्मरतिरेव स्यादात्मतृप्तश्च मानवः ।

yastvātmaratireva syādātmatṛptaśca mānavaḥ
ātmanyeva ca santuṣṭastasya kāryaṃ na vidyate || 3.17 ||

3.17 One who takes pleasure in the Self, who is satisfied in the Self and who is content in his own Self, for him certainly, no work exists.

नैव तस्य कृतेनार्थो नाकृतेनेह कश्चन ।
न चास्य सर्वभूतेषु कश्चिदर्थव्यपाश्रयः ॥ ३-१८॥
naiva tasya kṛtenārtho nākṛteneha kaścana
na cāsya sarvabhūteṣu kaścidarthavyapāśrayaḥ || 3.18 ||

3.18 Certainly, he never has any reason for doing his duty or not doing his duty in this world. He does not depend on any living being.

तस्मादसक्तः सततं कार्यं कर्म समाचर ।

tasmādasaktaḥ satataṃ kāryaṃ karma samācara

asakto hyācarankarma paramāpnoti pūruṣaḥ || 3.19 ||

3.19 Therefore, one should work always without attachment. Performing work without attachment, certainly, man achieves the Supreme.

कर्मणैव हि संसिद्धिमास्थिता जनकादयः ।
लोकसङ्ग्रहमेवापि सम्पश्यन्कर्तुमर्हसि ॥ ३-२०॥ karmaṇaiva hi saṃsiddhimāsthitā janakādayaḥ lokasaṅgrahamevāpi sampaśyankartumarhasi || 3.20 ||

3.20 King Janaka and others attained perfection by selfless enriching. To guide others, you too must act selflessly.

Our Eastern masters have declared again and again, 'You are bliss. You are love. You are eternal bliss itself.' When you are bliss itself, what more can you ask for? When you understand and experience this truth, you are enough unto yourself; you are completely satisfied. Nothing exists for you to achieve because you are already the ultimate you can achieve.

Existence is Taking Care of You Every Moment

Existence is taking care of you every moment. Do you think you can be alive even for one moment if Existence does not want you to be alive? The very fact that you are alive proves that Existence wants you here, now, in this form, in this place. This is the ultimate cause for celebration. What more do you want? Existence has provided, is providing and will provide for each and every one of your needs. Your suffering, your struggle, your incompletion is only because you don't trust that you are being provided all that you need; because you carry a deep self-doubt and consider yourself separate from Existence, who you think is your enemy.

As humans we have lost touch with Nature, with Existence. We have fallen out of tune with ourselves and with Nature. That is why we experience Nature unpleasantly. Even in our prayers there is no gratitude, there is only asking. We have become beggars. Also, you are not satisfied with how Existence chooses to take care of your needs. You look at others and have a big list of wants based on what others have. You fail to understand that each of us is unique and each of us has been provided with exactly what we need. Instead, you start looking at what others have and want that also. Greed sets in.

Actually, the fountain of bliss is happening spontaneously in each of us. We always think joy or happiness can happen only for some reason. On the other hand, we feel we can be sad for no reason. Just like that, for no reason, you can be morose, sad, thinking, 'What is life all about?' But you always feel you need some reason to be happy. It is you who is making all the effort to stop the fountain of bliss that is happening in your being every moment.

Only when you are completely detached can you be completely involved. Otherwise, your very sense of ownership and emotional attachment will be a hindrance to plunging headlong into the task. Only when you work without any incompletion, can you perform the task authentically to your peak possibility, without expectation and without being concerned about the results.

3.25 Even the ignorant do their work with attachment to the results, O Bhārata, the wise do so without attachment, for the enrichment of the people.

Here, Kṛṣṇa talks about the practical aspects of why a leader needs to act in a responsible manner. With responsibility, you experience the space of leadership consciousness, īśvaratva.

There is a difference between the state of a leader and the status of a leader. Most of us want to attain the status of a leader but not the state. When you achieve the status of the leader, it is ego-fulfilling and you feel great. The state of the leader is something totally different. It is the state of the leader born from the principle of responsibility that enriches people to become responsible. Problems of all kinds, ranging from stress to discontentment and violence result because the leader has achieved the status and not the state.

Leader Creates More Responsible Leaders

A leader with the status remains only as a slave. A leader with the state takes the responsibility to create more and more responsible leaders. Only when you express all the possibilities out of liberation cognition are you living your life. Life is lived when jīvanmukta saṁbhāvana, the space of possibility, the space of leadership becomes your lifestyle. Nothing else is required for you to be a leader; just leadership consciousness is enough. When Vivekananda walked the length and breadth of Bharat, he did not have anything other than leadership consciousness in his life. But wherever he went, kings washed his feet, gave their own thrones for him to sit on, received his blessings and guidance, and requested his spiritual support.

Responsibility is thinking, feeling, acting, responding and cognizing from the truth that you are the Source of everything.

It is responsibility that makes you realize all possibilities. It is leadership consciousness that brings not just success, but fulfillment in you. Sometimes, people sit on the throne or get the power and become power centers, without having the state of a leader. They never enjoy the power.

Unless you achieve the state, the status is a liability. If you have not achieved the state, the status binds you and also brings suffering to others. The state of responsibility, the state of leadership consciousness, īśvaratva has to be achieved first. When you do not carry the consciousness of a leader, even if you get the powers of the leader, you are bound by it and you also bind the people who accept you as leader and follow you.

Leadership consciousness is an independent intelligence; it cannot be hidden from others. Once you have it, the whole world will know that you have it; the world simply listens to you. You do not need any power, political strength or infrastructure for the world to know that you are a leader. Even if you walk on the street, you will stand tall as a man among men; what Kṛṣṇa names Arjuna as puruṣarṣabha, the best among men.

Kṛṣṇa, who owns responsibility, the space of leadership consciousness, īśvaratva, is making Arjuna own responsibility. Kṛṣṇa says, 'Whatever action is performed by a great person, others follow. O Pārtha, there is nothing that I must do in the three worlds. Neither am I in want of anything. Yet, I am always in action.'

yad yad ācarati śreṣṭhas tad tad evetaro janaḥ | sa yat pramāṇaṁ kurute lokas tad anuvartate || 3.2 ||

na me pārthāsti kartavyaṁ triṣu lokeṣu kiñcana | nānavāptam avāptavyaṁ varta eva ca karmaṇi || 3.22 ||

There are only two types of human beings on planet Earth - those who feel responsible for everything and those who don't feel responsible for anything. People who feel responsible become leaders. People who don't feel responsible continue to be slaves. There are some people who don't feel responsible even for their own actions because they forget their action is going to bring its result. Many times, even when they plan out a business, they only plan out the people they will hold responsible if it fails. They don't plan to make it successful.

Deep understanding and experiential expression of the truth happens only with taking responsibility for all your actions. Only when the space of leadership becomes your own experience does the responsibility become complete. Otherwise, if the understanding is just based on someone else's words and experience, then there is always the possibility that anyone can come and shake your belief and you will either hold the situation or others responsible. The roots of responsibility, in this case, are not deep and strong enough to withstand all kinds of questions. Others' questions are nothing but your own unanswered questions that you chose to suppress within you.

There are three types of people: the disciples (or the followers), the Masters, and the leaders (or guides).

The disciple is one who has not yet experienced and enriched himself with the teachings of the Masters, but who is authentically interested and has responsibly embarked upon the path. He needs some guidance on the path. He does not yet know how to practice what is being taught.

The Master is one who is in the eternal space of īśvaratva, leadership consciousness and is in the ultimate experience of Enlightenment. Out of compassion, He enriches by showing the path of responsibility to reach His state to all those who would like to be in that state. It is not necessary for the Master to practice what He preaches because he is beyond the common rules of conduct. Masters need not follow what they tell you to do to reach their state. They understand the illusion of the physical plane that their body-mind system operates in. Whatever they may do physically is in a state of complete awareness.

A leader or guide is someone who is a spiritual activist, he is between the Master and the follower. He has not yet reached the ultimate state of the Master but he has had glimpses of that state. He is not as inexperienced as the follower. He is the bridge of responsibility to lead the follower to the Master.

One more thing: It is not that you need to practice the tattvas just so that others get inspired and enriched. Understand that the very practice will give deep understanding and completion to you. Automatically you cause what you want to cause in your life. That is the first effect, the actual result. Being an inspiration and causing the reality for others will be just a by-product. It will automatically result from the confidence of authenticity you radiate in your body language and the power of integrity you express in your words, when you enrich people out of the intelligence and strength of your own responsibility as a leader.

Nothing Binds Me, Yet I Engage in Responsible Work

In these verses, Kṛṣṇa beautifully explains what walking the talk means through His own example. He says there is nothing in the three worlds, the nether world, earth or heaven, for Him to achieve. There is no duty that binds Him. Even though He has nothing to gain, lose or even to do, He is constantly engaged in action and enriching the three worlds. Why?

Because people look up to Him as God, they would obviously follow the path He sets. People's anyakāra, the expectation that world has from Kṛṣṇa is that He is God, He is Bhagavān. They would simply follow what He does. He is now responsible to fulfill even others' image about Him for leading them on the correct path. That is Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa's authenticity and responsibility.

Understand, others' anyakāra about you has two dimensions - how they perceive you and how they want you to be in their life. For example, they may perceive you as a fool and a cheat, but they may want you to be intelligent and authentic. When you take responsibility for both parts of others' anyakāra, life just oozes out of your Ānanda Gandha, your blissful inner space.

Taking responsibility for what others perceive and what others want just makes life ooze, explode and express through you. If you want your skin to shine, your eyes lit and your body radiating grace and joy, take responsibility for others' anyakāra in both directions. If others perceive you as a cheat and fool, don't be angry. It means that you have not raised yourself in some way.

When responsibility expresses through your head, it is leadership. When responsibility expresses through your heart, it is compassion. When responsibility expresses through your being, it is Enlightenment, sātori.

Stretching to Others' Expectations is Authenticity

As Kṛṣṇa says, 'I need to be responsible for what I do for the sake of enriching those who follow.' It is the energy behind the action, the energy of the being that decides the quality and hence, the effect of the action. It is not the action itself that decides the quality.

Masters act out of pure compassion in whatever they do. That is why even when Masters scold people, the person does not carry vengeance towards me. Scolding is also for your good, for your ego to be removed. It will seem painful because the ego, which you have been thinking is you, is being pulled out. But your being understands that what is not you is being removed. That is why in the very next moment after scolding, Master can be completely different, showering love. There was no vengeance to hold onto in that act of scolding. It was just complete truth at that moment, pure compassionate energy.

Others' expectation about you is only your friend helping you to wake up. So when others have expectations towards you, bow down to them as the embodiment of Mahādeva; the antaryāmi who is inside you, waking you up.

When Master scolds you, you are jolted into the present moment. Suddenly, in a flash, you get the awareness that you have been missing your natural space of completion. The energy behind Master's words is purely for your transformation. There is only pure compassion.

Role Of The Wise

3.26 Let not the wise disturb the minds of the ignorant who are attached to the results of work. They should encourage them to act without attachment.

3.28 One who knows the Truth, O mighty-armed one, knows the divisions existing in the attributes of nature and work. Knowing well about the attributes and sense gratification, he never becomes attached.

prakṛterguṇasammūḍhāḥ sajjante guṇakarmasu

tānakṛtsnavido mandānkṛtsnavinna vicālayet || 3.29 ||

3.29 Fooled by the attributes of nature, those people with less wisdom or who are lazy become engaged in actions driven by these attributes. But, the wise should not unsettle them.

An ignorant man says to himself, 'I shall do this action and thereby enjoy its result.' A wise man should not unsettle this belief. Instead, he himself should set an example by performing his responsibilities diligently from the space of leadership, but without attachment. If the wise man condemns the actions performed with attachment, the ignorant person may simply decide to neglect his responsibilities.

When a person is doing work and expecting certain results, the wise person should not disturb him, even though he knows that work should not be done with attachment. At least the person is working and not sitting idle. He is in rajas (aggressive activity), which is better than tamas (laziness). Of course, he needs to be guided from rajas to sattva, a state of calmness, a space of detached action, action without expectations. That is the job of a Master.

We are all governed by our basic nature, attributes, or guṇa. The mental set-up, patterns from previous births, called vāsana determines what we are, what we do in this birth, and also what happens to us in our future births. The desires born out of vāsana carry their own energy for fulfillment. If you are conscious, you will be able to fulfill them. Once fulfilled, these vāsana and karma get dissolved. One who reaches this state of completion with desires also realizes that he is not the doer. Karma is nothing but the unfulfilled or incomplete patterns and desires, which are inside your being, that constantly make you travel in the same path again and again, trying to give the experience of completion in your inner space.

You are the one who chooses and acts, but any choice comes with effects and side effects. On seeing the side effects, you feel powerless and blame your fate or destiny. Actually, you are the one who chose it in the first place. You are responsible for the cause and effect, as you are source of everything. Any karma left incomplete, any action done out of incompletion is pravritti - incompletion leading to more incompletion. It is more and more dangerous and makes you more and more powerless.

You Are Not the Doer

To understand, 'I am not the doer,' this concept of 'I' and 'mine' needs to be understood. Śiva says that the concept of 'I' itself comes from the concept of 'mine.' We think, when the sense of 'I' happens, the sense of 'mine' happens. But if you look deeply, our idea of what we think of as 'ours' is what defines what we think of as ourselves. Just imagine, if your possessions, your status, your wealth, your relations all are taken away from you, what will you think of as you? How will you define yourself? Your idea of 'I' is also relative, is it not? Enlightened beings are just energy. In this plane, in these dimensions of space-time, you see them in this six-foot form and say 'Nithyananda,' but in truth, this 'Nithyananda' does not exist. It is just energy. There is no 'I.'

When you get attached to anything, you start creating suffering for yourself. When you understand that it is the mind and the senses doing what is in their nature, you become detached from your body-mind and do things with the clear understanding that just the mind, body and senses are doing their job. When you don't understand this, you get caught in what you are doing, you get emotionally attached to incidents and people, and you start living without awareness.

Do As I Teach With Authenticity

मयि सर्वाणि कर्माणि संन्यस्याध्यात्मचेतसा ।
निराशीर्निर्ममो भूत्वा युध्यस्व विगतज्वरः ॥ ३-३०॥

mayi sarvāṇi karmāṇi saṃnyasyādhyātmacetasā
nirāśīrnirmamo bhūtvā yudhyasva vigatajvaraḥ || 3.30 ||

3.30 Dedicating the results of work to Me, with consciousness filled with spiritual knowledge, without desire for gain and without sense of ownership, without being lazy, do what you have to do.

ये मे मतमिदं नित्यमनुतिष्ठन्ति मानवाः ।
श्रद्धावन्तोऽनसूयन्तो मुच्यन्ते तेऽपि कर्मभिः ॥ ३-३१॥

ye me matamidaṃ nityamanutiṣṭhanti mānavāḥ śraddhāvanto'nasūyanto mucyante te'pi karmabhiḥ || 3.31 ||

3.31 Those persons who execute their duties according to My injunctions and who follow these teachings faithfully with authenticity without envy, become free from the bondage of actions.

ये त्वेतदभ्यसूयन्तो नानुतिष्ठन्ति मे मतम् ।
सर्वज्ञानविमूढांस्तान्विद्धि नष्टानचेतसः ॥ ३-३२॥ ye tvetadabhyasūyanto nānutiṣṭhanti me matam

sarvajñānavimūḍhāṃstān viddhi naṣṭānacetasaḥ || 3.32 ||

3.32 But those who do not regularly perform their duties according to My teaching, are ignorant, senseless and ruined.

Next Kṛṣṇa makes an important point. Kṛṣṇa says: Those persons who execute their duties according to My injunctions and who follow this teaching faithfully with authenticity, without envy, become free from the bondage of actions.

ye me matam idaṁ nityam anutiṣṭhanti mānavāḥ | śraddhāvanto 'nasūyanto mucyante 'pi karmabhiḥ || 3.31 ||

Here you need to understand two things. He says, 'according to My injunctions, ye me matam idaṁ nityam'. It means when you enter into your being, whatever your being says is Kṛṣṇa's words. When he says My injunctions, He means the injunctions from the ātman, injunctions from the being.

When you complete and drop the goals and fall into your being, the Divine will guide you and you will become an instrument in His hands. If you become a hollow bamboo without any blockages inside, you will become a flute in the hands of Kṛṣṇa. Dropping your purposes or dropping your root pattern is becoming a hollow bamboo. If you are a solid bamboo, you will be used only to carry dead bodies. But if you drop the root pattern and fall into the being, you will become an instrument in the hands of the Divine, a divine flute. When you become a flute, the air that enters into you comes out as music. Your words become mantra - sacred words that enrich people, your actions become tantra - sacred techniques to realize the Divine, and your form becomes yantra - sacred form; you become Divine.

Here, He says, 'Those persons who execute their responsibilities according to My injunctions, according to your inner consciousness...' Understand, as long as you follow the goals set by society, you will be carrying a social conscience.

Śraddha - Your Peak Possibility

'The man who lives according to his consciousness, believing in and having śraddhā towards these teachings...' Why does Kṛṣṇa ask for śraddha here? This is the first time Kṛṣṇa says 'śraddha. Why? Śraddhā cannot really be translated as faith. It means faith plus the courage of authenticity to execute the highest level of possibility. In English, there is no equivalent for śraddha. Śraddha can be translated as authenticity, but authenticity is not all-encompassing translation of śraddha.

The courage of being established in the peak of your capability, and responding to life from who you perceive to be for yourself, who you project yourself to be for others, what others expect you to be for them and what you expect them to be for you is what is called śraddhā, Authenticity.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'śraddhāvanto 'nasūyanto,' the man who executes the teachings with śraddhā, with the courage of authenticity to the peak of his capability. Why do we need courage of authenticity? Courage is the fragrance of authenticity. When you have the courage of authenticity, śraddha towards living these teachings and start living without purpose, only then will you realize that you don't need the stick to walk. That is when you become authentic to your peak possibility. Once you enter into the depths of your being, you will enter into a totally different dimension. Whatever you think now as spiritual life or material life both lose their meaning and you will enter a new dimension of life. You will be established in authenticity, in the space of possibility.

When you enter into your being, when you experience the purposelessness of life, the so-called material life and spiritual life both drop you and you enter what 'Quantum spirituality' or eternal consciousness. You are then in eternal bliss. Only then you will understand you don't need worries to live. You don't need your mind. Until you reach the being, you need to have śraddha. Until you gain your vision, you must have śraddha and lie on the operating table. You need to allow the doctor to work on you as per his expectation from you. That is the reason Kṛṣṇa says, 'śraddhāvanto anasūyanto'.

The next word is a beautiful word: 'anasūyanto,' which means 'without envy.' This is important. We all think, 'My brother has purchased two houses. My sister is getting a big new car. How can I live like this?' The moment you get such thoughts, 'He has that, she has this,' what happens? All your spirituality, all your authenticity, all your purposelessness, everything just disappears. You are again in the same rat race. If your neighbor buys a new air-conditioner, the temperature in your house shoots up.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'anasūyanto, without envy.' Envy is the parasite pattern that puts you back in the same rut of inauthenticity. The problem with the rat race is this: even if you win, you are still a rat.

Any pattern you create before the age of seven is the root pattern. Any pattern created after the age of seven is a parasite pattern. First you will have to work on completing with the parasite patterns and then completing with all the root patterns. The moment the parasite pattern of envy or jealousy enters your being, authenticity disappears, purposelessness disappears. Again, you fall into social conditioning and you start running behind goals. Envy or jealousy is what makes you run like a rat.

Kṛṣṇa is asking Arjuna to bring śraddha or authenticity in action to the peak possibility of what he perceives as himself and what he projects as himself, without the parasite pattern of envy.

The man who lives in eternal consciousness, nityānanda, and allows his body and mind to work according to their nature is centered in eternal consciousness. He is called a karma yogi, one who has espoused authenticity in action without attachment as the ultimate renunciation. But the man who acts out of jealousy, enters his lower dimensions of social conditioning. He is caught in the rat race, and is called a karmi, one who is focused on inauthentic action arising from patterns of greed.

A karmi is an inauthentic person who rejects his highest possibility. A karma yogi is one established in authenticity in action, empowered to live his highest possibility. The difference between a karmi and a karma yogi is this: The man who is driven by inauthenticity, his lowest possibility, jealousy is a karmi, and the man who allows authentic action, his highest possibility, the eternal consciousness to drive him is a karma yogi.

Life is For Realizing Your Highest Possibility

When you are in conflict, you will naturally suffer. People constantly say, 'I am in suffering because of his or her inauthenticity.' Wherever you are in conflict, be very clear you are in conflict, even though you point at others' inauthenticity.

If life is not continuing to happen in the seed, it is dead. If authenticity is not continuously happening in you, you are not a possibility, you are dead. Constantly make authenticity happen in you, in your work, in your thinking, in your health. Constantly expand your thinking, constantly expand your perception. Constantly practicing authenticity brings you to the space of possibility. Śraddha or Authenticity continuously connects you with yourself and your highest possibility. Life is for realizing that possibility. Life is for realizing the Self. Life is for realizing itself.

Authenticity is Life. Life is continuous expansion. Add authenticity to your thinking in every step. Constantly go on expanding. Don't settle down with the lower perception. What you know about human beings, what you know about the world, what you know about you is all imperfect perception, comparative reality. When you settle down with comparative reality, you make the most horrible mistake of your life. Don't build your inner space on comparative reality.

Let your inner space be built on existential reality which is the space of highest possibility. If you build your life on existential reality, you will live your life blissfully in eternal consciousness, as a karma yogi. By nature, a person with a body and mind has to act in one way or the other. If you follow your nature with authenticity, you can be comfortable and flow in tune with Existence. When you are relaxed, when you are blissful, you express yourself beautifully.

When you become possessed by the root pattern of greed or fear and try to be what you are not and project yourself to be what you are not, you suppress yourself and become inauthentic. What can suppression do? You cannot suppress energy. You can only transform energy. It can never be destroyed or suppressed. Neither expression nor suppression is the solution, only completion with your inauthentic identities is the solution. The solution is to infuse śraddha, the courage of authenticity into this process. For example: your reaction of irritation has nothing to do with what the person has done. If you look a little deeper, you can see it is how you choose to react based on your root and parasite patterns that decides what you feel about the person. You choose to get irritated by what he is doing. Why should you allow yourself to get worked up about the other person's actions? Also, factually the person may have a completely different intention. Yet you are already biased by your own past perception about him.

Authenticity is the key. If you bring authenticity to what you perceive as you, to what is happening within you and what you project yourself outside you, you will not be controlled by your unconscious patterns. You will be able to see clearly when lower emotions arise or unconscious reactions arise. The awareness of your inauthenticity will itself bring you to your peak capability. Then, you will naturally drop all your lower level emotions and live what Kṛṣṇa calls as śraddhāvanto 'nasūyanto, authenticity without envy, the space of possibility.

Here, it is important to understand what duty means. If I have to do my duty, I need to know how to identify my duty.

What Kṛṣṇa talks about here is not socially defined duty or conscience. He is talking about responsibility, the leadership consciousness, the law of the cosmos. The Cosmos functions on responsibilism. The Cosmos does not believe in socialism, communism, capitalism, corporatism or any other 'ism.' The law of Cosmos and the natural law of Existence, dharma is not comparison based philosophy of communism, socialism, capitalism or corporatism. The law of the Cosmos is responsibilism.

You always measure the result of your responsibility based on the little money and the name and fame you get. That is where you fail. When you take responsibility, the higher energies start expressing through you. That is why do not measure the results with your small logic. When you actually take responsibility, Indra enters your hand; it becomes vajrāyudha. Yama enters your lungs; it means 'not-stopping'. Lakṣmi enters your heart; it means 'continuously sharing'. Kubera enters your liver and kidney, keeping the whole thing alive; Mārut, Agnī, Mārīci, all of them enter your intestine, burning anything that is offered and keeping the whole system active and alive.

When you take responsibility, when you start expressing authenticity, you get a thousand times more benefit than what you calculate through your small logic. When you start living with responsibility, not only will your monthly earnings move from two lakh to twenty lakh but you also build a space where you live in deathlessness. Your body gets built as you want. Your consciousness gets built beyond your body; you build a space of deathlessness.

To the unattached worker, all duties are equally good. He takes responsibility and welcomes what he has to do, irrespective of the external nature of the job. He approaches every act with the same enthusiasm and liveliness and becomes completely involved in the task at hand. He is authentic to his authenticity and does the action to his peak capability.

The Natural Dharma

Each of us is unique in our capabilities and interests. Accordingly, our responsibilities are different. If you try to imitate others, thinking their responsibility appears more attractive, you will be making the mistake of following somebody else's path. Comparison literally rules our lives. We waste our time and energy analyzing the other's growth. When we use our energies with authenticity for our peak growth without comparing ourselves with others, we do our responsibility according to our nature.

These verses on karma yoga by Kṛṣṇa have been misused by some to defend the caste or varṇa system in the Hindu tradition. They say what Kṛṣṇa means is that one should not swerve from one's varṇa dharma, the duty of one's caste. They do not understand the origin of the caste system.

In the Hindu culture, a child was taken to a Gurukul (the ancient system of living and learning at the feet of Master) before the age of seven. The Master then took care of the child until his or her adulthood. He taught the child based on his or her abilities. If the child had the aptitude to become a scholar he was trained in scriptures and became a brāhmaṇa. If the child was aggressive and courageous, he was trained in martial arts and became a kṣatriya, warrior, and so on.

Varṇa or caste classification was based on one's natural abilities, not on birth. Over time, this practice degenerated into a classification based on heredity. One needs to usnderstand Kṛṣṇa's injunction in the Hindu educational context.

The Alchemy of Possibility into Reality

These four principles of integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching exist in our very DNA. A seed becomes a tree or man realizes his potential only when these four principles are lived. A human being has everything needed in him to become the ultimate reality, the divine reality. The DNA, the very structure with which the human consciousness is built, dharma are these four principles!

As of now, man is only a possibility. Only when these four principles become reality do you experience your actuality. Then the base energy of lust can be transformed into the higher energy of love. It is an alchemic process of changing any base metal to a higher metal. Similarly, changing our base emotion lust to the highest emotion we are capable of, love, is alchemy. First, the impurity, an animalistic emotion, should be removed from lust. Your lust is contaminated by all kinds of fantasies, feelings of guilt and desire we have picked up from the society and media. Either our conditioning from our past makes us feel guilty and so we withdraw, or the intense desire to continue makes us indulge excessively, only to make us feel guilty again. It is a vicious cycle of pulling and pushing, as a result of which the lust is simply contaminated. Then you master the art of creating guilt for yourself.

In earlier times, people were able to drop their lust by the age of forty. Lust simply dropped from them. In Hindu marriages, there is a beautiful verse which couples recite. The meaning of the verse is, 'In the eleventh year of marriage, let the wife become the mother, and the husband the son.' This may sound strange. What it means is, let the relationship reach ultimate completion. The ultimate completion for a woman is when she expresses the motherliness in her. The ultimate completion for the man is when he comes back to the innocence of the child. So, by the eleventh year, let the relationship mature so that both the husband and wife attain ultimate completion.

First, the impurity in lust needs to be removed so that a deep friendship at the being level and not just at the physical or mental level can be added. When you feel deeply connected to a person, there will be no need for physical proximity to that person. You will feel happy and satisfied with just the feeling of connection. For the final transformation of lust into love, the relationship needs to go through the process of patience and perseverance. You need to be patient for the other person to accept your transformation. Then he or she will automatically be transformed as well.

Here Kṛṣṇa refers to lust and anger, both born out of passion. Anger is also an emotion born out of lust. When the other person rejects your lust, it turns into anger towards that person. Anger is a tremendous energy we misuse because we do not understand and respect it. Greed, anger and lust are all rajasic qualities that arise from passion and aggression from the blocked mūlādhāra cakra, the root center. These are instinctive emotions that we inherit from our animal ancestors. Indulging in these base emotions keeps a human being in bondage to his sensual and instinctive nature. This is the reason Kṛṣṇa classifies these as the root causes of sin.

A human being is endowed with Consciousness that rises above these instincts. The meaning of a human life is not mere survival; it is the realization of one's superconscious nature, one's highest reality. Anything that stands in the way of Self- realization is a sin.

Control The Senses

3.38 As fire is covered by smoke, as a mirror is covered by dust, or as the embryo is covered by the placenta, so also, the living being is covered by lust.

3.39 The knowledge of the knower is veiled by this eternal enemy in the form of lust, which is never satisfied and burns like fire, O son of Kuntī.

3.40 The senses, the mind and the intelligence are the locations of this lust, which confuses the embodied being and veils the knowledge.

3.41 Therefore, O Chief amongst the descendants of Bhārata, in the very beginning, control the senses and curb the symbol of sin, which is certainly the destroyer of knowledge and consciousness.

3.42 It is said that the senses are superior to the body. The mind is superior to the senses. The intelligence is still higher than the mind and the consciousness is even higher than intelligence.

एवं बुद्धेः परं बुद्ध्वा संस्तभ्यात्मानमात्मना ।

evaṃ buddheḥ paraṃ buddhvā saṃstabhyātmānamātmanā
jahi śatruṃ mahābāho kāmarūpaṃ durāsadam || 3.43 ||

3.43 Knowing the Self to be superior to mind and intelligence, by steadying the mind with intelligence, conquer the insatiable enemy in the form of lust, O mighty-armed one.

Just like smoke veils the fire, just as the dust on the mirror masks your reflection, and just as you cannot see the embryo when it is covered by the placenta in the womb, we are not able to see our true nature of bliss because we are caught in base emotions like lust.

In the hymn Bhaja Govindaṁ, Ādī Śaṅkarācārya, the enlightened sage says beautifully: 'Do not be excited by looking at the breasts and navel of women. Do not be overcome with lust. Think to yourself again and again that these are of flesh and will perish with time.'

Lust is linked intimately to the survival of the species. Without lust, there can be no mutual attraction between genders, no reproduction, and no continuity of the human race. This basic survival instinct is lodged in our primal root energy center, the mūlādhāra cakra. When this cakra is blocked we behave out of instinct, like animals. When this cakra is energized, we learn to live in intelligence as we are truly meant to.

Once a person reaches physical or sexual maturity at adolescence, it is very difficult to control the effects of lust arising out of the mūlādhāra. One needs to be spiritually awakened before sexual maturity so that the energy can flow upwards towards the sahasṛāra or the crown cakra. The mūlādhāra cakra is the seat of all fantasies, primarily sexual fantasies. These fantasies are the ones Kṛṣṇa says are like dust on the mirror, completely clouding our judgment.

We live by templates that we carve out in our mind based on these fantasies, and live towards fulfilling these fantasies.

Completion in the present moment is the key to unlocking the mūlādhāra and dissolving lust. It is only completion that brings you in touch with reality as it is and dissolves your fantasies.

In the Śiva Sūtra, Śiva tells His consort Devi, 'In a marriage, four people coexist.' Devi is shocked. She asks, 'There are only two people, husband and wife. Why four?'

Śiva explains, 'There is the wife, and the husband's fantasy of the wife. There is the husband, and the wife's fantasy of the husband.'

As long as there are four in a marital bed, it will not be a love affair. Fantasies need to disappear before completion comes in. When you bring yourself into the space of completion in the present moment, fantasies of the past disappear. Fears and speculations about the future vanish. They have not happened, they are not real. You are exposed to the reality of the present. Only in the present moment can lust be transformed into love.

Kṛṣṇa closes his dialogue with Arjuna in this chapter with these words, 'Be aware that you have a higher intelligence. Use that intelligence to control your senses and curb your lust, which is your most dangerous enemy on the path to completion.'

Please note that Kṛṣṇa does not say, 'Arjuna, come here, I shall help you. I shall help dissolve the lust in your body and mind. You can then be at peace.'

Arjuna started the dialogue saying he was confused by Kṛṣṇa's words about action and inaction. Kṛṣṇa then told him to carry out his own responsibility with authenticity and without worrying about the result of his actions. He guides

Arjuna to lead a purposeless life, free from obsession with the final goal and to be detached from the result of action. 'Authentic action is our nature,' He says, 'not inaction. Act, work, but surrender the result of action to Me.'

Now, Kṛṣṇa says clearly, 'Control your senses, be aware, be complete living in the present moment and give up lust.'

Lust, here, not only refers to sexual desire but also to all desires related to the outer world. It is our sense of identity, the sense of possession that drives us to acquire and enjoy.

The truth, however, is that acquisition only leads to the desire for more acquisition, not to enjoyment and fulfillment.

To be blissful we need to keep our inner space clean and empty. Only then can bliss fill that space. The outer space can be filled, that is not a contradiction. As long as the outer material space is filled without attachment, the inner space remains empty.

To make this happen, the senses have to be in control, not suppressed. Anything suppressed waits for an opportunity to explode. However, creating the space of completion can transform the mind and senses. When we realize that life has no purpose, that the meaning of life is to enrich others and ourselves and to enjoy the path, we learn to give up attachment to end results. We drop expectations. We move into the present moment and live in the space of completion.

This is the whole essence of karma yoga. Be complete and drop your attachment to the goal, and live an enriching life with integrity in words, with authenticity in thinking and action, and with responsibility in feeling. Live life blissfully. You will achieve the Supreme. You will achieve the space of Enlightenment.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'You will achieve the Supreme.' You will achieve the eternal consciousness, nityānanda - eternal bliss.

oṃ tatsaditi śrīmadbhagavadgītāsu upaniṣatsu brahmavidyāyāṃ yogaśāstre śrīkṛṣṇārjunasaṃvāde karmayogo nāma tṛtīyo'dhyāyaḥ || 3||

Thus ends the third chapter named Karma Yogah, 'The Yoga of Action,' of the Bhagavad Gita Upanisad, Brahmavidya Yogasastra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Sri Krsnarjuna samvad, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Jñānakarmasannyāsa Yogaḥ

The human psyche longs for continuance. Continuation and perpetuation of one's identity is of utmost importance to us. We trace our lineage back as far as we can go in memory and records. We keep looking for something noteworthy there. We are anxious to provide for the weak ones in the family. This is a general anxiety on the account of our own lineage.

Arjuna has been driven by the same dilemma. To defend the fears he has about his own identity, he cites historical moral codes that discuss how one's ancestors and descendants are affected by one's deeds in this life. It is a simple transference of his present uncertainty to the past and future.

All religions may not accept this principle of energy in man and the Universe as eternal. Views of religions change and have to change as new knowledge arises. Scientists now agree that matter and energy are inter-convertible in time and space. Advances in Quantum Physics have shown that sub-atomic particles can appear in different forms and shapes depending on when they are viewed, how they are viewed and who views them. For example, people think materialization of objects is magic or trickery. It isn't. It is simple science. It is converting matter into energy, moving the energy and converting it back to matter. We can demonstrate this scientifically with the help of modern technology.

No matter can be produced from nowhere. It can only be produced out of energy. Fortunately this energy source is infinite in the Universe. This Universe is known to be constantly growing.

The very first verse of the first Hindu scripture, Īśa Vāsya Upaniṣad, says that 'out of energy arises all matter - īśā vāsyaṁ idaṃ sarvaṃ.' Upon reading this verse, Albert Einstein, the famous physicist said, 'It is only now that I could establish that energy arises from matter. Thousands of years ago, Hindu sages knew more. They knew that matter arises from energy. Science has yet to establish this. The last frontier of science is the threshold of spirituality.' After all, the energy that is who we are is forever. Once we understand, cognize and accept this, we are in eternal bliss, nityānandam.

I Taught This Science to Sun

श्रीभगवानुवाच ।

इमं विवस्वते योगं प्रोक्तवानहमव्ययम् ।

विवस्वान्मनवे प्राह मनुरिक्ष्वाकवेऽब्रवीत् ॥ ४-१॥

śrībhagavānuvāca

imaṃ vivasvate yogaṃ proktavānahamavyayam

vivasvānmanave prāha manurikṣvākave'bravīt || 4.1 ||

4.1 Bhagavān says: I taught the Sun god, Vivasvān, the imperishable science of yoga and Vivasvān taught Manu, the father of mankind and Manu in turn taught Ikṣvāku.

एवं परम्पराप्राप्तमिमं राजर्षयो विदुः ।

स कालेनेह महता योगो नष्टः परन्तप ॥ ४-२॥

evaṃ paramparāprāptamimaṃ rājarṣayo viduḥ

sa kāleneha mahatā yogo naṣṭaḥ parantapa || 4.2 ||

4.2 The supreme science was thus received through the chain of master- disciple succession and the saintly kings understood it in that way. In the course of time, the succession was broken and therefore the science as it was appears to have been lost.

स एवायं मया तेऽद्य योगः प्रोक्तः पुरातनः ।

भक्तोऽसि मे सखा चेति रहस्यं ह्येतदुत्तमम् ॥ ४-३॥

sa evāyaṃ mayā te'dya yogaḥ proktaḥ purātanaḥ

bhakto'si me sakhā ceti rahasyaṃ hyetaduttamam || 4.3 ||

4.3 That ancient science of Enlightenment, or entering into eternal bliss, is today taught by Me to you because you are My devotee as well as My friend.

You will certainly understand the supreme mystery of this science. You need to understand that Kṛṣṇa is just thirty-two years old when He makes this statement. Physically His body is only thirty-two years old. But He says, 'I gave this imperishable knowledge to Sūrya, the Sun god, imaṁ vivasvate yogaṁ proktavān aham avyayam (4.1).'

Of course, this is very difficult to understand. With logic, you cannot understand this statement. With ordinary logic, which you use in your daily life, you cannot make any meaning out of this statement. In the next statement He says: The supreme science, this yoga as it was, appears to have been lost in course of time.

These two verses should be understood clearly. The first thing is that the truth is not new. It is eternal; neither new nor old. Eternal means it is there forever. It never becomes old. It was never new. Eternal means that which is beyond time and space. When you are in completion, anything you create stands for eternity. It is immortal and eternal. Otherwise there is no reason why Hinduism should be still alive. See, for a religion or any civilization to be alive, three things are important. First, the knowledge and the science of lifestyle, Upaniṣad - the answer to all questions of living and leaving. Second, the buildings - architecture and arts. And third, the language. All these three are made out of the magnetic field of completion in sanātana-dharma. That is why these three things can never be destroyed, no matter how much anyone tries.

The architectural wonders and monuments created out of completion, and the linguistic monument and wonder, Saṃskṛitaṁ born out of completion can never be destroyed. Just like the wonders of the world, if you analyse the linguistic wonders of the world, Saṃskṛitaṁ, the devabhāśā, language of Divine, will be the first and only linguistic wonder of the world. Understand, the word Saṃskrit means well done, refined, perfect. The Hindu tradition is such a powerful, refined system that no matter how much anyone tries to manipulate, morph or misrepresent it, it gets backfired. The system is so foolproof, so evolved to perfection; that is why we say Saṃskṛitaṁ means refined. The great science of lifestyle is the Upaniṣads. All three are created out of the magnetic field of completion. That is why nothing could destroy or kill it.

This yoga is imperishable as Kṛṣṇa declares, avyayam. Anything created out of the space of completion stands forever, stands eternally. Completion is eternal, nitya. Only the things described and created based on time can be said to be new or old. Anything new will become old one day. Anything old was new at one time. Eternal means it is beyond the new and the old. It has been there from time immemorial. Here, this yoga, the science of Enlightenment is eternal or nitya.

The science of karma yogaḥ that we learned in chapter three, the same yoga is going to be explained further in chapter four Jñana-karma-sannyāsa yogaḥ.

Understanding the purposelessness of life will wash away all its incompletions, stresses, pressures and burdens from your being, whether they are physical or mental. You are liberated in that same moment. You are in the space of completion that very moment. Kṛṣṇa doesn't give you any technique that works over lengthy periods of time. Some techniques work over long periods of time, which you will have to practice forever. Your son or your daughter may get the result.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Now, here or nowhere!' Either have the result now and here, or nowhere. All His techniques straightaway give you the experience. If you can allow that one idea of purposelessness, the beauty of purposelessness, into your inner space, that very moment the breeze of Enlightenment enters your heart. That very moment, the healing of your being starts. Healing of bhāva roga, emotional diseases and healing of saṁsāra roga, the disease of birth and death, start.

Learn Only from a Living Enlightened Master

Understand why this yoga of completion was lost. When a disciple is not in the space of completion, if he is not completely ready to listen, naturally the technique becomes a ritual. Understand, there is only one difference between technique and ritual. When it is done with integrity and authenticity, even an ordinary ritual becomes a great meditation technique that leads you to Enlightenment. When it is done without any integrity, as a routine, then even a meditation technique becomes a ritual.

'In course of time, the science was lost.' Kṛṣṇa uses a beautiful phrase, 'the supreme science was taught by Me, imaṁ vivasvate yogaṁ and the supreme science was received through lineage, evam paramparā prāptam.' You don't lose that supreme science in just one generation. In course of time, even a single unenlightened disciple is enough to destroy the whole science.

When you get somebody's throne as a successor without the energy of responsibility, you will be filled with ego. You will create damage. You carry just the book and not the knowledge. Responsibility is the energy in which your life flowers and blooms. First learn to think with these four tattvas as reality. That is why our Hindu Masters always transmitted and mirrored the truths through the oral tradition of disciple succession from the enlightened Master to the disciple. The disciple sits in Upaniṣad at the feet of the Master. Upaniṣad means sitting with the Master. Upaniṣad is nothing but a Master who gets into a space and lets the disciples sit around and mirror his neuron activity in their brains. Upaniṣad is the best way to transmit the experiential expression of the great tattvas. This is how Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa transmits the science of Bhagavad Gītā to the Sun god, Vivasvān and now to Arjuna.

Spirituality - The Ultimate Luxury

Here Kṛṣṇa says,

evam paramparā prāptam imaṁ rājarṣayo viduḥ | sa kāleneha mahatā yogo naṣṭaḥ parantapa || 4.2 ||

One important thing, He says, 'rājarṣayo viduḥ,' meaning, this science is given to kingly saints, not to just any saint.

If you have listened to the previous chapter, karma yogaḥ you would know that the science He taught is Quantum Spirituality, which gives you both the material and spiritual world. That is why He says, 'the science is given to kingly saints.' Had it been only for ordinary saints, he would have emphasized only on the inner world, the inner space. Had it been only for kings, he would have emphasized on the outer world and wealth. The science is delivered to the kings, enlightened masters; enlightened masters who are kings. Only they can preserve the science as it is. Be very clear, only an enlightened person who is a king or a king who is an enlightened person can know the totality of spirituality.

Only a rich man who has enjoyed material wealth can understand the meaning and relevance of spirituality. Poor men who have not seen the outer world wealth can only go and beg in front of God. They can never understand the ultimate spirituality.

Only a person who has seen the outer world thoroughly realizes its emptiness. Only he can enter the inner world. If you still have hope in the outer world, you cannot experience the ultimate spirituality. Only a king can be utterly frustrated. Only a king can enter into enlightenment, because he knows there is nothing in the outer space that can fulfill him. He has seen everything; all possible comforts, enjoyments and pleasures.

If somebody who has not experienced depression of success enters spirituality, he will stand in front of God and beg, 'God give me this, give me that.' He may be a religious person, but never a spiritual person. There is a huge difference between a religious person and a spiritual person. When you know God has got the śakti (power) to give whatever you want, your religion starts. When you understand he also has the buddhi (intelligence) as to when to give you what, then you enter into spirituality.

We all believe God has the power to give us what we want, but we don't trust that he has also got the intelligence to give it at the right time. That is why we beg and beg. Only a person who trusts that God has the power and the intelligence, can enter spirituality, trusting implicitly that He knows when to give and what to give.

Spirituality is the ultimate luxury. Only a person who carries the space of completion, who understands the purposelessness of life can heal himself and others. Only he can be a real spiritual being. Here, Kṛṣṇa uses the words 'rājarṣi, kingly saint. Only a person who has authentically lived aligning the inner space and the outer space, can experience the truth of the totality. Of course, when a person who is not authentic enough to realize this truth enters into the system, he corrupts it. Inauthenticity is the corruption that can happen in your soul. Don't allow this corruption to happen to consciousness.

Because You are My Devotee and Friend

So, Kṛṣṇa says, 'In course of time, the science was lost.' In the next verse, Kṛṣṇa says:

sa evāyaṁ mayā te 'dya yogaḥ proktaḥ purātanaḥ | bhakto 'si me sakhā ceti rahasyaṁ hy etad uttamam || 4.3 ||

He says, 'I am telling you about this very ancient science of the ultimate Enlightenment or entering eternal bliss, and being My devotee and my friend, you will understand the supreme mystery of this science.'

This has to be understood very deeply. One cannot tell this ultimate truth to a person who is not ready. This truth cannot be delivered to a person who is not ready to listen. And truth told to a person who is not ready creates danger for everyone.

The ultimate truth is beyond logic. Initially when you start to teach the truth, it always starts with logic. Words go logically. But after some time, you have to leave logic behind. Otherwise, you can't reach the Divine. You can't talk to God through logic. You cannot relate with him in prose. Only in poetry you can relate with God. That is why, be it Eastern or Western cultures, whenever it comes to prayer it is only through songs and poems.

If you want the divine relationship to happen, you need love. You need the language of poetry. Here, only a person who understands, who has become a part of the Master can receive the Master's experiences. Unless you become part of the Master, it is very difficult to understand his message. When you speak the ultimate truth to a person who is not ready, it leads to many troubles. With the right person, even a lie told by him will be good for society. In the wrong hands even truth will do harm to society. To whom it is delivered is important, rather than whether it is the truth or a lie. With the wrong person, even a great truth like advaita (nonduality) 'I am God,' may make him think he is God and make him do all nonsensical things.

A wrong person can never understand the truth told by Kṛṣṇa. For example, Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am God. I am everything. Surrender unto me.' If the person is not completely devoted to Kṛṣṇa, if he has not understood Kṛṣṇa, what will he think? 'What an egoistic person he is! How dare he tell me to surrender to him?' Naturally the person, instead of understanding Kṛṣṇa, will create more trouble for Kṛṣṇa.

Beyond Logic Lies Devotion

Here, Kṛṣṇa is going to talk about something that is beyond logic. This is where you leave your logic behind, become completely open, sit in a totally passive mood, and be ready to receive. With logic, either you will understand everything or you will not understand anything. There is no other danger. When it comes to the deeper level teachings, either you understand, or you misunderstand. The teachings which Kṛṣṇa is going to deliver now are much deeper, much subtler than the teachings delivered earlier.

That is why He says, 'Now I am telling you these secrets just because you are my devotee and friend, just because you are near and dear to me. You are my own, bhakto'si me sakhā ceti rahasyaṁ hy etad uttamam (4.3).' That is the reason He uses the word bhaktosi. He says, 'You are my devotee and you are my friend.' Sakhā means friend. The person who does not have a connection with Kṛṣṇa, cannot receive the message.

Now Kṛṣṇa enters deeper level truths where you need to come down from your head to your heart, where you need to sit with your whole being and listen to the truths. Here, Kṛṣṇa gives a warning, rahasyaṁ hyetad uttamam. 'I am giving you these secrets, the mysterious science of realizing the Ultimate, my dear friend and devotee, Arjuna.' So, now let us enter into the science that is taught by Kṛṣṇa.

Understand, Vedānta always emphasizes on three things: śravana, manana and nididhyāsana. Śravana means integrated listening. Manana means meditating, contemplating on it with deep active thinking. Nidhidhyāsana means expressing and radiating it powerfully in your life, or experiencing it in your life. Here, these truths do not need these three steps. Just listening is enough for it to become an experience. Śravana is enough; authentic śravana becomes nidhidhyāsana. Nothing more needs to be done. All you need to do is to sit with a complete open being in the space of listening, with a complete relaxed feeling.

These words are uttered for your sake, not for the sake of the Master. So, we will just take a few minutes to meditate on Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the greatest enlightened Master, JagadGuru. Let us pray to Him to allow His words to penetrate our being. Let Him reside in our consciousness. Let Him lead us to eternal bliss.

Just take a few minutes, close your eyes and intensely pray to Him: Master, lead us to the experience. Give us the understanding. Let Him raise our inner space by His presence. Let Him be in our inner space and enlighten our consciousness.

4.6 Although I am unborn, imperishable and the lord of all living entities, By ruling My nature I reappear by My own māyā.

अभ्युत्थानमधर्मस्य तदात्मानं सृजाम्यहम् ॥ ४-७॥ yadā yadā hi dharmasya glānirbhavati bhārata abhyutthānamadharmasya tadātmānaṃ sṛjāmyaham || 4.7 ||

4.7 Whenever positive consciousness declines, when collective negativity rises, O Bhārata, again and again, at these times, I happen Myself.

परित्राणाय साधूनां विनाशाय च दुष्कृताम् । धर्मसंस्थापनार्थाय सम्भवामि युगे युगे ॥ ४-८॥ paritrāṇāya sādhūnāṃ vināśāya ca duṣkṛtām

dharmasaṃsthāpanārthāya sambhavāmi yuge yuge || 4.8 ||

4.8 To protect the pious and to annihilate the wicked, to re-establish righteousness, I Myself appear age after age.

Kṛṣṇa starts His message as a response to Arjuna's question. This shows that Arjuna still needs to have the maturity. He asks, 'The Sun god is elder to you by birth; he is so much your senior. How am I to understand that in the beginning you instructed this science to him?'

Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa are almost of the same age. Suddenly, Kṛṣṇa says He gave this science to the Sun god thousands of years ago. Moreover, Arjuna lived with Kṛṣṇa for a long time. He knows and has seen the human side of Kṛṣṇa, all of Kṛṣṇa's līlā (plays), all of Kṛṣṇa's moods. So now, it is very difficult for Arjuna to believe Kṛṣṇa's words.

This is what all disciples who live around enlightened Masters undergo. They find it difficult to understand the Divine descending and walking on the planet Earth in human form. Arjuna struggles to understand. How can the Divine descend?

Arjuna is shocked when Kṛṣṇa says, 'Thousands of years ago, I taught this science of Enlightenment to the Sun God, Vivaṣvān.'Arjuna thinks, 'How can I understand?' He has become a little polite and intelligent. In the second chapter, when Kṛṣṇa says, 'Arjuna, go and fight,' Arjuna asks, 'How can you say this? How can you tell me to sin?' Now he says, 'How can I understand? Please tell me.' He does not say, 'How can you say this?" He is now ready to believe, but he wants a little explanation.

Kṛṣṇa Declares His Divinity

Whenever enlightened Masters descend on the planet Earth, they face this trouble, again and again. When Ramakrishna declared that the same being who came as Rāma and Kṛṣṇa had now come down in the form of Ramakrishna, he was called mad. People did not receive or respect him. But a few qualified people received his words and transformed their lives.

Now Kṛṣṇa starts to answer this question. Bhagavān says, 'O Arjuna, many, many births both you and I have passed. I can remember all of them but you can't.' Then He says, 'Although I am unborn, imperishable and the lord of all living entities, I reappear by my original māyā, by controlling my nature.'

ajo'pi sann avyayātmā bhūtānām īsvaro'pi san | prakṛtiṁ svām adhiṣṭhāya sambhavāmy ātma-māyayā || 4.6 ||

This is the first time He declares His divinity! All this while, Kṛṣṇa was only playing the role of ācārya (teacher,) intellectually enriching Arjuna of the truth and giving him knowledge. For the first time, He opens up. He declares the truth about His nature. He shows the divinity of His nature. When a disciple is not ready, you can't open up, you can't tell the truth. Now, the disciple is ready. So Kṛṣṇa opens up. He says, although I am unborn and my transcendental body never deteriorates and although I am the Lord of all living entities, I still appear in every millennium in my original transcendental form.

Three things we need to understand here. First He says, 'I am unborn, ajopi. I never take birth. I am the ultimate Parabrahma (cosmic or divine energy). I am the ultimate energy.' Here, Kṛṣṇa straightaway declares the truth. 'I am God, bhūtānām īsvaro'pi san,' He says.

Please listen, when the disciple is mature, the Master is understood. Here, straightaway Kṛṣṇa declares, 'I am unborn, ajopi, I am unborn, eternal consciousness, and my transcendental body never deteriorates, avyayātmā. You can always relate with me. I am unborn and I never die.'

Understand, that which never takes birth can never die; only that which takes birth can die. Here Kṛṣṇa declares, I never take birth and I never die. I am the Lord of all living entities - ajo'pi sann avyayātmā bhūtānām īsvaro'pi san.

When normal human beings die, the soul leaves the body. In the case of masters, they leave the body. The very wording is different. So having a body or not having a body is in no way connected to their presence. They are available to the planet always, to the whole of humanity.

It is very difficult to understand Masters. With integrity and authenticity, if you reach out, even if they don't have the body, you will be able to relate, connect, and talk to them. When you don't have integrity and authenticity, even with a living Master you will miss him. Understand, He says, 'I am the Lord of all the entities. But I still happen in every millennium in my original transcendental form; using my own māyā (Illusion). Because of my māya, I assume the body and and incarnate myself, sambhavāmy ātma-māyayā.'

Kṛṣṇa means that He happens on the planet Earth again and again in so many forms to guide and enrich the people. Ordinary human beings are in the clutches of māyā or illusion due to which they take birth. But Kṛṣṇa has māyā itself under His control and takes birth due to His own wish.

Kṛṣṇa Promises to Happen Again and Again

The next two verses, if they are understood, then not only the whole Gītā but all the spiritual scriptures can be realized. Here He declares:

yadā yadā hi dharmasya glānir bhavati bhārata | abhyutthānam adharmasya tadātmānaṁ sṛjāmyaham || 4.7 ||

paritrāṇāya sadhūnāṁ vināśāya ca duṣkṛtām | dharma saṁsthāpanārthāya sambhavāmi yuge yuge || 4.8 ||

Whenever there is a decline in individual consciousness, whenever the collective unconsciousness increases, to establish the righteousness of the eternal consciousness, the science of eternal bliss, dharma saṁsthāpanārthāya, I Myself appear, millennium after millennium—sambhavāmi yuge yuge.

Only a Master like Kṛṣṇa can declare the truth so clearly. Here Kṛṣṇa declares, 'I come down again and again, to set right the wrong.'

He keeps the generation of enlightened Masters open for the future, the possibility of enlightenment open for the future generations on planet Earth. He keeps the whole science open for the future. Only a courageous being like Kṛṣṇa can declare this truth; sambhavāmi yuge yuge.

This verse is a promise; it is deliverance to all of humanity. This one single idea, if understood, can straightaway make you enlightened. In science, the principle of entropy states that the energy level of every system, including the Universe, degrades with time. So it is with consciousness. Over time individuals start losing their positive consciousness and collective negativity builds up. Of course, this does not imply that every single person becomes evil intentioned, but on an average, spirituality, awareness, righteousness and consciousness of individuals deteriorate at certain periods of time.

To Know Me Is To Be Liberated

त्यक्त्वा देहं पुनर्जन्म नैति मामेति सोऽर्जुन ॥ ४-९॥

janma karma ca me divyamevaṃ yo vetti tattvataḥ

tyaktvā dehaṃ punarjanma naiti māmeti so'rjuna || 4.9 ||

4.9 One who knows or experiences My divine appearance and activities does not take birth again in this material world after leaving the body but attains Me, O Arjuna.

वीतरागभयक्रोधा मन्मया मामुपाश्रिताः ।

बहवो ज्ञानतपसा पूता मद्भावमागताः ॥ ४-१०॥

vītarāgabhayakrodhā manmayā māmupāśritāḥ

bahavo jñānatapasā pūtā madbhāvamāgatāḥ || 4.10 ||

4.10 Being freed from attachment, fear and anger, being filled with Me and by taking refuge in Me, many beings in the past have become sanctified by the knowledge of Me and have realized Me.

ये यथा मां प्रपद्यन्ते तांस्तथैव भजाम्यहम् ।

मम वर्त्मानुवर्तन्ते मनुष्याः पार्थ सर्वशः ॥ ४-११॥

ye yathā māṃ prapadyante tāṃstathaiva bhajāmyaham

mama vartmānuvartante manuṣyāḥ pārtha sarvaśaḥ || 4.11 ||

4.11 I reward everyone, I show Myself to all people, according to the manner in which they surrender unto Me, in the manner that they are devoted to Me, O Pārtha.

काङ्क्षन्तः कर्मणां सिद्धिं यजन्त इह देवताः ।
क्षिप्रं हि मानुषे लोके सिद्धिर्भवति कर्मजा ॥ ४-१२॥
kāṅkṣantaḥ karmaṇāṃ siddhiṃ yajanta iha devatāḥ
kṣipraṃ hi mānuṣe loke siddhirbhavati karmajā || 4.12 ||

4.12 Men in this world desire success through activities and therefore they worship the gods. Men get instant results from active work in this world.

This is a very strange statement. He says, 'One who understands the nature of My appearance and activities will be liberated from this birth and death cycle.' How can it be? He says, 'Understand my transcendental nature of birthlessness and deathlessness.' Just now He said he is birthless and deathless. Ajopi - I am birthless. Just now He says, ajo'pi sann avyayātmā bhūtānām īsvaro'pi san. He says, 'I am birthless and deathless.'

Now He says, 'If you understand the truth of the transcendental nature of My appearance and activities, once you leave the body you will not take birth and death like ordinary humans do. If you understand My transcendental nature, you will also achieve the same transcendental nature.'

'If you understand that I don't take the body, you will not take the body either. If you understand I am liberated, you will realize that you are also liberated.' How can it be?

We will start with an incident from Bhagavān Ramaṇa Maharṣi's life, an enlightened saint from Bharat. In the presence of Ramaṇa Maharṣi, devotees used to sing some songs. There is a song called 'Ramaṇa SatGuru,' which means 'Praising Ramaṇa Maharṣi, an enlightened Master.' When the song is sung, Ramaṇa himself used to sing along with the devotees. Somebody asked him, 'What is this?

You are an enlightened person, you yourself are singing your own name. What do you mean by this?' Bhagavān says, 'Fool! Why are you reducing Ramaṇa to this six-foot body?' This is a deep, very subtle thing. He says, 'I see my body just as you all see it. I don't associate myself with this name and form. That is the reason why, just like you, I enjoy singing this name.'

An egoistic person, at least in public, will not show that he enjoys praise, because if he does, people will see that he is egoistic. He will never be open. Here, Ramaṇa Maharṣi is totally open and straight. He says, 'Just like you, I enjoy this name and form, because I don't feel this is me. The name is just getting repeated.'

Another incident: One of Ramaṇa's disciples, Muruganar wrote 'Ramaṇa Puranam'. It is the stotra (verses in praise) of Ramaṇa Maharṣi. He wrote a few lines and somehow he was not able to write further. So he just brought the paper and put it at the feet of the Master and said, 'Bhagavān, I am not able to write.' Ramaṇa Maharṣi says, 'Alright, you go, let us look into it tomorrow.' The next day when the disciple came back, he saw that the poem was completed.

Ramaṇa Maharṣi himself wrote and completed it. He wrote three hundred lines and completed the whole poem. The disciple was surprised. Bhagavān himself had written his own praises. Later, when the disciple published it, Bhagavān saw that he had put a small footnote: 'From this line onwards it was written by Bhagavān himself', just so that the devotees would know that those particular verses were Bhagavān's own words. On seeing the first copy of the book, Ramaṇa Maharṣi turned to the disciple and asked, 'Oh! Were the other lines written by you then?' Understand, he asks, 'Oh! Does it mean that the other lines are all written by you?' Bhagavān goes on to tell him, 'When you wrote all those verses, it was I who wrote through you. As such, you cannot think about Me. You cannot write about Me. What do you know about me? Unless I express Myself through you, you cannot know anything about Me.' Only a man who has disappeared into the divine consciousness can write his poem.

Lord of All Living Beings

In the Bhāgavatam (life history of Lord Kṛṣṇa,) Kṛṣṇa Himself sings, 'I am the Lord,' just like how He now says - bhūtānām īsvaro'pi.

A mere cowherd boy from Briṇdavan says this. You should not look at Kṛṣṇa from today's perspective. You should understand the whole scene as it happened, on the battlefield at Kurukṣetra. Now, because of time, we have accepted Kṛṣṇa as God. But this was said when He was alive, when people could not accept him as God. When Rāma was walking on planet Earth, only the Saptaṛṣis (the energy of seven sages that controls the world) knew He is an Incarnation. Similarly, when Kṛṣṇa was alive in his body, very few people recognized who He is. At least Rāma lived a controlled life; he is easy for people to accept. But Kṛṣṇa lived such an ecstatic and spontaneous life, it is very difficult to realize who He is.

For a so-called religious person, it is very difficult to realize and understand Kṛṣṇa. But He says, bhūtānām īsvaro'pi - I am the Lord of all living entities. Somebody asks Ramaṇa, 'Why are you expressing your own glory?' Bhagavān says, 'If I don't speak about myself, you can never understand me. Unless I reveal, you can never realize me. Just out of my compassion, I express the truth, I express myself.'

Here, when He says, 'I am God, I am the Ultimate,' He says there is a possibility, 'When I can achieve, why can't you?' He shows the space of possibility, He gives us the courage of authenticity, He encourages us. Here He says, 'When I can achieve, why can't you?'

It is like a seed is always afraid of rupturing to become a tree. The seed always feels, 'If I break and the tree doesn't happen, then what will happen? I will die.' But the tree tells the seed, 'Unless you open, I cannot happen.' The seed says, 'No, let the tree happen, then I will open.' But the tree says, 'No, no, first you have to open, only then I can happen.' The problem between the tree and the seed continues endlessly.

It is necessary for somebody to give a little courage to the seed. A tree that was a seed once can say, 'Be courageous. Be authentic to your highest possibility. Don't worry. You will never perish. Open. Just like me you will become a tree.' In the same way, Kṛṣṇa gives courage of authenticity to us, 'You can also become God, like Me. You can also experience the truth like Me.'

Inside the seed, if life is not happening, the tree won't come out. Inside the seed, life has to happen, the tree has to come out! Inside your body, authenticity has to happen, enlightenment has to come out. Inside your body, if authenticity is not happening, the completion, fulfillment, enlightenment, won't come out. Add authenticity to your thinking in every step. If life is not continuing to happen in the seed, it is not a seed, it is dead. If authenticity is not continuously happening in you, you are not a possibility, you are dead. Constantly make authenticity happen in you, in your work, in your thinking, in your health.

Defining yourself to you should be done with life, with authenticity. If the seed defines itself saying, 'I am a seed. I cannot do anything. Ah, my life is over!', it is dead. If the seed decides to be authentic and says, 'No, today I will at least just break my shell, I will sprout one small leaf. Now, let me make my second leaf,' then life is happening.

When Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am the Ultimate,' He expresses the space of possibility. He reminds us of our potential. He enriches us to define ourselves with authenticity as He defines Himself. He inspires us to enter the same consciousness, to experience the same bliss. When Kṛṣṇa reveals this truth, be very clear, Kṛṣṇa is not egoistic. He is expressing His true nature out of basic courtesy to His fellow travelers. The senior tree encourages the junior seed to open up and become a tree. The tree assures the seed. It says, 'Don't worry, I have become a tree. You can also become like me. You don't have to feel you will disappear.' It is an assurance. A small banyan tree seed is a huge tree in the form of possibility. In the same way, you are God in the form of possibility. You are the seed for God in the form of possibility. Just as how the banyan seed is a possibility for banyan tree; you are a possibility for God Himself. When Kṛṣṇa tells us 'I am God', He means, 'You too are God.' He gives you the courage of authenticity.

Here, when Kṛṣṇa says, 'I,' there is just the Divine that is speaking. There is nobody inside. It is pure emptiness. Just the Divine, the pure Existence speaks through Him. He has become a hollow bamboo. That is why He can courageously declare in a battlefield, bhūtānām īsvaro'pi - I am the Lord of all beings. Sitting comfortably at home where you have all the security and protection and declaring 'I am God' is very easy, because there is nothing to risk. You don't need to prove anything. But Kṛṣṇa is making this statement in a place where He needs to prove it. He is making this statement in a battlefield, where His life itself is at risk. One arrow is enough to finish His body. Yet He boldly declares, 'I am God.' This courage and energy behind His words can come only from a solid experience, a deep conscious experience.

Understand Death First

One of the great disciples of Vivekananda, Sister Nivedita asks him, 'Swamiji, if I come with you what will you teach me? What will you give me?' Vivekananda says, 'I will teach you how to face death.' That is the ultimate teaching. Here, Kṛṣṇa is giving that ultimate teaching. In these verses, He is saying something very strange:

janma karma ca me divyam evaṁ yo vetti tattvataḥ | tvaktvā dehaṁ punar janma naiti mām eti soʻrjuna || 4.9 ||

It means: if you understand the secret of My birth and death, you will be liberated from birth and death, Arjuna. How? Let us see the secret of the birth and death of Kṛṣṇa, how we all go through the birth and death cycle.

Whenever the ultimate truth is uttered, whenever something beyond our logic is uttered, we never receive it completely. If we are courageous, we fight, we question, we argue. If we don't have that much courage, we don't allow that word to enter into us. We never believe anybody. It is always an argument, sometimes open, and at other times, in the mind. If we can't express it openly, we continuously repeat the same words in the mind.

There are so many explanations, so many versions as to how death happens and how your spirit enters into the next body. Here, Kṛṣṇa beautifully explains that people belong to different religions only when they are alive. When they are dead, they follow only one path, which is described in the Kaṭhopaniṣad.

See, when you leave the body, the moment the physical body dies and relaxes, that very moment the soul leaves the body. At that time, what you perceived as the highest pleasure in your life surfaces. If you thought eating was the highest pleasure in your life, naturally while leaving the body, you will think, 'I should take a body which will continuously help me to eat. You go through all the choices and you decide to take a pig's body. Whatever you think is the greatest experience in your life, whichever experience occupies your maximum inner space, you decide your next birth based on that desire. Please listen, nobody else decides your birth. It is simply you who choose. It is clearly the conscious decision of your soul.

Here Kṛṣṇa says beautifully, 'I am telling you the secret of things.' Kṛṣṇa says, 'rahasyaṁ hy etad uttamam.' 'I am telling you the mysterious ultimate science, Oh, my dear devotee and friend, bhakto 'si me sakhā ceti.'

You take birth based on your desires, based on how you lived in the previous birth. Birth and death are your conscious decisions. We will analyze to internalize this whole concept, the secret of birth and death, the mysterious science that Kṛṣṇa delivers.

Incarnation Happens out of Love and Compassion

The greatness of God is that He gives you the freedom to be in bondage. Even if it is the ultimate freedom He offers you, He never forces it on you. He gives you the freedom to be in bondage if that is your choice. Your whole birth is based on your fear and greed. But the Incarnation, the enlightened Master's birth is based on love and compassion. The whole secret is this. Ordinary man takes birth based on fear and greed. That is why his whole life is driven by fear and greed. Enlightened Masters assume the body out of love and compassion.

That is why Kṛṣṇa beautifully says, 'ātma māyayā, because of my own energy, I take birth. With my own energy, just out of my love and compassion, I land on this planet Earth.' The next question that follows is this: How can we be liberated by knowing this truth? How will it help us?

Every night's sleep is your birth and death. Every night when you go to sleep, you die. When you come back in the morning, you take birth one more time. Every day, you assume the body. Every day, you leave the body. When you go to the causal body in deep sleep, you actually die and come back. When you come back, every day you are new. As of now, every morning, how do we come back to life? How do we take this body? Just look deeply. What happens when you wake up?

Usually, the moment you become aware that you are awake, either a thought based on greed or fear hits you. Maybe you want to meet somebody, maybe you have to meet some deadline. Immediately you jump out of bed. If you have analyzed your waking up, how you assume this body every morning, that moment is actually your taking birth. That moment when you take the body matters. These are the basic, very subtle, mysterious secrets of altering the whole consciousness. Whichever thought you enter your body with every morning will play a major role in your consciousness for that entire day.

But an Incarnation, an enlightened Master assumes the body out of love and compassion. He comes back just to pour His compassion out, just to share Himself with the whole world. When I say He comes back, I mean His coming back every day, every morning. If you understand this once and alter your thoughts at the time of waking up, you will alter your whole consciousness; the very quality of your consciousness can be changed. It is just like how a camera works. The first moment the lens is opened, whatever scene is there in front of the camera eye, is recorded on the film. That will remain forever. In the same way, during the first moment of consciousness, the thought that you have while entering into the body, plays a major role on your consciousness for the whole day.

You Too can Happen as Divine

The man who assumes the body out of love and compassion is an Incarnation. If you assume the body out of greed or fear, you are a man. If you assume the body out of love and compassion, you are an Incarnation and you are divine. Your whole life will become pure eternal bliss. Your whole life will be a happening with a different consciousness.

Here Kṛṣṇa gives us a technique to attain Him, to experience janma karma ca me divyam. If we are able to live in such a way as to be free from the attachments born out of anger and fear, then we can be absorbed in Him, we can attain Him. All actions create their own reactions. When we sow a seed, the action, though it may appear to be complete, is in reality not so. We have set into motion a cycle, a chain of events. The seed sprouts and becomes a plant or tree. Thus it is in the order of Existence that every action or cause has its own reaction or effect. It is therefore quite difficult to escape from the clutches of the cause-effect cycle.

Here Kṛṣṇa gives a technique to cut these kārmic bonds, to be complete and realize the reality. Actions that are complete and free from fear and anger do not create bonds - vītā- rāga bhaya krodhā. They lead us towards elevated consciousness. Fear and anger that arise out of greed pattern are two of the most provocative emotions, the root patterns that create incomplete action, and lead to bondage.

Attachments are our bondage to the future based on experiences of the past. We have unfulfilled desires that we hope to fulfill. We look for results. When the results happen the way we wish them to, there is temporary satisfaction. More wishes arise. More attachments are formed. When things do not happen the way we want them to, we feel sorrow, we are depressed. We strive again. Either way it is a never-ending cycle that brings sorrow in the end. When we let go of attachments and perform complete actions with no expectations, we enjoy the path of action. There is no stress regarding what must happen, since there is no attachment.

Completion is stopping the effect immediately and rewinding the effect towards the cause, and merging the effect into the cause. Stopping the effect immediately and rewinding it back to the cause, and the effect merging into the cause is Completion.

Kṛṣṇa offers a way to be in His space of completion. He says, 'Be drowned in Me; you will have no anger, no fear. All actions will thus be without bondage. In this manner, you can be purified and realize Me, pūtā mad-bhavām āgatāḥ (4.10).' He gives the assurance that having followed this path, many people in the past have achieved Realization.

He is not saying, 'If you do this, maybe something good will happen.' He straightaway gives us positive assurance, 'Do it, you will achieve. Many people have done so and have realized Me, bahavo jñāna tapasā (4.10).' Completion directly liberates you from the karmas; completion directly leads you to experience the truth; completion directly makes you experience the reality of life.

Masters are like mirrors reflecting us. If the devotee is praying for wealth, he gets it. If he wants healing for body or mind, he is granted it. To a devotee who says, 'Oh God, I want nothing except knowledge of Your true reality,' the God grants him that. He shows him the way to the ultimate reality.

Here, Kṛṣṇa promises and reaffirms what He has said earlier, that He will take care of the need of every one of His devotee. Only the most compassionate being who cares for all will make this statement. Now it is left to the devotee to have some intelligence as to what to approach the Master for.

Kṛṣṇa explains here why non-attachment is so difficult. It is in our nature to look for success in whatever we do. It is impossible to embark on an activity expecting it to fail. There is nothing wrong in looking for success at the end of an activity. What creates problems is the illogical attachment to that expectation of success. We become so obsessed with what we desire that the expectation consumes us.

What Kṛṣṇa says here shows that our mindset, human nature, has not changed in over five thousand years. Even then they were looking for material success. They were looking for instant results. When they prayed to God they were praying to fulfill their expectations of material success.

All your actions, Kṛṣṇa says, are based on material success, and He says such activities bear instant results in this world, kṣipraṁ hi mānuṣe loke (4.12). Whether you understand it or not, all these prayers and actions do produce instant results. This does not mean whatever you pray for is instantly granted by the God you prayed to. God, fortunately, has far more wisdom than we have. God uses His buddhi, wisdom, to grant what He deems appropriate. However, the result of your actions is instant. The karmaphala is immediate. When religions talk of karma (action) and karmaphala (the fruits or outcome of such action,) they speak in terms of merits and sins, pāpa and puṇya. They tell you that you will go to hell if you accumulate sins, and you will go to heaven if you gain merits. They try to control you through fear and greed of heaven. There is no hell or heaven.

4.16 What is action and what is inaction, even the wise are confused. Let Me explain to you what action is, knowing which you shall be liberated from all ills.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'I have created the four castes depending upon the distribution of the three guṇas or attributes.' Guṇa means 'attribute' or 'quality' that we are born with. It is a reflection of the prārabdha karma, the vāsana, and the mindset with which we are born. There are three basic guṇas: sattva or purity, rajas or activity and tamas or inactivity. People quote this verse whenever they want the support of religion for making the caste system more solid.

They say, 'Kṛṣṇa Himself has sanctioned it' or, 'This system has been given by the Incarnation Himself.' Kṛṣṇa uses the words, 'depending upon the distribution of the three guṇas.' He does not say, 'depending upon birth.' No two persons on this planet can be the same. Every person is unique and possesses a unique ratio of the three guṇas. There are basically four kinds of people; based on the more dominant guṇa in them. He says, 'Based on the guṇa one is born with, I decide his varṇa, his caste.'

The varṇa system was four-fold. Brāhmaṇas were the scholars and priests, intellectually inclined. Kṣatriyas were the soldiers and kings, ambitious and physically strong. Vaiṣyas were the business community with strong commercial acumen. Śudras were the workers, physically able and skillful. Based on their guṇas, their skill sets and not birth, the children in ancient Gurukul were trained into their vocations, their varṇa or caste.

Over time, this system was manipulated. Those who believed that they had a better varṇa, caste, decided to make it a hereditary right. Earlier, the son of a brāhmaṇa could not to be a priest, if he was unsuitable or the son of a kṣatriya to be a warrior if he was inadequate. Kṛṣṇa states very clearly that only the one who transcends these three guṇas can reach His state, can reach the higher levels of consciousness. To reach Kṛṣṇa one has to be a triguṇa rahita, beyond the three guṇas. Then, one becomes a non-doer, a no-caste, no-attribute person. When a desire is fulfilled, it no longer creates ripples in the mind. Desires that get fulfilled are the basic needs one is born with, which are the result of the carry-over vāsanā, the prārabdha karma. We acquire all other desires by comparing ourselves with others. These are wants, not needs. Existence has no way of fulfilling such wants.

When one works out of basic need, he acquires no karma. These possessions born out of our wants can never be fulfilled or enjoyed. Once acquired, we seek the next acquisition. The cycle goes on. Have you ever seen a rich man enjoying his meal in the same manner as a hard working laborer eating his simple home cooked meal? The rich man is more worried about his illnesses than the quality of the food. Only a person who has taken a conscious birth is aware of his prārabdha karma. Only he can extinguish his karma by fulfilling this list of needs. These needs carry an energy of their own that gets them fulfilled. Once fulfilled, they leave no karma trace.

Kṛṣṇa, the ultimate Master, is always conscious and complete. He has no karma, no unfulfilled desires, no incompletion, and no attachment. So it is with every enlightened Master. His so-called desires get fulfilled as they arise. There is no gap between his desire and its fulfillment. There is no trace of that desire after it is fulfilled. The fulfillment is complete. The attachment is zero. Therefore, there is no karma. This is the lesson every Master teaches his disciples. Work from your needs, not from your wants. Act without attachment. You shall attract no karma and you will be liberated.

Action In Inaction And Inaction In Action

4.19 He who is determined and devoid of all desires for sense gratification, he is of perfect knowledge. The sages declare such a person wise whose actions are burnt by the fire of knowledge.

4.20 Having given up all attachment to the results of his action, always satisfied and independent, the wise man does not act, though he is engaged in all kinds of action.

Here, Kṛṣṇa says that the person who sees inaction in action and action in inaction has attained completion.

karmaṇy akarma yaḥ paśyed akarmaṇi ca karma yaḥ | sa buddhimān manuṇyeṣu sa yuktaḥ kṛtsna karma kṛt || 4.18 ||

When you see that it is not the 'I' in you that is doing the activities, but it is the senses following their nature; when you see that it is the mind that is creating the false sense of identification of you with the action, then you have realized; you have attained completion because you are now no longer in the clutches of the mind. It is the mind that makes you attached to something and repulsed by something else. When you are not in the clutches of the mind, you are free. You do actions because the senses by nature have to perform their functions. For example, the eyes see, the ears hear, and the nose smells. Yet, you are free from the bondage of action because you do not have any identification or any emotional attachment to anything. So naturally, you are liberated and you can do actions most beautifully without expecting any particular result. This is what it means to be 'Unclutched.'

By Your Very Nature, You are Unclutched

Being 'Unclutched' is the state where you are free and liberated. If you observe your mind keenly, you will see that you are constantly connecting all your thoughts and creating links in your mind.

For example, the headache that happened ten years ago, five years ago and yesterday are all independent experiences. For easy reference, you categorize all these into 'headache,' just like you file documents in your office. By and by, you start believing all these experiences are connected. When you start believing they are connected you create a shaft.

You connect all painful memories, create a pain shaft and conclude, 'My life is suffering, my life is pain.' Now when you start believing your whole life is suffering, you have created a pain shaft and you are waiting only for painful incidents in your life so that you can elongate that shaft. First understand, whatever you believe is what you create within you and outside you. You will see that manifesting in your life over and over again. That is why Hindu ṛṣis, sages, say that you create what you want. By seeing, you create. You will wait unconsciously for painful incidents to strengthen that belief, that life judgment.

Second thing, whenever you add the painful incidents unconsciously, you will be elongating that shaft, even though you may want to consciously end the pain by breaking it. If you believe your whole life is a shaft of joyful experiences, which we do very rarely, constantly you are in fear about whether the joy will continue. If you believe life is a shaft of painful incidents, you do two things: Unconsciously you gather more and more incidents and strengthen your faith about how your life is painful, and consciously you try to break the pain shaft. If you believe life is a chain of joyful incidents, unconsciously you will be in fear that it will end, and consciously you will try to prolong it. Understand these are two big dramas we are continuously enacting with ourselves.

You forget that you can neither break the shaft nor elongate it because the shaft itself does not exist. The shaft itself is your own imagination. Just try this experiment:

Sit down for ten minutes with a pen and paper. Now, just start jotting down whatever thoughts come to your mind. Please do not edit your thoughts; write them down as they are. Do not judge yourself and do not try to control what comes to your mind. If you try to judge, you are playing a hypocritical game with yourself. Now, read whatever you have written. You can see for yourself how unconnected and illogical your thoughts are. One moment you would think, 'I think I should go to my office tomorrow,' then the next minute, 'No I should just wake up and decide then,' then, 'What should I do about dinner tonight?'

Have you seen how the bubbles rise up in a fish tank? There is a gap between one bubble and the next. But the gap is so small that it looks like a continuous stream. Similarly, there is a gap between one thought and the next thought in your mind. Your thoughts are independent like the bubbles. By their very nature, your thoughts are independent.

For example, if you see a dog in the street, suddenly you remember the pet you used to play with as a child. Then you will remember the teacher, then the place where your teacher used to stay, and so on. The dog and the teacher are not connected in any way, but your mind simply flows. Look a little deeply, you will understand that your thoughts are illogical, independent and unconnected.

When you believe that your mind is logical, you have created the first 'original sin' for yourself. Understand, by your very nature you are unclutched. Every moment you are renouncing the thoughts by your very nature. A new thought can appear only when the old thought has been renounced. But even after renouncing them you try to pick up the thoughts from the dustbin and try to create a shaft with them.

Listen, first understand consciously that you are creating a shaft of pain or a shaft of joy and trying to fight with it, by either trying to elongate it or break it. Second, you don't even have to unclutch yourself from the shaft because the shaft is imaginary. By your very nature, if you stop creating a shaft, you are Unclutched.

Then we will start asking, 'If I unclutch, how will I do my job? How will I take care of my things? Will I not just lie in bed and waste my life?' Ask yourself, why should you not go to work?' The moment you say you will not go to work, it means you have a little hatred towards your job. The moment you get an excuse you want to escape from your job. By saying all these things, you are expressing your anger, your violence against your routine.

That is what Kṛṣṇa means by action, karmaṇi and inaction, akarmaṇi. You cannot be inactive by nature. You will daydream, clinging on to fantasies. You will try to escape from reality by deluding yourself, because your mind is clutching onto a soft and easy dream shaft. When you truly Unclutch, without any attachment to the past and future, you will realize that you are full of energy. You will have to do something. That 'something' will be dictated by your present moment completion, not by fantasies.

What you think of as 'you' is not necessary to run your day-to-day life. This is the basic truth. If you just observe yourself, if somebody is happily independent of us, we can't tolerate it, it is too much. Constantly we need to feel we are needed. That is why we expect people to project their sufferings on us and we too project our sufferings on them, so that we feel important.

What you think of as 'you' is not necessary to run your day-to-day life. People say, 'Constantly I repeat positive affirmations, 'I should stop smoking, I should stop smoking,' but it is not working. All these creative visualizations create more and more trouble. Because in the very words, 'I should stop smoking', the word 'smoking' is contradicting the words 'I should stop.'

You end up empowering the word 'smoking' as much as you are empowering the words 'I should stop. Instead you should create the space of health and say, 'Let me have only healthy habits' or something totally positive without even the word 'smoking' in it. Similarly, if you have a headache, instead of empowering the thought of the headache, just decide to have a glass of water. The moment you decide to have a glass of water, it becomes a fresh thought and the old thought of the headache has to disappear. Once you keep replacing the thoughts, you break free from the headache-based thought patterns and eventually expel the headache from your system itself.

You may ask me, 'How can it be so simple?' It is simple. You are constantly taught that it is not so simple. But soon after doing this, if the thought of the headache comes back, then what do you do? Understand: You are so faithful to the thought of the headache that you forcefully drag it back into your system; you bring back a trashed file. Think of it this way: If it comes back, it can go back again. Why don't you celebrate those moments it left you? Why do you constantly remember the moments it came back?

People say, 'I fail when I try to unclutch.' Ask yourself, 'Why are you connecting your past failure with your present failure?' When you connect all the past failures, you create one more shaft of 'failure'. Just relax and stop connecting and suddenly you will see a deep inner healing, a deep peace happening in you. Suddenly you will see that you have dropped out of the war, the constant running. Just relax. When you drop out of this whole game, suddenly you will realize the whole thing is just a psychodrama.

Unclutch From Your Thoughts

Try this simple meditation:

Just close your eyes and sit. Whatever words are rising in you, just let them rise. Just do not connect them with any other thought, that's all. Just don't create a shaft; simply Unclutch. If you feel bored, or if your mind asks you what to do, just unclutch from that thought as well. Do not even connect with that thought. Just sit, be Unclutched. If your mind connects with a thought, just unclutch. Do not create, maintain or destroy any thought. Try this for a few minutes and you will see the effect for yourself.

Kṛṣṇa says to understand what action is, you need to understand what inaction is. When you unclutch, you are seemingly in inaction or akarma. However, the removal of the various shafts of pain, pleasure, fantasies etc., releases so much energy within you that you are now actively passive. You are at the height of potential energy, ready to release that energy for whatever purpose you decide in that moment. If instead, you are actively daydreaming, caught in pain and pleasures shafts, then you are seemingly active and busy, but totally useless. In fact, you are counterproductively busy, pushing yourself deeper into more suffering.

In the process of Unclutching, you transcend both action and inaction, karmaṇi and akarmaṇi. You successfully destroy the false cognition of the connection between the thoughts and rest in the present moment, the space of completion, the state of no-mind, the state of dropping thoughts. In this unclutched space, you are active and yet not attached to any activity. You are truly in Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

All suffering and pain arises when we associate ourselves with the senses and the mind. The real Self in you is eternal, timeless, never changing. It is like this: When you see the clouds drifting in the clear sky, is the sky actually changing? The sky is like the canvas over which clouds of different forms and shapes drift across, sometimes completely covering the sky behind them, and sometimes drifting apart to reveal the sky behind. Just like this, due to māyā, delusion, it appears as if the Self is being affected by the emotions and the perceptions of the senses. If you see yourself in a clear lake or a mirror, what you see is a reflection of what is being projected, right? Just like that, in the lake of the Self, of the being, whatever quality is projected is what you will see reflected in the lake. Does it mean that the lake has become dirty? The reflection has no reality, no solid existence.

Actually, the Self is permanent. The Self in you, in me, in the person next to you is all the same. When everything is you, what is there to fear? Where is the question of conflict, jealousy, fear or greed? Everything is you. Enjoy this world in its many forms and manifestations. However, enjoy without getting caught in attachment. Our senses are treacherous. They create incompletions, addictions that overwhelm us. The more we have, the less we enjoy, and yet we cannot do without them. True wisdom is to step back from what the senses tell you.

Have you seen a person sell something, say a painting? You can see the seller busy trying to convince people to get the best bargain. But see someone standing, witnessing this whole scene, someone who is neither interested in buying the painting nor in selling it. Only he can completely enjoy the painting.

See, if you have the right ideals, you will reach the truth much faster. We are taught that we are powerless, that we are sinners. But time and again, the Hindu sages have declared, 'We are the children of immortality - amṛtasya putraḥ.' Let us bring integrity to our thinking with life affirmative thoughts rather than continuously repeating negative and self-doubting thoughts to ourselves. The positive thoughts are not mere statements. These are great truths that our sages have experienced, and encourage us to experiment and experience as well. With them come the energy of possibility and power of the experience to make it our reality.

When we are blissful and complete within ourselves, we would never see anything disturbing outside. That is what Kṛṣṇa says here: Be involved completely in the action yet be detached, independent and satisfied within. Then you can function spontaneously, flowing in tune with Existence. Life then becomes a celebration.

Every single thing you do is an act of joy and an expression of the loving energy in you. Your joy is no longer dependent on what society says or thinks about you, because you are complete in yourself.

The sage Aṣtavakra says beautifully, 'Bondage is when the mind is tangled in one of the senses and liberation is when the mind is not tangled in any of the senses. When there is no 'me,' that is liberation, and when there is 'me' there is bondage. Consider this carefully and don't hold on to anything or reject anything.'

Who is in equanimity both in success and failure, such a person though doing action, is never affected.

4.25 Some yogis worship the gods by offering various sacrifices to them, while others worship by offering sacrifices in the fire of the Supreme.

A sense of ownership over possessions or your body is the same thing. What are your possessions? You came with nothing at all. Can you claim that you were born with anything that is your own property? In the same way, you are going to leave this world empty-handed. Can you say that all your possessions will go with you when you leave this body? No!

This very prāṇa, the life breath going inside your body is not your property. It is the property of Existence. Your very life is a sheer gift to you from Existence. When you realize this, you will immediately see that all your fears and worries and greed are so baseless. You are running behind something, thinking it is yours, but of what relevance is it really? When your very life is a gift to you, how can you claim that anything else is your possession?

Real knowledge comes with experience, not through words, not just by talking about it. The moment you internalize any single dimension of truth and internalize it authentically, truthfully, it can do wonders for you. Vivekananda says beautifully, 'Even if you memorize all the books in all the libraries of this world, it will not help you in any way other than increasing your ego. Instead of having a whole library in your head, just realize five concepts in your heart.'

Four Great Powers of Your Space

Create the space of completion. Complete with your patterns. Bring integrity into every step. Nothing else is going to help you. There is no shortcut; this is the shortest cut. Complete and create the space of integrity and authenticity; they have no replacement. Whether you live a spiritual life or a regular life, integrity and authenticity form the basis for life.

The space you carry, the attitude, the intention, and the thoughts behind the action actually decide the energy behind the action. The power of space and thought is immense. In fact, some of the latest research shows how our DNA can be influenced and reprogrammed by words and frequencies. When a group of people focus their thoughts on something similar, like chanting peaceful, healing Hindu mantras every morning, just listening to these words coming out of completion, you will suddenly see that those very words change your inner space. The collective declarations to bless the world - lokāsamastā sukhinobhavantū - let the whole world be prosperous, can change your entire inner space. That is the power of completion.

All the so-called natural calamities are nothing but the effects of global negative thoughts born out of collective incompletions. Your space, your thoughts and energy directly affect your body, your cell structure, your decisions, your capacity to fulfill your decisions and outer world incidents, even accidents. You create a pattern that creates and attracts similar incidents to you.

If you can complete with your greed and fear patterns, which is what we have normally, and create the space of bliss or ānanda, then your energy flow will start brimming and your thoughts will be authentic, your words will be integrated and you will be more in the space of completion. When you do this, you have every power to control outer world incidents because you and Existence have a very deep connection at the energy level. When you are blissful, when the space you carry is not one of worry, fear and greed but one that is in the present, always complete and joyful, you will automatically attract all good things to yourself.

When you practice Integrity with integrity, Authenticity with authenticity, Responsibility with responsibility, and Enriching with enriching, you will simply have the four great powers - the power of words or vāk siddhi, the power of thinking or mano siddhi, the power of feeling or prema siddhi, and the power of living or ātma siddhi.

When you unlock the power of words, you will have the spontaneous intelligence to use the right and most effective words towards yourself and others. The decision of authenticity has to come from your very soul. Your soul has to awaken. Till then, you may be practicing a little authenticity in your yoga, or in your waking hours. But that is not completely authentic. When your soul wakes up, only then do you become a completely authentic soul. When you start practicing authenticity, your soul wakes up. Your being wakes up. When you discover the power of thinking, you will be able to focus on your thoughts to achieve success in your job, relationships, education, finances and life itself.

See, when you are so integrated with your words, your words just move the world. When you are completely authentic, your soul can simply express anything because energy and matter both listen to your soul. Matter listens to energy.

Authenticity is nothing but remembering that all powers are at your disposal. You can just possess and express any power you want. With responsibility, the power of feeling, you will learn to express these powers. The power of feeling teaches how to launch yourself to the next level of life through empowered responsibility. And with enriching, you will truly be enjoying the power of living when you realize that the greatest rewards come when you live your life for others.

Your Inner Space is Connected to The Universe

All our minds are not individually separated pieces of the Universe. They are all one and the same. Not only interlinked, our minds directly affect each other. This is what is the 'collective consciousness.' Though each one is independent in his consciousness, when one is conscious of one's true nature, one feels that one is part of the whole Universe. Each one's thoughts straightaway affect the others around. Not only are those staying around you touched by your thoughts, everyone who is living on the planet is touched by your thoughts.

Understand, the inner space you carry is such a powerful space. It is hiranyagarbha, the space where the planets get created. Your inner space is so powerful; worlds can be created or destroyed by it. You may be an individual, but your inner space is not individual; it is well-connected with the whole Universe. So, anything you decide in your inner space becomes a reality in the Cosmos, reality in life.

The next truth: Not only at the mental level are you connected; even at the deeper conscious level you are connected to every other being. Your body is not just one body. Actually, there are seven layers or bodies. The first layer is the physical body.

The second is the pranic body. There are seven such energy layers or bodies. These energy layers can be represented as concentric circles, with the physical layer as the outermost circle and the seventh layer and the nirvanic body as the innermost layer.

At the physical layer, you, God and 'I' can be represented as three different points in the outermost concentric circle. At the physical level, the distance between these three is more. At the pranic level, the distance is reduced. If you come down deeper, to the mental level, the distance between you and I is still reduced and so is the distance between you, God and I. When you go deeper and deeper, these three entities finally merge into one at the innermost nirvanic layer, the ultimate consciousness. At the deepest point of all these layers, God, you and 'I' are one. There is no distance between the three.

Once you become aware and realize that you are a part of the collective consciousness, that you don't have an individual identity; you realize that you do not have a separate ego. You think you own your individual identity. In Existence, there is no such thing as a separate individual identity. Once you know this truth, you go beyond pain, suffering, depression and diseases. As long as you are individually conscious, you will be continuously suffering. Why do you think you are continuously resisting Nature? Whatever Nature offers, you resist.

You think you are different from Existence. When you are in tune and become a part of the collective consciousness, Nature is your friend and it will protect you. As long as you think you are an individual consciousness different from Nature, it will protest. There's one very simple thing you can practice now. If you are feeling cold, just relax and witness the area where you are feeling cold. In that area, don't resist the atmosphere, don't resist Nature. Just say to yourself, 'I am not going to resist Nature. Let me relax and be complete.' Consciously decide this. With this you will see the body relaxing and the idea of cold disappearing from that part. You become completely comfortable.

Wherever you want to achieve success, in a social or in an economic context, only when you feel complete with the whole group and fall in tune with the collective consciousness will you be able to achieve what you want. As long as you feel you are an individual, be very clear that you will be resisted and you will be resisting. Whether it is at home or at work, this will happen. If you disappear into the collective consciousness, you will be protected and taken care of. Not only will you attain social and economic success, but you will also experience a deep feeling of completion.

Even in the physical layer if you think you are separate, you will invite diseases. If you think you are separate in the mental layer, you will be sowing seeds of violence. With collective consciousness you unify, but with individual consciousness you cut things into pieces. If you think you are an individual at the soul level, there is no possibility for any spiritual growth. Even at the physical level, you are not an individual. Your body and the body of the sun are directly connected. Any small change in the body of the sun can make changes in your body. Any small change in your body can change the body of the moon. Even if you are not able to relate to this logically, it is true. Even in the mental layer, you are not alone. Any thought put in anyone else's head comes and touches you and any thought created in your mind goes and touches someone else. It is like ripples created in a lake. If you are creating a strong wave, you will be creating an impression with your thought. You will be leading and inspiring others with your thought. If your thoughts are not solid enough, other waves will impress you. When you bring complete integrity into your thinking, the words you utter to yourself and to others will be experienced as your very life. That is the power of words.

At the spiritual level, the moment you understand you are deeply connected to the whole Universe, not only do you start experiencing bliss, but you also start really living in the space of oneness and opening many dimensions of your being. See, just with this body you can think so much, you can enrich and enjoy yourself and others so much. If you disappear into the collective consciousness, you will experience so many dimensions, so many possibilities, you cannot imagine it.

During the Hindu festival of Holi (festival of colors)—Rās Pūrnima, Radhā and the gopīs, experienced the collective consciousness of Kṛṣṇa. This is referred to as rās līlā, when Kṛṣṇa gave them the experience of collective consciousness. Some people have the wrong idea of this rās līlā and think it signifies Kṛṣṇa having relationships with women. Kṛṣṇa was just ten years old then. What actually happened is that He gave the experience of collective consciousness to the whole group of gopikās and Radhā. This collective consciousness is God.

The Essence of Life is 'Enriching'

We are all taught from childhood that there is a purpose to life. We are guided to work towards goals in life, which are almost always material goals. We are expected to live up to the expectations of our parents, later our teachers, much later our spouses and finally our children.

There is no purpose to life, except to live in completion and to enrich others and yourself with completion. The purpose of life is to enrich life with completion. Life is for Enriching. Enriching is Life. How can we enrich and enjoy life if we get saddled with a bagful of goals that bind us down to duties and obligations? We are so deluded by incompletion and stressed out by all that is expected of us that we have no time to enrich ourselves and enjoy what we are doing so we have no energy to enrich others for their expansion.

Life is not about purpose or goals. Life is not lifestyle. Life is not about impressing people with how rich, clever, beautiful or skilled you are. Life is about enjoying the journey. It is not about the stressful incompletion of looking for the destination. When the path is right, when you enjoy the path, the destination is always right; it will always enrich you and others.

Life is all about increasing your capability to infuse the Truth in you and others. That is all is the essence of life on planet Earth. The essence of life in the Universe is neither money nor infrastructure development, or just some social power or relationships. The essence of human life is expanding your ability to infuse the great spiritual truths in you; the ability to enrich yourself and enrich others. Only the person who realizes the purposelessness of life can have the strength to enrich himself and others, only he can go beyond duality and surpass envy, only he can be satisfied in any action with whatever profit comes from that action of its own accord, what Kṛṣṇa calls yadṛcchā lābha santuṣṭo dvandvātīto vimatsaraḥ (4.22).

Understand: Life has no purpose but it has a meaning. Living in completion and enriching others with completion is the meaning of life. You need to know this truth: if you are enriching with a vested interest, you will give up on people. Don't have any vested interest. All the time, we are taught that life has a goal, a purpose, and we run behind various goals hoping to achieve satisfaction in life. But life has no goal; the very life, the very path itself is the goal. When you realize this, you relax into the space of completion, you expand in your ability to infuse the great spiritual truths, enriching yourself and others with them, and you are unaffected by success or failure, although doing actions, as Kṛṣṇa says beautifully, 'samaḥ siddhāv asiddhau ca kṛtvāpi na nibadhyate (4.22).'

Kṛṣṇa says here, 'One who works for the sake of enriching sacrifice, merges into the knowledge - yajñāyācarataḥ karma samagraṁ pravilīyate (4.23).' Enrich just for the sake of enriching. All these parasite patterns of jealousy and envy come when you think life has a goal and somebody else has been given something more than you to reach the goal. When you understand that you are unique and Existence has equipped you with all that you need to fulfill all your desires, you will actually be able to live life in completion and work sincerely for the sake of enriching. Otherwise, you will only be running behind some goal or the other. You will envy others who you think are closer to that goal towards which you are running. You will be caught in this roller coaster of success and failure.

If you travel in the line of external ego, ahaṁkarā or the path of material success in the outer world, at least at one point you will understand the futility of your pursuit and reclaim your space of completion. You will experience depression of success. But the person who travels in the line of internal ego, mamakāra or the line of intellect, not only does he never achieve, he will not even be able to understand that he cannot achieve. The intellect, the ego becomes so sharp, so subtle; it will bring false claims and false techniques to say that he has achieved it. Those false claims are only these false flowers, the false witnesses.

The ultimate knowledge can be reached only by surrendering to completion, to the four tattvas of integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching, not through intellect or wealth. The being which has surrendered to the four tattvas is brahmaṇyam bahuputratām - the favorite inheritor of the Cosmos. Then you are not caught in running behind the senses, behind the inner world or the outer world.

Know Sacrifice and Be Purified

4.27 One who is interested in knowledge offers all the actions due to the senses, including the action of taking in the life breath into the fire of yoga, and is engaged in the yoga of equanimity of the mind.

4.28 There is the sacrifice of material wealth, sacrifice through penance, sacrifice through yoga and other sacrifices, while there is sacrifice through self-study and through strict vows.

4.29 There are others who sacrifice the life energy in the form of incoming breath and outgoing breath, thus checking the movement of the incoming and outgoing breaths and controlling the breath.

4.30 There are others who sacrifice through controlled eating and offering the outgoing breath, life energy. All these people know the meaning of sacrifice and are purified of sin or karma.

नायं लोकोऽस्त्ययज्ञस्य कुतोऽन्यः कुरुसत्तम ॥ ४-३१॥
yajñaśiṣṭāmṛtabhujo yānti brahma sanātanam
nāyaṃ loko'styayajñasya kuto'nyaḥ kurusattama || 4.31 ||

4.31 Having tasted the nectar of the results of such sacrifices, they go to the supreme eternal consciousness. This world is not for those who have not sacrificed. How can the other be, Arjuna?

evaṃ bahuvidhā yajñā vitatā brahmaṇo mukhe
karmajānviddhi tānsarvānevaṃ jñātvā vimokṣyase || 4.32 ||

4.32 Thus, there are many kinds of sacrifices born of work mentioned in the Vedas. Knowing these, one will be liberated.

In all these verses, Kṛṣṇa talks about various types of sacrifices. 'Sacrifice' is not just the act of giving, but the attitude of giving. Otherwise, you may do everything, following all rituals according to the scriptures, but you will miss out on the real intent for which the act had to be done.

There is a beautiful verse in the Mahābharat that says, 'A guest comes with all the gods. If the guest is honored, so are the gods; if he goes away disappointed, the gods are disappointed too.' That is why in Sanskrit, we say, 'atithi devo bhava', the guest is God. 'Tithi' means date and the prefix 'a' negates it. Therefore, one who arrives unexpectedly without a prior appointment is the atithi or guest. When somebody comes unexpectedly also, enriching and serving him is the real welcoming attitude. The word used for ritual giving in Sanskrit is 'dāna', which means sharing, imparting.

The true meaning of sacrifice lies in the meaning with which it is done. Look at the trees. They live for the welfare of others, themselves facing the stormy winds, heat and snow, all the while protecting us from them. They never turn away anyone coming to them, even on the man who is coming to hurt them. All their parts, leaves, flowers, fruits, roots, bark, wood and fragrance, are useful to enrich others.

When you give away something you cannot afford to give, it is a true enriching sacrifice. When you give away something you can afford to give, then it is not a true enriching sacrifice. A wealthy man giving away alms is not sacrificing anything. He may be doing a good deed but not more than that.

Kṛṣṇa mentions many forms of sacrifice here. He talks of sacrifices of material wealth, yoga and penance - a combination of material, physical, mental and spiritual sacrifices. When a person does these at some cost and pain to himself, they would be genuine sacrifices. Otherwise they would merely be meaningless rituals.

However, even that which is given away by someone who can afford what he is giving, if done with good intentions of enriching, would result in gains to that person. His very intention to enrich will alter his mindset and liberate him. A person who does not believe in sharing his wealth will not only suffer in future births as a result of his mental makeup, but he will also be unable to enjoy his own wealth in his present birth.

When one sacrifices whatever is dear and whatever is difficult to give away, he enters a completely different plane of sacrifice, one that liberates the person. Such a person enters a plane of true non-attachment, leading to liberation.

You Are No Sinner

śreyāndravyamayādyajñājjñānayajñaḥ parantapa

4.33 O Parantapa (conqueror of foes), the sacrifice of wisdom is superior to the sacrifice of material wealth. After all, all activities totally end in wisdom.

4.34 Understand these truths by approaching a spiritual master, by asking him your questions, by offering service. The enlightened person can initiate you into wisdom because he has seen the truth.

यज्ज्ञात्वा न पुनर्मोहमेवं यास्यसि पाण्डव ।

4.35 O Pāṇḍava, knowing this you will never suffer from desire or illusion, you will know that all living beings are in the Supreme, in Me.

sarvaṃ jñānaplavenaiva vṛjinaṃ santariṣyasi || 4.36 ||

4.36 Even if you are the most sinful of all sinners, you will certainly cross completely the ocean of miseries with the boat of knowledge.

Kṛṣṇa advises the seeker to sacrifice one's knowledge and one's intellect at His feet, at the feet of the Master, to experience the ultimate Truth. Beautifully He says, 'tad viddhi praṇipātena paripraśnena sevayā (4.34).' A Master is one who has experienced the truth and who can simply transfer his experience of truth to you. He communes with you. A teacher, on the other hand, is one who imparts knowledge through communication.

In Sanskrit, there are three beautiful words to describe this. You are born in the bhū garbha, the womb of the mother; this signifies your physical birth. The teacher with his love and teachings gives birth to you in the hrid garbha, the womb of the heart. The master gives birth to a completely new you, a transformed being in the jñāna garbha, the womb of knowledge. You then become re-born, dvijā.

Surrender Transforms

Understand, Masters have no vested interest for themselves; they have no karma to exhaust. They descend on this planet Earth out of sheer love and compassion for humanity. Just like a low-pressure region attracts winds, a depression created in the world attracts the formless energy of Existence. This energy is what is known in different forms like Kṛṣṇa, Rāma, Buddha etc.

Actually, the Master lives in three dimensions of energies: the body, His teachings and His mission. Masters come to dispel the ignorance of seekers, to show them the path. Only one third of the Master's energy is in the physical body. The other third is in the teachings and another third is in the mission.

Nithyananda is nitya-dhyāna-ānanda, all in one. Nithya, the Master in the body as Nithyananda, dhyāna, His teaching and message of meditation and ānanda, His mission of bringing forth the fountain of bliss that is lying latent in you, all the three together constitute the energy called Nithyananda.

It is easy to do the first step, which is to follow the Master in his physical form because Masters are so attractive by nature and they do not expect anything in return. The next level is to follow the dharma, teachings of the Master. This is slightly more difficult because you have to not only listen to His teachings but you also have to do something; you have to live his teachings, practice them. Though it is only for your own growth, your laziness (tamas) causes you to not do this.

The final level is where you infuse your life with the truth that life is for others. Life is for Enriching. You give your life to the sanga, mission and become the cause of spreading the Master's teachings. This is the most difficult, since it requires from you the ultimate commitment for life.

When you surrender to the Master, you surrender to His mission, sanga and to His teachings, dharma as well. When you surrender at the physical level, you surrender your comforts to the Master like desires for luxury, wealth, food or sleep to imbibe and spread his teachings and mission. It is actually not sacrifice as typically understood because you will feel from your very being that this is what you really want to do. When you take up the responsibility of the mission, you will realize that what seemed to you as a load is actually a blissful experience. How can the mission of the Master give anything other than pure bliss? The moment you surrender to the Master and His mission and you stand up taking responsibility, you will find that the divine energy simply flows through you and you just flow effortlessly and express yourself most gracefully and powerfully.

All you need to do is to be stable and available, and the divine energy will make you able. On the mental level, you surrender your intellect, your mental pursuits, your incompletions to serve the Master and the mission. You become like a liquid, flowing into the shapes and moulds created by the Master. The Master knows the best way in which you can grow. He creates the moulds for each of you according to your needs and abilities. Trust him, drop your solid ego and become fluid so you can fill in the spaces he creates for you. At the being level, when your very being surrenders to the Master, your being clearly recognizes the call of the Master. You become a part of the Master. You no longer carry any separate identity. This process of transformation automatically happens when you surrender to the Master, His teachings and his mission.

The water is converted into formless steam. Like steam, you now explode in all directions. There are no limitations because all limitations exist only in the mind. You now transcend the mind and express your peak potential. The Master tirelessly and compassionately pushes you in different ways so you can also experience and be in the same state of eternal bliss as he is. The only emotion that a Master knows is love.

The Vedas also clearly declare that a living Master is needed. You may have access to all the books, the recorded teachings of all the great masters. But, you have only the words; where is the body language? For example, yoga as it is taught now has been reduced to just a form of physical exercise. But physical health is just one of its benefits. Yoga as taught by Patañjali is a means to enlightenment. But the body language of Patañjali no longer exists; only his words exist. You need a living Master who is in the same consciousness as Patañjali to transmit the essence and experience of the words.

A beautiful verse in the Guru Gītā says, 'The Guru just wipes off with the big toe of his left foot your fate which Brahma has written on your forehead.' The Master can change your very destiny and take you to a new dimension. An astrologer may be able to predict your future, but a Master can simply recreate your future. He is one with Existence, which is operating this whole Universe. Can the energy which runs the planets and stars not have the power to handle your life?

It is very difficult to relate with a living Master. You see, it is very easy to relate with dead masters. You can project all your imaginations about God on him. When Kṛṣṇa promises that He descends again and again - sambhavāmi yuge yuge - what He means is the Kṛṣṇa energy will descend. People think Kṛṣṇa will come down in the same form with the yellow clothes, the flute and the two peacock feathers. Again and again, Kṛṣṇa happens on planet Earth, but our incompletions are so cunning, they manage in making us miss Him in any form. We miss all the living Masters. It is easy to fool yourself, escaping from a living Master and just worshipping a Master who has left the body. You escape all the possibilities of transformation.

You can just say, 'Amayaṁ anahaṃkāraṁ arāgaṁ amadaṁ tatha…' 'I offer my nonattachment to you', 'I offer my ego to you.' You can say that to an idol and that idol will be just standing. But, if you tell a living Master that, He will simply catch your neck and say, 'Hey! Where is your non-attachment? Give it. Where is your ego? Surrender it!' With the living Master, he will be constantly working on you, to cut your ego and to show you your true Self. But the ego is afraid to die at the Master's hands, so you try to escape.

Just being open to the Master's energy can get rid you of the biggest cancer in you, your ego. When you realize the truth that you too are one with the Universe, there is nothing more to desire; nothing to be attached to. There is no longer any differentiation between who you are and what the Universe is. Māyā, the illusion of that separation, disappears. That is why the Master is called Guru, one who leads you from 'gu', which is darkness, to 'ru', that is light; one who leads you from ignorance to bliss.

A Master does not differentiate between good and bad. He does not care if what you do is considered meritorious by society or sinful. Here, Kṛṣṇa says beautifully, 'Even if you are the most sinful of all sinners- sarvebhyaḥ pāpa-kṛt-tamaḥ, you will certainly completely cross the ocean of miseries with the boat of knowledge sarvam jñāna-plavenaiva vṛjinaṁ santariṣyasi (4.36).'

At the spiritual level, the concept of sin does not exist. It is a creation of man-made institutions, of societal and political organizations to control others through fear. When you have the true knowledge, the intelligence of why you are doing what you are doing, the very knowledge will make the action divine, the act will no longer be just a ritual but a means to reach the Ultimate. Automatically, you will cross the ocean of miseries because misery itself is a result of ignorance of your true self. When 'spirit' is added to a 'ritual', it becomes 'spirituality'.

Self-Doubt Destroys

4.38 Truly, in this world, there is nothing as pure as wisdom. One who has matured to know this enjoys in himself in due course of time.

4.39 A person with śraddha (courageous authenticity) achieves wisdom and has control over the senses. Achieving wisdom, without delay, he attains supreme peace.

4.40 Those who have no wisdom and authenticity, who always have doubts, are destroyed. There is no happiness for the ones who doubt the self, either in this world or the next.

tasmādajñānasambhūtaṃ hṛtsthaṃ jñānāsinātmanaḥ
chittvainaṃ saṃśayaṃ yogamātiṣṭhottiṣṭha bhārata || 4.42 ||

4.42 O descendant of Bhārata, therefore, stand up, be established in yoga. Armed with the sword of knowledge, cut the doubt born of ignorance that exists in your heart.

It is only when you drop the mind, drop your self-doubts, it is only when you stop connecting your thoughts to form a shaft, that you really start 'seeing'. Your ego stops interfering with the truth of what you see. It stops filtering and adding tones to what your senses experience. Your baggage of embedded memories, your saṁskāras, dissolve, and the new 'you' is born. All your actions then arise out of intuition from the super conscious state, the state of truth, where no mind can exist.

Śraddha Enriches you with Knowledge

In the next verse, Kṛṣṇa uses the word 'śraddha' again, 'śraddhāvān labhate jñānaṁ - the one established in authenticity is enriched with knowledge.'

Actually, śraddha means faith plus the courage of authenticity to live to your highest possibility; the courage to be established in the peak of your capability. Understand, continuously committing with words that express your maximum peak capacity, as per your understanding and as per others' understanding is what is referred to as śraddha, authenticity.

Understand, authenticity means stretching, stretching, and stretching. Go on stretching, that is Life. Go on stretching without fear, and without giving up on yourself. Do anything to honor and fulfill your words. Stretch yourself. Let all the powers inside you be unleased. Kṛṣṇa declares the power of authenticity here, 'śraddhāvān labhate jñānaṁ (4.39).' Only the authentic one is enriched with knowledge. When you have the knowledge and the courage of authenticity to follow and live the teachings, then you can achieve the ultimate knowledge, the knowledge of enlightenment. Of all religious and spiritual doctrines, it is only the scriptures of the Sanātana-dharma, the eternal path of righteousness, as the Hindu philosophy is called, that allow themselves to be updated. The Vedas and the Upaniṣads, which we believe are the voices of Nature, are not rules and regulations. They are truths to be understood and followed only in awareness. There are no punishments if one does not follow them, nor is one condemned as a sinner if one doesn't follow them.

This is the greatness and pristine beauty of sanātana-dharma, the eternal path of living. We are the most powerful, most sophisticated, most intelligent, most cutting-edge presentation of the Truth left with the possibility to evolve more and more, open for the possibility of being updated. Nothing was sacred just because it was uttered. All that we follow blindly today as traditions came through societal interpretation. It is for us to sift through these truths with conscious awareness.

Once tested, proven, accepted and intranalysed, we need to have the courage of authenticity to practice these truths. Mere knowledge is insufficient. That is what śraddha is about. With śraddha, faith combined with courage of authenticity, you make the effort to constantly stretch and align yourself to the peak capability of what you feel as you, what you project as you, and what others' perceive as you. This dawns the ultimate knowledge in you.

Completing Self-doubt in Any Field is Education

In the next few verses, Kṛṣṇa says that there is no happiness for those who always have self-doubts and who have no knowledge and authenticity. He uses the word 'always.' He does not say that from the beginning itself you should not have any doubts. Having doubts is natural; as long as you have the mind, you will have doubts. But you can go beyond it by completing with your self-doubts.

Kṛṣṇa warns, 'The one without the wisdom and without authenticity, who always has doubts, is destroyed. There is no happiness for the one who doubts the Self, either in this world or the next.' Self-doubt destroys you—saṁśayātmā vinaśyati and the one who has the self-doubt is never happy anywhere - na sukhaṁ śaṁsayātmanaḥ (4.40).

First, we need to understand what self-doubt is. What is the root of this self- doubt? In your life, when the first root incident happens, you make your inner image, you project the outer image, and you create the life image to protect yourself for survival reason. For example, at the age of three or four, you run around and play in the rain. Your mother sees you and strongly pulls you into the house and gives you a slap saying, 'Don't go out in the rain! You will catch a cold! Your health will be spoiled!' She screams at you. For a child, getting slapped, being pulled inside the house and locked up is too much. The child will not understand that it is only a slap. The child will literally feel he is going to die. At that moment, the child will create the inner mage, mamakāra: 'I am helpless.' He will create the outer image, ahaṁkāra: 'I am powerful,' because he cannot survive with the idea, 'I am helpless in the society. I am helpless in life.' So, naturally, he will create a compensating outer image, 'I am powerful,' and he will create the life's image or svānyakāra, the image about his mother and life, that life is cruel.

So, when this root pattern is formed, you start living and you naturally project your pseudo outer image: 'I am powerful.' If you are not able to convince others with the pseudo outer image, it is good for you. But if you convince them with the pseudo outer image, when you come back to your private space like your bedroom, you will start thinking, 'Oh God! I made every one believe my outer image as the truth, but my inner image is different from my outer image!' So, this clash is self-doubt. This clash is what Kṛṣṇa calls as saṁśayātmā.

If root pattern is the root of a tree, lust patterns are the parasites of the tree, every day suffering and powerlessness are the leaves of the tree, self-doubt is the fragrance of the tree. So, please understand, when you convince others with your strong outer image, and your inner image starts questioning you; your inner image questioning you is self-doubt. That is where the self- confusion through these answers; he doesn't know these are much deeper doubts that need to be cleared through the experience of the Truth.

That is why Kṛṣṇa has to give more than 700 verses to first convince Arjuna that he does not know. When Arjuna finally gives up saying 'I don't know' then Kṛṣṇa reveals Himself. He reveals the truth and makes Arjuna experience it because that is the only way he will realize the Truth. If you say, 'Let my questions be answered,' you want only intellectual answers. But Devi in Shiva Sutras says, 'Let my doubts be cleared, whether you give words or energy or techniques, I am not bothered, but let me be free and complete from doubts.' When questions become a quest, you start speaking in this language. When the urge becomes urgent, you start speaking in this language. This shows the deep surrender of Devi.

A deep passive waiting without knowing what is going to happen is passive surrender. That is total surrender. Actually, the moment you decide 'I will wait forever,' things will simply start happening for you. As long as you are in a hurry and agitated, you stop things from happening in you. It is like trying your best to make the lotus bloom. You open out the petals by hand. Will it be a flower?

A lotus can be called a lotus only when it blossoms by itself. Give it a little space and time. The moment you decide to wait, things will simply start happening and you don't have to wait anymore. You only have to wait till you decide to wait. Just allow the Master to do the surgery and give you back your true Self, and automatically you will drop what you are not.

Here, Kṛṣṇa refers to the stages in the Master-disciple relationship. There are many levels.

The first level is purely intellectual, doubt-based. 'Doubt-based' refers to the negative self-doubts, which are purely intellectual. It is like you are telling yourself on seeing the Master, 'What is he going to do? Let us see. How is he able to mobilize such a big crowd at such a young age? He seems hardly thirty. What is going on here?'

The next step is intelligence; from intellect to intelligence. You tell yourself, 'Why not attend this program and see what he is really doing?' By this time, it has changed from, 'What is he doing!' to 'Oh, I think He means something. But I neither believe nor disbelieve Him. Ok, let us check it out.' The intellect is becoming intelligence. You are giving a little space for the Master.

Then, if you continue to start looking in, first from intellect to intelligence, then from intelligence to intelligence with emotion, like 60% intelligence, 40% emotion, that is the time you will feel like a friend towards the Master. After that, it becomes 60% emotion and 40% intelligence. That is the time you will feel like the Master is like an elder, like a father or mother or lord or teacher. You feel respectful towards him. And then, the relationship becomes pure emotion. You will feel a deep connection like a mother and son.

Then, after that, it is neither emotion nor intellect nor intelligence. It is a being-level relationship. It is the deep connection of a beloved, the madhura bhāva.

And suddenly, you will see, he is not even the beloved, he is beyond the beloved. You start experiencing the mahā bhāva, the Guru-disciple experience, experiencing yourself as the Master. That is 'Tat Tvam Asi.' Tat Tvam Asi means That art thou. It means you are the Master.

First it is just intellect, where you have self-doubts. But you have to go beyond that. If you are stuck in this level of self-doubts, naturally you will suffer with misery, with self-hatred and self-denial. Then, the next level is intelligence, then emotion, then pure emotion, then emotional and being level feeling connection, then pure being level connection, and then all these and something more. When you go beyond doubts and faith, into the realization of the formless energy that is you, then you find yourself.

ॐ तत्सदिति श्रीमद्भगवद्गीतासूपनिषत्सु ब्रह्मविद्यायां योगशास्त्रे श्रीकृष्णार्जुनसंवादे ज्ञानकर्मसंन्यासयोगो नाम चतुर्थोऽध्यायः ॥ ४॥

Thus ends the fourth chapter named Jñānakarmasannyāsa Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Action In Knowledge And Renunciation,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Sannyāsa Yogaḥ

If we look closely at our lifestyle, what we accept as normal is actually chaotic and crazy. But we have been conditioned with it since childhood so we are not even aware of this. From an early age we are taught certain beliefs and habits that cut deep grooves in our mind. For the rest of our lives we follow these patterns of thinking.

Even when we think we are breaking the routine and doing things creatively and rationally, it is just an illusion of our mind. We are still driven by our unconscious mind. These engraved memories or root thought patterns stored in the deep unconscious mind make decisions on our behalf, even though we are completely unaware of it. What we may think of as an intuitive decision is actually an instinctive decision that arises from our unconscious.

Understand the difference between intuition and instinct. Instinct is the unconscious. It is what drives animals. It is the deeply grooved root patterns that are encoded as bio-memories in the genes and DNA. Since the unconscious brain acts much faster than the conscious brain, the instinctive action of the unconscious is of crucial value to our survival.

Intuition is a super conscious state of the mind. In any field when you allow your peak possibility without self-doubt, when you complete with your self-doubt, your logic gets so refined that it becomes intuition. Understand, in any field if your logic is refined, it becomes intuition. In any field if you allow your Kuṇḍalini (potential energy) to express itself to its peak possibility without self-doubt, in that field you become a leader. Take the example of self-transformation. Understand, you can allow your potential energy to flow in the direction of enlightening you if you complete with the self-doubt, 'Will I ever be enlightened? Can I ever be enlightened?' If you are young, you think, 'I am too young for enlightenment.' If you are old, you think, 'I am too old for enlightenment.'

By Nature You Are Multi-dimensional

Mostly, you are caught in the inadequate cognition of your unconscious mind, in your root patterns, believing that you can do only one thing at a time. You have sold yourself into the bondage of believing you are one dimensional. By nature we are multi-dimensional. By nature we are intuitive. By nature we are enlightened. By nature, God built you with the power of words, power of thinking, power of feeling and power of living. Your inbuilt innate nature is expressing these great inner powers. That is why you feel so fulfilled whenever you are in integrity. That is why you feel so complete when you enrich others. That is why you feel so blissful when you cause others' reality. We can live a beautiful life. All that we lack is the awareness of our potential and all possibilities of our life.

See, the possibility of human life is what we call Kuṇḍalini energy. There are multiple possibilities in you. You are multi-dimensional. It is like a set-top box where you have the possibility of 170 channels, but the channel you watch is up to you. Kuṇḍalini is your possibility. Letting your possibility happen in you, trusting your possibility without self-doubt, responding to your possibility without self-doubt is Kuṇḍalini energy.

Please understand, each human being allows himself to be expressed without self-doubt in at least one dimension. Even if you think you are a useless fellow, to be useless in that dimension, you allow your possibility without self-doubt.

Somebody allows their possibility, without self-doubt, in the field of cooking. He may be useless in all other fields but in cooking, he has no self-doubt. He knows that he will be able to cook any dish he sees. Every person allows and expresses his peak possibility in at least one field without self-doubt. It is not that you don't express your possibility in any field at all. If that were true, you wouldn't be alive. Even to be alive, you have to allow the Kuṇḍalini, the potential energy to breathe through you at least in one field.

Helping you realize your possibility and supporting you to complete with your self-doubt is Kuṇḍalini Awakening.

In the verses that follow and in the rest of the Gītā, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the Master of all possibilities enriches us on how to break away from our bondages and become multi-dimensional to realize our peak possibility, and to express the powers of our possibilities.

Constantly turning many impossibilities into possibilities by playing that within human laws, rules and regulations is the job of an Incarnation. Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa, who is the possibility of all Incarnations, teaches us how to reach our true state. This is what the word samādhi means - to go back to our true nature.

Throughout the Gītā, Kṛṣṇa talks about yoga. Each chapter refers to one type of yoga or another. Yoga is the same as samādhi. Yoga means 'uniting'. It means uniting with our true nature. When we unite with our true Self, we become multi-dimensional, we become the space of possibilities. We can be material and spiritual. There are no constraints and no limitations. We are free. We had wealthy kings like Janaka, who were realized souls. Material wealth does not limit anyone from being spiritual. It is only the attachment to wealth through greed and the fear of losing wealth that stops one from being free.

Action Or Renunciation

Arjuna says:

5.1 Oh Kṛṣṇa, you asked me to renounce work first and then you asked me to work with devotion. Will you now please tell me, one way or the other, which of the two will work for me?

श्रीभगवानुवाच ।
संन्यासः कर्मयोगश्च निःश्रेयसकरावुभौ ।

śrībhagavānuvāca
saṃnyāsaḥ karmayogaśca niḥśreyasakarāvubhau
tayostu karmasaṃnyāsātkarmayogo viśiṣyate || 5.2 ||

5.2 Kṛṣṇa says: The renunciation of work and work in devotion are both good for liberation. But of the two, work in devotional service is better than renunciation of work.

ज्ञेयः स नित्यसंन्यासी यो न द्वेष्टि न काङ्क्षति ।

jñeyaḥ sa nityasannyāsī yo na dveṣṭi na kāṅkṣati
nirdvandvo hi mahābāho sukhaṃ bandhātpramucyate || 5.3 ||

5.3 He who neither hates nor desires the fruits of his activities has renounced. Such a person, free from all dualities, easily overcomes material bondage and is completely liberated, Oh Arjuna.

साङ्ख्ययोगौ पृथग्बालाः प्रवदन्ति न पण्डिताः । एकमप्यास्थितः सम्यगुभयोर्विन्दते फलम् ॥ ५-४॥ sāṅkhyayogau pṛthagbālāḥ pravadanti na paṇḍitāḥ ekamapyāsthitaḥ samyagubhayorvindate phalam || 5.4 ||

5.4 Only the ignorant speaks of the path of action to be different from the path of renunciation. Those who are actually learned say that both action and renunciation lead to the same truth.

In all the previous chapters, Kṛṣṇa talks with such clarity and authority that it would dissolve the doubts of anybody listening to Him. And yet Arjuna has come back to the same point.

After all the explanations given by Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna continues to ask, 'Oh Kṛṣṇa, first of all, you asked me to renounce work and then again you recommend work with devotion. Now, will you kindly tell me clearly, which one of the two is more beneficial? - yac chreya etayor ekaṁ tanme brūhi su-niścitam (5.1).'

We will never get an answer or solve a problem if we start thinking about which would be more beneficial. Before we evaluate the benefits of something, we should be clear about the scale we want to use to measure the benefits. What is beneficial for one person may be completely useless for another. The scale that we use for measuring success is a very important thing. Unless we know the scale, it does not make sense to conclude anything. Even jumping to a conclusion should be done with clear intelligence and completion. Jumping to a conclusion without intelligence is like falling out of an airplane without a parachute. We just wouldn't know where we will land.

Kālabhairava is power and joy. These two qualities complete all your incompletions. All your incompletions will be complete. Your very DNA should be programmed with the space of Kālabhairava - power and joy! Mahākālabhairava is the embodiment of power and joy. Only power and joy brings completion and keeps you alive, awake, aware. Ramaṇa Maharṣi says beautifully, 'Before achieving it, even a mustard seed will look like a mountain.' It will seem like your life will not move without it. It will seem like it is the basic and most important thing for your life. 'Once you achieve it, even a mountain will look like a mustard seed.' This is because something else looks like a mountain now. We get caught in the trap of achieving and lose the ability to relax and enjoy what we have achieved.

Karma or Sannyāsa - What is my path?

Here, Arjuna asks: 'Kṛṣṇa! Now, will you please tell me surely, which of the two: karma, action or sannyāsa, renunciation is more beneficial - sannyāsaṁ karmaṇāṁ kṛṣṇa punar yogaṁ ca saṁsasi (5.1)?'

Again and again, all of us ask ourselves this question. The mind is in dilemma. The mind asks for a single instruction. Our mind will be alive as long as we are caught between any two extremes. The moment we come to any single conclusion we will be liberated. We will be ignorant as long as we are moving from one extreme to the other. Don't say 'Ignorance is bliss.' If ignorance is bliss why are so many people suffering on this planet? Ignorance is not bliss. Innocence is bliss.

Innocence means we will not carry a scale with which we are continuously measuring our life. Ignorance means we will have a scale but we will not be able to fulfill our life according to that scale.

We have made our mind itself a disease, a dilemma. Dilemma is the disease of incompletions with which man starts his life and ends his life too. Even 'ends' is not the right word to use because he is in a dilemma about whether or not to end it. But death comes and his life is just taken away from him. Here, Arjuna is in a dilemma as to which of the two is more beneficial for him. If we look into life as a utility, as some means to a benefit, then we are creating our own hell. If we reduce life to this, we will be in hell.

Life has no separate benefit. Life itself is a benefit. There are people who have achieved all that they wanted in life. But they feel a deep void, a deep incompletion in them. This is what is 'depression of success.' They feel something is deeply lacking and are unable to comprehend what it could possibly be.

This is because they ran the rat race of life without carrying the space of completion, without stopping to complete with their root patterns of desires, of fear and greed, without any self-inquiry. They ran foolishly because everyone else was running. They never stopped for a minute to question, 'Why am I doing what I am doing?', 'What do I really want?', 'Why do I feel the way I fee?' So, without finding the root patterns that drive them in the rat race, when they stop running or when they can't run anymore, they fall back into their incompletions.

They suddenly find themselves diseased with their own being. This is what becomes depression or disease. So, if you constantly look for some benefit from life, if you don't achieve, you will feel life is a failure and if you achieve, you are bound to face the depression of success. Either way it is trouble.

Life itself is a benefit. If we constantly try to see which of two things is more beneficial, it means we have a pure business mind. We can't do business with life. At some point we need to relax from the business mind. For at least half an hour per day, do some enriching which will not get dollars for you - some painting, some writing. When you start painting, don't think of a big gallery with your paintings. Do some creative work without bothering about how to show off your artwork to people. Even before starting to paint, we will think, 'My friend will come home. I will show him how I developed this concept.' You will decide how to bore your friend with your plans.

Do something enriching just for the sake of enriching, not for any purpose. Enrich just for the sake of enriching. You will see that during that half hour, you will fall into your very being; which is the space of completion.

You can also enrich at some place of worship by cleaning it without expecting anything in return. Engage yourself in any form of selfless enriching activity. Serve food to people. Even while volunteering, we do it so that we can tell others about it and get applauded for it. So now at least for 30 minutes, authentically enrich with responsibility, without the cognition of getting yourself any benefit. No money or name and fame should come to you from that half an hour. If you can just do this, you will start tasting the real power of life. Enriching is the power of living, ātma śakti.

With enriching, you will achieve the ultimate result of establishing your existence into everything. You establishing your existence into everything is 'serving.' In any form of serving or enriching, you expand and become part of it.

As long as you are in your own head, continuously calculating, you will only be bargaining with life, 'What is more beneficial? What am I going to achieve by this?' You will see the power of living - a different dimension of your being - if you practice this technique of enriching. This enriching will lead you to Kṛṣṇa consciousness, the consciousness of completion.

When you stop calculating for getting benefits, you will start tasting the fruit of life. Enriching is enjoying and sharing the fruit of life. When you enrich others you will come alive. A mango does not achieve its ultimate if you just eat the fruit and destroy the seed. The fruit realizes itself only when the seed is able to give more fruits.

Life is not and can never be business. Here, again and again, Arjuna is stuck because he thinks that life is business. Of course, Kṛṣṇa is very compassionate. He is the embodiment of kindness. Literally, inch by inch, He brings Arjuna up without giving up on him. He does not lose His patience. He does not say, 'I told you earlier…'

Kṛṣṇa uses at least 100 verses to explain this one concept of Karma-Sannyāsa yoga, the paths of responsibility and renunciation. But He does this without losing His patience at any point. Not once does He shout at Arjuna. He is an embodiment of compassion. He comes down to the plane of Arjuna and gradually transforms him by enriching him with the same teachings in different ways.

The question concerning karma and sannyāsa - responsibility and renunciation - has been asked from time immemorial, and each time it has been answered. Yet this question remains.

The unconscious process never comes to the conscious energy. Man as such is governed to a large extent by the unconscious. He is not even aware of what he is going after. He thinks he wants something and runs after it. But by the time he gets his hands on it, he wants something else. So there is a constant restlessness, powerlessness within. This puts man in constant incompletion, dissatisfaction and depression.

By merely flooding completion into this depression you can get out of it. If you just allow a single instance of depression, powerlessness to work on you and you face it consciously with the process of completion, in the process you will become enlightened. Nothing else is necessary. A single instance of depression is enough. It will completely burn you and you will become enlightened. But we never allow anything to work on us completely. We are scared to confront our own selves. We just allow the unconscious space of powerlessness to overpower us instead of boldly facing it with power and joy, and seeing it through its completion. Look into every moment you feel powerless in your life even now. Don't try to escape from those moments. You can never escape.

Life is the greatest Master; it continuously teaches us. But we never learn from it. We never mark the spot where we stopped our journey in this birth. That spot where we stopped life's journey is the root pattern. When we stop our journey, if we at least mark the spot in this life saying, 'I covered this distance, I learnt all these things. In the next birth I will continue from where I left last,' it is enough.

Do Self-completion, Svapūrṇatva

Everyday at least for forty-two minutes, consciously decide to do the self- completion process, svapūrṇatva kriya. Decide consciously to be complete: 'Let me sit and face my powerlessness and complete with my patterns. Let me restore my space of completion today.'

We mark our patterns, not our possibilities. We never mark where we should in the bigger picture of our lives. We are so caught up with marking our small desires and goals fueled by our incompletions. We never mark the spot of our peak possibilities. These markings of desires and worldly goals continuously get washed away and new markings are made. They update themselves based on inputs from the world around us, based on what society has to say. We forget that these markings are temporary and do not reflect the space of possibility within, which comes only from completion.

Surrender to experience Karma-Sannyāsa as One

Let us deeply analyze these paths of karma and sannyāsa. Karma is normally out of greed and desires. Sannyāsa is always invariably out of fear, bhaya. There is a fear of life. When you are not ready to take the risk, you renounce everything. The fear of getting hurt is the first reason for sannyāsa. Sannyāsa is a way of escapism, turning away from the responsibilities that life presents. When a person is bogged down by responsibilities of life, he takes sannyāsa as an easy escape route. In the name of renunciation, he covers his deep fears. This is not true sannyāsa.

Then we have people running after material wealth in the name of karma. On one side are the people who are running away from fear. On the other side are those who are running towards their greed. Both categories of people are not going to achieve eternal bliss or consciousness. Both are not on the right track of completion.

In the entire world, only three types of human beings exist: One who has surrendered to greed, one who has surrendered to fear and the one who has surrendered to the supreme intelligence, divine consciousness. The person who has surrendered to greed gets lost. Such a person runs after many things in life to possess them, which in turn leads to more greed. He literally becomes a slave to greed.

There is a beautiful story in Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad:

There are two birds on the same tree.

One bird, a completely satisfied and fulfilled being, is sitting calmly, enjoying the silence of its own inner space.

Another bird is sitting a little below, busily pecking at the fruits. It keeps flitting from place to place, trying to eat the fruits. When the fruit is tasty, it enjoys. When the fruit is not tasty, it suffers. It continuously oscillates between enjoyment and suffering.

Suddenly, this bird looks up and sees the bird that is sitting silently and thinks, 'How is this bird so calm and beautiful? Let me go closer and see. Let me talk to this bird.' Slowly, the small bird moves towards the peaceful bird.

As it goes closer to the other bird, it continues to taste more fruits and suffers because the fruits are sour. Suddenly, when it is close enough to the other bird, it realizes that the other bird is nothing but its own self, which is sitting silently and beautifully watching the small bird getting distracted in its path, suffering with sour fruits. The small bird simply becomes one with the other bird.

In the same way, as long as you are a jīvātman, an ordinary soul, you struggle between fear and greed. You go from one extreme to another. The moment you realize there is something inside your being that is untouched by your greed and fear, you start traveling towards it. When you get closer to it, you realize you are that consciousness.

This is where doubt starts. This is where your root of unhappiness grows - na sukhaṁ śaṁsayātmanaḥ (4.40).

Education is nothing but completing with self-doubts. This is the precise, concise definition about education: Completing with your self-doubt in any field is education. In any field, whether it is self-transformation, cooking, medicine, law, or construction, in any field, complete with your self-doubt. Your kuṇḍalini energy, your innate potential energy will flow in that direction and you will excel in that field.

Master-disciple Relationship

In the Śiva Sutra, Devi asks, 'O Śiva, what is your reality? What is this wonder- filled universe? What constitutes the seed? Who centers the universal wheel? What is this life beyond form pervading form? How may we enter it fully, beyond space and time, names and descriptions? Let my doubts be cleared.'

Beautifully, She expresses Her whole state of mind through these few words. The last words are, 'Let my doubts be cleared. Let my doubts be complete.' She never says, 'Please answer my questions.' If She had made that mistake by asking, 'Answer my question', She would have produced one more Gītā through Śiva.

See, in the Gītā, Arjuna is not ready to surrender to Kṛṣṇa completely. That is why in the beginning Kṛṣṇa has to give him all the intellectual answers. Arjuna thinks he can solve his confusion through these answers; he doesn't know these are much deeper doubts that need to be cleared through the experience of the Truth.

Here, Kṛṣṇa explains the same thing, we are caught between fear and greed. Either we constantly surrender ourselves to fear or we surrender ourselves to greed. Very rare individuals surrender to intelligence, to divine consciousness.

Arjuna asks here, 'Which is more beneficial for me?' Keeping track of accounts is good in business but not in life. People come and ask, 'Why should I surrender to the divine? If I surrender, what will I get?' If you don't surrender to the divine, you will be surrendering to your fear or greed. When it comes to life, profit and loss doesn't work. Life is beyond calculation. The moment we ask, 'What will I get by surrendering to the divine?', we miss the whole idea of surrender.

Our whole life is spent running behind greed or fear. The path of Karma Yoga, seeking liberation through action or responsibility, happens because of greed. The path of sannyāsa yoga, seeking liberation through renunciation, happens because of fear. Neither the path of karma (action) nor the path of sannyāsa (renunciation) will enrich us unless we complete with our greed and fear and transform our very space into the space of completion. If we change the incomplete space to that of completion, karma or sannyāsa or anything can enrich us. All we need to know is this - it doesn't matter if we are a karma yogi or a sannyāsa yogi. It is the attitude, the space from which we approach and live life that is most important. Let your inner space be the space of completion.

When you are in incompletion, you constantly feel powerless and anything you do comes out of powerlessness. Anything done out of incompletion, be it Karma Yoga or Sannyāsa yoga, leads you to more and more incompletion. Anything done out of completion, leads you to more and more completion.

Sannyāsa is you living in the space of completion and constantly enriching everyone to be in the space of completion.

Again and again, Kṛṣṇa is placing the emphasis on the space of completion, on the being. If we don't know the root cause of our actions, why we are living with karma or why we pick up sannyāsa, we will not be able to solve our problems. Our suffering is neither because of karma nor because of sannyāsa. Suffering is because of our wrong attitude of incompletion. And with this wrong attitude of incompletion, be it karma or sannyāsa, the path will feel only like a punishment. With the right space of completion, any path will feel like a true blessing for you and for others.

With the wrong space of incompletion, if you take the path of karma or sannyāsa, you will struggle and suffer, and make others suffer as well. If you decide to enter karma, drop the goal. Just enjoy doing the karma and don't worry about the goal. Living itself is beautiful. Realize that life itself is beautiful. On the other hand, if we decide to take up sannyāsa, again drop the goal. The goal of a sannyāsi (monk), which is renunciation, is also a goal and it must be dropped. The karma yogi runs towards the goal, the sannyāsi runs away from the goal.

Kṛṣṇa says - sāṅkhya yogou pṛthagbālāḥ pravadanti na paṇḍitaḥ (5.4). Indirectly He tells Arjuna that he has yet to learn, that he is still ignorant. Only the ignorant man says that karma yoga is different from sāṅkhya yoga, the sannyāsa. Here, the words karma and sannyāsa are equated to Karma Yoga and Sāṅkhya Yoga.

The experienced say that both karma and sannyāsa lead to the same truth. Through both these paths, one achieves the results of both. If we complete with the pattern of greed in karma yoga and complete with the pattern of fear in sannyāsa Yoga, we will drop into eternal consciousness. Through both, we will achieve when we create the right space, the space of completion.

So Kṛṣṇa says here, 'Only the ignorant person says that one is superior to the other or that they are two different paths. Both the paths are one and the same.' A person who can travel alone, who is courageous enough to live in the space of completion and decides to enrich others with completion takes the life of sannyāsa. A person who decides to live in the space of completion and who wants to enrich others by sharing his life takes the life of karma. It is up to us. Both the paths are one and the same.

What is important is having the right reason and the right space, not what we are doing. What we are doing is not important, who we are being is important. These three words should be understood: being, doing and having. If we are continuously doing only for having, we will never have it. Even when we are having, we will be doing. The man who is doing just for having will never be able to experience or enjoy life because even when he is having, he will be doing. The man who is established in his being will enjoy both doing and having at the same time. By just being, he will enjoy doing and having. All we need is a simple technique. The whole idea is now reduced to a one-line message.

Let all our feelings, let all our mental thoughts, let all our physical deeds be directed towards gratitude to the Divine.

Don't work out of fear or greed, because no matter how much we achieve out of greed, we will not be fulfilled. It is like pouring ghee (clarified butter) into the fire. Can we quench fire by pouring ghee into it? Never! All our actions that are done out of greed will only create more desire and make our senses weak, tired and incomplete. In the same way, all our laziness born out of fear will only make our mind restless and incomplete. We may not be doing things physically, but our mind will be worrying. If we have become a karma yogi out of greed, our senses will be weakened. How much can we run? If we become a sannyāsi out of fear, again, we may not do anything physically but the whole day we will be worrying.

Work without motivation is the only real work. It will never make us tired. Every moment we will be working out of bliss.

Devotion Above Action

yat sāṅkhyaiḥ prāpyate sthanaṁ tad yogair api gamyate | ekaṁ sānkhyaṁ ca yogaṁ ca yaḥ paśyati sa paśyati || 5.5 ||

One who knows that the state reached through sāṅkhya yoga and karma yoga are both one and the same, and that the state reached by sāṅkhya yoga can also be achieved by karma yoga, sees both of them in the same level and sees things as they are.

Not all of us are karma yogi or doers and not all of us are sannyāsis or monks. No sannyāsi is a sannyāsi for 24 hours. When he surrenders himself to the greed, he is a doer. No karma yogi is a doer for 24 hours. When he surrenders to fear, he is a sannyāsi. So, whenever we make an optimistic decision, we are a karma yogi. Whenever we make a pessimistic decision, we are sannyāsi. It is we who play both the roles.

Whenever we move our body while feeling a particular emotion, that emotion gets settled inside our system. That emotion will become part of us and get created again and again in our system. When that emotion rises in you, don't cooperate. Let your body not go after that emotion. Don't be taken away by that emotion, whether it is anger, irritation, depression, lust, fear or anything else. Just decide, 'I am not going to be taken away by this emotion. I am completing with it.'

Within three or four times, you will be liberated from that emotion because you will learn the technique of completion. You will have the key now in your hand: How not to be taken away by that emotion, how to be complete, rooted in your Self, in your being. Whether it is anger or fear or greed, it gets more power and strength if your body cooperates with it. With whatever emotion your body moves, that emotion gets recorded inside your system. And that emotion will happen again and again, and much more intensely. Both frequency and intensity of that emotion will increase.

There is a movie, 'What the Bleep Do We Know?' In this movie, they show this idea beautifully. It is a truth from Vedānta. They say that whenever an emotion happens within your system, it is like a shower of rain. The emotion pours like rain. It happens inside your system, in your being. There are particular cells that catch these emotions. For example, if you think with anger, there are particular cells that catch anger as an emotion. Not only do they catch the emotion, they start reproducing as well. Each cell will create at least four or five more cells that can catch this emotion.

An important truth is that the basic quality of life is reproduction and expansion. This is the survival instinct governed by the svādiṣṭhāna cakra, the fear energy center within our body. Reproduction is governed by the mūlādhāra cakra, the sex energy center in our body. These cells that catch the anger emotion start reproducing and each cell creates five or six more cells. Next time, when the anger shower happens, all these cells will also catch the same emotion. They grow to the same original size. Now these cells also start reproducing. The third time, when the shower happens, all these cells catch the emotion and start storing it. That is why, every time we experience the same emotion, it becomes stronger and stronger. We are addicted to that emotion. If we are affected by anger for ten minutes the first time, then the next time, it becomes twenty minutes, then half an hour. This is how the emotion becomes stronger and stronger.

In our being, again and again, when we cooperate with these negative emotions, we create the same type of mood, the same type of pattern and lifestyle in us. Not only will this emotion get recorded in us, but we will express the same thing to others also. What we have within us is what we will vomit on others also.

Drop Greed and Fear, Live Power and Joy

If we are working to strengthen our greed, we will be caught by the emotion of greed and we will radiate that emotion. Next, if we strengthen our fear, again, we will be caught by that emotion of fear and express that emotion, torturing others with it. Be very clear: Warriors are caught in fear. That is why they torture others. They give fear to others. Warriors are the most cowardly people. A real warrior is a person who has conquered his being; who has won his being. Only he can be the real warrior. If we do anything out of fear, we will reproduce the same fear in others.

Now, take a few minutes to sit and analyze, 'Throughout this life, all these years I was driven by greed and fear. What have I achieved? What have I got? Where am I standing? What has really happened?' Consciously and actively think about it. Consciously allow this idea to work on you. Decide, 'From today, I will not do anything out of greed or out of fear.' Immediately the fear will rise in you, 'What will happen to my bills? What will happen to my house? Who will repay the mortgages? What will happen to my car? My kids, who will feed them? What will happen to my social prestige and name and fame?'

Understand, you have enough energy and strength to maintain yourself without fear and greed. All you need is trust that you don't need energy from fear or greed to run your life. That is the first thing you need to understand. You have enough potential energy to live your life and to achieve what you want.

When you come down to this planet, you bring enough energy to live all your desires or to achieve whatever you want to achieve in this life; to create your reality as you want. That is why here, Kṛṣṇa beautifully says, 'yaḥ paśyati sa paśyati'. The man who is beyond the pull of fear and greed is the only one who can see things as they are.

Now, decide strongly, 'Throughout my life, I have been either pushed by fear or pulled by greed. Do I want to continue that?' For someone trained and conditioned by society, it will be very difficult to believe that you don't need energy from greed or fear to live. Your whole past, whatever your age may be, you lived only fueled by fear and greed.

Just decide, 'For the next ten days I will trust the words of Kṛṣṇa. I will practice this truth with integrity and authenticity. I don't need fuel from fear or greed because I have brought enough energy.' When the Divine sends you to earth, He sends you with whatever you need. In Vedānta, that is what we call prārabdha karma. When you come down you bring enough of energy for your senses and body to acquire whatever it needs to live life blissfully. The only problem is you don't trust that you have brought everything. And after coming down, you accumulate more and more desires from others and then you try to fulfill all those desires too.

Work only for your desires. Don't waste your life working for others' desires. Decide clearly, 'For the next ten days, I will work only out of my power, my joy and bliss. I will do everything out of my completion.' You will see that it transforms your life. Just living ten days out of joy and bliss rather than fear and greed will transform your whole life. This one idea can liberate you straightaway from all bondages.

When you start practicing this, for the first few days you will feel a little unsettled because a new inner space is created. Say 'no' to any desire or any fear that comes up. Initially, you will feel some emptiness, a vacuum, but don't worry. In a few days you will beautifully settle with the new space. Don't worry when you fail a few times. Starting this way is much better than staying in fear of failure. So start. At least you will know the technique.

If you don't even start, you will not even know where you are failing. It will transform your whole life. It will give you such great strength and courage that invariably you will be liberated. Don't be bothered about the initial feeling of emptiness. It is like this: If we don't have anybody to nag us we will feel we are missing something. So, when you practice this, you will feel you are missing that constant nagging. Don't worry. You will settle into that new consciousness. Your whole being will become new.

One more thing: In just ten days, you will not lose your wealth. If you think, 'If I practice for ten days, I may lose all my wealth,' that wealth is not worth having. It is better to lose it. In ten days if you can lose it, do you think it is worth having it? The earlier it is lost, the better it is for your being.

Remove the tremendous stress and load from your inner space. Decide, 'For ten days, I will do all my actions out of deep bliss, out of a settled mood of powerfulness and joy.' If you practice this, the constant irritation that remains in you will disappear. Knowingly or unknowingly, you carry constant irritation in you. That is why all of us are just waiting to burst and explode even for small things.

Look into yourself: Can you authentically cognize and agree that you carry that constant irritation in you? This irritation we carry in our inner space is because of fear and greed. There is uneasiness between you and your being. That uneasiness expresses itself continuously to others. That uneasiness is dis-ease.

In Sanskrit 'Śiva' means causeless auspiciousness, reasonless energy. It is possible to live with that reasonless, unmotivated energy. Only two things are needed for that. The first thing is trust that you have that energy. The next thing is starting to live it. Only these two things are needed to reach the divine consciousness. When we start working with the causeless auspicious energy, we become Śiva. Otherwise, we are Śava (dead body).

Actually, we try to renounce because we want to escape from the situation. The outer world, situations or people are never the cause of trouble in us. How can they control us? It is our patterns of fear and greed and the projections of our mind that are really the cause of all the trouble. Every minute, our mind continuously creates subtle expectations of how things should be, how people should be, how life should be. The thought pattern needs to change from running away from something due to fear of it to facing the reality. Running away from material pleasures due to fear of facing reality or guilt imposed by society cannot be called renunciation.

Just sit down for five minutes and be aware of how you perceive situations. With completion and awareness, look at everything you think and do. When we come to an understanding of our own self and are able to live as a witness to everything that goes on around us, unaffected by situations and people around us, we become a realized soul, living enlightenment. If we do things fueled by fear and greed, we become hypocrites.

When we are completely in the present space of completion, totally involved in what we are doing, we become the action itself, we no longer exist as the doer. That is when we have truly renounced the sense of 'I am doing', or the ego. Then we are true sannyāsis. All we need is to experience that behind the shallow emotions that exist in the periphery, at the very core of our being is a complete, solid, silent center that is absolutely unaffected by external incidents.

You see, renunciation, sannyāsa is going beyond desires, including 'desirelessness.' Apart from material desires, the desire to be spiritual and attain God is also a desire. The mind always hankers after something in the future. Only when we drop all desires, when we are completely at ease and ecstatic in the present moment of completion, we have gone beyond the clutches of the mind. Only then do we see reality as it exists here and now.

Seeing this reality as it exists is what Kṛṣṇa beautifully calls 'yaḥ paśyati sa paśyati'. Otherwise, we always live in our world of illusion, māya, because the future is unreal; it is an illusion. The real, the present, can never be perceived by the mind because it is beyond logic. That is why Existence can never be understood and experienced by the mind. The truth can only be experienced. How can the limited mind even come close to understanding the vastness and the splendor of Existence? How can we desire God or Enlightenment which we have never known? We can always desire Enlightenment in a way that fits our limited, inadequate cognition, but that is still our imagination.

Experience Your True Nature

When we allow ourselves to be our true nature, to be bliss, we live spontaneously and respond with intelligence instead of programmed unconscious reactions. Then there is no need to control the senses because they are under the control of the ultimate Existence. There is no question of having to control them.

In the Mahābhārat war, Kṛṣṇa drives Arjuna's chariot. The horses represent the senses held beautifully in control by the divine charioteer. He drives the being represented by the warrior, in the body represented by the chariot towards victory, towards bliss. When the individual consciousness surrenders control to the Divine, the Divine controls the body-mind-spirit and steers one towards one's true nature, bliss.

We have programmed reactions, default cognitions about everything. We see a situation and we react based on others' expectation from us, anyakāra and our expectation from others, svānyakāra. We can only react by looking up our database of the past records, referring to the reaction of people then. If what we did was appreciated, we will react the same way. If we are not appreciated and there is a gap between others' expectation from us and our expectation from others, we create a self-doubt and feel uncomfortable and restless. And to remove the discomfort, we now react in a different manner, one that we think will be acceptable to others.

Existence is energy. It can never repeat itself. Every moment is unique. We see it from the limited perception of our mind, and organize life into different categories. We say, 'These are pleasant situations, those are unpleasant situations, this is good, that is bad, this is right, that is wrong, this should happen, that should not.' It is not Existence that makes these distinctions but us. If we can allow this new cognition to penetrate us, we can simply relax. We will then allow our consciousness to respond.

Have the courage to live life with intelligence, with consciousness and completion, with spontaneity. Just this small shift in your space can do wonders for you; every moment will then be a celebration. When the intelligence happens, the compassion also descends. Compassion for the whole world automatically happens in you because you see yourself in every one. How can you feel anything but compassion then? That is why Masters can only feel compassion and responsibility towards the whole world.

When we flow in tune with Existence, we become a channel for the divine energy to flow through us. If the bamboo can remain hollow, it will become a beautiful flute and simply the air from the lips of the Divine will come out of the flute as heavenly music. Instead, if the bamboo is blocked with dirt in the form of ego, it will remain dead and can only be used for carrying a dead body.

These verses of Kṛṣṇa are very powerful, but often misinterpreted. 'One who knows the truth, though engaged in seeing, hearing, touching, smelling, eating, going, dreaming, and breathing knows that he never does anything.' It is like you commit a murder and then claim you didn't do it but your hands did it. Be very clear: Not being the doer does not mean we give up responsibility for our actions. It means exactly the opposite. When we are so involved in the action, when we are completely relaxed, we are overflowing with compassion and love, and we just do out of the blissful energy in us.

When we are complete and total in what we do, our whole intelligence, our whole energy will be behind the act; we become the action. The action and we are no longer separate. Energy is intelligence. So, when our energy is not total, our intelligence is not completely behind the action. When the energy behind the action is total, whatever we do will always radiate the blissful energy that is behind the action.

Another important understanding from this verse: Every moment, every action, whether it is talking or breathing or seeing, should be done with awareness and completion. That is true meditation. Many people claim that they have been meditating for thirty or forty years. Even after so many years, the person inside remains exactly the same. Absolutely zero transformation has happened. Meditation is actually a quality that needs to be added to our life. It should permeate the very way in which we view life, the space from which we perceive everything. When we infuse the space of completion into every action, we are in meditation.

So how to be in completion? We can be complete only when we can distance and disidentify ourselves from what is happening now and what we think happened in the past. When we can witness the past happening without identifying and getting involved in it ourselves, only then can we watch the scene as it is. Otherwise we assume some role in the scene. When that happens, we create some incomplete cognitions, some vested interest in it. We have some expectation that things should happen in a certain way. The moment we get involved and identify ourselves with the happening, the distance between the scene and us has dropped and we can no longer be the witness to see things as they are. It is just like when we are in a dream, we don't realize it is a dream. We think everything that is happening is reality. The moment we wake up from the dream we realize in a flash that it was just a dream. The way we are living life now is exactly the same. We are living life in the dream of the future and the past. And we think that the dream is reality.

Controlling The Mind

5.13 One who is controlled, giving up all the activities of the mind, surely remains in happiness in the city of nine gates (body), neither doing anything, nor causing anything to be done.

Kṛṣṇa says here, 'saṅgaṁ tyaktvā karoti yaḥ (5.10) - Action without attachment is renunciation.' It is only this renunciation that leads to liberation.

If you see the lotus flower, it grows in a dirty pond; its stalk is completely inside the dirty water. The flower is so beautifully above the water and the dirt around it is hardly noticed. Similarly, when you are neck-deep in the activities of the world and yet unaffected by what goes on, when your core is undisturbed, you have reached the goal of renunciation. The basic truth behind creating this space of centeredness and completion is really this: Existence is a loving Mother caring for us every moment, providing all that we need. When this understanding happens, we surrender to Existence. The wave drops into the ocean, blissfully aware that it is a part of the ocean. It no longer feels it is a separate entity trying to fight Existence, thinking that the ocean, the Whole, is its enemy.

Surrender needs to happen out of a deep understanding, not out of a superficial acceptance of the inevitable. If it happens out of acceptance, it will be just a compromise out of fear. There is no point in saying, 'Oh, it is destiny. It is written on my forehead and it is foretold by the stars.' This is not true. We have free will and we can do what we want. We neither have to accept nor reject, but surrender to the flow of life with the true understanding that we are being taken care of. When this completion happens out of deep understanding, it is beautiful, total and it is true.

Witness and Be Complete

Again and again, Kṛṣṇa is repeating a single point in various ways: action without attachment - saṅgaṁ tyaktvā karoti yaḥ (5.10). He emphasizes that life happens only when we live as a witness to everything that happens, when we do not identify and attach with external incidents. We just have to watch what is happening in and around us without letting what happens outside affect our inner space. The moment we catch this thread and start living life in the space of completion, we will find that all our incompletions simply disappear. It is not that anything outside has changed. It is just that what we wish to see has changed.

Of course, the way in which we live automatically creates an effect, a transformation in others as well. We attract incidents that fall in tune with our desires and thoughts. When we are blissful inside, whatever happens outside will also be blissful. This is because what we see outside is just a projection of what is inside us.

Even the same situation will be seen in a completely different way when we witness it with completion. Automatically, no emotion can sway us because now we are just witnessing, we no longer have any vested interest or incompletion in the situation. Our state is in no way affected by what others say or do. Then, we are Masters unto ourselves.

Just being totally involved in whatever we do is meditation. Just living in the space of completion, enjoying the present moment is meditation. You must have experienced in your own life, when you are intensely involved in something, you forget yourself. It can be as simple as painting or reading or anything. When you go deep into it, you forget yourself. When we go deeply into any emotion, only that emotion remains and we cease to exist. This is what we mean by 'totality.' This moment of 'you' disappearing, you may experience for just a few seconds in your current lifestyle. But if you work on being intense and total in everything, this experience of 'you' disappearing will happen more often to you and for longer periods. Soon, you master the art of doing work intensely, and just being absent. We become independent of the work that goes on outside.

Here, Kṛṣṇa gives us a technique to realize who we are. By giving up attachment to the sense objects, by dropping all false identifications with the body, senses and mind, we can live life with intelligence and this leads us to self-purification, self-completion.

Kṛṣṇa tells us that our job is only to do the work, not to be concerned about the results. He beautifully says, 'brahmaṇy ādhāya karmāṇi (5.10) - do the work surrendering to the eternal consciousness.' We need to keep doing things because we have so much loving energy inside us. We can just exude energy without any reason or any expectation. When we are like this, we are not bothered about the results. It is not that we are not bothered about the results out of a frustrated or cynical conclusion. We don't even know to expect results because we are continuously moving and expressing our blissful inner energy, that's all. We are just living in the space of completion and doing whatever that comes in our way to do. We are just flowing joyfully, that's all. We flow with the Universal energy. This flowing energy is real love.

When we identify ourselves with our body, mind and ego, we alienate ourselves from the rest of Existence. Instead of playing our role in the divine drama as an actor, we start thinking that we are the actor and we actually go through all the emotional turmoil that we were just supposed to enact. When we become entangle and we miss the whole joy of the divine drama, and feel that life is a big trauma.

In the same way, when we just do what we have at hand, without being bothered about the result, we are always happy. Once we start thinking about the result of our actions, we lose the joy of doing what we are doing at this moment. When we are established in ourselves, we are automatically in peace irrespective of anything that exists or does not exist around us. We are not bothered about the result because we have given our best, to our peak possibility.

We don't understand that every tomorrow comes only as today. When the tomorrow comes as today, we simply miss it because we are now looking at tomorrow once again. When we work without unnecessarily thinking about the result, all our energies will be used towards realizing the goal. The energy will not be dissipated in imagining the results. The power of desire, icchā śakti, will be converted to the power of action, kriya śakti. The desire may initially be a goal, but what is important is the path and not the end result. The goal is merely a byproduct.

Just live life in a simple way. Be complete every moment, enjoying the splendor of nature. Enjoy every thing that Existence has created. Start witnessing simple yet wonderful things like the sunrise in the morning; listen to the chirping of the birds. Look deeply into a flower and you will find God. Just these few moments will show us a whole new dimension of our Being. They will show us what it is to enjoy life without a reason, without running behind or away from something. They will teach us how to relax into the welcoming, embracing arms of Existence.

The City of Nine Gates

In these verses, Kṛṣṇa refers to the body, which has nine gates to the external world: the two eyes, two nostrils, two ears, mouth and the two organs of evacuation. It may seem strange and absurd that we can just be neither doing nor causing anything to be done.

Here, Kṛṣṇa does not refer to not doing anything out of laziness and indulgence. Actually, if we can become intensely lazy, we can be in meditation. Here, the laziness is a deep mental laziness where the mind has been stilled. It has stopped all activity but the body moves according to the will of the divine. We are in the midst of intense activity and yet are not doing anything. The mind separates the doer from the action. It is the mind that defines who the doer is and what the action is.

In the conventional sense, when we say lazy, we are referring to the body. The body is lazing around but the mind is completely active. It is carrying on its work of creating and linking unrelated thoughts. When the mind becomes lazy, instead of the body, we drop the mind also. That is when we stop identifying the action as being separate from ourselves.

Kṛṣṇa is talking of being so completely involved in something that we become the very action itself. First, we become the witness to the action, only then we can become completely involved in it. When we start distancing ourselves and become a witness, only then we can be completely involved in the action and then the doer and the action merge into each other. It is not the action that gives us the joy but the conscious experience of the bliss within us through the action that actually gives us happiness and bliss. When we realize through experience or understanding that the bliss in life is completely within us, we will get over our wrong cognition that external pleasures are what give us joy. When we really cognize that we are already all that we can imagine we want to be and much more than that, we have reached the ultimate goal. We will relax into the loving arms of Existence and just flow with it beautifully. Until then it will be a struggle to achieve what we already are.

Cleansing Ignorance With Knowledge

न कर्तृत्वं न कर्माणि लोकस्य सृजति प्रभुः ।
न कर्मफलसंयोगं स्वभावस्तु प्रवर्तते ॥ ५-१४॥ na kartṛtvaṃ na karmāṇi lokasya sṛjati prabhuḥ na karmaphalasaṃyogaṃ svabhāvastu pravartate || 5.14 ||

5.14 The Master does not create activities or make people do or connect with the outcome of the actions. All this is enacted by the material nature.

नादत्ते कस्यचित्पापं न चैव सुकृतं विभुः ।
अज्ञानेनावृतं ज्ञानं तेन मुह्यन्ति जन्तवः ॥ ५-१५॥
nādatte kasyacitpāpaṃ na caiva sukṛtaṃ vibhuḥ ajñānenāvṛtaṃ jñānaṃ tena muhyanti jantavaḥ || 5.15 ||

5.15 The Lord, surely, neither accepts anyone's sins nor good deeds. Living beings are confused by the ignorance that covers the knowledge.

ज्ञानेन तु तदज्ञानं येषां नाशितमात्मनः ।
तेषामादित्यवज्ज्ञानं प्रकाशयति तत्परम् ॥ ५-१६॥ jñānena tu tadajñānaṃ yeṣāṃ nāśitamātmanaḥ teṣāmādityavajjñānaṃ prakāśayati tatparam || 5.16 ||

5.16 Whose ignorance is destroyed by the knowledge? Their knowledge, like the rising sun, throws light on the supreme consciousness.

तद्बुद्धयस्तदात्मानस्तन्निष्ठास्तत्परायणाः ।
गच्छन्त्यपुनरावृत्तिं ज्ञाननिर्धूतकल्मषाः ॥ ५-१७॥ tadbuddhayas tadātmānas tanniṣṭhās tatparāyaṇāḥ gacchantyapunarāvṛttiṃ jñānanirdhūtakalmaṣāḥ || 5.17 ||

5.17 One whose intelligence, mind and faith are in the Supreme and one who has surrendered to the Supreme, his misunderstandings are cleansed through knowledge and he goes towards liberation.

Kṛṣṇa gives a very deep understanding here. He says, 'I do not create activities or make people do or connect with the fruits of the actions. All this is done by the material nature of humans.'

na kartṛtvaṁ na karmāṇi lokasya sṛjati prabhuḥ | na karma phala saṁyogaṁ svabhāvas tu pravartate || 5.14 ||

Kṛṣṇa is talking about the creation of the Universe itself here, not just about individuals. Understand, nothing in this Universe can be created or destroyed. Everything that exists has always existed in some form or the other. It will continue to exist in some form or the other. Science also says the same thing that matter and energy are inter-convertible and energy can never be destroyed. The beauty of the Vedas is that they say what science is now understanding. What is the last line of science was the first line of the Upaniṣads.

The End or The Beginning?

The Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad opens with the words - Īśā vāsyaṁ idaṁ sarvaṁ - meaning, 'all that exists arises from energy.' Now after so much scientific research, quantum physics has concluded that matter and energy are one and the same. But thousands of years ago, this was the first statement in the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, which says everything is energy.

People ask, 'Who created this Universe?' The Universe itself is the creator, the created and the creation. If the creator and the creation were different, it means that the Creator is more intelligent than the creation. But the creation and the Creator are one and the same; they are both divine. That is what is meant by līla, the divine play. The unmanifest, avyakta, the formless Energy made itself manifest, vyakta in the creation. The Universe created itself. It is like this: Can you say how you experience, how you feel your hand from inside your body? No! On the other hand, can you describe how you feel when you touch your own hand with the other hand? You will have some feeling, do you not? You can feel it because from outside, your two hands are separate; you can perceive them as different parts of your body. Similarly, God can experience and express Himself through man. Man is a part of God just like both the hands are a part of the same body and can be felt separately.

Now, like one hand in itself cannot understand that the hand it is touching is a part of the same body man cannot understand that he is a part of God. What does it take for the hand to understand that the other hand is actually a part of the bigger whole called the body? It takes the cognition that the entire body is a single entity with the different parts of the body being integrated in it. Similarly, it takes the understanding of our consciousness to see that we, the individual consciousness, are a part of the Whole and are an integral and connected part of the collective consciousness. The individual ego can never understand the truth that it exists as a part of the Whole. The ego has to dissolve for the truth to be revealed and understood.

It is as if we want to see our own beauty, we can do that when we see our own reflection in a mirror. The mirror in which God sees Himself is man. Can the reflection be a separate entity from what it is reflecting? No! Man can experience and express the divine in him. The game of life is all about man trying to realize the Divine in him and the Divine trying to express itself through man.

What Kṛṣṇa teaches here is actually a sūtra, a technique. Understand, when you are disturbed or angered by anything, the disturbance cannot disappear suddenly because it is a physiological happening. Your hormones have been released into your system; the body has been poisoned. But when you remain in the space of completion as a witness, even though the anger cannot go away immediately, there is the awareness in you that will dissipate the effect of the anger that remains in the periphery. The center, the core is untouched. You are now aware of these two points, the core and the periphery as two distinct identities co-existing.

This one glimpse will enrich you and become the strong support for you. The next time you see that you are being swayed by incompletions, you will remember this and such awareness will make you conscious and complete. Only when you are unconscious and ignorant you come under the sway of emotions or incompletions. This is what is meant by the term 'being centered in completion.' You are no longer a slave to your emotions, or to others. Otherwise, anybody can shake you. They can push and pull you in different directions and you won't be integrated and whole.

The light of knowledge dispels the ignorance and we realize the state in which we have always been. We cannot remove the darkness directly. This is what is something having a negative existence. Ignorance also can be removed by just shining the light of knowledge on it. Just like the rising sun removes the darkness of the night, the light of knowledge dispels the darkness of ignorance. What is that ignorance that we need to remove by bringing in the light of knowledge?

Whatever we do, we want to be happy, right? But the strange truth is, we are already pure bliss. Each one of us is pure bliss. The problem is we are not ready to accept this ultimate truth and relax, because the moment we accept this, we no longer have a separate personality; the ego has no basis to exist. It is our ego that makes us feel incomplete. The ego needs us to be a solid entity for it to exist. The mind always yearns to be occupied, running behind something. Only then can it survive. When we are pure bliss, we have nothing to run after because we are complete unto ourselves. If we look deeply, we can see clearly that it is we who choose to stay in suffering. We think that we want bliss and that we want to drop our ego. But deep down, we choose to stay with our ego.

Surrender Leads to Liberation

Kṛṣṇa gives us another technique to liberate ourselves. He says surrender leads to liberation, and happens when one's intelligence is focused on Him.

When we believe and cognize that there is a life force that is conducting this Universe and is taking care of us, we relax. When we relax, we can live and function at our peak potential. We can express our creativity and live spontaneously. We experience great freedom and liberation. This is surrender. This is true knowledge too. This is the knowledge that cannot be taught or picked up. The Master can simply transmit it when our being is ready to receive it.

All we need is the faith, the courage of authenticity to allow the supreme intelligence to guide us, to surrender our mind that oscillates between the extremes. The knowledge removes the ignorance. All our problems are due to lack of knowledge, due to ignorance. Whether it is fear or greed or worry or anger, all these emotions are able to control us because we are not aware. We allow them to unconsciously control us. When we bring a deep completion into anything, the solution simply stands out. When we go deeply into any emotion with deep awareness and complete with it, we can flower out of it. This is true knowledge, the knowledge of completion.

In times of extreme self-doubt, doubt your ego. Never doubt the Master. The Master is the only truth you can cling to when all else gives way. The Master is the only one who can guide you when everything seems to be confusing. So, first of all, you need to complete with this self-doubting pattern of constantly doubting yourself. Because you constantly doubt yourself, you doubt the truths of completion, the four tattvas (principles), you doubt everything. You doubt you. Because you doubt you, you doubt the Master.

Please listen, if you doubt you, you will doubt the Master also because Master is inside you more than you exist in you. If you are occupying twenty to thirty percent of you, Master is occupying sixty to seventy percent of you. So, naturally if you doubt you, you will doubt Master. If you have anger towards you, you will have anger towards Master.

Surrender can happen at different levels. Understand that the Master lives in all three energies - the body, His teachings and mission. The Master has no vested interests, no desires to fulfill in life. Masters come out of sheer compassion for the whole of mankind, to dispel the ignorance of seekers, to show them the light.

5.21 One who is not attached to the outer world sense pleasures, who enjoys in the Self, in that happiness, he is Self-connected and engaged in the Supreme and enjoys unlimited happiness.

Kṛṣṇa succinctly explains the neutrality and equanimity of Existence. Existence has no favorites. All comparative and hierarchical definitions are manmade.

Kṛṣṇa says there is no difference between a human and an animal, and that there is no difference between those we consider to be saints and those we consider to be sinners. A learned scholar, the priest and the brāhmaṇa should be seen as equal to an animal or a person who eats dogs. Even more dramatically, He says that one in full knowledge sees the dog and the dog-eater as the same - śuni caiva śva-pāke ca paṇḍitāḥ sama-darśinaḥ (5.18).

This is what Ādī Śaṅkara means when he sings the six verses of his Ātma Śatakam. 'I am not the enjoyer. I am not the enjoyed. I am not the enjoying. I am beyond all that; I am just the embodiment of Śiva.' This is one of the most beautiful messages from Śaṅkara. 'I am not the doer, I am not the deed, I am not the doing,' he says. 'I am just the witness, beyond all these.'

When we go beyond all three, the subject, object and verb, all connotations disappear. The eater and the eaten merge. We reach the source. There are no thoughts and there is no mind. There is just you, your being. That is the true you, the Supreme.

Existence continuously showers bliss upon each of us. Only we are not open to receive it. Existence sees everyone as equal. It does not discriminate. Everyone is a part of the same Existence. Similarly, Masters see the whole world as one with their own selves. That is why only they can show compassion to anyone and everyone.

Every Atom is Divine

External appearances are ephemeral. When we see the eternal, blissful being as the core of each and every one of us, we will realize the inherent divine nature of each of us. This knowledge, gained through the experience of the Self, results automatically in deep compassion towards the whole of Existence.

Classifications of lower species and higher species, good and bad are all made by society and by our minds, not by Existence. Only human beings think they are more intelligent than the rest of Nature.

Every atom on Earth is divine. When we just realize this very life is a divine gift to us, our attitude changes from taking life for granted to one of gratitude to Existence for everything. Have you worked hard to earn this life? With every breath that you take every moment, the life energy flows into you and keeps you alive. We take for granted the life energy that converts bread into blood. The mind continuously runs behind 'more and more.'

If we make two lists: one list of what we have, what Existence has showered upon us and a second list of what we really want to have to feel happier, we will quickly realize how much longer the first list is. Have we ever strongly considered what our life would be like if we did not have even a small limb? Can you imagine the limitations we would have without a toe or thumb, not to speak of our eyes or ears? We take so much for granted. We assume that what we have been given is our rightful due and so we only crave for more. We are here as gifts of Nature. Instead of being grateful to Existence for what we have been showered with, we complain about what we do not have.

Remember that when God does not grant us what we seek, He is doing it out of deep compassion and wisdom. He does not grant many of our prayers because He knows that far better than us. We have no wisdom when it comes to asking.

The Divine is far wiser and knows what we really need. There is a huge difference between what we want and what we need. For the next couple of days, just try living with the attitude of gratitude, with love for everyone and everything around you, with a deep completion. Automatically, you will begin to experience every person and every happening as a unique creation of Existence, as a reflection of the Divine. Just decide consciously that you will respond with love, whatever the situation may be. Just the very attitude change will bring tremendous peace and relaxation into you.

Kṛṣṇa says, when you look every single thing without differentiation, without fear or favoritism, without attachment, then you are a true renunciate, a true sannyāsi.

Death - Only A Passage

What we do not know frightens us. If we understand that death is no different from birth and that life after death may be no different from our current life, there will be no fear. This can happen when we have the experience of death while we are still alive. An important thing: How we look at death reflects a lot of the way we look at life. Our perception of death changes our way of life.

Death is feared by most of us because it is considered a discontinuity. When we realize that death is just a continuation in some other form, we will not fear death. Then the joy of birth and the sadness at death will both be seen as the same.

Our idea of birth and death is direct evidence of how we look at various situations in life. That is why understanding about birth and death is actually fundamental to leading a life of realization.

Understand, one who knows that what he sees is illusion, just a play of mind will not fear death. As long as we hold on to this illusion created by the mind that we call reality, we have a feeling of losing it when we think of death. When we see pain and pleasure as the same and are not affected by either of them, we will be free from the fear of death. Because then we realize that nothing is taken away from us when death comes.

Enlightened Masters' experience about death teaches us a lot. Bhagavān Ramana Maharishi got his enlightenment through a conscious experience of death. When Bhagavān was a young boy, one day he was just lying on his bed at his uncle's house in Madurai, South India. Suddenly he got the feeling that he was going to die. He had two choices: to resist the feeling or to go through it. He chose the second, to go through death as it is, consciously. He became enlightened after he experienced the process of death. Usually people resist, so they pass into a coma and leave the body in a state of unconsciousness. Bhagavān was courageous enough to choose the second path. He allowed death to happen without any resistance. He saw clearly one by one, the parts of his body dying. Slowly, his whole body was dead, turning into ashes. Suddenly, he realized that something remained even after that, which cannot be destroyed. At that moment, it hit him that he was pure consciousness, beyond the body and mind. He was simply a witness to the whole thing. That knowledge was tremendous and it never left him. When he came back into his body, he was Bhagavān Ramana Maharishi, the enlightened Master. When we conquer the fear of death, we conquer death itself, because death is just one more imagination. When we get over the cycle of greed and fear, we can be in equanimity in all situations in life; then we are situated in the supreme consciousness. It is then we have touched our core, our real Being.

Kṛṣṇa goes on to explain the characteristics of one who is Supreme. He says that one who is of steady intelligence, sthira buddhir asammūḍho; one who does not get caught in the play of opposing emotions or patterns like pleasure and pain, happiness and misery, is truly not deluded and is established in the truth, and in the Supreme, brahma-vid brahmaṇi sthitaḥ (5.20). He is Supreme himself.

What do we need to know to get out of the whirlpool of emotions? If we look deeply, we will see that all our emotional incompletions like fear, greed or worry, at the root, are born of an expectation for a certain situation to happen in a certain way. We live in a virtual world of fantasy and when there is a gap between reality and imagination, the trouble starts. The greater the gap, the more tension and disappointment we experience. We start to like or dislike something based on this gap. The likes and dislikes are a product of the mind, not of the being which is just bliss.

Beautifully, Kṛṣṇa says, 'An object of enjoyment that comes of itself is neither painful nor pleasurable for someone who has eliminated attachment and who is free from the dualism of self and the other and therefore, from desire.'

This is actually a sūtra, a technique that Kṛṣṇa gives. If we put our attention neither on pleasure nor on pain, but between the two, we actually go beyond both and transcend the play of the mind. What do we normally do? If we are in pain, we try to run away from it. If we are in pleasure, we try to cling onto it. Understand that both pleasure and pain are of the mind. They are based on our saṁskāras, root thought patterns from our past. They are not of the being. Instead of trying to hold onto pleasure or running away from pain, just be with it, just witness it. The nature of the mind is to move to the opposites. Using this technique, we can transcend this nature of the mind.

For example, if you have a headache, don't try to resist it. Just witness it. As the tree is there, as the night is there, so also the headache is there. On the other hand, if you are very happy, don't try to cling onto it. Whether it is happiness or pain, just be a witness to it. It is like standing in front of the sun and watching it, with no attachment to the sun rising or setting.

Be involved but be aware without resistance to life, neither rejecting nor accepting anything. When we are aware and do not resist anything, we can never be unconsciously pulled into it. Then desire cannot overcome us. We are always the Master. When we are not conscious, then we either start resisting or accepting and we get caught in the cycle of guilt and desires. After the desire gets fulfilled, we go through guilt for having succumbed to the desire. But we did not live the desire fully with completion, so we can't get out of it either. Next time, the desire happens and again we go through it incompletely and then feel guilty. The only way to get out of this vicious cycle of desire and guilt is to go through the desire with completion without any resistance to it.

Normally we either suppress or express our desires. Suppression does not lead to elimination of that desire. It temporarily blocks access, but that desire will rise with renewed vigor again. Expression also does not mean completion. Again and again, the desire will rise even after repeated expression because we rarely experience anything with completion. In expression of a desire, once we experience a desire with full awareness and declare completion with it, whether related to food, sex or material desires, we will find that the desire is fulfilled and we will not be bothered by it anymore. We will transcend the desire. It is actually that simple.

Karma is nothing but unfulfilled desire that makes us repeat the same experience again and again, simply because we do not have the intelligence to enter into that experience with complete awareness. Once we experience the situation with awareness and complete with it, we will experience what Śaṅkara experienced. We will not be the doer, the deed or the doing. We will transcend all three. We will transcend our karma. We will be supreme.

Tune In To Eternal Bliss

Kṛṣṇa advises us to turn inwards. Move away from your senses, move into your Source, He says. By nature, by our very being we are tuned inwards. By conditioning, we lose the capability to turn inwards. We will see that most children are blissful, just curious and happy to be what they are. Then unfortunately, they grow up to be adults. They lose that bliss and that natural response to turn inwards. Society teaches them to trust their senses. One who indulges in sense pleasures is just caught in the push and pull of desires and guilt. He is just under hormonal torture. Again and again, we look outside for solutions that keep us happy.

We look for fulfillment and solutions outside. However, the real solution lies inside. We need to be able to connect to our true self. We should realize that our being is blissful by nature. If we realize this, we will always be centered and complete in ourselves. He who is free from being and non-being, who is content, complete, desireless, and wise, even if in the eyes of the world he does act, does nothing.

The happiness arises from our very being, from our Self. It is unlimited eternal bliss because it cannot be stopped by any external agent, thus says Kṛṣṇa - sukham akṣayam aśnute (5.21).

The Path To Self-Realization

5.26 They who are free from lust and anger, who have subdued the mind and senses, and who have known the Self, easily attain liberation.

Kṛṣṇa says that sensory pleasures are bound to end; they do not last forever.

Generally, we are controlled by what happens outside us. Our happiness is an emotion that is created by something outside of us - a pleasant situation, the presence of someone we like, and so on. When we experience happiness due to some event outside us, be very sure, sadness is around the corner. When we experience the joy in us because of an external source, we will experience sadness once that external source is taken away from us. We always attach our happiness to something that is external to us. If these things are taken away from us, we are left with sadness. It is like a pendulum swaying from one extreme of happiness to the other extreme of sadness.

The event and the person do not cause happiness and sorrow. It is caused by our sensory perception and by the judgment based on this perception. That is why the same event that may be joyful to one is sorrowful for another and would leave a third one undisturbed. It is our attachment to that person or event and our judgment based on our patterns that creates the sorrow or happiness. The incident by itself is neutral.

There is a beginning and an end to these states of sorrow and happiness. But bliss is something that continuously happens in us for no reason. Bliss does not depend on external sources. It is inside us. Once we are centered in us, we are always in bliss. When we are constantly experiencing the inner joy or bliss, whatever happens outside us does not affect our space of bliss.

Happiness or sadness happens because of our sensory pleasures that are again a result of our mind and ego. Our ego, our false association of ourselves with various emotions is actually the cause of our misery. At the core of our beings is pure bliss. But we are functioning at our periphery and are not able to see this core. The ego is what is really meant by māyā or illusion. Yā mā iti māyā - that which does not exist but which troubles as if it exists is māyā. We don't see reality as it is because we are all the time looking at life through glasses tinted with our biased perceptions, through our limited view of life.

When we start watching these sources with awareness and complete with our root patterns, we break the chords of attachment of our state of joy with these external sources and desires. When we are aware of what we really want, this dependency on sensory pleasures breaks. When we are centered and complete in ourselves, we start taking things as and when they come.

Kṛṣṇa gives us now a beautiful technique to reach that ultimate Kṛṣṇa consciousness, to reach the beautiful space of bliss. If we can, at least once, settle inside our being, into our space of completion, when we are attacked by this incomplete emotion of desire and anger, without moving our body, without cooperating, without being taken away by that emotion, we are well-situated. This means that we achieved what has to be achieved; we are blissful in this world.

Here Kṛṣṇa says: The man who is not moved, who can tolerate the urges of material senses, check the force of desire and anger, is well-situated and he is happy in this world. He knows where he is. He knows his place. In this world, many of us don't know our place. That is why we feel uprooted. We don't feel we belong to this life. We don't feel we are at home because we don't know our place. Only a person who has gone beyond greed and fear can relax into his being. He will know what his place is in this planet Earth.

It is just the fear, not the object about which you are afraid of. You may escape anywhere but you are carrying the canopy of fear and greed with you. Wherever you go for a picnic, you open your own little canopy. There are so many places for great escapes today. These places show how much of depression people are carrying inside them. If so much entertainment is necessary, it means they are carrying so much depression inside.

Again and again, Kṛṣṇa declares, 'Let you live in the space of completion. Let you work out of bliss.' If you are complete and work out of bliss, you will create bliss for yourself and for others; you will never know what tiredness is.

Tiredness is the inner contradiction between the icchā śakti (power of desire) and kriya śakti (power of action), between your being and your action. Inside, there is a deep problem. Your greed and fear are attacking each other. If you are feeling tired, it means there is a big war going on inside you. The Mahābhārat war between fear and greed is happening within you.

Man whose consciousness is complete can never experience tiredness. Why do we feel tired? We feel tired when we are not integrated within ourselves. One half of our being wants to express itself but we have suppressed it for various societal reasons. The other half of our being is what expresses itself in the manner that we are forcing it to. Because we constantly have to put in an inauthentic effort to be what we naturally are not, we become tired at some point. When we become tired, the suppressed, unconscious half of us becomes more powerful than the conscious half and it starts dominating.

Just integrate yourself. Be with completion rather than suppressing yourself, and there will be no unconscious half to fight with. Then where is the question of feeling tired? We feel tired only when we are not completely involved in what we are doing. Become complete, integrated, and whole. Then you can never feel tired, whatever you may do.

We feel tired only when there is a gap between what we are doing and what we want to do. When we are driven by greed for something, we are caught up in the goal and the goal is something we want to achieve. What we are doing is not yet the goal and hence, we feel we are running towards the goal. Or we are driven by fear of something; we want to escape from the object of fear and hence we are not completely involved in what we are doing.

Just Be Happy From Within

Here is a beautiful sūtra, a beautiful technique from Kṛṣṇa to enter into the supreme consciousness: 'Just be happy, restful and complete from within', says Kṛṣṇa, 'yo'ntaḥ sukho antar-ārāmas tathāntar-jyotir eva yaḥ (5.24).'

Just be happy from within. Let your smile be a deep expression of the love in your being. All of us are so used to living an artificial life that we have forgotten our being. Every moment, we are continuously either in greed by running after our desires or in fear by continuously running away from something. Our happiness in every moment is measured only by greed or fear. This means we are not actually experiencing the moment of completion. We can enjoy something totally only when we are completely in it and we can be complete only when we are totally in the present moment, enjoying what we are doing here and now.

When you are in the space of completion in the present moment with full enthusiasm, you are in a state of bliss. Bliss is the state of joy that has no reason and which is not affected by the past or future. Naturally, the present blissful moment will give birth to future moments of bliss. We enter a virtuous circle rather than being caught up in the vicious cycle of fear and greed that we are now caught in.

Why do we run behind our desires or why are we afraid of something? It is because we think life has some goal to be achieved and we continuously run towards the goals. Understand, life in itself has no goal. The very life itself is the goal. The path itself is the goal. If we think the goal and the path are different, we will run towards the goal; we will run towards the horizon. Can we ever touch the horizon? The more we run towards it, we will find it receding from us, because the horizon is imaginary, it is an illusion.

If we are running behind a goal in life, we will be disappointed at the end of life. But when we see life itself as a goal, we make the path itself as the goal. So every moment is blissful. The goal is achieved every moment of our life. So every moment when we live with full completion, with full enthusiasm, with powerfulness, we actually enjoy that moment. When we are completely immersed in the present moment, we enjoy the path. When the path itself becomes the goal, we enjoy the goal also every moment.

The self-realized one is complete, powerful, active and happy because he is completely in the present moment, living in reality. The divine energy blissfully flows through him and he no longer needs to derive energy for his activities from desire or fear.

Here, Kṛṣṇa refers to the state in which we are in the peak of activity yet in the ultimate relaxation. Such a state is indeed possible and is the only state in which we can really be involved in what we are doing, and completely satisfied, complete and blissful in what we are doing.

Why Feel Responsible?

This is what Kṛṣṇa says: When we are tuned fully inwards, we no longer have any attachment to what happens outside; we are one with the All, the Existence, and we have transcended all karma. We are then in brahma nirvana, the ultimate liberation, one with Existence, and we are in nityānanda, which means eternal bliss. When we feel genuine love for others, we feel responsible for everyone, and we take up more and more responsibility. We want to enrich others and share that love with as many as people as possible.

When we are tuned inwards, we live in the present; the past and future do not exist for us. When we are in the present, we are one with Existence. We are All-in- One. We are in the space of Advaita, non-duality. We encompass everything. In this state, we are at the height of spontaneity; we are at the peak of our possibility. Spontaneity does not mean creativity. Creativity is a byproduct. Spontaneity is being in the present, being responsible for everything. Nothing is excluded. We flow out, we expand and cover.

The more responsibility we take up, the more we expand. Responsibility is something that can be easily shrugged. But if we don't shrug it and keep on shouldering it with the right reason, we will expand and the divine energy will automatically flow in us. And we can take up more and more responsibility only when we feel overflowing energy in us.

With responsibility, we harness the power of feeling. When we feel the space of responsibility, we take it up without any doubts. Usually whenever we are asked to do something, the mind comes in between and the responsibility feels like a load. Without the right context of responsibility, our mind creates dilemma. We start analyzing intellectually and logically. So at the end of it, we act out of greed or fear. As long as we intellectually weigh the situation for good and bad, the mind exists. We have to cross this barrier by completing with our greed and fear patterns. We have to cut across the wall of incompletions and enter the space of feeling the responsibility. The dilemma of wanting or not wanting to do something should not come at all. Understand, only when you complete, you will know the right reason for taking responsibility. Only then, you taking responsibility will be really useful to you. So understand, responsibility can happen in you only after completion.

Whatever happens in and around you - you ARE the source. That is why you need to take responsibility for whatever is happening in and around you. You need to take responsibility because you are responsible, and not for any other reason.

Whether you believe it or not, you ARE the source. With this clarity, out of this context, if you take responsibility, every action, whether it is taking your children to the school, attending to your calls or your business meeting, everything will become a spiritual practice leading you to jīvan mukti, living enlightenment.

When you learn responsibility, you may naturally perform well in your office, in your business, in your family. You will become responsible, no doubt. But all that should be the side effect. The main effect of you feeling responsibility should be you becoming jīvan mukta, living enlightenment!

Live this principle of responsibility. Then you will understand that all your decisions will be out of the experience, 'I am the Source.' If you function with this truth, 'I am the source, so I am responsible'; everything you do will become a spiritual practice for you to become a jīvan mukta.

5.29 One who knowing Me as the purpose of sacrifice and penance, as the lord of all the worlds and the benefactor of all the living beings, achieves peace.

Here, 'Me' refers to the supreme witnessing consciousness, the Kṛṣṇa consciousness; it is not the six-feet Kṛṣṇa frame.

For the first time, Kṛṣṇa gives a beautiful technique to move your energy from fear and greed to divine consciousness, eternal consciousness. Your fear is rooted in the svādiṣṭhāna cakra, the energy center situated two inches below the navel. Your greed is rooted in the mūlādhāra cakra, the energy center that is in the root of your spinal cord.

Kṛṣṇa gives us the technique to elevate ourselves from these two cakras to the eternal consciousness, the ājñā cakra at the brow center, where the eternal consciousness resides. When we have elevated our self to ājñā, we go beyond our ego or mind. We are all caught in the mūlādhāra and svādiṣṭhāna, fear and greed. That is why, continuously, we can watch and see that we have a sort of a tensed feeling. We will be continuously holding our mūlādhāra and svādiṣṭhāna tightly. Now, just feel yourself in your mūlādhāra area. You will see that you are tightly holding yourself in tension.

Kṛṣṇa explains how to relax that area, how to stop the fuel coming from greed and fear, and get the amṛta- dhāra (flow of nectar) from the eternal consciousness. Shutting out all external sense objects, keeping the eyes and vision concentrated between the two eyebrows, suspending the inward and outward breaths within the nostrils and thus controlling the mind, senses and intelligence, the transcendental who is aiming at liberation, becomes free from desire, fear, and the byproduct of desire, fear and anger. One who is always in this state is certainly liberated.

First, He gives the technique to enter that state. Then He says if you can stay in that state, you are liberated. Now, at least let us try to have a glimpse of this state that Kṛṣṇa explains in this verse. Step by step let us go through this meditation. Please try to enter that state.

Meditation

Please sit straight and close your eyes. Let your head, neck and backbone be in a straight line. Intensely pray to that ultimate energy, Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, to give us the experience of this meditation.

First, visualize all your senses completely shut; your eyes are completely closed. Don't allow any visualization to happen inside your being. You should close the eyes too, because we continue to see things from behind our eyelids even though we shut our eyelids. Visualize that your eyeballs have become completely dark. You are seeing only darkness in front of you.

Visualize your ears are shut. Visualize your sense of touch is shut. Visualize your smelling capacity is shut. Visualize your face to be shut. Feel deeply that all the five senses have been shut down.

Inhale and exhale as slowly as possible. Slowly, let your nostrils blow the air. Let your consciousness reside between the two eyebrows. In a very relaxed way, be aware of the space between your two eyebrows. Don't concentrate; don't tense yourself. Just be very relaxed, have a deeply relaxed awareness.

Let your mūlādhāra cakra, located at the base of your spine, be relaxed. Let your svādiṣṭhāna cakra, located just below the navel center, be relaxed. Let your whole consciousness come up to the ājñā cakra, which is between the eyebrows.

Concentrate on the space between the eyebrows.

Visualize cool, soothing light in the ājñā cakra, in the space between the eyebrows. Relax in the ājñā cakra. Forget all other parts of your body. Forget about the body, mind and the world; remember only the ājñā cakra, the space between the two eyebrows.

Go deeply into the ājñā cakra, in the space between the two eyebrows. Visualize a beautiful, cooling, soothing light in the ājñā cakra. Let you experience beautiful, blissful light in the ājñā cakra. Don't tense yourself; let your awareness be in the ājñā cakra in a very relaxed way; let your consciousness rest in the space between the two eyebrows.

Relax in the same space of eternal consciousness. Let you be beyond the body and mind. May your intelligence be awakened. Let you work from your eternal consciousness. Let you have the pleasant awareness of the ājñā cakra. Let you all have the grace of the divine consciousness. Let you be established in the eternal consciousness. Let you all be in, with and radiate eternal bliss, nityānanda.

Understand: Don't concentrate by force. Have a pleasant awareness. When you keep the pleasant awareness around your ājñā cakra, your whole energy will be directed towards the eternal consciousness. You will receive energy from eternal consciousness, from immortality, amṛtatva. You will be driven from above by the eternal consciousness. If you are driven from below by fear or greed, you are man. If you are driven from above, you are God.

Let you learn the science of how to connect yourself with the divine energy, how to be driven by the divine consciousness. Let you live all your possibilities. Let you function through the Eternal consciousness.

Thus ends the fifth chapter named Sannyāsa Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Renunciation,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 6
Dhyāna Yogaḥ

Look In and Be Complete Before Any Conclusion

The power of your words, the power of your thinking, the power of your feeling, and the power of your living, this is Dharma. Dharma is aligning yourself to the flow of the Cosmos.

Completion is creating a space which is full where you can Live. As the space of Pāṇḍavas is full with light and filled with pleasant fragrance, so is the inner space of completion full with power and filled with the fragrance of bliss - ānanda gandha, where you can live.

Reduce the incompletions you infuse on yourself; reduce the abuse you do to yourself. Reduce the mental setup of Duryodhanas on you. Duryodhanas are nothing but bunch of incompletions, no power. They were not able to handle the whole confusion and fight among themselves. So, they just jumped to the wrong conclusion, 'Let's do something!' Any decision made out of incompletion in the mood of 'let's do something' is suicide. If you do it just for yourself, it is suicide; if you do it for the family, it is homicide; if you do it for many people, it is genocide.

When you create the space of completion, every moment you create a new way of thinking, new way of feeling, new way of knowledge, new way of being, and a new way of making yourself available to society and to humanity.

Look in, create the space of completion before coming to any conclusion. This is the message of this chapter. The sixth chapter of the Bhagavad Gītā, Dhyāna Yogaḥ starts with Kṛṣṇa's words. In this chapter Arjuna is not asking any questions to Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa continues His answers from the previous chapter.

Attain The State Of Yoga

अनाश्रितः कर्मफलं कार्यं कर्म करोति यः ।
स संन्यासी च योगी च न निरग्निर्न चाक्रियः ॥ ६-१॥

śrībhagavānuvāca

sa saṃnyāsī ca yogī ca na niragnirna cākriyaḥ || 6.1 ||

6.1 Bhagavān says: One who performs actions without being attached to their outcome is an ascetic. He is a religious performer of purification of mind. One who has stopped performing any actions, one who doesn't accept the sacred fire and doesn't perform his rituals, is neither an ascetic nor a karma yogi, a sage immersed in action.

यं संन्यासमिति प्राहुर्योगं तं विद्धि पाण्डव ।

yaṃ saṃnyāsamiti prāhuryogaṃ taṃ viddhi pāṇḍava
na hyasaṃnyastasaṅkalpo yogī bhavati kaścana || 6.2 ||

6.2 O Pāṇḍava, renunciation leads to the state of yoga where one is linking oneself with the Supreme. This union with the Divine can happen only when you renounce self-interest.

आरुरुक्षोर्मुनेर्योगं कर्म कारणमुच्यते ।
योगारूढस्य तस्यैव शमः कारणमुच्यते ॥ ६-३॥ ārurukṣormuneryogaṃ karma kāraṇamucyate
yogārūḍhasya tasyaiva śamaḥ kāraṇamucyate || 6.3 ||

6.3 A person who initially wants to start practicing the yoga system laid down by the sages should carry out all activities in line with that system. Activities for all other reasons will cease.

यदा हि नेन्द्रियार्थेषु न कर्मस्वनुषज्जते ।
सर्वसङ्कल्पसंन्यासी योगारूढस्तदोच्यते ॥ ६-४॥ yadā hi nendriyārtheṣu na karmasvanuṣajjate sarvasaṅkalpasannyāsī yogārūḍhastadocyate || 6.4 ||

6.4 One is said to have attained the state of yoga when, having renounced all material desires, He neither acts for sense gratification nor engages in result-oriented activities.

Kṛṣṇa continues with what He said earlier in a little more detailed way. He says, the person who is not attached to the fruits of his action is an ascetic and a karma yogi, one who continuously does authentic work without being attached to the results.

Please understand, karma, the state of action, or sannyās, the state of renunciation, is not related to your doing. It is directly related to your being. Being a sannyāsi, a renunciate monk, is not a status, it is a state of mind. Whether you are doing karma yoga or you remain a sannyāsi is in no way going to affect you. If one is a karma yogi, one goes about doing the work that is allotted to him without attachment and without expectations. This is done even in the middle of one's life as a householder, a businessperson or an employee. The status is not of any consequence.

One's attitude, one's inner space, one's being alone matters. Here Kṛṣṇa gives the gist of the previous chapter.

Live with completion with whatever you have and just renounce what you don't have. We fantasize about all that we do not have, that is the problem. There are thousands of things that we don't have, but we live with all those things mentally. The problem is not what we have, we have got used to those things anyway. That is our reality. It is what we don't have that creates problems. Just renounce what you don't have. That is enough to solve all the problems. Then you will start living intensely with what you have.

One of the major problems we bring upon ourselves is that we chase desires and possessions. And once we have achieved what we want, we don't enjoy it. It is as if the enjoyment is only in the chase and not in the possession itself. The present has no meaning to many of us. Because of this, we miss reality, we miss true enjoyment. It is the illusion of the speculative future that draws our interest and causes misery to us.

Live with Reality and Live like God

There is a beautiful word in Sanskrit: brahmacarya. Just like many other Sanskrit words, this word has no equivalent word in English. The word has often been wrongly translated as celibacy. Brahma means Existence, reality, divinity. Carya means 'living like'. Brahmacarya refers to a person who lives like the gods, who lives with Existence, who lives with reality. Brahmacarya does not mean one who is unmarried. Brahmacarya refers to one who lives with reality, one who lives unattached. One of the four stages of life as defined by the scriptures is brahmacarya. This period of brahmacarya at Gurukul, under the Master's guidance in one's early years, provides the background to shed fantasies and live life in reality.

In today's world most of us live with fantasy. We don't live with the reality of our existence. From our childhood, we are exposed to so many different forms of media that flood us with fantasies. On physical maturity, everyone searches for an ideal person who can match their fantasy with great vigour and determination. Even if you find someone who matches your so-called ideal, when you start living with the person, life will slowly reveal that the ideal image so carefully built over many years is different from the person with whom you are living. There is always a screen of fantasy between your spouse and you, just like between life and you. You are continuously developing on life but you are not ready to look into life as it is.

A person who is mature enough to live with reality in the space of completion has achieved the state of brahmacarya. He is living with the real person or situation. He is complete in the present moment for what it is; he does not dream of how it should be. So just drop your fantasies. Live with reality. That is brahmacarya. Brahmacarya is nothing but high energy.

Brahmacarya is nothing but being authentic with high energy happening in you. Only when you have low energy, you need other person's presence in your life. Brahmacarya is nothing but being authentic with your high energy.

Here, Kṛṣṇa says, 'Just renouncing the sacred fire and not performing one's duty does not mean one is an ascetic or sannyāsi.' In those days, fire was the basis for everything, whether it was cooking or spiritual practice. For everything one needed fire. In this age, we can say, 'Don't think that by sacrificing the cell phone and laptop you become a sannyāsi or a great karma yogi.' Just like how the cell phone and laptop have become a basic necessity today, in those days agnī (fire) was a basic need in life. Just like how we are able to relate with people through the cell phone, our ancient ṛṣis (mystics) knew the techniques of relating with the higher energy through fire.

Be Complete and Renounce Your Thoughts

So here, Kṛṣṇa says that just by renouncing fire, a person cannot become a sannyāsi. Similarly, just by renouncing our cell phone in life, we cannot become a sannyāsi. The space needs to be transformed. To truly renounce, the mind has to renounce thoughts. Usually, wherever our body is, our mind is not. When we are at home, our thoughts are at the office. When we are at the office, we worry about what is happening elsewhere. When we are on vacation, we worry about work. To bring the mind to where the body is to renounce the inner chatter by completing with thoughts patterns. This is the starting point of renunciation.

Thoughts cannot be suppressed. The more we suppress them the more they erupt. We need to let go. We need to constantly bring ourselves back to where our body is, to the present space of completion, to the here and now, away from the dead past and the unborn future.

Renunciation of the past and the future, by bringing our mind to focus on the present space of completion, is true renunciation. This renunciation does not happen by giving up objects of material welfare such as the fire and the cell phone. It also does not happen by giving up what we think is superficial to spiritual progress, such as rituals. Giving these up without bringing in the true completion of consciousness is not renunciation.

In the first verse Kṛṣṇa gives the essence of the previous chapter. Now He continues. Kṛṣṇa has already said that renunciation for the sake of renunciation, renunciation of material things without renouncing desires, is of no value.

You have to renounce fantasies. These fantasies are the creation of the ego, mind, identity, root patterns or whatever name you wish to call it. This self creates up all these unreal fantasy visions, to keep you occupied and under control.

We may think that we are in control of our mind. But actually, our mind controls us. This is what Kṛṣṇa means by sañkalpa, self-interest, because the mind wishes to satisfy the senses that it operates and controls. By visualizing, by hearing, by smelling, by tasting, by touching, through the sense organs, our mind wants us to experience pleasures that will keep us under its hold. Only when we renounce the mind's control by going beyond the senses can we become a true renunciate. 'Control your senses and still your mind so that you can reach Me,' Kṛṣṇa says in earlier chapters.

When Kṛṣṇa talks about 'self', it is the small 'self', the external identity that we confuse with our Self, the real inner core, the Truth. Only when we do renounce this so-called identity, which is not the true Self, then we will perceive our self as the supreme Self that is our true identity. An ordinary person sees his own self as being the body, mind, memories, senses and the identities that he creates for himself. These are the channels through which we can project ourselves onto the outer world. Normally we create two identities. One identity called ahaṁkāra, the identity that we project to the outer world. This identity is usually based on our achievements in society, our profession, our possessions, etc. The second identity is called mamākara, the identity we project to our inner self. This identity is usually based on our ideas about our attitudes, our beliefs, and our self-esteem. Through a combination of these two identities we create an image about ourselves that we hold on to with deep conviction and belief. Our true Self is beyond all these inner and outer images.

If we don't want to be controlled by the mind, any activity that we perform to satisfy this false identity or ego should be renounced. As long as we allow our senses to feed us, we will be nurtured and controlled by sensory pleasures that satisfy our ego. Our mind will then keep us in its control.

Renunciation of these fantasies that we feel we need for self-satisfaction is yoga. Yoga is the state when our desires, expressed through sensual pleasures, dissolve. We unite with our true Self in this state. In this state, there is no gap between the Divine and us.

Whether we believe it or not, accept it or not, want it or not, we are God. We are divine. All we can do is accept it, experience it, live and powerfully express it or we can just continue to struggle and fight with it. This is the truth.

Yoga - Uniting the Body and Mind

This is the state of yoga that Kṛṣṇa talks about - Yogarūḍhasya tasyaiva śamaḥ kāraṇam ucyate (6.3), the state of true renunciation where there is no suppression. Instead, there is transformation into completion. The path is no longer towards self or sensory satisfaction. In fact, there is no 'towards' or 'goal.' The goal is the path itself. When we lead our life with no expectations, the mind cannot speculate or control us.

Kṛṣṇa says next, 'A person who initially wants to start practicing a yoga system laid down by the sages should carry out all activities in line with that system. Activities for all other reasons will then cease.' This is such a beautiful instruction for anyone doing yoga. Today, the true meaning of yoga is completely lost. Yoga is not about physical exercise or sweating in high temperatures. Its purpose is not bodily fitness. Yoga integrates body, mind and spirit. It is a journey into the inner Self, towards the Self.

In Patañjali's Aṣṭāṅga Yoga, bliss is the goal, the path, and the end result. Patañjali's system of yoga is a way of life. Starting with inner and outer regulation, yama and niyama, his system cleanses our body, mind and spirit. Just yama, which is one of the eight limbs, has five parts, one of which is satya or truth. If we practice this with integrity and authenticity, it will lead us into enlightenment. Another part is brahmacarya, which is living enlightenment or walking in completion with reality. Actually, we need to be in the eighth state of samādhi to truly be able to practice even one of the yama principles with awareness.

Discovering your root pattern and completing it is the first step towards yoga. Please understand, yoga is not just moving your body or blowing your nose. No! Yoga starts when you discover your root thought pattern and complete with it. The yoga system is a parallel system, not a sequential system. When each of its parts is acted upon with awareness, every single thing that we do will be in completion with Nature. We will automatically surrender to Nature and attain the true yogic state of samādhi.

Ahiṁsā, non-violence, is another part of the first limb, yama. Religion teaches nonviolence as a moral injunction. But no morality can be practiced. Even if we are successful, then we will be schizophrenic. If we can understand and practice, it will never be a discipline. It will be just falling in tune with Existence. Ahiṁsā should be practiced out of deep understanding and then we will start radiating it in our very walk and talk. Even animals will be attracted to us. Our very being will be a blessing to planet Earth.

One of the other rules in yama is satya, truthfulness. Truthfulness can happen in us only after we have experienced samādhi, the eighth limb. Until we attain enlightenment, whatever we think of as the truth is only a perception of our five senses, not reality. The rules of yama and niyama (discipline) will only be established firmly after we have experienced samādhi.

More than what actions you do, the space from which the actions are done and the context and reason from which the actions are done, that matter. Whether we believe it or not, accept it or not, we are divine. To realize our divine nature, ancient mystics have created this wonderful eight-fold formula of the yoga system. Yoga in modern days is practiced just for health reasons.

You can do yoga with a smaller reason and smaller context like just to have flexibility or to get out of back pain. Or you can do the same yoga with the right context of becoming in tune with Cosmos, Brahmāṅda. In what context you do yoga, that result you reap. When you practice the right reason, right results come. When you practice the same yoga with the smaller reasons, only the smaller results come. At the most, you will have good health. Good health is just a by-product of practicing yoga, not the end.

Learning yoga means bringing integrity to your body. Once we become intensely tuned to the eight-fold formula, it will become such an integral part of our being that it will become difficult to forget it even for a minute. When we practice yoga to meet with the Divine we will not treat yoga as an activity to be performed at a particular time of the day. We will live and breathe yoga. These eight limbs of yoga will influence any activity that we perform. For example, if you are speaking to someone you will constantly be aware of the need to speak the truth. You will constantly bring integrity into the words you utter to others and to yourself.

'Yogasya prathamaṁ dvāram vāng nirodhaḥ. The first step in yoga is reduction in the words inside and outside of you.' Why will the words you create be reduced when you step into yoga? Because you bring integrity and awareness into your system. Now you become responsible for the words you utter to you and to others. What will happen? Naturally, reduction in words will happen.

When you bring integrity, the words inside and outside you automatically drop, drastically. When we bring authenticity, the words will increase, and our capacity to fulfill it will also increase.

'Yogaḥ karmasu kauśalam - yoga is authenticity in action.' When authenticity is in action, it is yoga. If you are performing an activity, your awareness will be completely on that activity. You will bring authenticity in every level - the way you do business, the way you maintain relationships, the way you take responsibility, the way you think, cognize, and respond to the world, the way you behave with you, with your body; with everything bring authenticity.

The word 'yoga' in Saṃskṛit means to unite or to become one with. Actually, yoga refers to the process of uniting. What is important in yoga is the journey, the path, and the process. For whatever purpose, with whatever intention we move our body or bend our body, that idea, that intention is completely inserted or recorded into our body and mind, our bio-memory. This may appear startling to us but it is the truth.

Whatever thought pattern and intention, the saṁskāra, you hold when you move your body, that saṁskāra will get inserted into you and will start expressing itself in your body. For example, if you move your body with the intention and the strong belief that you will have health, in whichever way you move your body, health will simply happen. With any physical movement, including just sitting, if you strongly believe that you will have health, health will simply happen in you.

This leads us to an important conclusion: the method in which we do postures in yoga is not important. It is the thought, the idea with which we move our body in the posture that matters. Understand that the body itself is made out of bio-memories and muscle-memories. Whether we believe it or not, we are an expression of our own self-hypnosis. Here is a simple technique to experience this truth: For just ten minutes in the morning, visualize your whole body as a bliss bag filled with bliss. Then move the body in whatever way you want. The body will start working, experiencing and expressing the bliss.

We saw how to move from 'doing' and 'having' to 'being'. Usually we are stuck in 'having'. We are constantly focused on our possessions, our status. It is always 'I' and 'mine'. Loss of possessions affects our ego and identity deeply.

A slightly more intelligent person moves from 'having' to 'doing', from passivity to activity. Then, from doing we are supposed to move to 'being', from activity to active-passivity. This shift to 'satva', active passivity, helps us evolve spiritually as we move deeper into completion. In the last chapter we learned the technique from Kṛṣṇa for moving from fear and greed into divine consciousness and bliss.

In this verse, Kṛṣṇa says: 'One must raise himself with the help of his own being and not degrade himself. The being is the friend of the conditioned soul and his enemy as well.' You are your own friend and you are your own enemy. If you know the technique of how to lift yourself by yourself, you will become a friend of your Self. If you let yourself down, you will become an enemy of yourself.

When we start anything new, we will always have three phases. The first is resistance. The second is avoidance. We just avoid, neither caring nor resisting. The third is acceptance. This is the way anything starts. Similarly, when we start doing anything inside our system, we start growing in the same way.

First, resistance: we will repeatedly fall. We will forget. Our system will resist. We will try to create complications and complaints and all possible arguments. Sometimes, if we can't follow the teachings of Kṛṣṇa, we start blaming Kṛṣṇa.

When we can't practice these teachings, we start justifying ourselves. Since we are unable to follow, we start criticizing Kṛṣṇa. This is the best way to escape and avoid the teachings of Kṛṣṇa. When our being resists, if we allow the resistance to grow, we are our worst enemy. This is what Kṛṣṇa means by saying, 'May you lift yourself by yourself. May you raise yourself by yourself' If we don't, we will be our worst enemy. It is up to us to enrich ourselves as best friend or to hurt ourselves as our worst enemy.

Please listen: Nobody can hurt you unless you allow him or her to. Nobody can help you unless you allow him or her to.

May you lift yourself by yourself. May you lift yourself to your Self. Again and again, these Masters stress the same point. If you have fallen, if you have failed while practicing these words, the teachings or the meditation techniques, if you have forgotten, don't worry. Again and again, lift yourself. Don't give up on you. Don't feel depressed and don't have guilt. Don't get dejected thinking you will not be able to do it. Don't doubt your self. Again and again, lift yourself.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'May you lift yourself by yourself. Nobody can do anything unless you lift yourself - uddhared ātmanātmānaṁ nātmānaṁ avasāyadet.'

Don't give up on you and people. Internalize this important truth - do not give up on yourself and people. Even if people fail a hundred times, continue to work with them. When you are frustrated at other people's failure, understand that it is nothing but your frustration towards your own failure. If we turn our back on people, we are not living dharma, because when we give up on others, we have also given up on ourselves. So never give up on you and people.

Here, Kṛṣṇa says, 'May you liberate yourself by yourself. Unless you liberate yourself, nobody else can liberate you; uddhared ātmanātmānaṁ nātmānaṁ avasāyadet. If you help yourself, you will be the greatest friend for yourself. If you don't, you will be your worst enemy - ātmaiva hy ātmano bandhur ātmaiva ripur ātmanaḥ'

Conquer Your Senses, The Self is Already Achieved

Just try this tomorrow morning. Just decide whether you want to face your normal routine with bliss or with suffering, with joy or with the usual long face. Decide for yourself. You have the choice. And whether you go with a long face or with a smiling face, the routine is going to be the same.

Pain is inevitable; suffering is a choice. We have one thing that we can choose and that is our inner space. We have complete freedom to create our inner space. That is purely our own decision with no one to blame. Pain is independent of suffering. Pain is an external thing, suffering is an internal choice.

Hell or heaven is our conscious choice. People always have another question, 'What do I do if my mind says, I want to suffer?' Then suffer, that's all. What is there in it? When our mind wants to enjoy suffering, then even suffering becomes an enjoyment for us.

So when you get up every morning, ask your mind, 'What do you want today?' If your mind chooses bliss, just tell your mind, 'Be blissful. That's all!' This single conscious decision can change the quality of your life. But don't make a commitment to do this for three days or one week. You will forget. Decide every day for just that 24 hours. People will immediately think, 'Let me decide for my whole life today itself.' No! You will forget. You will be back with the same face again tomorrow. No, don't decide for your whole life. Decide only for one day. Only then will you be able to maintain it.

When we conquer the mind, happiness and distress are both one and the same and we are not touched by it. Now, Kṛṣṇa has an important point here. He says, 'For one who has conquered his Self, has already attained the supreme bliss, jitātmanaḥ praśāntasya paramātmā samāhitaḥ, for him happiness and distress, heat and cold, honor and dishonor are all the same, śītoṣṇa-sukha-duḥkheṣu tathā mānāpamānayoḥ (6.7).'

Throughout this chapter Kṛṣṇa speaks about the senses. How can happiness and distress, heat and cold, honor and dishonor be the same for a man? How is it possible?

The first thing is that when our senses do the work, we decide 'yes' or 'no' only based on our past experiences, the experiences with which we have grown or the words with which we have conditioned our mind and memory. Our intelligence decides based on our root thought patterns which are the incompletions of our mind and memory.

Whenever our mind is caught in dualities, again and again we fall back to our dilemma, to our nature, to our suffering, to our instinct level. Here Kṛṣṇa says the person who has achieved bliss is not affected by heat or cold and joy or sorrow - śītoṣṇa-sukha-duḥkheṣu. How do we reach that state? First, understand that conquering the senses doesn't mean controlling the senses or destroying the senses. If we try to control or destroy the senses, we will only struggle and suffer more and more. If we try to control our body, that is not going to work either.

Kṛṣṇa says beautifully, 'For one who has conquered the self - jitātmanaḥ.' When He says self, He means the whole cognition where the decision-making happens. Mind-Intelligence-Ego is the spot where the decision-making is happening. When we just try to conquer the senses, we will fail again and again. If we fail two or three times we will lose the confidence to try again. If we fail in a fight with our senses, we will automatically start thinking that it is impossible, and we will lose confidence. We need intelligence to progress in this path.

We need to learn the science of creating the space of completion to conquer the senses. If we try to work from the wrong side out of incompletion, from the side of the senses, we will never be able to succeed. If we try to create more pressure on the cooker we will not be able to open the cooker lid. First, we need to put out the fire, the energy supply. Putting out the fire is doing completion with our root patterns. The ego or root patterns or the intelligence, the place from where we make decisions, is continuously supplying energy to our senses. So all we need to do is to work at the level of the mind and not at the level of the senses to become jitātmanaḥ. If we try to work at the level of the senses, we will create only more and more perverted desires, leading to more and more incompletions.

Nirāhara Saṁyama, liberating people from their food patterns, is awakening, rekindling the power of your bio-memory to produce energy and food directly from air, water and space. It is not fasting. An important rule in this process is the moment one feels hungry or tired, one has to start eating. One cannot use his or her willpower. Understand, if you fast, in the dream you will be dreaming as if you are feasting, eating. But, Nirāhara Saṁyama participants do not dream of eating food and feasting. Why? Because they are initiated into the most practical method of completing with all the root patterns. They don't suppress their hunger, they just go beyond it, they go beyond their senses.

Understand, if we suppress something, it will automatically express itself in our dreams. Dreams are nothing but expressions of our suppressed desires and fears. Not only that, it expresses itself in a perverted way. If we do completion with our root patterns and out of completion when we enjoy with the senses, we will never become tired. But when we suppress our senses, our being suffers in our dreams.

Now there is a new concept called 'fear stroke'. These are imaginary fears, such as imagining ghosts lurking in dark corners, or the sudden ringing of the telephone, etc. We also get these fear strokes in dreams. If we are suffering with incompletions at the dream level, there is something seriously wrong at the mind-intelligence level. We are trying to control the senses instead of conquering the mind. Instead of removing the fire, we are trying to create more pressure in the cooker. All we need to do is to work on the mind, do completion to remove the fire, to stop the supply of fuel to the senses.

Again and again complete. Understand, if you have dreams, whatever type of dreams they may be, whether they are good or bad, you are not worthy of sannyās yoga or karma yoga. Sannyāsi is a person who should be in that level of completion where no dreams happen in him. The day you start sleeping without dreams, you have become a real sannyāsi, a real karma yogi.

Dreams are nothing but the incompletions expressing in your inner space when you are unconscious. Incompletions expressing when you are unconscious are dreams. Incompletions expressing when you are conscious is thinking.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'For one who has conquered the mind, jitātmanaḥ.' He means that this applies to one whose mind has learned the right cognition of completion. If our intelligence and memory are filled with past incomplete memories, we cannot make correct decisions. Don't think the mind makes decisions in a logical manner. For example: when you see the Master, if you have had any problems with any other person who was wearing this same color robe in the past, suddenly that memory will be awakened. Then, the intelligence is not even ready to sit and listen. Immediately, our ego gives the order to leave. This is what we call prejudice.

A man whose senses are complete, meaning one who is not driven by his senses, has the ability to make decisions with clarity from the pure space of completion. Such a being is jitātmanaḥ - the conqueror of the mind and the self.

Fountain of Bliss is Within You

We can never achieve bliss by controlling the senses. We can only achieve bliss by controlling the mind by completing with our root thought patterns, which give birth to the mind. By changing the servants, we can't change the leader. But by changing the leader we can change the servants. The mind is the leader or the master who is making decisions and leading the senses. So all we need to do is work on completing with the mind, not the senses.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'One who has conquered the mind achieves the Paramātman (divine Self), jitātmanaḥ praśāntasya paramātmā samāhitaḥ (6.7).'

We don't need to achieve bliss. It is always there within us. If it has to be achieved, there is every possibility it can be lost. If it can be lost, what is the guarantee it will be there forever? Anything, if it has to be specially achieved, is not worth achieving. But if it is our very nature, then it becomes easy. Kṛṣṇa says that all we need to do is conquer our mind. We don't need to achieve anything.

The fountain of bliss is continuously happening in us. Our very life energy is bliss. Unless we have the bliss energy in us, we cannot inhale and exhale. But we are stopping the bliss fountain again and again. All we need to do is stop the stopping process. We don't even need to create anything or achieve anything. Kṛṣṇa says that we just have to conquer the mind because the Self has been already achieved and we are with it. All we need is completion with our Self.

Here is a small story to explain how happiness and sorrow are in no way related to the outer world but to the inner world.

An old man went to a nearby city for some work. When he was coming back to his village, from a distance he suddenly noticed that his house was on fire. He started shouting, screaming and rolling on the ground and weeping.

His son came to him and said, 'Dad, don't worry. Don't you remember, we sold that house just yesterday?'

Immediately, the old man sat up and wiped his tears. The sorrow just disappeared. In ten minutes, his other son came to him and said, 'Dad, yes, we have sold it, but we are yet to get the money.'

Again the man started rolling on the ground and weeping, 'Oh, I don't know what I will do now. I don't know how to save myself.'

Some ten minutes later, his wife came on the scene and said, 'Don't worry, just this morning I saw that the money was deposited to us.'

Kṛṣṇa says one more important thing about heat and cold. All we need to do is stop resisting. Just try this experiment: the moment you feel the cool breeze, don't create the idea, 'It is cold, I may catch a cold, I may have wheezing or sinus problem.' Just don't create such words.

The words you give to yourself can be nectar or poison. The words you constantly repeat to yourself, have to be enriching you, exciting you and enlightening you. The words you give to you are āhara (food), what you consume to create life in you. The words you give to yourself are more important than the words you give to others. Because the flow of your life – the level of contentment that you feel in your life and the experience of fulfillment that you feel in your life, everything depends on the words that you have given to you. Whenever we repeat something, we create that quality in us.

Here is a simple experiment you can do: Close your eyes and repeat ten times: 'Śānti, Śānti, Śānti,' you will have peace inside (Śānti means peace in Saṃskrit). The quality of peace will start happening in you. In the same way, if you repeat the names of diseases, you will start creating those diseases in you.

Whatever we think, we express. We need to do only one thing: Work to bring completion to the mind. Do completion with your thought patterns. Just liberate the mind with completion. Then our whole system will be purified. Our senses will be reconstructed. Kṛṣṇa gives us a beautiful technique to work on the mind.

He says one more important truth, 'Honor and dishonor will be the same - māna-apamānayoḥ.' This is very difficult to believe. Cold and heat or hot and sweet can be the same. We can even accept that. But honor and dishonor, how can the two be the same? A single word thrown at us is enough to anger us and hurt our honor.

A thought pattern is a pre-defined way of responding to any situation based on a powerful past experience like failure, rejection, being punished, being subjected to abuse or witnessing the death of a loved one. During such moments of crisis, you create an idea about yourself and life - like 'I am weak' or 'I am a failure' or 'Nobody loves me' or 'Life is dangerous, so I have to be very careful.' Almost all root thought patterns are negative, even the ones which may lead to success in your life, because they are born out of your feeling of powerlessness.You have many thought patterns, but a root thought pattern is one of the few defining thought patterns that are continuously running your life without your knowledge.

Align Your Images and Go Beyond Duality

Even the conflicts among your identities are nothing but the result of your root thought patterns. If you have a certain idea about yourself inside, but you project a different personality outside, that is inauthenticity. If you look deep, all your problems arise from conflicts among your dentities. When any of your dimensions is out of alignment with the others, it causes disease, suffering and incompletion in your life.

In the Inner Awakening Program, the first session is about the understanding of root thought patterns. It is about why we get depressed, why we are in conflict, why we repeatedly fall into a powerless state. It is because our energy source is others' certificates. We don't have any self-respect and self-completion. We constantly live in self-doubt, self-hatred and selfdenial. If others' opinions about us are good, we think we are great. If others' opinions about us are not good, we immediately lose self-completion and fall into self-denial. If our idea about ourselves is 'nobody loves me', then we project the outer personality of 'I am very loving person' or 'I am very friendly person.' This is inauthenticity.

But our root pattern is—we don't even love ourselves. That is why there is so much of selfhatred. We don't have any self-respect, only self-hatred, self-denial. That is the reason for the wars within and around us.

Living is a power. If we want to live, we must learn how to stand on our own two feet, learn how to be complete with ourselves, how to raise ourself by ourself without giving up on us and others. This is the science of completion that is taught and transmitted experientially in the Inner Awakening program.

As of now, our source of energy is others' opinions or others' image about us. If somebody tells us, 'You are really great,' we may project an outer image of acting humble and try our best to say, 'No, no, I am not,' but what happens inside us? Our life image, the expectation from others' and life says, 'Please tell me a little more!' And our inner image may feel, 'I am a failure' or 'I am not good enough.' Outside we feel shy but inside our mind we feel powerless, and that powerlessness makes us want them to go on praising us to fill our incompletion within.

Please understand, all these identities you carry are actually thought patterns that you carry about you. Even others' image about you is an idea that you have created in them. So you are the creator of all your identities. Understand?

Now, when one identity is fighting with another identity, how can your thinking be focused? All your energy is going to be deposited in our bank account.'

Again the man got up and wiped his tears and became perfectly normal!

If you notice, it is the same situation and the same person. But when he thinks the house is his, he is suffering, and when he thinks it is not his, he is liberated. So what gives us suffering? It is just this single thing: thinking that something is 'mine'. The habit of thinking, 'mine', 'mine'.

We always complain about the senses. No, we are corrupting them. Don't put the responsibility on the senses. Just look into your life. It might be late at night, even two a.m., but we will still watch our baseball or cricket game on television. Our eyes are begging for some rest, but we continue to watch the game. We abuse our eyes, our senses because we want to enjoy ourselves. Please listen, it is this pattern: 'What is there for me?' This 'I', 'I', 'I' is where we start abusing the senses. All we need to do is control the mind, not the senses.

Understand, our thoughts create our senses. Don't think we are living with what we have. We create what we want to have. Our thoughts are so powerful that they can just change the whole body. For example, just think of one thought that creates disturbance inside you. Or think of a person who took money from you and has not returned it. Immediately, we experience the change happening in our system. Our blood boils, our blood pressure rises, our heart rate and pulse rate rise. A single thought can change the whole body chemistry.

Our body is created only by our thoughts. In Bharat there is a great science called sāmudrikā lakṣaṇa. Just by seeing the body-language - the face, the body, the way of standing, sitting and walking, the trained sage can tell everything about the person's mind. This is because he knows the secret that the mind creates the body. The body is the outer expression of the mind. The mind is the inner experience of the body. If our mind changes, our body can be changed and our whole system can be changed.

A man whose mind is clearly reprogrammed according to spiritual ideas can completely change his senses. As of now, our mind is programmed for misery. It is looking outward. If we can reprogram our mind to look inward, towards bliss, our entire sense experience can be changed. All we need to do is to reprogram our mind to look-in and be complete. This is the gist of this whole chapter.

be used in reconciling your fighting identities. When all your identities or 'images' are in tune, all your thinking will be aligned in one direction. Your thinking becomes clear and sharp, like a laser beam. You will awaken the power of thinking. With authenticity, there is no more space for unconscious thinking and living, because you will always be aware of the causes and effects that are playing in your life.

Winner of Senses is the Self-realized One

Kṛṣṇa says, 'A person whose mind is content because of spiritual knowledge, who has subdued his senses and to whom stone and gold are the same, and who is satisfied with what he has, is said to be established in Self-realization and is called an enlightened being'

jñāna-vijñāna tṛptātmā kūṭa-stho vijitendriyaḥ | yukta ity ucyate yogī sama-loṣṭrāśma-kāñcanaḥ || 6.8 ||

First we should understand why Kṛṣṇa is speaking of all these qualities of a Master. These qualities are techniques. If we practice them we will reach the same enlightened state.

There are three things we need to understand here: First, experience comes out as expression. Second, the quality of experience and the quality of expression are very closely associated with one another. And third, a very important thing, is that if you concentrate on the expression, you will reach the experience. Here, again and again, Kṛṣṇa speaks about how an enlightened person lives and the qualities that an enlightened person expresses, so that we can meditate on it. When we begin internalizing these ideas in our lives, we can reach the consciousness of an enlightened being. When we contemplate upon these ideas, we start expressing them naturally and they sink into our being.

Kṛṣṇa says repeatedly, 'Vijitendriyaḥ' - one who has subdued and won his senses. This whole chapter is just about the senses, indriya. Kṛṣṇa gives us a beautiful technique to heal the problem. He gives us a method to complete with the root thought pattern and go beyond. All we have to do is understand the root thought patterns; understand where we are caught and where our incompletions lie.

Beyond the ego or root patterns we have the ātman, the Self. Just the presence of the ātman or the light of the ātman radiates and makes our ego work. The whole trouble is when we doubt, judge for ourselves and start thinking, 'What is there for me? How am I going to gain or to lose from this?' Here is where the root problem starts. If the ego and the intelligence are removed from the system, the Self starts radiating its energy directly through the senses.

That is why enlightened people have sharp senses. Their senses are not contaminated. Whether it is their vision or their listening, it will be sharp and deep because it is not corrupted by the root patterns. Only a person whose being is clear and complete will have pure senses. A man who continuously uses his senses abuses them. He will not have energy or tejas in his senses. Here the word 'equal' is used, but the exact translation of the word 'sama' should be 'unique'. When we understand that everyone is unique, we respect him or her. Sometimes when we say we treat everyone equally, we start disrespecting everybody equally. We are not all the same. We are all unique.

When we understand that each one of us is unique, we will start enriching every being. Understand, even our enemy is necessary for our life. Just like our friends, our enemies also may be playing a role in our life. When we understand that each and every being is unique, we will see everybody with the same mind or in the same way.

One more thing that Kṛṣṇa says here is about 'the pious and the sinners, sādhṣv api ca pāpeṣu'. Be very clear, there is no such thing as sin, except calling human beings 'sinners'. Kṛṣṇa rightly states that the enlightened being sees only divine consciousness in everyone and so can never label anyone as being pious or a sinner. Understand: God accepts each one of us as we are.

Controlling The Mind

6.14 Let him sit with an unagitated mind, free from fear and in tune with Existence, controlling the mind, focusing it on Me and making Me the supreme goal.

In these verses Kṛṣṇa gives directions for the practitioner of yoga, the yogi. There are instructions about both the state of the mind and the state of the body.

Kṛṣṇa repeats the importance of controlling our senses again and again. Why?

Senses are our doors to the external world. As long as they are open and uncontrolled, we are immersed only in the external world. It is impossible to understand our true reality when we are studying the external world. We may become a great scientist or a wealthy businessman by observing the outer world, but never an enlightened person. For this path, looking inwards is the only way.

Unclutch and Become Liberated

Controlling the senses requires controlling the mind. Controlling the mind requires control of thoughts. Controlling the thoughts requires integrity. When we continuously live integrity, we will become aware of the thoughts and processes happening in our inner space.

And constantly listening to our own inner space is the beginning of integrity. If our inner space says that there is nothing more to listen, if only silence is there, then that is the end of integrity. We have achieved integrity. When we start listening to our inner space, we start integrity and when we listen to only silence from our inner space, we have achieved integrity. As long as we are hearing something from our inner space, it is lack of integrity.

Go on listening. Even while you are sitting, driving, talking or walking, listen to you. Also listen to you, when you are talking. It is listening to you that is going to bring integrity to you. Listen. Untiringly listen. Intensely bring integrity to your life. If we sit for a few minutes and intensely listen to and analyze our thoughts, we will find that there is no connection between one thought and another. There is no logic in our thinking process. By their very nature our thoughts are illogical, unconnected and irrational. Thoughts keep swinging from past to future and back to the past.

We need to do two things to control our thoughts. First, we need to stay in the present moment by refusing to move to the past and future and second, we need to disconnect thoughts. This is Unclutching. We need to be aware that thoughts are not inherently connected. We connect them into a shaft of joy or sorrow. These shafts do not exist at all. So unclutch and become liberated. Staying without thoughts is not possible; just witness thoughts. Understand that thoughts are unconnected. Detach yourself from the emotional baggage of the thoughts. If we detach ourselves from the regrets of the past and the speculations about the future we will automatically rise into the present.

We cannot live without desires. If anyone tells us that we can reach Enlightenment through elimination of desires, it is incorrect. First of all, we are already enlightened. Our inner Self knows it is connected to the Divine. We are just not aware of it, that's all. If we are already there, how can we achieve it? Second, desires are energy. We cannot inhale and exhale without the desire to live. Simply dying will not give us the experience.

That is what Kṛṣṇa talks about here - dropping the attachment and possessiveness to desires, not the desire itself. It is the feeling of 'mine,' the desire to possess, that creates the feeling of 'I,' not the other way around. Our identity is made up of all the things that we want, that we desire, that we are attached to. These constitute our mental make-up. The seeds of desire and embedded memories are the stuff our package of 'I' is made of. Once the feeling of possession, the feeling of 'mine' disappears, it is possible to shed our identity as well. When we are free of the feeling of 'mine' and 'I', when we are not attached or attracted to external objects, when we are not led by our senses, we have steadied the mind and senses. To facilitate this, Kṛṣṇa stipulates the conditions.

We should go to a secluded place. Why? Whatever said and done, in the house, the phone ring, somebody may knock or some salesperson may call. A secluded place is really just a means to move us away from these disturbances. Śrī Ramakrishna continuously recommends in his books that every person should retire from the regular activities at least for two or three days a month, or at least once in six months, and re-align himself towards the higher ideals.

The kuṣa (a grass ideal to sit on and meditate), deerskin and all those things are like insulation, so that the earth will not absorb the energy we create. But now we don't have to bother about that, since we usually sit in a chair, raised a little from the ground. The seat should neither be too high nor too low and it should be comfortable. That's all. The most important thing to be aware of in any meditation is to be relaxed. We cannot meditate in discomfort. Sthira (stable) and sukha (pleasurable) are the basic essentials of any meditation posture.

Here Kṛṣṇa updates the technique that He gave earlier. Here He gives three more instructions:

1. Head, spine and neck should be in a straight line.
2. We should fix our eyes on the tip of the nose. If we look at the tip of the nose, naturally, our awareness will settle on the third eye. Our concentration will settle on the ājña cakra (the brow energy center).
3. We should meditate on 'Me' as the supreme goal.

These are simple, commonsense instructions. Keeping the head, neck and spine, all in one line, helps in two ways. Firstly, it prevents us from dropping off to sleep. If we doze, our neck will drop, and we will no longer be steady. Secondly, as long as the head, neck and spine remain steady and vertical, the flow of pranic energy, the life-giving energy, through the energy pathways will be unblocked and smooth.

Whether we close our eyes fully or half close them, it is important that we disconnect from the external world. When the eyes are focused on the tip of the nose, they are not looking at external objects and ninety percent of sensory inputs are cut off. In addition, the focus is on the third eye between the brows, which, when energized, dissolves the ego block.

Finally, Kṛṣṇa says, 'Focus on Me—manaḥ saṁyamya mac-chitto. Make Me the Supreme goal - yukta āsīta mat-paraḥ (6.14).' He means our true Self. If we like, we can meditate on the form of Kṛṣṇa, with a flute and peacock feather. But I always prescribe going beyond the form. Go into your being. Of course, when we enter into our third eye, automatically we will go beyond the form. We will start meditating on the formless energy that is beyond the form.

6.19 As a lamp in a place without wind does not waver, so also the yogi whose mind is controlled remains steady, engaged in yoga, in the Self.

Kṛṣṇa talks here about control of the mind and being established in the Self. He talks about the path and the goal of yoga. The first line of Yoga Sūtras starts with 'yogaḥ citta vṛtti nirodhaḥ.' It means: Yoga is cessation of the mind. The very first line gives the path and the goal of yoga. The word yoga means uniting with the Divine. To reach the Ultimate, the goal and the path is the practice of Yoga.

We have two lives in us. One is the life we want to live – the dream. The other is the life in reality – the life we are living. The meeting of these two lives is Yoga. You can unite the two either by reducing the depth of fantasies or by increasing the expression of your energy so that reality can come closer to the dream. If you reduce the depth of the fantasy, your expectation, the dream plane and the reality plane will come closer together. On the other hand, if you increase the energy expressed through reality, the reality plane will come closer to the dream plane. The meeting and merging of these two planes is Yoga.

The goal is uniting with the Ultimate or experiencing the ultimate spiritual energy, or the Divine and realizing our inherent nature. The path is dropping the mind, which means going beyond thoughts. We are spiritual beings having a human experience; we are not human beings having a spiritual experience. This is the truth. Bliss is our very nature. All that we need to do is go back to the source and realize our true nature.

In the same way, if we hold on to an object that we think gives us bliss, we will create an attachment to that object. But the experience of bliss is different from the object. Bliss is beyond attachment to any object, material or spiritual. Bliss is beyond the pairs of opposites. When we are happy due to some pleasurable event or person, the momentary joy comes because the number of our thoughts comes down when we meet the person. When the number of our thoughts comes down, bliss happens in us. But the bliss itself comes only from our own being, not from the person who we met. In fact, it continuously happens within us, irrespective of anything that goes on outside. Then why do we not feel the bliss continuously? It is because we are under the control of the mind, which needs the pairs of opposites to survive. We can go beyond the mind.

When we are completely in reality, in the present, we are complete with Existence and we are in bliss. This is eternal bliss. 'Nitya' or 'eternal' means the past, present and future all put together, because it is beyond time. Being in the present is what eternity is. The present blissful moment gives birth to the next moment, which will be blissful. But if we try to look for bliss in the future, thinking that we can do various things to create a blissful future, it will never happen. When we are not in reality now, we are creating the blissful future from our fantasies. So come to terms with reality here and now and be blissful; automatically the future will also be blissful.

Bliss is like the water in a river. We can keep our hands open in it and enjoy it. But if we try to hold the water with closed hands, it will simply flow away from us leaving our hands empty. If we want to be in eternal bliss, we need to be blissful this very moment. We should not bother about whether we had bliss in the past or whether we will have it in the future. Just be blissful now.

When Kṛṣṇa talks about the mind and the senses being controlled, He is not talking about suppressing the mind and the senses. That is impossible to do. People who claim to renounce the world and its material aspects still cling to desires. Their efforts result in misery. Instead of directing our senses towards external objects and the pleasure derived from these objects, it is possible to turn our focus inwards and experience inner joy. Once the senses and the mind discover this inner joy, they will give up their attachment to external pleasures. Suppression never works; what works is completion.

To be balanced in whatever we do and to act without attachment is the path of a yogi. Whether it is eating or sleeping or working, we should be sensitive to our body's intelligence. Understand, when we are complete, we will be sensitive in all our actions. Only when we are not complete or conscious will we be caught in confusion.

How do we know what is too much or too little? Here, Kṛṣṇa actually refers to our body intelligence. We do not trust our inherent body intelligence. We run our body according to the mind or according to our desires and senses. Otherwise, why would we stay up in the night watching television when our body is begging for some sleep? Why would we overeat? Has anyone seen any animal ever overeat? They eat according to their body intelligence. When the body signals that it needs food, they eat. When the body signals that it needs sleep, they sleep. We have forgotten how to relate with our own body intelligence.

After eating, we should feel energetic. But do we feel energetic after lunch? Why do we feel lazy and sleepy after lunch? It is because we do not eat the right type and amount of food. Most often, we don't need to eat the amount we do, for our body to run. Just try this for a few days: When you eat, eat just enough until you are about full but not completely full. Try this for a few days and you will see a difference.

That is why even a few minutes of meditation can actually refresh us as much as a few hours of sleep, because we access the same energy of the causal body through meditation. We should trust our body intelligence and just try to live by becoming sensitive to the body, rather than be driven by the mind, the senses.

Kṛṣṇa talks about āhāra in these verses. Āhāra in Sanskrit means food. It is the food that is taken in through our five senses, not just the mouth. Pratyāhāra, one of the eight parts of yoga, is the control of sensory inputs. It means going beyond these āhāra, beyond the sense objects, so that the higher level of consciousness can be awakened. When we move away from the senses and experience bliss, we will automatically realize that what we experience through external sense objects is not bliss. What we experience through the senses can be called pleasure or joy. That is why, the opposite of joy that is pain, is bound to follow this temporary pleasure. Bliss is beyond the pairs of opposites like pleasure and pain; it is not related to external incidents or people. It is an internal happening.

The main aim of all our yoga and meditation techniques is to reach the level of our being. When we reach the being, we are in 'nitya ānanda' or 'eternal bliss'. We are in union with the Divine. Bliss is actually what we are running after but we think it can be achieved through money, comforts, relations and what not. We do not realize that all these objects only give us temporary states of pleasure and happiness. Our inherent nature is bliss and that is the reason why we are constantly searching for this state of bliss. When we realize that bliss is happening inside us all the time, the desires will drop automatically. You cannot drop desires or suppress them because they will surface again with greater intensity.

When we are aware of our actions, we can never be addicted to anything. Be very clear, all addictions, whether smoking or drinking, drugs or anything else, cannot exist if we are conscious and aware when we are engaged in the action. We try to suppress the desire instead of doing completion with it, and that is where the problem starts. An addiction has power over us because of a feeling of guilt or regret, or a feeling of unfulfillment.

When we drop the guilt pattern by doing completion, many of our repetitive negative behavior patterns drop automatically. Moreover, we cannot consciously send something harmful into our system. We cannot consciously inhale harmful smoke into our system. Completion is the key to bring the mind under control, because then we become the master of our mind, instead of the mind being our master. Normally, our mind oscillates between the past and the future just like the flame of a lamp that's wavering in the wind. When the same lamp is placed in a windless place, it stops flickering. By nature, the mind is in dilemma. We cannot suppress it or control it just by allowing it to wander either. All we can do to still the mind is to stop bothering about it, just witness it and complete with it. So just relax.

Be in the Present to be Complete

The moment we decide to stay in the present space of completion, the mind stops flickering. When the mind does not flicker and stands still in the present, then we reach the state of 'no-mind'. In this state of 'no-mind,' we don't creates, sustain, or destroy any thought. We relax from all these three things into the space of no-mind.

Our mind is like a lake. When we throw a stone in a lake, many ripples will be created. If we want to stop these ripples, we cannot put our hand in the lake to try to smoothen out the ripples. This is what we end up doing when we try to still our minds. Instead if we just watch the lake, and ensure no more stones are thrown in, the ripples will disappear and the lake will become still. If we just relax and watch our mind with complete awareness, then no new thoughts will be created.

Life is like the churning of the ocean of milk where we are churned, pulled towards the desires and pushed away from the fears. There are various products that emerge out of the churning, out of the decisions and choices we make in life. Some of these products appear pleasing while others appear dangerous like poison. When we exist with responsibility without taking in the poison or throwing it out, meaning without running towards the desires or running away from the fears, we become Śiva and live life blissfully as Nityānanda, irrespective of what comes our way.

Self Is Satisfied In the Self By The Self

6.20 In yoga, the mind becomes quiet and the Self is satisfied by the Self in the Self.

6.21 Supreme bliss is grasped by intelligence transcending the senses. The person who knows this is based in reality.

6.22 By attaining that Supreme, one does not consider any other gain as being greater. By being established in the Supreme, one is not shaken by the greatest misery.

6.23 When yoga is practiced with determination without deviating, the misery by contact with the senses is removed.

saṅkalpaprabhavānkāmāṃs tyaktvā sarvānaśeṣataḥ
manasaivendriyagrāmaṃ viniyamya samantataḥ || 6.24 ||

6.24 Giving up completely all the fantasies born of the mind, one can regulate all the senses from all the sides by the mind.

Kṛṣṇa talks about two important things: practice with determination and practice without deviating from the prescribed way. Both are key elements to experience yoga. After a few days of practice it is easy to fall into inertia, tamas, and give up on ourselves. Our mind has been programmed with our old routine for years and will will draw us back to the old ways. This is where determination is needed.

Determination driven by the curiosity and the quest to see and experience the truth is what will give us the energy to practice yoga. Kṛṣṇa emphasizes here that yoga should be practiced in the prescribed way. All eight parts of yoga need to be practiced, simultaneously.

Even one part of Patañjali's Aṣtāṇga Yoga will take many lifetimes to achieve, given the modern man's mindset. Satya, truth, is a part of yama, the first of the eight of Aṣtāṇga Yoga. If we consistently practice truthfulness alone, we will reach samādhi, the state of liberation. Our thoughts, words and actions become pure and truthful only when we are enlightened; only when we bring integrity in our words, authenticity in our thinking and actions, responsibility in our feeling, and enriching in our living. Yama is Integrity. Niyama is Authenticity. Āsana, Prānāyama, Prayāhara, Dhārana are Responsibility. Dhāyana and Samādhi are Enriching.

This is what Kṛṣṇa means when He says, 'Self is satisfied by the Self in the Self, yatra caiva ātmanātmanaṁ paśyann ātmani tuṣyati (6.20).' All of this has to happen together, not part by part. When one aspect is complete, all others also become complete. This is the state of pūrṇa, complete completion. Nothing can be taken away from it. Nothing can be added to it that would make any difference to its state of completeness. No joy can make it more blissful, no sorrow can make it less blissful. One becomes centered in bliss. When centered in bliss, it is forever.

Kṛṣṇa talks about moving into reality, transcending the senses and the mind. The way yoga is taught and practiced in many places, one is moved away from reality into a fantasy world, to fulfill one's imagined needs. The senses and the mind wander aimlessly. We cannot suppress desires, because anything suppressed will surface with more intensity. We might have experienced in our own lives that a desire may be satisfied momentarily, but soon afterwards, it arises again. Instead we need to understand what is happening and how it is happening. The way out of the mind is also through the mind and not by avoiding it. Completion process is the key through which all our emotions can be handled. They basically originate from the root patterns of greed and fear. As we witness and do completion with our root patterns, the fear and greed lose their grasp on the mind.

Take fear for example. What do we do when we feel afraid of something, whether it is fear of insects or fear of heights? The moment we are faced with the object of fear, we try to escape. Have we tried facing the fear? The next time you are afraid, try this. Instead of running away, just try looking at the fear consciously, go through it fully and declare completion with it. Do not identify with it by trying to suppress it or run away from it. When you look at fear with completion, you will see that the fear does not exist as you thought it existed. It simply does not exist because fear is born out of ignorance, when something is unknown to you. When we bring the light of knowledge upon fear, ignorance is removed and we get the courage to see the object as it is. Because now there is nothing hidden, our mind cannot fantasize about the unknown.

Be In The Self And See The Supreme

6.25 Gradually, step-by-step, one should become established in the Self, held by the conviction of intelligence, with the mind not thinking of anything else.

6.27 The yogi whose mind is peaceful attains the highest happiness; His passion is pacified and he is free from sins as he is liberated by the Supreme.

6.28 The yogi always engaged in the Self and free from material contamination is in touch with the Supreme and attains the highest happiness.

सर्वभूतस्थमात्मानं सर्वभूतानि चात्मनि ।

sarvabhūtasthamātmānaṃ sarvabhūtāni cātmani
īkṣate yogayuktātmā sarvatra samadarśanaḥ || 6.29 ||

6.29 The yogi sees the Supreme established in all beings and also all beings situated in the Supreme. One established in the Self sees the Supreme everywhere.

Here Kṛṣṇa says that we need conviction and intelligence to be established in the Self. Why does He talk about conviction? Understand that intelligence cannot happen without a strong conviction, a strong intellectual base.

Our Hindu seers, Rṣis have created śāstras, the foundations of knowledge that give the intellectual understanding, conviction and commitment to this process. Logically, we will be clear about the questions that naturally arise. 'What is the path? What is the goal? Why do we need spirituality?' All these questions are answered logically in the śāstras. The conclusions are given to us. Śāstras are the scriptures that take away all our doubts completely.

Saṁśaya rākśasa nāshana astraṁ - it means saṁśaya is a rākśasa - 'doubt is a devil'. Once a doubt enters our mind, until we clear it, we can't rest. The śāstras help us get rid of these doubts intellectually. Unless we have complete intellectual clarity, even if we believe, our belief will be a pseudo belief.

There are different ways to learn and develop conviction. We can learn from our experiences as well as from others' experiences. For example, when we touch the flame of a candle, we learn that it burns. When we touch a burning gas stove, we learn again that fire burns. One by one, we can experience and learn that all fires burn. Or, when we touch the first form of fire, immediately we can learn that all fires will burn. Coming to a conclusion and a clear understanding that all fires burn, after just one experience, is intelligence.

We need a strong conviction for spirituality to flower in our lives. Only then can we stay on the path without faltering. If we do anything with knowledge about the science of the whole action, then the activity becomes meditation. When the science is lost and only the activity remains, it becomes a ritual. When the juice of wisdom is not in the activity, it becomes a ritual, and we become religious nuts. When we add the juice of wisdom, we become spiritual fruits. We need to add 'spirit' to the 'ritual'. Then it becomes 'spirituality'.

Persevere and See Me In Everything

Now, Kṛṣṇa is emphasizing an important spiritual quality - perseverance. In the previous verse, He spoke about conviction. Now, he talks about persevering with that conviction. What happens most of the time to most of us is that when we realize we need to transform, we try a few times and then we give up on ourselves thinking we cannot do it. We expect the mental setup that we have created and solidified, to be broken and restructured in a few attempts, almost instantly. How is this possible? We need to be more patient and persevere in our efforts for the real change to happen.

So what if we fail sometimes? Why don't we look at the positive side and see that we succeeded a few times? Why do we want to count the failures and feel depressed? We can also look at the successes and feel inspired. Once the conviction is there, nothing can stop us except our own mind. The mind is like a faithful servant. It reproduces whatever it has been fed. All along, we have been feeding the mind negative memories of failure and we have been storing all the past memories related to failure. What will the mind reproduce? It will recollect and present the same instances of only failure. When we want to measure the strength of a chain, we measure the strength of the weakest link in that chain. But we cannot apply the same logic to measure ourselves. When we measure our lives based on our weakest moments, our failures and our incompletions, we take a wrong reading of ourselves. We cannot do with our lives what we do with the chain. Why can't we give credit to ourselves for the strong, successful moments of our lives? We have been conditioned by society to consider ourselves weak beings, that we are not powerful. We have been taught to feel guilty. Does that help us in any way? No! It only creates low energy and powerlessness.

Strength is Life. We should just decide that we will not be trapped in this cycle of guilt and desire. We need to measure ourselves by our strongest moments, our greatest moments of powerfulness, when we have displayed extraordinary awareness, courage, compassion, love and such other divine qualities. A human being is the sum of his greatest moments of completion. He is not a mechanical device that fails based on its faults. He is a spiritual being who thrives on his strengths.

Understand that you attract 'like' incidents in your life. 'Like attracts like.' The energy of one frequency attracts the similar frequency. When we are angry, the low energy attracts similar low energy. Pain attracts pain. Joy attracts joy. Bliss attracts fortune.

In the next verse, Kṛṣṇa talks about passion and sins. Passion is nothing but a deep attachment to something for the pleasure that it gives. So the key is to be in the space of completion every moment. The solution is not to condemn ourselves as sinners and expect some external force to bring completion to us. It is we who choose everything in our lives and how we want to live. But since we do not participate in this process consciously, we call it 'fate'. We are the ones who do the actions, but we don't want to accept that fact when we get the results. Somehow we choose to do whatever we want to do and then blame everyone else for the consequences. When we infuse completion into our actions, automatically the very completion will ensure that we have the integrity to do the right things. When you are integrated, so many resources which are present in you as potential, suddenly becomes a reality in you. When we are integrated, we don't need to depend on society and morality to teach us the right things to do.

When we are in bliss or the highest happiness, we can never commit any sin because we are aware and conscious and we cannot be caught in passion or lethargy. When we are in a 'no-mind' state, we are in bliss and we are not caught in the passion or sin that are products of the mind. When the mind drops, the Divine hand that is orchestrating every single event will guide every one of our actions.

What does it mean to be freed from all past sinful reactions? Our past reactions are nothing but our root patterns, the past memories along with the associated emotions, deeply inscribed in our unconscious space. Whenever we hold on to any past incidents or emotions as root patterns, our actions are bound to be impacted by them. But, if our action is not based on the past but arises from a spontaneous decision based on the present situation, then we are 'responding' to the event or incident or person. When we are in bliss, our actions will be only a response not a reaction, which is based on these past memories that Kṛṣṇa calls past sinful reactions.

Have the courage to complete with your root patterns, to make decisions without referring to these past incidents, because every single incident and moment is a brand new one. How can we compare what is happening now with what happened before? The situation is different, the person is different and so are we. Every moment, each one of us is dying and being born again; we are changing. Our intelligence is being constantly updated. Then how can we analyze the present situation through the lens of the past? We must complete with all regrets and guilt that we might have about the past and immerse ourselves in the present moment. We don't need the past to live beautifully in present space of completion. In fact, we can't live blissfully in the present if we continue to use the past as a reference point for how to manage our lives.

Realized One Sees the Supreme Everywhere

Kṛṣṇa says that the realized person, yoga-yuktātmā, sees the Supreme in everyone and everything. He sees everything situated in the Supreme and all beings situated in the Supreme. The yogi is in touch with the higher Self and is in bliss.

sarva-bhūta-stham ātmānaṁ sarva-bhūtāni cātmani | īkṣate yoga-yuktātmā sarvatra sama-darśarsanaḥ || 6.29 ||

When we experience the Truth, we see everything in ourselves and ourselves in everything. An Enlightened person sees no difference between Himself and the rest of the Universe. He is one with the Universe. His boundary does not end where his physical body ends. In fact, now with Kirlian photography, we can even check the auric body. For ordinary people, the aura just surrounds the physical body but when you are one with the universe, the aura extends infinitely. The viśvarūpa darśan, vision of the cosmic form, that Kṛṣṇa gives Arjuna is the glimpse of the same Truth, where Arjuna sees that Kṛṣṇa is one with the Universe.

In the ultimate sense, the moment we understand that we are deeply, totally and intensely connected to the whole Universe, not only do we start experiencing bliss, we really start living in the space of completion. Many dimensions of our being start opening. Right now we are stressed out and disturbed continuously because we think of ourselves as individual egos. If we disappear into this collective consciousness, we will experience so many dimensions and so many possibilities that we simply cannot imagine right now.

When we see an Enlightened Master, we understand how all-encompassing he is. He never excludes anything or anyone. He is just pure love, that's all. And pure love sees no imperfections. When we see every human being as a part of God, then that is real worship. It is easy to worship God in the temple. Real worship is seeing everything as God. Existence is pure love.

Controlling the Wavering Mind

6.33 Arjuna says: O Madhusūdana, I am not able to see this system of yoga as told by You, owing to the mind being restless and not steady.

6.34 O Kṛṣṇa, the wavering mind is agitated, strong and firm. I think it is difficult to control the mind like it is difficult to control the wind.

6.35 Bhagavān says: O mighty-armed son of Kuntī, it is undoubtedly difficult to control the wavering mind but by practice and detachment, it can be controlled.

Here, Kṛṣṇa gives a promise. He says that for anyone who sees Him in everything and who sees everything in Him, He is always available. Neither Kṛṣṇa is lost to him nor he is ever lost to Kṛṣṇa.

yo māṁ paśyati sarvatra sarvam ca mayi paśyati | tasyāhaṁ na praṇaśyāmi sa ca me na praṇaśyati || 6.30 ||

What He means is not that we should see the form of Kṛṣṇa in everyone, with the flute and two peacock feathers. Of course, that form is beautiful but do not get caught in the form. The form is there one day and not there the next; it is ephemeral. It is like this: if Master's finger is pointing in the direction of the moon, look in the direction of the moon and enjoy its beauty. Instead, if you watch the Master's finger, you will miss the moon.

What Kṛṣṇa means by 'Me' is the Kṛṣṇa energy, the divine consciousness. See the Divine in everybody and everything and automatically, you will relax. You will no longer fight because you will see everything around you as a part of the Divine, including yourself. What is there to fight with and what should you fight for? You will simply relax.

Existence is waiting with open arms to engulf us, to dissolve us into Itself, but only if we are ready to let go. If we just have the courage to let go with an open heart, we will meet and merge with it. When we are ready to feel the embrace of Existence, we rise into a higher plane, a plane of higher consciousness. We enter into a space we never even knew existed. With Existence we always fall in to rise.

All Are Infinite

People ask Masters, 'How can we tell that you are the right Master for us?' Forget about any analysis or intellectual reasoning. If the Master is truly your master, you can never forget Him. He will be there even in your dreams. The relationship between a Master and a disciple is one of pure love. When we are truly in love, we see the object of love in everything around us. We are consumed by that feeling. The Master fills every pore of our being. We never need to ask, 'Are you my Master?' We just know. He has filled our being, touched us at our core, because to him, there is no separation. Here, Kṛṣṇa is describing the state of the enlightened person. An enlightened person can empathize with everyone because he experiences himself as everyone.

What an Enlightened person or a Master feel is never sympathy. It is empathy. Empathy is when we feel another's suffering in our own being. It is when a person does not have to tell us he is suffering, but we simply know because the Existential energy in us feels it. Masters are one with us because they are one with Existence and we are a part of Existence. It is only that we see them as separate. In reality that is not the case.

When we realize the sense of non-duality and infinity with the entire Universe, we experience a tremendous overflowing of love and compassion for every being without discrimination, because we realize that everyone is a part of the same Whole. That is why we can see that Masters are such an ocean of infinite love and know only how to give. They are Existence itself. They shower love without asking questions because they feel a constant devotion towards the entire Universe or life force or Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa. They cannot see anyone as a separate entity because there is no separateness.

It is only our senses, mind and logic that perceives information and categorizes it and analyzes it to create the separateness. As long as we use our logic, our collected information, words and our little dictionaries to analyze the information received through our senses, we will be excluding and judging. Existence or the Universe is a living energy with infinite potential, which is simply beyond our logic. Only when we drop our logic, mind and ego can we merge with Existence and become whole and start seeing that everyone and everything is an extension of the same life force with just different expressions.

Just as the fingers on the hand and the toes on the feet belong to the same body, we will be able to see that everyone is a part of the same universal energy. This is when true compassion, empathy and sincere service towards enriching everyone can happen. Until then we will only be using our logic, mind, ego and conditioning, to enslave others.

When we realize the infinity of everyone, we will express our unconditional love and compassion towards everyone without discrimination, because we know that all discrimination is baseless and false. Our very walk and talk will start radiating so much bliss that our very presence will start healing others. We will become a blessing for planet Earth and the people who experience our presence.

Kṛṣṇa goes further to explain the state of an enlightened person or a person who is one with the Divine Consciousness. He says that the enlightened person will feel equally the happiness and pain of another person as he feels his own. Such a person feels one with the whole world. For him, everything is a part of him, so there is nothing else other than his own self. His boundary does not end with the boundary of his own physical body. What does Kṛṣṇa mean when He says that the enlightened person feels happiness and distress equally in himself and in others?

A yogi in the state of super-consciousness will just watch everything in Existence without judging or labeling it. He will be in a state of complete celebration of life. Existence is love and nothing else. Yet, the compassion of the yogi, the Master, is such that he feels the experiences that others undergo and he empathizes with them. The Master's state of equanimity is not disturbed and yet he feels the pain and joy of others.

This expression of collective consciousness is what Kṛṣṇa has described elsewhere as Vasudaiva Kuṭuṁbakaṁ. It means that the world is our family and we should feel the rest of the world as we would for our immediate family. When we exist in this state of consciousness, we are true yogis.

Arjuna introduces the word 'difficult or su-duṣkaram' here. Be very clear, the moment we categorize something as easy or difficult, we have made it that way. Understand that the ego can be fulfilled only through difficult things. Simple things cannot satisfy the ego.

Here, Arjuna addresses to Kṛṣṇa his concerns about the mind being so strong that it sometimes overcomes the intelligence. The first and foremost thing is to accept that we have a problem, we have a root pattern. The next thing is to understand how the root pattern is created. That is what Arjuna does here. It is only then that we can overcome the root pattern. If we ignore or run away from the pattern we can never resolve and complete with the pattern. So, the first thing to accept is that our mind does flicker and oscillate. We then need to understand how it flickers or oscillates. For this we need to watch the mind and do completion with the thought patterns. This is meditation. The very act of watching, being aware of the mind, and completing with it will take us beyond the mind.

Here, Kṛṣṇa has to answer from the same plane that Arjuna asks the question. Arjuna says that the mind is wavering and difficult to control like the wind, vāyor iva sa su-duṣkaram (6.34). Just as one thorn is used to remove another thorn, Kṛṣṇa has to give Arjuna a technique. He has to support the idea that it is difficult to control the mind. So, Kṛṣṇa has to give some technique at this point - practice and detachment. Now, if He tells Arjuna that this problem is not a problem at all but a creation of his mind, Arjuna will not understand. Kṛṣṇa has to give a technique for the mind to play with.

Masters give meditation techniques so that we try all these and ultimately realize we are bliss, and that meditation is our natural state, and that there is nothing to be achieved. But, if they tell you that right away, you will not believe as the mind cannot believe something so simple. It will create all kinds of contradictions and self-doubts as to why it cannot be so simple. Kṛṣṇa also has to give a solution for the doubting mind. He emphasizes perseverance and penance.

Don't think penance means leaving home, going to the Himalayas and sitting in meditation while fasting. Penance is persevering with authenticity until we experience the Truth.

Kṛṣṇa also reveals the root of the problem of controlling the mind and gives the technique to complete with it, which is detachment. Here we need to understand the word 'detachment'. Whether we say ego or mind, it is just the collection of thoughts. Thoughts can exist only in relationship to our identity and the past or the future. In the present, we cannot have thoughts because the very moment we think, the present has slipped into the past. The mind moves only because it is attached to the identities that we carry. Either we fear losing the carefully constructed inner image we have created for ourselves or we are greedy to develop a better outer image of ourselves in our own eyes and in the eyes of society.

The mind becomes so attached to these identities that it is constantly reviewing the past incidents or it is constantly planning the future to either protect or develop these identities. This constant pre-occupation of the mind with the past and future is the root cause of the oscillation of the mind. If we look deeply, staying in the present moment of completion means total insecurity. It requires us to be ready to embrace the present without planning for the future or reviewing the past. This seems like a great danger for our ego.

Any identity that we create about ourselves that is less than the idea of our being God, is a false identity. If we consider ourselves to be anything less than God, we suffer from an inferiority complex. If we have the courage to detach ourselves from the certificates of society, if we have the courage to drop these false identities, then we can embrace the Divine.

Detachment is the direct technique that Kṛṣṇa is suggesting here. Detachment at the root level will lead to detachment from everything else. Detachment from the ego or the identities will lead to detachment from desires. This is detachment from the past and future. This is being 'Unclutched'.

6.40 Bhagavān says: O Pārtha, the person engaged in activities for good does not meet with destruction either in this world or the next life; he never faces degradation.

Kṛṣṇa continues to declare in this verse that it is possible to achieve Self-realization by stilling the mind if one intensely practices the appropriate techniques. Here, Kṛṣṇa explains that it is possible to achieve control over the mind. and to also stay in that state where we are in control of the mind. Here, Arjuna again asks the questions we all will have in our minds. What happens if we start with faith but somewhere, we fail in controlling the mind? Be very clear, this situation will happen. When we start off, we will face failure in our attempts to control and complete with the mind. If we don't experience this, we should check ourselves because we may be fooling ourselves with whatever we are doing.

Enlightenment is Possible for All

Arjuna wants Kṛṣṇa to give an assurance that Enlightenment is possible for all kinds of people; that even if a person starts practicing intensely but fails due to the wavering mind, it is still possible to attain the divine consciousness. Actually, at the very root of Arjuna's question is the mind that is generating the fear and making him believe that it is hard to find the no-mind state. The mind does not want to lose its existence. The mind always looks for a reason to convince us that we cannot carry on our lives without it. In our day-to-day life we face the situation that Arjuna faces here. Even with activities that we have carried out successfully many times in the past, we feel nervous when we start again. Will we succeed? What will happen if we fail? Even before we begin, we start imagining the worst.

Actually, it is okay to imagine the worst. Overcome fear and face fear, it is good to imagine the worst-case scenario. Visualize it fully, relive such an experience consciously, taking it to its logical conclusion, and the fear will disappear. However, if all we can do is to think and brood over the worst things and continue with our fear unconsciously, we will be in the same situation as Arjuna- totally confused.

The future is not ours to see. The goal as we imagine it does not exist. There is no purpose to life. The meaning of life is to live. That is all. If only Arjuna was comfortable with just practicing the techniques that Kṛṣṇa has already outlined for him, trusting Kṛṣṇa and enjoying the path shown to him, he would not be asking such questions. Arjuna still does not believe Kṛṣṇa. He has heard and intellectually understood the meaning of what has been said, that is all. He has not fully listened and internalized the Master and His words. Arjuna has yet to learn.

Kṛṣṇa assures Arjuna by saying that there is no destruction either in this life or the next life for one who is on the right path, the path of yoga. He provides the assurance that Arjuna is looking for, since he knows how frail Arjuna's state of mind is. Kṛṣṇa is giving a wonderful assurance for all of us that even a small amount of practice of this yoga will save us from the cycle of birth and death. Any yoga practiced will give us tremendous benefit. The very intent to practice yoga itself means that we have gained knowledge about the problem of the mind.

Listen, any movement of the body with a strong intention will cause that intention to get deeply inscribed into our bodies and muscles. If the intention is wanting to become one with our true identity and wanting to drop our false identity, it will get deeply inscribed or recorded in our body and will remain there and automatically the body will start moving towards that one goal. If we move our body with the thought of bliss, the bliss emotion gets ingrained in our system. If it is anger that moves our body, the anger emotion gets ingrained. This is such an important and beautiful truth. Don't miss it.

Understand, the basic quality of life is reproduction and expansion. Therefore, it is possible for us to replicate happiness, joy and bliss as well. It is up to us to choose what type of emotion we want to allow in our bodies, what emotion we want to be ingrained in our system. All that we need to do is to intend to be joyful and joyful cells will keep reproducing. This process cannot stop. We will be full of joy.

Birth of A Yogi

6.41 The person who has fallen from yoga after many years of living in the world and doing virtuous deeds takes birth in the house of the virtuous and prosperous.

अथवा योगिनामेव कुले भवति धीमताम् ।

athavā yogināmeva kule bhavati dhīmatām

6.42 Or the yogi certainly takes birth in a family of wise people. Certainly, such a birth is rare in this world.

तत्र तं बुद्धिसंयोगं लभते पौर्वदेहिकम् ।
यतते च ततो भूयः संसिद्धौ कुरुनन्दन ॥ ६-४३॥ tatra taṃ buddhisaṃyogaṃ labhate paurvadehikam
yatate ca tato bhūyaḥ saṃsiddhau kurunandana || 6.43 ||

6.43 O son of Kuru, on taking such a birth, the person gains the intelligence of the previous body and tries again to attain yoga.

Kṛṣṇa talks about how we choose everything in our lives, including our birth, when and where we are born and whom we choose as our parents. This truth may seem difficult for most of us to believe. Our birth is not just an accident. It is an incident and we are the ones who choose all the details about this incident. We must understand that it is only we who program and design everything and everybody in our life, including our parents and environment. Our choice of the next body is based on the way we have lived our life in this body.

For example, if we live to eat rather than eat to live, at the time of death, we will still have the desire to continue eating. So, we will design our next body to fulfill this desire. We might choose the body of a pig. Or, if we have lived our life only for sleeping and doing no creative work, we might choose the body of a buffalo. So, based on the attitude we have lived with, we choose the next body. This is the basic idea on which our janma-maraṇa cakra (cycle of life and death) revolves.

We go into a birth-death cycle. We go and come back again, taking a new body. This phenomenon happens again and again. Whatever we choose at the moment of death will become reality in the next birth. You will be that. Some people think that they can manage if they remind themselves to think of the Divine, at the last second of their lives. But that will never happen unless we make that a habit throughout our life. If we keep chanting 'Coca-Cola' our whole life, we cannot and will not think of Rāma or Kṛṣṇa during our last moments. How we live our life will decide the quality of our death as well.

Here, Kṛṣṇa gives the assurance to Arjuna and to the whole of humanity that a person who has performed virtuous activities takes birth in a family of wise people or in a prosperous family. His pious activities will earn him a place among the higher worlds. After dwelling there for a while he will take birth in the family of righteous people to once again enable his spiritual seeking.

We can choose our body and the time that we wish to be born. When we live our life running behind our greed and desires, running after 'what next? what next?,' naturally, at the time of our death also, we will not be ready to leave the body. The body will be tired of running behind desires continuously, but the mind will not be ready to leave. So we will leave the body in the pain and suffering of this push and pull of desires and fear. If we can just relax into the present and take life moment by moment, we will leave the body in a relaxed way, peacefully.

Once we leave the body, in three kṣaṇa, three moments, we get into a new body and we are reborn. Kṣaṇa in Sanskrit does not mean 'seconds'. It means the gap between two thoughts. If we have been constantly running behind desires, the gap between two thoughts will be really small for us. When we learn to relax into the present, the gap between two thoughts increases and the three kṣaṇas can be a long time. In three kṣaṇas, we take on the new body to fulfill whatever desires were unfulfilled when we left the previous body. Here, Kṛṣṇa says that on taking birth, we gain the intelligence of the previous body and continue the journey where we left off.

One thing we should understand here is that when we say death, it is not just the death that happens at the end of our life. It is what happens every day and night. Every night, we go from the physical body to the dream body and causal body. In the morning, we enter the physical body again. We die and take birth again.

First thing, usually, the moment we gain awareness, either a thought based on greed or fear will hit us. There will be thoughts based on greed such as, 'I need to get this today,' or thoughts based on fear such as, 'I have to finish this work today in office. Will I be able to?' Some thought based on fear or greed will hit us. Immediately, we will jump out of our bed. The moment we assume our body, that moment is a moment of taking birth. Please be very clear, that is the moment we take the body.

Early morning, the thought with which we enter into the body, which makes us assume the body, is going to play a major role in our consciousness. The first thought is going to play a major role in our consciousness throughout the day. Just as the thought with which we leave the body on dying decides the kind of body we will assume in our next birth, in exactly the same way, every day the thought with which we get up in the morning and assume this body decides the quality of that day, that life. If we understand this once and alter our thoughts at the time of waking up, we will alter the whole consciousness.

When we get up from bed, let the first thought be related to love and compassion. Wake up only to express life in bliss. Wake up just out of joy. When we get up from bed, let us assume the body with gratitude to the Divine. With this, the whole quality of our consciousness will change. We will become a Divine Incarnation.

Kṛṣṇa is actually giving a technique on how to become Kṛṣṇa, how to enter into Kṛṣṇa Consciousness, to become an Incarnation. The man who assumes the body out of love and compassion is an Incarnation.

If we assume the body out of greed or fear, we are human. Early morning, let the first thought be gratitude. Let it be out of love and compassion. Our whole life will become pure eternal bliss, Nithyānanda.

6.46 A yogi is greater than the ascetic, than the wise and the person who works for the fruit of action. So, become a yogi, O Arjuna.

योगिनामपि सर्वेषां मद्गतेनान्तरात्मना ।

yoginmāmapi sarveṣāṃ madgatenāntarātmanā
śraddhāvānbhajate yo māṃ sa me yuktatamo mataḥ || 6.47 ||

6.47 Of all yogis, one who always lives in Me, thinking of Me, who worships Me in full faith, he is considered engaged in Me.

Kṛṣṇa is describing the process of the human experience. Why do we assume the body? We think that we can experience bliss through the body and mind; that is why we assume the body. When we realize that bliss cannot be experienced through the body or mind, we know that going beyond the body is the only way to experience it. Then we will not assume the body. Assuming the human body is simply our choice.

People ask, 'Why do we choose to have the human experience?' That we should find out for ourselves. Why did we assume this body? Ask the question yourself and pursue it as a quest and you will get the answer. You will be enlightened. We claim that we want to experience the ultimate and that we want to be enlightened. But if we really want to be enlightened, there is nothing that can stop us. There is no hindrance to our being enlightened except our own self. As of now, actually, enlightenment is last on our laundry list of items that we want to do in life. When the urge becomes urgent, when the question becomes a burning quest, then we get the answer. There is no other way.

In these verses, Kṛṣṇa promises a few things. He says that whatever we have learned in one life does not get wasted. We do not start from ground zero in the next birth. We start from where we left off. Our vāsanās, our mindset in one birth, continues into another. He also promises that if we keep practicing, if we keep trying, we will be cleansed of all sins and reach the highest state. Such a person, Kṛṣṇa promises, will reach Him. At the end of the day, what Kṛṣṇa implies is this: We need to do our bit. We need to practice yoga, the path that leads to self-awareness, to self-completion, the path that leads to Kṛṣṇa, with dedication, perseverance, with integrity and authenticity. There is no other way. There is no short cut. Once you do your bit, the Master promises deliverance. He promises that you will be one with Him. We will enter into a technique given by Śrī Kṛṣṇa to go beyond the mind, to awaken our senses, to look in.

Meditation

Now it is time to look in. Now it is time to tune ourselves to that highest teaching given by Śrī Kṛṣṇa in this Dhyāna Yoga. Now we will enter into the meditation. If we are ready to sit for the next ten minutes, we will start the meditation.

Please sit straight and close your eyes. Keep your head, neck and spine, all three in a straight line. Inhale and exhale as slowly as possible and as deeply as possible.

Slowly, in a relaxed way, bring your awareness to your ājña cakra. Concentrate between the two eyebrows. Bring your awareness between the two eyebrows. Remember and pray to that energy that came as Kṛṣṇa, that is guiding us and helping us in our life. Pray to that energy that gave us the Bhagavad Gītā.

Meditate on the pure light energy. If your mind wanders here and there, don't worry. When you remember, bring it back again and relax in your ājña cakra, between your eyebrows. Don't concentrate. In a very relaxed way, be aware of the ājña cakra, the space in between the two eyebrows.

Slowly, very slowly bring your mind to your heart and meditate on your heart center. If you want, you can touch your heart center with the hand and feel it. Try to bring your awareness to the heart center. Try to remember the heart center. Forget all other parts of your body; forget your mind. Just become the heart center. Just be in the heart center. Inhale and exhale as slowly as possible.

May you experience your pure inner space. May you experience the eternal bliss, nityānanda. Om śānti, śānti, śāntihi... Relax. Slowly, very slowly, open your eyes. We may wonder how a simple technique like this one can lead us into our Self.

Please understand that we always live in the head. Start living from the heart. We will then start acting from intelligence. We will start acting, not from our head but from our heart. When we start acting from the heart, we don't calculate. The very calculation disappears, the 'I, I, I' disappears. And naturally our senses become sensitive. We don't abuse our senses. We don't destroy our senses. Too much of the energy that is supplied to the heart is taken away by the mind. The fuel supply to the mind will be reduced and the fuel supply to the heart will be increased.

So try to continuously remember this heart region, anāhata cakra. Naturally, we will have awareness in the ājña also. In the last session, Kṛṣṇa gave the technique to be in the ājña. Today, He says start with the ājña and come down to anāhata. This is because in the heart, there is a possibility of much more happening. The possibility of reaching is easier and greater in the heart. Kṛṣṇa says, 'Let you be in the heart.'

ॐ तत्सदिति श्रीमद्भगवद्गीतासूपनिषत्सु ब्रह्मविद्यायां योगशास्त्रे श्रीकृष्णार्जुनसंवादे आत्मसंयमयोगो नाम षष्ठोऽध्यायः ॥ ६॥

Thus ends the sixth chapter named Dhyāna Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Path of Meditation,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 7 - Jñānavijñāna Yogaḥ

Listen, Cognize and Radiate

Listen! To begin with, let us see why Kṛṣṇa has given us this chapter. Again and again Kṛṣṇa speaks the same Truth. Nothing else is spoken, only the same Truth. Then what is the need for so many chapters?

People can say that Kṛṣṇa is repeating Himself. They may ask, 'How many times must He say that the spirit is indestructible, or that all work must be done with authenticity without expecting returns or that one must surrender to Him to reach completion?' Understand, if you have already listened even once, Kṛṣṇa will not repeat it again. Anything you listen from Kṛṣṇa, understand you are listening now, for the first time.

For a person who wants to begin the life, the first thing he needs to learn is listening. Understand, by 'hearing' you won't understand the Master. Only by 'listening to yourself' you can understand the Master. People who listen to themselves can understand what the Master is saying, even without any introduction to any spiritual philosophy. People who don't listen to themselves do not understand. Listening to yourself and speaking into the listening of yourself and others makes our inner space cognize the right declarations.

The ability to speak into the listening of yourself is completion. Ability to speak into the listening of yourself is ability to complete. It is all about developing your ability to speak into your listening, developing your ability to speak into others' listening, developing your ability to give authentic listening to yourself, and developing the ability to provide authentic listening to others.

If you have authentically listened, if you have done śravana or listening authentically and manana or intranalyzing authentically, you will be radiating authentically. Your life needs to be constantly powerful. You should be living to do what you want. You should be talking to get the result of what you want. You should be talking to move the other person the way you want. And you should not be talking by fighting with the patterns of the listener. You should be talking into the listening of the listener. When will that happen? If you are established into your listening, you will talk into the other person's listening.

When Arjuna listens to himself, he becomes a disciple; when Kṛṣṇa speaks into the listening of Arjuna, Arjuna becomes enlightened, radiating enlightenment. Laziness, boredom, diversion and postponing do not have a place in your life when you are radiating. Live your life authentically. Live your life with strength. Live your life intensely with clarity and powerfulness.

First thing you need to learn to radiate, the first thing for nididhyāsana is: Learn to think and speak with the same cognition you arrive at by intranalyzing. Please understand step-by-step:

First, you authentically listen to the great Truths. Whenever you authentically listen, whatever you listen will be converted as great Truths by your inner space. Your inner space has the capability; it has the power to separate the right from wrong.

Authentic listening brings tremendous clarity. See, this clarity is really lacking in the seeker's life. Especially when somebody is interested to be enlightened, to live the life of a jīvan mukta (one who lives enlightenment), clarity is a very predominantly important quality. Clarity is Viveka. Ādī Śaṅkara has written a separate book on clarity called Viveka Chūḍāmaṇi.

Authentic listening, śravana leads to clarity. And intranalyzing, manana leads to cognitive shift. If you don't live that cognitive shift powerfully, you will lose it. Powerfully living the cognitive shift is radiating, nididhyāsana. How to find out whether you are radiating or not? Simply life around you will constantly be getting enriched, that is the signal. If the constant enriching is happening, then you are radiating. Radiating, nididhyāsana means such powerful body language, such powerful words, such powerful thinking that you go on enriching, constantly winning the game of life.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the personification of all these three - śravana, manana, nididhyāsana, powerfully enriching Arjuna to learn authentic listening, authentic intranalyzing and radiating. First, Arjuna learns śravana to give his authentic listening to himself and to Kṛṣṇa; getting to the root of his root patterns in the chapters of Arjunaviṣāda Yogaḥ, Sāṅkhya Yogaḥ, Karma Yogaḥ and Jñāna-karma-sannyāsa Yogaḥ. Once he gets the tremendous clarity through authentic listening, he learns to do manana, intranalyzing the great truths in chapters such as Sannyāsa Yogaḥ, Dhyāna Yogaḥ and Jñānavijñāna Yogaḥ.

Understand, because Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the complete Incarnation, He directly transmits the space of radiating, nididhyāsana to Arjuna without the need for manana, intranalyzing. When you are in the space of authentic listening to an Incarnation, who is also your Master, He can directly transmit the energy and experience of Enlightenment into you. Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa does this transmission in Vibhūti Yogaḥ and Viśvarūpa Darśana Yogaḥ to Arjuna. It is only for enriching the humanity that He continues to take Arjuna step-by-step into deeper levels of completion through the eighteen chapters. Ultimately, when the cognitive shift happens in Arjuna, he experiences nididhyāsana, radiating the same cognition he arrives at by intranalyzing. When Kṛṣṇa enriches him to powerfully live and radiate His very body language and experience Enlightenment, dropping everything and surrendering to Him in Mokṣa Sannyāsa Yogaḥ, Arjuna wins the game of life called Mahābhārat war.

Ordinary Masters express their philosophy or their experience with the second kind of logic, which is why there is so much misunderstanding. There is a possibility of missing listening to their message and concluding with the wrong cognition. However, Kṛṣṇa is a Jagat Guru. He is not an ordinary Master. He is the Master of the whole Universe and He knows the minds of all possible types of human beings. He knows the problems of non-listening, non-integrity, and inadequate logic.

Kṛṣṇa is delivering this message in such a way that we cannot miss giving our authentic listening to Him and jump to any inauthentic conclusions, or wrongly cognize any statement in the flow of incomplete logic. He makes all the three statements. He is clear and complete. He says, 'There are two doors, the first door is open, the second door is closed.' He allows no space for us to lack listening because He speaks into our listening. He protects us from ourselves.

That is why He repeats the same truth in each chapter from a different level of logic each time to take us to higher and deeper levels of completion. He takes the complete responsibility for all three - śravana, manana, and nididhyāsana.

In this whole chapter of Jñānavijñāna Yogaḥ, Kṛṣṇa speaks about the same message from a different view so that we now learn to listen from the space of authentic listening - śravana, we understand and intranalyze to have the cognitive shift - manana, and we powerfully radiate the space of completion - nididhyāsana.

7.5 Besides these external energies, which are inferior in nature, O mighty-armed Arjuna, there is a superior energy of Mine. This comprises all the embodied souls of all the living entities by which this material world is being utilized or exploited.

He says, 'Listen, Arjuna, by practicing yoga in full consciousness of Me, with mind attached to Me, you can know Me in full, without doubt.' In this statement, Kṛṣṇa uses the word 'Me' three times. Having read that, a psychologist will conclude that Kṛṣṇa is egoistic. According to psychology, if we use the word 'I' or 'Me' three or more times in a statement, we are egoistic. A person might hate Kṛṣṇa because he feels Kṛṣṇa is egoistic. Again and again, He declares, 'Surrender to Me. I am everything.'

We should understand here that He is expressing His glory. The person who hates Kṛṣṇa thinking He is egoistic, misses the truth or spirit expressed by the Gītā. In the same way, a person who loves Kṛṣṇa gets caught in His form and misses the juice of the Gītā.

Whenever people are caught in the form, when they worship the form, they slowly start saying, 'Gītā is great. Kṛṣṇa is God. He can express all these things, but surely it is not for us. It is not practical.' In this way, they slowly create a distance between themselves and Kṛṣṇa. They worship the Gītā instead of practicing it. If we have a pot full of milk and we worship it but never drink it, will we get the benefit of the milk? Understand, unless we drink the milk, we will never get the benefit of the milk.

Unless we imbibe Kṛṣṇa, we cannot get the benefit of the Gītā. When we don't imbibe Kṛṣṇa's teachings in our lives, when we don't work towards experiencing Kṛṣṇa, worshipping Kṛṣṇa is nothing but inauthenticity. It's a cunning method of escaping from the truth. Worshipping without intranalyzing and living is the worst form of inauthenticity.

People who hate Kṛṣṇa think He is egoistic. And people who love Kṛṣṇa are caught in His form and think they should surrender to the personality called Kṛṣṇa who came down in human form. Only a person who experiences Kṛṣṇa realizes the Gītā.

Approach Divine the Right Way

This chapter is about how human beings approach the Divine, why they approach the Divine, and at what level they approach the Divine. We approach the Divine in the way we want It. According to our maturity, we approach the Divine.

At what level do we approach the Divine? What do we receive in return? How do we grow in maturity? Kṛṣṇa gives the answers to these questions in this chapter. Here He says, 'Out of many thousands among men, one may endeavor for perfection, and out of those who have achieved perfection, hardly one knows Me in truth.'

Here He says, 'out of thousands'. In those days, the population must have been less, which is why He makes the statement 'out of thousands'. Now we should say, 'Out of billions, one may endeavor for perfection.'

manuṣyāṇāṁ sahasreṣu kaścid yatati siddhaye | yatatām api siddhānāṁ kaścin māṁ vetti tattvataḥ || 7.3 ||

'Among millions of men, one man may endeavor for perfection, and out of those who achieve perfection, hardly one knows Me in truth.'

There are millions of people out there, but only a few hundred are present today to listen to this Gītā discourse. And out of these few hundred, only a few will listen authentically, as it is expressed. We may sit here. We may even hear, but never think that we really listen.

The Master is always ready to share and enrich with his experiences. That is his mission in life. The infinite compassion that fills an enlightened being is forever bursting to be let out to share, to teach, to guide, and to enrich. He is available continuously to the whole humanity, enriching with Enlightenment. That is why Kṛṣṇa says that He is now ready to explain.

You will see miraculous transformations happening in your body and mind. Listening is God. Just by listening, you experience God. The question is whether or not Arjuna is ready to listen. Even if Arjuna was ready to listen and he became enlightened, are we ready to listen today, now?

Why does Kṛṣṇa say that a few even try, and of those who try, very few succeed? Remember that He is talking about Self-realization, about understanding who we are. Why is it so difficult even to try?

We do not want to try because we are afraid. We are restless in any form of silence. Why do we find it difficult to meditate? After all, all we do in meditation is close our eyes and remain silent. Why is it difficult? We give appointments to everyone else every day of our lives, willingly and unwillingly. Why is it so difficult to give half an hour a day to ourselves?

The truth is that we have forgotten where we came from. Nothing in the way we are brought up and 'educated' tells us that we come from bliss and we can regain that bliss. Society has its own self-interest in not letting us be aware of this truth. If we realize how easy it is to be blissful and return to our original state, no one can control us. That is what liberation means. But society, religion, and political and family structures operates on the principle of control.

Ādi Śankarācārya, the great Hindu saint incarnation says beautifully in His song Bhaja Govindaṁ - kā te kāntā, kaste putraḥ, meaning, 'Where is your wife, where are your children when you finally depart?' You came alone and you will leave alone. Even your wife, who loved you dearly, is afraid of you once your body becomes cold. All love as we know it, is conditional. The only true love is that of the Divine and that of the Master. Such love comes out of infinite compassion. It expects nothing in return. What can we offer God and our Master?

So, if we need to follow the truth, we must look after ourselves. We must enrich ourselves to enrich others. We must be selfish. We need to be selfish to enter into this path of Selfrealization. However it is not a selfishness born out of the usual material nature. It is selfishness born out of the desperate need to be selfless.

When we reach our center or our core, we become one with humanity. Then there are no differences among us. That is why even our spouses will be unhappy if we realize ourselves, because they cannot possess us anymore. At that point they must share us with humanity. But they won't understand that the love of Self-realization is infinite that there is no reduction in sharing, there is only growth in sharing.

The path to Self-realization is the path of aloneness. It is not a lonely path; it is an 'alone' path. When we are alone, we are not lonely. We are all-in-one; that is what being alone means. From being fragmented, we become whole. From being islands, we become the Universe.

This is the knowledge that Kṛṣṇa offers humanity. Out of His deep compassion He says, 'Please listen to Me and realize your Self and be liberated.' One in a million may heed His words and start on this path. He then says that only one in a million who starts on this path will eventually find his own Self, and thus find Me.

Is the path so difficult? No, it is not. Why then does it seem so difficult? We find the external world so attractive that we rarely stay on course in our internal voyage of self-discovery. It is always easier to blame other people or life and remain where we are than to step on the path of transformation.

Throughout the Gītā, Kṛṣṇa talks about how to control the mind. He gives specific science of what to do and what not to do. All we need to do is to follow the guidance of this Universal Master. Without any doubt, surely we can then become that one in a thousand or one in a million. But to follow Him, to allow Him to enrich us, we need to understand Him.

In these verses Kṛṣṇa explains who He is. Kṛṣṇa explicitly separates Himself from His manifested energies in these verses. What we perceive as manifested energies - the five natural elements that are earth, water, fire, air and ether, and the three inner elements of mind, intelligence and ego - are His energies no doubt, yet they are not Him.

The Manifest and The Unmanifest

Puruṣa and prakṛti are considered the operative principles of the Universe in the Hindu philosophical systems of Sāṅkhya and Vedānta. Puruṣa and prakṛti are unmanifest energy sources, puruṣa being inactive and prakṛti capable of being active, so to speak. Everything else arises from these two elements when they operate together.

Prakṛti gives rise to the cosmic and individual intelligence and the five natural elements. The Taittreya Upaniṣad explains that the cosmic energy gave rise to etheric energy or the energy of space, ākāṣa, which pervades the Universe. This is the largest and subtlest quantum of energy that pervades the Universe. From etheric energy the energy of air arises. It is this energy of air, or vāyu, that sustains us in our body-mind system as the carrier of pranic or life energy.

From the energy of air arises the energy of fire, agni. Many salutations in the Ṛg Veda, the first of the Hindu scriptures, are addressed to the fire. Almost all Hindu rituals are performed for the fire god. Āpas, the energy of water, arose from the energy of fire. Pṛthvī, the energy of earth arose from the energy of water. The Taittreya Upaniṣad goes on to say that it is from the earth energy that plants, herbs and food were created, from which came human beings. Within the human being is the intelligence that is a hologram of the cosmic intelligence. The energy cycle is now complete.

This energy tree, from its subtlest beginning to the grossest manifestation, is also the story of creation. Ten thousand years ago, sages of our ancient Hindu culture propounded these truths with no external devices to aid them. They intuited them, as they looked inward rather than outward. Our Hindu rituals were full of meaning. Today they are condemned as old fashioned and meaningless activities because we lost the link to their meaning. Spirituality is nothing but spirit infused into rituals.

The cosmic intelligence is reflected in the human as the mind. The mind in turn uses the senses to access the external world. Each of the senses - sight, hearing, smell, taste and touch – is related to the natural elements. Ether is linked to sound or the ears; air is linked to touch and the skin; fire is linked to color and form, and hence to sight and the eyes; water is linked to taste and the tongue; earth is linked to smell or the nose.

The mind receives information through the senses of perception and executes decisions through the senses of action. When the senses are denied access to the external world, which is their sustenance, the mind shuts down. Thoughts cease. Ego is a creation of the mind. It is an illusion because it is not permanent; it is not the truth. True realization of the Self is achieved when the ego is shed and when the mind stops. Then, inner intelligence awakens to the cosmic intelligence.

Here, Kṛṣṇa refers to ego as ahaṃkāra. It is our identity that we project outwards. This is always in excess of what we think of as ourselves. There is another side to our ego, called mamakāra, which we project inwards; what we think of as us inside us. This mamakāra is always lower than what we think ourselves to be. The perpetual gap between this outer projection and inner projection creates self-doubt, stress, suffering and dis-ease within us.

When we realize our Self, we realize that we are divine and nothing less. Anything that we think about ourselves which is lower than this, is low self-esteem, is self-doubt. What Kṛṣṇa says is true for all of us. We are above the energies that constitute us. We too are the energy that constitutes our body-mind system.

All that we lack is the awareness of this truth. Our natural state is to know ourselves. Once we realize the truth that we are God, there is no difference between Kṛṣṇa and us. We are enlightened. That is what Kṛṣṇa came to prove. He has no need to prove that He is God. He doesn't care if we know it or not. His mission was to enlighten Arjuna, and through Arjuna, the rest of humanity. His mission is to prove to us that we too are God.

I Am The Thread

7.9 I am the fragrance of the earth. I am the heat in fire. I am the life of all living beings. I am the penance of all ascetics.

I am the thread,' He says. 'I am the thread, the sūtra, the technique on which all Existence is strung.'

mattaḥ parataraṁ nānyat kiñcid asti dhanañjaya | mayi sarvam idaṁ protaṁ sūtre maṇi gaṇā iva || 7.7 ||

'O Dhanañjaya, conqueror of wealth, there is no truth superior to Me. Everything rests upon Me, as pearls are strung on a thread.' He declares powerfully - 'mayi sarvam idaṁ protaṁ - In Me is strung everything! sūtre maṇi gaṇā iva—Everything rests on Me as pearls strung on a thread.' He declares with complete clarity that He is the thread of everything. He is the sūtradhāra, the controller and director of the cosmic play. Nothing moves, nothing can move without Him. Nothing can be created, sustained or destroyed in the absence of His energy.

God - An Idea?

For you, God is a mere concept; He is just an idea. It is another play of your mind. You think of God and attribute various concepts to Him. You talk about Him in the same manner in which you would talk about a friend or relative, perhaps more glowingly or less glowingly depending on your inclination at that point in time.

To you, your identity and your identification with your body-mind is real. Without this identity you are lost. If someone does not recognize you, you suffer. The moment someone praises you, you are in the seventh heaven. Your identity is your reality. 'I' is what makes you alive.

To the Master, God is reality. He lives with God every moment. The body, mind and the body-mind identification does not exist for Him. It is only a concept. Therefore, when He refers to Himself, He refers to that body-mind the same way that you refer to it. He cannot move a finger without permission from Existence, from that Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, that cosmic Kṛṣṇa. You may think, 'This sounds nonsensical. He says he is enlightened and then he says there is nothing that he can do; he can do only as Existence dictates.' Nonsense or not, this is the truth. Whether you understand it or not, whether you accept it or not, this is the truth. What makes Master move, talk, see and do all that you do is only what the Universe dictates.

That is what Kṛṣṇa talks about here. The great Master says, I am not what you see. I am not the energy that is manifested. It is not this six-foot Kṛṣṇa with a flute and peacock feather that makes things happen. It is the formless energy beyond Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa (Kṛṣṇa, the being in body, the son of Vāsudeva). It is Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa (Kṛṣṇa, the cosmic energy).

Kṛṣṇa says, He is the unseen thread - sūtre maṇi gaṇā, without which no rudrākṣa can exist. He says He is the unseen essence - mayi sarvam idaṁ protaṁ, without which there can be no substance. He says He is the unseen ultimate energy without which there can be no Universe - mattaḥ parataraṁ nānyat kiñcid asti dhanañjaya.

Kṛṣṇa illustrates what He said earlier with specific examples. The beauty of Kṛṣṇa's teaching in the Bhagavad Gītā is the depth to which He goes to make everything crystal clear to Arjuna. He makes no assumptions, takes nothing for granted. It is as if Arjuna is a child and He is the parent or teacher. For the Lord of the Universe to take the trouble to ensure complete understanding shows the depth of His compassion.

In the five natural elements, the essence of ether is sound, of air is touch, of fire is form and heat, of water is taste and of earth is smell. Kṛṣṇa explains that He is the essential quality in each of these elements; also that He is the praṇava mantra, the primordial sound 'Oṁ' and the radiance of the Sun and Moon.

Life, any form of life in this and any other planet, cannot exist without this energy of cosmic Kṛṣṇa. But living within this energy field we lose sight of this energy. We become energy-unconscious. Kabir, the mystic poet said hauntingly, we are like fish that are immersed in life-giving water yet cry out saying, 'We are thirsty.' Kabir advises: 'Fool, become aware! You cannot be a fish in water and be thirsty!'

7.13 The whole world is deluded by the three modes (goodness, passion and ignorance), and thus does not know Me. I am above the modes and unchangeable.

7.14 My divine energy, consisting of the three modes of material nature, is difficult to overcome. But those who surrender unto Me can cross beyond it with ease.

na māṃ duṣkṛtino mūḍhāḥ prapadyante narādhamāḥ
māyayāpahṛtajñānā āsuraṃ bhāvamāśritāḥ || 7.15 ||

7.15 Those miscreants who are foolish, lowest among mankind, whose knowledge is stolen by Māyā (that which is not real) and who have taken shelter in demonic nature, do not surrender unto Me.

I am the procreative energy,' says the Lord. 'I am the seed of all living beings.' He makes no excuses, no apologies. He says, 'I am that procreative energy but without the fantasies of lust, kāma-rāga vivarjitam dharmāviruddho bhūteṣu (7.11).' How can one be a Creator, if one cannot procreate?

Many of our great sages in the past, the ṛṣi and mahaṛṣis, such as Vaśiṣṭa and Vyāsa were gṛhastas (householders), who were family men with wives and children. Yet they were realized souls, enlightened. Other than Hanumān and Gaṇeśa all our deities are married. Kṛṣṇa is reputed to have had 16,008 wives.

How can the life form continue without procreation, without the sex act? For celibacy to happen naturally, the first spiritual experience must happen before adolescence, so that the life-giving sex energy moves upwards as transcendental spiritual energy rather than descend as procreative energy. People who have this spiritual awakening because of their prārabdha karma (desires one is born with) are the Paramahamsas. That is their nature. Celibacy happens to them naturally. To force celibacy after adolescence is difficult. It can be done but must be done with great caution and under supervision. Otherwise the so-called renunciate monk, the sannyāsi, will pretend to follow brahmacarya, celibacy. Inside he will be filled with fantasies, ready to explode. The word brahmacarya means 'moving in reality'.

It is said that once Kṛṣṇa was crossing the river Yamuna with a group of gopīs, women devotees. The river was in spate. Kṛṣṇa said to Yamuna, 'If it is true that I am a brahmacāri, part and let me walk across.' The river parted and Kṛṣṇa walked to the other bank. A sannyāsi who watched this was dumbstruck. 'Kṛṣṇa, a brahmacāri? He walks with these women who are His lovers, and He says He is a brahmacāri and the river parts for Him. How can this be?' That is what Kṛṣṇa explains here, 'I am the procreative energy, but without lust, without attachment and without fantasy. I am the ultimate reality.' Fantasies are the root cause of our problems. With each fantasy coming true, more fantasies arise. We can never be in reality.

To be in reality one must be in the present moment. When you are in the present moment you are Kṛṣṇa. When we hanker after the past and speculate about the future, we slip into fantasies. We are no longer within the boundaries of our body. This way of living will lead only to suffering. All you need to do to be blissful is to renounce your fantasies. You do not need to renounce what material things you have with you. Enjoy your wealth, enjoy your work, enjoy your spouse and children. You have earned what you have. Enjoy what is your due. Just stop fantasizing about what you do not have. Stop running after more acquisitions; stop and take time to enjoy what you have acquired. Move into the present, here and now, into reality, and you will be a brahmacāri.

Beyond the Gunas

Kṛṣṇa talks about the guṇas, the natural attributes in these verses. Prakṛti, the energy that manifests in the Universe, has three elements called guṇas. When prakṛti is in equilibrium, it is pure potential energy. When it is disturbed, the guṇas come into operation. Like building blocks, they combine in many ways and create, sustain and destroy.

Rarely is only a single element or guṇa present in a person. The three guṇas that Kṛṣṇa refers to are satva, rajas and tamas, commonly translated as goodness or calmness, passion or aggression and ignorance or inaction. The interplay of these guṇas creates the functioning of the mind and through the operation of the mind, activity. Guṇa does not refer to the state a person is in. Guṇa causes that state to happen. Satva by itself is not goodness or calmness. It is the building block that leads to calmness.

No living being influenced by the mind is beyond the influence of the guṇas. When one transcends the guṇas, as Kṛṣṇa says about Himself, one becomes a triguṇa rahita, one who has transcended the three guṇas. Such a person is no longer influenced by the mind and its actions.

We can see the interplay of the guṇas in people as they move through this material world. People are generally more in a state of rajas - aggressiveness with passion, with various proportions of satva and tamas. Rajas is needed to create, to make things happen and is the predominant guṇa of action.

Especially when you move into an environment, committed to a life of renunciation and detachment, many fall into deep state of tamas, inaction. It is not a state of ignorance, but one of inaction where all your suppressed opposition to your earlier life of meaningless activity surfaces and forces you into sheer inactivity.

You may sleep long hours, far more than normal, disinclined to do anything. However, this is a passing phase. All these suppressions surface and dissolve. Let them. You then move into satva. To many, it is surprising that one falls into tamas before moving into satva, yet it happens and it is a reaction to one's earlier lifestyle.

On the other hand, a person steeped in tamas is the person Kṛṣṇa refers to as one who does not surrender to Him. Such a person is in deep darkness and ignorance. He is unaware of his potential. He is no better than an animal. In fact, an animal is better because it knows how to live in Nature, with Nature. Besides, an animal has no fantasies.

Unfortunately, a human being can distort his perceptions to such a point that he can deny his rightful nature. Māyā, illusion, is also the interplay of the guṇas. It is a collection of our fantasies. Just as darkness needs light to destroy it, we need awareness to destroy māyā. Otherwise māyā destroys us.

Four Pious Men

चतुर्विधा भजन्ते मां जनाः सुकृतिनोऽर्जुन ।
आर्तो जिज्ञासुरर्थार्थी ज्ञानी च भरतर्षभ ॥ ७-१६॥

caturvidhā bhajante māṃ janāḥ sukṛtino'rjuna
ārto jijñāsurarthārthī jñānī ca bharatarṣabha || 7.16 ||

7.16 O Bharatarṣabha, best among Bhārata, four kinds of pious men begin to render devotional service unto Me. They are: the distressed, the desirer of wealth, the inquisitive, and those searching for knowledge of the Absolute.

तेषां ज्ञानी नित्ययुक्त एकभक्तिर्विशिष्यते ।
प्रियो हि ज्ञानिनोऽत्यर्थमहं स च मम प्रियः ॥ ७-१७॥

teṣāṃ jñānī nityayukta ekabhaktirviśiṣyate

7.17 Of these, the wise one who is in full knowledge and ever united with Me through single-minded devotion is the best.

I am very dear to him, and he is dear to Me.

उदाराः सर्व एवैते ज्ञानी त्वात्मैव मे मतम् । udārāḥ sarva evaite jñānī tvātmaiva me matam āsthitaḥ sa hi yuktātmā māmevānuttamāṃ gatim || 7.18 ||

7.18 All these devotees are indeed noble; one who knows Me, dwells in Me. Being engaged in My mission, he attains Me.

बहूनां जन्मनामन्ते ज्ञानवान्मां प्रपद्यते । वासुदेवः सर्वमिति स महात्मा सुदुर्लभः ॥ ७-१९॥
bahūnāṃ janmanāmante jñānavānmāṃ prapadyate vāsudevaḥ sarvamiti sa mahātmā sudurlabhaḥ || 7.19 ||

7.19 After many births and deaths, he who knows Me surrenders to Me, knowing Me to be the cause of all causes and all that is. Such a great soul is very rare.

Kṛṣṇa now goes deeper. He talks about the Hindu community system which kept our scriptures alive, the spiritual science alive. No other culture has survived or lived for such a long time. All other cultures that came into existence after the Hindu culture - Babylonian, Roman, Greek, etc. - knew how to fight, how to build empires and big cities in a professional way. They knew how to protect themselves. They were great warriors. Yet they were unable to survive. Today we see only their relics. These cultures are not alive today. Of the Hindu culture, the Hindu system, we have at least 10,000 years of recorded history.

No other country has been invaded as much as Bharat. Bharat has been invaded again and again by practically every culture, every country. Yet, no country has been invaded by Bharat. Bharat has never invaded any country. Out of the forty-eight civilizations, which were over 5000 years old on the planet, the Hindu civilization, the Hindu culture is the only one civilization that is still alive and flourishing. All the other forty-seven did not survive. Only because of this community system is the Hindu culture alive today.

Another important thing to understand when we read these things is, 'Man cannot live without creating a community.' Man is a social animal. He creates some form of community or other. You cannot say that the United States does not have some form of community system. In other countries also the community system is there. However, these community systems are based upon money.

Of course, there are a few issues in Hindu culture also. Hindus made mistakes in the sense they missed the spirit with which the community system was developed, and started following the letter. Some mistakes happened. That's true. However, the whole community system cannot be labeled wrong because of a few mistakes. For example, if someone has a tumor in his body, the tumor must be operated on and removed. You cannot straightaway kill the person. We can't abandon the whole person because of the tumour.

The Hindu Community System

The Hindu Ṛṣis at least created the community and caste system based upon intelligence and wisdom. In other cultures, the community system was created based upon money and power. The countries where the rulers are kṣatriyas (warrior class) are the ones who create the community system based upon power. The more powerful a person is, the more respected he is. In other countries, people who do business, the business class people, control the whole system. There the wealthy people are respected more.

The Hindu system was created based upon intelligence, based upon wisdom. The more wisdom a person carries, the more spiritual he is, he more he is respected. The whole social system was created based upon sharing from an enriching consciousness. Understand, you can create anything only when you see it and experience it from the state of enriching consciousness. Man must contribute something to enrich the community by doing actions in the enriching state.

First, the whole system is not based upon our birth. It is based upon our character. Kṛṣṇa says again and again that it is based upon our guṇas (nature), based upon our attitude towards life. A person who works driven by fear, one who works out of fear, belongs to the working class called śūdra. A person who works out of greed, belongs to the merchant or business class called vaiśya. A person who works to get attention or to prove that he is superior, belongs to the kṣatriya community. A person who works out of gratitude from the enriching consciousness, expressing his bliss, is a brāhmaṇa. This was how people were categorized in those days.

Everybody must contribute something to enrich the society. A person may enrich by sharing his time if he has nothing else. A person who shares his time is a worker, a śūdra. He belongs to the working class. A person who enriches by sharing products, has time and a little bit of intelligence to create products, is a vaiśya, a merchant. A person who enriches by sharing confidence, who gives courage to the whole community, is a kṣatriya, a warrior! He unites the whole group as a community in a solid way by giving confidence, by sharing his confidence. A person who enriches by sharing his knowledge, bliss or spiritual wisdom, is a brāhmaṇa.

This type of division is completely based upon our role, the role we play in the community, which is based upon our character. In no way is it related to our birth. This is the spirit with which the whole system was created by the ṛṣis. Here nobody is higher and nobody is lower. In the course of time, one or two mistakes happened. But because of that we can't say that the whole system is wrong.

'O best among the Bhārata, four kinds of pious men begin to render devotional service unto Me: the distressed, the desirer of wealth, the inquisitive, and he who searches for knowledge of the Absolute.'

Here Kṛṣṇa talks about those who approach the Divine and the ways in which they approach the Divine. Man is centered on seven basic emotions. Basically we live and work based on these seven emotions: greed, fear, worry, attention-need (name and fame), comparison and jealousy, ego and the last one, the seventh emotion, deep discontentment.

These are the qualities with which man lives and he works. Man is centered on these seven different emotions. These seven emotions are seven energy centers that supply energy to us, fuel for us. Everything that we do in life is rooted in one of these seven emotions.

In prayer, we pray to God; in meditation, we become God. Prayers give us immediate results. Praying to that higher principle or to the Divine is not wrong, yet it is not enough. Whereas in meditation, we become that higher principle or the Divine to which we constantly pour out our prayers. This is permanent.

The Divine is nothing but a mirror; we see our own reflection. And whatever we do to the Divine comes back to us. The more we understand, the more we grow and relate with the Divine in a more mature way. Otherwise we are confused and caught like a drunkard.

We Choose God Based on Our Emotions

At the next level, the person is centered on fear and so he worships gods who will protect him. He does the Sudarśana homa (homa refers to making offerings into a consecrated fire; Sudarśana homa refers to the fire ritual done for general protection), or he continuously does Mṛtyuñjaya homa (fire ritual done to avoid untimely death and improve longevity) for protection. He continuously goes about worshipping some planet or god. That's why tribal gods have big swordsPeople who are fear-centered worship gods with weapons. All this is ok, nothing wrong, but it is not the place to stop.

The third level is, approaching the Divine because of worry. Again, worry is nothing but mixture of fear and greed. With worry, we approach the Divine in the same way. We pray to the Divine, 'Please help me stop worrying. Please help me come out of these worries.' At this point, we may do yoga or meditation for the sake of peace; not for spiritual enlightenment, but to calm our mind, to get a little peace.

The next level is based on attention-need. We approach the Divine for the sake of name and fame, for the sake of capturing the attention of people. Not only do we pray to the Divine, we gradually start representing the Divine also.

There's a beautiful ritual performed during the installation of a deity in a temple, called prāṇa pratiṣṭha. The scriptural instruction is that the person who installs the deity must be enlightened. Otherwise, the person who installs the deity receives the collective negativity of the people who pray in that temple. It may be a frightening idea, but don't think it's a lie. It has meaning. The person who takes up this job without spiritual maturity will naturally end up with name and fame problems. He creates problems for himself and others. He starts representing the Divine and acts on behalf of the Divine.

The people who stand and pray in front of God, the deity, are gullible because they are caught in fear and greed. You can easily exploit them. They are waiting for a solution. That is the reason why repeatedly, it is emphasized that only an enlightened person should run a spiritual organization.

The next is comparison and jealousy. This is an extreme step. People always compare with others, and they feel jealous of the others' position, their status or their wealth. A person who compares and feels jealous can never rest. Look into what makes us run in our lives. Why are we in a hurry? Listen, don't be in a hurry! We don't need to run. If we are centered on jealousy and comparison, again we approach the Divine from that angle and only for that purpose.

Expressing the Divine

It is hard to imagine the extent of foolishness people go to if they are caught in jealousy and comparison. One is constantly caught in: this is mine; that is mine; this is the way I do it, etc. We need to realize that each of us is unique. God is not an engineer; He is an artist. He sculpts each of us with His hands, lovingly and uniquely. Therefore, each one of us is different.

Even rituals are done only so that people feel comfortable with God and they start coming closer to Him. When people witness the ceremony of Gods getting married, they feel comfortable and safe. To make people feel relaxed, these stories are told and expressed. You see, unless the Divine is expressed in our language, we will not be able to relate with It. That is why these stories are written.

Next is the person who is centered on ego. This is slightly more difficult to deal with. The person who is centered on ego tries to get name and fame for himself. He starts claiming that he is divine without expressing the qualities of the Divine. That is why there's a beautiful Upaniṣad verse that says: If you are divine, express it by your quality. Let people recognize it by your quality, not by your words.

What you do speaks for you; what you speak will not do anything for you. What you do, the way in which you work, speaks for you. Your words will not work for you. There's a short, beautiful Upaniṣad called Paramahamsa Upaniṣad. It says, a Paramahamsa should not wear the saffron robe. By the very quality, because of the divinity, we should be respected. The divine qualities expressed in our life, that alone should be respected. It should come because of the enlightened qualities expressed through us.

How do we know if a person is egoistic or is he a real spiritual Master? Please listen. A person who is egoistic can only play with words. Only a person who has achieved Enlightenment can radiate the energy to reproduce the same experience in you. If you get the experience, then be very clear your Master is enlightened. He is divine. He is the embodiment of spiritual experience and knowledge. If you get the words but not the experience, be very clear, the person or the path you are following is not the Ultimate.

Words are like the menu card. Experience is like the food. If you go to a restaurant and they give you a menu card and say, 'Here is the menu card, but the food is not available here,' can you call that a restaurant? No! The menu card is not enough to satisfy your hunger. In spiritual life we cannot stop with just the menu card.

The person who has approached the Divine with ego always tries to represent the Divine without having the solid experience himself. That is why the Upaniṣads again and again emphasize experience. If we don't experience, there's something seriously wrong with the person whom we are following. A true Master will reproduce in you the same experience that happened in him, no matter what your condition is.

Approach Me with Gratitude

The next level is the ultimate level. In this level, we go to the Divine with the attitude of gratitude, with the ultimate gratitude. Here, the whole relationship takes a different turn. We feel so grateful, so deeply connected to the Divine, that our whole life changes.

We move from the first level of greed, where we pray to boon-giving gods, to the next level of fear where the gods who can protect us appeal to us. The next is worry. Buddha appeals to us if we are centered on worry because he appears to be so peaceful and calm. To the person who is centered on name and fame, gods who give name and fame appeal the most. In the same way as with gods, people also approach Masters from all these various levels.

There's one more problem with people who approach Masters out of greed. Not only do they have greed, they also have their own ideas and fantasies about a Master. They come with a frame and see whether the Master fits into that frame or not.

When we have strong fantasy or imagination about things, we will not be able to relate with reality. It is the same with fear; people who come with fear will never be able to get rid of that fear. They will be stuck with that because fear itself is a fantasy.

At different levels, people approach the Master or God. The more mature we are, the more we will feel connected to that person who will give us fulfillment. When we become mature, when we are above fear and greed, we will approach the same Master, the same God, with more maturity, with more intimacy. We will feel deeply connected to him.

In Bhāgavatam (Hindu epic glorifying devotion onto incarnations), we learn about five different attitudes with which we normally relate with a Master or Go

1) Dāsa Bhāva - seeing God as a lord or master and oneself as a servant, as with Hanumān who saw Rāma as his master and served Him as a path for liberation.

2) Vātsalya Bhāva - seeing God as a divine child, as with Yaśodā who saw Kṛṣṇa as her son.

3) Sakha Bhāva - seeing God or the master as a friend, the way Arjuna related with Kṛṣṇa.

4) Mātṛu Bhāva - seeing God or the master as a father or mother, the way Śrī Ramakrishna related with goddess Kāli (representation of the Divine Mother).

5) Finally, the fifth attitude is madhura bhava - seeing God as a beloved, the way Radhā saw Kṛṣṇa. This attitude needs a tremendous amount of maturity. Only if we experience the consciousness which is beyond the body, can we relate with the Divine with the attitude of a beloved, madhura bhāva.

These are the five different bhāvas (attitudes or feeling connection) with which people relate with the Divine. With different maturity levels, different attitudes suit our minds. The more mature we are, the more the gratitude happens. The less the maturity, the more we fill our life with prayers. Prayer is greed; confession is fear.

Gratitude is the greatest prayer, and thank you, the greatest mantra. When we go beyond prayer and confession, we experience gratitude. We experience the Divine. Kṛṣṇa explains how we can grow step-by-step, how we can reach the ultimate maturity, how we can create and experience the Divine at the ultimate level.

Let us see how Kṛṣṇa explains the process step-by-step. What is the technique Kṛṣṇa offers us to grow in maturity and experience eternal consciousness?

Based on how we approach the Divine, only based on how mature we are, the whole community system has been created. How much we enrich and share with society depends on how mature we are. With the same maturity, we approach God also.

If we feel money is missing in our lives, we go to the God who gives money. If we miss knowledge, we go to Sarasvatī (the goddess of knowledge), who gives knowledge. If we feel insecure, we go to the god who protects us; we go to Mother Durgā or Kāli. If we miss spiritual experience, the ultimate experience, then we go to the divine incarnations, the ultimate expressions of the Divine.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Four types of people come to Me - caturvidhā bhajante mām ' He explains the four types as four communities. The first are the people who are distressed, i.e., the working class or śūdra. The second are the people who desire wealth, i.e., the business people or vaiśya. The third are inquisitive people who continuously enquire, continuously ask, 'Tataḥ kim? Tataḥ kim? Tataḥ kim?' (What next?) A kṣatriya, for example, never rests because he constantly asks, 'What next? What next? What next?' The fourth is the person who searches for knowledge of the Absolute: He is a brāhmaṇa.

'All four come to Me, all four reach Me, but from different levels.' From different levels all four go to the same God, but they will not experience Him in the same way. They experience Him in different ways, according to their maturity. As long as you are caught in fear or greed, you will be attracted and go only to those types of gods. It is easy to go to a temple and pray, but difficult to go to a living Master and meditate. It is for mature people, not for everyone. In the temple we see thousands; but in spiritual places, we see a few hundred. It is not for all; it's a luxury.

Spirituality is a Luxury

Spirituality is a luxury; only a few intelligent people can afford it. The price of spirituality is the limit of our suffering. Only if we have had enough suffering can we afford to get into spirituality. It is only for people who have understood that they have suffered. There are two things: It is not only the suffering, but the understanding that we suffer. This understanding is intelligence. This intelligence happens even beyond age and experience. Just a glimpse of life is enough if this intelligence is there; we will understand how suffering happens and we will not get caught in it. Both the suffering and the understanding are needed to enter into spiritual life.

'The person who approaches Me out of love and gratitude, is the best person, for I am dear to him and he is dear to Me.' By this one verse, Kṛṣṇa ends the whole conversation, the whole concept.

teṣāṁ jñānī nitya yukta eka-bhaktir viśiṣyate | priyo hi jñānino 'tyartham ahaṁ sa ca mama priyaḥ || 7.17 ||

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Starting at different levels is ok, but don't stop there.' We can start or take off from any level. However we should not stop and stagnate there. It is like failing to proceed to the second standard from the first. It is as if we want to stay in the same cozy, familiar level. It takes many lifetimes to understand and achieve this maturity.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'Out of these, the wise is always devoted to Me. He is the best person.' To start with, you can start at any level, yet you must strive to reach the Ultimate. And please don't think, 'Oh! Kṛṣṇa says it will take many lives; let me take some more lives and become mature.'

No! If you can enter into the knowledge this moment, the experience can happen to you this very moment. You don't need to postpone. Every moment is a new birth for you and every moment is death. The outgoing breath is death, and the incoming breath is birth. So be very clear, every moment you die and take birth. This moment can be a new birth for you. The person who understands this truth takes a new birth. He is called dvijā. A person who is initiated is called dvijā in Sanskrit, which means twice-born or reborn. All sannyāsis are twice-born or dvijā. 'Reborn' does not refer to being reborn physically, but at the being level. They give birth to themselves. So understand that in this moment, a new birth can happen to you.

He Is Very Dear To Me

Kṛṣṇa says: ahaṁ sa ca mama priyaḥ - He is dear to Me, and I am dear to him. He is in Me and I am in him. Kṛṣṇa says beautifully that He is in you and you are in Him. The moment you understand this ultimate Truth, the moment you approach the Divine with the right attitude, you become the Divine. All you need to do is change your attitude. Change your inner space and the whole thing is done.

The Master or the Divine is in you only when you engage yourself in enriching service to Him. Sitting in front of the Master or the Divine, just enjoying the form, is not the enriching service Kṛṣṇa talks about. Then you are only chasing Him from a purely selfish motive.

When you devote yourself to the divine mission, you become a devotee. That is when you become dear to Him. Your worship is no longer selfish. It is towards the mission of the Divine, in whatever form.

Here Kṛṣṇa says clearly, 'One who knows Me, dwells in Me. Being engaged in My mission, he attains Me, āsthitaḥ sa hi yuktātmā mām evānuttamāṁ gatim (7.18).'

When the scriptures say, 'Follow the Master,' they do not mean to follow the form. They advise you to follow the teachings of the Master, so that you can be the master too. They tell you to follow the institution of the Master, his community, his sanga. When we follow these three, the Master, his teachings and his mission, we are on the path to liberation. Only after many births and deaths can we relate to an enlightened person. We will not be able to relate to an enlightened Master unless we undergo many births and deaths.

There are seven steps in spiritual progress—1) go around many temples, perform many rituals, pilgrimages, etc. 2) do rituals by yourself 3) concentrate and pray to one God 4) instead of rituals, chant verses in praise of God 5) instead of chanting, visualize His form and meditate upon it 6) instead of meditating on any form, fall into that same consciousness, realize that the form and your soul are one and the same, that God and the soul are one and the same 7) experience reality. Don't think these seven steps will be done in one lifetime. People take hundreds of lives to achieve this maturity. It is rare to achieve this maturity.

Kṛṣṇa says: sa mahātmā sūdurlabhaḥ (7.19) - indeed, very rare is it to see such great souls who have achieved that maturity. It is easy to relate with gods in the temple because they don't demand discipline or purity from us. We can pray to Him, do whatever we want, and think He has blessed us and go away. However, relating with a living enlightened Master is difficult. The living Master will be death for us, death for our ego. We cannot play our games with him. We must grow and become mature beings. We cannot play the same old game and put his name in front. He shakes us. He awakens us.

Living Master Is A Nightmare, Simha Svapna

Living Masters are nightmares. That is why people are afraid to come near a living Master. We can't play the same game with him. The game will be his. He is the director. Only a person who has understood, after many, many births and deaths, who has matured, who has enough knowledge, surrenders to Me, surrenders to the living Master, says Kṛṣṇa.

The whole thing is a psychodrama. Whether it is a relationship, or whether it is life itself, it is nothing but a psychodrama. You have an agenda. Society has taught you that, as a father, as a husband, or as a son, you should behave in a certain pre-defined manner. The person who understands that he is playing the same drama again and again, has achieved knowledge, the real intelligence about what is happening. Then naturally you surrender. You surrender unto Me, asserts Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa says, 'One who understands that the cause of all causes is Me, realizes the ultimate divine. He realizes thus, 'How many times will I play the same drama? How many times will I make the same mistakes?' Until this realization, the whole thing is repeated again and again without end, without the experience.'

'The person who has understood, who has knowledge of this truth, surrenders unto Me, surrenders to the Master, an enlightened being - jñānavān māṁ prapadyate, knowing Me to be the cause of all causes and all there is. Such a great soul is rare - vāsudevaḥ sarvam iti sa mahātmā sūdurlabhaḥ (7.19).'

Only a person who has achieved this knowledge sees and relates with the Master in the real sense. There's a beautiful verse that says, 'Even if you have seen an enlightened Master once, you will become enlightened.' Only if you go with an attitude of love and gratitude, with maturity, only then do you see a living enlightened Master. The moment you see an enlightened being as He is, you will become enlightened. There's no doubt about it.

I Am In Your Heart

कामैस्तैस्तैर्हृतज्ञानाः प्रपद्यन्तेऽन्यदेवताः ।

kāmaistaistairhṛtajñānāḥ prapadyante'nyadevatāḥ

7.20 Those whose discrimination has been distorted by various desires, surrender unto deities. They follow specific rules and regulations of worship according to their own nature.

यो यो यां यां तनुं भक्तः श्रद्धयार्चितुमिच्छति ।
तस्य तस्याचलां श्रद्धां तामेव विदधाम्यहम् ॥ ७-२१॥ yo yo yāṃ yāṃ tanuṃ bhaktaḥ śraddhayārcitumicchati
tasya tasyācalāṃ śraddhāṃ tāmeva vidadhāmyaham || 7.21 ||

स तया श्रद्धया युक्तस्तस्याराधनमीहते । sa tayā śraddhayā yuktastasyārādhanamīhate

labhate ca tataḥ kāmānmayaiva vihitānhi tān || 7.22 ||

7.22 Endowed with such a faith, he endeavors to worship a particular demigod and obtains his desires; in reality, these benefits are granted by Me alone.

अन्तवत्तु फलं तेषां तद्भवत्यल्पमेधसाम् ।
देवान्देवयजो यान्ति मद्भक्ता यान्ति मामपि ॥ ७-२३॥ antavattu phalaṃ teṣāṃ tadbhavatyalpamedhasām
devāndevayajo yānti madbhaktā yānti māmapi || 7.23 ||
7.23 Men of limited intelligence worship the demigods and their fruits are limited and temporary. Those who worship the demigods go only to the planets of the demigods, but My devotees reach My supreme planet.

He says: I am in everyone's heart as the Paramātman (super soul). As soon as one desires to worship a particular deity, I make his faith steady so that he can devote himself to that particular deity.

Please understand that when He says 'deity' or 'demigod', He doesn't mean the Supreme. Even if you approach Kṛṣṇa out of fear or greed, you approach only a demigod. When He says the word demigod, He means the attitude with which we approach the Divine; how we approach the Divine. With the right approach, even if you approach a demigod, he will be supreme! He will give you enlightenment. With the wrong approach, even if you approach Kṛṣṇa, you will have only material benefits.

Whatever our approach to the Divine is, it plays an important role in our spiritual progress. If we approach Kṛṣṇa out of fear or greed, we worship a demigod. But Kṛṣṇa says we are not wrong, but just that it is not enough. Kṛṣṇa is not here to discourage us. Understand, nothing is wrong, but it is not enough, it is not complete. That is not the place to stop. It is a good place to have a visa, but not to have a green card or citizenship. Here, the planets or palaces of demigods are good places to visit, but not the right place to stay.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Because I am in everyone's heart as the super soul, the moment you desire to worship some demigod, I shall make your faith steady, so you can devote yourself to that particular deity.'

Stages of Seeking

How does a seeker usually travel through all these paths and eventually reach what? When you start as a normal seeker, you hear about all kinds of rituals. You hear that a particular pūjā (worship), a particular homa (fire ritual) will give some specific benefit, and you starts doing these things. On Friday, you fast for Devi (the divine mother), on Saturday, you fast for Bālāji (another name for Lord Viṣṇu), on Sunday you fast for some other god, on Monday you fast for Śiva, on Tuesday for Skanda (Lord Subrahmanya), on Thursday for the Guru (the master), and so on.

This is the way it starts. Then slowly, you not only go to all these pūjās and homas, you also go to many different temples. After some time, you understand that these rituals and trips to the temples are too much. Then you think, 'Why let somebody else do these things for me? Let me directly do it and relate with the Divine.' You start your own temple in your own home. You engage in worship. This happens when you become a little mature. You think that you should feel directly connected to the Divine. 'Let me do it by myself,' you think.

The first level in spirituality is going around visiting all the temples, watching all the types of offerings. The second level is doing it yourself. The third level is realizing, 'The Divine is there in all the gods, in all the forms. But I think I feel more attracted towards this one god, this particular god. So let me concentrate on worshipping the Divine in this form.' Having one form and offering only to that form is iśṭa niṣṭa. This is the third level. The fourth level happens when you think, 'More than these types of offerings, sounds imbued with energy is more powerful. Let me chant the sacred verses.'

Understand: surrendering through the body is pūjā; surrendering through words is japa, chanting verses in praise of the Lord; surrendering through the mind is jñāna, wisdom or knowledge of the Self. So here you think, 'Why not chant the name of God?' You start repeating the name of your favorite deity.

At every level of completion, different gods appeal to you; at every level, different Gurus or masters appeal to you, and you grow in your feeling connection or devotion with them. When you are at the level of going to pilgrimage places, people who guide you to these pilgrimage centers appeal to you. When you come to the level of pūjā and homā, other people who also do these rituals appeal to you. The person who teaches you pūjā appeals and connects to you. Even the people who teach you any skills like dancing, acting, martial arts, or even those who educate you in your studies and profession, they connect to you. The pūjā ācarya or anyone who teaches and inspires you becomes your guru.

Next, when you come to the level of completion where you begin focusing and offering to only one deity, the deity becomes your guru. This is iśṭa niṣṭa. Iśṭa niṣṭa means bowing down, revering only your iśṭa, your chosen deity.

Wherever you bow down, even if you bow down to your father or mother, you should know that you bow down to your iśṭa who is in your heart - your Ānanda Gandha.

Next, after some time you think, 'Why only repeat this verse? Why not do some meditation?' Now the person who teaches you meditation appeals to you. Meditation is again saguṇa brahman, which means meditating on a form. This is Līlā dhyāna, the next level of completion or next space of iśṭa niṣṭa.

Līlā dhyāna means strongly feeling connected to your own version of your chosen ideal. You are free to choose your ideal in Hindu tradition. You can choose your own Guru. You need to understand, living with your chosen ideal is called iśṭa niṣṭa. Līlā dhyāna means constantly remembering the actions and the life of your chosen ideal and being immersed in the qualities, words, actions, body language and life of the Master; whatever you may be doing, being totally immersed in Him.

Śrī Ramakrishna Paramahamsa gives a very beautiful example of iśṭa niṣṭa. A woman in the house will serve everybody. She will serve the brother-in-law, sister-in-law, father-inlaw, mother-in-law, husband's elder brother, younger brother, sister's husband; she will serve everyone, give them food and take care of them. But she knows her personal space is only for her husband, Same way, you may bow down in front of any god, any deity, any guru, but you know you are bowing down only to your Guru in these forms.

Living with God - Levels of Completion

Līlā dhyāna means being lost in the pastimes of the guru or god. With God, one thing is that you may not be directly involved in the whole līlā. So you have to remember, remember and try to practice. With a living Guru, you are directly part of the divine play. So, you don't need to try to remember; He will be remembering you. Even if you are afraid that he is going to shout at you, it is līlā dhyana. Practicing the presence of God is constantly feeling you are with Him, He is with you. Practicing the presence of God is the greatest, most powerful technique to put you in bhāva samādhi immediately. Bhagavān Śrī Ramakrishna did it; Bhagavān Ramaṇa Maharṣi also practiced it.

You know you are bowing down only to your chosen ideal, iśṭa niṣṭa. Practicing the presence of God, Līlā dhyāna, and iśṭa niṣṭa, all the three boil down to the same space, space of bhāva samādhi. Practice iśṭa niṣṭa, with the whole Existence cognizing, 'I bow down to the Master who is in my Ānanda Gandha; whether he is awakened or not, whether you experience or not, He is there in my Ānanda Gandha.'

Understand, Ānanda Gandha is a nādi, a subtle cosmic energy center just below anāhata cakra (heart center) and above maṅipūraka cakra (stomach center), which is awakened only by an Incarnation. Please understand, your Ānanda Gandha is the source of your life. Just like any slide kept in front of projector light becomes reality, any truth kept in front of your inner space, your Ānanda Gandha becomes a reality.

Practicing the presence of God makes you more and more authentic. That is the beauty of the Hindu tradition. Iśṭa niṣṭa makes you do lot of self-completion with you.

So, the first level of completion is attending rituals and visiting temples, pūjā and yātrā. The second level is doing the rituals yourself, pūjā. The third level is having the feeling connection and concentrating on one deity, and offering only to that deity, iśṭa niṣṭa. The fourth level of completion is realizing that the verses are more powerful than rituals, and you start chanting the name of your iśṭa. The fifth level is visualizing a form and meditating on His pastimes and being immersed in His qualities, words, actions, body language and life; instead of chanting, you enter the space of feeling and living with His presence. Then, when you sincerely meditate, He Himself appears. He gives you His darśan (vision) and guides you to the higher level of practice. He guides you to the right living Master. Sometimes He gives you darśan and guides you; sometimes He automatically makes you feel connected to your Master.

Only a person who has come to this level of completion can feel directly connected to a living enlightened Master. Till you reach this level of completion, till this maturity happens, you cannot straightaway feel completely connected to an enlightened person.

You need to go through all five levels of completion, only then will you feel completely connected to a living Master. When you come to the stage where you meditate on a single form, the Master happens in your life and guides you to the highest level of completion, enriching you with Enlightenment. The form upon which you meditate and your own form are expressions of the same divine energy. So the Master puts you into real meditation. This means turning towards yourself, turning towards your own consciousness, turning towards your own being or soul. He gives you the technique to realize your being. This is the sixth level of completion. The seventh level of completion, the ultimate completion, the complete completion is when you experience that you are That. You achieve enlightenment.

This is the usual route of completion that seekers travel on, starting from the first level of completion, moving to the second level, and ending with the ultimate and complete completion of experiencing the Self. Completion is Self. Now find out in which level of completion you are in and try to go to the next level. That's all. That is all you need to do. Just go on completing, completing, completing with everything, with Guru, with God, with life.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'Because I reside in everyone's heart as the super soul, when somebody desires to worship a demigod, I make his faith steady, so that he can devote himself to that particular deity.' When you approach the Divine even from the first level of completion, He helps you. He enriches you without doubt. He never gives up on you. You may give up on yourself, but He never gives up on you. One of the biggest qualities of an Incarnation is that He never gives up on you.

When you start, you are like 18 carat gold. There's nothing wrong with 18 carat gold, but you need to be put into the fire a little bit, and slowly, you become 22 carat gold. Then you reach the Master, a living enlightened Master. Then slowly you become 24 carat gold, and you become enlightened. If you throw away the first step, giving up on the 18 carat gold, you never reach the second step. Unless you have gone through the earlier steps of completion, it will be difficult to relate and have feeling connection to a living Master.

Approaching the Divine in some form is the first step, or the first level. There's nothing wrong in that, but don't stop there. Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'I make his faith steady, so that he can devote himself to that particular deity,' which means that he can grow in that particular space of completion. There is the possibility of growth. He says, 'I don't discourage him; I make his faith steady, so that he will slowly come up to higher levels of completion.'

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Even if you approach Me with an attitude of fear or greed, I fulfill your needs. It is My own energy which fulfills them, so that you grow, and you come up to the next level of completion.' If you receive boons through demigods, do not think that those deities are responsible for it. Do not think that the idols that you pray to are the ones who granted your prayers. All these are granted by the ultimate energy, the Existential energy. But you are not expected to stop with these boons. You are expected to grow further levels of completion.

When you approach the Divine, first all your dreams will become reality. The divine will bless you. All your desires will be realized. Later on, the Divine will give you the understanding that the reality you perceive is itself a dream. First God gives the śakti (energy) to turn your dreams into reality. Then He gives the buddhi (intelligence) to realize that reality itself is a dream.

That is what He says here: When I bless you, according to your maturity, as per your level of completion and based on the way in which you approach the Divine, I give everything.

When you go to a temple and worship an idol, when you are in the first level of completion, you might feel that you are praying to a stone or metal idol. As your completion grows, you will realize that the idol is not just stone or metal; it is living energy. Even without much effort, you will start feeling the energy inside the temple.

Why do you think millions of people, visit holy shrines in Tirupati or Varanasi or Tiruvannamalai? A few hundred people can be misled, but not millions, and that too without any enticement. They go because they feel relieved, they feel deeply enriched; not all of them go merely out of greed and fear. There are thousands who go because unknowingly they feel the hand of God, as it were. They feel the touch and they feel the 'energy connection'.

Hindus worship through the idols, not the idols themselves; our rituals address the energy behind these idols. Logic cannot make us understand this. Only faith can make us experience the śraddha that comes from authenticity. We need to go through this stage of worshipping the form before we realize the formless. Otherwise we will all be intellectual monsters. Religions that condemn idol worship without understanding the philosophy behind worship breed confusion that leads to destruction.

In every form of learning we need to advance step-by-step. Only if we are an exception can we be promoted to university education without attending high school. Such exceptions are rare and prove the rule. When we consider idol worship foolish and meaningless, it only means that we are foolish and ignorant. The minute science advances and when a scientist measures the energy vibration of our temples and proves that these are centers of cosmic energy, kṣetras, the same people will be queuing up at the temples.

When thousands and millions of people congregate to celebrate the Divine and offer gratitude, any place becomes a temple, a place of worship. Every twelve years, tens of millions of people gather by the sacred river Gangā in Bharat to celebrate Kumbh Melā. In certain years 100 million people have gathered on this occasion, in what is certainly the largest gathering in the world. No invitations or promotions are done, just the dates of Kumbh Melā mark the Hindu calendar or Pañcānga on a Hindu's home wall. Simply millions and millions gather.

As these people bathe in the sacred river with deep śraddha (authenticity), gratitude and prayers, the river gets purified and in turn purifies them. It is a deep bio-spiritual interaction that raises the energy of the planet and the Universe.

When Kṛṣṇa says, 'He goes to the planets of the demigods,' don't think there is some planet out there. He talks about inner space and experience. If we worship some god out of greed, we never come out of that greed. We will be continuously caught in greed. If we worship some god out of fear, we will be always in that fear. If we worship the Divine out of love and gratitude, we experience a totally different inner space, the space of completion, the space of Enlightenment.

Kṛṣṇa says: Men of small intelligence - people caught in greed or fear, attention-need or worry - worship the demigods. Of course, sometimes we worship the demigods; sometimes we approach Bhagāvan Kṛṣṇa or the ultimate God with the same incomplete attitude, the attitude of asking and begging.

If we carry the incomplete cognition of greed, whether we worship Kubera, the god who gives money, or Kṛṣṇa, in effect we worship only a devata (demigod). Even if we worship Kṛṣṇa with that same incomplete cognition out of our space of incompletion, we worship only a demigod. It is the cognition of completion or incompletion that makes Kṛṣṇa either the ultimate God, Bhagavān or a demigod, Deva. It is we who create the cognition, the space. It is we who create the energy. By worshipping Devatas, we attain Devatas.

This is an important sūtra, a technique. It says:

antavattu phalaṁ teṣāṁ tad bhavaty alpamedhasāṁ | devān devayajo yānti madbhaktā yānti mām api || 7.23 ||

It says that when we get boons from demigods, they are temporary. God will bless us with wealth when we ask Him. But we need intelligence to preserve and to protect wealth. So be very clear, when we receive anything out of energy, without having the maturity to receive and sustain it, it is only temporary. If we have enough intelligence and maturity to have wealth, then naturally, we would have created it. Because we don't have buddhi, wisdom, we ask God to give us śakti, energy. If we get śakti without buddhi, it will only be temporary. That is what Kṛṣṇa says: If we get śakti without buddhi, it is temporary. It will not remain with us. That is why He says that boons derived from demigods are temporary, not permanent. And if we continue to worship them, we are stuck with them. We create that kind of energy in our inner space. We live with that kind of energy in our being.

Gratitude - The Greatest Attitude

He makes one more statement: madbhaktā yānti mām api - My devotees attain Me. Then He says these words: If you approach Me with the ultimate attitude, with the attitude of love and gratitude, you achieve Me. The greatest attitude is gratitude. If you approach Me with gratitude, you experience Me.

We continuously pray intensely, in all possible ways, 'Oh God, give me this. Oh God, give me that.' But we never feel grateful for the things that are showered on us.

This very life is a blessing. Can we say that our life has been given to us as payment for some job that we did in Vaikuṇṭha (abode of Lord Viṣṇu) or Kailāśa (abode of Lord Śiva)? No! It's not as if we worked for 100 years in Kailāśa, and earned a check that says, 'Alright, have 70 years of life.' If we work in the army, they give us money to study. It's not like that; we did not get life as a salary. It's a pure blessing showered on us.

Every breath is a blessing. The breath that we inhale and exhale is a boon given to us. This very life is a blessing. Continuously we miss things that are not part of our possession. But we never experience the things that are showered on us by the Divine. Each of us has a big list of things that God has not given us and we also have a big list of things that God has given us. If you take a paper and pen and start writing these lists, both lists will be endless. Every moment of our life is a gift from the Divine. We are alive, we are still conscious; that by itself is a gift from the Divine.

Now it's up to us whether to look at the list of things not given to us and constantly feel miserable and live in hell, or look at the list of things showered on us and be in heaven. The second way makes us feel deeply grateful. It makes us say, 'Oh God! You have showered so much on me, and given me the blessing of life.' We feel grateful and create our abode, Vaikuṇṭa or Kailāśa. It's purely our choice.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'These men of small intelligence worship demigods. Their results are temporary.' We continue to live that way. When we feel life is a blessing and we approach the Divine with deep love and gratitude, not only do we experience divine consciousness, Kṛṣṇa says: They achieve ME. They attain ME - madbhaktā yānti mām api.

There's another verse where Kṛṣṇa beautifully says: 'If you ask for something, I will give you that. If you don't ask for anything, I will give you Me.' People say, 'Who wants Him? We want Him only as a utility, not Him. As long as He serves our purpose, things are ok. So we don't want Him.' People want only solutions. They don't want the Divine.

Noone Knows Me

7.24 Unintelligent men, who do not know Me perfectly, think that I, the supreme personality of God, the Bhagavān, who was impersonal before, have become a human being now. They do not know that I am imperishable and supreme, even when I assume the body.

7.26 O Arjuna, as the supreme personality of God, I know all that has happened, all that is happening, and all that is to happen. I also know all living entities; but no one knows Me.

इच्छाद्वेषसमुत्थेन द्वन्द्वमोहेन भारत ।

icchādveṣasamutthena dvandvamohena bhārata
sarvabhūtāni sammohaṃ sarge yānti parantapa || 7.27 ||

7.27 O scion of Bhārata [Arjuna], O conqueror of the foe, all living entities are born into delusion, overcome by the dualities of attachment and aversion. Unintelligent men, who do not know my supreme, illimitable and immortal form, assume my illimitable form as manifested.

Here is another important verse. When He says earlier, 'My devotees achieve Me, attain Me' naturally Arjuna would have had the doubt: are you one more devata (demigod)?

So Kṛṣṇa gives the explanation: 'Unintelligent men, who are not mature, think I am just this form. Only an intelligent man understands that I am immortal. Even when I assume this form, I am that same consciousness. I have not become an ordinary human being by assuming a human form.' He declares His divinity openly. He declares, 'I am the same even when I assume a human form. Don't think I am one more demigod.'

He says, 'I am unborn, immortal, illimitable, even when I assume this form. Even when I assume this form, I am that same ultimate divine. I am not an ordinary man.' This is an important statement. This statement is made to declare His enlightenment and to express clearly and explicitly, 'I am enlightened. I am the embodiment of the ultimate consciousness.' The problem is that the person who is receiving this is not mature enough to recognize it as such.

Arjuna is approaching Kṛṣṇa out of fear and greed. When the Gītā started, Arjuna approached Kṛṣṇa out of fear and depression, and also out of greed, with the 'What is beneficial for me?' attitude. He asked Kṛṣṇa what would give maximum benefit, which is an expression of the attitude of greed.

Next he experiences fear. He is afraid of what will happen in the war. Fear and greed - that is the way he approaches Kṛṣṇa. So initially even Arjuna sees Kṛṣṇa as a demigod. At the initial level, Arjuna's approach is also as though it is towards a demigod. That is the reason why Kṛṣṇa now declares His glory, or His true form.

He says, 'All types of people come to Me. I fulfill them at different levels, to encourage their faith and to enrich them to grow. But only intelligent people understand, that even if I assume this body, I am the ultimate, I am enlightened. Unintelligent people think by seeing my body, by seeing my form, that I am not the Divine. So please be very clear: I am THAT.' He makes a clear statement again and again, so that Arjuna understands.

We need to understand two important issues here. First, the formless energy of Kṛṣṇa defines His supremacy, His divinity, His Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Second, in whatever form the formless is expressed, it is divine. It is the awareness of that divinity in Him that makes Kṛṣṇa divine, the supreme Master. If that awareness happens in you, you will be in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, immersed in Him; and you will be divine too. The intelligence Kṛṣṇa talks about is the intelligent awareness of one's own divinity, not merely that of Kṛṣṇa. They are both one and the same.

It is only when we are aware of our divinity that we appreciate the Divine. Till you become enlightened, you will have no clear awareness of who the Master is. Till then you try to reach Him only out of fear or greed, however slight it may be. It is only when you are enlightened and are in the same awareness as Him, only when it is no longer necessary for you to fear Him or desire through Him, that you open up to Him in sheer gratitude.' That is the intelligence that Kṛṣṇa speaks about. When that intelligence exhibits itself, when that awareness surfaces, then and only then true recognition of the Divine happens. That true recognition happens when you recognize the Divine within you.

How To Recognize Divinity?

Kṛṣṇa asks: How can you recognize divinity when you are covered in ignorance? How can you recognize Me when you are not aware?

Out of the thousands who come to the Master, tens of thousands, the vast majority seeks favors of one kind or another. They come for the healing of the body and mind, or they come for repairing relationships, and for material benefits. Even those who do not look for material benefits may aspire to that intangible peace and bliss.

It is the rare person who comes without asking anything. It is not even seeking a benefit, tangible or intangible, that leads such people. It is an awareness of what they need to be and where they need to be. They are attracted like iron filings to a magnet. It is a call from their being which leads them to the Master.

'No one knows Me, māṁ tu veda na kaścana (7.26)', says the Master. 'Don't take me for granted,' says Kṛṣṇa. 'Do not put me in a frame for I shall not stay there,' He says.

Can you know Nature? Can you predict Nature? Each time you think you can, Nature does things differently. Then you say Nature is cruel and ask why Nature is so cruel. Nature is Nature, not cruel, not kind, it just is.

Kṛṣṇa consciousness is not just about going around chanting 'Hare Kṛṣṇa, Hare Kṛṣṇa'. Such chanting, unless done with awareness from the space of completion, is of no real consequence; True Kṛṣṇa consciousness needs no words. In fact, it has no words because the experience is beyond expression. One who experiences it does not express it.

Fear and greed are what drive us, says Kṛṣṇa. That is our delusion that leads us away from Him. Attachment and aversion, rāga and dveṣa, form the duality, the polarity of human life. Even at the fundamental cellular level, biologists have shown that this tendency is exhibited. If you place a single cell in a petridish and place a drop of nutrient, it is attracted to it and moves towards it. If you place a drop of toxin in the same dish, the cell moves away from it. If on either side, you place drops of nutrient and toxin, the cell remains immobile.

At the cellular level, attraction aids in growth and aversion in survival. A cell can either grow or protect itself. At the multi-cellular level with higher intelligence, human beings act in the same way as the primary cell. They get attached to what they think is good for them and flee from what they think is not good.

Unfortunately, what works well at the cellular level does not work so well at the human level simply because humans have greater intelligence. Cells obey Nature and are directed by Nature to recognize instinctively what is good and what is bad. They also automatically accept the consequence.

Humans are different. They bypass signals from their body, refuse to accept what Nature tries to tell them and indulge in or avoid activities or objects based on their logic. Logic overriding Nature always leads to suffering.

Shedding attachment and aversion is the first step to awareness. Attachment and aversion are born out of our past; based on experiences and memories that form the root thought patterns, what we call saṁskāra in Sanskrit. Based on these saṁskāras, we try to define our future. The problem is that these saṁskāras operate at an unconscious level and drive us from unawareness to unawareness, from incompletion to incompletion. Therefore, we end up acting instinctively, but unlike our cellular brethren, without listening to Nature.

No Sin, No Virtue

7.28 Persons who have acted virtuously, whose sinful actions are completely eradicated and who are freed from the duality of reality and unreality, engage themselves in My worship with firm resolve.

jarāmaraṇamokṣāya māmāśritya yatanti ye

7.29 Persons who are striving for liberation from the cycle of birth, old age and death, take refuge in Me. They are actually Brahman because they comprehend everything about activities that transcend these.

साधिभूताधिदैवं मां साधियज्ञं च ये विदुः ।
प्रयाणकालेऽपि च मां ते विदुर्युक्तचेतसः ॥ ७-३०॥
sādhibhūtādhidaivaṃ māṃ sādhiyajñaṃ ca ye viduḥ prayāṇakāle'pi ca māṃ te viduryuktacetasaḥ 7-30

7.30 Those who know Me as the supreme Lord, as the governing principle of the material manifestation, who know Me as the one underlying all the demigods and as the one sustaining all sacrifices, can, with steadfast mind, understand and know Me, even at the time of death.

Kṛṣṇa talks here about pāpa and puṇya, sinful and meritorious acts. The concept of sin and merit itself is a delusion, one of duality. At the level of Kṛṣṇa consciousness there is no pāpa or puṇya, no sin and no act of merit. All are the same.

Your immediate question will be, 'Can I do anything I want? Can I kill, maim, annihilate, and be a Hitler?' When you reach Kṛṣṇa consciousness you will not be a Hitler. It is impossible. At the level where you are now, it is necessary to follow some regulations because you still operate in duality. You operate from attachment and aversion. You act out of fear and greed.

Unfortunately, instead of these statements being guidelines for self-awareness as they were intended to be, they have become tools in the hands of institutions, whether religious, political or societal, to control us.

The five vows are satya, ahiṁsā, asteya, aparigṛha and brahmacarya. Satya is truth in thoughts, word and action; ahiṁsā is not harming anyone in thought, word and action; asteya is not coveting, not stealing what belongs to another;

aparigṛha is living with minimal needs; brahmacarya is living without fantasies. These vows are for self-discipline and they lead one to awareness and completion. No one needs to control us. Understand, as long as we need to look over our shoulder to see if someone is watching us, we are still living in hypocrisy.

Kṛṣṇa addresses mortal beings here, in the form of Arjuna. So He talks about doing virtuous acts and avoiding sinful acts. What follows is more important. He says to go beyond duality, the duality of sin and virtue. This is only possible when we become aware. It is only when we become aware that we can reach Him.

You can be born again and again and still think that you are being born for the first time, and that this is the only life that you have. This knowledge requires no wisdom. With this knowledge, you focus on this life and want to extract the maximum juice out of it. You run after everything possible, as if there is no tomorrow. You live in a fantasy world. You enact a psychodrama.

Please understand that this is not your only life. This body is not who you are. All this is temporary. What you chase is a dream. One day you will wake up and discover that this life is nothing but a dream. You are more than this body and mind; you are above this body-mind. What you are endures after death. What you are returns after death. When you understand this cosmic truth, you are liberated. At some point in time, you do not wish to be part of this psychodrama anymore. You are bored. You ask, 'What for?' just as Śankara plaintively asks Kṛṣṇa, 'Again and again, without end, I come and I go. Please save me from this useless journey; let me be with You.'

It Is Never Too Late To Reach Me

Kṛṣṇa ends this chapter with the prescription for how to know and understand Him and reach Him.

Even at the time of death, He says, even if all your life you lived a dissolute life, if at the point of departure you realize your folly, the futility of the psychodrama that you have enacted, that is enough to redeem you. The mere recognition of that can save you. His compassion is unlimited. He promises: Knowing Me at the time of death, even at the time of death, will lead you to Me.

Please understand, this is not easy, not so easy as it seems. If you have been ruled by greed, greed for power, wealth, possessions and all such material objects throughout your life, nothing can change suddenly at the time of death. You will be full of the same fantasies that you were obsessed with throughout your life. Your last thoughts will be on those very same things.

We cannot change our nature at the last minute. If we want to die with the thought of the Divine uppermost in our mind, we must cultivate the habit of remembering Him now. We should start knowing and understanding Him today. Then and only then will we know and understand Him at the time of death.

Some may ask, 'What is the need to understand and know Kṛṣṇa, whether at the point of death or before? If I do the right things in the right manner, why should it make any difference whether or not I understand and know Kṛṣṇa?'

The ultimate Master resides within us, not anywhere else. The external Master is a guide to make us understand, know and accept the Master within us. Yes, it may be possible in rare cases for that wisdom to dawn on us at the point of death, but it is not common. Someone who constantly seeks that truth will continuously search for that Master within, and has a better chance of making that connection earlier rather than later in life.

Kṛṣṇa in His deep compassion says, 'Even if that happens at the point of death, I shall redeem you.' He does not want us to miss that chance, even if we have not thought about Him all our lives. He does not rule out the possibility, even if we have not been seeking all our lives. He wants us to discover the Master within. Even if we do that at the point of our last breath, it is okay with Him.

Meditation is a technique for surrendering one's identity. Completion is the process of surrendering one's root patterns. Throughout the Gītā, Kṛṣṇa suggests to Arjuna techniques (called sūtra) that lead to liberation. Combined with the cognition at the intellectual level (called śāstra), as well as with the higher devotional acceptance of His glories through verses (called stotra), the Gītā leads you through the path of surrender into liberation.

Dropping one's identity requires a deep cognition, acceptance and intranalization, and completion which brings the merger of the Self, World and God. Simply put, we accept our divinity and become one with the Divine. We become complete, whole. This is what Enlightenment is about.

The simple truth is that the present moment of completion is Kṛṣṇa consciousness. When we reach this state of being in the present moment, we reach Him and we are complete. So it is not the mere intellectual understanding of what we read in the verses, but the authentic listening, śravana, authentic intranalyzing, manana and powerfully living and radiating, nididhyāsana of what Kṛṣṇa speaks into our listening, that can complete us.

ॐ तत्सदिति श्रीमद्भगवद्गीतासूपनिषत्सु ब्रह्मविद्यायां योगशास्त्रे श्रीकृष्णार्जुनसंवादे ज्ञानविज्ञानयोगो नाम सप्तमोऽध्यायः ॥ ७॥

Thus ends the seventh chapter named Jñānavijñāna Yogaḥ of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 8
Jñānavijñāna Yogaḥ

Death is our ultimate fear. Anyone who claims not to be disturbed by the thought of death is only lying. The moment we understand death, our life becomes a celebration. Krsna reveals the secret of death, understanding which, we can live even our death.

The Art Of Leaving

In this chapter, Kṛṣṇa speaks about death. He gives us deep insight into how death can become liberation and celebration. Death is the end of life, as long as we don't understand it. The moment we understand it, it becomes a liberation and celebration.

Death Is A Celebration

Death is not the end of life, as we think. It is the climax of life. End is different from climax. The moment we think that death is the end, we wonder about it, trying to figure out what happens next. We create more trouble for ourselves. We worry about death the moment we think it is the end. Our lives become dull because of such worries. The shadow of death happens even when we live.

A man who is unable to understand death is like the living dead. A person who understands death will live even his death. A person who does not understand death dies even when he is alive. A person who understands death lives even when he dies. Death or life are not incidental, they depend on our intelligence. When we have clear intelligence, we live our death. When we don't know, when we do not have the clarity about death, we die even when we live.

The fear of death haunts everyone from birth. All religions sprang up from this one fear, this one question: Why do we die? What happens after we die? How can we escape death?

Death is not an end; it is a passage. It is a passage in a journey that continues. It is not a one-time event, as some religions seem to believe. We do not live and die once; we live again and again. As Kṛṣṇa says, the undying spirit casts off bodies as one casts off garments and puts on new ones. The spirit within is immortal. The spirit within us is part of the cosmic energy and lives on, whereas the bodies that it assumes perish.

Enlightened Masters of the Hindu tradition experienced the state beyond life and death and have provided us with guidelines about how to achieve the same state. However, they expressed this to a select audience of disciples in a language coded for the understanding of those mature enough to work with that knowledge.

Here Kṛṣṇa, the greatest of all enlightened Masters, out of His infinite compassion, provides this knowledge in a form that anyone can understand. All one requires to imbibe this knowledge, is an open mind and the willingness to work sincerely with integrity, authenticity and with dedication.

When we understand the art of living, the process of leaving becomes a celebration. When we understand that this life and the departure from this life is a single journey in a continuous cycle of birth and death, there is no urgency in living this life and there is no fear in leaving this life also. When we understand that what we do in this life and how we do it determines how we are reborn, we will have a far greater understanding of how to lead this life.

Arjuna starts here with questions.

Knowing Him At the Time Of Death

अर्जुन उवाच ।
किं तद् ब्रह्म किमध्यात्मं किं कर्म पुरुषोत्तम ।
अधिभूतं च किं प्रोक्तमधिदैवं किमुच्यते ॥ ८-१॥

8.1 Arjuna says: O my Lord, O supreme person, what is Brahman? What is the Self? What are result-based actions? What is this material manifestation? And what are the demigods? Please explain all this to me.

अधियज्ञः कथं कोऽत्र देहेऽस्मिन्मधुसूदन ।
प्रयाणकाले च कथं ज्ञेयोऽसि नियतात्मभिः ॥ ८-२॥ adhiyajñaḥ kathaṃ ko’tra dehe’sminmadhusūdana
prayāṇakāle ca kathaṃ jñeyo’si niyatātmabhiḥ || 8.2 ||

8.2 How does this Lord of sacrifice live in the body, and in which part does He live, O Madhusūdana? How can those engaged in devotional service know You at the time of their death?

No English words can convey the meaning of so many beautiful words expressed by Arjuna. A single word has many meanings in Saṃskṛit. Understand, the Sanskrit language is not only linguistic, but also has importance at the phonetic level. Just the vibration of the words can transform our whole inner space. The sound changes the energy of the place and the inner space of those who hear it or are chanting it.

We should understand the concepts called padā and padārtha. For example, when you hear the word ‘cow,’ immediately a figure appears in our mind - an animal with four legs, a tail, head and two horns. The word is called padā, the figure is padārtha. What happens in our mind when we hear the word is padārtha. In all languages the distance or gap between padā and padārtha is significant. In Sanskrit the connection is immediate; the result is instantaneous. That is why you should listen to Sanskrit devotional verses for at least 10 minutes a day. It does not matter whether you understand it or not. Just listen to any Sanskrit verse—whether it is Viṣṇu Sahasṛanāma, Bhagavad Gītā, Śiva Sahasṛanāma or something else. Even if you don’t understand the meaning of the verses, the very energy of the vibrations will purify your body.

There is something called śabda tattva, the principle of sound. When air travels from our navel area to the throat, the śabda tattva changes the air into words. If this element is not there, only air comes out; no words come out. In other languages the more we use śabda tattva, the more tired we become. However in Sanskrit, the śabda tattva strengthens us. The more we chant, the more energetic we become. It is like the generator automatically re-charging the battery and the battery running the generator. It is completely interconnected.

The Sanskrit language strengthens the śabda tattva that converts air into sound or words. This is why it does not matter whether or not we understand it. Listening to the sound, the very vibration, has an effect on our being. Modern day research proves that the vibrations of the verses can straightaway remove impurities. This is why Masters ask us to offer different types of worship as a means to chant Sanskrit verses. We simply heal ourselves.

Here, Arjuna asks beautifully, 'O Lord! What is Brahman? What is Self? What are result-based actions? What is this material manifestation? What are demi-gods? O Madhusūdana! How do You live in the body, and how can those engaged in devotion, those who are practicing the eternal consciousness, know You at the time of death?'

Understand one thing, when we have so many questions, we are not ready to wait for answers. We are simply expressing our confusion. It is almost a catharsis. Here Arjuna asks so many questions. However, the main question to Kṛṣṇa is: How does a person who is engaged in practicing Your teachings know You at the time of death? Here starts the whole teaching of Kṛṣṇa. He reveals the secrets of death.

The West has spent all its energy to understand life. The East has spent all its energy to understand death. Nobody has gone so deeply into, or achieved such deep experiences of death, as our Ṛṣis, sages have. These Masters have done a great service by bringing the knowledge of death to the people who are living. Please be very clear, our understanding about death impacts our understanding about life. Life and death are two sides of the same coin. Understand one thing: In the East, all religions, Hinduism, Buddhism, Jainism, talk about many births or reincarnation. Most Western religions talk about a single birth.

Please be very clear: Our understanding about death influences our whole social structure. Our whole thinking system, our whole mentality can be transformed with the right understanding about death. The idea and understanding of death is much more important than the understanding of life. Whether we understand life or not, it remains the same. But the moment we understand death, the whole quality of life changes and our consciousness changes.

The moment we realize the truth of death, if we experience even an intellectual understanding of death, it is enough to transform our whole way of thinking. That is why the moment we think of Yama, god of death, our whole life has yama, or discipline. The Sanskrit word 'yama' means both 'death' and 'discipline'.

Understanding of Death Instills Discipline

The first technique of sage Patañjali in his work, Yoga Sūtra, is yama. Death is also yama. If we understand death, our whole life will be automatically disciplined. A strange but authentic discipline will happen in our life. It is because discipline as we know it is hypocrisy. But the discipline that is yama is a new kind of discipline, which is strange yet totally authentic.

The person whose inner space is filled with bliss will never be touched by any impurity. Of course, it is a difficult concept to understand. However, the moment we understand the depth of it, we will understand this concept. Understand death intellectually. Your whole thinking will change. Your whole way of living, your very being will be transformed. You need not leave this place as the same person. Your core can be touched.

Kṛṣṇa starts with the secrets. He explains the secrets of death.

8.6 Whatever state of being one remembers when he quits his body, it is that state one will attain without fail.

Before going into what happens at the time of death, let us understand how we assume the body, how we live through it and how we leave it. Please understand that we create our whole body out of our fear, greed, guilt and our engraved memories, called the root thought patterns (saṁskāras). Whatever saṁskāras we have, we create the body to work them out, experience them and enjoy them. Once we have created the body and live our life, we do not live out only the root thought patterns, (saṁskāras) that created this body, we also acquire more saṁskāras, more patterns.

You can fulfill your desires that you bring and live an enriching life of completion. You actually have the power to simply manifest the reality of your choice. You have the potential for self-transformation that will enrich every aspect of your life, bringing you everything from health to wealth to meaningful relationships to lasting happiness. Inside each of you is an enormous potential energy known as Kunḍalinī. Kunḍalinī is nothing but your own latent inner energy which you have never used, and which you may not even know about. Kunḍalinī expresses through you in four different streams, known as the four inner powers. All these inner powers are the different expressions of Kunḍalinī energy in your life. The key to health, success and lasting happiness lies in unlocking the four inner powers that are continuously available to you.

Though you use these powers everyday in your life, you don't use them consciously, with a clear intention. Please understand, all these powers are great energies, just like electricity or wind-power. If you handle them properly, they can shower you with everything you want. But if you don't handle them properly, they will continue to impact your life in negative ways.

The key is to create the right space inside you to express your greatest and highest possibility. When you create the right space inside you, all the events of your choice will simply flow into your life without any effort. Everything you do will be successful. When you learn to use these powers in the right way, you will immediately transform not only your own life, but the lives of all those living around you.

To be able to unlock these great powers inside you, you must first understand a little more about yourself - the way you live and the way you leave. Your four inner powers are: the power of words or vāk śakti; the power of thoughts or mano śakti; the power of feeling or prema śakti; and the power of living or ātma śakti.

Karma refers to the unfulfilled desires that we create over many births, which pull us back again to take birth and fulfill them. We have three types of karma - sañcita, prārabdha and āgāmya.

Sañcita karma is our complete bank of unfulfilled karmas like our safety deposit or the files archived in our office vault. Prārabdha karma are those karmas that we have brought and come in this life, like files in filing cabinets which we access and work on regularly. Āgāmya karma are like the new files on our table that we keep creating - new karma that we create in every life.

We must exhaust all three types of karmas to experience enlightenment. Sañcita karma is all that we have accumulated over many births. Prārabdha karma is karma that we brought with us to work out in this life. Āgāmya karma is what we acquire newly in this birth.

Prārabdha karma is like our opening bank balance in this life. We have enough energy to exhaust this prārabdha karma. Then why do we feel that this life is not sufficient? Why do we feel unfulfilled?

The problem is that after coming down, we forget what we came down for, the saṁskāras and desires that we brought to live out and complete. Instead we accumulate more and more desires from family, friends and society. We accumulate desires from others in society and work out their desires in our life.

When we live out others' desires in our life, we feel deeply discontented, deeply incomplete because the energy that we brought with us will become insufficient. If we go downtown with a plan and a particular amount of money and suddenly our plan changes, naturally we run short. After coming down to planet Earth, we forget what root patterns or saṁskāras we brought and we collect more and more desires from society.

So much social conditioning happens through advertisements. All advertisements make us poor. The advertisers become rich, no doubt, but we become poor. Advertisement agencies know that whatever touches the mūlādhāra is automatically recorded in our system. That is why whether it is soap or shampoo or clothes or cars, it is promoted with the undertones of sex appeal. We forget one thing: when we pay $2, we get only the soap and not the model who is using the soap in the advertisement. But both the soap and the model are recorded together in our system.

Whatever root patterns get recorded in the mūlādhāra energy center are so deep that we unconsciously act in accordance with them. As long as we fulfill our own desires, it is fine. However, when we live out others' desires, the problem starts. In the next verse, Kṛṣṇa goes slightly deeper into this. Kṛṣṇa says here, 'O best of embodied beings! The physical nature that is constantly changing is called ādhibhūta or the universal form of the Lord, which includes all the demi-gods. For example, the nature of the Sun and Moon is ādhidaiva. As the supreme Lord represented as the super soul in the heart of every embodied being, I am called ādhiyagña.'

We have seen how we are ruled by our desires at every step. Please understand: This gives us a background against which to understand the secret of death. When we understand why we take birth, it is easier to understand what happens when we leave the body. We will see the secrets of death in the next verse. Here Kṛṣṇa throws light on the physical matter in front of us. If we understand this deeply, our desire to 'possess' automatically drops.

Let us take this chair you are sitting on. To our knowledge, there is some solid object placed at this location. However, if we go one level deeper, we see that this solid plastic can be broken down into many particles that make up this plastic. Now if we go one step further, we see that there are atoms and molecules. We can keep dividing into smaller and smaller particles and there is no end to it. And more than ninety percent of the volume within each particle is empty space. Modern science has proven that matter and energy are mutually convertible. You see, this solid object that our eye sees is not solid. It is pure energy. This physical matter is energy and it constantly changes because of the fluid nature of energy. That is what Kṛṣṇa says: adhibhūtaḥ kṣaro bhāvaḥ.

This physical or material nature constantly changes. Understand, because of the fluid nature of energy, it constantly moves; it changes. Change is the only certain thing. That is why everything around is temporary. We think something is permanent and hence we try to possess it.

Everything that we call matter is energy and it constantly changes. This truth was given by inner scientists or Ṛṣis thousands of years ago. Kṛṣṇa clearly says it. And we find this truth declared not just in Gītā. We find similar statements in the Upaniṣads also. All physical matter is energy and it keeps changing. When we look at something, we think of it as only matter, as a physical object. We think we can possess it. We think we can keep it with us. We take ownership of that physical object. This is where the problem lies. Our ego sees the material world as only matter, and it asks for more and more of it to keep under its control.

We fail to understand one important thing - it is all energy and energy cannot be kept in one place. Listen, energy cannot be kept in one place. It is Universal. The physical object that we see is a manifestation of the Universal energy.

Please understand this clearly. There are energy waves and these waves manifest as physical matter. When we understand this, we can understand the futility of holding onto something or running after something.

One more thing, this root pattern of possessing is not only with inanimate objects, but with people as well. We are continuously looking for a partner, friend, wife, husband or child to possess. When we have someone, we hold onto that person. If that person leaves, we feel terrible. When a close family member passes away, we feel depressed. Why?

It is because we hold onto them as if they are physical matter like any other possession, like jewelry, laptop, car and house. If our car meets with an accident, we feel sad. We feel that we have lost something. In exactly the same way, when someone passes away, we feel that part of us is lost. We feel depressed.

It is not that we should be insensitive to relationships but we should stop being possessive. Understand that everything and everyone is created out of the same underlying energy.

Kṛṣṇa says clearly in this verse: Everything, whether living or non-living, is an embodiment of the Supreme Soul - adhiyajño 'ham evātra dehe deha-bhṛtāṁ vara (8.4). The same Supreme Soul lives in everything. When we understand this, we see the truth that we are a part of everything around us and we complete with everything. There is no difference between you and me. There is no difference between this chair and me or this tree and me. We see ourselves in everything.

When we understand this great truth, a new dimension of ourselves is revealed to us. When we see ourselves in everything around us, our compassion towards everything grows a thousandfold. By being compassionate to others, we are being compassionate to ourselves because everything is one.

Enriching others enriches you. Enrich yourself and enrich everyone. Then, experientially you understand that you are one with others, others are one with you. Please understand this great truth of enriching, the space of enlightenment, the power of living. This changes the way we look at life and everything around us. This completely changes the way we perceive our desires, our fantasies. Kṛṣṇa answers all the questions with a single sūtra, a single technique.

The Secret of Death

Now we enter the main subject. Here, Kṛṣṇa reveals the secrets of death. He says, 'Whoever dies remembering Me alone at the time of death will attain Me at once.' What does He mean when He says, 'remembering Me alone?' He says, 'Whoever, at the end of his life, quits his body remembering Me alone, at once attains My nature. Of this there is no doubt.'

anta-kāle ca mām eva smaran muktvā kalevaram | yah prayāti sa mad-bhāvaṁ yāti nāsty atra saṃśayaḥ || 8.5 ||

Why should He say the words nāsty atra saṃśayaḥ ? Why should He say, 'there is no doubt?' He emphasizes, 'this is the truth.' He takes an oath.

Kṛṣṇa says: nāsty atra saṃśayaḥ, because He is going to speak something that is beyond logic. When we want to understand the outer world, we need logic. When we want to know about the inner world, we need a Master who takes us beyond logic. Logic gives us the outer world; it cannot give us the inner world.

Here Kṛṣṇa says nāsty atra saṃśayaḥ: Have no doubt, what I am speaking is the truth. Until you realize it, till it becomes an experience for you, for a few minutes you need to accept the Master's word as it is. It starts as my understanding. In the end, it becomes your understanding. When it becomes your understanding, you naturally see the truth behind the words.

So Kṛṣṇa says: 'Whoever, at the end of his life, quits his body remembering Me alone, at once attains My nature. Of this there is no doubt.' Why? Why does He say, 'remembering Me, mām eva smaran?' and that too 'alone?'

Understand that if we have lived 70 years, at the end of our life, when we leave our body, the whole scene, the whole 70 years appear before us as a flash, as a fast-forward movement. The whole thing appears in our consciousness again so that we can make the decision about our next birth. Now, we have karma that we brought with us but have not enjoyed or experienced, as well as karma that we accumulated from society in this birth, but have not exhausted. Both are there.

Karma or saṁskāra means any desire that is not completely experienced by you. By nature you are a fulfilled complete being. But whenever you do not fulfill any action completely, with totality, you create a hangover. You create a recorded memory of that action, a saṁskāra. A saṁskāra is not merely a dead memory stored in your unconscious mind; it has the power to make you repeat that action again and again till the desire is fulfilled.

Please be very clear, saṁskāra is living energy because it has the power to make you repeat the same action again and again as a pattern. It can make you travel the same path over and over again. That is why saṁskāras are called engraved memories, the root thought patterns. The more you travel on a path, the more it will be strengthened. But if you have completed with that pattern by living a single saṁskāra totally, completely, that saṁskāra leaves you. It drops from your being; you are liberated from it. Completion directly liberates you from karma. Completion directly leads you to experience the Truth. Whatever you have not lived completely remains as a saṁskāra in you, as a karma in you.

Here you have brought some karma that you have not yet experienced and completed, as well as newly accumulated karma. The whole thing appears in front of you at the time of leaving the body, so that you can decide your next birth. Every birth is your declaration of completion and you start the whole thing anew. You decide, 'Come on! I declare completion. I will now work from the space of completion!' But during your birth, when you fail in your declaration and fall from the space of completion, you bring some of your past incompletions back. That is what is prārabdha karma.

Karma which you bring back from the past incompletions is prārabdha. If you don't fall at all and continue to be in the space of completion, you don't become incomplete at all, then, you are an Incarnation.

If you need to make an important decision, don't you call for all the files, all the old files from the archives before you make the decision? Now you are going to decide a few important things: where to take birth, what type of parents and family to choose, what type of family to choose, whether to choose a male body or female body.

All these decisions you are going to make. Understand, all these decisions are taken by your consciousness, not by anybody else. However, your consciousness is influenced by incomplete, inadequate data, karma collected when you lived on planet Earth.

Even sense enjoyments look like enjoyment because from a young age you are taught that it is enjoyment. There is a tribal group near Omkareshwar in Madhya Pradesh which is known to be happy with not a single person being depressed. Nobody runs behind sense pleasures. It is because they had not been taught that there is something called sense pleasure. The basic corruption has not happened. Interestingly, in the village, women do not have any pain during birthing. The idea that women should have pain during delivery does not exist in their society. Not only that, nobody suffers from menopause problems or gynecological disorders. They respect women a lot in their culture. Women are never disrespected. They are never told that they become impure during their monthly periods. Women are never taught that they are lower than men. The moment a girl comes of age, she is honored and told, 'Now you are qualified to become a mother.' She is respected. People fall at her feet and she touches and heals them. They believe that if a woman touches and blesses them during her menstrual period, they will be healed. Because the conditioning is totally different, nobody suffers any pain there.

What You Remember at Death, So You Attain

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Whatever state of being one remembers when he quits his body, O Kaunteya, that state he will attain without fail.'

yaṁ yaṁ vāpi smaran bhāvaṁ tyajaty ante kalevaram | taṁ tam evaiti kaunteya sadā tad-bhāva bhāvitaḥ || 8.6 ||

What exactly happens at the time of leaving the body? When a person leaves the body, he goes through seven layers of his being. The first and the outermost layer is the physical layer. When a person leaves the body, it creates tremendous pain in his whole system, what the Upaniṣads liken to 'thousands of scorpions stinging at a time.' There will be tremendous pain at first. We may ask, 'Why pain?' It is because our being wants to stay in the body, but the body cannot host the being anymore. There is no need for our being to leave unless the body is completely tired or exhausted. If death starts happening, this means the body is completely exhausted, or damaged. In natural death, the body is exhausted, so we leave the body. In an accident, the body is damaged. Understand: You know what pain we experience if we cut our finger half an inch wide while cutting vegetables. What would the pain be like if we extend the same thing to our six-foot body? It will be simply torn, is it not? Naturally there will be tremendous pain.

But one thing: there is an automatic mechanism in our being, an automatic painkiller mechanism. What happens is, the moment the pain becomes unbearable, we fall into coma. If we fall into coma, we will not experience pain. But the big problem is that we die in unconsciousness when we die in coma. That is the worst thing, because we remain unaware of why we took this birth, and we will not be able to make the decision about the next birth consciously.

That is the reason Kṛṣṇa says: yaṁ yaṁ vāpi smaran bhāvaṁ—in whatever state you are at the time of leaving the body, you will achieve that state without fail. If we are unconscious at the time of leaving the body, we naturally take lower level bodies in our next birth; we come back as beings, which do not have a high level of consciousness.

At the time of death, the moment we leave the physical body, we go to the next level, the prāṇic body or the prāṇic layer in us. The prāṇic body refers to the layer responsible for the inhaling and exhaling of prāṇa, the life giving energy in our body. The prāṇic body is filled with all our desires. Please understand, our prāṇa and desires are closely related. If our desires change, immediately the circulation of our praṇa changes.

Similarly, if we change the circulation of prāṇa, our whole mind changes. Our mind and prāṇa are closely connected. That is why people inhale and exhale, pull and push with their breath at the time of leaving; they suffer. The body says, 'I can't host you anymore; relax, go out.' But the being says, 'But I have so many desires. I must live in this body. I must enjoy this body.' The tug of war happens between body and being.

Next we move to the mental layer, mana śarīra. All the guilt that we harbored throughout our lives, stays in this layer. Desire is expectation about the future. Guilt is regret about the past. Guilt is: I have not lived in this way - thoughts about the past. Desire is: I should live like this - a thought about the future. Understand, guilt is nothing but the emotion created in our being when we review our past decisions with updated intelligence.

For example, at the age of seven you are playing with your toys. Your mother comes and calls us for dinner, 'Come and eat.' You say, 'No, I don't want to eat; I want to play.' By force your mother takes away the toys and pulls you to come and eat. Immediately you say, 'You go and die; give me my toys, I want to play.'

At that moment, you feel that toys are more important in life than your mother. But as you mature, you understand that this isn't true. Once you mature, if you think, 'O what a grave mistake I made! I shouldn't have said those words to my mother. How important the mother is! But I never thought of it at that time!'... If we create guilt in this way, there is no point or utility in it. At that moment as a young child, we had only that much intelligence. Now, our intelligence has been updated. If we review our past decisions with updated intelligence, we create only one thing: guilt.

If God gives us one more life, we will make the same mistakes that we made when we reach seven years of age because we will have only that much intelligence at the age of seven. Now our intelligence has been updated to an adequate cognition. Just because our intelligence has been updated now, we can't review our actions and create guilt in ourselves about what we did earlier. We should see what data was available to us to make decisions with at that time.

We had such and such inadequate data and only that much intelligence to process the data at that time. Based on that, we made the decision. Now the intelligence to process the data has been updated; our software has been updated with an adequate empowering cognition. Because our software has been updated, we now say, 'O! I made the wrong decision at that time; I am suffering from guilt.' This does not make sense.

One more thing: Guilt is a wedge inserted in our being. It creates uneasiness between you and your being. Be very clear, the worst sin is guilt. Guilt is the only sin; nothing else is a sin on planet Earth. We can never become pure through guilt. We can never become a better person, an integrated and authentic person or a pure person through guilt. Instead, guilt becomes such a load on us that again and again we make the same mistake. If we have deep guilt about smoking, we can never quit smoking because the habit is strengthened when the guilty thoughts are continuously repeated in our system. Whatever is continuously repeated in our consciousness becomes strong; we never grow out of it.

In Rāmāyaṇa, there is a strong character called Vāli. He had obtained a boon from Lord Śiva that whosoever comes in front of him to fight him, half of that person's power would go to Vāli. If we stand in front of Vāli, half of our power goes to Vāli. Naturally who will win? Only he will win.

Understand, our guilt is Vāli. The moment we fight the smoking habit, we give half our power to the habit. We struggle with the habit. Then how can we come out of it?

If we complete with guilt, at least our personality will be integrated and authentic. When our personality is integrated, we will naturally become pure and energetic. All immoral, inauthentic behavior is because we don't have enough energy. The person with plenty of energy is always pure. The person without energy is immoral and inauthentic. In society we have a wrong idea that people who are full of energy do nonsensical things. Never think so.

When we review past decisions with updated intelligence, we create guilt. Never make that mistake. If we create guilt, the whole thing sits in the mental body and when we leave the body it becomes a big obstruction.

If you complete now with your guilt pattern, the disempowering cognition about yourself will melt down. Completion melts down all the obstructions. The obstructions for your realizations are like heap of mountains. The process of completion can melt down even the mountains of incompletions. So complete.

The next layer we cross in the process of death is the etheric body. Here, all the painful experiences that we had in life are stored.

These four layers are hell. When the energy crosses these four layers: physical body, prāṇic body, mental body and etheric body, the being undergoes hell. Understand that hell is not situated in a place above our heads, but in these four layers, comprising all our desires, guilt and painful experiences.

During our life in the body, if we have kept these four layers clean and complete, we never enter hell. That is, if we can technically clean these layers through meditation, through the process of completion. If we keep these layers clean with the proper meditation techniques, we will never have a problem at the time of leaving the body. We will have a clear highway. Straightaway we will travel. That is what Kṛṣṇa says: This is the path on which a man can easily leave and liberate himself, and also the path on which he can suffer and destroy himself. Both ways are now shown by Kṛṣṇa. These are the major obstructions when we leave the body.

Be Sure To Reach Me

तस्मात्सर्वेषु कालेषु मामनुस्मर युध्य च ।

8.7 Arjuna, think of Me in the form of Kṛṣṇa always, while continuing with your prescribed duty of fighting. With your activities dedicated to Me and your mind and intelligence fixed on Me, you will attain Me without doubt.

abhyāsayogayuktena cetasā nānyagāminā

8.8 He who meditates on the Supreme person, his mind constantly engaged in remembering Me, not deviating from the path, O Pārtha, Is sure to reach Me.

8.9 One should meditate on the Supreme as the one who knows everything, as He is the most ancient, who is the controller, who is smaller than the smallest, who is the maintainer of everything, who is beyond all material conception, who is inconceivable, and who is always a person. He is luminous like the sun and, being transcendental, is beyond this material nature.

प्रयाणकाले मनसाऽचलेनभक्त्या युक्तो योगबलेन चैव ।
भ्रुवोर्मध्ये प्राणमावेश्य सम्यक् स तं परं पुरुषमुपैति दिव्यम् ॥ ८-१०॥ prayāṇakāle manasā’calena bhaktyā yukto yogabalena caiva bhruvormadhye prāṇamāveśya samyak sa taṃ paraṃ puruṣamupaiti divyam || 8.10 ||

8.10 One, who at the time of death, fixes his mind and life breath between the eyebrows without being distracted, who by the power of yoga and in full devotion engages himself in dwelling on Me, He will certainly attain Me.

In the first two of these verses Kṛṣṇa says, 'Arjuna, you should always think of Me. You should always be in My state of consciousness even when you are doing your regular duty, even in your activities. Let your mind and intelligence be fixed in My consciousness. You will attain Me without doubt.'

tasmāt sarveṣu kāleṣu mām anusmara yudhya ca | mayy arpita-mano-buddhir mām evaiṣyasy asaṁśayaḥ || 8.7 ||

Again He uses the words, 'without doubt, asaṁaśyaḥ.' 'Without doubt, you will achieve Me, mām evaiṣyasy asaṁśayaḥ.'

One important question we may ask, 'Anyhow, I have to think of Him only at the time of leaving the body, so why bother doing that now? Right now, let me lead my life. At the time of death, I will think about Him.' Please be very clear, these verses answer that question.

We cannot think about Him then unless we think about Him now. Don't think that when we live our whole life chanting the words, 'Coca-cola, Coca-cola', suddenly at the end of our lives we will be able to say, 'Rāma, Kṛṣṇa.' No!

Whatever we think during our whole life, the same thought will come to us in the end also. But we think, 'Now I can say 'Coca-cola, Coca-cola'; at the end, I can always say, 'Rāma, Kṛṣṇa.' No! At the time of death, we will not be able to remember what we want to remember. Our consciousness will not be under our control at that time.

At the time of our death, automatically the totality of our whole life will come up. The whole file will come up. Whatever we spent the maximum energy on, that file will automatically come up first. We can't do anything in that moment. Don't think that we can forget about it now and tackle the issue of our last thought at the time we leave the body. It does not work that way. Only the thought that we lived with intensely throughout our life will come up at that moment. That is why He says, 'Even when you do your duty, may you be absorbed in Me.' This means that when we live, we should try to continuously be in thoughtless awareness, the witnessing consciousness, the Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

The Supreme Witness

The next question: 'How can I be in the witnessing mode when I live my regular life?' Start in a simple way. When you drive, when you sit, when you talk, see what is happening inside and outside you. You don't need to close your eyes. Just move away from your body. See what is going on in your mind and what is going on outside your being.

When you talk to someone, witness and listen to how he talks and how you respond. Even before he finishes his statement, notice how you come to conclusions and how you are ready to jump on him with your own opinions. See and listen how you prepare your speech before he finishes his statement. Witness, continuously try to witness. Continuously listen. You will see the influence of desires, guilt and pain on your being automatically disappear.

The moment you create a gap between you and your body-mind, immediately the suffering disappears. Suffering is due to attachment to your body and mind. All your sufferings disappear the moment you witness, that very moment. Actually, you may fail the first few times. After you face failure, you think, 'It is difficult, I cannot do it,' and you create an idea that it is difficult.

Now don't start calculating, 'From tomorrow onwards, 24 hours a day I will be in the witnessing consciousness.' Then you will become frustrated if you are unable to be that way. So don't bother. Even if you stay in that consciousness for five minutes, it is a big blessing. When you experience the relief that happens when you remain as the witness, even once or twice, when you experience the relief, you can see how the stress disappears from your being. Then you will automatically stay in that same state, because now you have tasted it. Once you know the taste, you will automatically come back to the same state, the same mood again and again. In the next verse Kṛṣṇa says, 'At the time of death, fix your mind between the eyebrows.' He adds, 'without being distracted and with devotion.' See, all this is not in our control at the time when the life force is about to leave the body. We cannot decide at that time, 'Ok, let me focus between the eyebrows, let me think of devotion, let me not be distracted.' But if we have led a life in such higher consciousness, this automatically happens at that time. When Kṛṣṇa talks about the space between the eyebrows, He speaks of the higher cakra or energy center in the body, related to higher consciousness.

Our mind is nothing but a bunch of conditionings. All these conditionings influence us at the time of death. How do we condition our mind? If we think that eating is the best thing in life, when we leave the body, what comes in front of us? All kinds of food! If we are taught that eating is the greatest pleasure in life, we see only all kinds of food when we leave this body. Then the last thought will be, 'Let me take birth in a family where I will be given food and nothing but food, where I will not have any other responsibility.'

We call for the archived files. The essence, the research report, is in front of us. From all the experiences of our past, we choose what we think is best and what we have worked for all our life. Based on that, we make a decision, 'Alright, if I want to eat, this is the right country.' There we will spend our next life, in tamas, in dullness, not doing anything, in just pure laziness.

To be tired of taking rest is tamas. If we have lived life completely in tamas, we naturally decide, 'Anyhow, the ultimate thing in life is sleep. Now which country is the right country to allow lots of sleep? What type of body is the right body - whether pig or buffalo or human being? What type of family should I take birth in?' We make a decision. Please be very clear, the whole calculation happens based on our own data, the data that we have collected.

At the time of leaving the body, the whole data appears before us in a single flash: the gist of the whole data, the gist of all three files - āgāmya (acquired) file, sañcita (bank balance) file and prārabdha (current) file. Based on the files, we decide, 'What am I supposed to do? What should be my next birth?' The moment we decide, we enter that kind of body. One more important thing: Because we are so attached to the body and mind, we cannot live without a body for more than three kṣaṇas. The Sanskrit word 'kṣaṇa' does not mean 'seconds' or 'moments'. It does not measure chronological time. It is the gap between one thought and the next thought. For most of us, kṣaṇa will be a few microseconds because of our endless stream of thoughts.

While still in the body, if we have experienced 'thoughtlessness' at least once, (thoughtlessness means being alive without a sense of body and mind), if we have experienced thoughtless awareness, if we have been in Universal consciousness for a single moment without the body and mind, that is samādhi.

Four States of Consciousness

In our life, we experience two states of being and two levels of mind. For example, now, while we are awake, we have thoughts. In deep sleep, do we have thoughts? No. So the two possibilities for the mind are with thought and without thought.

In the same way, in the being, there can be 'I' consciousness and no 'I' consciousness. As of now, while we are awake and talking and moving, we have the idea of 'I' all the time, that of 'I' consciousness. In deep sleep, do we have this consciousness? No. The 'I' consciousness does not exist at that time. So the two levels of the being are: with 'I' consciousness and without 'I' consciousness. These two levels of consciousness and the two levels of mind and thought overlap each other and create four states of being in us.

The state with thoughts and with 'I' consciousness is the waking state, jāgrat, in which most of us are now. The next state is when we have thoughts, but 'I' consciousness is absent. This is the dream state or svapna. You may ask, 'How?' It is like this: In the dream state, the frequency of thoughts will be more than the frequency of 'I' consciousness. That is why we are not able to control our dreams. When we are awake, the frequency of 'I' is more, that is why we can control our thoughts; we can suppress them, divert them, create them; we can do anything we want because the frequency of 'I' is more than the frequency of thoughts. In the dream state, the frequency of thoughts is more than the frequency of 'I'. That is why we cannot control our dreams. If we can have the dreams of our choice, we know what kind of dreams we will have. Dreams are not in our control. We cannot influence them. We cannot have choices because the frequency of thoughts is more than the frequency of consciousness. So we have thoughts but no 'I' consciousness. The flow of thoughts happening in our being is the dream state.

In the next state, neither 'I' consciousness nor the flow of thoughts exists. This is deep sleep. This is called suṣupti. The three states are jāgrat, svapna, suṣupti - conscious, subconscious, unconscious.

There is a fourth state that we have not experienced in our life, where we have no flow of thoughts yet we have 'I' consciousness, pure 'I' consciousness. This is samādhi, thoughtless awareness - turīya avastha, ātma jñāna, brahma jñāna, Self-realization, nirvāna, ātma bhūti, state of the Divine, nityānanda consciousness, eternal bliss.

All these words refer to the state where we have pure awareness but no thoughts, where we exist without body and mind. Jāgrat, svapna, suṣupti, in these three states, we live with the body and mind. In jāgrat, we live with the body that we have now - the sthūla śarīra or gross body. In svapna, we live with the sūkṣma śarīra or subtle body; please understand in the dream state also we assume a body. That is why we are able to travel in our dreams. For example, we fall asleep in Los Angeles but suddenly dream we are in Bharat. It means we travel with a body, a subtle body called sūkṣma śarīra. In deep sleep, we assume a body called the causal body, kāraṇa śarīra.

In turīya state, we experience boundarilessness, bodylessness. There we have pure 'I' consciousness, with 'I' but without thoughts. Vivekananda says, 'If you experience even a single glimpse of this consciousness when you are alive, the same thing automatically repeats when you leave the body. You leave the body in samādhi.'

All spiritual practices directly or indirectly aim at achieving this state where we exist with the awareness of 'I', but without the consciousness of body and mind. That is why Kṛṣṇa says that if we experience at least one moment of consciousness beyond the body and mind, we can choose our next life in a relaxed way.

If we have not lived a single moment of our life without the feeling of being the body and mind, we cannot be without the body and mind once we die. So once we die, we immediately try to catch hold of another body. Because we have never lived a single moment without body and mind, the moment we die, we will not bother about which body we are getting into. We rush as fast as possible. It's like we are late for a train, so we run and jump onto the first train that we see, not thinking about where it's headed. We say, 'Let me just get into some train.' We rush and get into some body or the other and come down to planet Earth yet another time.

After coming down, we again forget the supreme purpose of assuming the body; this is the biggest problem. The whole thing is confusion leading to confusion and more confusion. If we have experienced a single moment of complete rest and thoughtless awareness, the state of restful awareness, then naturally at the moment when we leave the body, we will be in the same state. This state is also called 'bodyless' awareness because when we are in turīya state, all the three bodies do not touch us; neither the gross body nor the subtle body nor the causal body touches us.

We experience awareness that is beyond the three bodies. If we have experienced this thoughtless restful awareness for even a single moment earlier, we will have the required clarity in the end. If we have experienced that we can exist without the body and mind, we will have the patience to work with our data files before assuming the next body. We will go through the data carefully and decide, 'Should I take birth at all? What is the need?' Sometimes, if we decide to take birth, we can even take a conscious birth, like the great masters.

Even a glimpse of consciousness, a moment of realization, a single moment of thoughtless awareness when you live with the body and mind is enough. Actually, if you achieve one glimpse of thoughtless awareness, you achieve whatever has to be achieved in life. If you have not achieved one glimpse of samādhi or thoughtless awareness, whatever else you achieve is not ultimately useful. In the next step, Kṛṣṇa explains how to achieve thoughtless awareness and gives a deeper understanding about death and the art of leaving.

Kṛṣṇa gives different ways to attain Brahman or God or Ultimate consciousness. He says that people learned in the Vedas attain Brahman. This does not mean that we need to just read the Vedas and then forget about them. Kṛṣṇa speaks at a far deeper level.

Even if we do not understand the deeper meanings of these scriptures, it is ok. These scriptures are energy hubs. When we read them, the sound that is generated is enough to cleanse our inner being. That is the power of those verses. They will transform you. If you listen to Hindu chants, you will find that they are chanted in a specific tone and pitch. When they are chanted, they completely cleanse our system, our inner being.

If we visit the ancient temples in Bharat, we will see that the sanctum sanctorum has a beautiful peace inside it. When we enter that place, automatically our being becomes peaceful. Why do you think we feel a moment of bliss as soon as we enter the sanctum sanctorum? When the priest chants, that place gets energized. The sound of the chants carries tremendous energy and energizes everything in the place.

One more thing, these scriptures talk about realizing the Self. They are guides to enlightenment. So when we read them, we will get into that mood of enlightenment. Our mind will be tuned to that frequency. It is like this: After watching a movie, our mind keeps processing the scenes of the movie, is it not? For one or two days, we experience a hangover. In the same way, when we read these scriptures, even if we don't completely cognize them, we will experience a hangover. We will continue to think about what they say; what enlightenment is, how to realize our Self, how enlightened Masters live - these thoughts will fill our mind again and again.

This is what Kṛṣṇa wants. When our thoughts are always directed towards Self-realization, our thoughts will be of enlightenment at the time of death also.

Kṛṣṇa says, when we read the scriptures, when we practice this lifestyle, we practice brahmacarya. The literal meaning of brahmacarya is one who follows the path to attain the Self. 'Brahman' means the Self and 'carya' means to walk the path. Anyone who is on the path to attain Brahman is a brahmacāri.

Yoga means the continuous process of uniting our mind, body and soul. This truth is revealed by great enlightened Masters in different ways. Patañjali, the father of yoga, talks about this verse in his Aṣṭāṅga Yoga, in the two limbs of yoga - pratyāhāra and dhārana. These two parts talk about what Kṛṣṇa mentions.

How do we bring about that continuous process of uniting body, mind and soul? You see, our body-mind system reacts to different external situations. These external situations are like food, āhāra to our system and our five sense organs are the points through which we take in this food.

Our mind functions because we give food to our mind through our senses. We react to situations and our mind is continuously occupied because of this. Our mind exists because we have thousands of thoughts, constantly jumping from past to future and back to past. Our five sense organs act as gateways through which this food goes in to our mind.

Pratyāhāra means getting ourselves out of the clutches of these senses. This does not mean that we physically shut down our senses. Listen, pratyāhāra does not mean we shut our senses physically. Even if we close our eyes, an internal television runs in our system, does it not? Even if our ears and mouth are closed, there is inner chatter, is it not? We don't really shut down our senses. Even if we shut them physically, our mind functions. When I say, 'Close the doors of your senses,' I mean, 'Do not process the data.' What I mean is, continue to hear everything going on outside, continue to smell everything around, but do not process anything. Whatever comes, just witness, that's all. That is the only way we can close the doors of our senses. We should neither suppress thoughts nor create thoughts. We should just watch them.

We cut the continuous flow of inputs from our senses when we increase our awareness. The number of thoughts slowly drops as awareness rises. As we increase awareness, our thoughts per second, TPS, drops.

This is what Kṛṣṇa means by closing all the senses. When we do this, our awareness becomes more and more concentrated on the present moment. When we shut our senses and remain in pure awareness, we focus on our divinity. We keep a single-minded focus on the divinity resonating in us. We automatically fall into the present moment. Awareness of our breath becomes more acute. We feel life energy or prāṇa filling our system. This is called dhārana, single-minded focus. We can focus on the life force energizing our system when we increase our awareness and close all the inputs from our senses. We automatically unite mind, body and spirit. This is yoga.

Kṛṣṇa continuously tells Arjuna the importance of the last thought before death. We saw in the previous verses how much importance He gives to this truth. You see, it is a powerful technique. These are not mere words to be read and not put into practice.

Kṛṣṇa says the people who reach Him are those who remain continuously on the path of yoga, continuously fixed upon the Divine without deviation. Kṛṣṇa asks us to be in that state all the time. He asks us to be in Kṛṣṇa consciousness all the time. The problem is when an enlightened Master says, 'Think of Me all the time,' we question, 'What kind of an egoistic person is He? Why should we think of Him?' Please listen! Kṛṣṇa, or any Enlightened Master or Incarnation, only asks us to keep our inner space completely free of desires. Our thoughts are generally related to greed and fear. We keep piling up desires because our root thought patterns are of greed and fear. When we die, our soul re-experiences these desires. Attachment to these desires makes our death painful. An enlightened Master has seen this process and speaks from experience. He is pure compassion and He wants everyone to know the secret of mastering the art of leaving.

That is why Kṛṣṇa says again and again: When we direct our thoughts to the Divine, greed and fear are completely wiped out. Our whole being is filled with gratitude to the Divine. One more thing, many people think of God because they want to go to heaven. Some people are afraid of death so they think of God. Both are only because of greed or fear. When we think of the Divine, we should do so out of gratitude, and not out of greed or fear. Our thoughts about God, our devotion to the Divine should be out of pure gratitude to Existence.

Brahma's Day and Night

8.15 After attaining Me, the great souls who are devoted to Me in yoga are never reborn in this world. This world is temporary and full of miseries and they have attained the highest perfection.

8.16 From the highest planet in the material world down to the lowest, all are places of misery wherein repeated birth and death take place. One who reaches My abode, O Kaunteya, is never reborn.

8.17 By human calculation, a thousand ages taken together is the duration of Brahma's one day. His night is just as long.

अव्यक्ताद् व्यक्तयः सर्वाः प्रभवन्त्यहरागमे ।

8.18 From the unmanifest all living entities come into being at the beginning of Brahma's day. With the coming of Brahma's night, they dissolve into the same unmanifest.

Now He says, 'After attaining Me the great souls who are steeped in yoga never return to this temporary world, which is full of miseries, because they have attained the highest perfection.'

mām upetya punar janma duḥkhālayam aśāśvatam | nāpnuvanti mahātmānaḥ saṁsiddhiṁ paramāṁ gatāḥ || 8.15 ||

The understanding of this science, the very intellectual understanding, gives the inspiration to experience truth and naturally leads us to the ultimate Truth.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'If you achieve this state, you never come back.' He inspires us; He persuades us to enter that state, to enter thoughtless awareness.

The only job of an Enlightened Master is to make everyone realize the truth that he himself has experienced. That is the only aim. There is no ulterior motive or vested interest.

Understand one thing: A person who remains at the inner source of bliss never cares for anything external. Please understand that he does not need external sources of happiness because he has something more powerful. The inner guide is so powerful that the being is always blissful.

That is the reason he does not see the world as a collection of miseries. You see, an enlightened Master may not get food for days, yet he is always blissful. Even in such situations, the only things that he experiences are gratitude and compassion.

He is neither attached to sorrow nor to happiness. He is detached from both to the same degree. He is always in a state of gratitude to the Universe. Worldly things do not affect him. Happiness and sorrow are not in his dictionary. An enlightened Master looks at misery and happiness with total gratitude and surrender to the Universe. Enlightened beings are beyond happiness as you understand it. They are not attached to anything. They are pure compassion.

One more thing, an enlightened being surrenders everything that he has and gets, to Existence. When he gets food, he surrenders that; when he is hungry for days, he surrenders that to Existence. Whether he has money or is in poverty, he is rich inside because he surrenders everything.

He says, 'Let Existence take care.' All his responsibilities are handed over to Existence. There is a great relief inside when that state of surrender happens. We suddenly light up in joy. We consider something as misery because we think we are responsible for that something. We think we control it. That is why, when something does not happen according to our expectations, we see it as misery. But an Enlightened being is not like that. He simply flows. Whatever comes, he accepts it and surrenders it to Existence.

Beyond Karma

In the next verse, Kṛṣṇa talks about the misery-filled world and we see how good deeds cannot get us out of the cycle of birth and death.

Kṛṣṇa says here:

ā-brahma-bhuvanāl lokāḥ punar āvartino ‘rjuna | mām upetya tu kaunteya punar janma na vidyate || 8.16 ||

‘From the highest planet of Brahmaloka in the material world down to the lowest, all are places of misery wherein repeated birth and death takes place. But one who attains Me, one who attains My being, one who attains My consciousness, never takes birth again.’

Even if we reach the cosmic layer of Brahmaloka, the land of the Divine, we must come back and take birth again. It means that even if we are full of good intentions and good deeds, even if we are attached to good things, we must come back into a body.

Please be very clear, even if we are caught in doing good deeds, we return. Our good deeds, puṇya, cannot give us enlightenment. Be very clear, unless you have the conscious glimpse, unless you achieve at least one moment of thoughtless awareness, nobody can save you from the cycle of birth and death. Work intensely for it, for at least one glimpse of thoughtless awareness, the witnessing consciousness, the space of completion. If we achieve one glimpse, it’s over. That one glimpse acts like a conscious torch and guides us through these seven layers when we leave the body. We will walk beautifully; we will slide through all seven layers. The enlightened Master’s initiation is the torch of consciousness that guides us through this path, through our living and leaving.

If we achieve that one glimpse of consciousness, we achieve what has to be achieved. If we have not had that, whatever we achieve is a pure waste. All merits and sins - nothing comes with us. We will not be judged by anything except this glimpse of samādhi, the ultimate truth.

Samādhi in Sanskrit means being in our original state. Once we realize this state, we have arrived.

Vivekananda says, ‘If you achieve even a single glimpse, you leave your body in that experience.’ It is because this intense experience of Self-realization will come up at the time when we leave the body. At the time of death, our whole life is played back to us in a fast-forward mode in a few seconds. And only the important scenes appear in multicolor again and again; all other scenes appear in black and white. They become the background. If we have had thoughtless awareness, the samādhi experience when we were alive, that alone will appear in multicolor; all other things will fade away in the background.

Thoughtless awareness is a benign virus, if such a thing exists. The more we work with the software after the virus has entered, the more the software and programs will be destroyed. Similarly, if we have one glimpse of Consciousness in our lifetime, this glimpse takes over our being at the time of leaving the body, and the whole software is completely erased.

We do not have to take another birth. We assume the body and mind only if we believe there is something to be enjoyed or achieved through the body and mind. Unless we believe there is some work or enjoyment to be found downtown, will we go downtown? We will not. Similarly, unless we believe there is something to be achieved or enjoyed through this body and mind, we do not come down to planet Earth.

When we are in this body, if we work on our root thought patterns, saṁskāras, and complete with them, we will liberate ourselves from their influence, and hence from the cycle of re-birth. Kṛṣṇa speaks in a detailed manner on these truths later.

Actually, you do not normally become aware of these root thought patterns, saṁskāras. For instance, guilt is initially imposed on us by society. Later we master the art of creating guilt and continue to create it for ourselves. First society teaches us; then we master the art. Next, pain and suffering. Society creates a scale deciding what pain is and what suffering is. Then, we actually turn our whole life into suffering by measuring it with that scale.

Understand, this science is not only for dying but also for living. If we are stuck with guilt, we can never enjoy our desires. When we don’t enjoy our desires, we create more guilt, that’s all. When we are stuck in guilt, we will not leave the desires and they cannot leave us. When we don't leave our desires, we create more guilt. This becomes a vicious circle of incomplete emotions. So not only for dying, even for living we need to learn this whole science of completion, the space of thoughtless awareness.

Experience His Līlā - Cosmic Play

As of now, understand this one thing: Throughout this chapter Kṛṣṇa conveys the single message:

Experience His consciousness, the thoughtless awareness or the witnessing consciousness in which Kṛṣṇa stays and plays the whole game of life, how He lives through the whole of life. That is why Kṛṣṇa's life is called līlā, cosmic play, Kṛṣṇa līlā. It is not history. It is līlā; it is a cosmic play.

For ordinary human beings, after they die, their life will be written as history. For incarnations, their life itself is a script that has already been written; they just come down and enact it, that's all. For the great Masters, it is a script. They come with the script and enact the whole thing. They play the whole game. That is why their life is called līlā. If we achieve the witnessing consciousness, our whole life becomes līlā. We know the script and we are ready. When we know the script our whole life is a līlā. When we don't know the script, it becomes history.

Līlā Dhyāna is a such a powerful space creator. Please understand, your pastime always leads you to incompletion. An Incarnation's pastime or līlā always leads you to completion. Your past always leads you to incompletion. An Incarnation's pastimes always lead you to completion. If you constantly remember what you did when you were a child, you will be in more and more incompletion. If you constantly remember what Kṛṣṇa does when He is a child, you will be more and more in the space of completion. Understand, remembering your pastimes, creates more and more incompletions. Remembering the Incarnation's pastimes creates more and more completion and the higher space.

Whether it is Kṛṣṇa or Buddha, Mahādeva or Mīnākśi, even remembering their līlās, their cosmic play creates so much of completion in you, it heals your mamakāra, your inner image.

Actually, because of this Līlā Dhyāna practice you become more complete with you. And if you observe deeply, you will find out if you have incompletion with you, that day you will feel that the Divine is angry with you. Understand, the completion you need to do with you and with others is responsible for how you feel connected to your Guru or God, outside and inside.

Kṛṣṇa conveys one thing: All we need to do is work to achieve a glimpse of thoughtless awareness, the space of completion. In the next few chapters, He speaks deeply, intensely about how to open every layer, how to progress, how to clean and complete with every layer and how to achieve the conscious glimpse or thoughtless awareness. He says further, 'By human calculation, the thousand ages taken together form the duration of Brahma's one day and such also is the duration of his night.' One year for us is one day for the devatas, demigods. For Brahma, a thousand ages are taken as one day. Only when we achieve the consciousness of nirvāṇa, thoughtless awareness, will we not take rebirth. Here He says a beautiful thing about kṣaṇa.

At the time of death, our soul has three kṣaṇa to take another body. Three kṣaṇas can be three microseconds, three seconds or three minutes or three hundred years according to the person's frequency of thoughts. It depends on his state of mind. If we have lived a restless life, our kṣaṇas will be in microseconds. If we have lived a peaceful, blissful life and achieved at least one glimpse of thoughtless awareness, our kṣaṇa can be even two or three hundred years. If we can stop the next thought from happening within our inner space, our kṣaṇas can be increased to any extent. It can extend to eternity. So, kṣaṇas is relative and not absolute.

Time is actually not chronological, but psychological. If we sit with a friend with whom we are comfortable and joyful, after three or four hours, we suddenly notice the time and say, 'Oh! I don't know how the time has passed by so quickly!' At the same time, if we sit with somebody with whom we don't feel comfortable, we will look at the watch and think, 'Why is the watch not moving? Is there a problem with it? The time is simply dragging on.'

The number of thoughts that happen in our mind decides the time consciousness. If thoughts are less, even after ten hours, we will not feel that ten hours have passed. If the number of thoughts is more, two or three minutes will seem like years.

You see, at the most, we can extend time psychologically. And when it happens, it is what we call 'eternal hell'. The word 'eternal' is not chronological. Even if we make all possible mistakes in a hundred years, how can we be punished in eternal hell? It actually means that those hundred years seems eternal because of the crowd of thoughts, time will not seem to move.

One year of human life equals one day of the devatas, demigods, because their thoughts per second (TPS) is very less. That is why the deity Natarāja in the temple at Chidambaraṁ in South India, has only six prayer offerings throughout the year. In one year, they worship the deity only six times. Normally, the worship is carried out six times a day in other temples. But this temple is supposed to be where the devatas worship the Divine, so the worship is carried out according to their time.

The six offerings of worship required for the deity are conducted in our one year because our one year is one day for the deities or devatas. Devatas refers to those whose TPS has come down, who have had a glimpse of samādhi. If our TPS is low, we too are in heaven. If our TPS is high, we are in hell. Heaven always looks brief; hell always looks eternal, because of the number of thoughts.

When we are in the body, if we have had a single glimpse of thoughtless awareness, the experience of meditation, then automatically this consciousness comes up at the time of leaving the body and we will have two benefits. We can choose to become enlightened and not take another birth, or we can choose the right place to express and work out our karma, to live as we want. We have both choices if we experience thoughtless awareness while living.

My Supreme Abode

bhūtagrāmaḥ sa evāyaṃ bhūtvā bhūtvā pralīyate

8.19 Again and again the day comes, and this host of beings is active; and again the night falls, O Pārtha, and they are automatically annihilated.

8.20 Yet there is another nature, which is eternal and is beyond this manifested and unmanifest matter. It is supreme and is never annihilated. When all in this world is annihilated, that remains the same.

8.21 That supreme abode is said to be unmanifest and indestructible and is the supreme destination. When one gains this state one never comes back. That is My supreme abode.

puruṣaḥ sa paraḥ pārtha bhaktyā labhyastvananyayā
yasyāntaḥsthāni bhūtāni yena sarvamidaṃ tatam || 8.22 ||

8.22 O Pārtha (son of Prithā), the supreme person, who is greater than all, is attainable by undeviating devotion.

Although He is present in His abode, He is all-pervading, and everything is situated within Him. Kṛṣṇa explains how transient this material world is. During a single blink of Brahma, the Lord of creation, so many things change. In our concept of time, we see things as permanent, but when we operate in a different zone of space and time, all this becomes temporary.

Our ignorance makes us think that all that we see is real and permanent. Once we understand that this entire life and the world around us is impermanent, we see everything from a completely different space. Why do we run behind material things? Why do we again and again want to possess things?

In our concept of time and space, we see material things as permanent. We think we can control them. We want to have ownership over everything that is available. And the problem is everyone wants the same thing. Everyone fights to take charge of the same thing. We are like cats fighting over a piece of bread.

Please listen, we fight to catch hold of this body. We want to hold onto this body for as long as we can. Even at sixty or seventy, many people go in for plastic surgery. They do things to look young. Why? They do not want to accept the truth that the body is impermanent.

Once we raise ourselves to higher dimensions, we see the actual truth. As long as we limit ourselves to this space, we think the earth is stationary. When we change our concept of space and time, when we change our reference point in space and time, we realize that all we think of as permanent, all that we think is ours is not permanent. It is continuously being created and destroyed.

This is what Kṛṣṇa says. We believe in a concept of finite time and limited space and we cling to that without realizing what is beyond this dimension. We are greedy to accumulate more and more material pleasures because we see them as real and permanent. We think they will stay with us forever. That is one side. On the other side we fear that they will be taken away from us. We are always in a state of fear.

Both these greed and fear are the main sources of our misery. When we live in bondage to fear and greed, we continuously build saṁskāras. We create more and more desires. First of all, we are not trying to fulfill our true desires or prārabdha karma. Then on top of that, we build a whole new set of desires. In our concept of time and space, we think things are permanent. We think we own them and we should take care of them and control them. When we understand that at higher dimensions, all that we see is destroyed and created continuously, we realize the futility of holding onto things, even our own body. Kṛṣṇa says that in all this creation and destruction, only one thing is neither created nor destroyed and that is the 'Ultimate Consciousness'.

The Abode Of No Return

The secret to liberation is what Kṛṣṇa gives here, 'One who attains My abode will never return, yaṁ prāpya na nivartante tad dhāma paramaṁ mama (8.21).'

The abode where one will not return to refers to the state of the being when it transcends joys and sorrow. Kṛṣṇa again and again talks about focusing one's thoughts on the Divine. The only way to think of the Divine at the time of our death is by thinking about Him all the time. At that time, we suddenly cannot think of God. In such pain and suffering, we suddenly can't think of God if we have always been thinking about money and food in our life. It is impossible.

That is why Kṛṣṇa insists upon continuous devotion to the Supreme - bhaktyā labhyas tv ananyayā (8.22). When we live in a state of continuous devotion, our last thought will be of the Divine. Please be very clear: Our last thought determines our next birth. There is no doubt about it.

When we continuously think about God, we understand the truth that everything around us is Him. When we are continuously in that meditation, we see Kṛṣṇa in everything around us. You see, thousands of thoughts come to us every minute. Let as many thoughts as possible be of God. We do not need to reduce the number of thoughts. Let the thoughts be of God. Let us immerse ourselves in thinking about the supreme soul. This purifies our inner space.

Throughout the day, how many times do we think of God? Maybe before a meal, or before going to bed. Otherwise, it is only when we face some problem, that we think of God. But how many times do we think of some film actress or actor? Everything in the newspapers, on television or on the internet is about something with which we are not really connected.

Out of thousands of thoughts, less than one percent is probably related to God. Everything else is related to something external. Please listen, every thought is energy and we waste more than ninety nine percent of our energy on something that is not really needed for us. If we can channel this energy to look inward, to see the source of our existence, we explore a new dimension of our Self.

Passing In Light

8.25 The mystic who passes away from this world during the smoke, the night, the fortnight of the waning moon, or the six months when the sun travels in the south, having done good deeds, goes to the cosmic layer and returns.

शुक्लकृष्णे गती ह्येते जगतः शाश्वते मते । एकया यात्यनावृत्तिमन्ययावर्तते पुनः ॥ ८-२६॥ śuklakṛṣṇe gatī hyete jagataḥ śāśvate mate
ekayā yātyanāvṛttimanyayāvartate punaḥ || 8.26 ||

8.26 According to the Vedas, there are two ways of passing from this world - one in light and one in darkness. When one passes in light, he does not return; but when one passes in darkness, he returns.

In these few verses, Kṛṣṇa describes at what time one can achieve enlightenment, how one can achieve enlightenment and how to reach that state. He also talks about how people come back into this cycle of birth and death.

He says:

agnir jyotir ahaḥ śuklaḥ ṣaṇ-māsā uttarāyaṇam | tatra prayātā gacchanti brahma brahmavido janāḥ || 8.24 ||

Those who know the supreme Divine attain that Supreme by passing away from the world during the influence of Agni, the fire-god, during light or at an auspicious moment of the day, also during the fortnight of the waxing moon or during the six months that the sun travels in the north, referred to as uttarāyaṇaṁ.

Understand, these are not chronological calendars. If it were a chronological calendar, then at uttarāyaṇaṁ time, all of us can commit suicide and be done with it. But that is not what is meant here. All these things have metaphorical meanings. When He says uttarāyaṇaṁ, Kṛṣṇa means when our mind is totally balanced and when we are not agitated.

In the Mahābhārat war it is said that Bhīśma Pitāmaḥ waits for uttarāyaṇaṁ to leave the body. Don't think he waited for January. He waited until his mind settled down from the agitations and incompletions, and he establishes himself in the space of completion.

He had fallen in battle and was lying down on a bed made of arrows. He must have felt agitated. He must have felt, 'My grandson, whom I taught everything, for whom I did everything, did this to me.' He would have been disturbed. So he waited until the agitation settled down. That is what is meant by the words, 'he was waiting for uttarāyaṇaṁ.'

Don't think these are chronological concepts. They are psychological. If it were chronological, then do you think that the millions of people who die in those six months become enlightened? Enlightenment is not an accident. It is a pure conscious choice.

So be very clear, when He says agnir jyotir ahaḥ śuklaḥ, He means when your being is conscious, fully alive, awakened, naturally you go up. (śuklaḥ means going above, kṛṣṇa means going down).

If we live throughout life centered on the eyes, our energy leaves through the eyes. At the last moment, we open the eyes and the soul leaves. If we live throughout life centered on the tongue, eating, our mouth opens and the soul leaves through it. So if we live throughout life centered on higher consciousness, our energy leaves through the sahasrāra, the crown cakra, the energy center on the top of our head.

Kṛṣṇa says brahma brahmavido janāḥ. He means that if we have always lived with our attention focused towards higher consciousness, we will travel in that path and disappear into Brahman. We will become enlightened.

So be very clear, these conditions are not chronological. They are psychological. Bhīśma waited until his mind settled, until he felt completely peaceful, till he was able to forgive and complete with everybody and himself, and till he was able to reach conscious awareness. Then he entered enlightenment.

Next, Kṛṣṇa says that the person who passes away from this world during smoke, the night, the fortnight of the waning moon or those six months when the Sun travels in the south, referred to as Dakṣināyaṇaṁ, reaches the Moon but comes back again.

Kṛṣṇa says that according to the Vedas, there are two ways to pass from this world: one in light and one in darkness -śukla-kṛṣṇa gatī hy ete jagataḥ śāśvate mate. When one passes in light, he does not return, but when one passes in darkness, he comes back again - ekayā yāty anāvṛttim ananyāvartate punaḥ (8.26).

What does Kṛṣṇa mean by light and darkness, śukla-kṛṣṇa? They refer to the levels of consciousness one has reached. If a person leaves the body without knowing what drove him all along - his saṁskāras, his desires, fears, guilt, etc., which we call root thought patterns - then this ignorance is what He refers to as darkness.

Carry the right inner space. On the rock, seed cannot sprout as a tree. In the right fertile ground only, the seed can become tree. In the right inner space only, the teachings can become reality. Right inner space means where all the root thought patterns of suffering are destroyed. All root thought patterns are destroyed where your inner space is fertile for experiencing the higher ideals and ideas. When we become aware of these root thought patterns and are free from them, we leave the body and become liberated. This is what He means by light. He says that when this happens, the being does not return to the body.

Be Fixed in Devotion

नैते सृती पार्थ जानन्योगी मुह्यति कश्चन ।
तस्मात्सर्वेषु कालेषु योगयुक्तो भवार्जुन ॥ ८-२७॥
naite sṛtī pārtha jānanyogī muhyati kaścana tasmātsarveṣu kāleṣu yogayukto bhavārjuna || 8.27 ||

8.27 O Pārtha (son of Pritha), the devotees who know these different paths are never bewildered. O Arjuna, be always fixed in devotion.

वेदेषु यज्ञेषु तपःसु चैव दानेषु यत्पुण्यफलं प्रदिष्टम् ।
अत्येति तत्सर्वमिदं विदित्वा योगी परं स्थानमुपैति चाद्यम् ॥ ८-२८॥ vedeṣu yajñeṣu tapaḥsu caiva dāneṣu yatpuṇyaphalaṃ pradiṣṭam atyeti tatsarvamidaṃ viditvā yogī paraṃ sthānamupaiti cādyam || 8.28 ||

8.28 A person who accepts the path of devotional service transcends the results derived from studying the Vedas, performing austerities and sacrifices, giving charity or pursuing pious and result-based activities. At the end he reaches the supreme abode.

In the last few verses Kṛṣṇa summarizes the essence of the whole chapter. He says, 'O Pārtha, the devotees who know these different paths are never bewildered. Therefore O Arjuna, be always fixed in devotion.'

naite sṛtī pārtha jānan yogi muhyati kaścana | tasmāt sarveṣu kāleṣu yoga-yukto bhavārjuna || 8.27 ||

He means that a person who understands the different paths that a spirit can take while leaving the body will always be prepared for death. He immerses himself in devotion throughout his life so that he becomes liberated. Kṛṣṇa first gives Arjuna an intellectual understanding of the whole death process. He clearly tells him that the last thought while leaving the body governs the path that the spirit chooses when entering the next body.

Again and again He emphasizes that this thought cannot be divine unless we spend our entire lives in devotional service. Devotion is more important than service. Never give money in charity because some priest told you that it is a good thing. Never follow these rules blindly. Let charity just be a natural expression of yourself, not with any expectation.'

Every day for half an hour, just for half an hour, work without expecting anything in return. It could be anything. Without any calculations, immerse yourself in some work for half an hour. You will suddenly see a new space open up inside you. When you work without expecting anything in return, just for the joy of doing it, you will see how liberating it is. Gradually, when this becomes ingrained in you, you will be enriched and enjoy whatever you do much more. You will no more bother about who thinks what about you.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Performing austerities and sacrifices, giving charity or pursuing pious result-based activities will take a person to the supreme abode.'

oṃ tatsaditi śrīmadbhagavadgītāsu upaniṣatsu brahmavidyāyāṃ yogaśāstre śrīkṛṣṇārjunasaṃvāde akṣarabrahmayogo nāmāṣṭamo'dhyāyaḥ || 8 ||

Thus ends the eighth chapter named Akṣarabrahma Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga Of Imperishable Brahma' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśātra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 9
Rājavidyā Rājaguhya Yogaḥ

Secret Of All Secrets

We are now at the halfway mark of the Bhagavad Gītā. Arjuna started in total confusion and dilemma. His questions were varied and repetitive. It was as if he did not listen to what Kṛṣṇa told him. Questions arise from inner violence. They arise from the ego to prove one's correctness.

These questions gradually transform into doubts. Doubts are essential for any seeker. Doubt and faith are two sides of the same coin. Without doubt, we cannot develop faith. Blind faith will not help the seeker. It is just based upon root thought patterns and will collapse under pressure. Real faith develops in the seeker when he sincerely questions spiritual truths. Raising sincere doubts before an enlightened Master actually does a lot to integrate a person and strengthen his faith.

Kṛṣṇa sees the change that is happening within Arjuna. He feels Arjuna's inner violence and conflict is clearing up and that his individual consciousness is opening to the space of completion. The Master is ready to change gears now and take the dialogue to the next level that is needed to address this change in inner space.

In previous chapters Kṛṣṇa explains to Arjuna how to act without attachment by renouncing the outcome of his actions to Existence. In the last chapter He enriches Arjuna with an understanding of the process of death and liberation. Now Kṛṣṇa reveals to Arjuna the greatest of all secrets - Rājavidyā Rājaguhya Yogaḥ, the secret about Himself.

Eternal, Easy and Joyfully Done

9.1 Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says: Arjuna, you trust Me and you are not envious of Me; I shall therefore impart to you this profound and secret wisdom and experience; this will free you of all miseries of material existence.

9.2 This knowledge is king of all knowledge and the greatest secret of all secrets. It is the purest knowledge, sacred, and because it gives direct perception of the Self by Self-realization, it is the perfection of religion, dharma. It is eternal, easy, and it is very joyfully performed.

9.3 Those who have no faith in this knowledge cannot attain Me, O Parantapa, conqueror of foes; they will return to the path of birth and death in this material world.

Kṛṣṇa assures Arjuna with these verses. He says, 'My dear Arjuna, because you are never envious of Me, I shall impart to you this most confidential knowledge and realization, knowing which, you shall be relieved of the miseries of material existence.'

śri bhagavān uvāca

idaṁ tu te guhyatamaṁ pravakṣyāmy anasūyave | jñanaṁ vijñāna-sahitaṁ yaj jñātvā mokṣyase 'śubhāt || 9.1 ||

He says, 'Because you are never envious of Me.' Depending on the context, this verse can be taken to mean 'Because you are not envious of Me' or 'Because you have trust in Me.' We may wonder how Arjuna could be envious of Kṛṣṇa. Please listen, you don't know the ways in which the human mind works, especially since in our generation, we always think of Arjuna as being human and Kṛṣṇa as Divine. We accept Kṛṣṇa as God. However, when Kṛṣṇa was alive, when He was in the body, people did not always accept that He is divine. In addition, Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa were friends. They were close friends, so Arjuna treated Kṛṣṇa as a human and related to Him with human emotions. We should first understand the atmosphere, the background. Only then will we intensely understand this whole chapter as it is expressed.

The Ultimate Secret

The very idea that Arjuna might be envious of Kṛṣṇa may surprise us. Understand, whenever the Masters were in the body, people never respected them. This problem always existed. Only after they left the body did people accept and worship them. Actually, it is easy to worship a photograph. There is no sacrifice or transformation required. However, it is never easy to worship a living being. The living person will always be questioned and envied.

Whenever Masters are alive, it is difficult for people to accept their divinity. However, once they leave the body, people say, 'We missed Ramakrishna,' 'We missed Ramaṇa Maharishi,' and so on. We complain about what we missed. We never realize what we have.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'Because you are never envious of Me - pravakṣyāmy anasūyave, I will give you the ultimate secret - idaṁ tu te guhyatamaṁ (9.1).'

Here, please understand, Kṛṣṇa is giving the ultimate secret, guhyatamaṁ. Once we know this secret, then there is no difference between the Divine and us. Here He gives us the straight, ultimate secret.

In the business world, the leader usually never gives secrets to anyone, whatever they may do, however close they may be. Corporate people maintain secrets. Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am not going to maintain any secrets. I am going to open the whole thing.' He says that knowledge is free. It is up to us to use it. Now, modern day IT companies declare that knowledge is free. Yet five thousand years ago, Kṛṣṇa declared that knowledge is free.

He says, 'I am opening all the secrets - idaṁ tu te guhyatamaṁ.' He decides, 'I am giving you this secret because you are never envious of Me - pravakṣyāmy anasūyave.'

There is an important thing that people who go near the Master should know, especially people who live around the Master. By and by, these disciples, instead of trying to achieve the state of the Master, try to achieve the status of the Master. State is different from status. The enlightened state of the Master should be achieved, not the status that His Enlightenment confers.

When you see the status, you will always be caught in jealousy. If you see the state in which Masters live, He will become a source of inspiration for you to achieve the same state. He will be a role model. You will think, 'When he can achieve this, why not me?' I become an inspirational source for you.

Whether you believe it or not, accept it or not, realize it or not, you are God. You are Divine. You have two choices. You can either sleep as long as you want without experiencing this truth, or you can make the conscious choice to experience your Enlightenment, your Completion. But the truth is, 'You are That.'

Here, Kṛṣṇa says, 'Because you never try to achieve My status, I am trying to give you My state.' The person who never tries to achieve the status of the Master achieves the state of the Master. First, state comes; then status follows. If we try to create the status, the state will never be achieved.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'Because you are never jealous, never envious of My status and Me, I give you the ultimate secret of this state.' This is the ultimate secret. He says, 'Knowing which, you shall be relieved of the miseries of material existence - yaj jñātvā mokṣyase aśubhāt (9.1).'

What are the miseries of material existence? Whether we have something or not, it is misery. If we don't have, then the misery is, 'I don't have.' If we have, then we have the misery, 'I must protect it.'

Rājavidyā - King of All Knowledge

Yoga means achieving. Kṣema means protecting. Both are miseries. Whether we have or not, it is misery.

Kṛṣṇa says that the miseries of having wealth and not having wealth, both miseries that are caused by material existence disappear by knowing this secret. This is the ultimate secret that needs to be understood. Knowledge of this secret liberates you.

He says, 'This knowledge is the king of all knowledge. The greatest secret of all secrets, it is the purest knowledge and because it gives direct perception of the Self by realization, it is the perfection of religion. It is everlasting and it is joyfully performed.'

rājavidyā rājaguhyaṁ pavitram idam uttamam | pratyakṣāvagamaṁ dharmyaṁ su-sukhaṁ kartum avyayam || 9.2 ||

See, religion or a spiritual path should have three characteristics. First, it should clearly describe the goal of life. Next, it should clearly give you the path to achieve the goal. Third, it should make you happy to travel in that path. The path itself should be joyful, blissful.

So here, Kṛṣṇa says, 'It is eternal - avyayam' meaning that the result that we achieve is everlasting. And it is joyfully performed - su-sukhaṁ kartum. It is easy. We don't need to struggle or suffer for it. It is the deepest secret. All we need to do is to realize the secret. Understand the secret.

Why is it a secret? If it is going to enrich so much then why is it a secret? Why not let the whole world use it?

The ultimate secret, the ultimate knowledge is not for the masses. Masses always get stuck with small things and shallow entertainment. That is why, if we run a cinema theatre, you can see how such a big crowd gathers. Only a few hundred people are here today because we built only a temple. Temples are for the chosen few, not for all. We need intelligence to come to a temple. We need intelligence to enter spirituality. It is not for everyone.

Don't give up on people based on their past record. Earlier your spouse may not have listened to you, because you yourself may not have been integrated and authentic to your spiritual path. Now, bring that integrity and authenticity. And don't give up on people. Enrich people, enrich people and enrich people. If you give up on people, you will give up on yourself. You will lose your confidence.

Not giving up on people is life. People are life. If you give up on them, you are giving up on life. Whenever you give up on people, you commit partial suicide. Enrich the person with some intelligence about life. You cannot directly give spirituality. Please don't ask him to meditate or come to the temple. Listen, authentically listen to him and don't give up on him. That's all. Nothing else can be done.

Only by intelligence can a man come to spirituality. That is why this is preserved as a secret. If this spiritual intelligence is given to all, without bothering about the qualifications of the receiver, the person who receives will harm himself and others also.

First, he harms himself if he has not completely understood it. For example, what will a criminal do if he is told, 'You are God?' He will think, 'I am God. So let me do whatever I want. I don't have to bother.' He misuses the knowledge. He abuses it. That is why he harms himself.

A person who experiences God radiates compassion. He radiates simplicity. He radiates innocence. Divine qualities express through him. He never hurts anybody. We see a beautiful innocent shine in him and such simplicity. He never hurts anybody. He never harms anybody.

If we are relaxed, blissful, in a good mood, and our employee or co-worker makes a mistake, do we shout at him? No. We will say, 'Alright, leave it. What can be done?' However, if we are in a bad mood, an irritable mood, nobody needs to make any mistake. We shout at everyone for no reason. We are waiting to rant and rave. We are waiting to shout.

Our mood, our inner space decides our action. If we are in the space of completion and blissful, we never do anything wrong. If we are in incompletion with a hellish mood, we always make mistakes. Please don't think people go to hell after making mistakes. No! We make mistakes because we are in hell. We do the right action because we are blissful. Someone who experiences that he is God never makes a mistake and never harms anybody. If this knowledge is given to all, including those who don't have the maturity, naturally they harm themselves and they harm others. They say, 'I am God. Come here. I will do whatever I want.' That is why this knowledge is kept as a secret.

That is why He says, 'this king of secrets is the king of knowledge—rājavidyā rājaguhyaṁ.' Kṛṣṇa reveals the secret only to qualified people.

In this chapter Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am not even God; I am something more than God. Whatever you think of as God rests in Me. All created beings rest in Me.' He declares, 'I am God.'

All our scriptures are called Upaniṣad. Even Gītā is called Upaniṣad - Śrimad Bhagavad Gītāsu Upaniṣatsu'. The word Upaniṣad literally means 'sitting down near someone'. It refers to the teaching style of a traditional Hindu school or gurukul where students sat by their Master to learn. Knowledge was transmitted in close groups in a trusted environment. It was knowledge not merely through intellect as verbal communication. It was a communion of beings wherein the experience of one was experienced by the other.

Jñāna Yajña - Path to Self-realization

In the same way that we collect things for outward Existence, for the outer space, we need to collect knowledge for our inner space: life solutions, solutions for our inner space. If we feel depressed or low, if we face some adverse situation, how are we to react? How are we to handle it? We need this knowledge to handle our inner space.

Like collecting things for the outwardly life, we need to collect life solutions for a happy, blissful life. Collecting life solutions is what Kṛṣṇa calls jñāna yajña. What is nitya (eternal) and what is anitya (temporary)? What is satya (truth) and what is asatya (falsehood)? Acquiring all this understanding is jñāna yajña.

Jñāna refers to higher knowledge or wisdom and yajña refers to the purification process that leads to this higher knowledge. What Kṛṣṇa means through jñāna yajña is the spiritual path that leads one to Self-realization. It is the path that creates awareness in us about our Divinity. This realization of the deepest truths about oneself happens in many cases through a combination of two things: understanding about similar spiritual experiences by observing others and our own efforts to contemplate upon these experiences so that they are reproduced within.

Please focus on the life solutions offered by great Enlightened Masters while gathering knowledge. Please read books that enrich you with life solutions as experienced by Enlightened beings, for at least for half an hour every day: books of Śrī Ramakrishna, Vivekananda, etc. We have the books like 'Guaranteed Solutions', 'Living Enlightenment', and daily morning satsangs, and over ten-thousand hours of life solutions available on KAILĀSA's YouTube channel. Spend at least half an hour every day reading, watching truths based on the teachings of enlightened Masters.

Read, watch or listen to anything that enriches you into leading a better, complete life. However, let it come from an enlightened source, which experientially gives solutions for your life. Let that hour become your jñana yajña, your spiritual journey. Add more and more life solutions into your inner space.

Kṛṣṇa says that doing jñana yajña is one step. Understanding that the whole Cosmos is energy is one step. If we understand that whatever exists is energy, automatically, fear will be taken away from our being.

The next question is, 'How can we say that whatever exists is energy? How can we say whatever exists is God? That is impossible. All these things are good to listen to, but are not practical to practice!' Our mind never accepts that these things can be practiced and experienced. So Kṛṣṇa continues; He goes on and comes out with the basic secrets.

Who Can Know The Ultimate Secret

Here Kṛṣṇa gives the qualification of people who can attain Him. He clearly describes the people who can reach Him. When I say 'Him', it is not the form named Kṛṣṇa. It is the Universal energy, the cosmic energy called nityānanda - eternal bliss.

In the first two verses He says, 'It is a great truth that I am going to tell and it is a secret that I am revealing to you.' Now He lets Arjuna know what kind of people can know the secret. He says people who do not have śraddha, faith in dharma or His teachings go back to the path of rebirth without enlightenment, without attaining Him. He says the qualification required is to have faith in His teachings. Only those people can come out of the vicious cycle of birth and death.

You see, having authentic faith, śraddha is one of the most important things, especially in the spiritual path. Whenever an Enlightened Master speaks, every word he utters is the Absolute Truth.

Śraddha - Authentic Faith in Master

There are three possible levels in which you can put faith in what a Master says.

With the first level or group, you can have doubt. That is obvious. You doubt what an enlightened Master says, because you can't comprehend what He says. See, you can have doubts. In fact, you should have doubts, only then you question what Master says. However, you should look-in to find out if those doubts are genuine. If they arise out of ego, then it is your mind playing a game. Your mind creates a wall between you and Master. As long as your doubts are genuine, as long as you question to know the Truth out of curiosity, it is fine.

The second group or level is when you believe whatever Master says. That is the second category. This is dangerous. Believing whatever Master says without intranalyzing, cognizing, and experiencing it for yourself is dangerous. This creates a weak foundation. When Master says that 'you are God', if you just straightaway believe me it is dangerous, because you have not experienced it. If someone questions you on your belief, you will be unable to stand by it. You will stammer and stumble and do yourself harm.

The third approach is trust. When you trust Master, you accept what Master says. You still have doubts. However, you are willing to break that wall and try to see and experience what Master is saying. You build your foundation and you make it strong because you trust the Master. This is the way authentic faith, śraddha should develop. Faith should arise from a strong foundation of integrity and authenticity. First you trust Master, then you try exploring the truths He shares and when you have a glimpse of the truth, you believe Master with a stronger foundation. Now nobody can shake you because you have developed a strong base. You have done the work yourself.

Here, Kṛṣṇa talks about faith in dharma, His teaching. You see, we are different from animals because we can have faith in dharma, meaning the higher levels of consciousness. Without dharma, we are the same as any animal. It is completely controlled by instincts. It does not make a decision consciously, based on right or wrong. However, a human being has one extra power. He has free will to follow dharma, to live with integrity, authenticity, responsibility, and enriching. He has free will to do or not do, to accept or not accept.

He says we must allow consciousness to flower in us and in order to do that we must have faith in dharma. When our faith is complete, when we have internalized His dharma, with integrity and authenticity, in everything that we do, our consciousness automatically blossoms. When we reach that state of consciousness, we merge with Universal consciousness and then we are free from the cycle of birth and death.

So, Kṛṣṇa gives a technique. He says, 'Have śraddha, faith in dharma and it will lead you to the Ultimate.'

9.8 My material nature creates the beings again and again. They are controlled by My material nature. It is time to reveal the secrets.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa starts:

mayā tatam idaṁ sarvaṁ jagad avyaktamūrtinā | matsthāni sarva bhūtāni na cāhaṁ teṣvavasthitaḥ || 9.4 ||

'By Me, in my formless form, this entire Universe is pervaded. All beings are in Me, but I am not in them.' Before entering further into this verse, the meaning of the verse should be understood.

The whole Universe is pure intelligence. The whole Universe is not dead matter. The Universe is not an accident. It can respond to our thoughts. Please understand, the whole Universe, planet Earth, air, oceans, rivers, earth, fire, or the space, sun, moon, this whole Universe, is intelligence. It can reciprocate. It can respond. It can react to our thoughts.

This is an important and basic understanding. The moment we understand that we are this energy that is intelligence, the moment we are aware that we are inside the energy that is intelligence, at that moment, we immediately settle into a deep relaxation. The moment we experience, we understand we are under the guidance of an intelligent energy. We are taken care of by an intelligent energy, we are part of the cosmic intelligence and we don't need to struggle or stress ourselves. We don't need to torture ourselves with insecurity problems and with unnecessary worries.

Actually, all our problems, tensions and stresses arise because we think we do everything. We think the Universe runs because of us. Understand that the Universe runs in spite of us. We should understand that the Universe is intelligent and it responds to our thoughts. If we trust the Universe, we experience how light we are. We can unload all our troubles including the extra responsibility of thinking that we do everything.

This does not mean that we just sit and relax and say, 'Okay, the Universe is intelligence. It will take care of everything.' This is laziness and escapism. We still must do what we need to do. We should still work; however we can enjoy the process. You see, we think of the result all the time. Our thoughts arise out of fear or greed: fear of whether we will get the results or greed of wanting more and more.

However, we never enjoy the process of doing that work. When we enjoy the process and trust the Universal intelligence, thoughts arising out of fear and greed will disappear. We will enjoy the process of doing and we will let the Universe take care of the results. Kṛṣṇa says elsewhere, 'You do what you have to. Do it, but surrender the results to Me.' When He says 'Me', He refers to the Universal consciousness or intelligence.

This is what Kṛṣṇa means in the next verse when He says that the beings do not depend on Him, nor does He depend on them.

Of course, it is clear that the Universe does not depend upon us; yet how can He say that we, the beings created and sustained by the Universe, do not depend upon it? What He means is this: it is not a passive and lazy dependence of letting everything happen while we sit idle. It is an active understanding. One does what one must do as part of his life process but without attachment and ownership.

One way or the other, we are in this Universe. Because the Universe is intelligence, it responds to our thoughts. It makes things happen. Since we are part of this Universe, just flow with the energy of the Universe. Do not resist it. If this understanding penetrates our life, it is enough.

If we know the Universe is intelligence, we never question how life unfolds. We don't say, 'I am moral. But I see people who don't live morally living luxuriously, happily. Yet I always suffer!' We never have these frustrations, these incompletions with others and with life, because we know the Cosmic intelligence will take care ultimately. Whoever is immoral or whoever goes around and disturbs others will naturally face the consequences, because intelligence takes care. In the same way, if we are integrated and authentic, living a spiritual life, we will live a beautiful life. We are rewarded because the whole Universe is run by an intelligence that responds to this.

Don't think the Cosmos is just matter. If we think the Cosmos is matter, we are materialistic. If we understand that the Cosmos is intelligence, we are spiritual, that's all. The only difference between the materialistic and spiritual person is that the materialist thinks the whole thing is material: 'Let me acquire more and more material things.' The spiritual person understands that the whole thing is spirit, energy. If we understand that the whole thing is spirit, energy, intelligence, then a tremendous relaxation and bliss consciousness happens to us.

Kṛṣṇa declares, 'By My formless form, this entire Universe is pervaded. All beings are in Me - mayā tatam idaṁ sarvaṁ jagad avyaktamūrtinā.' He speaks of cosmic intelligence.

Be very clear, such a big Universe is moving and happening. All the planets move around the sun. Each planet has its own moons. There are so many suns, moons and planets. Yet, each one travels in its route properly. Unless intelligence runs the whole thing, do you think things can happen so beautifully? And even on this planet Earth, see how the whole thing is beautiful. The whole thing happens in an order, in a complete way.

We need to understand that the whole Universe is intelligence and it operates out of intelligence. This intelligence responds to our thoughts and we can relate with this intelligence. When we internalize this truth, then we naturally experience a deep peace. Rest, a real, ultimate rest and confidence to live, happens within us.

As long as we think the world is matter or material, there is no use living. Nothing matters. Even if we become the president of one country, other countries will not be under our control. We can never become the president of the whole world. So naturally, we can never achieve the whole matter. As long as we believe the world is material, we create more and more violence because we live materially. Materially means that we must snatch from others. One way or another; violence will exist. Only a person who experiences, who understands that the whole thing is energy, intelligence, only he can relax.

Let me repeat the next verse.

yathākāśasthito nityaṁ vāyuḥ sarvatrago mahān || tathā sarvāṇi bhūtāni matsthānīty upadhāraya || 9.6 ||

He says, 'Understand that as the mighty wind blowing everywhere rests in the sky, all created beings rest in Me.' When the earth element is disturbed or poisoned, only one person suffers. For example, if our food is poisoned, we alone suffer, that's all. If water is poisoned, the whole region suffers. Whoever uses the water supply, suffer. If whatever creates fire in us is corrupted, a big group suffers. We can use medicines as an example for fire because medicines keep the fire inside us alive. If medicines are corrupted, people who take the medicines suffer. If chemicals pollute the air, the whole country suffers. If air is corrupted, if the air is polluted, the whole society suffers. But if space, ākāśa, is polluted, the whole world suffers.

Corruption at higher levels of energy creates suffering for more and more people. The higher the level of energy that is corrupted, the number of people suffering is more. Our thoughts corrupt space. Space is energy.

Because ether or space is so subtle and so sensitive, we cannot feel the happenings in the space of ether. We feel the happenings in the other four spaces: earth, water, fire and air, so because of that we can understand the happenings in them. However, we fail to understand that space, ether, is also energy, a power. It is more subtle and more powerful because the subtler it becomes, the more powerful and energetic it becomes.

Levels of Space

There are three levels of space. The first level is when we are limited to what is inside this skin. This is Ghaṭākāśa, what is contained within our body. We limit our whole understanding of everything around us to this body. We become conscious of how this body should look, how it should be maintained. We think we are only this body and nothing else. This is the lowest level.

The next level is Cidākāśa. This space refers to what our mind perceives as the world. Let's say we are sitting here but our mind is in Los Angeles. Then that (Los Angeles) becomes our cidākāśa, the space perceived by our mind. The next moment our mind shifts to Bangalore. Then that becomes our cidākāśa. The space that our mind operates in is cidākāśa.

The third and final level is Mahākāśa. The whole cosmos, the Universe, everything that is outside and that is inside forms mahākāśa. This is the ultimate level. This is the level where everything that we see as different becomes One.

Please clearly understand these three spaces. Our body, everything that is inside this skin is ghaṭākāśa. Next, the space governed by our mind, by our thoughts, is cidākāśa. Finally, the whole Universe, the whole cosmos, forms mahākāśa.

Now, if something happens inside our body, we immediately feel it. If we are hurt, we clearly see the blood flow. We see a rash or a cut. We clearly see and feel any disturbance or event in ghaṭākāśa at a gross level.

When we go to the next level, cidākāśa, events that disturb or change this space are subtle. Our thoughts affect cidākāśa. Whether we believe it or not, our thoughts have a huge effect on the external world. Whatever thought comes, don't think that it simply comes and goes. Every thought is energy. It manifests as something in the external world. The problem is that we are unaware of the effect. The effect is subtle so our mind cannot see that what happens is because of those thoughts we entertained.

Our mind thinks something. It affects this cidākāśa, our inner space. These changes are projected into the external world, yet our mind is unable to recognize that all it sees is because of itself. So, as we advance one level higher, the changes become more subtle but the effect is more powerful. In ghaṭākāśa, the effect is limited to our body. In cidākāśa, our thoughts affect the space around us. The effect is seen in a bigger space. The effect is more widespread. Now the highest level is mahākāśa. This level is subtler than cidākāśa. Any change here affects the whole Universe. When something happens in this space, the whole Universe responds. When we enter this space, we realize the ultimate Truth. We merge with everything, with the whole Cosmos. The fifth element, ether, is like mahākāśa. Actually they are the same. Ether is everywhere. Mahākāśa pervades everything. We are just not aware of it. This space takes any shape and any form. Even in vaccum, it is there. Like earth, ether, ākāśa can be used to create the space we want. It can be used in different forms and shapes. Certain techniques allow us to use the ether energy at its best, to its maximum level. When ether is put in one particular size - inside that room or inside that space - whoever lives there will be controlled by that ether and the ether is in turn controlled by them. Their thoughts affect the ether and the ether affects their thoughts.

This science of using the energy of space or ether is the basis of Vāstu Śastra, an ancient Hindu science related to the science of architecture. We can live in harmony with the universal energy by constructing dwellings in a manner that fits in with the spatial energy of the Universe. Vāstu Śastra lays down details for where various activity spaces should be located in a dwelling, as well as the direction. It tells where the kitchen should be located in a house, where fire resides, and so on.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'How the wind rests in the space, in the same way the Universe rests in Me, tathā sarvāṇi bhūtāni matsthānīty upadhāraya.' Don't think space is emptiness. It is energy. Just because we are not able to see, we can't say it is emptiness. It is energy. Just as the air rests in the space, our being, the whole Universe including our being, we all rest in the Divine. Kṛṣṇa says, 'All beings rest in Me, mat-sthānī.'

In these two verses, Kṛṣṇa talks about the creation and destruction of the Universe. He makes bold statements. Only an Incarnation can make such bold statements because He speaks from experience.

In the first verse Kṛṣṇa says, 'The whole material manifestation enters into Him when the Universe is destroyed and He projects it again to create the Universe.' Understand that when Kṛṣṇa says, 'The Universe enters Me,' He refers to the cosmic Kṛṣṇa, the cosmic consciousness, and not the Kṛṣṇa we see in human form. Let us understand this very deeply.

Kṛṣṇa says at the end of each age, called a kalpa in Sanskrit, the materially manifested Universe with all its creations merges back into Him. If we analyze the Big Bang theory, the first question we ask is, 'Where did the ball of fire come from?' The Big Bang theory does not answer this fundamental question. You see, the so-called scientists have no answer to this question yet. However Kṛṣṇa, the inner scientist, answers this question in these verses. Science has now proven that the vacuum has something in it. The subtlest form of energy, ether, is present in the vacuum. See how science is tending towards spirituality.

This whole Universe was created from ākāśa, ether and it goes back into ether again. All that we see outside as the material world is the manifestation of this subtle form of energy. The material world is the gross form of energy that we can see.

Kṛṣṇa says that only He can create and destroy this Universe at His will. This whole Universe is a manifestation or a projection of our own self. Please listen: We make our own world. We create the reality what we want. We create our world through our needs or desires. We don't see what IS! We are only seeing what we want. Only an Enlightened being sees the real truth, as it IS. Once we understand everything is a mirror image of our own self, we become enlightened. Once we realize that we, along with everything else around us, are part of the same energy or Consciousness, we become enlightened.

In these two verses, Kṛṣṇa says this truth clearly. Every material manifestation is created by Him and goes back into Him. He says only He can create and destroy it at His will, which means the world that we see, the Universe that we perceive, is a projection of our own Self.

How To Be Unattached

न च मां तानि कर्माणि निबध्नन्ति धनञ्जय । उदासीनवदासीनमसक्तं तेषु कर्मसु ॥ ९-९॥
na ca māṃ tāni karmāṇi nibadhnanti dhanañjaya

9.9 O Dhanañjaya, all this work does not bind Me. I am ever unattached and indifferent.

मयाध्यक्षेण प्रकृतिः सूयते सचराचरम् । हेतुनानेन कौन्तेय जगद्विपरिवर्तते ॥ ९-१०॥ mayādhyakṣeṇa prakṛtiḥ sūyate sacarācaram hetunānena kaunteya jagadviparivartate || 9.10 ||

9.10 The material nature of prakṛti works under My direction, O Kaunteya, and creates all moving and unmoving beings through My energy of māyā. By its rule this manifestation is created and annihilated again and again.

अवजानन्ति मां मूढा मानुषीं तनुमाश्रितम् । परं भावमजानन्तो मम भूतमहेश्वरम् ॥ ९-११॥ avajānanti māṃ mūḍhā mānuṣīṃ tanumāśritam
paraṃ bhāvamajānanto mama bhūtamaheśvaram || 9.11 ||

9.11 Fools deride Me when I descend in the human form. They do not know My transcendental nature and My supreme dominion over all that is.

मोघाशा मोघकर्माणो मोघज्ञाना विचेतसः ।
राक्षसीमासुरीं चैव प्रकृतिं मोहिनीं श्रिताः ॥ ९-१२॥
moghāśā moghakarmāṇo moghajñānā vicetasaḥ rākṣasīmāsurīṃ caiva prakṛtiṃ mohinīṃ śritāḥ || 9.12 ||

9.12 Those who are thus deluded are demonic and atheistic. In their deluded condition, their hopes for liberation, their result-oriented actions and their culture of knowledge become false and useless.

Being attached or bound to what we do or what we have is a major hurdle in realizing our Self. Kṛṣṇa says He is not bound to this Universe. This is the reason, He says, that keeps Him unaffected when the Universe is created and when it is destroyed.

The whole Universe is being born out of Him and it is getting destroyed. Even then He is not affected because He is not bound to the Universe. It is because He is a mere spectator.

Let us understand this in the context of daily life. When we start to internalize these great truths in small things that we do, a great change happens in us. Kṛṣṇa speaks of a divine play. He talks in terms of the Universe being created and destroyed from Universal consciousness. If we understand His words, we can apply them to day-to-day activities. That is why Bhagavad Gītā is a beautiful scripture, which can be easily internalized and applicable for any age or generation.

When we understand this truth, we feel a great sense of liberation. You see, we become attached or bound to what we have. We think that all we have is ours. When we create that attachment, we create a strong bond. Be very clear, now the problem has started.

Drop Your Attachments - Be Unclutched

Our material possessions create greed and fear in us. We are either in fear of losing them or we want to get more and more of them. We attach so much importance to them that getting more and more of them becomes our only goal. Naturally when we have so much, we create a fear of losing them. The problem is we associate ourselves with material possessions. Again and again, we run after them and forget who we are. So many people are in the rat race. They spend their lives accumulating money, bungalows and cars. And at the end of their life, they regret; they wonder what they have done in their lives. We are in a state of continuous fear.

This is one kind of attachment. There is another kind of attachment. We are attached to people. We create strong bonds in relationships. These are also attachments. We start possessing people. The possessiveness grows so strong that we suffer when someone leaves us or dies. We become so dependent on persons that our whole life seems to lose meaning when they die.

Actually, in this kind of bondage we define ourselves based on the opinions of other people. So we constantly hold on to that relationship because it gives us energy; that relationship helps us define ourselves. So when a person dies, we feel depressed because whatever we were holding to very tightly was the source of energy for us. That was defining us till now and now it is no longer there. It has disappeared. So our whole system is shaken.

Now there is the third kind of bondage or attachment. It is related to our thoughts and emotions. Whenever something happens, we start linking it with our past and start fantasizing about the future. Be very clear, a thought arises because our mind jumps from the past to the future. When a thought arises, we link up that thought with other thoughts and create thought patterns.

None of the thoughts are linked to each other. We create a shaft binding all these thoughts. Each thought is like a bubble in a fish tank. If you see bubbles rising in a fish tank, they are unrelated, unconnected and disjointed. However we create an illusory shaft and link them up. We attach ourselves with that shaft and start experiencing them. We let the thoughts control us.

In the same way, we deal with our emotions also. We create a shaft of all our pains and all our joys and associate with it. If we see that our pain shaft is longer than the joy shaft, we conclude that we had a painful life; we had a miserable life. Otherwise, we say we have a happy life. Yet if we look deeply, each of the pains is completely unconnected, disassociated, and disjointed.

For example, the headache that you experience today is not associated to the headache that you had one week ago. The headache that you had one week ago is not associated to the headache that you felt one month ago. But what do we do? We associate and connect all these and say we have always had headaches or migraines. We fail to see that all the events were independent events. We create a shaft through all these pains and come to a conclusion.

In the same way, if we have a joyful experience, we want to hold onto it. We want to experience that joy again. We look for that source of joy and continuously run after it. This again leads us into the rat race.

Understand, your incompletions get more and more powerful as long as you associate yourself with them. Don't associate yourself with your incompletion. Don't even own up. Just disown. Disowning incompletions is complete completion. If you are convinced you have disowned these incompletions, you are complete.

Here Kṛṣṇa says He is neutral. Kṛṣṇa is in the space of complete completion, the eternal completion. How do we get ourselves unconnected from these attachments? Please understand that being unconnected from material possessions does not mean you leave everything and go away. Being unconnected from relationships does not mean breaking your relationships, forgetting your children, parents and others.

Please understand this very deeply. Being neutral or unconnected has a deep meaning. Being neutral means being a spectator. It is like this: When you watch a movie, you watch something on the screen. Do you become an actor in that movie? No. You watch it and let it go.

In the same way, we need to watch attachments. When we watch them as a spectator, we get detached from them and complete with them. When we watch our materialistic wealth, we will not run after it. We do our job because we love it, not because we want to accumulate wealth. A scientist should do research because he likes to do it, not because he wants something out of it. When that is the attitude, the Universe starts showering. The results happen of their own accord. The materialistic wealth comes on its own.

In relationships also, we must be a spectator. When we stop seeing someone as a possession and when we become a spectator to the relationship, our dependency on that person and expectations from that person drop. When dependencies and expectations drop, there is no give and take in the relationship. There is only giving, only enriching. The relationship becomes stronger and completion with other happens.

When we become a spectator to our thoughts and emotions, we feel a great sense of liberation. All we have to do is break the shaft that we create between different unconnected thoughts and emotions. We have to 'unclutch.' When we see thoughts like passing clouds in the sky, we stop associating ourselves with them. We are no longer controlled by them.

Listen, being a spectator to thoughts does not mean that we suppress or destroy thoughts. We are not Brahma, the Creator, or Viṣṇu, the Sustainer, or Śiva, the Rejuvenator. When we become a spectator, we go beyond these three states. We transcend the trinity. By being a spectator, we remain unaffected and unattached to what happens in and around us. This is the truth. If we can internalize this completely, we will be enlightened this very minute.

Kṛṣṇa says that although He is a mere spectator, everything happens under His supervision. Here He shows His authority. He says the material world is created and annihilated according to His will through the power of prakṛti, Nature and the energy of māyā, Illusion. Actually, Kṛṣṇa is repeating what He said in the previous verse. Kṛṣṇa wants to clearly get this idea across to Arjuna.

The whole material manifestation is a projection of the energy of Universal consciousness. This is what is reflected within us in our individual consciousness. We create and project the reality what we see and what we wish to see. It is like this. You stand in front of a mirror and see yourself. Now all that you see outside you is a projection of what you have inside you.

Power of Our Inner Self

Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am the supreme power. The material nature of prakṛti works under My direction - mayā adhyakṣena prakṛtiḥ sūyate sa-carācaram (9.10).' Everything happens under Hissupervision. What He says is simple. Whatever happens is a drama of creation and annihilation through Nature and Illusion. Kṛṣṇa, the director and producer of this cosmic drama, stands unmoved as a spectator.

This truth is reflected within us, too. We create and destroy ourselves. Everything, our happiness, our pains, our fantasies, our sorrows, our relationships are created by us. If we see from a higher level, we influence the whole Universe. Kṛṣṇa shows how powerful we are, how powerful our inner Self is. Whether we believe it or not, it is the truth. We create everything that we see, feel and hear. That is the power of our inner Self. Yet we do not stay detached the way Kṛṣṇa does.

Our thoughts and words have a tremendous impact. Cosmic consciousness responds to our thoughts. All the enlightened Masters have talked about the power of thinking and words. What we think and how we think affects what happens around us.

If we are at peace internally, we express that bliss. No external event or happening affects this state. Bliss is eternal; however happiness is temporary. When we are powerful and blissful inside, we project the same power and bliss outside. We enjoy the external material manifestation because we are blissful inside as spectator. However, when we try to possess that bliss, that bliss is gone. Be very clear, when we think and enjoy something from our mind, it is not bliss.

So in this verse Kṛṣṇa tells us clearly that we create our own world. The material manifestation is solely because of our inner Self and nothing external is responsible for it.

Fools Deride an Incarnation

In the next verse Kṛṣṇa says, 'Fools deride Me when I descend in the human form. They do not know My ultimate nature, eternal nature, as the supreme Lord of all that is.'

avajānanti māṁ mūḍhā mānuṣiṁ tanum āśritam | paraṁ bhāvam ajānanto mama bhūta maheśvaram || 9.11 ||

Here Kṛṣṇa uses a strong word: 'Fools, mūḍhā'. Incarnations, enlightened Masters don't edit their words. They speak the truth as it is. Usually, normal people edit because they fear others' opinions. See, normally in all your minds, three processes happen: first, words are created, then edited and then finally presented. In Masters, these three processes don't happen. Straightaway what is created is presented. That is why, whatever words they utter become reality.

Only for an integrated person whose inner chatter has become pure, not only his words, his thinking becomes pure. That person can talk in a relaxed way for hours in public. To speak in public, that too in a relaxed and casual way, we need our inner being to be in pure integrity with our words and pure authenticity with our thinking. Only then can we talk whatever comes and be relaxed and complete. Otherwise, continuously we must edit. If we edit and speak, within half an hour or one hour, we are tired and drained. We do not radiate the same energy.

Here Kṛṣṇa uses the word, 'mūḍhaḥ', meaning 'fool'. 'Fools deride Me.' He gives a jolt to the ego. 'Fools deride Me when I descend in the human form. They do not know My eternal nature as the supreme Lord of all that is, mama bhūta maheśvaram.' He says, 'When I land in the world in the human form as a Master, people, fools, deride me. They don't understand.'

Why Masters Descend?

He again and again tells this to Arjuna, 'Don't think that just because I am in the body, I am your friend. Don't think that I am the person who was sitting in Briṇdāvan (the forest place where Kṛṣṇa spent his infant years), who is your own friend. I am the energy that takes care of the whole world. I have come down in this form to liberate all of you. So only fools deride Me, fools miss Me. Don't miss, Arjuna, understand the Ultimate nature of Me and liberate yourself.'

In these verses, Kṛṣṇa tells some interesting truths. These were true during His time and they are true today. When an enlightened Master lives in his body, people do not accept Him, people ignore Him, and some even abuse Him. In fact, people do not even want to accept that He can be an Enlightened Master.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Fools lose Me when I come in human form - avajānanti māṁ mūḍhā mānuṣiṁ tanum āśritam (9.11).' He calls them fools. This is the truth. When an enlightened Master is in human form, we do not accept him as a Master. Only after the Master leaves the body do we pay our respects to the Master. Why do people again and again do this?

You see, when the Master is in his body, in human form, our mind sees him as another human being. Then our ego comes between him and us. It reasons, 'He is another human like me. Why should I listen to him?' All these questions come. We decide we don't have to follow another human being and go back.

A simple act of ego makes us miss a living enlightened Master. Our being wants it; however our mind and ego create a strong wall of questions between the Master and us. We miss the opportunity. And one more thing, some people know that a person is a Master and what he says is good for them, yet they escape. This is because they know that the enlightened Master can see through them. They do not want anybody to know what a mess they have created in themselves. We should understand why an enlightened Master, an Incarnation happens on planet Earth. If we know this, we will not be fools. We will not miss or run away. If we understand, then we can break the wall between the Master and us and let our being experience the Master's energy.

Be very clear, the only mission of an enlightened Master is to get everyone to Live Enlightenment. There is no ulterior motive of the Master. Whenever Enlightened Masters save mankind, people try to make their life hell, due to their ignorance and self-doubts. Understand that an Enlightened Master does not have desires. So He does not have any vested interests. All He wants is everyone should experience the bliss that He has experienced.

In the case of a normal man, when he takes birth, he carries over desires from his previous birth. These are called vāsanas. However, an enlightened Master does not have desires or vāsanas; he is in a no-mind state. His spirit can merge directly into the Universal energy. Whenever there is a need on planet Earth, the energy of the Enlightened Master is sent down to Earth with a mission to fulfill.

Be very clear, nobody can help when we create a wall of doubt between the Master and us. The Master can help only if we break the wall, only if we allow the Master to take charge. As long as we hold onto our ego, we remain a fool. If we meet an Enlightened Master, that is the best happening that can happen to us. Now it is up to us to enrich ourselves with Enlightenment or miss it. Kṛṣṇa tells everyone: if you miss an Enlightened Master, you are a fool.

Kṛṣṇa does not ask us to follow His form. He asks us to follow His energy. He wants us to internalize Him and follow Him. Follow Kṛṣṇa by understanding Kṛṣṇa Consciousness, not by following what you imagine to be your understanding of the form of Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa Consciousness is the same as Śiva Consciousness or Buddha Consciousness or NITHYĀNANDA Consciousness. There is no difference.

That is why Kṛṣṇa says, 'These fools mock at Me when I come in human form. Don't mock the form, follow the Consciousness. You will no longer be a fool. You will be in eternal bliss.'

Worship Me in Any Form But With Devotion

महात्मानस्तु मां पार्थ दैवीं प्रकृतिमाश्रिताः ।

9.13 O Pārtha (son of Prithā), the great souls, who are not deluded, know Me as unchangeable. They are devoted to Me as they know I am the cause of all creation.

9.14 Those with firm resolve perpetually worship Me with devotion. They sing My glories, striving with determination, prostrating to Me.

एकत्वेन पृथक्त्वेन बहुधा विश्वतोमुखम् ॥ ९-१५॥
jñānayajñena cāpyanye yajanto māmupāsate ekatvena pṛthaktvena bahudhā viśvatomukham || 9.15 ||

9.15 Some worship Me by acquiring and spreading wisdom of the Self. Others worship Me in my non-dual form, or dual form or universal form.

Kṛṣṇa speaks about bhakti or devotion in these verses.

You see, devotion can be one of the most powerful ways to reach God. Many saints showed the world the path of devotion. Caitanya Mahāprabhu was devoted to Kṛṣṇa. He sang songs and danced in ecstasy while singing Kṛṣṇa's glory. Mīrā was another devotee of Kṛṣṇa who loved Him. Mīrā's devotional songs, Mīrā bhajans, are sung even today to show her devotion towards Kṛṣṇa. Prayer should express our devotion, gratitude, and love to God. All great devotees of Kṛṣṇa and Rāma showed complete gratitude and love. When devotion reaches that state, they reach the Ultimate Consciousness.

Devotion or Knowledge?

Prayers are powerful; however, we should not get stuck at prayers. Prayers are powerful in the initial stages when we pray as we go towards God. Let the prayers express devotion rather than asking for boons. We should go beyond words. When we pray, we are stuck in words. Our devotion should enrich us to see the ultimate energy behind the idol of Kṛṣṇa, Rāma, or Śiva.

Actually, complete devotion puts us in a completely different plane. When we show our devotion to someone, we surrender ourselves to him or her. Have you heard the story of the great child devotee Prahlād?

He was a young boy less than ten years old. His father Hiraṇyakaśipu, a great devotee of Brahma (the creator), does intense penance and asks Brahma for a boon to be made immortal; however Brahma says that is impossible. Hiraṇyakaśipu then comes up with lots of conditions such as: he should not be killed by an animal, a bird, a human, or anything living or non-living, either during the day or the night. Brahma grants him that boon.

Hiraṇyakaśipu thinks his boon covers all the ways in which he might be killed. So he declares himself to be God. He asks all the people in his kingdom to worship him as God. So people worship his idol. However his son, Prahlād, turns out to be a great devotee of Lord Viṣṇu.

Obviously his father is not happy about this. He tries to persuade Prahlād; but it is of no use. The more he talks to his son, the more intense Prahlad's devotion becomes. He then tries to get Prahlād killed through various ways. Prahlād worships Viṣṇu with such great devotion that Viṣṇu saves Prahlād every time. Prahlād prays to Viṣṇu every second, with every breath. His devotion is deep. Even when he is about to be executed, he prays to Viṣṇu with gratitude and love. His devotion is that of surrender rather than a prayer asking Viṣṇu to save his life. This is the story of Narasiṃha avatār, the Incarnation of Viṣṇu in which He is half-lion and half-human.

Kṛṣṇa continues to explain to Arjuna the ways in which people worship Him. Here he talks about the path of jñāna, knowledge: Those following the path of knowledge try to worship Me by acquiring and propagating knowledge.

Understand that mere accumulation of knowledge only increases ego. It does not give enlightenment. Internalize the knowledge by authentic listening, by meditation, and contemplation, and by enriching others and yourself with the experiential wisdom. Then the breeze of joy will flow into your life. How can we internalize knowledge? Do meditation.

When you are alone, think and contemplate upon great truths. Deeply immersing ourselves in contemplation is a meditation. Question those truths and try to find answers within yourself. Meditation helps us internalize our experience and process it into wisdom. It is an alchemy that happens internally, an alchemy that transforms our lives. Meditation helps us experience the truths.

Please understand, acquiring knowledge can be done in another way. Many people read many books and scriptures. They have shelves filled with books. These people take great pride in showing off their knowledge. Many people discuss spirituality and have debates over this subject. Debates are not wrong; however the motive with which they discuss should be correct. If they discuss to show others how much they know, then they are debating purely out of ego. Please be very clear, if we use our knowledge just to show how much we know, there is no use of that knowledge.

The only way knowledge in the scriptures enriches us is through experience. Instead of debating and showing off knowledge, apply it in day-to-day activities. See the results on yourself first. Experience completion in your own life. Only when we experience it, we have the right to speak about it to others. Till then, they are mere words.

Meditation enriches us here, especially in the path of jñana or knowledge. You see, the path of knowledge is not an easy path. In the path of devotion, all we have to do is pray to some form: either Kṛṣṇa or Rāma or someone, have complete devotion to that chosen God. We must completely surrender. Actually, total surrender is difficult; however, in the path of devotion, at least we have someone to talk to, pray to and look up to.

However in the path of knowledge, there is no reference point. No one is in front of us. In this path, there is nothing called you and He. In the path of devotion, there is a clear separation between Kṛṣṇa and us. In the path of knowledge, Kṛṣṇa says that everything is Kṛṣṇa. There is no duality. This is what Kṛṣṇa says in this verse. In the previous verse, He talked about the path of devotion. Here He talks about the path of knowledge. He says, 'Some worship the form, some worship the formless. There are many ways to worship Me.'

There are many different ways people worship the Divine. We have customized paths for our personal growth. So naturally wherever one is, one can grow and reach the level we are supposed to reach. There are all sizes of ladders, all kinds of steps. We are continuously given choices, options. So, naturally one tends to take up something or the other. He gives options among the different paths; satatam kīrtayanto mām (9.14) - worshipping through singing the glories of the Lord or jñāna-yajñena cāpy anye yajanto mām upāsate (9.15) - cultivation of knowledge and offering everything at the feet of God.

I Am Immortality And Death

9.19 I give heat. I send, as well as withhold the rain. I am immortality as well as death. I am also both the Eternal and the temporal, O Arjuna.

Kṛṣṇa says in specific terms what He is. He is the creation of the act, the actor and the action. He is the fire to which the sacrifices are made, He is also the offering and He is the sacrifice as well. He is the seer, the seen and the seeing, all in one.

He tells Arjuna that everything we do, everything we see, everything we feel, everything we know is because of Him. He says everything has come from Him. He is the seed of everything. Everything that we see is Parāśakti or universal energy. This is Kṛṣṇa's message here.

ahaṁ kratur ahaṁ yajñaḥ svadhānam aham auṣadham | mantro 'ham aham evājyam aham agnir ahaṁ hutam || 9.16 ||

All Are Brahman

Whether we believe it or not, accept it or not, understand it or not, this is the truth. We can call 'It' God - Kṛṣṇa, Śiva, Universal Energy, Cosmic Energy, Parāśakti or Brahman. Whatever we may call It, It is present everywhere. When we worship some idol or form, we actually worship the formless energy behind that idol.

First start meditating on the form, then you can go to the formless. Our mind is continuously jumping everywhere. In such a state, we first need a form to bring our mind to the present. A form is necessary in the initial stages for the mind to calm down. Once we Master this, meditating on the formless becomes easier. We should understand that we are worshipping through that idol and not the idol itself.

Our Enlightened Masters expressed it this way, 'God is energy and He fills all space and is omnipresent.' Kṛṣṇa says this clearly in these verses. This energy cannot be destroyed. It can only change form. You see, when we switch on a light, electrical energy is converted into light energy. Electrical energy is not being destroyed. It has only changed form.

In the same way, Universal Energy is everywhere. It is in everything around us and I tell you, it is within us also. Once we realize this great truth, we see that everything around us is the same as us. Only the form in which everything exists is different. Kṛṣṇa tries to explain this great truth through these verses.

I Reside In Me, Give And Preserve

त्रैविद्या मां सोमपाः पूतपापा यज्ञैरिष्ट्वा स्वर्गतिं प्रार्थयन्ते ।
ते पुण्यमासाद्य सुरेन्द्रलोकमश्नन्ति दिव्यान्दिवि देवभोगान् ॥ ९-२०॥ traividyā māṃ somapāḥ pūtapāpā yajñairiṣṭvā svargatiṃ prārthayante
te puṇyamāsādya surendralokamaśnanti divyāndivi devabhogān || 9.20 ||

9.20 Those who practice the Hindu rituals and drink the soma juice worship Me indirectly seeking the heavenly pleasures.

They go to heaven and enjoy sensual delights.

ते तं भुक्त्वा स्वर्गलोकं विशालं क्षीणे पुण्ये मर्त्यलोकं विशन्ति । एवं त्रयीधर्ममनुप्रपन्ना गतागतं कामकामा लभन्ते ॥ ९-२१॥ te taṃ bhuktvā svargalokaṃ viśālaṃ kṣīṇe puṇye martyalokaṃ viśanti evaṃ trayīdharmamanuprapannā gatāgataṃ kāmakāmā labhante || 9.21 ||

9.21 Once they have thus enjoyed heavenly sense pleasures, they are reborn on this planet again. By practicing Hindu rituals as result-oriented actions, they are bound by the cycle of birth and death.

अनन्याश्चिन्तयन्तो मां ये जनाः पर्युपासते ।
तेषां नित्याभियुक्तानां योगक्षेमं वहाम्यहम् ॥ ९-२२॥ ananyāścintayanto māṃ ye janāḥ paryupāsate
teṣāṃ nityābhiyuktānāṃ yogakṣemaṃ vahāmyaham || 9.22 ||

9.22 When you reside in My consciousness, always fixed in undivided remembrance, whatever you lack I give. And whatever you have, I preserve.

येऽप्यन्यदेवता भक्ता यजन्ते श्रद्धयान्विताः ।
तेऽपि मामेव कौन्तेय यजन्त्यविधिपूर्वकम् ॥ ९-२३॥
ye'pyanyadevatā bhaktā yajante śraddhayānvitāḥ

te'pi māmeva kaunteya yajantyavidhipūrvakam || 9.23 ||

9.23 Even those who worship other deities, they too worship Me, O Kaunteya, but without true understanding.

अहं हि सर्वयज्ञानां भोक्ता च प्रभुरेव च ।
न तु मामभिजानन्ति तत्त्वेनातश्च्यवन्ति ते ॥ ९-२४॥

ahaṃ hi sarvayajñānāṃ bhoktā ca prabhureva ca na tu māmabhijānanti tattvenātaścyavanti te || 9.24 ||

9.24 I am the only enjoyer and the only object of sacrifice. Those who do not recognize My true transcendental nature are born again and again.

Kṛṣṇa says that people who read scriptures, the Vedas, and who perform pious ritualistic activities based on scriptural injunctions with the aim of acquiring merits, enjoy heavenly pleasures; however they fall back into the cycle of life and death after they finish enjoying these pleasures.

Kṛṣṇa speaks about the attitude or the context from which we read Vedas and Upaniṣads or how we perform rituals. Scriptures have immense knowledge. Rituals have immense power. They are meditations; however they are useless if done with the wrong context of fear and greed.

Please understand, even when performing rituals and sacrifices, if you feel powerful, excited, energetic and blissful, and you think the external happening is the reason for that joy and powerfulness, then for that bliss, you are having joy out of the wrong context. It will not stay in you. It is not going to become lifestyle in you. When we do pious activities with the wrong context of fear or greed, though we see improvement, some transformation, we will go back to where we started. That is what Kṛṣṇa means by Indra loka, the momentary transformation or elevation of our state. Understand, not only the right experience, but also the right context is needed. So, whether you feel powerful or powerless, excited or depressed, rich or poor, healthy or sick, nothing comes from the external happening. If you think that the external happenings contribute for you feeling powerful or powerless, that is what wrong context, incompletion.

When we perform certain rituals, be it pūjā or prayer or reading scriptures, it should become a meditation. It is the experience of you that you are having about you. Our ego, our fear and our greed should not come in the way. It is like this: when we perform rituals, do them with integrity and authenticity, out of the right context of completion.

What You Lack I Give, What You Have I Preserve

Now, please come to the space of listening. The next verse is the main core that reveals the secret of secrets. Kṛṣṇa tells Arjuna and all of us:

'Those who always worship Me, those who always reside in Me, those who have ananyāś cintayanto - means the non-dual mood, the space of Advaita, means those who have become Me, people who have experienced eternal consciousness, those who reside in eternal consciousness - to them, I carry what they lack and I preserve what they have. I personally take care of them.'

ananyāś cintayanto mām ye janāḥ paryupāsate | teṣāṁ nityābhiyuktānāṁ yogakṣemaṁ vahāmyahaṁ || 9.22 ||

Please be very clear, no other Incarnation has revealed this truth so clearly. He says, 'If you reside in eternal consciousness, divine energy, bliss consciousness, I take care of you in all ways.'

Yoga and kṣema: 'I give them whatever they want spiritually and materially and I take care that it stays with them. I take care that nobody takes it away from them.' This is a beautiful statement and assurance. It is not only an assurance; it is a promise. Kṛṣṇa gives a promise, 'If you reside in My consciousness, if you reside in eternal consciousness, whatever you lack will be given and whatever you have will be preserved.'

The strange thing is that He says we will have everything and nothing will be lost. It is difficult to believe. At least for people trained in so-called present day education, it is difficult to believe. 'How can I have what I want by meditating?' This will be the immediate question.

Now in the modern day, especially after the breakthrough with the principles of quantum physics, science clearly proves our thoughts create the whole Universe. If we reside in Eternal Consciousness, we create our own Universe. Not only that, the Universe responds to our thoughts.

A small but important experiment report: A professor did an experiment using three rose bushes kept in different rooms. They were the same height, same kind. He entered the first room and used beautiful words, 'You are beautiful.

You are nice. You are great. Don't worry, I'll protect you. Why do you need thorns?' He gave assuring and caring words. He created a loving mood. Next, he went to the second plant. He did not do much; he looked and came back: neither negative nor positive. To the third plant, he cursed, 'What nonsense are you doing? You are ugly.' He created negative energy with his words. He continued this experiment for twenty-one days studying how plants respond to thoughts as a research. The report, the end result, is shocking. The first plant that received positive words doubled in size and had no thorns. There were no thorns on that rose plant just because he gave the assurance, 'I'll protect you. Why should you protect yourself? Don't bother. There is no need for thorns.' Can you imagine a rose plant without thorns! The second plant to which he spoke neither positive nor negative words grew just as a normal rose plant. It experienced normal growth, that's all. The third plant, to which he spoke negative words, died. Not once, but several times he repeated the same experiment in different places and in different ways. He says the third plant, that received negative thoughts, died at all times.

Sir Jagdish Chandra Bose, a Nobel Laureate, proved that plants are alive with 'feelings'. They are capable of responding to our thoughts and emotions. This experiment proves that Existence, the outer world, responds to our thoughts.

Existence responds to our thoughts. Each of us is not an island. We are not isolated. Don't think we can think whatever we want in our inner space and that our outer life will be different. Our outer life and inner life are deeply connected. If we live a spiritual life, we automatically attract only spiritual friends. Our outer world also becomes spiritual. All other relationships drop by themselves. We do not even feel like relating.

Understand, Existence responds to our thoughts. It does not need this network. People who enter spiritual life can't indulge in the same old talks. Only based on our thoughts, we create relationships, friends, society, our circle and naturally, our whole world.

See, whatever we place in front of a projector, whatever slide we position there, that will appear on the screen. If we place the slide of God, the picture of God appears on screen. If we place an actress, that actress appears on the screen. The screen represents the physical planet Earth. Whatever we keep in front of our consciousness, we project that in our life, our world and our experience. A small change in our inner space changes our whole world. The backdrop screen remains the same; however the scene changes. Similarly, if the words, thoughts and feelings in our inner space change, the whole Universe changes. The whole of Existence responds to our inner space.

Don't think that each of us is a separate island. We are part of this whole Existence. We are not alone here. If we think we are alone, we will continuously fight with Existence, with the whole Universe. We will see the rest of the Universe as an enemy. The part can never see the whole as enemy. We are a part. This is the Whole. If we see this as an enemy, we can never rest. Only a person who understands that the Whole is his own being, that he is part of the Whole, realizes tremendous relaxation and bliss.

Kṛṣṇa says beautifully: 'When you reside in My consciousness, whatever you lack, I give and whatever you have, I preserve.'

ananyāś cintayanto mām ye janāḥ paryupāsate | teṣāṁ nityābhiyuktānāṁ yogakṣemaṁ vahāmyahaṁ || 9.22 ||

Please understand, the moment we bring integrity into our thinking and complete with all our incomplete thoughts and all our negative commitments, the moment our inner space changes into the space of completion, automatically we attract good things. It is like: if we tune our television to BBC, we see the BBC channel. If we tune it to NITHYĀNANDA TV, we see the NITHYĀNANDA channel. Similarly, if we tune our consciousness to completion and bliss, continuously even material wealth will shower on us.

When you create the space of completion in you, so much of unimaginable, auspicious, and good things happen in your system which are incomprehensible. If you feel that the statement that if you acquire the space of completion in you, all your problems, externally and internally, melt away; all the moments of powerlessness, externally and internally, disappear from your life, you may think that it is too big a promise, too good to be true. It is too small a promise because, when you create the space of completion, the promise that your external and internal problems will melt away, will be only a small benefit you will be having.

We may think, 'How can this be possible? How can this happen?' It may feel it is difficult to understand. But start experimenting with creating the space of completion. But this verse is the solid truth.

A beautiful incident from the life of THE SPH BHAGAVĀN ŚRI NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM during His days of spiritual wandering:

THE SPH was staying in Haridwar at a place called Kankhal. As all leelas in the His Divine Life, BHAGAVĀN manifested this beautiful happening as a auspicious and valuable lesson for humanity to demonstrate trust in the Paramashiva even in the most dire circumstances. Every day morning, BHAGAVĀN went for alms to places where they feed monks. He used to get His food, eat two or three rotis (Hindu traditional bread) and then start meditating.

Suddenly, one day, He fell sick. He had a high temperature and diarrhea. He was unable to walk. He thought, 'What can be done? Alright! Let it be.'

Suddenly, a young sannyāsi came from nowhere and gave Him food. Not only for one day but continuously for three to four days, he came; he brought food for BHAGAVĀN ŚRI NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM. Not only food, he brought medicine also. BHAGAVĀN asked him, 'Who are you? Where have you come from?' He said, 'Oh, my name is Śaṅkar. They call me Śaṅkar Mahārāj. I stay at a nearby ashram called Sādhana Sadan.' He pointed towards a distant place and said that is where he stayed.

Everyday he brought BHAGAVĀN food and medicine till He recovered. He came for at least four days. Because he came everyday, BHAGAVĀN talked with him and they became acquainted.

BHAGAVĀN saw that he wore a beautiful pen with a diamond in it. BHAGAVĀN was surprised at how a monk got a diamond pen. He asked, 'What is this, Swami?' He said, 'This is a diamond pen. Some devotee gave it to me. It looks nice, so I wear it.'

After several days, when BHAGAVĀN's health became normal, he stopped coming. Then BHAGAVĀN thought, 'I must go and see him. Now I can walk and move, so I should go and see him.' BHAGAVĀN felt connected to him because he served BHAGAVĀN. BHAGAVĀN felt He must thank him. After a week, when BHAGAVĀN became completely alright, He started walking. He went to the ashram and asked an elderly person sitting there, 'Swamiji, I want to see Śaṅkar Mahārāj.' The Swami said, 'Śaṅkar? Who are you talking about?' I said, 'I want to see Śaṅkar, a young swami. I met him two to three days ago. He came everyday and brought me food. Is this Sādhana Sadan?' The Swami replied, 'Yes, this is Sādhana Sadan. In our ashram, there is only one Śaṅkar. Go to the temple and see. He is the only Śankar Mahāraj we have!' He pointed towards their temple.

When BHAGAVĀN entered the temple, He saw a Śiva deity as a white marble statue with a cloth draped on His upper body, and wearing the same diamond pen on Him!

Of course, tears rolled down from BHAGAVĀN's eyes. So much gratitude overflowed. Later, He asked the temple priest, 'How did this pen come to Śiva? Who put a pen on Śiva's statue?' He said, 'One week ago, a devotee came and offered the pen. It looked nice and he said it was a diamond pen. We just wanted to decorate Śiva with diamond jewelry. So we put the pen on Him.' It was the same diamond pen that BHAGAVĀN had seen on the monk who served Him.

BHAGAVĀN asked, 'Who gave a pen to Śiva?' Other jewelry, we can understand, but a pen? He replied, 'I don't know. A devotee came and offered this pen. The priest said, 'Why should a sannyāsi have a diamond pen? I will give it to God instead. So I put it on Śiva. I just inserted it into Śiva's clothes.'

He then continued, 'For the last few days all the food offering, prasād that we place in front of Him, disappears. I suspect that rats have been eating the food. So now I am careful. I sit for a while after placing the food for Śaṅkar Mahārāj.'

During the 2006 Himalayan trip BHAGAVĀN searched for this ashram and Śankar Mahāraj's temple with His devotees. After many years, it was still the same, the same temple and the same Śankar Mahāraj; but no diamond pen now.

You can experiment in your life. You may say, 'How can this be truth for us?' An ordinary mind doubts. Your consciousness, your inner space has the quality to create miracles in your lives. Miracles can happen in your life. What you need, you will receive. Continuously, miracles are happening.

Trust that your consciousness is connected to the Universe. Continuously, the Universe cares for you. The Divine waits for you. It responds to your thoughts. We create what we want. Just as we create the whole world in our dream, we have the power to create the world when we are conscious, when we are in the waking state. When we can create a world in the dream state, can't we create that in the waking state? We can do it.

Even now, we create our world. Next question, 'If we are creating our world, why do we create so many miseries?' The answer is simple. We do so because we have vested interests in our sufferings. Please be very clear. We have vested interests in our sufferings. Somewhere we feel comfortable when we suffer. So we create the whole thing.

Bliss Attracts Fortune

When our inner consciousness changes, when we reside in eternal consciousness, we automatically attract the power of coincidence. We attract the power of creating the space and causing our reality. The moment we understand, that the whole Universe is pervaded by the Existential energy of Viṣṇu, we attract Lakṣmi, Viṣṇu's Consort who represents wealth. When we understand that the whole Universe is divine, when we experience Viṣṇu, meaning when we experience eternal bliss, we attract Lakṣmi, wealth.

There is a beautiful mantra in tantra śāstras: 'ānanda kamaprānaḥ' that means 'bliss attracts fortune.' When we create a blissful inner space, automatically we attract external wealth.

What creates wealth? We need three things: clear integrated thinking, a creative authentic mind that aligns our thoughts and words, and the ability to make spontaneous decisions. The ability to respond spontaneously to any situation with the truth, that we are responsible for everything happening inside and outside us, is responsibility.

Just let your inner space be completely integrated with the words you utter. If we are able to respond spontaneously to any situation standing with the strength of integrity and authenticity, we take that responsibility. We need integrity, the power of words that brings the experience of completion with ourselves and with life. We need authenticity, the power of thinking that expresses as the peak of our creativity and the power of feeling to take responsibility. Only these three create wealth and preserve wealth.

If we enter the bliss space, if we keep our inner space blissful, if we enter into bliss consciousness, all three automatically happen to us. Automatically, these three powers: integrity, authenticity and responsibility happen to us. Then wealth will be created around us and it will also stay with us to enrich us and others. It is not that we should be showered only by a lottery. Wealth can come simply by creating a blissful inner space and such wealth stays with us, it is everlasting.

All we need to do is transform our inner space to the space of completion, the space of eternal bliss. The first thing is to understand this secret. Whether we believe it or not, it is the truth: a basic secret. Once we enter spiritual life, once we decide we want to lead a spiritual life, all our worldly things are taken care of by the Divine. It responds to whatever we need and it takes care of whatever we have.

We never perish. We continue to exist, in some form, somewhere. Even if we become enlightened, we become a pure conscious energy. We will be there, everywhere. We never die when we understand that Existence is intelligence.

We should study and understand these verses very deeply. Kṛṣṇa talks about the life that we lead now. He talks about the birth that we will take next. Understand that our present life is a result of our previous life. Whether we believe it or not, accept it or not, this is the truth. There is life after death as long as we are not enlightened.

Once we are enlightened, we merge into universal consciousness. Until then we take birth and go through the process of life and death.

Kṛṣṇa talks about the kind of life that we lead now. The last thought that we have at the time of death determines our next birth, next life. Our next life is completely dependent upon our last thought at the time of our death. If we think of money, we will be reborn as a rich man or as a dissatisfied man who always thinks about money. If we think of food, we will be reborn as a glutton or a pig. If we think of lazily relaxing, we will be reborn as a buffalo. This is the truth.

Our last thought determines our first thought in our next life. Actually we need not go to the extent of life and death. We see this in daily life itself. Our last thought affects our first thought. Every night we die and every morning we take birth. During the day, when we are in the waking state, we use our gross physical body or sthūla śarīra to carry on with our activities. When we sleep, if we have dreams, we use the subtle body or sūkṣma śarīra to travel to the places that we see in our dreams. When we are in deep sleep, when we have no dreams, then we are in our causal body or kāraṇa śarīra.

When we sleep at night, we actually change bodies. We are not aware that this happens. When we dream, we see ourselves doing various things in the dream. We run, talk, eat, and do everything in the dream. In our dream, we have created a world in which we live. If our body is on the bed, then who is this body in the dream? Our gross body is on the bed, while our subtle body is active in the dream. In the same way, the causal body is active during the deep sleep state. Now, when we sleep, we actually die and are reborn in the gross body in the morning. We see that our last thought before sleeping affects our first thought upon waking. If we come back from the office with a frustrated mood about our boss, we wake up with the same mood in the morning. If we sleep with a blissful smile on our face, we will be happy the next morning.

Do completion for forty-two minutes before you sleep every night. Always sleep in the space of completion. If you have a dreamless sleep, you will have birthless life.

Because, even to have a dream, you need incompletions. If you don't have incompletions even to have dreams, how will you have incompletions to have one more body? So, whether you are going to have a body or not, is going to be decided only based on whether you are going to have dreams at night or not. While you sleep if you have a dream, you are going to have a body after death, unless the Master interferes and liberates you. If you don't have dreams, be assured, you are already liberated, and you are going to be liberated once you leave the body completely. When we do completion every night with full awareness, we enter a meditative state. In the meditative state, we can only be blissful. When we sleep in a blissful state, we wake up in the same state. Whatever feeling we wake up with in the morning, that same feeling stays with us throughout the day.

The first thought we have in the morning stays with us throughout the day. If you wake up dull in the morning, you will be dull throughout the day. If you wake up energized, you will be active and energetic throughout the day. When you wake up, dance your way to the bathroom. Feel the toothpaste on your teeth, feel the water on your body when you bathe. Bring in full awareness to every action.

Start the day every morning with heavy yoga, heavy weight-lifting, like your whole body should really sweat. Start the day with a blissful thought. For that we must sleep in the space of completion, in a blissful mood.

Every night do completion and every morning do heavy weight-lifting and yoga. Just these two will make you enlightened. Because, every night completion will lead to Hindu mind and every morning heavy yoga will lead to yogic body. And these two will take care the whole day that you will have enlightened living. You don't need any other spiritual practice.

Exactly what happens everyday during sleep is exactly the same thing that happens during the time of death. Be very clear, the process of sleep and the process of death are not different. During the process of death, the soul passes through seven energy layers. The next body it enters depends on the vāsana, or the carried-over desires, the root patters that it comes with, from the previous life. It takes up a body that can help shed that vāsana in the next life. Our soul always tries to merge with the colorless and formless universal consciousness. However, the vāsana creates a slight tinge on the soul and it cannot completely merge with the universal consciousness. So the soul takes up another body that can help remove this tinge and help it merge.

Now it is up to us how we make use of this lifetime. We can either fulfill our unfulfilled desires of the previous life by completing with our root patterns or we can build new desires in this life and stay in the cycle of birth and death. The kind of life that the soul chooses in the next life depends entirely on the vāsana and the last thought at the time of death.

Understand that you see only this life. You may not have done any meditation in this life. But you see a deep connection with meditation because you might have meditated in your previous life. You might have been a seeker in your previous life. You see, our next life depends on our last thought in this life. That does not mean that throughout our life we can think about money and food and suddenly at the time of death, we can say, 'Rāma, Kṛṣṇa or Śiva.' If we think about money, name and fame throughout our entire life, how can we expect to think about God when we leave our body? Naturally we will only think about money.

This is what Kṛṣṇa says in the first verse. When we are continuously aware of the Existential energy, when we continuously meditate on It, when our thoughts are on it all the time, whatever we may call it: Kṛṣṇa, Rama, Buddha, Universe, Parāśakti or anything, we will have only the same thought when we leave the body also. That is enough. We will start living with this energy. And It will ensure that our next birth takes us closer to this energy and liberates us from the cycle of birth and death.

In Simplicity Lies Greatness

He says next: 'If one offers Me with love and devotion, a leaf, flower, fruit or water, I will accept it,' He says, 'The Existence, the Divine is so alive that It responds to even simple things.' Listen, He doesn't say, I accept only big things. He says, even simple things, I accept.

patraṁ puṣpaṁ phalaṁ toyaṁ yo me bhaktyā prayacchati | tadahaṁ bhaktyupahṛtam aśnāmi prayatātmanaḥ || 9.26 ||

'If one offers Me a leaf, flower, fruit or water with love and devotion, I will accept it.' This is the greatness of the Divine. The greatness of the Lord is that He is simple. Simplicity is the greatness of the Lord. Listen, simplicity is the real greatness. To be big, you don't need intelligence. Anyone can show himself as big. Simplicity is the great quality of the Divine. He says, 'Just a leaf, a flower, a fruit, a little water - simple things are enough. I accept it. I am pleased. I respond to it.' He says in the fourth verse of this chapter:

mayā tatam idam sarvaṁ jagadvyaktamūrtinā

I am all-pervading, great, ultimate, divine.

Now, He says even though He is all-pervading, even though He is big, He accepts any small thing given with love and devotion. One major problem: Even if we know somebody is big or great, we can't relate with him unless he relates with us, unless he comes down to our level. Real greatness is not only being great but he must be able to relate with everybody. Otherwise, even if he is great, what can be done about it?

Here, Kṛṣṇa creates a way, even for ordinary people to relate with Him. On the one side, He shows His greatness. He declares with authority His greatness. On the other side, He shows us how to relate with Him. He says, 'Even if you offer a leaf, flower, fruit or water with love, I accept it. I relate with it.'

That is why, from time immemorial, enlightened masters are requested to live by begging, so that people can relate with them. Even Buddha lived by begging. See, Buddha didn't beg because He wanted food. He can sit in His place and kings will bring food for Him. He comes down to beg so that we can relate with Him. We will feel He is a human being. When we give food, we talk to Him, we relate with Him, we feel that He is like us. To make us feel comfortable, He comes down to our level. Modern day psychology has a beautiful term, 'zeroing down the distance'. To zero down the distance, Buddha begs. Here Kṛṣṇa zeroes down the distance completely. The distance between the Divine and us is zeroed down. That is the next important truth Kṛṣṇa reveals.

First thing Kṛṣṇa reveals is: He proves that the whole cosmic energy, the whole Universe is intelligence. Next, the moment we understand it is intelligence, we relax from all tension, worry, fear and insecurity. He makes us understand that He is next to us and we can relate with Him easily.

See, as long as we think the world is material, matter, we feel like protecting ourselves from it. We feel that is the Whole and we are part. We fight with the Whole. That is why we feel deeply uprooted. We don't feel connected and relaxed. We don't feel homely because we fight with the Whole. The moment we understand we are part of the Whole, the Whole is the intelligence that responds to our thoughts, to our being, which responds to our consciousness, we relax into enlightenment.

Next, He says, 'When you drop yourself into the eternal consciousness, I take care of your yoga and kṣema. I take care of whatever you lack. I will supply what you lack and preserve what you have.'

Next He says, 'Even a simple leaf, water or a fruit or flower when you offer with love and devotion, I accept it.' Please be very clear, He is not asking because He doesn't have these things. When you give a pack of cookies to your child and he opens it, you say, 'Give one to mummy!' It is not that we don't have a cookie or we want it. But if the child opens the pack, picks up a cookie and gives it to us, how happy we feel! We brought the cookies. However, when the child gives it back to us, we feel beautiful. We feel connected. And we know he wants to connect and relate with us.

Similarly, when we offer something to the Divine, don't think that He does not have and so you are offering. He is the one who gives everything to us in the first place. But when we offer, we show to the Divine: I want to connect to you. We show the Master, 'Oh Lord, I want to connect to you.' And the Master feels, 'When he wants to connect to Me, let Me connect to him.' We show a green signal for the Divine to enter into our space.

Don't go to the temple empty-handed. Take at least two or three fruits. At least, take a few dollars. Take whatever you have. Always offer something to the Divine. Never think that the Divine doesn't have. By giving to the Divine, you express a willing attitude to relate with Him. When you offer it to the Divine, He accepts it and He relates. Again and again, out of His compassion Kṛṣṇa reveals truths and techniques to Arjuna to liberate him. That is the job of an Incarnation. He comes down to the Earth to liberate as many as He can. Enlightened Masters are compassionate. They want everyone to become enlightened, liberated.

In these verses, Kṛṣṇa asks Arjuna to surrender everything to Him. Surrendering to an enlightened Master, an Incarnation is the easiest way to become enlightened. Be very clear, if we can surrender completely to the Universal energy or an enlightened Master, we become enlightened. If we can surrender every action to the supreme Self, we experience a great sense of liberation.

We do not understand that by letting go, by surrendering to the Existential energy, we will be free, completely free. All our burdens will be gone. We do not realize this. All Enlightened Masters have spoken about surrender. It is the easiest way; however we make it the most difficult due to our ego.

Levels of Surrender

There are three levels in which we can surrender to the Existential energy. The first level or basic level of surrender, is that of our actions. Whatever we do, whatever our actions are, surrender them to the universal energy. All our actions, whether good or bad, when we surrender, will be taken care of. This is the basic level. Kṛṣṇa clearly says this in these verses, 'All your reactions to good and evil will be taken care of, if you offer all your actions, all your austerities to me.'

So many people offer worship every day in the temple. If they do that with the ego that they are doing it, then all they do is chant some verses mechanically and throw some flowers on the deity, that's all. When worship is done, when you chant verses, do it with full surrender to the Divine. Do it as if it were your last prayer. Feel the prayer. Put in your complete awareness and surrender it to the Divine. That should be the feeling when you do anything.

Not just prayers, everything that we do should be done with that level of surrender. When we surrender, we feel light. You see, when we surrender, our efficiency goes up. When we surrender our actions, we are not bothered about what will happen in the future. We know that now the ball is in His court; He will take care of whatever is going to happen; He knows best. When we surrender our actions, we put our entire burden on His shoulders. Whatever good or bad happens, He is now responsible and we also know that He can never do anything wrong.

The second level of surrender is that of intellect and mind. The first level is easier compared to this. Surrendering our mind is more difficult because it is not in our hands. You see, we can see our actions. We can say, 'O God, I have surrendered my actions to you.' But now will our mind keep quiet? No. It will keep saying, 'No, no, no. How can you do that? How can you not think about your future?' Our mind continuously analyzes.

Your mind analyzes great truths using its limited intellect. It thinks, 'What is He saying? Maybe it is possible for Him; but it is not for me. I can't think of completely surrendering myself to the Divine.' Your mind always looks for opportunities to hold you back. It logically analyzes using the intelligence it has.

When you surrender your mind and intellect to the universal energy, you experience great truths. When you do not surrender, your intellect continuously stops you from moving forward. Once you surrender, you experiment and you see quantum progress. You go beyond words. You start to experience.

The third and the most difficult level of surrender is that of the senses.

A beautiful incident from Mahābhārat illustrates this:

Once, Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were walking outdoors. While they walked, Kṛṣṇa suddenly pointed at a crow on the tree and told Arjuna, 'Hey Arjuna, can you see that green crow?' Arjuna replied, 'Yes Kṛṣṇa, I see it. I see the green crow.' After some time, Kṛṣṇa pointed to another crow and said, 'Arjuna, can you see that black crow?' Arjuna immediately replied, 'Yes Kṛṣṇa, I see the black crow.'

Kṛṣṇa asked Arjuna, 'Are you a fool? Earlier when I showed a green crow, you said you can see a green crow. Now when I showed a black crow, you say you can see a black crow. Are you a fool? How can a crow be green?' Arjuna replied, 'O Kṛṣṇa, I don't know all that. When you asked me to see a green crow, I saw a green crow. Now when you asked me to see a black crow, I saw a black crow.'

This is surrender of the senses. Arjuna had surrendered completely to Kṛṣṇa. He had surrendered even his senses to Kṛṣṇa. If the Master says something, the disciple takes it as it is. That is the level of surrender. When we reach this level of surrender, we are one with the Divine. The Divine takes cares of us.

Kṛṣṇa says this clearly. Every enlightened Master makes this promise. When we surrender ourselves to the Master, to the Divine, to the universal energy, it takes care of us. When we offer all our actions to the universal energy, It takes care of us. The entire burden on our shoulders is offloaded. This is the promise of every enlightened Master.

Anyone Can Reach Me

9.34 Fix your mind on Me, be devoted to Me, worship Me, and bow down to Me. Thus, uniting yourself with Me by setting Me as the supreme goal and the sole refuge, you shall certainly come to Me.

An enlightened Master wants nothing from this world. After realizing the supreme knowledge, he is beyond material pursuits, what can he want from anybody? He is here out of his compassion to awaken mankind into this reality.

A true Master is never envious of anybody. Envy enters us when we think that somebody else has something we do not have and something that we want. There is nothing wrong with desiring something because we need it. See, each one of us is born with a certain set of desires and we bring with us the energy to fulfill them also.

In this verse, Kṛṣṇa says that he does not dislike anybody. He also says that He is not partial to anyone. Normally, in our lives we are partial to those who are helpful to us. From childhood, we are taught to love those who are potentially useful in our lives, based on what we get back in return.

My Devotee Never Perishes

An enlightened Master wants nothing. He gives constantly. He radiates love because that is his true nature. He does not care who receives it; he simply gives. A river flows happily from one region to the other all the way from the hills to the ocean. It meets various kinds of stones and grass along the way. All kinds of people bathe in it; even buffaloes bathe in it. Does the river differentiate?

Does the river say, 'No, I will give water only to such and such a person?' No! A river flows continuously, happily without bothering about who comes in contact with it. The same is the case with an enlightened Master. Now Kṛṣṇa says, 'If one is engaged in devotional service, then even if he commits the most abominable actions, he is considered saintly. He quickly becomes eternal and attains eternal consciousness. O Kaunteya (son of Kuntī), declare it boldly, that My devotee never perishes.' He goes on to say that His devotee never perishes. He says, 'Not only I am declaring to you, you declare to the whole world, My devotee never perishes.' He says in the verse:

kṣipraṁ bhavati dharmātmā śaśvac-chāntiṁ nigacchati | kaunteya pratijānīhi na me bhaktaḥ praṇaśyati ||9.31 ||

'He who quickly becomes righteous and understands this truth, enters into eternal bliss, eternal consciousness, O Kaunteya; declare it boldly, pratijānīhi means 'declare it boldly', that my devotee never perishes, na me bhaktaḥ praṇaśyati.'

Understand that Existence is intelligence. You will never perish, you will never die because you will be in Existence somewhere in some form. This body may not move; however you will be there forever. When we understand the whole cosmic energy is intelligence, our whole life will be blessed with what we want. Whatever we lack will be supplied and whatever we have will be preserved. Consciously decide, 'From today I will live in the space of completion and bliss, in a blissful mood, in a blissful way, in utterly relaxed consciousness.'Yyou will attract Lakṣmī (goddess of wealth). You will attract wealth. You will create much more than a goldsmith.

When we really, intensely understand this truth that the whole Universe is energy, the whole Existence is energy, yoga (success) and kṣema (protection) happen in our life.

When we understand this truth, not only in this world, wherever we go, we are protected. We relax into the consciousness that Existence continuously protects us, takes care of us.

When we think that the Whole is our enemy, we will be continuously antagonizing it. When we understand that the Whole is our friend, we will relax and enjoy the whole of Existence. Making our life into hell or heaven is dependent upon understanding this single verse, understanding Existence and trusting it.

Understanding Rituals

The whole chapter reveals this single secret that the cosmic energy, the whole Universe is intelligence. It responds to our thoughts, again and again. It answers our dreams, our thoughts and our very consciousness.

People ask, 'Are sacrifices wrong? Is worship and sacrifice for a particular deity wrong?' No, it is not wrong; but understand that we are not worshipping or sacrificing to that one particular deity. We must go beyond that. When we make a sacrifice from our being, we merge with the Existential energy. We do not see a difference between one deity and the other. Every deity will then appear the same.

Everything is Kṛṣṇa or Rama, Śiva or Buddha. This is what Kṛṣṇa says here. He is the only enjoyer of all sacrifices. When we understand His transcendental nature in everything around us, any small thing that we give from our whole being to even a rock becomes a sacrifice. That rock need not be carved into a statue of Kṛṣṇa or Śiva. We need not name it because we see the energy behind that rock.

These two verses must be carefully understood. If not, they can be conveniently used as a justification to do whatever one wants. See, Kṛṣṇa does not give a license to do whatever we want here. There is a deeper layer of operation called Consciousness. In Consciousness, we become spontaneous. When consciousness flowers, we know what is the context, what needs to be done at that point in time. When this happens, whatever is done is for the good of everyone. Even if an action seems to violate the norms of society, it is always for the good of humanity. Kṛṣṇa killing demons may appear like the act of a criminal. Yet He established truthfulness and justice by doing it.

When devotion matures, consciousness flowers. Devotion may seem different from knowledge when it is not ripe. Kṛṣṇa says that His devotee never perishes. Devotion is not simply offering worship daily to Kṛṣṇa's photo, lighting camphor, lamps and offering garlands. When one is a true devotee of Kṛṣṇa, he becomes Kṛṣṇa. He experiences Kṛṣṇa consciousness. The ultimate consciousness is where no good, bad, evil or virtue exists.

Devotion, knowledge and wisdom appear to be different when they are not ripe. When they mature, they become the same. One experiences true wisdom at the peak of devotion or peak of knowledge. The last two verses can be misunderstood if misinterpreted. Kṛṣṇa says, 'Anyone can reach Me through devotion, whether they are women, traders or workers, or even sinners.' He makes a point that there is no pre-qualification. Even in the age of Kṛṣṇa, there was a distinction between various trades as well as between men and women.

In the Hindu system, the caste system was a scientific practice to enable each one's potential to radiate. The varṇa or caste system practiced by Hindus from time immemorial had its roots in the gurukul education. Actually varṇa meant vocation, which was determined by the Master for each child. It was not based upon birth as birthright, rather it was based upon aptitude. Unfortunately, over time this practice became a birthright. This corruption of such a scientific practice has led to many social inequalities and injustices. The son of a brāhmaṇa has no right to call himself a brāhmaṇa, unless he has the aptitude and the learning to be a teacher and a priest. The point Kṛṣṇa makes here is that irrespective of caste, a person who has faith and devotion to Him can attain Him. Even if a person does not lead the life of a brāhmaṇa, he can reach and experience the ultimate consciousness. A person may follow any profession; however, if his inner space is cleansed, he can attain and experience Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

Now, a brāhmaṇa is exposed to the scriptures and is trained to attain the knowledge of the ultimate Truth. He is exposed to the atmosphere that is conducive for meditation and other spiritual practices in the ashram. How much easier it is for a brāhmaṇa! See, if Kṛṣṇa is so accessible for anybody, then imagine how much more accessible He is for a person constantly engaged in His thoughts!

Always Think of Me

In the last verse of this chapter Kṛṣṇa says, 'Engage your mind, always thinking of Me.' Please understand that the whole Universe, the whole Cosmos is intelligence and it responds to our thoughts, it responds to our consciousness, to our very being.

man-manā bhava mad-bhakto mad-yājī māṁ namaskuru | mām evaiṣyasi yuktvaivam ātmānaṁ mat-parāyaṇaḥ || 9.34 ||

Integrity does not mean only fulfilling the word you utter in front of people. Integrity is honoring the words and thoughts that happen inside you, even when you are in your bedroom or bathroom. For example, suppose you utter a word, 'I commit with me that I will do morning yoga properly.' Then, you should give your life to fulfill it. Listen, the commitment you make to others is word, the commitment you make to yourself is thought.

See, our inner space reflects the outer incidents. The entire Universe responds beautifully to each and every thought. That is why it is so important to keep our inner space cleansed and complete. The thought patterns that happen inside can be cleansed with integrity and kept in the space of positivity. When the thought patterns are positive, only positive incidents are attracted.

Take the words you utter in your inner space very seriously. The most powerful being in your life is telling you, 'tathāstu! tathāstu (so be it)!' to whatever words you utter. Who is that being? You! He is sitting inside you as the antaryāmi (inner being) and saying 'tathāstu! tathāstu! tathāstu!' to whatever you utter.

If you utter the words, 'I am the most healthiest person,' the innermost being says, 'tathāstu! tathāstu!' If you think, 'I am sick, I have back pain. I cannot do this, I cannot do that. I am broke. I am really having tiredness. And if I can do the work, they will exploit me.' Then, your being inside says, 'tathāstu! tathāstu!'When Kṛṣṇa says, 'Engage your mind in always thinking of Me,' He speaks about cleansing the inner space. When our mind is engaged in thinking of the Divine, we become divine. The moment we understand this, we relax into eternal bliss. The moment we relax into eternal bliss, the Divine takes care of us. Whatever we lack is brought to us and whatever we have is preserved for us. Naturally, we will experience, enjoy and enrich both the inner space and the outer space. This is the ultimate secret that Kṛṣṇa reveals to Arjuna.

Thus ends the ninth chapter named Rājavidyā Rājaguhya Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Supreme Knowledge and Supreme Secret,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Vibhūti Yogaḥ

You Are The Ultimate

This chapter, the tenth chapter of the Bhagavad Gītā, is called Vibhūti Yogaḥ, the yoga of divine manifestations. In this chapter, Kṛṣṇa explains His glories.

In the last chapter, Kṛṣṇa gave the technique or the understanding of feeling deeply connected with the Whole, with Existence. He told Arjuna that He is revealing the greatest of all secrets to him because Arjuna is His dear friend. Now He explains the next step. He goes on at length and in great detail explaining how He is the ultimate and how He expresses Himself.

An enlightened being has no identity. His only identity is the merged identity with the Universe. When Kṛṣṇa, the ultimate Master, talks about Himself in this chapter, He talks from the perspective of Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, the cosmic Kṛṣṇa and not Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa, the son of Vasudeva, the embodied Kṛṣṇa. The entire Gītā is delivered from Kṛṣṇa's cosmic consciousness.

In this chapter especially, He is at the peak of His cosmic consciousness, before He reveals Himself as that consciousness to Arjuna in the next chapter.

Every word that the great Jagadguru, the universal Master utters here, is a gift to Arjuna and to humanity. The verses in this chapter are the authority on which the Bhagavad Gītā rests. It is these verses that make the Gītā, a sacred scripture.

Because You Are My Dear Friend

10.1 Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says: Listen carefully again, Oh mighty-armed Arjuna! Because you are My dear friend, I shall speak further on the supreme knowledge for your welfare.

A Master's relationship with his disciple is in many forms. Usually it is described in five forms.

The most basic relationship between a Master and disciple is that of a Master and a servant, dāsa bhāva. The relationship of Hanumān with Rāma represents this type. Another is the relationship of a mother with her child, vātsalya bhāva, as in the case of Yaśodā to infant Kṛṣṇa. The third is the relationship of a child with the mother, mātru bhāva, like the relation of Ramakrishna to Ma Kālī. The fourth relationship is that of friendship, sakha bhāva, feeling that the Master is the closest friend. The fifth is that of the beloved, madhura bhāva, like the relationship of Radhā to Kṛṣṇa.

Here, Kṛṣṇa refers to the fourth relationship, sakha bhāva, as exemplified by His friendship with Arjuna. He is the Master to His disciple Arjuna as well as Arjuna's friend.

Usually, as an individual ego, we see the Whole as our enemy. We are like small waves in a big ocean. However, suddenly, the wave starts thinking that the ocean is its enemy. When it is created, while it exists or when it drops, the wave is connected to the ocean. However, the wave thinks that it is in some way different from the ocean. Not only that, the wave starts fighting with the ocean. For the wave to realize that it is fully connected to the ocean, it must be consumed by the ocean. The ego must dissolve. The individual identity of the wave must disappear. This is the first step to Enlightenment.

We live in the illusion of our self-created identities. Each wave relates to another wave but not to the ocean. It adopts another wave as its father, mother, wife or child and relates with them. However, ultimately, each one of these related waves disappears into the ocean just like the wave itself.

If we look at the human body, we can see this oneness so beautifully exemplified. The human body consists of trillions of cells living in total harmony. The individual cell, though it has intelligence by itself, can survive even if its center, the nucleus, which is considered the central intelligence of the cell, is removed. However, when it is a part of the whole body, it is not the intelligence of the individual cell alone that is at work, but the collective intelligence of the body-mind system that governs. This collective intelligence ensures that this remarkable system of the human body-mind works smoothly.

Enlightened people think they are ordinary and unenlightened people think they are extraordinary. When we feel that we have undergone maximum suffering, our ego feels good; we feel we are extraordinary. Only when our enemy is big, we feel big. When our enemy is small, we feel small. For the same reason, if our suffering is big, we feel good and our ego is satisfied. We measure life by the amount of our suffering. That is why we constantly torture others as well as ourselves.

Because of our ego, we think that we are extraordinary and that a lot of things happen in this world because of us. We are all unique creations of Existence but we are not responsible for the world. The wave cannot attribute to itself the power of the ocean. It must realize that it is a part of the ocean. Instead, if it tries to separate itself from the ocean, it is a futile effort. Please be very clear that the world does not run because of us. It runs in spite of us! Fifty years before our birth, don't you think the world was running as it is now? Fifty years hence, do you think the world will stop because you are not here?

A proverb says that if the cat closes its eyes, it thinks the whole world has become dark. It thinks because it can't see the world for those few moments, no one can see it either.

We are waves of the Divine. We are part of this Whole. We cannot be an isolated existence. We exist in the cosmic Whole just as the wave exists in the vast expanse of the ocean. The ego gives us the feeling that we are individual, separate and isolated whereas the reality is that we are a part of this Existence, in It and supported by It.

Existence Is Your Friend

There are two ways in which we can live. First, we can embrace and welcome reality, in which case our ego or root pattern must dissolve because only then can we face reality. Please understand that this reality is God. God is not some entity hidden in some remote corner of the Universe or in the sky. He is the reality around us.

God is not remote, He is immediate. It is unfortunate that this word God is destroyed by the remote meaning of some old man with a long beard sitting in some remote heaven or hell. God is immediate. Divine is immediate.

The second way of living is how most of us live: We create a shell, a dream world around ourselves to defend a false ego which has no substance in reality. This is what is meant by māyā, illusion. Since we are hidden in this capsule of our unreal world with our ego as the center, we cannot feel the immediate presence of God, who is actually the closest to us.

The prāṇa (vital energy), the air that we breathe, which is going inside our body and coming out, is not our property. It is the property of Existence. We do not need air to survive. We need prāṇa to survive. Constantly, we take prāṇa through the air from the Cosmos. If the incoming breath carries more prānā than the outgoing breath, we are going towards life. Then, we expand, we strengthen our body, our energy. If the outgoing breath carries more prānā than the incoming breath, be very clear, we are going towards death. Understand that whatever we think of as our being cannot function, if prāṇa doesn't go in and come out.

Again and again, we think that we end where the physical boundary of our body ends and anything outside that boundary constitutes the external world. This physical boundary is not our boundary. We think that whatever is outside the physical boundary of our body constitutes Existence and that it is our enemy.

Since you consider Existence to be your enemy, you continuously try to protect yourself from others. Look at yourself carefully and you will notice that you always look at people with the attitude, 'Why has he come? What is he going to take from me? How will he exploit me?'

Continuously, you are in a protective mood, trying to protect yourself from others. This is because you feel threatened by the Existence of the other. The moment you think Existence or the Whole is your enemy, you become defensive. Defending is a polite word for offending. All over the world, the military forces of all countries are called defensive armies. Then who is offending? Every country claims that its army is an army for defending itself. Then who is really offending? When you feel the Whole is your enemy, that everybody except you is your enemy, you spy continuously and fight constantly. The fighting mood creates an increasingly violent feeling in you, with more and more restlessness.

The first thing Kṛṣṇa teaches as rājavidya rājaguhyaṁ (secret of all secrets), is that Existence is not your enemy. It responds to your thoughts. It continuously cares for you. It is intelligence. If you live with the attitude of enmity with the Whole, even when you live, you will constantly be tortured. When you live with the feeling of friendliness or sakha bhāva, with the attitude that Existence is your friend, that Existence is your own, you feel a deep easiness. We need to realize that we are part of the same energy system as the Universe. Hindu scriptures describe the five energy elements that comprise Nature: earth, water, fire, air and ether. The human system is a combination of the same elements as the Universe, so are all beings, inanimate and animate. Above all, more than the easiness, you will feel deeply connected to Existence. Even if the wave thinks that it is different from the ocean and starts defending itself from the ocean, ultimately it will fall into the ocean, however much it tries to defend itself. By its very nature, the wave starts in the ocean, exists in the ocean and falls into the ocean. If it understands that it is a part of the ocean, it will be utterly relaxed. It will live a blissful life. If it fights the fact, it will fight with the ocean. But eventually it has to fall into the ocean.

The ultimate secret that Kṛṣṇa wants to reveal is that Existence, Parāśakti, Brahman, is your friend, not your enemy. It is intelligence and it responds to your thoughts. This is the first understanding.

Next, in this chapter, Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am That.' He says, 'I am the whole of Existence.' In the next chapter, He gives the experience of the cosmic consciousness to Arjuna. These chapters lead Arjuna step-by-step to an elevated consciousness.

In the previous chapter, rājavidya rājaguhyaṁ yogaḥ Kṛṣṇa says, 'Drop your enmity with Existence, against the universal energy, Brahman and ātman.' In this chapter, Vibhūti Yogaḥ, He says, 'I am the same energy. Not only you don't need to have enmity, you can have deep love.' Now, He explains how to feel connected to Existence. In the next chapter, Viśvarūpa Darśana Yoga, He gives the cosmic experience to Arjuna that He is in the whole cosmic consciousness.

First, He removes enmity, then, He creates the feeling of connectedness, deep friendliness. Finally, He gives the advaitic (non-dual) experience. These three chapters lead Arjuna step-by- step. They elevate Arjuna from a low level to a higher level.

Let us study this scripture, Yogaśāśtra, with intense devotion and deep sincerity. Along with Arjuna, we will grow into completion. We will not miss it.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'For your benefit, because you are My dear friend, I shall speak to you further, giving knowledge that is better than what I have already explained.' Kṛṣṇa explains His glory not for His own sake but for Arjuna's sake. Kṛṣṇa does not explain His glory to show His ego.

Understand an important thing: The ego of the king is based upon how many people accept him as king. Suddenly, if all his citizens are taken away from him, what will happen to his kingdom? He will lose the base, he will lose the very idea of kinghood. His ego will be totally shaken.

Glory of Ātmajñāna (Knowledge of the Self)

A beautiful happening:

A great saint called Dakṣiṇāmūrti Swamigal lived in Tamil Nadu. He lived the life of a Paramahamsa (enlightened one). The sky was all that covered his body. He never wore clothing. He lived like a child, in bliss.

One day a king came to meet him. Swami was sitting under a big tree meditating blissfully. The king expected Swami to stand up and receive him with respect. Swami however did not bother. The king egoistically said, 'What! You are an ordinary beggar. I am a king. Don't you know how to respect me?'

The Swami laughed and said, 'Actually, you are the beggar. You are begging respect from me. You feel respected only when somebody gives you respect. However, I don't feel respected when somebody gives me respect nor do I feel disrespected when somebody doesn't give me respect. Whether somebody respects me or not, it is not in any way related to my consciousness. I do not ask you why you are not respecting me.'

Then he continued, 'Your personality or ego could be shaken if your army and all your ministers leave you. Oh king, your being is dependent upon somebody else.'

That is why it is said that when Buddha begged for alms, He looked like a king and the kings looked like beggars! Outward possessions cannot make us regal. The inner bliss that radiates makes us regal.

Dakṣiṇāmūrti Swamigal says, 'You are a king as long as your citizens accept you. So naturally, directly or indirectly, you will be begging your citizens to accept you because your consciousness is dependent upon them. In my case, whether somebody accepts or not, I am blissful. I am a Paramahamsa. My Paramahamsa-hood can never be taken away from me. But your kinghood can be taken away from you. So, be sure that the moment you ask for respect, you are a beggar. I am not.'

A clear truth is that the person whose ego is fed by more and more citizens is a politician. He is an egoistic person. But an enlightened man reveals himself for the sake of the disciple's understanding. Here, Kṛṣṇa does not speak about Himself out of ego. Whether Arjuna accepts it or not, Kṛṣṇa is Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa was in a blissful state even before Arjuna became His disciple. Kṛṣṇa will be in a blissful state even after Arjuna becomes His disciple. Irrespective of whether Arjuna is His disciple or not, Kṛṣṇa is in the same blissful consciousness. Even when Arjuna was talking to Kṛṣṇa in a friendly way, He was humble. Kṛṣṇa responded to Arjuna in the same way that Arjuna spoke to Him. Kṛṣṇa is simple and humble. Before the Gītā started, at the time of the Gītā and after the Gītā, Kṛṣṇa is the same, eternally. Only Arjuna undergoes a tremendous change.

Here, Kṛṣṇa does not explain His glories out of ego. He explains so that Arjuna will understand, intranalyze and experience Him. When Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am,' He means the cosmic consciousness, the egoless being and the enlightened energy. Again and again, He expresses the glory of enlightenment, the glory of ātmajñāna (knowledge of the Self). That is why He is so complete and confident. With such clarity, with such integrity and authenticity, He explains, 'I am Everything.' Even to utter these words, you need courage. No normal man can say, 'I am God' to somebody else. If he does, the next day he will be in a mental asylum with a special seat reserved for him.

Here, Kṛṣṇa is courageous enough to declare and the person who is listening experiences it. What is the science? What does it take for an enlightened man to declare himself as enlightened, as Incarnation and as God, Bhagavān? What do we need as a disciple to experience that as the truth? Many hundreds of enlightened Masters declare this truth again and again. Sometimes the people who listen to them become enlightened like Arjuna or Vivekananda. Sometimes the disciple is hurt and disturbed by the statement and abuses the Master.

Śrī Ramakrishna said, 'The one who came as Rāma, who came as Kṛṣṇa, is residing in this body as Ramakrishna.' He boldly declared this, not when he was healthy, but when he was suffering from throat cancer. These words did something in Vivekananda. It was then that Narendra became Vivekananda.

When Kṛṣṇa declared, 'I am God,' Arjuna became enlightened. How? What do you need to create this experience?

Trust God has Intelligence and Surrender

See, be very clear that the experiences of Kṛṣṇa, Śiva, Buddha and Mahāvīra, are all one and the same. As the enlightenment experience, it is the same. When they express the enlightenment, why are there different reactions? When they express their enlightenment and declare their divinity, some people become enlightened and some run away.

How can we also become enlightened when we listen to Kṛṣṇa's words? How can we listen? How can we have that benefit? With what mood are we supposed to receive the words?

When people who hear this declaration of truth, vibhūti, the glory, are egoistic and aggressive, they abuse the Master. If they are egoistic but not aggressive, they run away.

Next, Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa's disciple, is totally in love with Kṛṣṇa. He has totally surrendered to Kṛṣṇa. He is not ready to suspect anything. By now, he is clear. His head has stopped working. His logic has stopped analyzing.

This truth should be declared only to a person who is totally, intimately related and feeling connected to the Divine. Arjuna has completely surrendered to Kṛṣṇa. What is surrender? When we hear the word 'surrender', we think that it is the easiest thing to do since we don't need to do anything. For example, if we meditate, we need to do something. But if we need to surrender, we think we don't need to do anything. Hence, we think it is easy.

This is because we think about surrender in a totally different way compared to what the Masters mean by the word 'surrender'. When we use the word 'surrender', we only say that we have surrendered. We do not really surrender.

Our faith and surrender are mere words. We delude ourselves thinking we have surrendered. In fact, we have not. Our faith, our surrender is never total surrender. There are three levels of surrender: Surrendering the 'I,' surrendering the mind, and finally, surrendering both the 'I' and the mind. Surrendering the 'I' is surrendering the individual ego. Surrendering the mind is surrendering the mental setup, the root thought patterns.

When you truly surrender to the Divine, surrender can work miracles on you. When you offer yourself at the feet of the Master, your ego disintegrates. The mind is just your collection of all thoughts and habit that you have formed. For example, if you get up in the morning, your mind instinctively tells you that you need your morning coffee since that is a habit. Similarly, if you are constantly worried, it becomes a habit and you worry in every situation without realizing it. When someone praises you, you choose to get flattered. If someone criticizes you, you choose to get disturbed. The mental pattern has been etched so deeply that you don't realize that it is you, who is making the choice of how to react. When you surrender, you cannot choose. When you surrender, you cannot choose to react. When you surrender, the egocentric 'I' totally disintegrates. Please understand: The egocentric 'I' is eccentric.

When you surrender, you will be bubbling with joy and bliss. You will be like a kid. Have you seen an ugly child? Even in the poorest country, the kids are beautiful. On the same count, have you seen a single adult who is beautiful? Enlightened people are like children, bubbling with bliss. They are called dvijā (born again). After the death of the ego, it is a new birth. The father and mother give us our first birth. The second birth is given by God and the Guru.

If you understand that Existence is your friend and it deeply cares for you, you will not feel the need to live according to a script for life. Instead, you will have tremendous courage and trust in yourself to live life spontaneously. Then, instead of re-living life and reacting to life based upon past memories and experiences, you live life with spontaneous responses to situations. If you live in a simple way, you don't need a script.

Please understand, Existence constantly cares for you. Trust the intelligence in you. Be complete and welcome life as it flows.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'If you continuously merge in Me, I will take care of all your needs and necessities. You will be My responsibility.' In the last chapter Kṛṣṇa promises: yogakṣemaṁ vahāmyahaṁ: My responsibility is Yoga - to get the things that you need - and kṣema - to take care that they remain with you. Yogakṣemaṁ: He makes this promise. He says, 'I will take care of you spiritually and materially. You shall not lack anything. You will always be in bliss.' You may wonder how this is possible. When you surrender to the Divine, your higher consciousness will be activated and you will have the intelligence and courage to live everything. The ultimate intelligence is first understanding that Existence cares for us, and secondly, surrendering to that Existence. Realizing that Existence is not a brute force or power but an intelligent energy, is the key to a life of bliss.

When we surrender the mind, we go from 'mind' to 'no-mind' state. The mind actually arises from possessiveness. Tantra says that the ego is based upon possessions. Look deeply and we will see that the origin of our mind lies in whatever we think of as ours. Our idea of 'mine' creates the sense of 'I'. Most of us think that from 'I,' the 'mine' arises. No! It is from the sense of 'mine' that 'I' arises. The root of the tree of 'I' is 'mine'.

We think that if we have more possessions, we have more freedom. Yes, we will have more freedom, but only the freedom to choose between one suffering and another suffering. We can never choose between suffering and joy through possessiveness. How can we enjoy something with the feeling of possessiveness? We will be in constant fear of losing our possessions. The feeling of 'mine' never lets us enjoy anything.

Just understand. When we surrender ourselves to Existence, it carries us in Its very arms. We won't feel the pain of life. But if we try to calculate things after saying that we have surrendered, we project our mind onto the idea of what will happen after surrender. When we say that we have surrendered, how can we say that nothing has happened in spite of our surrender? If we have truly surrendered, we have no right to expect something to happen after we have surrendered.

Just surrender everything, not only your pain and suffering but also your responsibility. This does not mean that you stop doing household work or going to office. You continue to do so but with the mood of utter relaxation. Surrendering yourself is a clear, conscious decision.

Total surrender with total responsibility is Living Enlightenment. If we look into our lives, we see that our relating with God is never true surrender. Most of the time, we beg God to give us what we want. The next stage is when we bargain: If you give me this, I will give you that. The third stage is blaming God: I went to this temple so many times; yet, God has not listened to me. Understand, we don't have the intelligence to know what we want. If God were to listen to our requests and desires, this world would have perished a long time ago! This game of begging, bargaining and blaming in the name of praying has nothing to do with true devotion.

There is a beautiful story in the Mahābhārat:

Before the war started, Duryodhana and Arjuna went to Kṛṣṇa's palace to seek help from Kṛṣṇa for the war. Both of them were relatives of Kṛṣṇa and wanted Kṛṣṇa's help. Kṛṣṇa was sleeping. Arjuna, the Pāṇḍavas' representative, sat at the feet of Kṛṣṇa. Duryodhana, the Kauravas' representative, sat near the head of Kṛṣṇa.

The moment Kṛṣṇa opened His eyes, He saw Arjuna sitting at His feet. He asked him, 'How are you, Arjuna? When did you come? Arjuna said, 'I have come to seek your help.' Kṛṣṇa smiled and assured him, 'Surely I will help, don't worry.'

Duryodhana, who was sitting at the head of the bed, demanded from Kṛṣṇa, 'I came before Arjuna. You should help me first.' Kṛṣṇa turned and saw Duryodhana.

Kṛṣṇa replied, 'Surely I will help, don't worry.' He added, 'I will be on one side and My powers will be on the other side. And I will not raise weapons in this war. As Arjuna first came in front of Me, he gets to choose, first. Which one do you want, Arjuna?'

Arjuna thought, 'Let us have buddhi (intelligence).' He was happy to have just Kṛṣṇa, Nārāyaṇa on his side. Duryodhana thought, 'Let us have śakti (power).' He replied, 'I will have your powers and weapons, Nārāyaṇi senā.' Obviously, the Pāṇḍavas were the ones who won the war. If you have a Master like Kṛṣṇa with you, you can conquer even Duryodhana's sena (army). You can win any number of warriors. All the warriors of the Kauravas' side are your sufferings, your root thought patterns, your 'mine' and 'I'. Kṛṣṇa alone is enough. He will finish them off. But, when you don't have Kṛṣṇa on your side, any struggle you try to do, any plan you try to do, it will be failure. There are only two possibilities: either you choose Nārāyaṇa or you choose Nārāyaṇi senā, either you are in peace or in piece-piece. You can bring peace to you or piece-piece to you.

The man who chose intelligence, the man who trusted God, had intelligence, had peace and won the war. Arjuna won the game of life. He had Nārāyaṇa, God Himself who is the source of all the powers, the source of Nārāyaṇi senā. The man who chose just the power was in piece-piece. Duryodhana neither remained with power nor with God.

If we look deeply into what kind of a relationship we have with God, we will see that when we pray, we think that God has the power, śakti to give but He does not have the intelligence or wisdom, buddhi to know what to give. This is what we believe when we insist that He gives us what we want right now.

If we trust God has only power, śakti, we never win in life. When we trust He also has intelligence, buddhi, we surrender. Only then things can start happening. When we surrender, we believe that God has power and intelligence. When we believe God has only power, religion starts. When we believe He has wisdom, spirituality starts.

When we believe He has only power, we do rituals and pamper Him. We start doing all possible things to continuously bribe Him to give us what we want. We go to the temple and tell the priest not only our name but our father's name, our forefathers' names, and so on. Do we think God doesn't know where we are from and who we are?

Understand, your whole life is nothing but Mahābhārat. In your life of Mahābhārat, victory or failure, who is going to win or lose is going to be decided only based on which side you are going to side; whether you are going to side your Consciousness or your unconsciousness, your Completion or incompletion. Listen, whichever side Kṛṣṇa sided would have won the game. Kṛṣṇa is Consciousness. Kṛṣṇa is Completion.

Decide consciously that from this moment, you will surrender everything at the feet of God, to the energy that runs this whole world. We don't need to believe in any name or form. Trust the energy pervading the Universe and trust it to run your life.

Now, even after we surrender, at some time, a doubt will naturally arise in us whether we have totally, actually surrendered. Understand that the divine intelligence gave us the intelligence to surrender in the first place and that same divine intelligence has given us this doubt to doubt our surrender. Surrender the doubt also at the feet of the divine energy.

So, do not wait to change and become perfect before surrendering. No! Surrender yourself as you are, consciously, totally. Surrender deeply and your whole being will be flooded with new bliss.

True Love Is Divinity

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Because you are My dear friend, you are deeply connected to Me, I am revealing this truth to you.'

bhūya eva mahā-bāho śṛṇu me paramaṁ vacaḥ | yat te 'haṁ prīyamāṇāya vakṣyami hita-kāmayā || 10.1 ||

Actually, when we feel deeply connected to some person, the person will almost look like God. Whether it is our spouse, kids, parents or our Master, he will look like God. Whatever he does, we will feel that he is divine.

When we feel deeply connected, when we are in love with another being, that other being will look almost like God. Look at the great Mīrābāi. She was so much in love with Kṛṣṇa who was not even physically in front of her. Yet, she felt so deeply connected to Him. She talked to Him, sang His praises and became totally immersed in Him. When Mirābāi was given poison, she even drank that, totally surrendering herself to Kṛṣṇa. The power of her love and devotion was such that even a deadly poison had no effect on her.

We have forgotten how to connect through the heart. All our relationships have become superficial. Now, the wife is no more a wife. In the modern day society, the husband is no more a husband. He is just a boyfriend.

Be very clear: In Sanskrit, we don't have an equivalent word for divorce. The idea never existed. In Hindu marriage, no divorce is allowed. Both take an oath in front of agni (fire), 'As long as you are alive, as long as I am alive, I will support and enrich you.' With the cultural invasion of the so-called developed cultures, the materialistic cultures, changing the wife, house and car has now become a fashion. Once in three months, the house, car and wife become outdated.

The outer world is a projection of the inner world and the eye projects it. Whatever is visible as the outer world is a mere projection. We try without success to change things in the outer world. Our frustration and depression are due to our attempt to manipulate the screen rather than the projector.

In Sanskrit, we have two beautiful words: pravṛitti and nivṛitti. Pravṛitti means the incompletions that you carry, leading you to more and more incompletions. The incompletion you carry makes you do many actions, which lead you to do more and more incompletions. That is pravṛitti. Nivṛitti means the completion that you carry, leading you to more and more completion. Your actions should be nivṛitti based not pravṛitti based.

You need to change the state of incompletion to completion. When you begin to change the state, you work directly with the projector and make progress from completion to more completion, nivṛitti. Working with the projector is the process of completion.

But changing your status is like working with the screen and associating with your incompletions that lead to more incompletions, pravṛitti. Changing your wife, your house or car is like working with the screen and it does not enrich you. Changing your mind by completing with your patterns, your relationships and therefore your fantasies is the only way. Your actions should be nivṛitti based not pravṛitti based.

When we don't pass judgment on life, on others and on us, we reach the state of nonresistance, the state of completion, the state of compassion. When intelligence happens, we reach the stage of non-resistance leading to completion. When we welcome people and situations from the space of completion, compassion happens. Beloved means being loved, not 'body love.'

What is the difference between intellect and intelligence? Intellect is always prejudiced. Intelligence is always fresh. When we pass judgment and collect evidence to substantiate our decision, it is intellect. When we first collect evidence and pass judgment without bias or prejudice, it is intelligence.

Look into your life and see how your mind works out of incompletions and creates conflicting images about you, about others, and about life. How do you act in your daily life? The vast majority of the time, your judgment is ready. For example, after living with your wife for a few months, you create a concept, an inadequate life image or svānyakāra about her. Then, whatever she does, you pick only those arguments that are necessary for your already formed judgment.

Whenever we think too much of ourselves, we believe only in our judgments and lay the blame on others. When we start completing with ourselves and others, we create a new inner image about ourselves, a new mamakāra. We understand that we are simple, complete beings, we start seeing the arguments clearly before passing judgment and restore our integrity and authenticity.

Actually, we have forgotten how to relate through the heart, the intense way of relating. Our relationships have become superficial. We don't really know the meaning of the term, 'falling in love.'

Whenever Ramakrishna worshipped, did pūjā, he felt that Devi was present. He never felt that the statue was a stone. He spoke to Kāli Devi directly. When we deeply fall in love, even a stone can become God and guide us. When we don't feel connected, even if God comes down, we will ask for His business card.

A beautiful happening from Śrī Ramakrishna's life: Śrī Ramakrishna was the priest in the Devi temple. He used to taste the food before offering it to Devi. All the temple authorities told him, 'No! You cannot do this. That is sacrilegious.'

Ramakrishna said, 'I don't know all these things. I feel that She is my Mother. How can I offer the food unless I know that it tastes good? And if you don't want me to offer, I will stand outside and offer. But, I will offer.'

They agreed, 'Alright, do whatever you want.' Not only that, when he decorated the idol of Devi, he placed a small thread near Her nose to see whether She was breathing or not, alive or not. And the history says, the thread moved due to Devi's breath. He felt Devi everywhere.

When we feel deeply connected, when we know how to surrender, then even a stone can become God and guide us.

Feel Deeply Connected to Kṛṣṇa

Now, all we need is the mood of being deeply in love with Kṛṣṇa, deeply connected to Kṛṣṇa, deeply related to Kṛṣṇa. If we can open ourselves to Kṛṣṇa when He describes His glories, His vibḥūti, it will not be words. We will feel it.

First, Kṛṣṇa removed the enmity between jivātma (Self) and paramātma (supreme Self). Arjuna is the jivātma. Kṛṣṇa is the paramātma.

We may not be aware but we continuously maintain enmity with paramātma, Existence. That is why we suspect life. We have fear about what will happen in the next moment. We are afraid of life because we don't believe what is going to happen the next moment will enrich us. We don't trust Existence.

All life insurance policies are only because we don't trust Existence. Understand that life insurance is not life insurance. It is death insurance. Real life insurance is devotion to the Ultimate. Understanding that Existence is taking care of us is the only real life insurance. All other things are death insurance that goes to our families who are waiting for it.

One more thing: When we have the deep love, the connection with Existence, even when we die, we know that He knows where to keep us. We will be utterly relaxed as we know He will protect and guide us. So now itself, our mind should be prepared to fall in tune with this energy; to obey, to surrender to the ultimate will. Now itself, our body and mind should be prepared. If we live life fighting with Existence, our life will be hell. Nothing else can be done. All we need to do is know how to feel connected.

First, Kṛṣṇa removes the enmity between the individual Self and Existence. Now, He explains the glory of Existence. Next, He gives the experience that the individual Self and the supreme Self are the same.

Step-by-step, He leads Arjuna from viśiṣiṭādvaita (a school of thought which says that the individual self is a part of Existence, with its own attributes) to dvaita (duality, a school of thought which says that the individual self is separate from Existence), to advaita (non-duality, the truth that the individual self is Existence), to beyond advaita into anubhūti, experience. He leads Arjuna to a spiritual experience step-by-step. The three essential identities in our lives are: jīva, individual Self; jagat, the world in which this self lives, and Iśvara, creator of jīva and jagat, or in other words God.

Initially, we see these three as separate entities, just as the water drop sees itself as separate from the ocean. There are different approaches in Hindu philosophy as to how the individual Self can reach the Creator, the Divine. The concepts of viśiṣiṭādvaita and dvaita are based on a separation between the Self and the Creator, with deep devotion connecting the two. Devotion leads the Self to the Divine and an understanding of the Divine. Yet they remain separate. It is like the water drop realizing it is part of the ocean and yet separate.

Advaita philosophy integrates the Self and the Creator into one non-dual entity, of which jagat, the world, forms a part. So the three seemingly separate entities merge into oneness. Advaita says that separation is an illusion, māyā, and that true realization of the non-dual aspect of the Self and the Divine leads to liberation and Enlightenment. These are different ways of looking at the same truth. None of them is wrong.

Kṛṣṇa leads Arjuna from the concept of separation into the understanding of integration. Kṛṣṇa makes Arjuna understand that nothing stands between him and Kṛṣṇa, except his level of understanding of the space of completion.

Please be very clear: These are not contradictory. Many people ask, 'Is dvaita or advaita right? Is viśiṣiṭādvaita or dvaita right?' They are not contradictory. They complement each other. They lead us step-by-step to more and more understanding of completion. They lead us step-by-step to the ultimate spiritual experience.

Completion makes us understand that we are connected with the whole Universe – this is the essence of viśiṣṭādvaita. Completion makes us understand that we are deeply connected to the paramātma (supreme Self) - this is the essence of dvaita. Completion makes us understand that we are not one, but we are the ultimate infinity with each one infinitely powerful, which is the essence of advaita.

All enlightened Masters speak the same thing in different ways. If we surrender, we will have the same experience of advaita-anubhav, non-duality experience. If we achieve the nonduality experience, we will have deep surrender. The man who has achieved advaita-anubhava has tremendous devotion. For example, the verse of Śankara says:

bhaja govindaṁ bhaja govindaṁ govindaṁ bhaja mūḍhamate samprāpte sannihite kāle nahi nahi rakṣati ḍukṛñkaraṇe

Śankara says, 'Oh Fool! May you start meditating on Govinda (God, Kṛṣṇa's name) now. May you start remembering Govinda now. Nahi nahi rakṣati ḍukṛñkaraṇe means: When Yamadharma, the Lord of death comes, intellectual knowledge will not help you or protect you.

A great advaita-jñāni, sage of non-duality experience, will be a great devotee. And a great devotee will be an advaita-jñāni. Both are one and the same. Only those who have not realized the experience argue.

If you go inside dvaita and advaita philosophies, both show the same knowledge, wisdom and experience. All we need to know is how to open ourselves and surrender to this Existence. Then we will experience at the level of our being that Existence is taking care of us. Please be very clear: If Existence doesn't want us here, we cannot be here even for a single moment. There is no reason for Existence to keep us alive. If it is keeping us alive, we are wanted in this form, in this way, in this place. That is why we are still alive. God continuously cleans all the garbage. He never waits. Everyday

He clears away all the old things. He is the perfect energy that maintains cleanliness. They say that cleanliness is next to Godliness. I say that cleanliness is Godliness. It is not next to Godliness.

Trust Existence and Radiate Divine Grace

Unless we are needed, we will not be kept alive. Just by being alive, He proves that we are needed. We are wanted. We are not an accident; we are an incident. Don't think that we are alive as an accident. We are an incident. When we understand that we are an incident, we feel deeply connected. We open ourselves to Existence. Trust, even if you are exploited. Be very clear: There are two kinds of lives. One is living completely with trust and the other is living completely with an insecure feeling. The person who lives in insecurity may have more wealth. He may have two or three more beds, a little bigger house, yet he can never rest. The person who lives with the insecure consciousness may have more comfort but he will never be blissful.

On the other hand, the person who lives with deep trust in Existence may have less comfort but he never misses that comfort. People who trust Existence are always showered with blessings. They will live like God on planet earth. They will be a blessing for the whole planet. The Earth is alive because of a few people who live radiating this trust, who live radiating the divine grace. We should trust, even if we are exploited. After all, we are going to live on this earth for a maximum of seventy to eighty years. In those years, why should we continuously suffer? If we defend ourselves because of our insecurity, we will not only offend others but we will also miss the joy of living on planet Earth.

If we can, let us live with the completely relaxed mood of deep trust. Our presence will be a blessing. Our existence will save planet Earth. No matter what crosses our path, we will just be living, enjoying, and enriching everything. It is a blessing.

What have we brought here to lose? Our insecure consciousness is nothing but ignorance of the truth. What are we going to carry with us after death? Nothing! A simple truth: Neither have we brought anything nor are we going to take back anything.

While we are here we can relax and trust that Existence will provide for us. If the energy moving inside our body can convert bread into blood, can't it bring bread to us? The big problem is that we don't trust our energy. We don't trust the cosmic energy. When it can convert bread into blood, can't it help us with our small things? Can't it give us the intelligence to bring bread, sustenance into our lives? It can guide us. It can give us enough intelligence to bring bread for our life. When the energy can move planets and run the whole Universe, can't it take care of us?

When you trust Existence and relax from your tensions, headaches, worries and problems, be sure that you will be taken care of. Miracles will happen in your life. When you put your energy totally on trust, an alchemy takes place in you.

Understand, when you surrender, there is utter relaxation in you and your responsibilities are shifted to a higher authority. This is surrender. Do your duty and leave all of the responsibility to Existence. She will take care!

So we have two choices: We can live offending and defending continuously. Even if we have comfort, our being will carry a wound. Or we can lead a totally relaxed life with utter freedom and complete trust in Existence. We can have physical, mental, emotional and psychological freedom. We can have liberation here and now.

The moment we live with trust, we are liberated. Nothing hurts us anymore. If we live with the truth, we beautifully live even our death because we trust that Existence will take care of us even then. If we live without trust, we will be killed by the fear of death. Every moment, we will be dying. With trust, even in our death, we will be living, celebrating.

Here, if we can relax and feel deeply connected to what Kṛṣṇa says, we will experience the state that Kṛṣṇa is now going to express about His glories in Yoga of His Divine Manifestations, Vibhūti Yogaḥ.

I Am The Source

न मे विदुः सुरगणाः प्रभवं न महर्षयः ।
अहमादिर्हि देवानां महर्षीणां च सर्वशः ॥ १०-२॥ na me viduḥ suragaṇāḥ prabhavaṃ na maharṣayaḥ ahamādirhi devānāṃ maharṣīṇāṃ ca sarvaśaḥ || 10.2 ||

10.2 Neither the hosts of deities nor the great sages know My origin, My opulence. I am the source of the deities and the sages.

यो मामजमनादिं च वेत्ति लोकमहेश्वरम् ।
असम्मूढः स मर्त्येषु सर्वपापैः प्रमुच्यते ॥ १०-३॥ yo māmajamanādiṃ ca vetti lokamaheśvaram asammūḍhaḥ sa martyeṣu sarvapāpaiḥ pramucyate || 10.3 ||

10.3 He who knows Me as the unborn, without beginning, and supreme Lord of all the worlds, only he who has this clarity is wise and freed from all bondage.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Neither the devatās (gods) nor the ṛṣis know Me.' He means that neither people who work in the line of comforts and luxury nor the people who work in the line of religion and tapas (penance) know Him. 'But, I am their origin, aham ādiḥ.'

na me viduḥ sura-gaṇāḥ prabhavaṁ na maharṣayaḥ | aham ādir hi devānāṁ maharṣīṇāṁ ca sarvaśaḥ || 10.2 ||

Whether we live a spiritual or a materialistic life, our root is our consciousness. We should understand an important thing: Whenever Kṛṣṇa says, 'Me, Me, Me, aham, aham, aham.' He is referring to the enlightened consciousness.

He says, 'I gave this knowledge to Ikśvāku. I gave this wisdom to Surya.' He says again and again, it is He who gave this knowledge to these great people who lived thousands of years before Him. When the Gītā was delivered, Kṛṣṇa was thirty-two years old. If He was speaking about His form, how could He say, 'I gave this knowledge to Surya. I gave this knowledge to Manu?' When Kṛṣṇa says 'I', He means the cosmic consciousness.

Where Exactly Are You Missing It?

People ask, 'Exactly what am I missing? I think I have that understanding. I almost feel I am around the corner. Yet, I am unable to experience what Kṛṣṇa says. Where am I missing?'

First, the thirst should be created. The quest should be created. Then, the quest should be answered. When the question becomes a quest, you speak in this language. When the urge becomes urgent, you speak in this language.

Many seekers are just like window shoppers. They go from master to master. Going from master to master is not wrong. It is perfectly alright. However, not learning from anybody is wrong. A lot of people are just window shoppers. They go around doing nothing. They act as if they are seekers. Above all, they want to satisfy themselves that they are seekers. This is hypocrisy. Listen, either put your whole effort into seeking, or forget it and carry on with life.

Ramakrishna says beautifully, 'If somebody's hair is burning, will he keep quiet? Will he say, 'I have no time now. I still have many more years. Later on, I can take care?' The moment there is fire on a person's head, he tries to put out the fire. He runs towards water.

Exactly where are we lacking? Because we feel too much ego in our being. When Kṛṣṇa says He is God, we feel He is egoistic.' Please understand: When you say the word 'I', the meaning is different from when a Master says it. When you say the word 'God', the word is empty for you. It is just a superficial understanding for you. It has no solid truth behind it. Whereas when you say the word 'I' or your name, there is a solid meaning and experience behind that word for you.

When it comes to enlightened Masters, the word 'I' has no solid meaning. It is vague, superficial. However, the word 'divine' or 'enlightened' or 'God' has a solid meaning. It is their very experience.

Just because you have ego, you think Masters have ego and you miss the meaning of their expression, their declaration. Just push your ego a little aside, let go of it, be complete and authentically listen to the words of the Masters.

I Am Everything

Kṛṣṇa explains, 'Oh my dear! Understand, I am everything - vetti loka maheśvaram (10.3). I have come down. I have happened in this body to liberate you.'

Immediately, the man who is centered on fear, says, 'If you are everything, do all these things for me. Alter this world.' If he is centered on greed, he says, 'If you are everything, give me all these boons.'

The moment the Master says he is God, the moment Kṛṣṇa says He is God, if you are centered on greed, you catch him and ask him to give you all the boons. You start begging, 'Give me this, give me that.' If you are centered on fear, again, you catch him and say, 'Please protect me from this or that.'

The moment we demand, divinity disappears because we have brought in the business mind. The attitude which exists between the Master and us plays a major role in our experiencing Him as divine and our experiencing ourselves as divine.

It is between your inner space and the Divine. It is your ability, your attitude to receive, that creates the bridge. With all enlightened people, this is what happens. It is Parāśakti, Existence, using the form of the Master. Parāśakti is the cosmic energy. Don't think there is a lady with four hands! It is the cosmic energy. She does Her job using the forms of people who have surrendered their form to Her. All you need to do is just get out of your system. The Divine will get in. If you get out of your system, the Divine will get in.

Surrender - A Deep Passive Waiting

Listen. When you feel connected, you are open. You don't need to see the Master. The cosmic energy will guide you. There is no need for His nearness. But when you spoil the relationship, when you bring business into the relationship, nothing can be done because the bridge is broken. The very bridge does not happen between you and the Master when business enters.

For the bridge to happen, we need the space of complete surrender or feeling deeply connected. Here, by now, Arjuna is almost feeling connected. He has just dropped his fear and greed. The big problem with the spiritual process is that you will have what you want when you drop the idea of having that.

A deep, passive waiting without knowing what is going to happen is passive surrender. That is total surrender. The moment you decide, 'I will wait forever,' things happen.

As long as you are in a hurry, you are agitated. You stop things from happening in you. It is like trying to get the lotus to blossom. You open the petals by hand. Will it be a flower? It will never be a lotus flower. The lotus flower blooms by itself when the sun's rays pierce it. Give a little space to yourself so that your being blossoms.

The moment you decide to wait, things start happening. You don't need to wait anymore. You must wait until you decide to wait. The moment you decide to wait, you don't need to wait anymore.

Take the life of Buddha as an example. With utmost sincerity he tried to get enlightened with all meditation techniques and spiritual practices. When nothing worked, He relaxed and let go of everything, trusting Existence. That very moment, He became enlightened. The day you decide to wait, things happen.

Usually, when somebody is blessed and if he is healed, he tells someone else about it. If the second person comes with the attitude of getting healed, he naturally misses the whole game. If he comes with a fresh mind, healing automatically happens as a by-product. When we want it as the main product, we miss the whole bridge. Especially when we bring the business approach, like a deal between friends, the whole attitude, the relationship is no more that between Guru and disciple. Energy cannot be transmitted in a business relationship.

Understand, we need courage to stake everything on trust. It is like that moment when a seed must let go of its fears and break to open and become a tree. This is why we call Nirvāṇa as the last nightmare.

If a dream is too wild, we will wake up. Similarly, when we get a jolt or shock in life, we wake up to enlightenment. Enlightenment happens when there is a sudden shock to our dream state. The wonder with Masters, Incarnations is that there is no failure, ever. Theirs is a foolproof system.

We need the energy to let go, to allow the transformation to happen. Like the seed that lets go of its fear in becoming a tree, we too must have the energy to let go, to allow the transformation to happen. In that moment, when our ego is dying, we must be willing to let go of the past. Enlightenment never happens as a continuity of something. It happens in a flash, as a new birth. In Sanskrit we call it viṣāda. The first chapter of the Gītā is Arjuna Viṣāda Yogaḥ. Arjuna's dilemma was so great, yet he was willing to trust Kṛṣṇa and let go. In such a powerless situation, no mental decision taken is correct and when the Master guides you, you must be ready to let go and follow what he says completely, implicitly.

Arjuna had the courage to believe totally in Kṛṣṇa and let go, which was why he had the viśvarūpa darśan, the cosmic vision of Kṛṣṇa. We must have the energy to let go, to allow the dark night to happen to us. Only if we have trust in the Master can the ultimate gain happen to us.

We need to trust in order to experience the unknown space. At that moment, we have only the Master to hold onto. We must accept the new experience happening to us and deeply trust that the energy to transcend our old personality is entering us.

Kṛṣṇa emphasizes the feeling of connectedness. Feeling deeply connected to the Master is the basic need to understand this Truth. That is why the East gave so much importance to the Guru, the Master.

so'vikampena yogena yujyate nātra saṃśayaḥ 10-7

10.7 He who knows all this glory and powers of Mine, truly, he is fully united in Me; of that there is no doubt.

If you understand this first verse, you can immediately relax. Kṛṣṇa says, 'Whatever you have, whether you have a good name or a bad name, it is created by Me.' Then be certain that whatever you have is a gift from the Divine.

Kṛṣṇa asks us to complete with life as it is. Only when we accept ourselves as we are, can we accept others. Only then we will feel deep friendliness with others. Deep friendliness with others is spirituality. Understand that spirituality is honest and deep friendliness with others.

I Am Everything, Complete With Everything

Love is the flowering of our consciousness. Whenever our consciousness expresses itself through the heart, compassion happens, lust becomes love. The touch will become so vibrant, so soothing. Love is the greatest healing power on planet Earth.

Spirituality means flowing. Spirituality means radiating, spreading love and compassion. Whenever we enrich out of compassion, we never feel that we have served. We feel that we have been given an opportunity to serve, to enrich. Whether we believe it or not, as of now, we have a deep enmity or hostility towards others and ourselves. We live in constant self-doubt, self-hatred and self-denial. We may smile at others like models posing for the camera. We may smile, but we never feel friendly. We keep a safe distance and play a safe game because we never feel any real friendliness with others.

To correct this, the first thing you need to do is completion with yourself and accept yourself as you are. Some people say, 'I am unable to accept myself as I am. What can I do?' At least accept that you are unable to accept yourself, that is enough. If we accept that we are unable to accept ourselves, it is enough. We will drop from the mind. That very acceptance will bring completion in us and open a new consciousness in us.

Forgiving others and forgiving yourself are one and the same. When we torture others with our judgment and prejudices, we torture ourselves, too. If your inner image aligns itself to life image, it is destruction. When your inner image stands up to life image, it is destruction. Because your inner image, what you feel as you, is always lower than life's image, the idea you carry about life and others. If the inner image, mamakāra tries to make the life image, svānyakāra you carry as reality, it will be destruction. We use the same sword to kill others and to commit suicide ourselves. The same mind deals with others as well as with us. When we try to poison others, there will be a deep sense of guilt in us because the same mind is working in our inner space. We use strong words when we are angry. And once the anger dies down, the sharpness that had been emitted outward turns inward to create a deep guilt. The height of the anger and the depth of the guilt are equal. If the height increases, the depth increases as well.

When Kṛṣṇa says, 'Happiness and distress, birth and death, fear and fearlessness, nonviolence and equanimity, satisfaction, austerity, charity, name and fame, fame and infamy, all these various qualities of living beings are created by Me alone,' He means be complete with life as it is, be authentic to all aspects of your life: your inner image, outer image, others' image and life's image. If all the four images reach their peak possibility, it is Enlightenment.

The moment we create the space of completion and complete with life as it is, we experience divinity in everything. We don't exclude anything. The moment we complete, a cognitive shift happens in us. As of now, the cognitive process happening inside our mind is centered on enmity. The moment we declare completion with ourselves and with life, we complete with the whole world. Then, the complete cognition happens inside our system, which will be centered on bliss.

Kṛṣṇa explains His glory. He says, 'I am everything.' He declares, 'I am the Universal Consciousness. The person who truly knows My glories and powers, engages in yoga, the union of individual consciousness with the divine consciousness, and undoubtedly attains liberation.'

etāṁ vibhūtiṁ yogaṁ ca mama yo vetti tattvataḥ | so 'vikalpena yogena yujyate nātra saṁśayaḥ || 10.7 ||

When you are complete with you, the Universe will be complete with you. When you are incomplete with you, the Universe will be incomplete with you. Completion with you is sātori. Completion with the Cosmos is samādhi.

Kṛṣṇa refers to the Saptaṛṣis as the Universal consciousness that was born from His mind, from Him, the Primal Source and Primal Creator. He is the Saptaṛṣis. His energy decides what enlightened beings should do, and directs their actions.

In Hindu tradition, Manus are the children of Brahma, the Creator. There is a lineage of Manus, fourteen Manus, who populated the earth. Each Manu ruled for a period. The collective period of all fourteen Manus equals one kalpa, one day in the life of Brahma. In Sanskrit, all humans are termed Mānava, meaning those descended from Manu. As the Universal consciousness, Kṛṣṇa is all in one. He is the Creator, Sustainer and Rejuvenator. He is Brahma, Viṣṇu and Śiva. He also transcends all three as the Parabrahman, the Supreme Superconsciousness.

One needs to do nothing except understand and accept what Kṛṣṇa is. The Master says that understanding and completing alone liberates us. Nothing more is needed.

Experience The Light of Knowledge

10.11 Out of compassion to them, I destroy the darkness born out of their ignorance by the shining lamp of knowledge.

Now, instead of understanding these statements of Kṛṣṇa intellectually, we should try experiencing them. In the deep meditative mood, let us feel connected to the Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, to our very life source, to our very life energy.

Let us enter into meditation, because all the following verses in this chapter must be experienced. They cannot be understood. There is nothing much to understand.

Later Kṛṣṇa says, 'Amongst the Ṛṣi, I am Nārada. Among the months, I am Margazhi. Among the rivers, I am Gangā. Among the fish, I am Makara.' He explains His glories at length.

We may think, 'Why does He explain these things in a detailed way?' He makes us understand, wherever we see the glory, wherever we see the Divine radiating, there lies the greatness. We realize this is true when we start experiencing, when we deeply understand these basic truths of completing with ourselves and connecting with the Universe.

We experience life as divine and a blessing when we understand these things. It happens when we connect with the Divine, when we trust, when we completely open up, when we don't have other vested interests and when we do not beg for anything from life.

As long as we are begging for things in the hope that, 'with this, I will feel blissful,' or 'with that, I will feel blissful', we will ask only for this or that. Only when we understand, 'I want just Him, nothing else. I want the pure experience of the Divine, nothing else,' we experience the whole of Existence in a totally different way. The cognitive shift starts happening in us.

When we deeply feel connected to the Master and He expresses His glory, we expand. Here, Arjuna is enjoying the same mood that Kṛṣṇa enjoys. Inch by inch, Arjuna is enjoying the joy and bliss. Arjuna asks, 'Oh Lord! It is so beautiful. I never feel bored. Please tell me again and again, all of your glories.'

Always Engage In Me

Kṛṣṇa explains inch by inch. He reveals who He is and how He is shining. He talks about līlā dhyāna, meditating on the divine play of the Lord. What the eyes see intensely gets registered in the mind. What gets registered in the mind, the eyes see intensely. When the mind is engaged in the Divine, when the heart is captivated by the Divine, we automatically live every moment remembering the Divine. We enjoy talking to each other about the divine glories because all around us, we see these glories. We are so full of divine ecstasy and bliss, so fully complete and not wanting anything, because we see life overflowing with divine bliss and glory.

This was the state of the gopīs, the blessed girls who tended cattle in Kṛṣṇa's home Briṇdāvan. They constantly played with Kṛṣṇa from the time of His infancy. Their entire world revolved around Him. Their minds and hearts were filled with Kṛṣṇa, with no intellect filtering their emotions.

Even to this day all main entrance steps to Viṣṇu temples have the imprint of feet carved upon them. These imprints represent the feet of devotees whose feet dust Viṣṇu covets more than all the crowns He is adorned with.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'With mind and lives absorbed on Me, always enlightening one another and talking about My glories, the wise are content and blissful. To those who are always engaged in Me with love, I give them enlightenment for which they come to Me.'

teṣāṁ satata yuktānāṁ bhajatāṁ pṛīti pūrvakam | dadāmi buddhi yogaṁ taṁ yena mām upayānti te || 10.10 ||

Kṛṣṇa here talks about satsang, the collection of people whose hearts, minds and bodies are immersed in Him. They are the ones who can talk about nothing except Him, who are filled with bliss and love for their Lord and Master. He promises He will provide them the intelligence to enlighten them and bring them to Him.

Master Destroys Ignorance

A man who works out of fear and greed is a śūdra. The man who works out of attention need is a vaiśya. The man who works out of jealousy or comparison to prove that he is superior to others is a kṣatriya. The man who works out of gratitude is a brāhmaṇa. These differentiations do not come by birth. They are a result of our guṇas, our attributes, our mental make-up, our root patterns. They come into our being when we earn and develop them.

People are not equal. Each one comes with his own karma (unfulfilled actions) and a particular root pattern. As long as the Master is there, He takes care of everything. When the Master is not there in body, the whole thing becomes dharma, righteousness. When the Master is there, everything becomes mokṣa, liberation. That is the difference between dharma and mokṣa. Work for mokṣa. The Master defines Himself in the last verse:

'I destroy the darkness of ignorance within them, with the shining lamp of wisdom, through my compassion.'

teṣāṁ evānukampārtham aham ajñāna-jaṁ tamaḥ | nāśayāmy ātma-bhāva-stho jñāna-dīpena bhāsvata || 10.11 ||

The Sanskrit word 'Guru', meaning Master, has two syllables: gu refers to darkness and ru to light. The Master leads the disciple from darkness into light with compassion. This darkness of ignorance is the identification that one has with one's self, one's material attachments and material possessions. This identification surely leads to sorrow since this attachment is for things that are fleeting and not for something long lasting.

The Master is the only person who can dispel that darkness. Only He can light up that wisdom within you in order for you to realize that you are already one with Existence and therefore need nothing from this material world. Your Master gains nothing from teaching you. He gains nothing from enlightening you. He does it out of sheer compassion, so that others may experience the same bliss that He constantly experiences.

10.18 Tell me in detail of Your powers and glories, Oh Janārdana. Again, please tell for my satisfaction as I do not tire of listening to Your sweet words.

Arjuna becomes the perfect disciple. He has no doubts about whatever Kṛṣṇa has said to him so far. It only corroborates what the great sages have said. All that Arjuna seeks is that his Lord and Master tells him more about Himself, His glories, 'I just need to know how I should approach You, how I should see You. Tell me more, I can never tire of listening to Your words.'

Arjuna is in love with His Master. When you are in such deep love as Arjuna is now, and as the gopīs were with Kṛṣṇa in Briṇdāvan, there is nothing to be said. There is nothing even to be heard. Whatever Arjuna says is merely to keep his end of the dialogue going. Arjuna knows that there is no need for Kṛṣṇa to say anything now. Yes, he would be delighted if Kṛṣṇa were to speak of His glories, His līlā. However, Arjuna is in such a state of meditation, ready for his ultimate experience, that whatever his Master says or does would not matter to him.

Therefore, when Arjuna asks the Lord to talk about His glories that no one else understands, Arjuna is not requesting on his behalf, He is requesting on behalf of humanity. Arjuna would have been perfectly happy to sit in silence, in deep meditation upon Kṛṣṇa. And in His compassion, Kṛṣṇa would have eventually revealed Himself to his chosen disciple. However, the rest of humanity would not have been enriched from a revelation that came to Arjuna alone. Hence Arjuna requested that Kṛṣṇa speak about His glory.

Arjuna wants to know about Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, the Ultimate Superconscious being. He does not want to know about his friend and charioteer, Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa, the son of Vāsudeva. Arjuna is in the mood of the perfect devotee and disciple. Anything that he can listen about his Master is nectar to his ears. He is in a state of complete immersion.

You too, as the reader, make your plea to Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, the Jagatguru, so that He may tell you about His glory, and so that you may meditate upon His glory with single pointed focus of the mind. As He promised, He will provide the light of wisdom for you to be enlightened.

10.25 Of the great sages, I am Bhṛgu. Of the vibrations, I am the OṀ. Of the sacrifices, I am the chanting of holy names. Of the immovable objects, I am the Himālayas.

There is no way to describe the Divine fully because the Divine pervades every bit of this entire Universe. When it exists in every atom, when it is the essence of all that exists, how can we describe or comprehend it in its entirety? So Kṛṣṇa explains the main manifestations that give a glimpse of the unfathomable Divine.

Kṛṣṇa declares that He is everything that really matters. Kṛṣṇa says that He is the ultimate consciousness in all beings and He is the beginning, middle and end of all beings. He declares that He pervades the entire space and time and beyond.

aham ātmā guḍākeśa sarva-bhūtāśaya sthitaḥ | aham ādiś ca madhyaṁ ca bhūtānām anta eva ca || 10.20 ||

Kṛṣṇa is both the macrocosm and the microcosm: the Brahmāṇḍa, Cosmos and the pindāṇḍa, individual being. His energy permeates all living and non-living entities and He decides upon their nature.

In this Universe, there are twelve planes of existence. These are a combination of the factors of length, breadth, depth, time, space and consciousness. At best we are aware of the first five and only partially that too. It is difficult for those in the human plane to comprehend even time and space fully. We can only exist in one aspect of time and space in relationship with the three dimensions of length, breadth and depth. Quantum Physics now recognizes that fundamental particles can exist simultaneously in different locations at the same time. Matter can transcend time and space. Matter and energy can exist beyond the bounds of time and space.

A Master is one who can transcend time and space and reach consciousness. Kṛṣṇa, the great Master, is in the twelfth plane, that of pure consciousness. He is beyond all dimensions, beyond time, and beyond space. He is the beginning and He has no beginning. He is the end and He has no end. He is the Creator. He is the Created. He is also the Creation. In this huge canvas of the Universe, He is the canvas. He is the paint. He is also the strokes and He is the painting. There is nothing that He is not. The only way to understand even a part of Him is to become immersed in Him.

Kṛṣṇa says that among the Māruts, He is Māricī. The Māruts are the thought-gods associated with power and knowledge. Māricī is the father of sage Kaśyapa who is the father of the Māruts. Many Ṛgveda hymns are dedicated to the Māruts. The Māruts aid the activities of Indra, the representation of the mind. This is a metaphysical representation of the power of thoughts that originate from the mind.

A common representation of the Maruts in the Ṛg Veda, is a flock of birds. This symbolizes the power of thoughts that influence the recipient. When a person is established in integrity, and radiates positive thoughts, he is receptive to similar thoughts and attracts similar incidents in his life. If we are blissful, people with a similar attitude will be attracted towards us. If we are dull, lethargic and depressed, the same type of people will be attracted towards us.

Thoughts and desires are energy. They contribute towards shaping our actions and lives. Everyday we create our bodies, minds, actions and our reality by our thoughts. We are what our thoughts are.

Next, Kṛṣṇa says that He is the sun amongst all the shining objects, and among the stars He is the moon. We may say that the moon is not a star. We would be factually correct. Kṛṣṇa refers to the influence that the moon wields upon earth and humans. It is scientifically established that out of all celestial bodies around planet earth, the two most important influences are the sun and the moon. No one doubts that the sun is a star and that it is the brightest object that can be seen.

The moon influences the tides of the ocean as well as the tides of the human minds. Of all planetary, non-planetary and solar bodies that surround us, with the exception of the sun, the moon exerts the greatest influence on us both in a broader planetary sense and in an individual sense. People have mood variations depending on the phases of the moon. New moon and full moon days dramatically influence our emotional well-being, for good and for bad. Being the physical mass closest to the earth, the gravitational force of the moon affects each of us deeply.

This is why the Hindu astrological and astronomical systems consider the moon to be a planet. This belief is not based on whether the moon revolves around the earth as a satellite instead of around the sun as a planet. It is based on the effect that the moon has on human beings and upon planet Earth.

In Hindu astrology, the stars are the different positions in the sky that the moon passes through in a cycle of 27 to 28 days. These stars are referred to as the wives of the moon. This is why Kṛṣṇa refers to Himself as the moon amongst the stars, that He is the pride of the stars.

I Am Viṣṇu, I Am Śankara, I Am Oṁ

Kṛṣṇa declares that amongst the Vedas, He is the Sāma Veda. The Vedas are the timeless truths expounded by the Ṛṣis (sages) as the expressions of truth experienced by them. These are the revelations of the truth experienced through intuition by the seers. There are four Vedas: Ṛg Veda, Yajur Veda, Sāma Veda and Atharva Veda.

Each Veda consists of four parts: mantra-saṁhita or hymns, brāhmaṇa or explanations of mantras (or rituals), āranyaka, forest books which give the philosophical meaning of rituals, and the Upaniṣads, essence of the Vedas.

The Sāma Veda is a collection of hymns in praise of agni (fire), Indra (king of the gods) and soma (drink of the gods). While the Ṛg Veda is the oldest Veda, Sāma Veda is the basis for all musical systems of Hinduism. The basic notes of all music, not just of Hindu music, originated with Sāma Veda. The seven notes, which are the fundamentals of all music all over the world, were derived from Sāma Veda, which even today is sung, and not recited.

The Ṛg Veda and other Vedas may be recited only by a few scholars today, but Sāma Veda is heard everywhere. It is the essence of Carnatic and Hindustani music forms, the two major classical music forms of Hindusim. As the essence of music, Sāma Veda is also the essence of dance forms. One does not need to understand music and dance. It is enough to indulge and experience. So it is with Kṛṣṇa. All we need to do is experience Him.

Among the gods, Kṛṣṇa says He is Vasava (Indra), the king of gods. The five senses, jñānendriya, namely sight, hearing, smell, taste and touch, originate from the mind and are of the mind. Without the mind, the senses cannot function. He says He is the subtlest and most powerful, the mind. In living beings, He is the life force, the consciousness, not merely body and mind.

Rudras are the elemental powers worshipped by the Ṛg Veda. The word Rudra means to cry. Metaphorically the Rudras were worshipped to obtain some gain. When in deep anguish, if one prays to one of the Rudras in awareness, it was believed to bring results. There are eleven Rudras: Aja, Ekapāda, Ahirbudhnya, Vīrabhadra, Girīśa, Śaṅkara, Aparājita, Hara, Anakaraka, Pināki, Bhaga and Śambhu. Śankara is the doer of good. Śankara is also the precursor to Śiva in the evolution of the Hindu constellation of divinity. Śiva means causeless auspiciousness;auspiciousness born without a reason. Wherever Śiva is, good happens for no reason. Of the Rudras, Kṛṣṇa says He is Śankara, rudrāṇāṁ śankaraś cāsmi (10.20).

Yakṣas are celestial beings considered to be the creators of wealth. The king of the Yakṣas is Kubera, the god of wealth. Rākṣasas too are celestial beings of a negative nature of hoarding power and wealth. Yakṣas and Rākṣasas are keepers of wealth. They do not enjoy wealth. Of the Yakṣas and Rākṣasas, Kṛṣṇa says He is the god of wealth, the king Kubera.

The Vasus are the attendants of Viṣṇu. They represent various aspects of Nature. The Brihadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad mentions eight Vasus: agni (fire), pṛthvī (earth), vāyu (wind), antarikṣa (space), āditya (light), dyaus (sky), candramas (moon) and nakṣatrāṇi (stars). Kṛṣṇa says among the Vasus, He is the formless fire.

Meru is the golden peak, the metaphoric abode of gods, and its foothills are the Himalayas. It is also said to represent the spine of humans. Amongst the peaks, Kṛṣṇa says He is the majestic Meru.

Bṛhaspati is the priest of the gods. He dispels darkness and ignorance and destroys the enemies of the gods. Among the warriors, Kṛṣṇa says He is Skanda, the supreme General of the forces of gods. Skanda is the son of Śiva and Pārvati, who destroyed Tārakāsura, the demon who, along with his hordes of demons, tormented the devas. This is a metaphysical representation of the Divine as the supreme General of the being, vanquishing the senses, desires and ego.

Of the water bodies, Kṛṣṇa says He is the mighty ocean, infinite in expanse and essential to all life forms. In fact, it is the origin of all life forms.

Of the great sages, Kṛṣṇa says He is Bhṛgu, one of the Saptaṛṣis (seven sages who form the cosmic energy). Bhṛgu is believed to have been created by Brahma to aid him in the creation of the Universe.

Of the vibrations, Kṛṣṇa says He is the transcendental OṀ - girāṁ asmy ekam akṣaram (10.25). OṀ is the primal sound from which the Universe manifested itself. It is the praṇava, the mystic symbol.

The symbol of OṀ contains three curves, a semicircle and a dot. Out of the three curves, the upper curve symbolizes the waking state, the lower curve denotes deep sleep and the right curve denotes the dream state. It thus represents the three states of individual consciousness. The dot represents the fourth state of consciousness, turīya, complete awareness. The semicircle represents māyā, illusion, and separates the dot from the three curves. But the open semicircle represents the Absolute which is unaffected by māyā.

Of the different types of sacrifices, Kṛṣṇa says He is the japa or chanting of holy names - yajñānāṁ japa-yajño ʻsmi (10.25).

Of the immovable objects in the world, He says He is the mighty and majestic Himalayas. The Himalayas, literally meaning ‘the abode of snow’, is home to hundreds of peaks, including the highest peak in the world. Some great rivers originate in it and flow through it, including Gangā, Yamunā, Brahmaputra and Indus.

The Himalayas have a great unique spiritual significance as well. Kailaśa, the home of Śiva, is the representation on earth of the metaphorical Meru. The Himalayan mountains are the spiritual incubator of the world. The Himalayas are truly a powerful energy field.

For thousands of years, millions of sādhus (sages) have lived there and left their bodies from there. When enlightened masters leave their bodies, the result of their penance, the energy of their spiritual penance, is not carried by the spirit. They leave behind this energy in their bodies. Imagine how much energy is in the Himalayas, where so many enlightened beings have left their bodies! We should be thankful to the Himalayas since their positive energy balances the collective negativity in the world.

10.30 Of the Daitya (demons), I am Prahlād and of the reckoners, I am Time. Of the animals, I am the king of animals (Lion) and of the birds, I am Garuḍa.

Kṛṣṇa says among the trees He is the banyan tree, aśvatthaḥ sarva vṛkṣānāṁ (10.26). The banyan tree develops its root-like structures from the branches. These grow into the earth as secondary roots. The metaphysical meaning of the banyan tree is that just as the banyan tree grows its roots upside down unlike other trees, the spiritual person shuns the illusory outer world, the world that most people run after. Instead, he goes inwards towards the Absolute.

In a later chapter Kṛṣṇa says that the leaves of the banyan tree are the Vedas. He who knows this tree is the knower of the Vedas. Of all the spiritually enlightened Masters, the Ṛṣis, Kṛṣṇa says He is Nārada. Nārada is considered the greatest of all devotees. His mind is immersed in remembering Viṣṇu, forever chanting 'Nārāyaṇa, Nārāyaṇa'. Kṛṣṇa identifies Himself with His greatest devotee.

Of the Gandharvas, the celestial beings, Kṛṣṇa says He is Citraratha. Gandharvas are celestial beings skilled in music and they are guardians of the soma juice, the nectar of the divine beings. Citraratha is the king of the Gandharvas.

I Am the Complete Being

Among the Siddhas, the complete beings, the Self-realized persons, Kṛṣṇa says He is Kapila, the complete sage. Kapila is the author of the Sāṅkhya Yoga system of philosophy, which deals with the elements of the physical Universe and the spiritual world. He is also the founding father of Mahānirvāṇi Pīṭha, Kapila Sarvajña Pīṭha. Kapila is considered an incarnation of Viṣṇu and Mahādev.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the greatest follower of Sāṅkhya Yoga of Mahānirvāṇi Pīṭha, the oldest apex body of Sanātana-dharma. Understand, after the first chapter, Arjuna Viṣāda Yogaḥ, the first words that come out of Bhagavān's mouth are Sāṅkhya Yoga - nai'naṁ chindanti śastrāṇi nai 'naṁ dahati pāvakaḥ (2.23).

Here Bhagavān introduces Himself saying, 'Among the perfect complete beings, I am Kapila - siddhānāṁ kapilo muniḥ (10.26).' This means that in Kṛṣṇa's time, Kapila was the star of the spiritual world. That is why He mentions Kapila was the first man who started thinking. Till then, thinking was not part of humanity. The first human being on planet Earth who started thinking and experienced completion was Kapila.

Kapila Muni is one of the great Incarnations celebrated in Śrīmad Bhāgavatam. There is a beautiful book called Kapila Gītā, Kapila's teachings to his mother, Devāhuti recorded in Śrīmad Bhāgavatam and other books Kapila's Sāṅkhya Sūtra and Sāṅkhya Kārika based on his philosophy. If you read Kapila, you won't find a single moral lesson or even a definition of morality or immorality. But, the followers of Kapila will be the most beautiful moral beings on planet Earth, because He just puts you into the natural flow of your being. You don't hide anything from others and yourself. You are not afraid of anything that is within or outside you.

Kapila is the definition of the natural law of Existence, the innate intelligence. Kapila is as beautiful as the gopikās of Bhāgavatam, as intelligent as Kṛṣṇa's Gītā, and as natural as Dharmarāja (name of Yudhiṣṭra, the righteous king). Only with certain completion, can you understand the intelligence, beauty, and naturalness, all that can flow together in one space, that is Kapila.

Next, Ucchaiśravas is the legendary snow-white horse that emerged during the churning of the ocean of milk described in the Bhāgavatam. According to the history, the devas, the good, oppressed by the asuras, the evil, appealed to Lord Viṣṇu for help. Viṣṇu directed devas to churn the ocean of milk upon which Viṣṇu rests, using Meru, the mountain, as the staff and Vāsuki, the serpent, as the rope. Viṣṇu became the base as a tortoise upon which Meru rested. Since the devas did not have the strength to do the job alone, they took the help of the asuras promising them a share in whatever materialized.

During the churning, various divine entities emerged. Among these were the divine horse, Ucchaiśravas, and the four-tusked king of the elephants, Airāvata, whom Indra took as his mount. As part of the churning process, a deadly poison hālahāla also emerged that threatened to take the lives of the devas and asuras. Śiva came to their rescue and drank the poison. Finally, the nectar of immortality emerged. Viṣṇu, in the form of a beautiful damsel Mohini kept the asuras occupied, while He allowed the devas to drink the amṛt, nectar of immortality, and become invincible.

This is a metaphysical representation signifying how we are pushed and pulled by desires in our lives. From this churning in our life, various products emerge. The nectar of immortality emerges when we offer our entire being to the Divine, as we go beyond the push and pull of desires, beyond life and death. Then we dwell in ultimate bliss. There may be obstacles in the path. Yet, the Master supports and protects us during our churning, as we endeavor to realize the ultimate state. Just as Śiva drank the poison that came out as a result of churning the ocean, the Master holds the disciple steady as the unconscious root patterns, saṁskāras rise to the surface during our spiritual maturing.

Kṛṣṇa says, among the weapons, He is vajra, the thunderbolt. This is the weapon of Indra, king of the demigods. Viṣṇu is considered to be present in the vajra. Indra was specifically given this weapon, the thunderbolt, for a purpose. Kṛṣṇa does not choose His own weapon, the cakra, the mighty discus. Instead he used Indra's vajra that was made from the bones of the great sage Dadhici, who gave up his life to destroy the evil Vṛtāsura.

Among the cows, He says He is the sacred cow, Kāmadhuk or Kāmadhenu, which also emerged during the churning of the ocean. In the Hindu way of life, the cow is worshipped for her essential utility. Kāmadhuka is considered to be the cow that grants all wishes and is the mother of all cows.

Kṛṣṇa says, for begetting children, He is the god of love, the basis for procreation. He says He is the Vāsuki of serpents. Vāsuki is the king of snakes. Vāsuki was used as the rope and he wound himself around Meru, the staff, for churning the ocean of milk.

Kṛṣṇa says, among the nāgas, non-poisonous snakes or creatures of the nether world, He is Ananta, the many-hooded serpent who forms the bed of Lord Viṣṇu. He is said to support all the planets on his various hoods, including the Earth.

Among the water beings, Kṛṣṇa says He is Varuṇa, the god of the mightiest water body, the ocean. Among the ancestors, Kṛṣṇa says He is Aryamā, one of the Ādityas, who presides over a planet occupied by the energy bodies of our ancestors.

Of the ones who ensure discipline, Kṛṣṇa says He is Yama, the Lord of death. Death is the perfect equalizer of all beings. Death is the only certain thing in the life of all beings and it treats everyone exactly the same whether they are big or small, rich or poor. So the Lord of death, Yama, ensures perfect discipline. The Sanskrit word yama means both discipline and death. Yama is the first of the eight limbs of Patañjali's Aṣṭāṅga Yoga.

Of the Daityas, Kṛṣṇa says He is Prahlād - prahlādaś cāsmi daityanāṁ (10.30). The Daityas are considered to be a race of beings that warred against the demigods. Prahlād was the son of a powerful Daitya King, Hiraṇyakaśipu. Prahlād was a pious child, an embodiment of integrity. The young Prahlād is a supreme example of devotion. His life is the example that total surrender to the Divine is possible and that such surrender leads the Divine to completely care for His devotees, in all situations and at all times.

Of the reckoners, Kṛṣṇa says He is Kāla, Time itself - kālaḥ kalayatām aham (10.30). Time is the ultimate reckoner. No being exists who can beat Time. Irrespective of who it is, Time always moves on. It cannot be stopped by anyone.

Of the animals, Kṛṣṇa says He is the lion, king of the jungle. Among birds, He says He is Garuḍa, king of birds, the eagle who is the mount of Lord Viṣṇu.

10.38 Of rulers, I am their Scepter. Of the victorious, I am Statesmanship. Of all secrets, I am also Silence. Of the wise, I am Wisdom.

Of the purifying elements, Kṛṣṇa says He is the formless and pure wind - pavanaḥ pavatām asmi (10.31). The wind pervades the other elements such as earth, water and fire and removes impurities.

Of the wielders of weapons, He says He is Rāma, the seventh incarnation of Viṣṇu - rāmaḥ śastra-bhṛtām aham (10.31). Śrī Rāma defeated Rāvaṇa, the demonic ruler of Lankā who abducted his wife, Sīta. Rāma was a righteous ruler and chosen heir to his father's throne. Yet, Rāma went into exile to uphold his father's vow. Rāma is considered the greatest archer ever known. Of the ten incarnations of Viṣṇu, Rāma is the incarnation just prior to Kṛṣṇa. Of the aquatic beings, the fish, He says He is the shark, the most powerful and feared.

Of the rivers, He says He is Gangā. The river Gangā is worshipped in Bharat as goddess Gangā. Millions of people pray in the waters of the Gangā everyday. On its banks, millions of people gather everyday to offer pūjā to Gangā and to take a holy dip in the waters. The sage Jahnu swallowed Gangā as She rushed down the Himalayas into his ashram. Bhagīratha begged the Ṛṣis to release Gangā. That is why Gangā is known as the daughter of Jahnu and has the name 'Jāhnavi'.

As Gangā descends from the Himalayas to the plains, there are multiple places of pilgrimage where people revere the river and offer daily prayers. Gangā is considered the sacred river that descended from the heavens, blessing the planet with the Ganges based civilization. Millions of people standing and praying in the waters have energized the whole river and this explains why Gangā has the inexplicable ability of cleansing Herself.

When the British traveled by ship from England to Bharat, their water became spoilt during the long journey. However, on the return trip from Bharat to England, the water from the Gangā remained pure even after reaching England. The research showed that the Gangā water had the miraculous power of cleansing Herself.

Of all the creations, Kṛṣṇa says He is the beginning, the middle and the end, thus establishing that He is all that existed, exists and will exist. He is the creator, created and creation - sargāṇāṁ ādir antaś ca madhyaṁ caivaham arjuna (10.32).

Of the various branches of knowledge, He is the ultimate spiritual knowledge, Self- realization - adhyātma vidyā vidyānāṁ (10.32). Other branches of knowledge result from intelligence. Only Self-realization requires intuition and something beyond.

Of all arguments, He says He is the logic that binds everything together. Of the letters, Kṛṣṇa says He is the first letter, 'aksarānāṁ a-kāro 'smi', the origin of all that is spoken and written. Of the dual words, a class of words in Saṃskṛit, He is the compound word.

He affirms He is never-ending time and the Creator of this Universe, Brahma. Kṛṣṇa says He is the Creator and Destroyer.

Of the feminine qualities, He says He is the seven Devīs, goddesses, who impart fame, fortune, beautiful speech, memory, intelligence, faithfulness and patience. In Sanskrit all these qualities have feminine nouns to represent them. He says these attributes in women come from Him.

Kṛṣṇa said in an earlier verse that among the Vedas, He is the Sāma Veda that contains beautiful songs and hymns. Now, He says, among these hymns, He is the Bṛhat Sāma, a unique melody.

I Am Gāyatrī

Of all poetic meters, He says He is Gāyatrī - gāyatrī chandasām aham (10.35). Various invocations and prayers in the Hindu literature are set to Gāyatrī meter, including Devi Gāyatrī, Rudra Gāyatrī, etc. This chanda, meter is 24 syllables, usually in 3 or 4 lines.

This verse can also be translated to mean that Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am Gāyatrī amongst the mantras.' Mantras are the sacred syllables that create awareness of the divinity within our inner space. The very vibrations created while chanting the Sanskrit mantras purify the mind-body system and raise the energetic frequency. Here, Kṛṣṇa states that Gāyatrī is the greatest of the mantras. Its popularity has been evident from the earliest Hindu times. This was the first mantra taught when the child entered a gurukul, the traditional Hindu schools of the enlightened Masters.

Gāyatrī literally translated means 'the song that liberates'. Gāyatrī is an invocation to the ultimate intelligence. This prayer creates self-awareness, self-completion: Om bhūr bhuva suvaḥ tat savitur vareṇyam bhargo devasya dhīmahi dhiyo yonaḥ prachodayāt Freely translated, this means: We bow to You, that Ruler of physical, mental and spiritual planes, That which is beyond all, the supreme Brilliance, may You kindle our inner awareness. It is a prayer to the supreme intelligence to awaken our inner intelligence.

Gāyatrī is not merely a prayer or a mantra. It is far more than that. It is a tantra, a technique that can create tremendous awareness and intelligence in our being. Mantra means the syllable that shows the way to go beyond joys and sufferings of the world. Mantra makes us more centered and complete. Tantra is more than that. It is an instant delivery system.

Generally, religions condition us from childhood by installing in us value systems and beliefs, our saṁskāras or root patterns or past bio-memories. Gāyatrī is a technique that completely liberates us from our saṁskāras. It is like a torch to guide one on one's path. Children were taught this mantra from early childhood in ancient times so that they could be free from their saṁskāras.

Gāyatrī is not about giving someone a belief or prayer to be chanted to any gods or during any form of worship. It is a pure technique that can lead to pure intelligence. Continuous meditation on this mantra, just continuous recitation of this mantra with awareness, directly leads one to the ultimate intelligence.

Gāyatrī mantra says, 'Let us meditate on the energy which awakens the intelligence in our Being. Let that intelligence help us meditate on It.'

Contemplating on the meaning of Gāyatrī mantra creates a beautiful vibration inside our being. Repeating the mantra mentally and letting the mantra sink into our being is like planting a seed in our being that will lead to thousands of fruits in the outer world as well as inner world. It gives us what we want along with giving us the inner space, in which we don't want anything.

Among the months, Kṛṣṇa says, He is the month of Mārgaśīrṣa, November and December in the Gregorian calendar. In the East, these months bring joy to people as they are the time when grains are collected from the fields. Also, the month has a lot of spiritual significance because the auspicious days of Vaikunṭa Ekādasi fall in this month. This month in the divine calendar is the early morning time, the brahma muhūrtaṁ, the most auspicious part of the day. This is the time recommended to focus on worship.

Among the seasons, Kṛṣṇa says, He is spring. Nature is at the pinnacle of Her creation in spring with new blossoms on trees and pleasant weather, which is neither too hot nor too cold. Spring thus signifies life, growth and the beginning of the cycle of life.

Kṛṣṇa declares that of all vices, He is gambling. Even in the vices He says He is present. Anybody who deludes himself by thinking that He is not present in 'unvirtuous' activities should realize that the Divine exists everywhere and in all activities and things. By this, Kṛṣṇa also refers to the fact that Yudhiṣṭra's vice of gambling brought about this Great War. Known as the wisest of all men, the most righteous being, Yudhiṣṭra, the Pāṇḍava prince, had one vice that brought him down. That was his weakness for gambling.

Kṛṣṇa says, He is the effulgence that is the essence of all radiant things. He declares He is the victory of the victorious, the effort needed to succeed, and satva, goodness, amongst the attributes.

Kṛṣṇa's father, Vāsudeva, was a member of the Vṛṣṇi or Yādav race. Amongst the Vṛṣṇis, Kṛṣṇa says He is the ultimate, Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa. Amongst the Pāṇḍavas, He says He is the arch bowman, Arjuna.

Of the sages, He says He is Vyāsa, author of the great epic Mahābhārat that includes the Bhagavad Gītā. Vyāsa is also referred to as Veda Vyāsa, the compiler of the Vedas who split one Veda into four Vedas so that the common person could understand the knowledge in the Vedas.

Of the thinkers, Kṛṣṇa says, He is Uśāna, also known as Śukra, guru of the asuras, celestials with a negative bent of mind.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am the scepter, the daṇḍa, the rod of punishment of the King.' As a Master, Kṛṣṇa wields the yoga daṇḍa, the divine staff of wisdom. A ruler is not merely a refuge for his subjects, but also the rule giver, the disciplinarian. So is the Master.

Kṛṣṇa says to Arjuna, 'Enough has been said. You can take no more. Whatever I have said, whatever more I can say, will only be a drop in the ocean, a small fragment of what I am. There is nothing that is not Me, nothing that can exist outside of Me, and nothing that has not been created from and by Me.'

He has given the background to Arjuna, so that Arjuna is prepared to see His formless form. Arjuna is now in a mode of total surrender and in deep gratitude.

Now, let us also experience these words of Kṛṣṇa in a mood of absolute surrender and total gratitude.

Close your eyes, and meditate on the divine glory of Kṛṣṇa.

Express deep gratitude for whatever way your life has been elevated. Express deep gratitude to whoever has helped you achieve health, wealth and education. Each and every one of these are expressions of the Divine.

Remember every one of them for the reasons they were in your life. Remember all of them who helped you to flower in your life. Remember all of them with love and respect, with love and gratitude.

Remember your mother who gave you this body. She is the embodiment of the Divine, Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa. Give her your gratitude. Remember your father who gave you life. Feel him and give your gratitude to him.

Remember all the teachers and professors who gave you education. They are embodiments of the Divine. Feel deeply grateful to all of them for enriching your life and to your being.

Whoever has helped you to grow economically, whoever contributed to your economical growth, directly or indirectly, remember all of them and give your gratitude to them. Feel deeply connected to all of them.

Whoever gave you mental strength and understanding about life when you needed it, whenever you were depressed whoever gave you courage, remember all of them. They are embodiments of the Divine, representatives of the universal consciousness. Remember all of them and give them your gratitude.

Whoever helped you grow spiritually, whoever helped you grow in spiritual understanding, remember all of them. Give them your gratitude. They are representatives of the Divine. Whoever helped you with understanding on the level of material wealth or spiritual growth, remember all of them and offer them your gratitude.

Ultimately, give gratitude to the divine energy, Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, who gave this intelligence and understanding to us in our life.

Just drop yourself and become one with the cosmic energy. May you become part of the whole Universe, part of the energy that is moving the sun, moon and planet Earth.

Oṁ śānti, śānti, śāntihi...

Relax. Now open your eyes. Continue to spend at least the next few hours in this mood of surrender. Drop yourself. You will see this experience works miracles in your being. It can transform you.

Forget about yourself. Drop yourself and let the Divine, let this cosmic energy prevail. Let Him be. Let the Divine be. This surrender mood can transform your whole consciousness. It can make you experience the ultimate truth that Kṛṣṇa explains here: His glories, His vibhūti, His divine glory. When you are blissful, whatever you see looks divine and glorious. May you reach that bliss.

Let us pray to Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, the universal energy, Existence, to guide us all and to give us all the experience of eternal bliss, nityānanda.

ॐ तत्सदिति श्रीमद्भगवद्गीतासूपनिषत्सु ब्रह्मविद्यायां योगशास्त्रे श्रीकृष्णार्जुनसंवादे विभूतियोगो नाम दशमोऽध्यायः ॥ १०॥

oṃ tatsaditi śrīmadbhagavadgītāsu upaniṣatsu brahmavidyāyāṃ yogaśāstre śrīkṛṣṇārjunasaṃvāde vibhūtiyogo nāma daśamo'dhyāyaḥ || 10 ||

Thus ends the tenth chapter named Vibhūti Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Divine Manifestations,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 11
Viśvarupa Darśan Yogaḥ

Krsna - The Cosmic Window

In this chapter, Kṛṣṇa shows His Cosmic and divine form to Arjuna. Kṛṣṇa gives Arjuna the experience of Universal consciousness. For the first time, Arjuna is about to experience Kṛṣṇa's divine form. Of all the chapters in Bhagavad Gītā, this chapter, Viśvarūpa Darśan Yogaḥ, Vision of the Cosmic form, has a very special significance. It is in this chapter that Kṛṣṇa reveals His divine Self, that of Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa. Elsewhere He speaks with the authority of Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, but He is still present as the mortal human Kṛṣṇa form. Now, at Arjuna's request, He reveals His true Cosmic Self to Arjuna.

In this sense, this is the most important of all the chapters in Bhagavad Gītā, not for its philosophical or spiritual importance, but because of the direct revelation of the Divine. When the Cosmic form is revealed to Arjuna, if one is immersed in this chapter's content as he was, nothing more needs to be said to be experienced.

Divine or Delusion?

No great Master believed in spreading his words through fear and greed. All great Masters spread their words through unconditional love and compassion. That is the only way truth can spread. How to find out whether a person is an enlightened Master, an Incarnation? How to establish whether a person is enlightened or just egoistic? This is the scale: If he can give the experience, then whatever comes from him is the truth. Here Kṛṣṇa shows clearly that He is everything. He demonstrates His divinity to Arjuna. Kṛṣṇa walks His talk in this chapter.

In the Bhāgavatam (ancient Hindu epic) there is a beautiful verse that the gopī (cowherdess of Briṇdāvan), sings to Kṛṣṇa, who is everything to her:

tava kathāmṛtaṁ tapta jīvanaṁ kavibhirīritam kalmaṣāpahaṁ śravaṇamaṇgalam śrīmadātatam bhuvi grhṇanti te bhūritā janāḥ

'O Kṛṣṇa, tava kathāmṛtaṁ tapta jīvanaṁ…Your words and the words uttered about You are kathāmṛtaṁ, words of immortality, words of nectar, words both on You and by You. Just by listening to these words, You create auspiciousness in us. These words are worshipped and expressed as the highest truth by the great Ṛṣis. We who have experienced You, feel the joy again and again by speaking about You. You rejuvenate our whole being. Just by listening to these words about You and by You, we are transported to a different plane.'

If you have fallen in love with Kṛṣṇa, this is the chapter to know Him and enjoy Him. Here in this chapter He does not give any teachings. All intellectual teachings are over. He gives the experience directly: 'I am Everything.' He gives the experience of the ultimate Universal consciousness and the realization that He is present in everything. Arjuna experiences the Universal consciousness. This whole chapter is pure experience.

The first thing we need to understand is whether it is possible to have the experience of the Universal consciousness. Secondly, what is the basic qualification to experience it? Thirdly, what really happens inside our being during such an experience? These three things we shall understand from this chapter and explore the wonderful possibility of experiencing Kṛṣṇa as the Cosmic window.

Love Kṛṣṇa to Experience Kṛṣṇa

In the previous chapter, Kṛṣṇa gave the intellectual explanation that He is the Ultimate. More than an intellectual expression, this is an expression given to a person who is deeply in love. Kṛṣṇa can be God only when a person achieves the maturity of Arjuna. The truth should be declared only when a person is qualified and mature. Only when you reach the maturity of Arjuna can you experience the divinity of Kṛṣṇa. When you feel deeply connected to a person, he looks divine even though he may be quite ordinary in reality.

Śiva says in Tantra that when one drops one's fantasies, he becomes Śiva and his wife becomes Uma. He reaches the state of Śivatva, the state of Śiva, and she reaches the state of Devi. Truth can only be expressed when the listener is ready.

Kṛṣṇa rules by love. Though He was the king of the Yādava clan, He ruled not by authority and power, but by personal example of love and compassion. Those who lived with Kṛṣṇa identified with Him and loved Him beyond their own selves.

How does one attain enlightenment living a normal life?

In the Śiva Sūtra, Śiva says there is nothing wrong with a husband and wife living a normal conjugal life, but they need to drop their fantasies about one another. When we live without fantasies, the other person looks like God. Only then the other person is real.

Please understand that everybody is God, including you. But each of us carries our own idea of God and tries to put everyone else into that frame. When they do not fit into the frame, we throw the person out instead of throwing the frame. Just understand. When you are deeply connected with the other person as they are, when you can be complete and accept anybody as he or she is, you establish a divine relationship. However, to do so, you must first learn to do self-completion and accept your own self as you are. Listen, when you try to chisel each other constantly, you will only cause unhappiness and incompletions in your life. But when you do completion with yourself and completion with others, and accept everyone as they are, the whole world appears as God.

This can be achieved in two ways. Firstly, by your own tapas, your spiritual penance, you acquire maturity by undergoing this experience repeatedly. You need to keep dropping your fantasies about other people. Secondly, a Master can also give you this experience by infusing tremendous energy in you, by bringing you to his own frequency. But even to retain the energy of the Master, you need a certain level of maturity. This is what happens here in this chapter. The frequency of Kṛṣṇa's Cosmic form is too much for Arjuna to bear and he cries out to Kṛṣṇa to resume his normal form. Please understand, each one of you is divine. You are all cast in the mold of the Divine. All you need is this awareness that you too are divine and just start powerfully living and radiating the Divine.

Let us now go into the verses and examine three questions: Can Universal consciousness be experienced? What is the basic qualification for this experience? What happens when one experiences it?

These three questions are explained beautifully by Śrī Kṛṣṇa in this chapter.

I Wish To See Your Divine Form

11.4 If You think it is possible for me to see it, then please, O Lord of Yoga and all mystic power, Show me Your form of eternal Universal Self.

In the minds of many, Kṛṣṇa is considered an Incarnation. It is in this chapter that Kṛṣṇa reveals Himself as not just an Incarnation but as also the very source from which everything flows. He is the Source of all sources, the Cause of all causes, the source of all the worlds and Universes.

Arjuna has already listened from Kṛṣṇa about everything that he needs to do. Arjuna's questions have all disappeared; his doubts, his incompletions and delusions have dissolved. In the previous chapter, Kṛṣṇa explains to Arjuna who He really is.

It is not that Arjuna is not aware of the greatness of Kṛṣṇa and His divinity. It is based on his deep faith in Kṛṣṇa that Arjuna chose to have the Master assist him unarmed as his charioteer, while Duryodhana chose Kṛṣṇa's vast Yādava army.

Despite the faith that Arjuna has in Kṛṣṇa, he has self-doubts too. Doubts and faith are two sides of the same coin. You cannot have one without the other. At the intellectual level, Arjuna had shed his doubts. At the emotional level he had shed his doubts. But at the being level, at the very core of his being, Arjuna had self-doubts. He was still troubled by what he was about to do.

Arjuna has no one else to ask but Kṛṣṇa. Intuitively Arjuna sees his own Self in Kṛṣṇa. Nara, the man, meets Nārāyaṇa, the Divine. Arjuna knows at the depths of his being that Kṛṣṇa and Kṛṣṇa alone can provide the answers to the self-doubts that have risen within him.

Can Universal Consciousness be Experienced?

Step by step, Kṛṣṇa clears Arjuna's self-doubts. First, Kṛṣṇa addresses Arjuna's doubts of the intellect. Kṛṣṇa explains to him the misconceptions that Arjuna has from the literal reading of the scriptures and what he has understood to be right and wrong. 'All the people in front of you are already dead,' says the Lord, 'I eliminated them long ago; why are you then worried? Do what you need to do.'

Kṛṣṇa then clears any lingering emotional doubts that Arjuna may have by explaining to him what He, the master of the Universe, is all about. He tells Arjuna who He really is. After detailing all His glories, Kṛṣṇa says that there is no end to His divine manifestations, His vibhūti. Wherever there is something glorious, powerful and prosperous, Kṛṣṇa is in existence. Kṛṣṇa concludes, saying that there is no need for detailed knowledge, as He supports all of Existence within just a fragment of His divine Self. And now, finally, the time has come for Arjuna to see Kṛṣṇa as He truly is. Arjuna is standing on the last step. He beseeches, 'My delusion has been dispelled and I am now aware of Your divinity. Please show me now who You really are.'

mad anugrahāya paramaṁ guhyam adhyātma saṁjñitam | yat tvayokaṁ vacas tena moho 'yam vigato mam || 11.1 ||

And yet, Arjuna still hesitates. He wants to know, but he is not sure if he can bear to experience the truth. He says one phrase clearly, 'If you think I can behold Your form,' which indicates that there is already some fear in him. He also has self-doubts. Yes, Kṛṣṇa said that He had already destroyed all of Arjuna's enemies. But physically they are in front of Arjuna. He believes what Kṛṣṇa says. But his senses tell him a different story.

Here Arjuna says, 'If you think I can behold your Cosmic form, My Lord, show me Your unmasked, manifested Universal Self.' Please understand, before entering into the experience you must have the courage to take whatever comes.

With divine energy, the effect is always positive, never negative. You cannot die in the amṛtasāgara, the ocean of nectar. When it comes to the Divine, all you need to do is jump into It with your whole being. All you need to do is to relax into It for transformation.

Arjuna says:

manyase yadi tacchakhyaṁ mayā draṣṭum iti prabho | yogeśvara tato me tvaṁ darśayātmānam avyayam || 11.4 ||

'If You think I am able to behold, O My Lord, Yogeśvara, master of all mystic power, please show me Your Cosmic form.'

Many of you are like Arjuna. In fact, all of you are like Arjuna. You do not wish to take any risks. The Master has to calculate all the risks for you. You want the Master to make the experience risk-free, safe and pleasant. Unfortunately, it does not work that way. Yes, the experience is bliss, it is liberating, but that blissful experience destroys your identity, kills the ego and recreates the Divine in you.

If you wish to be as you were, do not ask for the experience. The Master's job is to transform. The Master is a surgeon, the surgeon of egos. Once you come to Him, it is a point of no return. There is no such thing as partial surrender to a Master. There is no such thing as, 'Please give me what I can take. Let me take a sip and see if I like it. If I do, I shall ask You for more. If not, I shall not take anymore.' Of course, the Master knows your readiness far better than you do. That is why He works on you in stages. As long as you are not ready, what He gives you is brain and eye candy, that's all. You can gaze in happiness and go away. The form is all that you can take. It is only when your seriousness of purpose is established that He can start working on you without fear that you will run away from the operating table. Till then you only behave under the delusion that you have surrendered. It is one more fantasy, that is all.

Arjuna is an evolved disciple. What he says only seems to reflect what an ordinary person would have said. In fact, what Arjuna implies here is far more. 'Please give me Your Cosmic vision,' Arjuna pleads, 'if it may please You. I am keen to have it, but the decision is Yours. Let what happens be decided by You,' he says to Kṛṣṇa. What he implies is this: 'I have listened all that You have said. My questions have disappeared and my delusions have evaporated. I truly understand Your greatness. May I see You in Your true form?

'I have no right to ask all this of You. It is not any penance I may have done that makes me deserve this. It is not that I have reached a level of intellectual understanding of You that makes me deserve this. It is not that I have reached the peak of devotion that makes me deserve Your vision. I have no right to demand. However, in all humility, as Your devotee, as one who surrenders to You, I ask of You to show me who You really are. Please show me Your entire splendor, Your valor, Your wisdom, Your truth and all that You really are!'

divyaṃ dadāmi te cakṣuḥ paśya me yogamaiśvaram || 11.8 ||

11.8 But you cannot see Me with these your physical eyes. Let Me give you the divine eye; behold My divine power.

In this verse, Kṛṣṇa summarizes the entire chapter as He explains the whole darśan (Vision). It needs to be read and understood as one verse.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'O Pārtha, behold the hundreds and thousands of my divine forms. These are diverse divine forms, of diverse colors, shapes and sizes. O Bhārata, see the different manifestations of Āditya, Vasu, Rudra, Aśvini Kumār, Mārut and many wonderful beings whom no one has ever seen before.'

But before He gives darśan of the Universal form, He makes an important and beautiful statement, 'O Arjuna! You cannot see my form with ordinary eyes. To behold this form, you would need divya netra, the third eye or the divine eye.

na tu māṁ śakyase draṣṭum anenaiva sva-cakṣuṣā | divyaṁ dadāmi te cakṣuḥ paśya me yogam aiśvaram || 11.8 ||

'divyaṁ dadāmi te cakṣuḥ' Let me give you the divine eye to enable you to see and experience Me.' From this verse He starts giving the Viśvarūpa darśan, vision of His Cosmic Form.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'O Arjuna, may you start seeing whatever exists, the sthāvara and the jaṅgama (immovable and movable), the Universe that no ordinary man can see. Even the great sages have not seen this sight and are not aware of it.' Here is a wonderful phenomenon. Now Kṛṣṇa gives Arjuna the power to see what is happening in the whole Universe, not only in the present, but in the past and the future also.

Darśan - Seeing the Divine Form - is Possible

Here again are the three questions that are the essence of the whole chapter.

Can the divine form be seen?

What is the qualification to see the divine form?

What really happens when you see the divine form?

It is possible to see the divine form. There are many enlightened Masters who have experienced this consciousness.

Here is a deep instance from the life of THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM BHAGAVAN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM: After nine long years of penance, He was completely frustrated at one point. He wondered if He was wasting His whole life reading books, following what the earlier masters said and applying them in His life. He wondered, was there really something called enlightenment or was it a waste of His whole life? At one point He began to fear that He had wasted the very essence of His life, His youth, by pouring all of it into tapas or penance. Was it really worth the sacrifice?

All of a sudden at one point in time, He felt Himself going into deep depression. Actually, He later realized that this was not depression. It was a desperate situation, a deep personal quest and an urge to do or die. One needs to reach this stage before one can realize the truth. Whatever had to be done as spiritual penance, He had done and had not left even an inch untried. For example, at one point in time, He created a wall of fire six feet in diameter, sat inside it and chanted continuously so that He would not fall asleep. In this way, He had tried hundreds of techniques to the best of His ability. Since nothing was still happening to Him, He concluded that there was either no such thing as enlightenment or it was something He could not achieve.

He strongly began to think that enlightenment was simply something that some people were cheating humanity with, for their own ego-fulfillment. He began to doubt and lose faith in the whole system. The photo of Ramakrishna, who had all along been His inspiration, the photo He used to worship everyday, He threw away in disgust, depression and anger and with such force that the glass frame broke.

At that time He was staying in Omkareshwar, in a forest in Madhya Pradesh, on the banks of the holy river Narmadā. He had His rosary, with which He used to say His prayers and do His penance for hours together. It was His constant companion and was something to which He had given utmost respect, almost like His life-line.

In His anger and depression, He threw the rudrākṣa (sacred energy beads) into the river Narmada and cast the mantra out of His mind.

He decided, 'No more meditation, no more spirituality. Enough!' He had had enough of the game being played by the so-called enlightened Masters. He simply threw everything away, dropped everything.

He then walked into the river Narmada with His eyes closed. The river was at least sixty feet deep at that point. He just kept walking with His eyes closed. Fear gripped Him but He continued. When He opened my eyes, He was on the opposite bank of the river. Till date He has no idea what happened. He has no idea whether there were rocks all along the path He walked on the river, or whether He floated or whether the river parted. But He did not have the resolve to walk back through the river again, that much He knew! To return to the point He started from, He had to walk to the nearest bridge, many miles away.

The seventh day after this incident, He joined the Masters in their game! The experience of enlightenment and Cosmic consciousness simply happened to Bhagavān and it never left Him afterwards.

So to answer this question, 'Can this be experienced?', the definitive answer is yes. This is the solid truth; a promise that this can be experienced. It is definitely possible to experience this truth, this Cosmic form, in our lives. Never think, 'This is not for me.' It is for everybody. However, unless you are sure of the possibility of having this beautiful, intense experience, listening to all this is a waste of time. If you think this is one more story, do not waste your time here.

The first thing that you need to know is that it is possible. Only then what Kṛṣṇa says will work on our being. If these words of Kṛṣṇa are to work on you, you must first be convinced of the possibility of it happening to you and know that these are not just words. These words of Kṛṣṇa are not mere words; they are not mere scriptural words. These words are techniques that go deep inside you and work on you with amazing results. All that you need is complete trust in the Master that what He says will happen.

Who Can See the Divine Form?

Next, what is the qualification?

Basically, by giving this experience to Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa proves that there is no need for any qualification because Arjuna himself has no qualification. In fact, you are the Arjuna who missed Kṛṣṇa in an earlier form. You are here now, listening or reading, not by any mere accident or divine coincidence. You are here now for a reason. That is qualification enough. Make sure that you do not miss Kṛṣṇa again this time.

One of the problems is that even if you are qualified, you do not have the trust or belief that you are qualified. This is because society and religious preachers have blamed you continuously for many things and created a kind of guilt and self-doubt in you.

Allowing the Master to enrich you is the best way of enriching yourself. You are fortunate to fall in tune with the great thought of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. After understanding the verse, we will enter into a meditation to have at least a glimpse of what the Cosmic Kṛṣṇa gave Arjuna. Arjuna had no qualification to receive what he got from Kṛṣṇa. When He could give it to Arjuna, why not to us?

First, we acknowledge the possibility of having the experience. We have all understood that it is possible to have it. Next, the qualification: we have all understood that simply by being here we are qualified for the experience. Somebody once asked Bhagavān Ramaṇa Maharishi, enlightened Master from Bharat, what was the qualification for enlightenment. Bhagavān replied that merely being alive, simply existing, was the only qualification required. At the most, the only qualification can be said to be openness. You are qualified by your very presence here.

The Divine Eye - Divya Cakṣu

Next, what happens when you have the experience? Kṛṣṇa's words:

na tu māṁ śakyase draṣṭum anenaiva sva-cakṣuṣā | divyaṁ dadāmi te cakṣuḥ paśya me yogam aiśvaram || 11.8 ||

'Arjuna, you cannot see Me with these ordinary eyes. You need the divine eye, the third eye, divyacakṣu. To see My Cosmic form, I give you the divine eye.'

What is this divine eye? A beautiful incident from the life of THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM BHAGAVAN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM when He was twelve years old.

During that age, He used to do a particular meditation, or rather He used to play with a technique given to Him by a Master. When He was about ten years old the great master Annāmalai Swamigal, disciple of Rāmaṇa Maharṣi, first taught Him the technique of exploring to see where thoughts originated.

Once when He visited Annāmalai Swamigal with His parents, he was addressing a group of seekers and was saying, 'We are not the body, we are ātman, the spirit. No pain or suffering touches us.' Bhagavān wondered how this could be, for if His mother beat Him, He could feel the pain. To experiment, He went home and cut His thigh with a knife to see if He had pain or not. He bled profusely.

Naturally, it not only hurt Him, but He had to be taken to the hospital for the wound to be stitched, with more scolding from His mother. He had both pain and suffering. He wondered why this Swami had taught us such a thing as 'no suffering or pain'. Experimenting on others was easy.

Bhagavān approached the Swami and related what had happened to Him. First Annāmalai Swamigal asked Bhagavān, 'Did I ask you to go and cut yourself?' He then made a profound statement that transformed Bhagavān's life. He said, 'You may have pain and suffering now, but do not worry. Your attitude of analyzing and searching for the truth, your courage to experiment with truth, will liberate you from all pains, so go ahead.' Annāmalai Swamigal then advised Bhagavān to start searching for the source of His thoughts. Of course, at that age Bhagavān was only irritated by his comments and His attention was on the fruits and sweets that devotees had brought him. He was hoping Annāmalai Swamigal would give Him some in consolation!.

However, after a few days Bhagavān began to playfully and casually try out the technique of trying to see the origin of His thoughts. He did not do this with any expectation or idea. All He knew was what the Swami had told Him that He would go beyond pain or suffering if He did this technique. He had no concept of God, Brahman, ātman or jñāna.

One evening, at the foothills of the sacred Arunachala hill, Bhagavān was sitting on a rock known locally as Pavalakundru, the Coral Rock, trying out the same technique with eyes closed. He had fallen into deep meditation.

After some time, suddenly something opened, something seemed to happen inside His being, a feeling of being pulled or sucked inside.

The next moment it was as if a door had opened inside Him and He had complete 360-degree vision, both laterally and vertically. He could see on all four sides – the temple that was behind Him, the hill that was in front of Him, and the city that was on His left and right. He could see vertically too – the sky, the rock on which He was sitting, again the temple behind Him.

For normal people who have only a maximum of 120-degree vision, this is very difficult to comprehend. Not only was Bhagavān able to see all around, He was also able to feel that whatever He was seeing was Him. Whether they were plants or rocks or the city or the hill, whatever He could see, He felt they were all just Him. The experience was so intense and ecstatic that it was more than three or four hours before He opened His eyes. He felt feverish with bliss and this mood continued for three days.

But after this Bhagavān was overtaken by a fear that there was something wrong with Him. He thought a ghost had possessed Him and He decided never to go to that rock again. He even began to avoid that route which He normally took.

Bhagavān related His experience to his guru, Mata Vibhudānanda Devi (Kuppammal). She held Bhagavān's hand and seeing the energy, exclaimed, 'You are not possessed by any ghost. You are possessed by God!' She encouraged Bhagavān to continue with meditation but He never dared to do so for the next six months and was even afraid to close His eyes.

Bhagavān also related His experience to a close friend of His. He told him about His 360-degree vision and His not knowing what was happening to Him, etc. Bhagavān's friend did not believe Him until He proved it to him by telling him about an ant climbing up the tree behind him, and correctly telling which side of the coin that he hid in his hand was exposed. The friend ran away from Bhagavān in terror. But despite the fear that Bhagavān experienced, the whole body was bubbling with joy and ecstasy.

So welcome was the feeling, that He had a small temptation to go to the rock again. He never really understood what had happened. A year later another enlightened person gave Him the explanation; the seeking, however, started after this experience. Nine years of penance followed. All this penance was in order to have this experience again. When it did come the next time, both body and mind were ready and the experience stayed within Bhagavān's being.

The vision of 360 degrees is what Kṛṣṇa means by divyacakṣu, trinetra, divine eye or third eye, also called ājñā cakra. When this eye opens you will see 360 degrees not only in the horizontal but in the vertical dimension too. You will see the whole Existence as You and experience it as You. This experience is what Kṛṣṇa calls Cosmic consciousness.

Bhagavān felt that everything He saw around Him was living, just as how we feel our living bodies, expanding the body consciousness to the Universal consciousness. When you feel the whole Universe as you would your own body, it can be called a cosmic experience. Unfortunately, we do not feel alive even within our own bodies.

Just as Bhagavān was frightened when He had His first experience, Arjuna too was frightened when he started seeing Kṛṣṇa's cosmic form. In such instances, a living Master is required for help and guidance.

'Let me give you the third eye, to enable you to experience the Universal consciousness.' You need to understand that after this verse, neither Kṛṣṇa nor Arjuna speaks. Suddenly, it is Sañjaya who is speaking. After the first chapter in Bhagavad Gītā until now, there is no word from Sañjaya. But here it is he who is speaking. This is a symbolic representation. Arjuna is unable to speak because he is in the ecstatic experience. Kṛṣṇa does not speak because his voice is beyond audibility. His voice is in the Cosmic frequency, which is not audible to us. So Sañjaya interprets.

11.14 Dhanañjaya, filled with wonder, his hair standing on end, then bowed his head to the God and spoke with joined palms.

These verses show the unlimited, never-ending, wonderful, all-pervading nature of the Lord. Anyone who has had this experience is reborn. At one level this experience is one of boundarilessness. The body expands to fill everything. The entire Universe is part of the body. There is no separation of the individual and the whole. The whole is part and the part is whole. At another level the whole Universe exists within you. You are everything that you see around you. The grass outside the hut, the dog in the distance, the tree beyond, every single entity, animate and inanimate, resonates within you, as a part of you.

In that mood, plucking a flower hurts. A wild animal responds peacefully to your presence. There is no violence in Cosmic consciousness. There is only completion and inclusion.

This is what Arjuna saw in the Universal form, an unlimited number of mouths, eyes and wonderful visions. The form was decorated with many celestial ornaments and bore many divine upraised weapons. He wore celestial garlands and garments. Many divine scents were smeared all over His body. All was wondrous, brilliant, unlimited, all-expanding.

Here he sees an unlimited number of mouths and eyes in Kṛṣṇa. Now Arjuna sees 360 degrees in both horizontal and vertical dimensions. He sees the whole universe, all the people on the battlefield; all of them inside Kṛṣṇa, as the Universal consciousness. He sees the Whole as his own being.

There is no boundary to Kṛṣṇa's universal form. The word Viṣṇu, which is his real form, means one who expands infinitely. The splendor that Sañjaya talks about is beyond anything the mind can comprehend, because it is the source of all splendor.

Notice, it is Sañjaya speaking these words, not Arjuna. Sañjaya is far from the battlefield and has been given the power to see what happens on the battlefield so that he can describe the events to his king Dhṛitarāṣṭra. Though Kṛṣṇa says that this form is being shown only to Arjuna, by default Sañjaya has the great fortune to witness and participate in this vision.

Arjuna is awestruck and is in silence. He is yet to speak. What he has witnessed is beyond anything that he could have imagined or asked for. But the silence is a very active silence. It is a silence in which he experiences the truth of Kṛṣṇa. It is a silence in which he is actively participating in the process and is being immersed. Those who experience do not talk. Those who talk have not experienced.

Sañjaya then summarizes Arjuna's reaction to the divine form of Kṛṣṇa in the last few verses. Arjuna is still silent and it is Sañjaya who describes what happens. What Arjuna saw was beyond his understanding. Wherever he looked was Kṛṣṇa; Kṛṣṇa in many forms, many shapes, many non-forms and non-shapes. There are no words to describe what Arjuna saw. How does one describe what is beyond the mind, beyond logic, beyond words, beyond all comprehension?

In the body of the supreme Lord, Arjuna saw the whole Universe divided in different ways and at the same time united in one form. The Universe is divided into many parts such as the sun, moon, earth, planets and other bodies in space. Here he sees all of them as one form. You need to understand this description, which is so beautiful. Later we shall enter into a meditation and pray to the Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa to give us all a glimpse of what Arjuna received.

Arjuna is able to see the whole and at the same time all the parts. Even the word hologram that we now so commonly use to describe the totality of something preserved in a fragment does no justice to Arjuna's vision. In a hologram, one needs to make the effort to see the whole in the fragment. In this divine vision granted to Arjuna, the whole existed with the part, with no separation, no discontinuity. The whole was part and the part was whole.

Of all the people on the battlefield of Kurukṣetra, only Arjuna had this great fortune to behold the Cosmic Vision of Kṛṣṇa. Only he was granted the boon of divine vision to see the entire Universe within Kṛṣṇa. The vision that Arjuna beheld enveloped him completely. He was, in fact, part of that vision. In addition, he was the experience of that vision as well.

Hands trembling, hair on end, tears in his eyes, unable to comprehend what he was witnessing, Arjuna bowed down deep in front of his erstwhile friend and started speaking in deep ecstasy.

Arjuna was not afraid of Kṛṣṇa. What he now felt towards Kṛṣṇa did not arise from his mind. It was involuntary. It was intuitive. You cannot make your hair stand on end even if you try the whole night and day. Ecstasy cannot be willed. Arjuna is in adoration. He is in awe. He realizes that he is in the presence of an energy that has no equal. Nothing he has ever experienced before comes close to this. His being opens while his mind rests.

In fact, Arjuna at this moment is beyond the five defined bhāvas. He is in the state of mahā bhava - the state beyond the five bhāvas.

11.24 Seeing You, Your form touching the sky, flaming in many colors, mouths wide open, large fiery eyes, O Viṣṇu, I find neither courage nor peace; I am frightened.

As Arjuna is in the same consciousness as the Lord, this verse should actually start with 'Bhagavān uvāca' meaning 'the Lord says!' These statements are said to come from Him for us to record.

These are such beautiful ways that he describes the form. You may wonder why he does so. Please understand, he does so to inspire us to work to achieve this form and this experience, to move in this path. Arjuna is showing us the way.

He says, 'O Lord! I can see all the gods and deities in Your body. I can see the special union of living entities. I can see Brahma seated on the lotus flower. I can see all the sages and divine serpents. O Viśveśvara, Lord of the Universe, I see many arms, stomachs, faces, eyes and your limitless form. O Viśvarūpa, Universal form, I cannot see your beginning, middle or end.'

aneka-bahūdara vaktra netraṁ paśyāmi tvāṁ sarvato 'nanta-rūpaṁ | nāntaṁ na madhyam na punas tavādiṁ paśyāṃi visveśvara viśvarūpa || 11.16 ||

As a matter of fact, when you begin to see 360 degrees in both horizontal and vertical dimensions, there really is no beginning, middle or end to see. It is a continuum. It is like seeing one of these special movies on a circular screen. It is an infinite circle. The Divine is an infinite circle, with no beginning, no end and therefore no middle. Without a beginning and an end, to talk about the middle makes no sense.

The form is difficult to see in its sheer glowing radiance, spreading on all sides like blazing fire or the immeasurable brightness of the sun. Yet Arjuna sees this glowing form everywhere adorned with various crowns and discs. He sees Kṛṣṇa wearing the diadem, holding the mace and discus.

Arjuna says, 'Your magnificence is shining everywhere, from all sides, difficult to see. You are blazing from all sides with the luster of the sun, limitless.'

Part of what Arjuna sees here is the traditional representation of Lord Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu is always depicted with His weapons of mace and discus, the gada and cakra, and wearing the jewel-studded crown. Viṣṇu is also depicted resting on the ocean of milk upon the giant serpent Adiseśa, with Brahma rising from Viṣṇu's navel upon a lotus flower.

Some of what he sees is formless energy. He perceives radiance more powerful than a thousand suns, blazing and dazzling, impossible to look at even with his newly endowed divine eye. What Arjuna sees is beyond any sensory perception, something that could be experienced in that moment in time, impossible to express.

Suddenly the scene changes in these verses. Arjuna is terrified. What he is seeing now is quite different from what he expected when he asked to see Kṛṣṇa's divine form.

Arjuna is now incoherent. What he keeps saying is neither logical nor well thought out. What he sees he reproduces to the best of his mental abilities. Arjuna is convinced, seeing the Universal form of Kṛṣṇa, that what he sees is the supreme being, the puruṣa, the imperishable, the very origin of all, the Eternal.

He says, 'You are without origin, middle or end with unlimited power. You spread throughout the heavens and through all other directions. O supreme soul, Paramātman, after having seen your wonderful form, all the worlds and the whole universe is trembling with fear. All the celestial beings are shuddering before this form and entering into this formless form, some of them afraid, offering prayers with folded hands, along with hosts of realized sages praising this form in silent acceptance and wonderment.'

There is no other record so clear about the Cosmic frequency of the Universal form as in the Gītā. What Arjuna perceives is what is always present, but which he normally has no capability to see. Now he sees Kṛṣṇa in all His manifestations, from the highest to the lowest frequency levels of energy with nothing filtered.

But suddenly the form seems to change from the magnificent, comforting and expanded form, to one that is now disturbing. It is still not clear to Arjuna what is happening, but he can anticipate that something he is about to see is not going to be as pleasant as what he had seen so far.

What Arjuna sees disturbs him, 'O All pervading Viṣṇu! I see You with your many radiating colors, burning fire in your gaping mouth, heating up the entire Universe with radiance, touching the sky, and Your form unnerves me. My heart trembles in fear and I have no courage or peace to behold You.'

Until now Arjuna was saying there was no beginning, middle or end. Now he says the form is touching the sky; an indication that he is settling, coming down from the experience. 'Seeing your gaping mouth, your great glowing eyes, overcome by fear, I can no longer maintain my mental steadiness or equilibrium.'

Please understand, as long as you want to maintain the equilibrium of your mind, you will be in this mad world. There is no such thing as equilibrium. What we think of as equilibrium is not so.

Arjuna says he wants equilibrium, meaning that he wants his mind to be under his intellectual control. He wants to know the cause and effect and feel that they are in his control. As long as these are under your control, you feel as if you are a leader; your ego is strong. But the moment these are taken away from you, you feel at a loss and no more a leader. You are just a drop in the ocean. He is afraid of that and is not able to stay in that same state.

The wave in the ocean is part of the ocean. As long as it feels itself to be part of the ocean, there is no separation. However, when the wave experiences its own identity, creates its own identity, it no longer feels itself a part of the ocean. It feels itself to be a separate entity. When it is time to merge back into that ocean, it is afraid. When it looks back at the ocean with a feeling of separation, it feels afraid.

When Arjuna had his first glimpse of the Cosmic Vision of Kṛṣṇa, he identified with the vision. There was no separation. Now, suddenly there is separation. Along with separation there is fear.

विज्ञातुमिच्छामि भवन्तमाद्यं न हि प्रजानामि तव प्रवृत्तिम् ॥ ११-३१॥ ākhyāhi me ko bhavānugrarūpo namo'stu te devavara prasīda vijñātumicchāmi bhavantamādyaṃ na hi prajānāmi tava pravṛttim || 11.31 ||

11.31 Tell me who You are, so fierce in form; salutations to You, O supreme; have mercy. Indeed I know not Your purpose, but I desire to know You, the Original being.

In these verses Arjuna expresses his discomfort. Arjuna says earlier: 'I see O Lord! All the manifestations of Śiva, Āditya, Vāsu and Viśvadeva, Aśvin, Mārut, Gandharva, the forefathers, Yakṣa, Asura and all the celestial beings and demi-gods, all rolled in You in wonder, all part of Your Cosmic consciousness. Whatever You are is divine energy. O Mighty Armed One, all the planets with all the demi-gods are disturbed, shaken by Your form with many faces, eyes, arms, legs, thighs and bellies and Your many terrible teeth. As they are disturbed, so am I.'

Now he slowly comes down. From this verse we should say, 'Arjuna uvāca' meaning 'Arjuna says'. It is no longer the divine state that Arjuna talks from. The moment he started feeling fear, he descended to his normal state. You should understand that it is only your fear that separates you from Cosmic consciousness.

When Arjuna says, 'So am I, pravyathitās tathāham (11.23)', that he is frightened, he becomes Arjuna, the man.

Fear - The Destroyer of Ecstasy

There are two things that make you a human - the instinct to possess and the instinct to survive. The instinct to survive arises out of fear, from the svādiṣṭhāna cakra (fear energy center in your body), and the instinct to possess comes out of greed, from the mūlādhāra cakra (greed energy center in your body). This sums it up. Here the instinct to survive has appeared and he has become Arjuna, the man. We do not understand that when we drop the instinct to survive, we become Kṛṣṇa; we exist forever. We become Bhagavān, the Universal consciousness. But most often, we hold onto the instinct to survive. Now Arjuna slowly comes down and becomes Arjuna, the man.

Arjuna exclaims, 'I see all the sons of Dhṛitarāṣṭra, along with their allied kings, Bhīṣma, Droṇa, Karṇa and other chief soldiers rushing into Your fearful mouths. I see some trapped with their heads smashed between Your teeth, ground into nothing.'

He describes the whole scene. He sees the heavy losses on both sides; his own side, his warriors and generals, but even heavier losses on the other side, including Bhīṣma who is invincible, Droṇa and Karṇa who are unconquerable. By inference he sees his own victory in the end.

In the beginning Arjuna sees what he wished to see. He sees what he believes to be the Cosmic form of the great Viṣṇu in His traditional attire and weapons, surrounded by Gods and sages. The form changed suddenly into a terrifying one of death, all-consuming and terror-inspiring, to which the entire Universe bowed down in fear.

From this macro perspective, Arjuna comes down to see the same destruction being played out at the level of the battlefield at Kurukṣetra. His enemies, the great warriors arrayed against him in battle, fly into the gaping mouth of destruction like moths into fire. Arjuna sees with convincing reality, the destruction of all the great warriors who would have been expected to give him trouble. However, this scene does not fill him with peace and comfort. Arjuna is terrified at this vision of destruction. The destruction of those whom he perceives as his mortal enemies leaves him with no comfort. The truth is that Arjuna is not in control. He has no clue about what is happening to him and around him. He is in the presence of a primal force before which all that is obvious is his own insignificance. Victory and defeat seem to make no difference. The vision of destruction implies that he too is mortal. Arjuna is terrified.

'Who are You?', asks Arjuna plaintively. 'What are You here for? What are You doing? You are so fierce. You are not the form I asked for. There seems to be some mistake!'

'I see men disappearing into You as rivers rush into the mighty oceans. Like moths rushing into fire, I see creatures speed into destruction within You.'

'You are not the compassionate Lord whose glories I heard from You. You are not who I thought You were. I needed You to comfort me. Instead, You terrify me.'

'Have mercy upon me.'

ākhyāhi me ko bhāvan ugra-rūpo namo 'stu te deva-vara prasādi | vijñātum icchāmi bhavantam ādyaṁ na hi prajānāmi tava pravṛt-tim || 11.31 ||

Death is the ultimate fear. Even the great warrior Arjuna trembles when faced with death. It is not that Arjuna is not aware of the inevitability of death or the nature of death. For a long time now Kṛṣṇa has been educating Arjuna on the perishability of the body-mind and the imperishability of the spirit. Arjuna has fully understood. Yet, Arjuna is petrified. What is Arjuna so afraid of?

One thing, Arjuna does not expect the Cosmic form of Kṛṣṇa to be anything but loving and compassionate. Kṛṣṇa can be the friend, the master, the beloved, the child, the mother and all combined. In every one of these moods, in each bhāva, Kṛṣṇa is still lovable, still reachable. However, in the form that Kṛṣṇa has presented now, the all-devouring monster as it were, Arjuna is unable to comprehend any aspect of Kṛṣṇa that he has known.

For the first time, Arjuna realizes that the Master cannot be predicted. He now knows that the Master cannot be put in a frame. The primal energy that the Master is has to be experienced in whatever manner it is presented, without expectations and fears.

Nature and Existence are neither cruel nor kind. The very term 'compassion' has a different meaning in the Cosmic dictionary. It is not the sympathy offered by each of us to another with or without any real feeling. It is not kindness. It is not the desire to be doing 'good,' whatever that looks like to us. True compassion is the result of experiencing that we are one with all of Existence. There is no 'other'.

It is so easy to fall in love with a handsome Master. Kṛṣṇa is the most beautiful of all the gods. He is so easy to fall in love with. To fall in love with a terrifying Kāli or an impassive Śiva is far more difficult. When you do, you expect the form to be different too. You need to be a Ramakrishna to accept and love Mother Kāli who dances on dead bodies. You need to be a Śaṅkara to fall in tune with Śiva who is forever in silent contemplation.

But anyone can love Kṛṣṇa, and everyone does. No one expects Kṛṣṇa to be terrifying. So when Kṛṣṇa presents another form to Arjuna, the ground literally slips from under Arjuna's feet. He has no support. He does not know where to turn for help.

So Arjuna pleads, 'Please have mercy upon me. Tell me who You are - vijñātum icchāmi bhavantam ādyaṁ. Tell me why You are here. I would like to know. I bow down to You - namo 'stu te deva-vara prasādi.'

11.32 Śrī Bhagavān says: I am the mighty world-destroying time. I am now destroying the worlds. Even without you, none of the warriors standing in the hostile armies shall live.

तस्मात्त्वमुत्तिष्ठ यशो लभस्व जित्वा शत्रून् भुङ्क्ष्व राज्यं समृद्धम् ।

11.33 Get up and gain glory. Conquer the enemies and enjoy the prosperous kingdom. I have slain all these warriors; you are a mere instrument, O Savyasācī (Arjuna).

द्रोणं च भीष्मं च जयद्रथं च कर्णं तथान्यानपि योधवीरान् ।
मया हतांस्त्वं जहि मा व्यथिष्ठा युध्यस्व जेतासि रणे सपत्नान् ॥ ११-३४॥

11.34 Droṇa, Bhīṣma, Jayādṛta, Karṇa, and other brave warriors have already been slain by Me; destroy them. Do not be afraid; fight and you shall conquer your enemies in battle.

Kṛṣṇa explains in these verses what He really is. 'I am time, kālosmi' says Kṛṣṇa. 'I devour and destroy the world, loka-kṣaya-kṛt.'

kālosmi loka-kṣaya-kṛt pravṛddho lokān samāhartum iha pravṛttaḥ | ṛte 'pi tvāṁ na bhaviṣyanti sarve ye' vasthitaḥ pratyanīkeṣu yodhāḥ || 11.32 ||

This is one of the most potent truths uttered by Kṛṣṇa in Gītā. He has earlier talked to Arjuna about ātman, about rebirth, about the nature of karma, about doing work without getting attached to the result of work and about His glories.

For the first time, He takes off His mask and says matter-of-factly, 'I am the Destroyer.' He pulls no punches in responding to Arjuna's query, 'Who are you, and what is your purpose?'

'I am kāla, time,' says the Lord, 'and I destroy.' Time never stands still. It moves on. Nothing can stop the flow of time. Nothing can bring back time. Nothing can move time forward. Time destroys.

The future constantly moves into the present, and then into the past. At the frequency of our life, we can only see the present and remember what we can of the past. The sad part is that though we can only experience the present, we constantly try to escape the present. We are forever caught in the fantasies of a future we know nothing about and the regrets of a past we never really lived when it was our present.

Our entire story is one of missed time. We destroy time. We allow time to destroy us. We miss and kill the present, which is the only facet of time that is available to us. Instead of being where the present is and shaping our future, we fantasize and let the present as well as the future be destroyed.

The only certainty in our life is that when time moves on, it is forever lost. However much we may regret and repent, nothing will change what has happened. But we do have the power at the moment of the present to rewrite our future. Every human being has the freedom and freewill to choose his action at the present moment. He can let go by default and claim that whatever happened was predestined. Predestination is simply the choice that we did not exercise.

Only when we are aware and complete in the present moment can we rewrite our future. Not when it is still the future and not when it slips into the past. The first is impossible and the latter is too late. By being grounded in the present state of completion, one can become aware of the future and one can shape one's future. We need to use all our intelligence, energy and creativity to live blissfully in this moment, not in the incomplete thoughts about the future or regrets about the past.

Kṛṣṇa is stating a simple fact here. 'With or without you,' He says, 'all these warriors will be dead. As Time, I shall devour them. It is not you who are the cause. You can be the superficial reason. By being the instrument of their destruction, be the gainer of fame, wealth and power.'

tasmāt tvam uttiṣṭha yaśo labhasva jitvā śatrūn bhuṅkṣva rājyaṁ samṛddham | mayaivaite nihatāḥ pūrvam eva nimitta-mātraṁ bhava savya-sācin || 11.33 ||

It is easy to interpret these words of Kṛṣṇa to mean that the future is predestined, since He says all these enemies of Arjuna will be destroyed. From this we can even interpret that His role is to protect the good and destroy the evil.

As Mahākāla, time personified, Kṛṣṇa destroys all, the good and the bad. Time does not differentiate. Time does not keep accounts of whether you did good deeds or bad. Time moves on and destroys the present into past, future into present and past. As time, Kṛṣṇa is neutral. He just is. He knows what will happen in the future and yet He does not influence it. As time, He lets happen what happens. He is the supreme energy that just flows.

When one is in completion with Kṛṣṇa, when one surrenders to Him, to His Will, things happen as they should. There is no interference on our part. We do what we ought to, what we need to, without worrying about what ought to happen and how. We then are in the flow of time; we are in the flow of Kṛṣṇa's energy.

When we resist and try to have things the way we wish them to be, rather than the way they would be, we get in the way. Like the rock that gets pounded by the river and eventually gets reduced to fine dust, we too get reduced to nothing by time. By imitating the reed in the river that bends offering no resistance, we can flow with time.

When Kṛṣṇa speaks of destroying and wiping out the world, He is talking about the destruction of the illusory physical and material world. He is the destroyer of fantasies, He is the destroyer of identities, He is the destroyer of egos and He is the destroyer of all that is unreal. As He has said earlier on, what gets destroyed is the shell, the perishable body-mind, not the imperishable ātman. What the Mahākāla, time, destroys, is the psychodrama that is being played out on the battlefield.

It is important to understand what Kṛṣṇa means in these words. As the supreme consciousness, He too is the energy of Śiva, the Rejuvenator. Śiva is not the Destroyer as He is made out to be. He recreates by destroying. There can be no creation if there is no destruction. There can be no life without death. Śiva's aspect of Kālabhairava is the time that Kṛṣṇa refers to. He is the controller of past, present and future and all that happens in these time zones.

When one surrenders to this supreme consciousness, one loses all fear of time. One completes with time. One flows with time. Whatever one does is the right thing at the right time. When one loses fear of time, one also loses fear of death. All that dies is recreated.

Arjuna expressed his dilemma earlier as one of having to destroy his elders, his teachers and his relatives. He wondered whether he was causing the destruction of his entire lineage by doing this. In truth, Arjuna was fighting against the destruction of his own root thought patterns, his saṁskāras, past memories of parental, teacher related and other conditionings that were difficult to destroy. This great war is really the fight between Arjuna and his root thought patterns, saṁskāras.

Arjuna now reaches the third stage of his perception of Kṛṣṇa's Cosmic form. In the first stage, Arjuna's expectations of the glorious Universal form of Kṛṣṇa were fulfilled. He saw Kṛṣṇa the way He expected: with His crown, discus and mace, with Brahma rising on a lotus flower from Viṣṇu's navel.

Even as he was getting used to the enormity of the vision that he beheld, Arjuna found this form replaced by a terrible, all-devouring form of Kṛṣṇa that filled Arjuna with fear. Arjuna cries out: 'Who are you? Why are you here?'

11.43 You are the Father of this world, moving and unmoving. You are to be adored by this world. You are the greatest Guru; there is none who exists equal to You. O Being of unequalled power, how then can there be another, superior to You in the three worlds?

11.44 Therefore, bowing down, I prostrate my body before You and crave Your forgiveness, adorable Lord.

Even as a father forgives his son, a friend his friend, a lover his beloved, You should, O Deva, forgive me. Arjuna is afraid again. Having seen what he has seen and understanding the unlimitedness of Kṛṣṇa's form, he remembers that all this while he had treated Kṛṣṇa like a friend, so casually. Remorse fills his being.

Arjuna's worry is not fear of any reprisal, now that he knows who Kṛṣṇa is. It is guilt that bothers him. 'I called You by Your caste name, Yādava,' Arjuna cries out, 'I called You, 'Hey friend, Hey Kṛṣṇa'. I knew not Whom I was addressing, Whom I was dealing with. Please forgive me.' 'How could I have done this? Please forgive me for the love I had for You that made me careless in addressing You. Bear with me; forgive me as a father would a son, a lover his beloved and a friend, his mate.

Completion with Master is Enlightenment

As his friend, Kṛṣṇa was the reality to Arjuna. He took liberties with his friend because He was so real to him. But his updated intelligence of Kṛṣṇa's Cosmic form shook him up so badly that he was now consumed by guilt. It was because of the intense devotion that Arjuna had for Kṛṣṇa, that Kṛṣṇa gave him the invaluable gift of His divine form. Had Kṛṣṇa not considered him worthy, Arjuna would not have seen his Cosmic form.

All our life, guilt rules us from our past. Whatever we do, we do with the intelligence available to us at that point in time. Often, what we did before seems wrong to us and we feel guilty. We start doubting our self and doubting others. There is no greater sin than carrying such guilt and self-doubt. What we did was not sinful; to carry the guilt with us is sinful. When we complete with the guilt pattern, we drop the guilt and self-doubt. With the power of completion, a deep imprint is made within our self which is far more powerful than carrying the guilt and doubt.

Arjuna is demonstrating to the rest of us the power of completion with the Master, the ultimate relationship; in this case his incompletion is the guilt that seems to arise from the deepest of love.

One of the important complications you carry in your life is doubt about yourself and doubt about your Master. You will project that self-doubt on your Master. Complete with that self-doubt. Only then you will have complete relation with the Master.

In one sense, Arjuna does not wish to carry that self-doubt and guilt with Kṛṣṇa. With integrity and authenticity, he completes with his guilt, his self-doubt and drops it in front of his friend, Lord and Master saying, 'Forgive me.'

Fear concerns the future. We can never be afraid of the past; it is dead and gone. Guilt and remorse plague us from the past. We need not have done it or we could have done it differently are the incompletions that we carry in the present. One by one these negativities pour out of Arjuna and he is getting cleansed and complete in the presence of the Master.

Completion with Master is enlightenment. If you just have completion with the Master, nothing else is required. His space will just gush into you. His space will just raise your inner space.

From Friendship to Enlightened Relationship

Arjuna is one of the greatest examples of sakha bhāva, friendship relationship between master and disciple. It is the immediate effect of realizing the true nature of Kṛṣṇa, especially in His destructive form, that terrifies Arjuna, that makes him afraid.

Sakha bhāva is not a relationship of equals. A disciple cannot be equal to the Master. Even when a disciple becomes enlightened and in that sense at the same level as the Master, the mood of the disciple would be one of sheer gratitude. It is after enlightenment that a disciple realizes the true nature of the Master and the real master-disciple relationship flowers. The disciple imbibes the nature of his Master, he communes with the Master and this is how the lineage of great Masters is sustained.

In true sakha bhāva, everyone is a friend, not just the Master. One turns non-judgmental and respects everyone around as an expression of divinity. In one sense this is the problem that Arjuna has in waging war with his clansmen, who are his enemies. As an extension of his sakha bhāva relationship with Kṛṣṇa, he finds it difficult to hate his clansmen enough to fight and kill them. He gives many reasons but these reasons are only excuses. He has moved from sakha bhāva, friendship, to mahā bhāva, an enlightened relationship. It is this transition that brings out the residual guilt in him.

11.46 O thousand armed Universal form! I wish to see Your form with crown, four-armed with mace and disc in Your hand. I yearn to see You in that form.

Arjuna now makes his final plea in these verses. 'Show me Your form that I am familiar with,' he says, 'the One that I am comfortable with. I am grateful and overwhelmed by the Visions that You have shown me, but what I am comfortable with is Your four-handed form holding the discus and mace, as the Protector of the universe. I am not comfortable, I am indeed fearful of the terrifying form of You as the Destroyer, however real it may be.'

kirīṭinaṁ gadinaṁ cakrahastam icchāmi tvāṁ draṣṭumahaṁ tathaiva | tenaiva rūpeṇa caturbhujena sahasrabāho bhava viśvamūrte || 11.46 ||

All of us are in the same situation as Arjuna. We all have fixed ideas of what divinity is, what motherhood is, what love is and what friendship is. Divinity is benign, comforting, protecting, nurturing, forgiving and all that is sweet and nice. So are motherhood, love and friendship. Existence does not work that way. Existence does not differentiate between good and bad, between beautiful and ugly. It is we who make judgments and create emotions within us to promote those judgments.

In the Viṣṇu Sahasraṇāma, which is recited by Bhīṣma as he was awaiting his liberation, he describes Viṣṇu as 'śāntākāraṁ bhujaga śayanaṁ padmanābhaṁ sureśaṁ'. 'Peaceful, emanating bliss' is how Viṣṇu, whose incarnation Kṛṣṇa is, is described. Just the very words bring to us so much peace and calmness. If instead, Bhīṣma had used words to describe the fearsome attributes of Viṣṇu such as: 'Frightful destroyer, with burning mouths' and so on, how many would recite the Sahasraṇāma? If you do understand what the words mean, and if you are not in equilibrium, you will be disturbed. These words, understood to be negative by your logical mind, will create severe emotional turbulence within you.

A yogi is one who has passed beyond these turbulences. He understands that the Divine is without attributes, neither peaceful and comforting, nor fearful and terrifying. These manifestations are also illusions. Beyond and behind these apparent manifestations, Divinity just is. It is beyond the three guṇas.

Arjuna at this point in time is yet to reach this stage. He still seeks the safety and comfort of the four-handed divine Protector that he is used to, rather than the terrifying Mahākāla. When we realize that both are masks of the Divine, that neither is His true Self and that both are His true Self, then and only then are we rid of illusions, and are liberated.

Only You Have Seen This Form

11.48 O best among Kuru warriors, no one has ever before seen this Universal form of Mine, for neither by studying the Vedas nor by performing sacrifices or charities, can this form be seen. Only you have seen this form.

मा ते व्यथा मा च विमूढभावो दृष्ट्वा रूपं घोरमीदृङ्ममेदम् ।

vyapetabhīḥ prītamanāḥ punastvaṃ tadeva me rūpamidaṃ prapaśya || 11.49 ||

11.49 Do not be disturbed any longer by seeing this terrible form of Mine. Dear devotee, be free from all disturbances. With a peaceful mind, you can now see the form you wish to see.

Kṛṣṇa consoles Arjuna in these verses. He is again His compassionate Self to His disturbed disciple.

He tells Arjuna that no one, but no one, has had this great privilege of seeing His Cosmic form that He had just displayed to Arjuna. No penances, no rituals, no amount of scriptural reading and no other charities would gain this Vision for anyone. 'However, you are terrified. That is ok. See Me now in My normal form that you are used to worshipping.'

Kṛṣṇa is clear on this point. It is He who decides how He reveals Himself to His devotees and disciples. It is a gift from the Master, from the Divine. It is not earned through effort. Of course, effort prepares one for the receipt of this great gift, but it is not the only necessary condition for the gift to be showered.

Of course, in this chapter Arjuna seeks Kṛṣṇa's Vision and it happens. It could have also happened without his seeking. The favor is for the Divine to give, not because we ask. It does not matter to Kṛṣṇa that Arjuna seemingly spurns this gift and would like to see Him as He normally does. What Kṛṣṇa offered was an unconditional gift that required neither acceptance nor appreciation.

A Mother's love for her child does not happen as a result of any effort on the child's part. The presence of the child spontaneously evokes the deep unconditional love of the Mother for the child.

It is ultimately the surrender of the devotee to the Master, like the surrender of the infant to the mother that evokes this unconditional love. In the case of an infant, it is a reflex action. The nature of an infant is to be defenseless and in absolute surrender to the caregiver. In the case of a devotee, the root thought patterns of mental behavior need to be given up. This is far more difficult.

The devotee has to return to his original and natural state of surrender to experience unconditional love. To achieve this he has to drop his mind. He has to give up all the root thoughts patterns, both conscious and unconscious. When the mind is wiped clean of its templates of comparison, it makes no difference if the Divine appears to be loving or terrifying. In both aspects one accepts divinity.

Kṛṣṇa leads His disciple in stages through this path of Self-Realization, which is no different from the realization of the Divine.

11.55 My dear Arjuna, one who is engaged entirely in My devotional service, who surrenders to Me as the supreme, free from attachment, full of love for every entity, surely comes to Me.

This statement coming from the mouth of Kṛṣṇa may be taken as the simple, direct truth. Kṛṣṇa now appears in front of Arjuna first in His four-handed beautiful divine form that Arjuna is comfortable with, and finally as Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa, in His gentle human form that Arjuna is so familiar with. But the familiarity ends there. Having seen what Kṛṣṇa really is through His divine form of Nārāyaṇa, with four arms bearing the discus and mace, and also in His terrifying Cosmic form as Mahākāla, Arjuna now has an understanding of the unlimited magnitude of the personality in front of him.

In whatever form Kṛṣṇa now appears, this understanding would remain with Arjuna. It is said that when Kṛṣṇa was born to Devaki, He presented to her and Vāsudeva, His father, His form with four hands to comfort them in their captivity, and later changed it to the human form.

Arjuna has now seen Kṛṣṇa in all His forms. The true Universal form of Virāṭa rūpa or Viśvarūpa, that Arjuna found fearsome; the beautiful, much gentler, adorable form with four hands (bearing mace and discus in two hands, and the other two hands signifying protection and the giving of boons), and finally back to the human form that Arjuna has always known.

Kṛṣṇa says even the great sages, the enlightened Masters have not seen the sights that Arjuna has seen. That is very true. Enlightened masters cannot see visions. When an enlightened being sees another enlightened being, it is in the energy form. To be able to see the gross physical form, both need to readjust their frequencies. For other people, no amount of spiritual practices and knowledge can make this happen. This is the space of bhakti, pure devotion. Śrī Ramakrishna says about one's relationship to a Master: 'The love of a chaste wife for her husband, the attachment of a miser to his hoarded wealth, the craving of a pleasure seeker for sensual pleasures, all these rolled into one and directed towards the master is true bhakti, devotion.'

Experience You As Universe and Universe As You

Kṛṣṇa concludes this chapter with a clear direction of what a devotee should do to reach Him. It is as simple as 1, 2, 3.

'Work for Me,' He says, 'work for My mission, mat karma kṛn. Surrender to Me as the supreme with no reservations, mat paramo mad bhaktaḥ. Have no attachment to whatever you do, leave the results to Me, surrender the fruits of your action to Me, sanga varjitaḥ. Look upon everyone as your own Self, without dislike and hatred, nirvairaḥ sarva bhūteṣu.'

mat karma kṛn mat paramo mad bhaktaḥ sanga varjitaḥ | nirvairaḥ sarva bhūteṣu yah sa mām eti pāṇḍava || 11.55 ||

What Kṛṣṇa says here is very significant. 'Work for Me. Enrich for Me - mat karma kṛn,' He says. 'He who works for Me comes to Me - yah sa mām eti pāṇḍavaḥ' Devotion is not about keeping a statue or a photo and praying to it. You can be a gazer all your life and nothing will come out of it. What is really needed is authenticity in action and your effort to enrich others and yourself, which is in tune with what the Master teaches. Rūpa means the parts of you which you remember and associate yourself with, and make others experience as you, is rūpa. Viśvarūpa means cognizing the whole viśva (universe) as you and making the the whole viśva cognize you as viśva. Enriching is the direct process to cognize you as viśva or viśva (universe) as you.

Enriching is directly successful in life because with more and more enriching, you will less and less cognize yourself as this six-feet body and you will more and more cognize yourself with the people who carry the completion space you are living. See, when you enrich others with the space you are living, whoever starts carrying the same space, you will feel connected with all of them. You will feel the strength of all of them. They will feel your strength, you will feel their strength. This is the way enriching becomes of practical use.

Your cognition about your success or failure has nothing to do with your body, it is to do with your ideology. Whoever has cognized inside their heart, in the space of completion, integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching, the Divine lives in all of them. Bring enriching as your strength. You will win in any war. Hinduism has always survived in all wars by using enriching as the weapon. Śāstra is our śastra; the knowledge was our weapon. It is by śāstra, the right cognition and the strength of enriching that we won all the wars, all over the world.

Take up enriching yourself and others again and again as your cognition. Suddenly you will realize, not only you are rūpa, the center of your life, you are Viśvarūpa, the center of the Cosmic life.

You are not just center of your life, you are centre of the whole Cosmic life. If you associate yourself with the six-feet body you are rūpa, just form. If you associate yourself with the ideology and cognize yourself as sacred truths, whoever practices that, you expand; and you cognize all of them as part of you, so you become Viśvarūpa. Enriching is the direct process to transform you from rūpa to Viśvarūpa.

Meditation

The meditation will take at least 20 minutes. If you feel you cannot or do not want to sit for 20 minutes, you are free to leave. If you can do so, we shall enter into the meditation. Please don't leave in between. Please sit straight and close your eyes. Pray intensely to the Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, Universal consciousness, in whatever name you know, in whatever form you know. Pray to that energy to give a glimpse of His being to you, a glimpse of the experience that Arjuna received and which all the enlightened masters experienced. Pray to the Universal energy. It responds to your thoughts. Don't think your prayers are dead words. They are living communication.

Inhale and exhale as slowly as possible and as deeply as possible. Concentrate and bring your attention between your eyebrows, on your ājña cakra. Slowly, but very deeply concentrate on your ājña cakra. Without forcing yourself, put your awareness naturally on your ājña cakra. Slowly start visualizing the whole Universe moving inside your head. Feel this clearly inside your head. The space that is in front of you, in your inner space, the whole Universe is moving. See the sun, moon and all the planets. Visualize this clearly, intensely. Slowly relax the body, be one with the Universal consciousness. Feel the experience of being one with the Universe. You are seeing clearly the sun, moon, stars and planets. Just disappear into the Universal consciousness. Forget your name, your form, all the conditionings, your profession, your gender and your country, everything about yourself. Forget your identity and see the whole Universe intensely. Just see the moving Universe intensely, all the planets, the stars, all the suns, moons. Disappear into the Universal consciousness. Lose the identity, the root cause of all the thoughts; let it disappear into the Universal consciousness. Experience the bliss, the fulfilling bliss of the whole Universe. Expand and disappear into that Universe. Dissolve into the Universal consciousness. Be in Nityānanda, eternal bliss!

Thus ends the eleventh chapter named Viśvarūpa Darśan Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Cosmic Vision,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 12
Bhakti Yogaḥ

Love Is Your Very Life

In the previous chapter, Arjuna asks for and receives the viśvarūpa darśan, the vision of the Universal form of Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa very patiently resolves Arjuna's doubts and answers all his questions. Arjuna then wishes to see the true reality of Kṛṣṇa, the form behind the formless, the Imperishable, the Eternal. Kṛṣṇa obliges his friend and disciple, Arjuna, the true representative of the human being, Nara.

Seeing this cosmic form of Kṛṣṇa, and unable to withstand the energy, Arjuna begs Kṛṣṇa to show him the benevolent four-armed form of Viṣṇu that he is used to worshipping with devotion. Finally, Kṛṣṇa reverts to His normal human form as Arjuna's charioteer, and the King of Yadāvas. After showing His cosmic form and having given the experience of cosmic consciousness to Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa now speaks about bhakti, devotional love.

Kṛṣṇa's Universal form, as displayed to Arjuna, is His cosmic consciousness, which is our collective consciousness. Arjuna understands from Kṛṣṇa that he too is a part of this cosmic consciousness, and at the same time he is aware that what he could see of Kṛṣṇa is a mere fraction of His eternal cosmic Self. Arjuna's experience of the divine form of Kṛṣṇa raises further questions in his mind. Is this form that he just witnessed the glorious reality of the Cosmos? Is this the true reality that he should focus on? Or is the formless Self that Kṛṣṇa had talked to him about earlier more important?

Understanding Bhakti and Love

Usually people think a spiritual experience happens only after bhakti, devotional love. However, bhakti happens only after a spiritual experience. Real bhakti cannot happen to you before a spiritual experience. Only when a person experiences every being as part of the cosmic consciousness can he radiate love. Only such a person knows what love is. Nobody else knows what love is. Others think that they love, or act as if they love. Be very clear, so many people act as if they love. Sometimes by acting, they think that they love. Never can we love by acting. Love must flow from our being. Love happens when we experience cosmic consciousness, when we have a spiritual experience, when our ego disappears. Kṛṣṇa lays out the whole technique for us, step-by-step.

After a spiritual experience so much gratitude flows from our being, so much love overflows from our being that we start radiating it. We need not make an effort, it just flows. We cannot stop it. No one can show or experience love unless they have had a spiritual experience. Our inner transformation, our completion must happen before we enrich others to transform. Unless we feel that we are part of the Whole, unless we feel that every other person is irretrievably linked to us, it is impossible for us to contribute and enrich with true love. We will only be hypocrites. We are part of the cosmic ocean. Each of us is a mere drop. As long as we remain droplets and do not understand the reality of being part of the same ocean, we remain separate; our feelings will be driven by 'I' and 'mine'. As long as this separation remains, there can be no true love. There can be no expression of complete love.

Whatever an enlightened being does, even if he kills someone, it will only do that person good. This is because an enlightened being is established in the space of completion driven by cosmic consciousness. Therefore it will always be good for everyone. However, whatever an unenlightened man does, even if he does great service, it may or may not do good to him and society. Good or bad is not decided by doing. It is decided by the being. When an enlightened man acts, even small things lead to great results in the world. When an unenlightened person acts, even great truths may lead to misery and destruction at times.

Deeds or words by themselves don't do good or bad. They do good or bad based upon the consciousness from which they are expressed. This consciousness, this awareness is related to the feeling one has for others. The quality of our awareness decides whether the end result benefits or destroys humanity. Only after a spiritual experience do we feel gratitude at the being level. If it is our solid experience that every living being is God, we radiate love and our being becomes love. Bhakti and love are expressions that flow from that spiritual experience.

Kṛṣṇa's discourse on Bhakti Yogaḥ starts after Viśvarūpa Darśan Yogaḥ. After the experience of completion, He talks about the expression of enriching, Bhakti Yogaḥ. He talks about the expression of devotional love.

Who Is Perfect?

अर्जुन उवाच ।
एवं सततयुक्ता ये भक्तास्त्वां पर्युपासते ।
ये चाप्यक्षरमव्यक्तं तेषां के योगवित्तमाः ॥ १२-१॥
arjuna uvāca
evaṃ satatayuktā ye bhaktāstvāṃ paryupāsate ye cāpyakṣaramavyaktaṃ teṣāṃ ke yogavittamāḥ 12-1

12.1 Arjuna asks, 'Who are considered perfect, those who are always engaged sincerely in Your worship in form or those who worship the imperishable, the invisible formless You?'

Arjuna now speaks in a totally different manner. His thought trend is different now. He asks, 'Which of these two types of people are considered to be better: those who are always engaged in your bhakti, devotional love towards You or those who merge in the Brahman, the unmanifest, formless, Cosmic consciousness?'

arjuna uvāca
evaṁ satata yuktā ye bhaktās tvāṁ paryupāsate | ye cāpy akṣaram avyaktaṁ teṣāṁ ke yoga-vittamāḥ || 12.1 ||

Please be clear, Arjuna is not asking for himself. From here, the discourse becomes a simple discussion. It is more like trying to record the truth for future generations.

The questions from here onward are neither doubts nor enquiries. Arjuna tries to put the whole thing down in the expression form, so that it will be a useful reference for future generations. A flow of Arjuna's love for humanity, an expression of his divine experience, prompts him to seek answers to these vexing questions and record the answers from the Godhead Himself.

Arjuna asks, 'Who will be established in You totally? Will it be a devotee or a person who is enlightened?'

Experience Or Expression? Completion Or Enriching?

Arjuna asks, 'Is it good to be established in the experience of the divine consciousness, just to stay in it and enjoy the eternal bliss that flows from that experience? Or is it better to express that love and gratitude created by the conscious experience towards the whole world and every living being? Which is correct? Which one is preferred?'

See, when we have a spiritual experience, some people stay in that experience with closed eyes, that's all. Only with eyes closed can they see God. They do not seek to use their senses, since the bliss within is so great and beautiful that absolutely no sensory input remotely matches that bliss. However, there are others who are impelled to open their eyes, by the Universe to communicate that blissful experience through their expression to enrich others.

The so-called scholars enter into endless debates on savikalpa samādhi and nirvikalpa samādhi. Savikalpa samādhi is the state where the experience of samādhi continues. Nirvikalpa samādhi is when the expression of samādhi starts. Savikalpa samādhi is supposed to be a lower state, and one is supposed to work towards the second and higher state of nirvikalpa samādhi. But it is not an ironclad rule.

Please understand that this is not a choice that people make. An option is not presented to those who have such experiences. Those who experience the Divine transcend that point of freewill. They are driven wholly, in each step that they take, by Parāśakti, the Universal energy; by Kṛṣṇa, the super conscious Divine.

Arjuna understands that he and others who have had an experience of the Divine, face the choicelessness. He knows that Kṛṣṇa decides what he should do. Yet, he asks because he wants everyone to understand. Arjuna asks, 'What type of a person is greater? Is it a person who closes his eyes and sees God within himself or a person who opens his eyes and sees God in every being? Who is greater?'

Please understand, he is not asking whether worshiping the form or worshiping the formless is greater. Yet so-called religious people have interpreted it that way, and created problems between the teachings of the great masters, Ādī Śaṅkarācārya and Rāmānuja.

Śaṅkara followed jñāna, the path of knowledge, and Rāmānuja followed bhakti, the path of devotion. Jñāna, focuses on the formless through intellectual queries. Bhakti focuses on the form, sheer devotion, as if the Divine were alive as It indeed is. However, those who have studied Śaṅkara and Rāmānuja in depth know that there was much devotion in Śaṅkara's approach and much knowledge in Rāmānuja's approach. Both approaches converge. One without the other never works.

Expressing the gratitude that happens because of the experience is devotion. Having that experience and rejoicing, staying in that experience is knowledge; that's all.

Vicious circle leads to low energy or lower level of consciousness. Virtuous circle leads to high energy, a higher level of consciousness. Bliss leading to devotion and gratitude, devotion and gratitude leading to bliss: these two form the virtuous circle that lead us to higher consciousness.

Bliss means the experience of completion that leads us to the expression of gratitude and enriching. Again, the expression, the gratitude of enriching, leads us to bliss, and bliss leads us to deeper completion. One leads to the other and therefore it is a virtuous circle. Usually we are caught in the vicious circle. Fear leads to greed and greed leads to fear. More fear leads to more greed, and more greed leads to more fear. This is the vicious circle. Here Kṛṣṇa introduces the virtuous circle. Virtuous circle is what He calls dharma, righteousness, that which must be followed in the path of truth.

Dharma means virtuous circle, that which leads us to live and express higher and higher levels of consciousness. That in turn leads us to higher and higher levels of blissful experience. Consciousness and bliss lead to expression of that consciousness and bliss, which in turn lead to higher level experiences.

Fix Your Mind On Me

श्रीभगवानुवाच ।
मय्यावेश्य मनो ये मां नित्ययुक्ता उपासते ।
श्रद्धया परयोपेताः ते मे युक्ततमा मताः ॥ १२-२॥

śrībhagavānuvāca
mayyāveśya mano ye māṃ nityayuktā upāsate
śraddhayā parayopetāḥ te me yuktatamā matāḥ || 12.2 ||

12.2 Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says, Those who fix their mind on Me eternally and those who are steadfast in worshipping Me with supreme faith, I consider them to be perfect in yoga, ready to be united with Me.

Bhagavān says, 'Those who are established in their consciousness that expresses devotional gratitude, bhakti, are always engaged in Me. Those who focus on the transcendental faith, meaning the experience that they undergo at the time of cosmic experience, they are engaged in Me. Both are ultimate. Both are united in Me.

Sanskrit is a beautiful language. We can make any meaning out of any word. That is why thousands of commentaries on the Gītā are possible, yet the Gītā is still new. No book has been commented upon by so many masters, as much as the Gītā has been. Each master gives his own meaning.

If a person who has not had a spiritual experience starts expressing and lecturing, he will naturally be in trouble and create trouble for others as well. In the same way that the blind leads the blind, both end up in trouble. A person without any spiritual experience, when he translates or talks, he automatically does only 'text torturing.'

Only a person who has had a true spiritual experience and one who is free from inner chatter is true to himself and others. Only then can a person transparently and authentically expose himself to others without thinking what they might say of him. Until he brings responsibility, there is inner chatter and an effort to filter within him. There is an effort to rehearse. We fear that what may spill out will expose our inauthenticity and will be unacceptable, so we filter and replace what we feel inside us with lies that will be sociably acceptable. We make our lives into lies and hypocrisy.

Real Completion Expresses as Enriching with Love

The Bhagavad Gītā is a transcription of the audio recording. If the Gītā were an audio recording, at least you would comprehend a bit more from the voice modulation. However, the voice modulation is not there. It is a transcription of an audio recording. How much can you translate or interpret?

Intellectual understanding is not experiencing. Understanding is a phenomenon of the mind. It is a byproduct of our ego. The filters of our mind and ego color our understanding. Experience is the truth felt by the being. Spiritual experience transcends mind and ego. It is pure, uncolored and permanent. By expressing an understanding of someone's experience, one may express a fact or an opinion at best, but never the truth. Truth must be experienced to be expressed.

Here Bhagavān says,

mayyāveśya mano ye māṁ nitya yuktā upāsate | śraddhayā parayopetās te me yuktatamā matāḥ || 12.2 ||

Those who express their experience as devotion, see the world - upāsate. The word upāssana can be translated in many ways. When we see the Divine in everybody, when we express the truth of the spiritual experience, whatever we do is upāsana. Please be very clear, when we can't see the Divine in people around us, we can't see the Divine in any statue or any Master either. If we don't see the Divine in living beings, we cannot see the Divine in a God or a Guru.

If it were not for the great master Rāmānuja, South India would have completely lost its spirituality. Śankara settled in the North even though he was born and brought up in the south. He spent most of his time in North India. Because of Rāmānuja, devotion and spirituality thrived in South India. Until his end, Rāmānuja stayed in South India. Not only that, Śankara lived only until the age of thirty-two. Rāmānuja lived on planet Earth for a long time and inspired thousands of people in the path of spirituality and meditation.

Loving the whole world is easy. Loving your wife is difficult. Loving the whole world is easy because we don't need to do anything to substantiate it. All we must do is to say, 'I love the whole world.' But when we love our wife, we must change our inner space to that of completion. We must change our mind, our words, our feeling and our very living. We must bring integrity to our words. We must bring authenticity to our thinking and our actions; responsibility in our feeling, and enriching in our living. There starts the problem.

You need to know that relationships are not something external. It is an expression of yourself, how you feel about you. The relationship you carry with you is projected as the relationship with the world. I tell you, when you bring integrity in your relationship with others, honoring the words you gave or completing the words you gave, the way others look at you will be transformed immediately.

To truly love and enrich someone whom we spend our life with, to prevent familiarity from breeding contempt, we need to complete with others and our self, and drop our 'I' and 'mine'. As long as we consider our spouse as a possession, what arises in our mind and heart is violence, not love. We will feel we must control the other being and we will feel we must prove that we are the owner. To even comprehend the meaning of true love, we need to drop the feeling that we possess.

Being established in that consciousness of completion or expressing it towards enriching the Universe is the same. When a person is merged, when a person is established, he automatically radiates. If the love is not happening, if the expression is not happening, the person has not experienced. When the real experience of completion happens, it automatically expresses as enriching. Experience is not something we can possess and keep in our cupboard. No! Experience will possess us and it will radiate as enriching through us.

This is because we cannot possess an experience. Only the experience can possess us. When experiences possess us, whatever we do will be a song. Any word that comes out will be a song. Our being will be so light. We will simply float. Our body language will radiate grace. All our expressions will be a great enriching service to humanity.

An enlightened man never keeps quiet nor does he talk, he just sings. That is why the Gītā is given in the form of a song. The Gītā is not prose. It is poetry. Great truths can never be expressed in logic. They can only be expressed through poetry. Prose is logic. It is bound. It is rigid. But poetry is emotion. It is love and it flows.

Kṛṣṇa says that a person established in the consciousness of completion is great; however, the person who expresses, who shares, who automatically radiates the power of living by enriching is as great as the one who is established. The truth is that if a man is established in consciousness, he will radiate, he will enrich, and he will sing.

They Too Attain Me

12.4 Those who worship by restraining their senses, and are working with even mind for the enrichment of mankind, they too attain Me.

Kṛṣṇa is saguṅa brahman, the physical Cosmos, who showed Himself in this form to Arjuna, in His viśvarūpa, Cosmic form. Kṛṣṇa is nirguṇa brahman as well, the formless consciousness. In both the form and the formless, He is Kṛṣṇa, the divine consciousness who has all the attributes that He talks about here.

The Divine is imperishable. It is akṣaram. Everything else in this material Universe may come and go, appear and disappear, while the Divine remains forever. It is unique and incomparable and cannot be benchmarked against anything, as it is supreme. It is avyaktam, unmanifest and acinytam, inconceivable, and therefore cannot be comprehended by the senses.

It cannot be grasped by thoughts and mind, which is why one's mind-body needs to be transcended to glimpse the Divine. The Divine resides everywhere and is omnipresent.

The true devotee, who follows either path with completion, with his senses focused on the Lord, experiences Him and also experiences the bliss of enriching humanity. The devotee sees the Lord in everyone he meets. His experience of His Lord becomes His expression of love to all.

Kṛṣṇa's beloved Radhā tells the gopīkās (cowherdress who were around Kṛṣṇa), 'I don't know what has happened to me. I see Kṛṣṇa in everybody. I feel that everybody is Kṛṣṇa. I don't know what is happening.' One of the gopikās answers, 'You have devotion as the very black eyeliner in your eyes!'

It is like this: When you wear dark glasses everything appears dark; when you wear green- tinted glasses, everything appears green. In the same way, when you have devotion as your very eyeliner, whomsoever you see appears as Kṛṣṇa, appears divine. Here, Kṛṣṇa says, the person established in super consciousness space of completion and the person who radiates devotion and lives for enriching are the same. They are not two different groups.

Formless or Form?

Kṛṣṇa does not create two groups. Arjuna presents two groups as the reality that he sees: those who are established and those who are radiating. Kṛṣṇa says both are the same. He does not divide them into two groups, those who are established and those who radiate, or those who are complete and those who enrich. Kṛṣṇa says, a person who is established always radiates and the person who radiates is always established.

Once again, Kṛṣṇa makes the point here. When one has realized the formless nature of the Divine, its imperishability and its unmanifest nature with controlled senses, one works for the enrichment of mankind. Once the experience of the formless divine happens, it is no different from the experience of the form. Both lead to the truth that one is a part of collective consciousness. The expression of this realization is one of deep humility and compassion. It is manifested as deep gratitude and surrender. One learns to flow with the energy of this Universe. One no longer struggles against the currents of life.

When we are full of ego we tend to control. We believe we can bring order to an otherwise chaotic world. It takes only a moment to realize that this entire Universe and planet Earth function not because of us, but in spite of us. Millions and millions of stars and planets in this Universe function in apparent chaos. But understand, the Universe is always in order.

We want to be in order but we are truly chaotic. Only when we surrender to the will of the Universe, we fall into the cosmic order. Things go well for us. When we give up wanting, we get what we want. When we get what we truly want, it enriches mankind. Because when we surrender, Kṛṣṇa takes care. Kṛṣṇa is not the Kṛṣṇa whom you think He is. He is not the single form you are used to. He is the super conscious energy, the cosmic energy, Parāśakti.

Formless Is Difficult

क्लेशोऽधिकतरस्तेषामव्यक्तासक्तचेतसाम् ।
अव्यक्ता हि गतिर्दुःखं देहवद्भिरवाप्यते ॥ १२-५॥

kleśo'dhikatarasteṣām avyaktāsaktacetasām
avyaktā hi gatirduḥkhaṃ dehavadbhiravāpyate || 12.5 ||

12.5 For those whose minds are set on the unmanifest, the formless, it is more difficult to advance; attaining the formless unmanifest is difficult for the embodied.

Kṛṣṇa says here what many of us know to be true. He says, intellectuals find it more difficult to comprehend the Divine. In one's search for the truth, the Divine, the unmanifest, avyakta, which is what the intellectual seeker is focusing on, the intellect, the mind or ego will be the block that makes the path difficult to traverse. The individual carries not only the body but the mind as well. And with the mind, it carries the ego. As Kṛṣṇa points out - avyaktā hi gatir duḥkhaṁ (12.5). Unless the mind-body is transcended by the process of completion and surrender, spiritual advancement is difficult.

Shedding the ego and restoring completion is the most difficult thing for the mind-body system. Ego provides the mind-body with its identity, with its existence. Till then, Mahādeva, the embodiment of completion and responsibility, has to appear again and again in your life to remind you to take responsibility.

Whether now or in Kṛṣṇa's time, the world revolved around the power of thought, the power that seems to provide knowledge and skills. It was essential for one's recognition and status in life. Dropping the ego and taking responsibility to restore authenticity is the most difficult thing for the body-mind, especially for one who is focused on the intellect.

Whenever you look at any destruction as a reminder of your inauthenticity and irresponsibility, it is no more a destruction in your life. You have learnt how to make anything negative into something positive, to strengthen your life. If you are able to make anything negative into positive, the moment it enters into your life, you are Śiva, Causeless Auspiciousness.

Liberation From Birth And Death

bhavāmi nacirātpārtha mayyāveśitacetasām || 12.7 ||
12.7 Whose minds are set in Me, O Pārtha, I shall deliver them soon from the ocean of the birth and death cycle.

Kṛṣṇa makes a promise here. Kṛṣṇa says unequivocally, 'I shall deliver them from their material existence, the ocean of saṁsāra, the cycle of life and death, mṛtyu-saṁsāra- sāgarāt. All that the Lord asks is that the devotee be devoted to Him.

ye tu sarvāṇi karmāṇi mayi sannyasya mat-parāḥ | ananyenaiva yogena māṁ dhyāyanta upāsate || 12.6 ||

teśāṁ ahaṁ samuddhartā mṛtyu-saṁsāra-sāgarāt | bhavāmi na cirāt pārtha mayy āveśita cetasām || 12.7 ||

Kṛṣṇa says, 'If you surrender to Me, surrender all your actions and the fruits of those actions to Me, do my service - ye tu sarvāṇi karmāṇi mayi sannyasya mat-parāḥ, meditate upon Me, remain single-minded upon My consciousness - ananyenaiva yogena māṁ dhyāyanta upāsate, I shall then liberate you. I shall make sure you never need to be born again - teśāṁ ahaṁ samuddhartā.' It is the roar of a lion. It is the roar of the King of this Universe. 'Surrender to Me and I shall liberate you. Serve Me and I shall liberate you.'

We do not realize that often God does not answer our prayers out of sheer compassion, out of sheer love for us. From time to time, God in His infinite wisdom turns down our requests such as wanting to become rich, wanting to be well, wanting to have children, and so on. We then move away from Him.

Surrendering to the Divine is not conditional. It must be total. There can be no 'ifs', 'ands', or 'buts'. It cannot be, 'If you grant my prayers, I shall be devoted to you.' That is business. Most of our relationship with God is business.

There are three kinds of surrender. First, there is surrender of one's intellect. For many, this is possible. Once we understand that there is a universal energy far greater than us, most of us can accept and surrender intellectually to that supreme power. At least we can say, 'I surrender.' That's how many of us prostrate in a temple or before a master. The entire body touches the ground signifying our surrender. For that moment, our ego takes a vacation.

Surrender at the next level is emotional. One can melt at the thought of God or master. There is love, there is gratitude pouring out of our hearts and we feel tears streaming down. We become bhaktas, devotees. Ramakrishna said, 'If you have tears in your eyes when you think of God or your Master, be very clear, this is your last birth! You are ready for liberation.' We are ready but not liberated until we reach the last and third step. This step of surrender is the surrender of one's senses. Our surrender is total at this stage: complete, spontaneous, instant and natural.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'When you surrender to Me, I shall liberate you.' To reach Him, we must surrender totally without deviation. Our senses must be surrendered to Him. Our entire consciousness, our complete awareness must only be of Him and nothing else. Nothing else needs to be done. The technique is so simple. 'Surrender and I shall save you,' says the Master. 'I shall save you without delay, immediately - bhavāmi na cirāt pārtha mayy āveśita cetasām (12.7).' The Lord has made it so simple. Yet, we find it so difficult to believe Him.

Live In Me Always

मय्येव मन आधत्स्व मयि बुद्धिं निवेशय ।
निवसिष्यसि मय्येव अत ऊर्ध्वं न संशयः ॥ १२-८॥ mayyeva mana ādhatsva mayi buddhiṃ niveśaya nivasiṣyasi mayyeva ata ūrdhvaṃ na saṃśayaḥ || 12.8 ||
12.8 You fix your mind on Me alone, establish your mind in Me. You will live in Me always. There is no doubt in it.

Just fix your mind upon Me, the supreme personality of the Divine and engage all your mind, body and senses in Me and you will thus live in Me always, without a doubt, assures Kṛṣṇa.

mayy eva mana ādhatsva mayi buddhiṁ niveśaya | nivasiṣyasi mayy eva ata ūrdhvaṁ na saṁśayaḥ || 12.8 ||

'Na samśayaḥ, without a doubt,' He says. Now He comes to the technique. At one point the virtuous circle must begin. First, He explains the virtuous circle of the ultimate experience and expression. Now He comes to the technique.

Please understand that love is not a mood. It is not a mere emotion. It is our very Existence. As long as it is our mood, it will come and go.

There are two kinds of love, horizontal love and vertical love. Horizontal love is like a horizontal line, flat. It is related to time: it starts and ends. Anything that starts must end. If it takes more time to end, don't think it is permanent. Anything that starts must end. It may take a few years or a few months, but it ends. It is impermanent and time bound. This is horizontal love. Horizontal love is related to time.

Vertical love is related to consciousness. Vertical love neither starts nor ends. It does not discriminate. It is our very quality. It flows. If we discriminate and love, it cannot be love. It is an infatuation. As long as the other person fits into our frame, our love grows. The moment the other person doesn't fit into our frame, our love disappears.

All your love is for some reason. For economical benefit or psychological support, you hang onto these relationships. The next reason we love is to receive good certificates, positive recognition. Sometimes we share love and show love. We may not do so for economical benefits or psychological support, but we may expect a good certificate or attention for being loving and kind. Some need for attention is always present. There is always some dependent need in us that motivates us to express love. It is never unconditional or complete love.

We love our next generation as long as they are extensions of our life. We fulfill our desires through them. Whatever we couldn't accomplish, we try to accomplish through them. As long as they act and live as an extension of our life, the relationship is beautiful. But the moment they start deciding on their own, the moment they feel we are suffocating them, the moment they stand up and say 'no,' the relationship takes a different turn.

This is horizontal love. That is why it ends with some reason. Vertical love never ends because it never starts. Suddenly, at some point we realize, we are living inside everybody just as we live inside our own body.

Real Renunciation Is Completion with The Whole

When we experience ecstasy and bliss within, we don't feel we are missing anything from the outside world. Real renunciation is not about our renouncing the world. It is about the world renouncing us. When we have that completion, joy, ecstasy and bliss, we automatically radiate that bliss. We never feel that we miss anything or that we have lost something.

Do not renounce the world unless you feel completion and ecstasy inside. Never renounce. Work towards completion and ecstasy. When that happens, renunciation automatically happens. If you renounce the outer world without having established the inner world with completion, you will fall into depression.

When you are complete with you, the world will be complete with you. When you are incomplete with you, the world will be incomplete with you. When you have had the experience, you don't need to renounce. Automatically renunciation happens. All these things will drop you. Instead of you dropping them, they will drop you. You dropping these things always creates problems. When they drop you, it is the right thing. When you start experiencing the joy in you, nothing needs to be renounced, automatically renunciation happens.

Establish Your Intelligence On Me

Here, Kṛṣṇa gives techniques to start the virtuous circle. 'Fix your mind on Me, mayy eva mana ādhatsva. Establish your intelligence in Me, mayi buddhiṁ niveśaya. In this way, after acquiring the boundary-less consciousness, you will live in Me always, nivasiṣyasi mayy eva.'

How should we establish our intelligence in Him? Continuously try to enrich yourself and others with these thoughts and ideas that Kṛṣṇa teaches. Ramakrishna says that what we belch depends upon what we eat. For instance, if we eat some kind of vegetable or fruit, the smell of that comes out when we belch.

In the same way, if we add these ideas continuously to our mind and consciousness, we naturally radiate them. They start shining through our being. When He tells you to let your intelligence be established in Him, it means that when we are in trouble, the solution should automatically come to us based upon these ideas. As of now we run and refer to a book, which means we have a Guru only in the outer world. If we digest and enrich ourselves with these ideas, even when we don't have problems, they will lodge themselves in us and take us to higher and higher levels of completion. When we have problems, they will guide and enrich us. If you read books only when you are in trouble or when you are seeking a solution, you will not digest the ideas because your mind will be confused. How will you receive them? How can you digest them when you are troubled and confused? It can't happen this way.

I tell you: dharmo rakśati rakśitāḥ. When you protect dharma, it protects you. When you excite dharma, it excites you. When you enrich dharma, it enriches you. When you are integrated to it, it is integrated into you. When you are authentic with it, it is authentic with you. When you take responsibility for it, it takes responsibility for you. Only when you enrich it, will it enrich you. Dharma means the natural law of the Cosmos. It is an independent intelligence.

When your mind is in the normal state, receive these ideas and enrich yourself and others constantly as a regular habit. Let it become your normal life style. Just as you eat and bathe everyday, in the same way, absorb these ideas regularly.

In his commentary on the Chandogya Upaniṣad, Śankara has written beautifully about purification of food.

āhāra śuddho satva śiddho dhruvā smṛtiḥ

When our āhāra, food, is purified, our memory is purified.

Please understand that āhāra doesn't mean just the food that we eat. It refers to whatever we take in through the five senses. Television programs that we watch are āhāra. Music that we listen to is āhāra. The food that we eat is āhāra. The odours that we smell are āhāra. The touch that we enjoy is āhāra.

So, all that we take in through the five senses should be pure. Only then can we radiate purity, can we radiate bliss, can we radiate divine intelligence. Unless we purify the āhāras that is ingested through the other senses as well, we cannot expect purification of our memories.

Look into your life. When you start taking responsibility, you can decide the way your heart beats; you can decide the way your lungs function; you can even control the automated organs of your body and you can decide the functioning of non-mechanical parts of your brain. Each one of us have mechanical parts and non mechanical parts of the brain. Mechanical parts of the brain are responsible for the functioning of your body like the heart, lungs, liver, kidney, intestine, the functioning of your nervous system, experiencing touch, taste, seeing etc. The non-mechanical parts of your brain are responsible for the extraordinary powers like telepathy, teleporting, vāk siddhi (the power of words, wherein any blessing given becomes a reality).

Only when you take the responsibility, will you find the solution. In every situation take the responsibility. You will have leadership consciousness happening in you, īśvaratva. Our brains are hardwired to experience higher possibilities and higher consciousness. These are the non-mechanical parts of your brain. Whether you accept it or not, understand it or not, your body carries at least seventy times more energy and power than what you use in your day-to-day life.

Science has proved this through various methods and ways. Just one small alteration in your brain can make you live without food, for months.

Purify Your Senses, Without A Doubt Reach Me

Never allow these horrible things that cause suffering, into your consciousness. If you don't allow these things into your consciousness, your intelligence will automatically be established in the Divine. The thoughts that you take in, play a major role in the expression of your consciousness. Just take in this one truth that Kṛṣṇa speaks of, 'Establishing your intelligence in Me.' Please understand that whatever you take in as your inputs, you establish your mind only on that. So let your inputs be purified. Let purification of your sensory inputs, happen to you. Your consciousness will automatically be established in the Divine.

Again and again, try to absorb these ideas. Let these ideas penetrate you. Don't go behind ideas that make you feel low and that put you into depression. Kṛṣṇa says, 'Immerse your mind completely in Me. Focus your entire attention upon Me. Without a doubt you will reach the blissful state.'

Practice To Perfection

अथ चित्तं समाधातुं न शक्नोषि मयि स्थिरम् । अभ्यासयोगेन ततो मामिच्छाप्तुं धनञ्जय ॥ १२-९॥ atha cittaṃ samādhātuṃ na śaknoṣi mayi sthiram abhyāsayogena tato māmicchāptuṃ dhanañjaya || 12.9 ||

12.9 If you are not able to fix your mind upon Me, then O Dhanañjaya (Arjuna), with the constant practice of yoga you try to attain Me.

अभ्यासेऽप्यसमर्थोऽसि मत्कर्मपरमो भव ।
मदर्थमपि कर्माणि कुर्वन्सिद्धिमवाप्स्यसि ॥ १२-१०॥

12.10 If you are not able to practice even this yoga, then performing your duties and surrendering all your actions to Me, you will attain perfection.

Here Kṛṣṇa talks about Abhyāsa Yoga. What is Abhyāsa Yoga? Abhyāsa Yoga is the practice or method of yoga of holding the mind constantly in a state of union with Divinity. It is the state of complete immersion in the consciousness of Kṛṣṇa.

Why does Kṛṣṇa speak about Abhyāsa Yoga? In the last chapter, Kṛṣṇa gives Arjuna a glimpse of the universal consciousness, Viśvarūpa darśan. However, Arjuna is unable to stay in that state permanently. Arjuna comes out of the experience because of fear or old saṁskāras, root thought patterns of past desires. He slips from that state of consciousness. Therefore, Kṛṣṇa speaks about Abhyāsa Yoga, how to establish oneself in that consciousness. That's why He speaks about abhyāsa, which means practice.

A Path For Everyone

He gives a solid path, or a solid solution to take care of our whole life, to establish ourselves in that consciousness. Continuously, again and again, in our daily life, let us receive these ideas, intranalyze these ideas in our consciousness and let our inner space be filled with these ideas. Let us not waste a few moments. Let our whole inner space be filled with these great thoughts. That is the way to establish us in that super consciousness.

Kṛṣṇa continues to give more tips for establishing ourselves in that consciousness and radiating devotion. Kṛṣṇa instructs continuously over the next four verses. He gives various options, step-by-step. He says: If we can't do this, do that. If we can't do that, do this.

The first thing He says is, 'Oh Dhanañjaya (winner of wealth), fix your mind upon Me. With constant practice, try to attain Me. If you are not able to practice, then perform actions for Me. In this way, develop the desire to attain Me.'

atha cittaṁ samādhātuṁ na śaknoṣi mayi sthiram | abhyāsa-yogena tato mām icchāptuṁ dhanañjaya || 12.9 ||

Kṛṣṇa refers to completing with the mind through constant practice of meditation, which is part of the yogic path. Meditation is not about sitting down with eyes closed for half an hour every day or every other day or when we get time. Meditation is incessant and obsessive focus upon the Divine. Meditation is a way of life.

Since He knows that we may not be able to lose ourselves in devotion to Him, He offers this as an alternative. 'If the mind cannot be focused on Me,' says the Lord, 'try this. Practice again and again uniting with Me through meditation.' When neither seems possible, Kṛṣṇa offers one more way. 'Do whatever you must. Do your duty as you need to and are able to. But then, surrender what you do to Me. Do what you do for My sake, mat-karma-paramo bhava.' By performing whatever we do with total faith in Him, and with a deep feeling of surrender to Him, we reach Him.

Kṛṣṇa implies two things through His statement. First, the results of whatever is done with an attitude of surrender to Him, belong to Him. Our responsibility is to do, and do it well. We have the right to 'doer-ship' not 'owner-ship'. The Lord is the owner of the fruits of actions that we perform on His behalf.

When we learn to do this, we automatically imbibe the concept of non-attachment to the end result. What happens is in His hands, not ours. We then start focusing on the path, not the goal. We focus on the process, not the product. And when we do this, our performance gets better because we no longer are stressed by what the end result might be. We are no longer worried since the outcome is in safe hands. If we travel with this awareness, whatever path we take is the right path. Whatever destination we reach through this right path is the right destination.

When worship becomes a way of life, when spirituality becomes a part of daily life, there is an attitude of surrender to the Divine. One feels intuitively that whatever happens will be for common good and good for oneself. It does not matter if our neighbor has more than what we have. In fact, we rejoice that the neighbor has more than we have. We no longer have expectations of what we hope to get. When surrender happens, there is no end-point that one strives for. Wherever the path leads is the right destination. With focus only on the path and not on the goal, expectations of what may happen drop. Whatever happens is good. This nonattachment and lack of expectations is the hallmark of a karma yogi, one who has surrendered his actions to the Divine.

Kṛṣṇa implies one more thing. He wants us to do His service. He wants us to work on and enrich His mission. He says, 'Engage yourself in activities on My behalf, and you will attain Me, mad-artham api karmāṇi kurvan siddhim avāpsyasi.'

I tell people, 'Do not worry about whether I am here physically with you or not. If you chase Me, you will never be one with Me. Work to enrich My mission. In whatever way you can, work on activities that enrich humanity. Work on My behalf. Then, instead of you chasing Me, I shall chase you. I shall always be with you.'

Working on the mission of the Divine is a sure guarantee to reach Divinity.

Work For Me

अथैतदप्यशक्तोऽसि कर्तुं मद्योगमाश्रितः ।
सर्वकर्मफलत्यागं ततः कुरु यतात्मवान् ॥ १२-११॥

athaitadapyaśakto'si kartuṃ madyogamāśritaḥ sarvakarmaphalatyāgaṃ tataḥ kuru yatātmavān 12-11

12.11 If you are not able to work even this way, surrendering unto Me, give up all the results of your actions to Me without ego.

Kṛṣṇa gives various possibilities to Arjuna, one after another. His compassion for Arjuna's spiritual evolution knows no limits. He never gives up on Arjuna. 'If you cannot do this, do that. And if you cannot do that, at least do this,' Kṛṣṇa continues. In the last four verses, He continuously gives options to Arjuna.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Fix your mind upon Me alone. Live in Me.' Then He felt that He had to give Arjuna an option, in case Arjuna could not succeed. 'If you cannot fix your mind upon Me, steadily practice and practice again,' He advised. He relented further, 'If you cannot do this repetitive practice, if this is too much for you, then work on My mission. Whatever you do, do it for Me.'

Kṛṣṇa now says, 'If you are unable to do even this, which is work for My sake, then just abandon your ego and turn over the results of your actions to Me, sarva-karma-phala tyāgaṁ tataḥ kuru yatātmavān (12.11).' Kṛṣṇa relents from

His standpoint that Arjuna should work only on those activities that are Kṛṣṇa's. He feels that there may be conditions that may prevent Arjuna from devoting all his time only to those activities that are Kṛṣṇa's.

Kṛṣṇa brings in the core concept of the Gītā, that of 'renunciation'. He says, 'Do what you must do with an attitude of surrender to Me and sacrifice the results of your actions to Me, with complete control over your self, your ego.'

We feel responsible for the results of our actions. Whether we succeed or fail in what we do, either proud and happy, or guilty and sad, our ego makes us feel responsible. We identify ourselves with what we do and the results of what we do.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'If you cannot do whatever else I have told you to do, do this. Drop your ego. Drop the fruits of your actions and renounce them to Me.' The freedom that results from what Kṛṣṇa advises is true liberation. Once we realize that we no longer are the masters of our destiny, decision makers of the results of our actions, we feel a weight lifting off our shoulders. It is He who is now responsible for the results of our action. We still are the 'doers', but no longer the 'owners.'

We just need to let the Universe, Kṛṣṇa, the Divine, decide what is best for the rest of humanity and us. Let us surrender the results of all that we do to this sacred power. Whatever then happens to us is for the good, for our good and the good of everyone in this Universe. We are surrendering to the cosmic power that surrounds us. Without Its grace we cannot live or take our next breath. Say, 'Do what you think is best for me' with deep completion and see what happens. Not merely does the end goal materialize, but an immense spiritual relief will overtake you.

'Renounce unto Me,' says Kṛṣṇa, 'surrender yourself to Me, and I shall liberate you.'

Attain Peace

श्रेयो हि ज्ञानमभ्यासाज्ज्ञानाद्ध्यानं विशिष्यते ।
ध्यानात्कर्मफलत्यागस्त्यागाच्छान्तिरनन्तरम् ॥ १२-१२॥
śreyo hi jñānamabhyāsāj jñānāddhyānaṃ viśiṣyate dhyānātkarmaphalatyāgas tyāgācchāntiranantaram || 12.12 ||

12.12 Knowledge is better than mere practice. Meditation is superior to knowledge. Renouncing the fruit of actions is better than meditation. After renunciation of fruits of actions, one immediately attains peace.

Kṛṣṇa gives so many possibilities. Step-by-step, He gives options. Actually, these are not only for Arjuna's mind. These are for all kinds of minds.

Masters do not want to close the doors for anybody. They do not give up on anybody. Please understand, they give possibilities for everybody. Here, in these verses, Kṛṣṇa deeply enriches giving options to everyone.

We need to have tremendous spontaneity to understand this. Only with spontaneity will we be able to handle these instructions. For example, if you don't feel like meditating and are in a low mood, don't try sitting in a room with closed doors, forcing yourself to meditate. Just go out, go to the temple. Spend some time freely walking and moving around. It will relax you. Then you can enter into meditation. And if you are not able to do that also, do something else. Do something that helps to keep you in a relaxed mood that makes you feel relaxed. Then, you can enter into meditation.

Do Something Enriching

Here, Kṛṣṇa gives step-by-step instructions up to the ultimate and last step. The last step is being in the consciousness, being in bliss. But just because you can't do that, don't stop trying altogether. Don't give up on you. Do something enriching at least.

Spontaneity is a spiritual quality. Only a man who is not caught in his past, who is able to slip away from his past, can be spontaneous. We can only be spontaneous if we are complete with our past and we don't have a vested interest in our past decisions. This means that we are open to understanding and completing with the mistakes we have made in the past and we are ready to update and improve ourselves.

If we have vested interests in the past, we may think, 'No, all these years I have lived believing this idea, and understanding things this way. Today just because something is said to me I will not change. I cannot! I am not going to change.' Then we can never be spontaneous and complete. We will miss life and miss it miserably.

The quality of life updates itself. It can be called intelligence only as long as it updates itself. When it stops updating itself, it is intellect. It can no longer be called intelligence. Intelligence is living energy.

The Sanskrit word dhī means 'that which is alive'. In Sanskrit, the word for intelligence is dhī. Dhī is energy that is alive, which continuously updates itself. In the Gāyatrī mantra (the sacred chant) that is central to Hindu worship, we seek to enhance this intelligence-energy when we pray to the Divine.

Only if we don't have a vested interest in our past, in the decisions of our past, or the way in which our past was lived, the way in which we lived our past life (not a different birth, but our life before this moment), will we be spontaneous. Spontaneity is a great spiritual quality.

Here Kṛṣṇa gives four different instructions. Either you can establish yourself in Bhakti Yoga, path of Devotion, or live a regular life of spiritual routine, or sacrifice all the fruits of action to God, or live in consciousness and act. You can do whatever you want. He says, 'If not this, do this. If not these, then that…' Now all that we need to understand is that we should not limit ourselves at one of the lower levels of Kṛṣṇa's teachings. We should bring authenticity, the space of possibility and always try to move or expand to a higher level. When you can't reach a higher level of authenticity, at least stay at the lower level and keep trying without renouncing all efforts completely. Keep at it. You will be surprised at what happens when you put in your sincere authentic effort.

Ultimate Freedom

The scriptures mention 330 million devatas, demigods or gods. That was probably the size of the population at that time! They wanted each person to have his own customized god. That is why they say 330 million gods. If the scriptures were to be written now, they would say six billion gods. Each one has the freedom to choose their path and one's own god. Each one has the freedom to consider himself as god as he realizes the divinity in himself.

People have inner freedom, which is why the East has grown so much spiritually. In the West, you can't have your own god. In the East, anyone can declare himself to be a saint overnight. In the freedom of the East, many good things happen. Tremendous research happened in the inner world because of that freedom. Much research has been done in the inner world and many truths related to the inner world have been brought to light, brought to humanity, because so many people have entered into it. There will always be a few fakes. When so many millions of people take the path, and so many millions of things are expressed, one or two superstitions come about as well.

You may think superstitions exist only in relationship to spirituality. A lot more superstitions exist in science. At least in spirituality the masters do not have any vested interests in declaring something. Nothing significant will be added to their personal lives. They are still going to eat only that much and are going to wear only those few pieces of clothing.

But when it concerns scientists, whatever they declare is going to give them name and fame, money, and additional comfort in their lives. So naturally they have vested interests. With spiritual people, the more they renounce and the less they enjoy the outer world comforts, the more they are respected. So naturally, whatever truths they declare, whatever research they do will not add anything new to their personal lives. The respect they are given is based upon their lives, not their words. With scientists, it is based on their words. So in science, there is a greater possibility for superstitions than in spirituality. And when more and more people take to this spiritual life, there will always be one or two superstitions that result. Just because of this, we can't say that religious freedom is wrong, or that spiritual freedom is wrong. There is a lot of good in it also.

The West has social freedom. You can marry as many times as you want to. You can change your house to your taste. You can change your profession any number of times. You can dress as you wish. Nobody will mind. In the East, they don't have social freedom. They have spiritual freedom. In the West, they have social freedom but not spiritual freedom. For any growth to happen freedom is a basic necessity.

Here, with these four options, Kṛṣṇa is expressing spiritual freedom for us. He says that there are so many paths, and tells us to choose whichever one suits our mentality, and to practice at least one option. It is not so important which option that we choose. It is essential only that we choose something.

Eastern traditions offer many choices. If you are an intellectual person, then Śiva could be your choice and you can continuously sit and meditate. If you are inclined towards devotion, then Viṣṇu could be your choice. The path includes singing and dancing like the great masters Caitanya. Just sing the glory of the Lord like the Alwars, devotional saints of Tamil Nadu, related with Viṣṇu. If you are inclined towards yoga, if you are a yogi, then Devi is the one for you. Meditate on Her, offer worship and tantric practices.

There are many different kinds of techniques, and the options are many. You have customized ways, customized paths for your personal growth. Thus, naturally wherever one is, one can grow and reach the level one is supposed to reach. You are continuously given choices, given options. Naturally, one tends to take up something or the other.

The East has explored and done much research on the inner space because of spiritual freedom. The West has achieved so much at a social level because of social freedom. Of course, the East has struggled because of the lack of social freedom, but it has gained tremendously because of spiritual freedom. Here Kṛṣṇa gives many choices in spiritual freedom. One cannot expect any master, other than the Eastern masters to be so compassionate, concerned, caring, and generous as to give so many enriching possibilities. In the West, the law is compassionate as it gives a lot of options. In the East, the spiritual system is compassionate as it gives a lot of enriching options.

In Bharat, spiritual freedom is given more importance. These four enriching options are representative of the spiritual freedom given to society. Here Kṛṣṇa gives Arjuna the spiritual freedom to choose and of course, not only to Arjuna, but through Arjuna, to all of us.

If you cannot practice the regulations of Bhakti Yoga, try to work for Me because by working for Me - mat-karma paramo bhava - you will enrich yourself and come to the perfect stage - kurvan siddhiṁ avāpsyasi (12.10).

Surrender - The Best Enriching Option

Then one by one He gives all enriching options and finally says, śreyo hi jñānaṁ abhyāsāj jñānād dhyānaṁ viśiṣyate | dhyānāt karma phala tyāgaḥ tyāgāc chāntir anantaram || 12.12 ||

'If you can't follow these practices to enrich yourself, engage yourself in the cultivation of knowledge.'

He says, 'At least collect all these life solutions.' Cultivation of knowledge means collecting solutions to life's mysteries, such as how to avoid depression, how to be more courageous, how to be strong, how to avoid unwanted desires and how to prevent emotional blocks. This kind of knowledge that you can collect as life solutions can help and protect you.

The inevitability of each moment must be understood. Understanding the inevitability of life and collecting knowledge, collecting the tools to support us at those moments, collecting the ideas to balance ourselves at those moments, is jñāna, knowledge. We need to prepare 'earthquake kits' for our lives. Otherwise we will be unable to recover. The aftermath will be terrible.

The Eastern system continuously prepares people for inner hurricanes, inner tornadoes and inner earthquakes. Jñāna or knowledge is the earthquake kit for the inner space. People are prepared. They do not have to choose between inner and outer spaces. Have an outer earthquake kit in your car, and an inner earthquake kit in your heart.

Now we can have everything in the inner world and the outer world. We can have an earthquake kit in our cars and an inner earthquake kit in our hearts or inner space. Never take inner earthquakes lightly. Taking inner earthquakes lightly means we are acting out of ignorance. When quakes come in the outer world, we can blame somebody and be rid of the responsibility. But when it comes to the inner world, we can't blame anybody. Each of us must take responsibility for everything happening in and around us.

As Kṛṣṇa says in an earlier chapter:

uddharet ātmanā ātmānaṁ ātmānaṁ avasādhayet | ātmaiva hyātmano bandhuḥ atmaiva ripurātmanaḥ || 6.5 ||

You must help yourself ascend. You must raise yourself by yourself. If you can help yourself ascend, then you are your best friend. Otherwise you are your worst enemy. He gives enriching possibilities, among the different paths like practicing, cultivation of knowledge, meditation or renunciation of the fruits of actions, karma phala tyāga.

Among these paths, one is better than the other. First, He mentions that the path of meditation, dhyāna is better than knowledge, Jñāna - jñānād dhyānaṁ viśiṣyate. Better than meditation is offering everything at the feet of God - dhyānāt karma phala tyāgaḥ. He says that by renunciation of the fruits of action one can immediately achieve peace - tyāgāc chāntir anantaram (12.12). As long as we think that 'everything is mine,' we suffer. The moment we surrender, the moment we hand the whole thing over to the Divine, inner healing happens. Our inner space experiences the breeze of divine healing.

Often people think that surrender is some sort of loss of control; giving up is an expression of weakness; letting go is irresponsibility. Understand that control is an expression of ego. All control arises out of the need for 'I' and 'mine'. Control seeks power. Power corrupts.

Surrender is liberation. Surrender is the expression of choicelessness, of leaving the decision to the Divine after doing what one can do. Unless we let go of our expectations and our attachment to the results of our actions, we will continue to build unproductive stress and incompletions within us that will not raise us to our peak possibility.

When we learn to focus totally on what we need to do and work on the process, walk the path without worrying about the destination, whatever we do is done better, faster and more effectively. Kṛṣṇa's teaching is not merely spiritual. It is highly practical. It is not only after-life enhancing, but it is present-life enabling.

He says that for the person who renounces the fruits of action, eternal peace is the immediate result, yāgāc chāntir anantaram (12.12). When we renounce ownership to what we do and hand over the ownership to the Divine, peace and bliss descend upon us. There is true liberation in giving up attachment to the results of what we do. This liberation comes from not having expectations of any kind. We are detached from the results of our actions. That allows us to focus totally on what we have in hand, in the present moment of completion. Staying in the space of completion is peace, bliss, liberation, or mokṣa.

12.14 Ever satisfied, united with Yoga, has a strong commitment to Me and has fixed his mind and intellect upon Me, such a devotee of Mine is very dear to Me.

In all the previous verses, Kṛṣṇa tells Arjuna to do this or do that. Now, He is not saying do this or do that. He says, 'Those who do all these things are very dear to Me. If you don't do these, that too is okay. However, if you do them, you will be very dear to Me - yo mad-bhaktaḥ sa me priyaḥ.' In other words, it is emotional black mail, not directly but indirectly, but all for a good cause!

'One who is not envious, but is a kind friend to all living entities, who does not think of himself as a proprietor, and who is free from false ego, who is equal in both happiness and distress, who is tolerant, always satisfied, self-controlled, and engaged in devotional service with determination, with intelligence fixed on Me, such a devotee of Mine is very dear to Me.'

Important Qualities of Enriching

Understand here, He says, 'Who is not envious and a kind friend to every living entity.' These are important qualities. Let us analyze our minds. When we honestly analyze our mind, we realize that if somebody came to you and told you he loved you, you wouldn't believe it. The first thing you would do is figure out what he wants from you. You don't believe you are worthy of being loved. Next, you don't believe that somebody can honestly love you, because you don't love anybody honestly. Because you are calculative, you expect the other person also to be calculating. All our love is skin deep and you know how deep skin is.

Here, He says, 'A person who is a kind friend of everyone, who honestly serves, feels the friendliness in everybody and is free from false ego.'

Now we should understand the term 'false ego, ahaṁkāra'. Ego not only means showing what you don't have, but also hiding what you have.

There are two types of ego: active ego and passive ego. Active ego is showing what you have and passive ego is characterized by these kinds of thoughts, 'Oh, what can I do, I am a simple person, I cannot achieve anything, and I cannot do anything.' Hiding oneself is an outcome of the passive ego. An inferiority complex is a manifestation of the passive ego.

At least there is one positive point regarding the superiority complex. With a feeling of superiority, wherever one goes, one gets a big beating from society. But with inferiority complex, society does not attempt to correct you. It is a cunning way of hiding yourself from life. You will not even know that you have a problem. A person who looks for name and fame, and a person who doesn't want name and fame are both egoistic. If you ask for name, you are egoistic. And if you don't, it shows passive ego. Whereas a person who lets things happen and a person who allows things to flow, lives in reality.

Kṛṣṇa makes a comment, 'After all, who is going to know who you are? Why do you think you are a big person and your name is so great and that everybody knows your name? You think you are great, that is why you don't want name and fame. Nobody knows your name, relax.' Kṛṣṇa says clearly. Nobody knows our name. Asking for name and fame and saying, 'I don't want name and fame,' are different aspects of ego, different varieties of ego. The inferior ego is also ego, which is why he says 'false ego'. You are not only supposed to be free from ego, you are supposed to be free from false ego as well. You shouldn't hide yourself in inferiority complexes.

The moment you understand the futility of your goal and wealth, that nothing is going to be with you forever, all of these divine qualities radiate through your being. You will be transformed into a person who is established in forgivingness, who maintains equanimity of mind, who is satisfied and united with yoga. Actually, when you are blissful inside, you radiate these qualities. A man who is totally blissful inside radiates pleasantness for absolutely no reason.

We continuously carry a sense of slight irritation in our being; we are waiting to pounce on people. We don't know what we are doing. We jump and bite people at the slightest provocation, because we carry some irritation pattern within us. We continuously vomit upon others the suffering and misery that we feel. This irritation pattern arises within us out of constant worry, inner chatter because of incompletions. We feel we may not get what we are planning for and what we want. Worry arises as a result of the gap between what we expect and what we think we are capable of getting.

Worry is futile because there are many factors other than our capability that determine the outcome of what we do. We cannot control even our own breath. We cannot say with certainty whether we will take the next breath. What arrogance it is then to think that we can determine our future or the outcome of our actions!

Worry and irritation are pointless and make you powerless. Worry, anxiety and irritation dissolve once we settle into the present, the space of completion. Only in the present are we in a position to influence our actions and the immediate outcome of those actions. When we settle into the present, thoughts cease and worry and irritation disappear. We realize how irrelevant, unproductive and inauthentic worry is. Only how consciously you live, with what consciousness you choose to live remains with you. Only the consciousness of completion remains with you. When you understand the importance of your state of being, you automatically start radiating pleasantness and joy.

Meditation For Devotion

Just practice the technique of radiating pleasantness and friendliness. How does one do it? From morning till night whenever you remember, inhale, inhale, and inhale only the pleasant qualities of bliss. Visualize you are inhaling bliss and exhaling bliss. Your whole being will be filled with joy. In the beginning you will be visualizing, imagining. But in a few days you will realize it is your quality.

One more thing you should know is that imagination and visualization are two different things. Imagination translates into kalpanā in Sanskrit, while visualization translates into bhāvanā. Bhāvanā is different from kalpanā. Kalpanā means imagining things that are not there. For example, if you think of an elephant with ten trunks, that is imagination, kalpanā, that which is not there. But bhāvanā means visualizing that which is present but maybe eluding you.

If you sit during the day and visualize stars in the sky, that is not imagination. It is visualization. Because stars are in the sky even though you are unable to see them. So visualizing stars is not imagination. Perceiving what is there but what you are unable to see at this moment is visualization. Trying to perceive what can never exist is imagination.

So understand that meditating on gods and goddesses is not imagination. It is visualization. They are there. You cannot see them; that is all. You are supposed to fall in tune with them, like tuning your television. Similarly, visualization is tuning yourself.

Just continuously visualize inhaling and exhaling bliss. Visualise prāṇa, the life giving energy, going inside and coming out. Prāṇa is energy and bliss. Prāṇa is not merely air. Prāṇa is the energy that goes through air. For example, a truck comes up to your house and unloads luggage and leaves. The truck is air and the luggage is prāṇa. Using air as a medium, prāṇa enters. Prāṇa-śakti is the subtle part of air. Prāṇa-śakti is bliss energy, ānanda-śakti.

So whenever you inhale, visualize yourself inhaling bliss. When you exhale, visualize yourself exhaling bliss. Inhale light and exhale light. Think that your whole body is a beanbag filled with light. Imagine your body is a beanbag filled with bliss and light. You will automatically start radiating bliss instead of irritation. Instead of vomiting the poison of anger and jealousy on others, you will radiate love and bliss.

'Such a devotee of mine is very dear to Me, yo mad-bhaktaḥ sa me priyaḥ.' Kṛṣṇa says that if somebody lives in this manner, that devotee is close to Him. He doesn't say 'Do or don't do.' He does not want to make more rules. He is tired of making rules. He has reached a point where his attitude is, 'If you can, do it, otherwise, what can be done?' He is in a relaxed mood.

You are not ready to trust the Master. You keep resisting Him. When the Master says drop 'I and mine,' people are afraid that the Master may pick them up and take it with him! People are suspicious. That is why Masters sometimes say, 'This is the right way, but do as you want to do.'

'One who has fixed his mind and intellect upon me, mayy arpita mano buddhir (12.14),' says Kṛṣṇa. It is difficult for the devotee and disciple to have this attitude of surrender to the Master or the Universe. As long as things go the way the person wants, as long as the Master allows the devotee to do what he wishes, the Master is a great master and worthy of celebration. But once the Master turns serious and takes up his responsibility of spiritual surgery on the disciple, he wants to run away. A Master takes his responsibilities seriously. His major responsibility is surgery; it is the surgery of the cancer of ego. Once the disciple makes a commitment, the Master makes his commitment too. It is dangerous to run away from the operating table. You lose your whole life by running away. You may have to wait many births before you get another chance.

Here, Kṛṣṇa is in the same mood and He says, 'Such a devotee of Mine is dear to Me,' that's all. He is talking about the commitment that the devotee makes to Him. He says, 'One who makes that commitment to Me and fixes his mind and intellect upon Me, he is dear to Me and will be liberated.' So says the great Master of the Universe.

हर्षामर्षभयोद्वेगैर्मुक्तो यः स च मे प्रियः ॥ १२-१५॥

yasmānnodvijate loko lokānnodvijate ca yaḥ harṣāmarṣabhayodvegair mukto yaḥ sa ca me priyaḥ || 12.15 ||

12.15 He, by whom the world is not affected adversely, and who in turn does not affect the world adversely, and he, who is free from joy, anger and anxiety, he is dear to Me.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'He who is not affected adversely or agitated by the world and who in turn does not affect or cause agitation in this world, is dear to Him.'

yasmān nodvijate loko lokān nodvijate ca yaḥ | harṣāmarṣa bhayodvegair mukto yaḥ sa ca me priyaḥ || 12.15 ||

Only the person who is centered on his being, centered on the ultimate consciousness, does not create havoc in the world. Just by being in the presence of an enlightened person, our minds calm down. We become steady. Not only is the world not adversely affected by such persons, the world is blessed by their presence.

Once a person realizes that they are one with the Divine and all of Existence, how can there be any fight? How can there be any drama? There can't be! There is only the experience of intense love and compassion on its own and towards all beings. How can there be any small enjoyments or agitations when someone is continuously experiencing eternal bliss? It is impossible. For the enlightened one, it has all become a divine play, a līlā. And He sees that the play exists in Him and not that He exists in the play.

From Incompletions to Core of Completion

Here Kṛṣṇa is saying that the persons who are expressing from their core, unaffected by the happenings around them, are dear to Him because they are centered on Him - mukto yaḥ sa ca me priyaḥ.

For most of us, that isn't the case. We live on the periphery of our incomplete personalities and make a mess of things creating more and more incompletions wherever we go. To most of us, joy is a period between experiences of sorrow and unhappiness. It is like a period of quiet between two battles that we call peace, just as impermanent and just as unreal.

Joy and temporal pleasure from sensory experiences invariably lead to sorrow. Joy is the byproduct of fulfillment, of an expectation. When the expectation is fulfilled the first time, we feel happy. Most likely, this may not happen the next time around. So instead of joy, sorrow follows.

Joy can only be experienced internally if it is to be long lasting. Such joy is more accurately called bliss. Bliss is eternal, unlike joy, which is transient. Bliss is eternal. It arises when we drop expectation, when we stay centered on our being, when we are in the space of completion, the mood and mode of non-attachment.

When Kṛṣṇa refers to a state of not being in joy, He refers to this temporary transient joy, which is a by-product of our desires, the joy that comes and goes. It is powered by our illusions and fantasies. Only when one goes beyond this joy with its peaks and valleys can one truly reach a blissful state. Both joy and sorrow must be transcended for us to experience bliss.

If we close our eyes and try to focus on an object or event, after a few seconds we see that we can't continue. No thought or idea can control our inner space eternally. Always there is another thought that comes along to replace the last thought. This is the inner chatter of our mind. Buddha refers to it as the 'monkey mind.'

This chatter is the constant jumping of our mind between past and future. It is the journey that our mind undertakes between what it has experienced and stored as incomplete memories and the unknown, which is full of expectations and speculations, also based upon the past. This jumping, this journey, is what we call thoughts.

Anxiety builds as our ego realizes that what it desires may not happen. This loss of something that has not even happened, the product of pure speculation, causes intense emotions within us. Anxiety lives and breeds in thoughts about the future. Its source is our ego. Ego creates expectations. Expectations related to 'I' and 'mine', 'identity' and 'possession' create the fear that what is expected may not happen. To move out of anxiety, we must move into the present moment of completion. That is the only point at which our inner chatter stops and anxiety disappears.

When Kṛṣṇa says, 'He who is without anxiety will reach Me,' He says that he who is in the present moment will reach Me. In the present moment our thoughts cease and we are in the space of completion, and we can see with clarity the truth of our Existence, Kṛṣṇa consciousness, and then we are one with Him.

'Let go of anger,' says Kṛṣṇa. 'He who is without anger shall reach Me.' By the literal understanding of this verse, none of us can reach Kṛṣṇa. All of us express anger at one time or another. Anger is a positive energy. Expressing anger can be positive, both for the person expressing the anger and the one receiving it. This may sound strange but it is true.

Anger is often the product of guilt. We move into a defensive position. We feel guilty when we realize we did wrong. But instead of completing with that action, we become angry. In a sense, this anger is also directed at ourselves. The guilt we feel is the result of the internal rage against our own weakness. Guilt is the biggest sin we commit. Whatever we do at a point in time, we do with the knowledge and awareness we possess at that time. Once we have done what we have done, there is nothing within our power to change it.

When we let go of guilt, then we can let go of our suppressed emotions of anger, regret, defensiveness and the internal fury. People who appear calm on the surface, controlling the anger that they feel without expressing it, are sitting on a time bomb. Either it can explode unexpectedly causing grave danger to themselves and others, or it can lead to self-destruction through cancer. It is perfectly possible.

We should learn to direct anger at issues and take responsibility for the issue rather than directing anger at people. When anger rises against people, divert it to issues instead of towards a person. The person is only the perceived cause as you see it. Anger breeds anger. It is a vicious cycle. If however, we express anger and express it fully against the incident, event, or issue, without personalizing it, we can let go of that anger without harm to others and us. It is possible. You need to practice, that's all. When the emotive memory of that anger is expressed, the memory dissolves and we experience completion with that emotion. Over a period of time, the anger disappears even before it rises. Kṛṣṇa says that one must reach this 'state beyond anger' in order to be able to reach Him.

Selfless In Action

अनपेक्षः शुचिर्दक्ष उदासीनो गतव्यथः ।
सर्वारम्भपरित्यागी यो मद्भक्तः स मे प्रियः ॥ १२-१६॥ anapekṣaḥ śucirdakṣa udāsīno gatavyathaḥ
sarvārambhaparityāgī yo madbhaktaḥ sa me priyaḥ || 12.16 ||

यो न हृष्यति न द्वेष्टि न शोचति न काङ्क्षति ।
शुभाशुभपरित्यागी भक्तिमान्यः स मे प्रियः ॥ १२-१७॥ yo na hṛṣyati na dveṣṭi na śocati na kāṅkṣati śubhāśubhaparityāgī bhaktimānyaḥ sa me priyaḥ || 12.17 ||

12.17 He who is free from wants, who is pure and skilled, unconcerned, untroubled, who is selfless in whatever he does, he who is devoted to Me, he is dear to Me.

Kṛṣṇa now moves into higher gear. Once you let go of joy, anxiety and anger, once you transcend these emotions, you reach a state of calmness that takes you close to Him. Now, He moves from 'nissaṇgatvaṁ' to 'nirmohatvaṁ,' from emotional nonattachment to non-attachment to desires.

We need to understand the difference between 'wants' and 'needs'. Needs are necessary for us to survive on planet Earth, like the basic needs of food, shelter, etc. The great Jain master Māhāvira says, 'The moment you are born on this planet, the Universe sends everything with you that you need.' We just need to trust the Universe and we shall get what we need to live. We shall not want anything else.

However, we end up seeking more. Basic needs are no longer enough. Everything we have is a match for what others have. It is a constant cycle of 'What next? What next?' Even before we start enjoying what we have got, we make a plan to get more. There is no joy in having, the joy is in chasing. There is no end point to this chase. It is like a fast replay of all that has happened, every incident that is stored on the hard disk of our memory.

When our desires are our own true desires, when they reflect our real needs, when they express themselves in our inner energy, we don't feel any desperation about trying to achieve them. The realization comes that, as a matter of the natural course of events, these desires will be fulfilled. We are not driven and we are not troubled. We accept that these will happen.

Therefore, Kṛṣṇa counsels Arjuna, 'Become free from wants, be selfless and you shall be untroubled, liberated and you will reach Me.'

Beyond Love and Hate

Kṛṣṇa now goes into another level of controlling the mind. He now refers to one who does not love or hate - yo na haṛṣyati na dveṣṭi. He is not talking about not loving anyone. When we love the way we do, with conditionality and expectations, it works well as long as these expectations are fulfilled. When something does not work the way we wish it to, the love disappears like a dewdrop in the sun. In its place, hate appears.

Hatred and love are opposite sides of the same coin as long as love is conditional. Love can flip into hatred in a moment, the moment we feel that our expectations are threatened. In love of this type, there is external rejoicing, sharing of joy and happiness and public expression of happiness as long as the emotion remains.

Often, love or what we believe is love is related to time and space. So long as the distance is large and the time of contact is minimal we see a few defects in those we profess to love. Once we get closer and spend more time, we see the real picture. It can also convert love into hatred. To transcend love and hatred which are two different expressions of the same perceived reality, we need to drop expectations. We need to develop a sense of non-attachment. We need to be complete in our love.

We all go through several stages of relationships in our lifetime. As children, we are totally dependent upon parents. Our parents influence us and our love for our parents is conditional. We love them only because there is no option. To survive, a child must depend upon its parents. As we grow into adolescence, we question many things we took for granted as an infant or a child; therefore, teenagers rebel. They wish to be independent. They break rules.

In adulthood, we learn that to survive and coexist, we need to follow societal rules and regulations. We develop skills to get along with others. We learn to work and relate with others. Otherwise, we may become misfits in society. The single most important lesson that people learn in adulthood is that it is important to relate with people meaningfully.

As we grow and mature, and the spirit and its development become important, we seek guidance. We look for a Master. With the Master, the relationship is the reverse of what we started with as a child. We are once again concerned about survival, but it is the survival of the spirit and not the mind or body. To help in this survival of the spirit, the relationship that we need with the Master is one of absolute dependence once again, but with a difference. For the relationship to work, it now needs to be totally unconditional and based upon deep trust.

The only relationship that will work with the Master is total and unconditional love out of completion. It is absolute surrender. Surrender transcends love and hate. When one is in a mood of total surrender to the Master or the Divine, both being one and the same, the concept of good and evil, sin and merit disappear.

In a spiritual sense, there is nothing that is a sin. No one is sitting up there with a notebook and pencil and deciding whether we should go to hell or heaven by measuring our sins. There is no hell or heaven. Hell and heaven are not geographical. They are psychological, within our mind and attitude. We commit sins because we are already in our own hell. We do well to others when we are in our space of heaven or bliss.

Kṛṣṇa breaks the mold. He tells us, 'Go beyond good and evil, śubhāśubha parītyāgī (12.17).' He says this because there is no such thing as good and evil. It is all in our mind. When we understand this truth we are in His realm. That's His promise.

12.19 To one for whom censure and praise are equal, one who is always silent and satisfied with anything, without a fixed home, who is fixed in mind and who is devoted to Me, such a person is very dear to Me.

12.20 Those who truly follow this imperishable path of righteousness with great faith, making Me the supreme goal, are very dear to Me.

Again Kṛṣṇa says, 'Such a person, full of devotion is dear to Me - bhaktimān me priyo naraḥ (12.19).' He is not ready to put down any more rules, which means He is almost ending His instructions. He is almost saying, 'This is the way, if somebody is like this then I love him, that's all. I am not interested in anything else.' He says, 'One who is neutral towards friends and enemies, who is the same in honor and dishonor, heat and cold, joy and pain, free from attachment to the fruits of action, who remains the same in criticism and praise; who is thoughtful, who is content with whatever he gets, who does not care for any house and is resolute in mind, such a man, full of devotion is very dear to Me.'

samaḥ śatrau ca mitre ca tathā mānāpamānayoḥ | śitośṇa-sukha-duḥkheṣu samaḥ saṅga-vivarjitaḥ || 12.18 ||
tulya nindā-stutir maunī santuṣṭo yena kenacit | aniketah sthira matir bhaktimān me priyo naraḥ || 12.19 ||

Here is a beautiful phrase, 'One who does not care for any house and who doesn't bother to build a house for himself, aniketah sthira matir.'

Rāvaṇa lived for one kalpa (many thousands of years). Śrī Vyāsa lived for four kalpas. Rāvaṇa was building Lankāpuri, his capital in Śrī Lanka. He got Lankāpuri as a gift from Śiva and he was developing it. When Vyāsa came to the city, Rāvaṇa asked him, 'Oh Vyāsa, did you see my palace, and my country? How grand they look!' Vyāsa replied, 'Yes, I have seen them.' Rāvaṇa showed him everything with pride and asked, 'Why don't you build a house for yourself?' Vyāsa smiled and said, 'My life is just four kalpas. I have no time to waste building houses. After all, I am going to live here for only four kalpas, why should I waste time building houses?' Rāvaṇa lived for only one kalpa, for which he built such a big house. Śrī Vyāsa whose life was four times as long, thought it was unnecessary to waste part of his life building houses!

'One who is not concerned about owning a house is full of devotion and he is near to Me, dear to Me.' Kṛṣṇa concludes this chapter on Bhakti Yoga, Union through Devotion, saying that one who lives in dharma, righteousness is devoted to Him.

ye tu dhamāmṛtam idaṁ yathoktaṁ paryupāsate | śraddhadhānā mat-paramā bhaktās te 'tīva me priyāḥ || 12.20 ||

Dharma is spiritual righteousness. It is not and has nothing to do with rules and regulations laid down by society and religion. Human tendency is always to break rules. Societal rules seem to restrict one's freedom of expression and movement. Let us pray to the ultimate energy, Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, to make us all experience the truths of Bhakti Yoga, that love is our very life. Let us pray to Him to give us the conscious experience of bhakti, devotional love, and make us experience and radiate eternal bliss, nityānanda.

Thus ends the twelfth chapter named Bhakti Yogaḥ, 'Union through Devotional Love,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 13
Kṣetra Kṣetrajña Vibhāga Yogaḥ

In this chapter, Kṛṣṇa speaks to enrich Arjuna about kṣetra (Field) and kṣetrajña (Knower of the Field). This chapter is known as the Kṣetra Kṣetrajña Vibhāga Yoga, or the yoga of discrimination of the kṣetra, the field, and kṣetrajña, the knower of the field.

Kṛṣṇa clearly talks about the physical matter in which we exist, as well as the consciousness that stays in the matter. In some way or other all of us are related to this whole universe, whether we understand it or not, whether we experience it or not. The consciousness is the root cause. It is not only the origin, but also the cause. It is the source from which we come and in which we stay. The whole universe, the universal consciousness, is the space in which we all happen.

Kṛṣṇa uses the wave and the ocean as an analogy. The ocean is the universal consciousness or god, ātma or whatever we may call it. Buddhists use the word nirvāṇa, Vedantis say Brahman. Kṛṣṇa reveals the secret that we are like the waves, and the whole is the ocean. He explains how we can experience completion and infinity with the ocean.

Our only problem in life is that somehow we have forgotten that we are a part of the ocean. We forgot that we belong to the kṣetrajña. The word kṣetrajña means consciousness, which is the cause for the field to function. Kṣetra means field and kṣetrajña means knower of the field. Kṣetra means body and kṣetrajña means the consciousness that knows it has a body. Our consciousness is kṣetrajña and our body or matter is kṣetra.

In this chapter, Kṛṣṇa reveals the secrets of kṣetra and kṣetrajñya. If we don't know the secrets of kṣetrajña, the kṣetra acts as if it is the owner.

Getting Into the Body and Mind

A small example: You buy a new car. You sit in the car and start driving. Suddenly, after ten minutes you realize that you do not know how to stop it. If you don't know how to stop the car, you are not driving the car, the car is driving you.

In the same way, we get into this mind and into this body and start living. Suddenly at one point, we find that we are unable to stop the body or mind. It goes on as it wants and it is uncontrollable.

Bring the body and mind under your conscious awareness. The body and mind are good servants but not good masters. As servants, they are great. Of course, without the body and mind you cannot live life, you cannot enjoy life. They are needed. But, unless they are under your control, they will become your masters.

Until we experience the kṣetrajña, the knower of the field, the real life never begins. This is why the Hindu system considers a person to be born only when his individual consciousness is awakened. Until then his physical birth is not accepted, nor is he considered a human being or a manuṣya. According to the Vedas, when someone's inner consciousness is awakened he is considered a human being or a person who has taken birth. Until then he is one among the animals.

The first thing that our Ṛṣis or ancient Hindu enlightened masters want us to do is to bring our body and mind under our control with the power of completion. They want us to learn how to live in completion with our body and mind. If we have a car, an owner's manual is a basic need. Without reading the owner's manual, if we start driving a car, then whose mistake is it?

Only at around the age of seven do we start to handle our body. After the age of seven the intellect starts working and we start making decisions. The moment we start making decisions, we should first know how to bring the body and mind under control. That is why the Hindu masters teach the completion technique to awaken the inner intelligence and to master the consciousness. It is similar to reading the owner's manual before using the car.

13.3 O Bhārata, we should understand that I am the Knower in all bodies, the Creator. In my opinion knowledge means to understand this body or the field of creation as well as the Creator, one who knows this field.

Kṛṣṇa explains, 'O Kaunteya (son of Kuntī), O Arjuna, this body is called the field, kṣetra; the person who knows this body is called the knower of the field or kṣetrajña.'

Whatever you know is not you. If you know something, it is not you. For instance, you can read this book because it is separate and apart from you. Similarly, if you can know your body, then it is not you. If you can know your mind, then it is not you. If you can know your thoughts, then they are not you. Whatever you know is not you. You are separate from that or above that. That is why you are able to know it. Whether it is the body, thoughts or emotions, whatever you know is not you.

Now we need to separate these two, the field from the knower of the field. Once we separate these two, the body will be complete, blissful and joyful. Consciousness will be liberated. When these two join, that is where the problem starts.

All we need to do is understand and create the right cognition about the field and the knower, that is, what we are and what we are not. The problem in our lives is that when we identify ourselves with something, we believe we are that. Instead of understanding that we possess a mind, we believe we are the mind. The mind then becomes 'I'.

As long as we think that our body and mind are ours, there is no problem. But the problem appears the moment we identify with them. Kṛṣṇa says, 'We must understand that whatever we know is not us.' Inch by inch He starts to explain the difference between kṣetra and kṣetrajña.

When we understand that something is separate from us, we never feel that we must renounce it. We simply need to renounce the inadequate cognition that we are that particular thing, that's all. We will simply know that there is nothing to renounce just by being aware of the way in which our body or mind works. Neither will we feel tortured by them, nor will we feel like torturing them. The people who are tortured by the body and mind are caught in this world and its troubles. Another group of people continuously torture the body and mind in the name of tapas, penance.

A person who knows how to handle his body and mind enjoys the whole thing. He is totally at ease with himself. He feels completely relaxed with his body and mind. He intensely enjoys all pleasures and comforts and he never abuses the body.

Enjoying and abusing are two different things. Enjoying is when the mind and the body are in tune with each other. We feel ease, comfort, a deep sense of relaxation and a feeling of being at home with ourselves. Another category of people tortures the body for the sake of the mind, in the name of penance or tapas. These people are in search of peace and bliss. They go on disrespecting and torturing the body: going without food for months together, standing on one leg, or walking on fire. They continuously abuse the body or mind in one way or the other.

Torturing others happens when we torture ourselves. If we torture ourselves, naturally we will torture others. Please understand that we torture others when we do not feel comfortable and complete within ourselves. Torturing others is directly related to torturing ourselves. If we think that we are the mind, we torture our body; and if we think we are the body, we torture our mind. The person who knows the secrets of the body and mind neither tortures nor abuses them. He knows how to use and enrich them and live blissfully in completion with them. His inner space overflows with bliss, and his outer space enjoys comforts and real pleasures.

Kṛṣṇa reveals the sacred secrets of how to enrich the body and mind in beautiful and blissful energy, and how to create the inner space of completion, flowing in blissful consciousness.

Kṛṣṇa says further, 'O Bhārata, I am also the Knower in all bodies - kṣetrajñaṁ cāpi māṁ. To understand this body and the knower is called knowledge.'

Here, He makes two statements. He says, 'I am the Knower in all the bodies, and to understand the knower and the body is knowledge - kṣetra kṣetrajñayor jñānaṁ yat taj jñānaṁ mataṁ mama.' He says that understanding the field or the body-mind and the consciousness is knowledge. He says, 'I myself reside as the consciousness inside the beings - sarva kṣetreṣu bhārata.'

kṣetrajñaṁ cāpi māṁ viddhi sarva kṣetreṣu bhārata | kṣetra kṣetrajñayor jñānaṁ yat taj jñānaṁ mataṁ mama || 13.3 ||

Our consciousness is God and there is no separate thing as God. The problem arises when we start carrying an inadequate cognition thinking that we are the body and the mind. A person who carries the right cognition and understands that he is consciousness liberates himself. He is enlightened. He becomes the Buddha. Consciousness is God.

The Equation is: God + body-mind = man

Man – body-mind = God

You Are Consciousness, Kṣetrajña

Whether we believe it or not, we are consciousness. Let us see how we miss it, how we miss and mess our life. Here is a beautiful story about knowing the body and the mind and how we miss realizing that we are consciousness.

A pregnant lioness was hunting for food one day when she came across a flock of sheep. She tried to attack the flock but the effort was too much for her. She fell on the ground, giving birth to a cub and also died due to the pressure she exerted.

The flock of sheep saw the newborn lion cub. They started playing with him. They felt that they should take care of this cub, as one species often does for a newborn of another species. They just took pity on him and adopted him. The sheep started taking care of the cub in the same way they care for their young ones, feeding him with goat milk and grass.

The cub started behaving like a sheep and grew up along with the sheep. He lived happily amongst them, not knowing that they were different from him.

After some time the problem started slowly. The mother sheep started receiving complaints about the behavior of the cub, 'He is too arrogant,' 'He is too strong and rough,' 'He is not playing properly with us.' Naturally the cub was sidelined. Whenever any argument arose, they decided to punish him.

After a few days, the lion cub started to wonder, 'What is this? I don't feel that I am really living. Is this all a lie? Is this all that there is to life - eating grass, jumping around and bleating, just going around the grasslands? I don't feel I am leading a full life.' He felt that he was unlike the others, that somehow he was different. He did not feel that he was being himself.

Whenever he saw a forest, he was tempted to go and explore the forest. But his sheep mother had warned him that it was the one thing he should not do. She forbade him from straying away from the flock, obviously now considering him to be one of the sheep. She cautioned him that if he did so, the lions inside the forest would kill him.

This whole story is actually about the spiritual seeker. It is about how a person takes birth, starts seeking and how he achieves fulfillment.

The mother sheep said, 'You cannot go there, there are lions out there.' The cub somehow managed to suppress his search or feeling of emptiness even though he felt drawn in and was tempted to go into the forest to explore. After some time he decided, 'I think this life is not for me.' But somehow the mother sheep managed to pressurize and control him. She played a big drama - weeping, crying, convincing, and finally she got this lion married. The lion cub got married and a few years passed by. After some years he again started thinking and analyzing, 'What is going on? I am leading the same old life, eating, bleating and jumping around. I feel something is seriously missing. I have found whatever best one can get - a good mother, good wife, nice life - but deep inside me, there is only emptiness. I don't feel fulfilled. What is happening to me?'

Again he started searching. The seeking started. Then suddenly one day, a lion from the nearby forest attacked the flock of sheep. When this happened all the sheep ran away. This sheep-lion neither felt like running away, nor did he have the courage to stand and face the lion. He knew the lion was trying to attack, but he thought, 'He looks so graceful. Something about him is different.' He had never seen such a majestic beast before. So, slowly, somehow, unconsciously this sheep-lion felt attracted and drawn towards the lion. Because of the attraction, neither did he run away, nor did he have the courage to face the lion, because he thought he was a sheep under attack.

He started walking away slowly but kept his face and gaze fixed on the lion. The lion straightaway came near him and caught him. The sheep-lion started bleating, 'Oh, please leave me alone and do not kill me!' The lion said, 'Fool, I have not come to kill you! You are a lion, why are you bleating and shouting for help? Why do you think I will kill you?' 'Lion?' the sheep-lion suspected that the lion was trying to cheat him and take him to the forest. He became frightened and cried, 'No, leave me.' The lion again said, 'Fool! You are a lion, why don't you understand that?' The sheep-lion refused to believe the lion. He escaped and ran away.

Even though he ran away, the sheep-lion was unable to forget the lion. For a week he was afraid. Fear is usually there after the first glimpse, after the first experience. He had had the first glimpse of the lion. This is how Arjuna felt after his first experience of the Divine, his first glimpse of Kṛṣṇa. It is an experience that evokes fear as well as a blissful attraction.

A week passed by and the fear slowly subsided. He felt drawn to the lion once again. The sheep-lion felt like meeting the lion. 'I think I should meet the lion once more,' he thought. One part of his mind was saying, 'No, no, no, I am afraid that he may kill me,' while another part was saying, 'No, it was such a blissful experience with him. He is so graceful and I want to meet him again.'

Please be very clear that unless you have Enlightenment within yourself, you will not feel attracted towards an Enlightened person. If we feel attached or connected to an Enlightened person and feel we are in tune with him in some way, understand that it is a sign that we have Enlightenment within us already. However, if we have not matured or grown to the level of feeling the Enlightenment within us, we may not feel even a slight connection with an enlightened person. The moment you feel attracted to an enlightened Master's teachings, be very clear that the Enlightenment in you has started expressing or flowering.

That is the reason why the sheep-lion remembered the lion and felt attracted to it. He felt the intense urge to see the lion again and finally decided to meet him. But how would he meet him? The sheep-lion came to the edge of the meadow where the forest started, and waited expectantly every day for the lion to appear.

After a few months the lion appeared. The moment the sheep-lion saw him, his fear surfaced and he was caught in the dilemma once again despite having waited for months to see him. This time the lion came towards him and asked, 'How are you doing?' The sheep-lion started bleating again, 'I am, I am, I am….'

He was unable to answer, but did not run away, as he had done earlier. The lion said, 'Don't worry. If you are afraid, I will go away. I am not going to eat you because you are a lion. And because I can't eat you, I won't kill you. Also since

I see no use in you, there is no reason for me to stay here if you are afraid.' Saying this, the lion started walking back towards the forest.

The sheep-lion immediately pleaded with the lion to stay and spend a few moments with him. He also added, 'Don't come too close. You can stand at a distance and talk. Please stand ten feet away and I will stand here. But please spend some time with me.' The sheep-lion was now neither able to forget the lion and escape, nor did he have the courage to go near him!

This is the next phase of growth for a seeker.

With around ten or fifteen feet between them they stood and talked. However, again and again the lion said, 'You are a lion. Fool! You think you are a sheep! You are not like the friends you live with. This is not the way you are supposed to live.'

The sheep-lion started to think about what the lion said. Slowly the doubt he had that the lion was going to take him to the forest and eat him disappeared. Now the sheep-lion was convinced that the lion did not have an ulterior motive. He thought, 'I have nothing to offer him and I am of no use to him.'

Only when this confidence comes into the mind of the disciple, he starts trusting the words of the Master.

That is why in the Hindu system spiritual knowledge is free. We start trusting the Master only when we realize that we cannot contribute to the Master in any way, that the Master has nothing to gain from us. The trust between the Master and disciple starts when the disciple understands that he has nothing to add to what the Master already has in his being. The Master has everything and he is sharing because he is overflowing. He is not giving in order to take something from us. His very being is overflowing. Only when you understand that, will you start trusting the Master's words.

The sheep-lion developed that much trust on the lion. He thought, 'The lion is not going to kill and eat me. If he wanted to do that, he would have done it long ago. One thing is certain. He is not going to gain anything from me. So why does he say I am a lion?'

Then, the sheep-lion thought about what the lion had said. When we understand that we have nothing to give the Master, that he is overflowing out of his ecstasy and he is only sharing the joy and bliss, we start experimenting with things more deeply. Until we understand that whatever the Master says is only for our own benefit, we never try to experiment with his words.

The sheep-lion thought about the lion, 'He looks so courageous, so graceful, so bold, and he is radiating so much confidence. It doesn't look like he is lying.' We can clearly tell whether someone is lying or not by seeing the eyes of a person. We don't need a lie detector. All we need to do is look into his eyes. So the sheep-lion thought, 'He doesn't look like a liar. Then why is he again and again telling me that I am a lion? I know I am a sheep.'

The lion then said, 'I think you are not interested in believing me. Anyhow, I am not interested in wasting my time. I am going.' But the sheep-lion begged, 'No, no, no! Please, at least give me an appointment.'

The lion asked why he wanted the appointment. The sheep-lion replied, 'I will go home and think about whatever you have told me. Then I will come back and clear my doubts with you.' The lion agreed, saying he would meet him at the same place in one month's time.

The sheep-lion then started to contemplate, 'How can I be a lion? I know for sure I am a sheep. I eat grass. I bleat like a sheep and go around with sheep. So, how can I be a lion?' He thought and thought. He made a big list of questions that his mother and father never answered. One important thing though is that he never told his mother that he met the lion because if she knew, she would stop him. She would not have allowed him to go to the edge of the forest. She would have told him, 'Never go there! You must stay in the meadows. You cannot go to the other side into the forest.'

Parents are afraid for their young ones. They send their children to the temples but never to a Swami, never to a spiritual master. To them there is always a danger. See, Swami Vivekānanda is great as long as he takes birth in the neighbor's house, not in our house.

Anyhow, finally after one month, the appointment date arrived. The sheep-lion collected the best grass, whatever he thought was best, as an offering to the lion.

He gave it to the lion saying, 'Please have all these things. I preserved them carefully for you.'

Seeing the love of the sheep-lion, the lion also acted as if he was eating and enjoying the grass, just so that he could please the sheep-lion and make him feel more connected. He was zeroing down the distance. He wanted the sheep-lion to feel comfortable and connected in his presence. Only then could any transformation or transmission of knowledge happen. Just to make the sheep-lion comfortable, the lion acted like he was eating the grass.

Naturally, the sheep-lion asked, 'Is it good? Is it tasty?' The lion said, 'Yes, yes, it is tasty. I am happy. You cook well. You have done a great job.' After accepting the grass offering, the lion started to slowly say the same things to the sheep-lion, 'I am telling you again and again, but you are not ready to listen. You are a lion, not a sheep.'

By now, the sheep-lion knew that what he was thinking was wrong. Still he was unable to accept what the lion was saying as right. How could he be a lion? He knew by now he was not a sheep.

He applied logic, 'My color is different. If I am a sheep, I should be like my friends. I think differently. I do not feel satisfied or comfortable with that life. This means I am something more. But I am unable to understand how I could be a lion.' He was not able to comprehend what the lion said. At the same time he was not sure about what he had been thinking all along.

One day, the lion said to him, 'Come, let us go to a nearby lake for a picnic.' By now the sheep-lion was comfortable with the lion and agreed. When they reached the lake, the lion suddenly grabbed the neck of the sheep-lion, dragged him to the water, and told him to look at the reflection in the water.

The lion asked him, 'Do you see an image of a lion in the reflection?'

The sheep-lion replied, 'Yes, I see your reflection. You are standing.'

The lion asked, 'Do you see another reflection?'

The sheep-lion said, 'Yes, I see another small lion, your baby. Where is the baby? Your baby is not here but his reflection is here. Is he inside the water?'

The lion roared and said, 'Fool, it is you!'

The sheep-lion refused to believe and said, 'No, no, no, maybe your baby is hiding inside the water. Call him.'

The lion said, 'Fool, it is not my baby. It is you.'

The lion then told him, 'Look, I am now moving away. Only you are standing there. See what is happening!'

The sheep-lion then saw the reflection. Suddenly, the first shock happened to him, 'I think there is some truth in what the lion says.'

Again, he was frightened, 'If I am a lion, I must live in the forest. I cannot take that responsibility. If I am a sheep, I am so comfortable. Already, I know all my sheep friends and I get regular food. I know where food is available. I know where I cook. I know where I eat. I know where my house is. I know where my wife is. I know where my life is. I know all these things and I am completely accustomed to the life of a sheep. But if I understand that I am a lion, the whole thing must be dropped. I must renounce the whole thing. I must take a big jump. It's difficult.'

That fear pattern again came up and he simply ran away; he escaped one more time.

The First Experience

After a few months, the lion came in search of the sheep-lion. This time the sheep-lion did not have any grass offerings. Instead the lion brought an offering of meat for the sheep-lion. When he saw the sheep-lion, he didn't talk. There were no intellectual discourses, philosophical discussions or question-and-answer sessions. Straightaway, he caught hold of the sheep-lion, opened his mouth, and put the meat inside.

The moment the sheep-lion tasted the blood, the moment he tasted the meat, something reeled inside him. Something happened to his being. Something happened to his consciousness. Suddenly he swallowed the meat and roared.

The roaring is what we call Enlightenment. Most importantly, the sheep-lion realized that he had been a lion from the beginning, from day one.

The same thing happens in our lives. Again and again, we wrongly think we are sheep. At some point, we start suspecting, 'I am not feeling satisfied with this life. What is happening?' And after some time, suddenly we see a lion that teaches us, 'You are God. You are that energy. You are consciousness.' We get scared and run away. At home we start thinking, 'I think he has some plans. He wants to build an ashram and he needs me for it. That is why he says these things.'

After a few days we realize that he already has an ashram; we don't need to build one for him or contribute to his ashram. We realize that he has everything and doesn't need anything. Then slowly we start analyzing, 'Why is he coming everyday and saying the same thing? Everyday he comes and for two or three hours he says the same thing in a loud voice. Why?' After a few days we think, 'One thing is certain, whatever I think about me is wrong. But I don't know whether whatever he says is right or not.'

During meditation, one glimpse of consciousness happens. When that happens we again run away with the fear, 'No, no, no. This is not for me. If the same thing happens again, I may leave everything and go after him.' At this stage, the Master suddenly catches hold of us and puts the meat of solid spiritual experience into our mouth. Something happens in our system, in our consciousness. Suddenly we open our eyes and roar, declaring the experience that happened in our being. We realize that from day one, from the beginning, we have been That. The sheep-lion has always been a lion.

But it requires another lion to make a sheep-lion realize that he is indeed a lion.

From day one, we are the knower or the kṣetrajña, the consciousness. But by mistake we start carrying the inadequate cognition thinking that we are the body-mind, in the same way that the sheep-lion thought that he was a sheep.

Suddenly a person who has already experienced that he is consciousness guides and enriches us saying, 'This is consciousness and that is body-mind. Understand that you are consciousness.'

Here, the same story is happening between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. Kṛṣṇa explains kṣetra and kṣetrajña. He tells Arjuna that he is not a sheep but a lion; he is not merely the field; he is the knower of the field.

etatkṣetraṃ samāsena savikāramudāhṛtam || 13.7 ||

13.7 Desire, hatred, pleasure, pain, aggregate (body), intelligence, fortitude - this kṣetra has been thus briefly described with its modifications.

Krsna asks Arjuna to listen carefully to His explanation of what constitutes kṣetra - body-mind, and its activities, its changes, and how they are produced. These truths have been explained by many Ṛṣis, sages, from time to time. The Hindu scriptures, the Brahma Sūtras for example, express these truths with clarity, using sharp reasoning.

Thousands of years of research done by millions of inner scientists, Ṛṣis, in millions of inner science laboratories have led to the same truth: The true nature of man is pure consciousness, kṣetrajña, and man is the knower or witness of the field, kṣetra, the body-mind.

In the next few verses, Kṛṣṇa takes Arjuna step-by-step into what these activities are and how they interact with each other.

Kṛṣṇa talks about the five great elements, the false ego, the intelligence or the mind that makes decisions and all ten senses. Please understand, He says, 'ten senses, indriyāṇi daśakaṁ ca'. We think we have five senses. No. We have five karmendriya and five jñānendriya. Karmendriya are the senses or organs responsible for actions such as talking, walking etc and they are the mouth, hands and feet, organs of excretion and reproduction. Jñānendriya are our five senses that receive knowledge such as smell, taste, sight, touch, and hearing and they are the nose, tongue, eyes, skin and ear. So, all the ten senses, plus attachment, aversion, joy, sorrow, the body, mutual attraction and the consciousness contribute to the field of activities.

Actually the word 'consciousness' cannot be used. When our consciousness becomes rigid, it becomes conscience. There's a difference between conscience and consciousness.

For example, we do something based upon what we think is right or wrong according to our conscience. If we give these same teachings to the next generation, it will not work because something else may be right or wrong for them. When we force them to follow the same thing that we did, we are giving it as just a morality, as just a conscience. We are giving them a law without the spirit. On the other hand, when we give our next generation an understanding about life, we give them consciousness.

Kṛṣṇa says that the rigid sense of conscience, all the rules that form the kṣetra, are also the field. They are matter. They are not energy. They are not your being. They are not you. Whatever is mentioned here is not you. We should understand we are liberated the moment we know what we are not. We are liberated even if we live with what is not us. Even if we live with our body-mind, if we know that we are not the body and the mind, then we are not their slaves.

Nothing can enslave us once we understand and cognize that we are not body and mind. We can never become a slave to anything. Even slavery cannot enslave us. Slavery can enslave us as long as we are not ready to cooperate with slavery. This is a subtle point. When we cognize that we are beyond body and mind, we will feel no need to resist when somebody tries to enslave us. We know that we can never be slaves.

Only that which goes against our will can enslave us. Here we are in a totally different space, a totally different consciousness, the space of completion and nothing can go against our will. And we will never have a will that would make us feel like a slave. We will be flowing with the river, flowing with the current. We will disappear into the Divine. So slavery cannot happen to us. Our consciousness is beyond any form of slavery.

That is why Kṛṣṇa teaches the secret of understanding the body-mind and consciousness, kṣetra and kṣetrajña. In ancient times, man was only subjected to physical slavery. In the present day, man is subjected to psychological slavery. Understand, we are the psychological slaves of countless things.

The minute we stop resisting whatever we have, we start flowing. We stop giving someone or something the power to control our happiness. Nothing will enslave us. Everything will enrich us. We will experience the consciousness of completion and freedom.

13.12 Accepting the importance of Self-realization, and philosophical search for the absolute truth: All these I thus declare to be knowledge and anything contrary to these is ignorance.

In these five verses, Kṛṣṇa gives a beautiful technique. Until this point He gave us an intellectual understanding. Now He gives the technique and technology to realize and experience what He says. These five verses are the inner science technology to liberate our inner space. It is a precise technique to liberate oneself from the kṣetra. It talks about how to be liberated from the body-mind and how to bring them under our control.

First, the moment we understand that we are more powerful than the body-mind, we are liberated from the body and the mind. Here, He beautifully gives the technique to liberate us from the body-mind and therefore, how to experience the consciousness.

Humility, non-violence, tolerance, simplicity, approaching the enlightened spiritual master, cleanliness, steadfastness, self-control, renunciation of the objects of sense gratification, absence of all egos, perception of all the evils of birth and death, old age and diseases, detachment, freedom from all entanglements, even-mindedness amidst pleasant and unpleasant events, constant devotion, aspiring to live in a spiritual way, giving importance to the ultimate truth, and detachment. All these I declare to be knowledge and besides these, whatever there may be, is ignorance.

Kṛṣṇa mentions a long list of things in these verses with many instructions. If we straightaway try to practice all the qualities He has given here, we will feel we are going mad. We cannot really practice these qualities. All we can do is help the consciousness to happen in us so that we start radiating these qualities. These qualities simply happen in us.

By way of comparison, let us say we want to remove the dirt from a muddy water tank. If we put our hands into the tank and try to take away the mud, what happens? We make it muddier, that's all. All the dirt that is settled below will come up to the surface. Instead, if we sprinkle a handful of lime powder inside the tank, it will absorb the dirt and we can have clean water in the tank.

Our mind is also like a muddy tank. If we try to suppress it and fight with it, we will create more incompletion. Instead just add a little meditation process of completion which is like the lime powder, and relax. Just put in your awareness to complete and relax. Automatically the impurities will settle down. The moment we become aware and complete, and the witnessing consciousness starts operating, the whole thing settles down. The witnessing consciousness is the lime powder that purifies our being.

Instead of creating consciousness, we start creating the activity. Instead of working on our being, we work on our doing. Our doing is in no way going to help us. Only our being is going to help us. So work on the being and not on the doing. A person who works on his doing may continuously chisel, chisel and chisel his doing; however, his being will face the same old struggle, suppression, suffering, and fighting. Instead, if we work on our being, we will flower and automatically radiate the right energy, the right consciousness.

You Are Unique

If we practice these qualities just because Kṛṣṇa says that we should, the qualities will never really develop in us. They will remain skin deep. When true non-violence happens, our very being will radiate love, no matter what. Even if an enemy were to stand in front of us, no other emotion but love would remain in us, and that is what Kṛṣṇa really wants.

If we visit Sringeri, a temple in South India, we will see a stone statue of a snake protecting a frog with its hood. A beautiful sight! It depicts that emotion of divine love that is unconditional. Divine love does not consider whether a person is a friend or enemy. If we are centered in our being, qualities of love and non-violence happen. All the things that Kṛṣṇa has mentioned in these five verses are an outcome of the flowering of that consciousness, and not things to be practiced. If we practice them to please somebody else, we would become slaves to the people around us.

Normally we believe others' opinions about us. We accept their scale as a standard for measuring ourselves. Then we get into trouble. This is guilt. Guilt is reviewing our past decisions with updated intelligence. If we use our present intelligence to review our past decisions, we create guilt and suffering. Understand, we are updated every second. We are not the same as what we were a few hours ago. Our intelligence is continuously updated. So naturally when we look back and analyze what happened in the past we feel certain things could have been avoided. The problem is that we think we run the show. We take everything upon our shoulders and allow emotions like guilt and worry to come in. If we remember that the Universe is pure Intelligence that knows how to take care of our lives, we will simply relax. Also, when we allow the cosmic intelligence to operate, we spontaneously express the beautiful qualities that Kṛṣṇa enumerates. The same cannot be achieved by doing anything.

Kṛṣṇa first talks about humility or amānitvaṁ. Humility can never be achieved by effort. If it is attempted through effort, it looks ugly. Humility happens when we feel that every being is unique. It does not come by thinking that everyone is equal. There are no equals. If we deeply understand that every being is unique, we automatically respect everyone. Every being has something that he contributes to Existence, to life.

Even our enemy contributes to our growth. He may do it indirectly but nevertheless, he contributes to our growth. Never think that a person is useless. We are removed from planet Earth the moment we stop contributing to Existence in some way or other.

Normally we evaluate whether a person is worthy of our respect. We will see how well qualified he is, how much society respects him. Then we will decide, 'Okay, I think I can show him some respect.' It is as though our respect is so precious and the world continues to run because of that. When we understand that every being is a unique creation of the Universe, that the same divinity that is in us is in them also, we automatically radiate humility and the absence of pride. All these qualities that are supposed to be radiated by a seeker should simply happen from within. This is what Kṛṣṇa explains.

Another important thing: How should we approach an enlightened spiritual Master or ācāryopāsana? He talks about this in another verse also - tad viddhi praṇipātena paripraśnena sevayā (4.34). It means that we should approach the Master with questions and request him to answer the questions. Why? Why does Kṛṣṇa say that? What is the need? Again and again, spiritual literature emphasizes the Master. It is not only in the Bhagavad Gītā. In all integrated spiritual traditions, the living Master plays an important role. Why?

Three things happen when we meet an enlightened Master.

First, we see in front of our own eyes that it is possible to live in eternal bliss or in bliss consciousness all 24 hours of the day. The assurance and inspiration to achieve that state is there. We understand the possibility.

Next we ask, 'All right, it is possible for the Master. But is it possible for me?' That assurance is also given when we reach the Master. The Master instills the confidence in us by showing us, 'If I can achieve, why not you?'

It is like this: the seed is afraid to sprout and thinks, 'I may die if I rupture and sprout.' But the tree says, 'No, you must break open. Only when you break open can I happen.' The tree within the seed is waiting for the seed to break so that it can come out, but the seed is waiting for the tree to happen. The seed thinks, 'Who knows whether the tree will happen?' The tree says, 'Open, only then can I happen,' and the seed tells the tree, 'No, let me see you happen and only then will I open.'

A Master represents the tree in the analogy. In our life too, we are afraid to jump because we look for a guarantee that enlightenment is possible if we take the jump. We are afraid of being caught in an 'in-between situation'. Then neither would we become enlightened nor would we be able to return to our normal lives. We are afraid of the insecurity and uncertainty. But the Master offers this guarantee.

The Master has already become a tree. He gives confidence to the disciple. He says, 'Don't worry. I also struggled like you. Look at me, I have flowered. I have not died. I have become a tree. If you open, you will also become a tree.' He sits with us and assures us that he will take care. He creates the energy and gives confidence to open and become a tree. He reminds us, 'When I have achieved, why not you?'

Third, the Master creates the right space or technology for the tree to happen. He creates the right conditions, the right soil, water, etc. All that we need to do is trust the master and break open. That is why Masters create ashrams. An ashram is a space that allows the seed to open so that the tree can happen. The ashram is a space where the conditions are controlled, and in a secure and safe way we can enter into the consciousness.

The Master makes us experience the Truth which is in our very being. So first, he assures us of the possibility through his body language. Next, he makes us understand that it is possible for us also. Third, he creates a space in which it can happen. Fourth, he ensures that we are established in that consciousness. These are the responsibilities of an enlightened Master. That is why the Hindu way of life insists that we reach a living enlightened Master. This is what Kṛṣṇa calls ācāryopāsana. He gives the important guidelines for us to experiment with the technology.

13.18 He is the source of light in all-luminous objects. He is beyond the darkness of matter and is formless. He is knowledge, He is the object of knowledge, and He is the goal of knowledge. He is situated in everyone's heart.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'I shall explain the knowable, knowing which, you will taste the eternal Being, the beginning-less consciousness that lies beyond the causes and effects of this material world.'

In the previous verses, Kṛṣṇa talks about the qualities that happen with the flowering of the divine consciousness within. Now He reveals to Arjuna that this consciousness is eternal.

Please understand that our mind associates a time and space with every incident or event. The mind can only think chronologically. It is like an inner reference chart and all incidents are placed in this chart of time and space. Modern science asks questions like, 'How did this happen? What was there before this? What came after this? What triggered this?' When they asked about the creation of this Universe, they explained it with the Big Bang theory.

They said that a tiny mass of fire exploded and gave rise to our Universe. What they could not answer was, 'What existed before that?' Kṛṣṇa says that this universal energy, the ultimate consciousness, always existed. It manifested in various forms as planets, as humans and so on, but it is eternal. It will continue to manifest itself and return to the Source and it will always exist.

The concept of time and space that we have is based on our mind and senses. Whatever we perceive is a projection of our mind. This understanding of time is different from an enlightened Master's understanding. He measures time in terms of kṣaṇa. Kṣaṇa is the time between two thoughts. It is the space between two thoughts. Buddha referred to this time and space as śūṇya. Ādī Śaṅkarācārya referred to it as pūrṇa. It is the no-mind zone, the mindful zone, the space of completion in which we touch base with ourselves. It is the present moment, in which we come face to face with the divinity within, by which we recognize the cosmic energy that is our essential nature.

When we are caught in chasing one material pleasure after another we have so much stress, tension and worry bombarding our heads every second. Our kṣaṇa is very small because of the high number of thoughts inside us. This is why we get a suffocated, panicking feeling. We constantly feel time is running out. We are greedy for more and more experiences before this body dies and we are afraid that we might lose whatever we have come to possess.

We feel this way because we associate ourselves with the kṣetra, the temporary body and mind. Please understand that the body and mind are made up of the five elements and they return to their source once they have served their purpose.

On the other hand, an enlightened Master knows he is kṣetrajña. He knows that he is not the body-mind system. He has realized that he is the ultimate consciousness. He has no urgency to run in the rat race because he knows that life goes on, even if this body perishes. He has become a witness to the mind. Any thought that springs up will be only an action-oriented authentic thought, never an unproductive thought. He expresses the power of words, vāk śakti. The moment the thought happens, it immediately expresses itself as an action. No thoughts accumulate inside him. He experiences eternity because of this thoughtless zone that he stays in. This is the beginninglessness of the consciousness that Kṛṣṇa explains here.

The Master Exists Everywhere

When we are in front of an enlightened Master, one who is in a no-mind state of completion, the number of thoughts in us also comes down and our kṣaṇa becomes longer. The gaps between thoughts increase. So without even trying, we become calmer, more peaceful, and more aware.

The knowable that Kṛṣṇa explains is beyond any changes. It is eternal because it does not follow the laws of creation and destruction like other objects around us. It has always been there and will always continue to exist. Whatever physical matter we see around us follows a particular cause-effect relationship. However, our deepest core is untouched by these changes.

Every thought inside us affects the functioning of the whole Cosmos. Whether we want to accept it or not, we do not operate as separate islands. Thoughts that are present in the space that we live in affect our mental setup, that is the way we think and operate.

This positivity and negativity, creation and destruction, are all properties of the changing world around us, of the kṣetra that we live in. The minute we know that we are not this changing kṣetra but the eternal and unmoving kṣetrajñya (the consciousness that runs the kṣetra), we are liberated.

Kṛṣṇa calls this eternal bliss jñeya, knowable. When the knowing happens, the knowable (jñeya), knower (jñātā), and the knowledge (jñāna) merge. In this experience, the knower, known, and knowledge become one. No separate experience, experiencer or object of experience exists. It is called triputi, where no difference between the three entities exists.

It is like this: Imagine that you love driving and are sitting in a nice new car with all automatic systems and you are driving on a highway at full speed. You are so immersed in that joy of driving the car that you forget yourself. After some time you suddenly realize you are not even driving; the driving is simply happening. You have become the experience of driving and there is no more a sense of you doing the driving. The car is moving forward on its own and you have become the experience. Similarly, if you are immersed and involved deeply in any other passion, the experience, experiencer and object of experience suddenly merge into the eternal consciousness. You call it being in 'the space of completion.'

Kṛṣṇa explaines that His eternal nature, the eternal Self, is not bound by time. Now He says that He exists everywhere, sarvam āvṛtya tiṣṭhati and He is not bound by space. Normally we understand the presence or absence of an object or person in terms of physical attributes. We function in our lives based upon what we see, smell, touch, taste and hear. If our pañca indriya, five senses, cannot sense anything, we think nothing exists.

sarvataḥ pāṇi-pādaṁ tat sarvato 'kṣi-śiro-mukham | sarvataḥ śrutimalloke sarvam āvṛtya tiṣṭhati || 13.14 ||

One important and surprising thing is that an enlightened Master is more present in his absence than in his physical presence. This means that his energy never dies nor does it know any barriers. If we limit an enlightened Master to his form, we miss him completely. His energy transcends time and space and is always available everywhere forever.

When you are in the energy field of an enlightened Master who is no longer in his body, as in a jīva samādhi, the final resting place of the Master's body, without even making an effort, you become calmer and experience that space of peace within. Many great temples such as Tirupati, Tiruvannamalai, Mantralaya and Palani in Bharat are built around the final resting places of enlightened Masters. That is why these places serve as powerful energy centers today, drawing millions of people every year. Although physically the Master is no longer in the body, we feel his presence. Why? Because he is not bound in space by the body. The cosmic energy that he manifests transcends space and time. Only we know physical barriers.

Here, Krsna uses the phrase, 'Hands and feet everywhere, sarvatah pani-padam, eyes, heads, faces, ears everywhere, sarvato akṣi-śiro-mukham (13.14).' What does He mean by this? This is beyond the comprehension of the human mind and needs a little bit of internalization. We understand only one body, the physical body, because we associate ourselves with it.

This diagram shows the seven energy bodies or layers that we have in us. The outermost layer is the physical layer, with which we associate ourselves all the time. We know this body as having a pair of eyes, hands, legs, one nose, head, etc. Now let us take a few points on that layer. Let us call them 'you', 'me', 'your neighbor', 'Kṛṣṇa', 'Buddha' etc. So, at the gross layer, you are different from your neighbor; your neighbor is different from me and different from the various forms of God. You can see each point being distinct from the others. We are so rooted in this physical gross layer and so we see many barriers between us and everything around us, because everything appears to be different from the other in this layer.

Now, for each point, if we follow the corresponding points in the inner layers, as we go deeper and deeper, we suddenly realize that we all merge in the nirvanic layer. It is here that the universal energy connects every being. There is no difference in this space between you and me. This is the space of consciousness that Kṛṣṇa talks about. Here, Kṛṣṇa and Buddha are no different. All are various forms of God, all are manifestations of the same divinity.

The women who used to look after the cowherds during Kṛṣṇa's time, that is the gopīs, were great devotees of Kṛṣṇa. Despite their other household chores, they were soaked in devotion for Kṛṣṇa all the time. It is said in the Rās līlā, divine play of Kṛṣṇa, wherein he gave the experience of universal consciousness to the gopīs that Kṛṣṇa danced with each of the hundred thousand gopīs in Briṇdāvan. Kṛṣṇa manifested a form for each of the gopīs in order to dance with them individually. It was not merely one form, one body of Kṛṣṇa, but one hundred thousand forms manifesting simultaneously.

Please understand the deeper meaning in this līlā. Each gopī was so deeply connected with that divine consciousness, the Kṛṣṇa consciousness, that each one felt His presence. When we go within, into our core, we see divinity in everything. The gopīs saw Kṛṣṇa everywhere and in everything they did. This universal consciousness knows no physical barriers. That is why Kṛṣṇa says He is 'all pervading, sarvam āvṛtya tiṣṭhati.' He is all enveloping. He is omnipresent.

Kṛṣṇa goes on to give further qualities of the Self. But understand that all this is said only to inspire us to experience it first hand ourselves. If somebody asks us, 'What does sugar taste like?' and if he has never tasted anything sweet before, how will you explain to him? You may tell him, 'It will be in the form of white cubes, transparent, very sweet.' When he asks, 'What does 'sweet' mean?' You can continue to tell him other things, 'Sugar is made from sugar cane, which is full of sugary syrup, it is fibrous, you can chew on it.' What is the use?

Instead if he puts a handful of sugar in his mouth, he will automatically say, 'This is how sugar tastes! This is how something sweet tastes!' Unless he experiences what 'sweet' means, things will remain a theory for him, although the conviction about sugar might grow in him.

In Chapter 11, when Kṛṣṇa gives His cosmic form vision, the viśvarūpa darśan, Arjuna feels intimidated within a few moments and cannot handle the energy. He pleads with Kṛṣṇa, 'I cannot understand You. I cannot withstand Your glory.' But Arjuna wants to know what Kṛṣṇa is talking about. So once again Kṛṣṇa gives all kinds of descriptions to penetrate Arjuna's doubts and fears.

The compassion of an enlightened Master is so great. In spite of the doubts and skepticism, he quietly and patiently sits with the disciple until, one by one, all doubts are washed away. You see, our self-doubts and questions arise from our mind, forming a thick layer over us. A Master's grace gently dissolves this layer.

Kṛṣṇa says all life happens because of the thread of the universal energy flowing through. You see, so many things are happening around us, on their own, beyond our awareness. The life force that conducts the whole show, that controls every breath we take, the same energy that maintains an order in the chaos of the Universe, is pure intelligence. In Sanskrit, there is a saying that means not even a blade of grass can move without the will of the Divine.

Kṛṣṇa is sending a message to us about how much we depend on Him, who is the cosmic intelligence, for anything to happen. At the same time, without getting involved, the universal energy is a witness to all activities and all life forms.

If we look deeper, we realize that whatever we see and perceive as objects are creations of the mind along with the senses. We create a world of our own. Deep down, the true Self watches the whole thing without getting involved. The mind projects some people as good, some as bad, some incident as painful, others as joyful, etc. and then runs after or away from the people and experiences. For an enlightened being, a knower of the truth, everything is the same. He stops labeling because he has moved beyond names and forms, and beyond the dualities of good and bad.

Ramakrishna Paramahamsa gives a beautiful analogy. When we stand in a valley, we see pits and depressions on the ground if we look down, and mountain cliffs when we look up. But when we climb up to the summit, we observe that all the ups and downs below no longer matter. We have transcended the ups and downs that we saw when we were on the ground.

How to climb to the summit above all the ups and downs? You must relax. You must realize that you are already on the summit. You are beyond the ups and downs. But no, we don't want to believe it. Our mind tells us, 'No. What is he saying? I have important things to do in life. How can I relax?' We love our tensions and problems too much. We like to clutch onto our lives. We do not want to let go because we think this is all there is. We do not realize that if we relax, we can fly. A small story:

A hunter in a forest came across a clearing where there were many birds. He took a twig and tied a rope at the center of the twig. Then he took the two ends of the rope and tied them firmly to a pole on each side. Now the twig was hanging by the rope. He sprinkled a few grains around the setup. He was a clever hunter. Happily, he went away for a nap.

After some time, a bird was attracted by the grains and sat on the twig. The minute it sat on one side of the twig, the whole twig turned upside down due to the bird's weight. The bird now saw the whole world upside down and became frightened. It thought it was trapped. It clasped to the twig harder than ever and prayed to God to be set free.

After an hour, the hunter returned leisurely and caught hold of the bird. After that, you know what happened.

This is what we do in our lives. The bird did not realize that it was always free. All it needed to do was let go of the twig and fly away. We do the same thing. We grasp and clutch onto our past. We clutch onto the pains and joys and keep missing the space of completion. We miss eternity. We miss our consciousness inside.

The supreme truth is inside and outside all living entities. It is moving and non-moving on account of being subtle. It is near and far. Kṛṣṇa uses all these terms and concepts such as moving and non-moving, near and far, inside and outside because these are the only terms we can understand. He is giving us an idea to tell us that supreme consciousness is beyond these concepts and terms that we know.

The Indivisible Space Within

You see the world full of objects with different qualifiers because you associate yourself with a fixed entity. You say something is far or near based on the physical boundaries, with respect to the coordinates of your body. Whatever you do, what you think, is based on this reference point. You live in this space enclosed by your physical boundary called ghaṭākāśa.

There are three spaces we can live in: The space that is covered by the body, the space that is covered by the mind, and the space that cannot be covered by body and mind. The first is ghaṭākāśa, or the space enclosed by this physical body. Most of us live in this space nearly all the time. The next is cidākāśa, the space that you are aware and conscious of. Right now, if you are aware of this hall it is your cidākāśa. This is the space of the thoughts and mind. The third is mahākāśa. This is the whole space, cosmos, everything put together.

The ghaṭākāśa is made up of the five elements that are: earth, water, fire, air and ether. These elements become subtler as we move up, from earth, to water, to fire, to air, to ether. None of the first four reflect consciousness. Ether, the subtlest element, connects with consciousness. It reflects consciousness. And that is the reason why we are alive. The problem is, we think consciousness is bound by ghaṭākāśa. We think it is limited to this body.

That is why we make this body the reference when we view the outer world. We think this body is the 'I' that sees the rest of the world. You see, all science had this as its basic foundation: we are separate entities defined by physical boundaries. Enlightened Masters who have moved beyond ghaṭākāśa into mahākāśa understand that all this division of space is due to our ignorance.

Please understand that space can never be divided. Yet we divide it into boundaries and associate terms: within, inside, outside, near, far, etc. because of our limited understanding. This is the cause for our suffering. First of all, we divide the space because of our ignorance. Second, we try to possess the space that we think is in our control. And third, we fear that the space might be taken from us. All fears, including the fear of death, happen because we constantly try to protect the space covered by our body and mind.

Understand the basic truth that space cannot be divided. When we understand that we are mahākāśa, we transcend all boundaries. Whatever space we may be in, the possibility of achieving a higher space is available to every one of us. Man, as such, is only potentiality. He is not actuality. He is not what he is supposed to be. As of now we are in seed form and have not expressed our potential fully. We have not become trees yet. But that does not mean we cannot grow and become trees. When we transcend these relative boundaries we will understand through experience what Kṛṣṇa says.

Kṛṣṇa says that the supreme truth is inside and outside all living entities, bahir antaś ca bhūtānām. It is moving and non-moving on account of being subtle, acaraṁ caram eva ca (13.16). This is the space of mahākāśa, which includes the space of everything. This space is absolute. Everything is included in this space. When there is no 'two,' how can we compare? How can we say something is near or far when there is only one? The truth is absolute and one.

avibhaktaṁ ca bhūteṣu vibhaktaṁ iva ca sthitam | bhūta-bhartṛ ca taj jñeyaṁ grasiṣṇu prabhaviṣṇu ca || 13.17 ||

Although the supreme spirit appears to be divided as the cosmic and individual entities, it is never divided, avibhaktaṁ ca bhūteṣu. It is to be known that this is the basis of generation, maintenance and destruction of life. When we pour water into containers of different shapes and sizes, it takes on their shapes.

If we carefully examine their contents, all of them contain the same water. Similarly, the world of many forms and shapes, so many species of plants and animals, appears as though there is so much variety. Underlying them all is the same energy. The prāṇa śakti, life force, running in each of them is the same.

If we understand this simple tattva (principle) of life that we came from the same Source and we return to it, we will realize that we are connected to something much greater than our individual self.

I am the Source of All Light

The Universal consciousness manifests in numerous ways and is also responsible for destruction. When the same universal energy is unmanifest, unexpressed, it exists in potential form. This is referred to as puruṣa in the scriptures. When this energy manifests itself in this world, taking various names, forms, and shapes, it expresses itself as prakṛti. Prakṛti is the creative expression of puruṣa.

The life force that caused us to be born also maintains us. Every little thing happening within us is carried out by the same intelligence that brought us into this world. Similarly, the same intelligence accompanies us when we leave the body.

The water of the ocean is the puruṣa and the waves that dance and play are prakṛti. The water appears to be divided in the form of waves of many shapes and sizes. In reality it is one mass of the same water. Similarly, Kṛṣṇa reminds Arjuna that the supreme spirit appears to be divided into puruṣa and prakṛti because of the different creations and expressions of prakṛti. However, He is beyond all this and exists undivided. At their core, all are creations of the universal energy.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'He is the supreme Self, or witnessing consciousness that is the source of all light in all luminous objects. He is knowledge, He is the object of knowledge, and He is the goal of knowledge. He is situated in everyone's heart.'

jyotiṣām api taj jyotis tamasaḥ param ucyate | jñanaṁ jñeyaṁ jñana-gamyaṁ hṛdi sarvasya viṣṭhitam || 13.18 ||

The sources of light as we understand them are the sun, moon, lightning, fire or artificial means like electricity. All these produce light, which makes life possible. An object that is around us becomes visible because of the light energy. The cakṣu, the energy behind vision, can perceive that object when the surroundings are lit up. The light energy from the sun is responsible for the birth and growth of all living beings. All beings on planet Earth depend on the sun for their survival.

What gives these sources of light the energy to run? What drives them? The universal consciousness gives energy to all sources of light. Kṛṣṇa calls this Self the 'Source of light - jyotiṣam api taj jyotis'. The sources of light - the sun, the moon and lightning - derive their energy from that self-luminous Self. That is why there is a common adjective given to the Self as 'effulgent' or 'luminous'.

In a deeper sense, when the Self is referred to as luminous, it is not what we normally understand. The Self is pure intelligence and this knowledge dispels ignorance. An enlightened Master sees everything with clarity. He sees truth as it is. You see, when you are in a dark room you are ignorant of what is present in that room. When the lights are switched on, you become aware of things around you.

An enlightened Master uses the lamp of consciousness to see the truth as it is, without any filters. Using this lamp, he experiences his surroundings in totality, in completion with the whole. This lamp is not like any other lamp; it cuts the layers of ignorance, however deep they may be. That is why the Master sees 360 degrees around him. He does not filter what he sees like we do. Please understand, the filtering that we do is the cause of our problems, our incompletions. We do not see whatever exists as it exists. We distort it to suit our inadequate, limited ideas, that are born out of our root thought patterns.

The ego is like darkness; it has no positive existence. Just as darkness is the absence of light, the ego is the absence of awareness.

To struggle to kill the ego is like struggling to push darkness out of the room. To expel the darkness, what you need to do is to forget about dealing with the darkness. Focus your energy on light instead. Bring a small lamp into the room and the darkness will leave on its own. This lamp of consciousness and completion is available to all of us. It lies within us.

Forget all about the ego. Instead, focus on bringing a lamp of completion into your being. When your entire consciousness has become a flame, the ego is no more.

13.19 Thus the field of activities, knowledge and the knowable has been summarily described by Me.

प्रकृतिं पुरुषं चैव विद्ध्यनादी उभावपि । prakṛtiṃ puruṣaṃ caiva viddhyanādī ubhāvapi

vikārāṃśca guṇāṃścaiva viddhi prakṛtisambhavān || 13.20 ||

13.20 Prakṛti or the field and its attributes and Puruṣa or the knower or the supreme consciousness are both without beginning. All the transformations of nature that we see are produced by the field or prakṛti.

कार्यकारणकर्तृत्वे हेतुः प्रकृतिरुच्यते । kāryakāraṇakartṛtve hetuḥ prakṛtirucyate

puruṣaḥ sukhaduḥkhānāṃ bhoktṛtve heturucyate || 13.21 ||

13.21 In the production of the body and the senses, prakṛti is said to be the cause; in the experience of pleasure and pain, puruṣa is said to be the cause.

पुरुषः प्रकृतिस्थो हि भुङ्क्ते प्रकृतिजान्गुणान् । puruṣaḥ prakṛtistho hi bhuṅkte prakṛtijānguṇān kāraṇaṃ guṇasaṅgo'sya sadasadyonijanmasu 13-22

13.22 The living entity in the material nature follows the way of life, enjoying the moods of nature. Due to association with the material nature, it takes birth in good and evil wombs.

उपद्रष्टानुमन्ता च भर्ता भोक्ता महेश्वरः । upadraṣṭānumantā ca bhartā bhoktā maheśvaraḥ paramātmeti cāpyukto dehe'sminpuruṣaḥ paraḥ 13-23

13.23 Yet, in this body there is a transcendental energy. He who is divine, who exists as an owner or the witness, supporter, enjoyer and the pure witnessing consciousness, is known as the Paramātman.

य एवं वेत्ति पुरुषं प्रकृतिं च गुणैः सह । सर्वथा वर्तमानोऽपि न स भूयोऽभिजायते ॥ १३-२४॥ ya evaṃ vetti puruṣaṃ prakṛtiṃ ca guṇaiḥ saha sarvathā vartamāno'pi na sa bhūyo'bhijāyate || 13.24 ||

13.24 One who understands this philosophy concerning material nature, the living entity and the interaction of the modes of nature is sure to attain liberation. He will not take birth here again, regardless of his present position.

Kṛṣṇa delivers this discourse of the Bhagavad Gītā to Arjuna standing in a chariot on the battlefield of Kurukṣetra. If you look a little deeper, this is a beautiful picture of each of us. Kṛṣṇa represents the Self, the charioteer, knower of the field, kṣetrajña, the one who runs the show. If the charioteer does not know how to take charge, the horses start to pull the chariot in different directions.

These horses symbolize the senses and the mind pulling us to different places as they please, thus leaving us in a state of confusion in everything that we do. If we are not ready to control the horses, the horses will control us. This is what happens in our lives. Due to our lack of understanding about how to drive the chariot, we conveniently give the horses the authority.

The very understanding about the kṣetra, meaning the material things around us, teaches us how to control them. The minute we understand the kṣetra, the body-mind, we realize we are not the kṣetra. If we are the kṣetra, then how can we understand it? You see, we can read this book because we are not the book. There is a separation between the book and us. In the same way, only when we understand the kṣetra, do we understand that we are not the kṣetra. This understanding that we are not the kṣetra brings with it the understanding that we are the kṣetrajña. When we realize that we are the kṣetrajña, we have transcended the kṣetra.

Life Is A Dream

See, when we wake up from a dream, why do we suddenly understand that it was not real? It is because suddenly we perceive a separation between the dream and us. The understanding that it was merely a dream, puts us into reality. Similarly, the understanding that this world is nothing but a projection of the mind, the understanding that this is not our real identity, will put us into reality.

Let us say we dream of winning some award in front of thousands of people. The mind is so powerful that it can create the entire picture including every detail of the auditorium, all the thousand people sitting and clapping, the speeches, everything that we would normally see in an auditorium. The mind is so powerful to be able to give life to the scene around us and not just to our identity in the dream.

This is what the mind does in the so-called real world also. The only difference is that we wake up easily from our night dreams. However, we do not know how to wake up from this bigger day dream that we now think is reality. As long as we think this world is real, we suffer. The minute we realize this world is not real, we create a distance between the suffering and us. Only an enlightened Master who has experienced the truth can awaken us to reality. Out of their compassion, these Masters descend on planet Earth to tell us that everything we see around us is a projection of our minds.

The understanding of the kṣetra, the illusory world created by our minds, is important in helping us to differentiate between reality and non-reality. Kṛṣṇa says that we need to understand what kṣetra and kṣetrajña to realize the truth. Until then we blindly believe that the projection of our mind, the drama, is reality. We have created our own drama and are acting in it. By and by, we forget that we created the drama. We forget that we are not the roles or characters we enact onstage. We start judging and reacting to everything about it.

If a child is constantly reminded about the divinity within right from birth, it grows up to be a jīvan mukta, liberated while still in the body. This is how children were brought up in the Hindu tradition. That is why the level of consciousness was so high.

Prakṛti, the material world that we see, is without beginning. Puruṣa or supreme consciousness is also without beginning. All changes and transformations are produced by prakṛti.

All the transformations that we see, such as the change in seasons, concepts of time and space, our body, mind or anything that changes are different attributes of prakṛti. It is like the ebb and flow of the waves in an ocean. These attributes rise and fall. The time and space of the rise and fall is totally relative. The duration of the rise and fall of these attributes is also highly relative because it is purely a concept created by our senses. Our senses perceive time as moving. Our senses perceive the motion of time with respect to the material world, with relation to the speed of the planets, etc. We have created this concept of time for our sensory perceptions. We have created the space and location also with the concept of comparative reality.

For example, if we are sitting with someone we love, no matter how much time passes, we feel as if we were with that person for a short duration. We will not be aware how time passed so quickly. On the other hand, if we are sitting with a person who bores us or bothers us, we will feel like looking at our watch constantly. We would feel that time is not moving at all.

As long as our mind moves, time moves. When we look deeply, we realize that the mind is a constant movement between past and future. The mind is a dilemma; it is constantly reviewing the past and planning for the future. We are constantly pulled towards the past or future and are never in the present moment. When we fall into the present moment, we fall into eternity and that eternity is a combination of past, present and future. There is no distinction. In this state we become the witness of all time and space-related happenings. We become the witnessing consciousness. We become the knower and we witness the field or kṣetra with complete detachment. We realize that everything in the outer world is a drama or a dream, and anything that we attempt to do in our lives is housekeeping in this dream.

Any effort that we make is another act in this dream. The whole idea is to not become entangled or emotionally attached to the housekeeping in this dream. The idea is to enjoy it and watch it by becoming one with our true self.

Knowledge about the material world is necessary to help us step back from the dream and realize that we are unnecessarily attached and entangled in the field, kṣetra. All transformations in the field are related to time and space, which are in turn related to our mind. All transformations are the play of prakṛti or the field. Mind is a part of prakṛti.

'Nature is the source of all material causes and their effects, whereas the living entity is the source of things such as sukha (pleasure), duḥkha (pain) and everything that is of the world.'

Kṛṣṇa puts us back into our consciousness through these words. This contains the gist of what He has been saying in the previous verses. He makes a clear statement that whatever we see is not us.

He says, 'Go beyond and beyond and beyond and beyond. When you are able to see the body, move beyond. If you are able to witness your thoughts, go further beyond. If you are able to see your moods, go further beyond. If you are able to witness your emotions, go further beyond. You are not that either.'

Witness the consciousness that is witnessing. When you watch, detach from the thoughts, sit back, relax and watch. Do not try to create, nourish or destroy the thoughts. The ultimate consciousness that witnesses is beyond Brahma (Creator), Viṣṇu (Sustainer) or Śiva (Rejuvenator). When we learn to welcome thoughts and allow them to complete, they merely come and go.

It is like watching clouds in the sky. Even if there is a thought saying that you are witnessing, watch that thought also. Watch the witnessing until that thought also disappears. Go beyond and beyond, deep into your being. Go beyond the thought that you are witnessing. Please listen. As long as you think in your mind that you are witnessing, you are not witnessing. When the thought that you are witnessing exists, you are not witnessing. You are now caught in the thought, 'I am witnessing.' Drop that.

This last thought that you are witnessing is like a bridge between you and God, between you and the thoughtless space. Initially, when you try to witness your actions and your thoughts, it is natural to think that you are watching. Let it be. Having this thought is better than having a hundred incomplete thoughts bombarding your inner space. But go beyond. Do not stop there. Witness the thought that you are witnessing. Then the pure, uncorrupted and untouched complete inner space happens in you. It is only in the uncorrupted and pure inner space of completion that God manifests and the divine consciousness is perceived. Understand, completion is God.

Witnessing is the Master Key

Here Kṛṣṇa gives us a technique. As of now, we are like 18-carat gold, copper and gold mixed together. When we repeatedly put the 18-carat gold into the fire of witnessing consciousness, eventually it becomes 22-carat gold. If we continue to put that gold into the fire, the 22-carat gold becomes pure 24-carat gold. In the same way, if we put ourselves into the fire of witnessing consciousness, we become purified to a certain extent. Again and again, if we constantly put ourselves into this fire of witnessing consciousness, our inner space eventually becomes completely pure, like 24-carat gold.

The essence of all religions and all spirituality, the whole thing is contained in this single verse that Kṛṣṇa presents here. Kṛṣṇa presents the master key that opens all locks, in this chapter:

upadraṣṭānumantā ca bhartā bhoktā maheśvaraḥ | paramātmeti cāpy ukto dehe 'smin puruṣaḥ paraḥ || 13.23 ||

Witnessing the body and the mind, witnessing your being. Witnessing is the master key.

If we can enter the witnessing technique and experience the witnessing space of completion for at least a few minutes, we will get a taste of it. However much we hear about witnessing, however much we talk about witnessing or however much we analyze the art of witnessing, unless we experience it ourselves, it is of no use.

You must test it on yourself. You must test it with your being. Reading or listening will not transform you. Reading or listening is like reading the menu and leaving the restaurant without tasting the food on the menu. So now since we have read the menu card, it is time to taste the preparation.

Your Cognition is Transformable, Be Complete

Kṛṣṇa goes one step further. All along He told us how to cleanse our inner space and how to realize the Divine consciousness within. Now, in the last verse He says that one who does so attains liberation, regardless of his present position, sarvathā vartamāno 'pi na sa bhūyo 'bhijāyate (13.24).

Every being is moving towards the Divine, whether or not the being is aware of it. We take on this body to fulfill certain desires. If we truly put our energies into dissolving these desires, we have no reason to take another birth to fulfill these desires. The incompletion happens when we start to lead somebody else's life and forget we are here to live our desires and not others' desires. We constantly borrow other people's desires and accumulate them in us.

Then, before we start realizing our true nature, it becomes time to leave this body. We take with us the entire baggage of unfulfilled desires and take another body again. The universe again and again tries to help us dissolve our desires so that we become free of them. But we resist by not feeling responsible for what happens within and around us.

Kṛṣṇa says that an understanding of kṣetra or prakṛti straightaway liberates us. We are caught up in pursuing sense pleasures and accumulating desires as long as we associate ourselves with this body. The minute we understand that we are beyond the body and mind, we suddenly realize, 'What stupidity to run in this rat race!'

All our problems, all our incompletions arise due to the ignorance of our true nature. The understanding that we are beyond all petty things like fighting for name, fame, money or power liberates us from them. A cognitive shift happens that transforms and frees us from the bondage of material things. This cognitive shift can happen at any time, to anyone. It is not necessary that you be brought up in an ashram, listening to God's name all the time. You could be anywhere, doing anything. And when it happens, it is a quantum jump in the level of consciousness. It does not happen gradually. It is spontaneous enlightenment. It is like pressing a switch and the whole room is lit up in one shot.

Understand, your cognition is changeable, transformable is the first cognition you need. Whenever people realize that they are beyond the bondages of body and mind, that their cognition is changeable, spontaneous enlightenment happens. When people who go on doing completion, with their body and mind , along with the basic root-pattern that their cognition is not changeable; then finally, at one point, they break and understand that cognition is changeable, they become enlightened. That is called enlightenment process, gradual enlightenment. People who immediately understand that cognition is changeable and awaken, are people who have become spontaneously enlightened, they have instant enlightenment.

You go on believing that because you are seeing from the time of your birth, seeing is hardware of you like the eyes. You don't separate eyes and seeing, you don't separate ears and hearing, you don't separate tongue and tasting. You don't separate kṣetra and kṣetrajña , the one watching the kṣetra. You think that if it is there, it is there, which is not the truth. Cognition is changeable. Cognition is transformable. With this clarity that the cognition is transformable, now decide and be liberated. Just an understanding that our cognition is changeable and transformable, that we are beyond material pursuits is enough to liberate us.

Just know your incompletions with this clarity that cognition is changeable, the incompletions of kṣetra will lose power over you. Incompletions will have power over you as long as you feel cognition is not changeable. With this understanding of kṣetrajña, start living and thinking. Regardless of your present position, your very thinking will be completion. This is the science of spontaneous completion, instant completion.

Technique For Spontaneous Completion

Completion does not mean blindly accepting everything that happens in your life, in the kṣetra. It simply means not resisting life as it happens to us. The root of all our incompletions is the idea we carry, 'Life should not be this way.'

That is why we spend our whole life asking, 'Why, why, why? Why is life so bad? Why did this happen to me? Why do bad things happen to good people?'

Spontaneous completion or instant completion means simply dropping the wrong understanding that is creating conflict for you in a particular situation.

It is possible. Next time you face a crisis or conflict in life, don't ask, 'Why is life this way? Instead, decide: this is life, so now what? Do I want to accept it and move on? Do I want to reject it and move on? Or do I change it the way I want?

Whatever decision you make out of this cognition will be right for you. When you act out of completion, you are empowered to resolve any conflict that happens inside you or outside you.

13.27 Bhārata, know that whatever is born whether movable or immovable, it comes into existence by the combination of kṣetra and kṣetrajña.

In this verse, Kṛṣṇa gives various techniques for the path to Self-realization. He says various methods or paths may be used to realize our true Self.

People say 'As many masters, so many paths.' Actually it should be 'As many disciples, so many paths!' Each disciple can have his own path. This is what Kṛṣṇa says. We can attain the ultimate consciousness through different paths.

Kṛṣṇa says that through meditation or yoga or knowledge or contemplation or surrendering to the Divine, you can attain liberation. All the different methods lead to the same goal. Each chapter of the Bhagavad Gītā gives a different technique to realize the Self.

Kṛṣṇa tells Arjuna about the paths. He gives alternatives: meditation, yoga, chanting mantra, learning and acquiring knowledge and surrendering to the Cosmos.

Follow Your Own Path

You should know which path is good for you. Lots of people take up a spiritual path without knowing what it is. You can have a starting point but you should find out if you are on the right path. You should not blindly follow someone because someone you know is following that guru or that path.

There are different paths to realize the truth. However, we must understand what our path is. This is where a true enlightened Master can enrich you. He knows exactly what the path is for you. He corrects you when you are on the wrong path.

You see, all the techniques must be done out of completion. Meditation must be done with awareness. Everything you do can be meditation if you do it with awareness and intensity.

Kṛṣṇa gives it as a path to attain the ultimate consciousness. In this verse Kṛṣṇa talks about sāṅkhyena, through knowledge or philosophical discussion. He says you can attain the goal using knowledge. Understand, gathering knowledge and philosophical discussions can be done in two ways.

Many people read a lot of books. These people are the intellectuals. They collect knowledge like others collect stamps or coins. But if you look deeper, the knowledge will be just another manifestation of their ego. They would just show off. They would not have really assimilated the knowledge for themselves. If we discuss for the sake of showing our knowledge and ego, we have made no use of that knowledge.

At the end of the verse, Kṛṣṇa gives a wonderful technique. He gives the ultimate technique, the technique of surrendering. He says, 'Surrender the outcome of your actions to Me.' This is the most effective technique. He talks about it throughout the Gītā.

Just surrender the fruits of your actions to Him, the universal consciousness. Most often, we take responsibility for the outcome of our actions. That is when our tensions and problems start. Just surrender everything to the cosmic energy of Kṛṣṇa. Once we do, we will feel liberated. We will feel free. This is the easiest path to reach the truth.

Just because someone has spiritual knowledge, it does not mean that he is actually a seeker. Actually, all they have is intellectual knowledge, not spiritual knowledge. When they speak, they do not speak out of experience. That is the difference between an enlightened Master and a normal person. When an enlightened master speaks about spirituality, he speaks from his experience of the truth. When a normal person speaks, it is his ego that is speaking.

That is what Kṛṣṇa says. You do not need prior knowledge about spirituality to embark on a path. Even if someone simply tells you about it and you start following a path, it is enough. But be very clear, you should know what you are doing. Don't do anything blindly. In the previous verse, we have talked about it. We should understand what our path is.

Whatever you see is a combination of matter and energy. The whole Universe is seen as kṣetra and kṣetrajña, māyā and ātman, prakṛti and puruṣa, matter and energy, body-mind and consciousness. Existence as we see it cannot be with only one of them. If we believe that what we see is simply matter, we are in illusion or māyā.

Kṣetra is the body that we associate ourselves with and kṣetrajña is the consciousness. What we see as a human body is a combination of both. If there is no consciousness, the body is useless. The matter that we call a body comes to life because of consciousness. Both must be there.

Prakṛti is the manifest and puruṣa is the unmanifest. Kṣetra is like prakṛti. It is the manifested, that which we can see. Along with what you see, there is something behind its existence. It is puruṣa or the unmanifest, the energy behind the matter, which we do not normally see.

We have seen in the earlier verses that all the millions of stars, planets and other celestial bodies exist in perfect harmony. How are they moving in such order? Look at our solar system. All the planets move in perfect paths. If we think they are rocks, dust or ice, if we think they are simply matter, how is such an order maintained in the Universe? They are not solely matter. There is something behind the existence of that matter. There is so much chaos; yet there is a beautiful order in that chaos. Order is present because of kṣetrajña. If it were solely matter or kṣetra, there would not be any intelligence. There is intelligence in that matter. That intelligence or consciousness creates this existence. So the combination of kṣetra and kṣetrajña is necessary.

Modern science has shown that matter and energy are the same. They are interchangeable. The outer-world scientists proved this recently. However, the inner-world scientists proved it thousands of years ago. Matter and energy coexist to create existence.

We should understand that kṣetra and kṣetrajña are not separate entities when we analyze them at a deeper level. Kṣetra and kṣetrajña are comprised of the same thing. Kṣetra is the gross form of the energy that also makes up the subtle form of the kṣetrajña. For existence to happen, both the subtle and gross forms must be there.

How we look at things around us defines our lifestyle. We again and again look at things as only matter. When we see only this gross level, fear and greed creep into us. We then want to get more and more of this matter. We live a materialistic life when we think that all we see is solely matter. When we live at the kṣetra level, we live in an illusion or māyā. We want to possess the matter.

We Are Brahman

13.30 One who can see that all activities are performed by the body, which is created of material nature, Sees that the Self does nothing, he actually sees.

यदा भूतपृथग्भावमेकस्थमनुपश्यति । तत एव च विस्तारं ब्रह्म सम्पद्यते तदा ॥ १३-३१॥
yadā bhūtapṛthagbhāvam ekasthamanupaśyati
tata eva ca vistāraṃ brahma sampadyate tadā || 13.31 ||

13.31 When a person can see the supreme Self in all living entities, then he will cease to see the separateness among the living entities.

He will see that the whole Universe (Brahman) is an expansion and expression of the same truth. Kṛṣṇa says, 'Anyone who has reached Self-realization or the ultimate consciousness sees that the Supreme Self is present in all living and non-living entities. He perceives the Supreme Self as the indestructible, beginning-less witnessing consciousness.'

The Existence that we see is not comprised of individual entities. We think that we are separate from others around us. In reality, we are all one. The same Supreme Self, Parameśvara that Kṛṣṇa speaks about is present in all of us and in everything we see around us.

Everything Is The Supreme Spirit, Parameśvara

Kṛṣṇa says the soul, ātma that is in us and the soul, ātma that is in others is the Supreme Spirit and the Supreme Soul. But what do we do? We isolate our soul. We define a boundary for our soul and separate it from the Supreme Spirit, Parameśvara. It is like this. There are ten pots of water and there is the reflection of the sun in all the ten pots. Each pot thinks that it holds the sun. All ten pots think that each one is holding a different sun.

In the same way, we think the soul inside us is different from the soul outside us. When we see the same soul everywhere in everything, when we break the pots, we see what the supreme Self is.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'When we see that the Supreme Soul that resides in us and in everything around us - samaṁ sarveśu bhūteṣu tiṣṭhaṁ parameśvara, is indestructible - avinaśyantam, we see the truth.'

The only thing that lives forever is the soul. We should understand that. Everything else must die one day. When we realize this truth, when we understand that only the soul can remain forever, our whole race to get more and more becomes worthless. We realize, 'What is the use of running after things that we know are not going to be with us forever?'

When this is realized, we see the truth. The mind is the only obstacle on the path to reach the ultimate goal. In the previous verse, Kṛṣṇa tells us how we can see the truth. Here Kṛṣṇa talks about the hurdle that we must cross. He says that when we are not degraded or influenced by the mind, we can see the supreme spirit in everything. Only when we can do that, can we reach the final destination.

We talk about the mind as separate from ourselves. We say, 'It is thinking a lot.' We do not understand what the mind is and we start talking about it. What is the mind actually? It is only an organized structure gifted by God as a tool. The mind is man's servant that helps satisfy his needs and necessities in order to lead a happy life.

The reason for the incompletions is that the mind, which should be under the control of man, has become a structure that controls man. If a servant behaves like a master, what will happen? An immature servant becoming a master is like catching a monkey and putting it on the throne. If we can keep the mind aside for a while, we see the truth as it is. Our mind cannot accept that the Supreme Soul is in everything around us. Our soul inside us knows that the Supreme Soul is everywhere. But our mind creates a strong sheath around it. Our mind takes control over us. It harbors past memories (saṁskāras) and creates an illusion that leads to wrong cognition.

When we were children, the mind did not have much power. When we were children, we did not build new root thought patterns, saṁskāras. The conditioning by society builds layers and layers of these saṁskāras that give power to the mind. Actually when people say that a child is growing up, it only implies that the child is growing smaller and smaller, only the mind is growing up. The soul is being pushed into a corner and the mind, with its root thought patterns, is given more and more power. This mind prevents us from seeing the Supreme Soul in everything around us. Be very clear, if we are out of the clutches of the mind, we see reality.

We are safe as long as we can separate the Self from the body and watch as the body reacts to materialistic things. As long as we know that the soul is supreme and the body is a means to fulfill our worldly desires, we are safe. We are on the right path of completion. However, when we place the body over the soul, the incompletion starts.

We give so much importance to this body, but we don't really respect it. Instead we make use of it. We abuse our body. We consider our body to be a tool to experience the sense pleasures from the outside world. That is why we take care of our body. We want our body to be safe so that we can enjoy. We want our body to look good all the time.

We must understand why we assume this human body form and come to planet Earth. This birth that we have taken is to fulfill the carried-over desires of our previous births. These desires are called prārabdha karma. Our soul has taken this body to fulfill our prārabdha karma. When we die, our last thought decides our next birth. Our soul chooses the body that can fulfill the desires of our last birth. This is the truth.

Understand that we assume a body to fulfill the desires carried over from our previous life. However, what happens is that we create new desires in this life as well. We use our body to experience the sense pleasures and we create more and more desires. Because of this, we fall into the cycle of birth and death. Once we realize that our soul takes this body to complete a mission that it left unfinished in our previous birth, our attitude towards our whole body will change.

We always want to get more and more out of our body. We want our eyes to see more television; we want our stomach to hold more food; we want our ears to hear louder music. We do all this out of greed. We want to experience more and more sense pleasures. Instead, if we look at our body with gratitude, when we thank our body every moment for the support it has given us, we connect with our body at a deeper level.

The Self Does Nothing

Our body is the temple of our soul. We should respect our body. We should look at our body with gratitude, not greed. We should thank our body, prakṛti for holding our spirit, our soul, ātma. Then, we will see a different dimension of our body.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, whatever we think we are enjoying, actually it is the body that is enjoying - prakṛtaiva ca karmāṇi kriyamāṇāni sarvaśaḥ (13.30). Our body enjoys all the material comforts. Our soul can live without them. Our soul is pure consciousness. It does not need anything external to keep it happy.

Actually our soul is always in a state of bliss. It is always ecstatic. Our body is an embodiment of bliss. Whatever material things we think we need, whatever material comforts we think we enjoy, they are needed and enjoyed only by our body. Our soul does not need any of them.

The problem starts when we think that our soul needs these material things. We associate the happiness from the external materials with our soul. This is where the problem begins. We think the happiness that we gain from material comforts is because our soul feels happy to have them. That is when we accumulate more and more of these material comforts. We run after them.

Kṛṣṇa gives us a technique here. He says, when we watch our body enjoying the sense pleasures, when we watch only our body being associated with the external material comforts and not our soul, we see the truth. Just witness the body. Be aware of your body. Observe the body when it reacts to external things. You will notice a sense of separation from the body. You will see what your body is. You will see that your soul has nothing to do with the pleasures you are enjoying.

When you do this, you witness your body and mind as if you are an outsider. It is like watching a movie. When you watch a movie, you watch what happens on the screen. In the same way, when you watch your body and mind, you understand what Kṛṣṇa says. Only when you witness that the body experiences material pleasures and it is the body that does everything and the soul does not need anything, you see the truth. Kṛṣṇa gives the great truth of advaita in this verse. He talks about collective consciousness. He says when we see the Supreme Soul in all living beings, we no longer see the separateness. We see everything as one single entity. We see the whole Universe as one single body, as one entity expressing the same truth of oneness.

Please be very clear, we are all connected. Each and every living entity is connected to the other. Your thoughts affect the thoughts of the person sitting beside you. Whether or not you believe it, this is the truth. We think we are individual consciousness. We think we are separate islands. We think our thoughts are limited to us. We think nobody watches our thoughts. The whole Universe constantly responds to your thoughts. The whole Universe is made up of the same universal consciousness.

Actually there is nothing but universal consciousness. Individual consciousness is a piece of the hologram of the universal collective consciousness. What happens when you break a hologram into five pieces? Each piece becomes a hologram again. Each piece shows the same thing as the whole piece showed you before. Our individual consciousness is like that hologram. The universal consciousness hologram is broken into many small holograms or individual living things. But each one of us has the same consciousness as the universal consciousness.

You see, your individual consciousness is like an onion. What do you see in an onion? There are layers over layers of skin. When you peel the onion layer by layer, what is there inside? Nothing! You are just like that onion. You think the onion is solid. Only when you peel, you see that there is nothing inside it. In the same manner, if you peel all the individual body-mind layers, you experience that you are the collective consciousness. Once you remove all the layers, you see that every entity around you has the same consciousness. Everything is the same.

Soul Situated in Body Does Nothing

13.32 Those with the vision of eternity can see that the soul is transcendental, eternal, and beyond the modes of nature. Despite contact with the material body, O Arjuna, the soul neither does anything nor is attached.

यथा सर्वगतं सौक्ष्म्यादाकाशं नोपलिप्यते ।

13.33 The sky, due to its subtle nature, does not mix with anything, although it is all pervading. Similarly, the soul, situated in Brahman, does not mix with the body, though situated in that body.

13.34 O son of Bhārata, as the sun alone illuminates the entire Universe, so does the living entity, One within the body, illuminate the entire consciousness.

kṣetrakṣetrajñayorevam antaraṃ jñānacakṣuṣā

13.35 Those who see with the eyes of knowledge, the difference between the body-mind and the Knower of the body-mind, who can understand the process, are liberated from the bondages of material nature and attain Paramātman.

Kṛṣṇa again and again talks about the true nature of the Self. He tells Arjuna that the soul is free from all entanglements. It is eternal and transcendental. Kṛṣṇa says that though the soul has come into contact with the material body, it still is free.

In the previous verses, we talked about how the body is the temple of our soul. We saw how the soul takes this body to fulfill the desires of our past birth. The soul actually does nothing. It does not entangle itself in the web of greed and fear. It is the mind that continuously adds new desires to the list and keeps the body running after them. Internally, the soul is always free. It has no bondage.

It is like the lotus plant in a lake. Water droplets that fall on the lotus leaves do not get attached to the leaves. They simply roll off and merge with the water again. In the same way, the soul that rests inside this body is completely free from worldly joys and sorrows. It is like the drops of water. The soul, ātma can simply merge into the Supreme Soul, Paramātma. Only the body is related to the worldly happenings. The soul is not involved at all.

Kṛṣṇa uses the word nirguṇa meaning beyond the three attributes—nirguṇatvāt. The three attributes of satva (calmness), rajas passion and tamas (inactivity) are related to the mind and body. The soul is free from these attributes.

It is neither restless nor is it lazy. It is pure. Actually it is beyond purity. When we use the word pure, then it means that the soul can be associated with the attribute of calmness. But the soul is even beyond calmness. Nothing can circumscribe it.

One important thing we should know. Only when something is seen by the mind, do words come out. Words are an expression of the chatter that happens in our mind. When there is no mind, there are no words. When you go to the Himālayas surrounded by mountains, the first thing that happens is awe. No words come out. We are silent. Our being enjoys the beauty. Our being does not try to relate it to anything. Our mind has not yet associated any word to it. After a few seconds we experience the 'wow' feeling; it cannot be expressed.

In the same way, enlightenment cannot be expressed in words. There is no enlightened Master who can adequately explain what enlightenment is, in words.

Associating the soul with even the word calmness, requires the mind. But the soul is beyond this also. No word can describe it. It just IS, that's all. All enlightened Masters are triguṇa rahita meaning residing in a state that is beyond the three attributes. They know that the soul is free from everything. They know that the body is the temple of the soul. They know that the body does not affect the soul.

Kṛṣṇa gives an example to make this point clear. He says the space that is everywhere is unaffected by anything that is in that space. The subtle energy, space or ether, is present everywhere. Every molecule and atom has this subtle energy. Though it is present in everything that we see, it does not inherit the properties of what it resides in. Even if it is in a flower, it does not take up the scent of the flower. In the same way, the soul is not affected by where it resides. People think that their soul will go to hell if they have committed sins. They think if they have lived a pious life, their soul will go to heaven. They think that the soul is affected by the deeds of the body. Our sins do not affect the nature of our soul. Please understand that by infusing awareness into what we do, we realize that the body does whatever we do. The soul is completely free from it. The soul is not affected by it.

Kṛṣṇa says that just as the sun illuminates our whole world, one Supreme Self, Paramātma, that is one kṣetrajña, illuminates all beings in the Universe, whether they are animate or inanimate. He says everything has the same consciousness. Kṛṣṇa gives more and more examples. The sun sheds light on the surrounding planets. The darkness on the planets is removed by the sun's light. In the same way, the Supreme Self, kṣetrajña, lights up all beings in the Universe. The ultimate consciousness lights up the entire Universe. All beings of the Universe have this consciousness.

We may wonder why Kṛṣṇa says the same thing over and over again. But He is trying to make the concept of kṣetra and kṣetrajñya clear to Arjuna. Kṛṣṇa knows that this is important and He wants Arjuna to understand it completely. Anyhow, Kṛṣṇa says something new here. He says that just as the sun illumines the Universe, the soul in this body illumines not only this body but also everything surrounding it, the entire Universe. He says:

yathā prakāśayaty ekaḥ kṛtsnaṁ lokaṁ imaṁ raviḥ | kṣetraṁ kṣetrī tathā kṛtsnaṁ prakāśayati bhārata || 13.34 ||

Kṣetri is the Self. This Self illumines all the kṣetra, all the bodies. Not just our body or kṣetra is illumined but all the kṣetra are illumined. The consciousness present in each of us is the hologram of the supreme Self. So there is no separation between the consciousness present in our body and the consciousness present in a plant or a rock. Everything is the same energy. The sun lights up everything that is around. There is no partiality. It does not discriminate. Whatever comes its way, it removes the darkness from it. In the same way, the supreme Self present in us illuminates everything in the Universe. Our ignorance separates the soul from the Supreme Soul.

Actually to even use two different words - soul and Supreme Soul, ātma and parmātma - is not correct. There are no two separate entities called soul and Supreme Soul. There is only soul. There is only one. Everything in this Universe has the Supreme Soul. Our mind draws boundaries. It is like creating borders between two countries. So many countries fight over boundaries. One country fights with the other to acquire more land. They are drawing and erasing boundaries all the time.

We think we can draw boundaries between the Self, which is present in us, and the supreme Self. We try to put our soul in a tight container made of greed and fear. We close the lid and are afraid to open it. Actually, we fear losing our identity. We associate ourselves with our individual ego. We want to show others how different we are. Our mind knows that if it opens the lid, the soul and the Supreme Soul will become one. Our mind knows that the soul in this body and the Supreme Soul are one and the same; there is no difference between the two. So our mind fears that if it opens the lid, our whole identity will be lost and we will become the same as everyone else. Our mind does not want this to happen. So we continuously hold onto our individual ego. Only when we realize that we are all connected, that everything in this universe is the same universal consciousness, will we break open the container and merge with the Supreme Soul.

Here Kṛṣṇa ends by saying, 'If we can witness as pure consciousness, we will be liberated from the bondages of the body-mind and achieve the eternal consciousness.' Kṛṣṇa gives a technique to realize the eternal consciousness.

Witness and Be Liberated

Please know that becoming the witness of the kṣetra is the only way to keep us away from the bondages of the body-mind. We must witness as the kṣetrajña, consciousness. When we do that we will see the separation of the Self from the body and mind.

Understand that all our movements, reactions and emotions are related to the body-mind system. The way we move our body is a reaction by our body-mind system. Our emotions like anger, laughter, sadness and happiness are reactions of our mind. All of them are movements created by our body-mind system.

When we witness these movements happening in our system, we separate ourselves from the body-mind system. When we watch them like clouds in the sky, when we watch them like a movie on a screen, without getting attached, we see the truth. Even the thought of witnessing our thoughts and our emotions is a thought that is controlled by our mind. Even that is our thought and implies that mind is still acting. Only when we go beyond that thought, do we experience the eternal consciousness.

This technique may take at least ten minutes.

You are going to witness your body movements, breath movements and mind movements: movements of your body, movements of your breath and movements of your mind. You may ask what kind of body movements do we have? Understand that by inhaling and exhaling, your belly will be moving continuously up and down. There will be a slight movement of your belly during your breathing. Witness that movement. Next, watch the flow of your breath during inhaling and exhaling, without any attempt to control it.

Third, watch your mind. Thoughts will be going on. Please do not judge your thoughts as right or wrong. Don't be afraid of your thinking. For a few minutes, sit comfortably next to your mind, like a close friend. You can place a mirror in front of you and cognize that the person in the mirror is your incomplete half, your mind who is your close friend. Let it tell you whatever it wants to. Let it speak out loud whatever it wants. Without speaking, your thinking will not have its clarity, depth and strength. Allow your mind to talk, talk and talk and make it as part of you by befriending it.

Witness all these with no attachment. Do not stop, control or go behind anything. This is the self-completion process (svapūrṇatva kriya) with your mind. We continuously fight with our body and mind. We cannot get rid of the body and mind by constantly fighting with them. We can only go beyond them through friendliness. Only if we feel deeply friendly towards them, will we be able to go beyond body and mind. If we have a negative emotion of fear or greed towards the body-mind, we will naturally abuse and only have a violent relationship with it. Be complete with the body and the mind.

Witness the mind like a friend with integrity. Let whatever is inside come out with friendliness. There's nothing wrong. Neither support nor suppress. If we support, we will go after the garbage. If we suppress, we will end up analyzing the garbage and pushing it aside. Neither approach is going to work. Just witness and be complete.

Witnessing acts like fire. All the thoughts are burned away and what remains is the pure space of completion. Understand, neither suppressing nor supporting your thoughts will work. Only witnessing with integrity works. When we go deep into our being, into our space of completion, the witnessing consciousness automatically creates intelligence. Understand that we don't need to be in that space all twenty-four hours of each day. Even if we get a few glimpses, that is enough. That energy will guide our whole life. If we understand the silence that happens to us when we are witnessing, even for a few seconds, we will taste it and start acting on it. Only out of these few moments does the energy of great creation and achievement happen.

When we do completion, creation simply happens. Enriching will just be our lifestyle. When we are in the space of completion, we will simply create and enrich everyone. All great things are achieved from the consciousness and intuition that is beyond the body-mind. They are products of the witnessing consciousness. This is true not only in the field of science but in arts, spirituality or any field. When we are beyond the body and mind, we bring the maximum powers out of our being. We start expressing the power of words through integrity, the power of thinking through authenticity, and ultimately the powers of feeling and living through responsibility and enriching.

The ultimate expression of our being happens when we are Whole. Whenever we are whole, we are holy. Understand that witnessing consciousness or being in the space of completion is the only path to Wholeness or Holiness.

Thus ends the thirteenth chapter named Kṣetra Kṣetrajña Vibhāga Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Discrimination of the kṣetra, the field and kṣetrajña, the knower of the field,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 14
Guṇatraya Vibhāga Yogaḥ

Find Your Root Pattern and Complete

Whether you feel unhealthy or helpless, or emotionally weak, tired, bored, lazy, agitated or irritated, all these put together is feeling powerless. The good news is that you can live without any of these. The bad news is that you need to work for it. Our past experiences are stored in our unconscious as root thought patterns. They will only mislead you to a space of powerlessness, incompletion. In Sanskrit, the right technical word for these root thought patterns is mūla vāsanā or mūla vichāra dhārā.

We make incomplete decisions when we make the major decisions through root thought patterns or mūla vāsanā. We make powerless decisions driven by our root thought patterns. The first strong cognition you receive in your life, which influences you to continue to function based on the same cognition, is a root thought pattern. When the first attack of any strong emotion happens in you and imbalances your whole cognition of life, giving birth to your mind, the pattern you develop from that moment is the 'root thought pattern'. It is a pattern you develop when powerlessness takes you over for the first time in your life. Your pure cognition is imbalanced and that is the root on which the mind is born.

For example: In the young age, if your mother teaches you, 'Don't go in the rain. You will catch cold'. Naturally, at that age your immune system is yet to be developed. But even after you are twenty- five, when your immune system is at its peak, you don't even go in the rain, you just see the rain through the window and you start sneezing. What you internalized, what you cognized in the very young age, which has imbalanced your nature is root pattern. Your natural existence is root thought pattern. Get out of your root thought pattern and complete with it.

Please understand, it may be anything as simple as your mother not giving you the cake and giving it to your brother. It may be as simple as your mother making you sit on the dining table so that you will not run around and make a mess; or you trying your best and failing in your exam or some competition.

A pattern is an action that is unfulfilled as per your fantasy, either because of an outside hindrance or an inside hindrance, and is in incompletion. If your expectations are not met by yourself or by others, it remains as an incompletion.

For example, you always wanted to wake up early in the morning and practice yoga, but you never succeeded in that, so it remains as an incompletion. You always wanted your father to be very loving and caring, and he never honored your expectations, this that you don't even realize that the root thought pattern and you are two different things. You just listen to your root thought pattern and behave as if the decision is your own.

Look in. Unless you find your root thought pattern and complete with it, your independent life does not start. Do not allow root patterns to get rooted in you. Look into the root patterns, into why you behave how you behave.

Everything in Existence has a root. Everything you do has a reason, a root. There is a reason for every happening in Existence. Find out the root of your happening. When you find your root pattern and complete with it, you will understand your prārabdha, the purpose of your happening.

In this chapter called Guṇatraya Vibhāga Yogaḥ, Kṛṣṇa explains the root of our happening; why we do the way we do, why we perceive the way we perceive. Kṛṣṇa explains the three different guṇas (attributes) to Arjuna. How we act or rather react to every situation is based on these three guṇas, the root patterns and how to complete with them.

Why Krsna Repeats

श्रीभगवानुवाच ।
परं भूयः प्रवक्ष्यामि ज्ञानानां ज्ञानमुत्तमम् ।
यज्ज्ञात्वा मुनयः सर्वे परां सिद्धिमितो गताः ॥ १४-१॥
śrībhagavānuvāca
paraṃ bhūyaḥ pravakṣyāmi jñānānāṃ jñānamuttamam
yajjñātvā munayaḥ sarve parāṃ siddhimito gatāḥ || 14.1 ||

14.1 Kṛṣṇa says, I will declare to you again the supreme wisdom, the knowledge of which has helped all sages attain supreme perfection.

इदं ज्ञानमुपाश्रित्य मम साधर्म्यमागताः ।
सर्गेऽपि नोपजायन्ते प्रलये न व्यथन्ति च ॥ १४-२॥ idaṃ jñānamupāśritya mama sādharmyamāgatāḥ
sarge'pi nopajāyante pralaye na vyathanti ca || 14.2 ||

14.2 By becoming fixed in this knowledge, one can attain the transcendental nature, like My own, and establish in his eternal consciousness, that one is not born at the time of creation, or destroyed at the time of dissolution.

मम योनिर्महद् ब्रह्म तस्मिन्गर्भं दधाम्यहम् । सम्भवः सर्वभूतानां ततो भवति भारत ॥ १४-३॥ mama yonirmahad brahma tasmingarbhaṃ dadhāmyaham
sambhavaḥ sarvabhūtānāṃ tato bhavati bhārata || 14.3 ||

14.3 The total material substance, called Brahman, is the source of birth, it is that Brahman that I impregnate, making possible the births of all living beings, O son of Bhārata.

सर्वयोनिषु कौन्तेय मूर्तयः सम्भवन्ति याः । तासां ब्रह्म महद्योनिरहं बीजप्रदः पिता ॥ १४-४॥ sarvayoniṣu kaunteya mūrtayaḥ sambhavanti yāḥ
tāsāṃ brahma mahadyonirahaṃ bījapradaḥ pitā || 14.4 ||

14.4 Arjuna, understand that all species of life are made possible by birth in this material nature, and I am the seed-giving father.

By repeating the truth again and again, Kṛṣṇa tries to create the right inner space of completion in Arjuna. Please understand why Kṛṣṇa repeats Himself. He literally uses the same words again and again. Why should Kṛṣṇa repeat?

Kṛṣṇa is a Master who is result-oriented. He persists with what He wants as if Arjuna is going to get enlightened today, but He is ready to wait until the last person gets enlightened. He is the embodiment of enriching, which is the constitution of life. His whole life is a play from the space of enriching. He is radiating the power of not giving-up on people with His uncompromising compassion. He is not easily satisfied with the attitude, 'I said whatever I had to say; whether he wants to listen or not is up to him.'

Kṛṣṇa takes the responsibility to make Arjuna responsible. Again and again, He repeats Himself because He wants to create a bio-memory of His teachings, the space of completion in Arjuna's inner space. He does this so that even if Arjuna misses listening to the teaching the first time, perhaps he will give his authentic listening the next time. That is why He repeats the truth again.

Carry the Right Inner Space

Any transmission of knowledge, energy or experience happens between us only when you give your listening.

In the Upaniṣads, it is told that when the young seeker Śvetaketu was initiated by his Guru, his Guru said to him only nine times, 'Tat Tvam Asi! Tat Tvam Asi! Tat Tvam Asi!' (You are That!) Śvetaketu became enlightened just by hearing those words. Then how come you don't become enlightened even if you listen to 'Tat Tvam Asi!' nine thousand times? You have to be carrying the right inner space.

On the rock, seed cannot sprout as a tree. In the right fertile ground only, the seed can become tree. In the right inner space only, the teachings can become reality.

Right inner space means where all the root thought patterns of suffering are destroyed. All the root thought patterns are destroyed where your inner space is fertile for experiencing the higher ideal and ideas.

Inner space means when you close your eyes and look inside, how you feel and what you feel as you, that is your inner space. In that inner space, if you suddenly feel as if you have taken bath in the cold water and the whole thing inside is in eternal peace, and there is no agitation; it is all completely in peace, in restful awareness, in completion; that is inner silence or the right inner space. It means the space where all your root patterns of suffering are destroyed.

You may wonder, 'When will I experience the right inner space or inner silence?' Whenever you want, that's all.

It is actually you who needs to feel tired of wandering around. Unless you feel tired of wandering around or rather fooling around, your mind will continue to go on fooling around, being in incompletion. Instead of the real source of joy, you will just go around and try to taste everything. Your mind needs to be little tired of roaming around, only then will it look in and decide to find and destroy the root patterns and create the fertile ground of the right space.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'I shall declare once more, I will speak to you about the ultimate truth, through the knowledge of which all the sages have attained supreme perfection.'

śrī bhagavān uvāca

paraṁ bhūyaḥpravakṣyāmi jñānānāṁ jñānam uttamam | yaj jñātvā munayaḥsarve parāṁ siddhim ito gatāḥ || 14.1 ||

You need to have tremendous love and patience. In any field, life happens to you, completion happens to you, only when there is tremendous love for people and a decision not to give-up on people. Kṛṣṇa is expressing the power of passion and the power of patience.

When you are not tired of your own past, you are a jīvan mukta, living enlightenment. Whether we believe it or not, man by nature is a mechanism. Not only at the body level, he is a mechanism even at the level of the mind. At most, we can call it a bio-mechanism, yet he is still a mechanism. He works based on memories, the root patterns or what we call mūla vāsanā in Sanskrit.

If you have a certain pattern in you as a compulsive disorder, it is a bio-memory. It is just dead memory. If you get frightened, you will run away. If you have some thoughts or doubts that a person doesn't love you, that person doesn't care for you, all other thoughts will immediately wake up, and you will be in depression.

Please understand, memories which stay in you and make you continuously respond unconsciously in the same pattern again and again, is bio-memory. If you learn the essence of the lessons you need to catch from the bio-memory, and live spontaneously based on that essence, it becomes bio-energy.

Understand, in every situation, if you catch bio-memory, you will miss the bio-energy. If you function on just bio-memories, you are a bound soul. You are a baddha jīva, entangled soul, living in bondage. Not only that, when you are living here, you also accumulate more and more muscle-memory. All the patterns you accumulate and continue to accumulate are muscle-memory. The confusion between muscle-memory and bio-memory is a confused memory.

So for every act, you will not know the right reason; if you know the reason, you do not know how to act. It is a kind of chaos.

Man is continuously caught in the web of these confused memories in his mind and his being, because he works based on root patterns that have been stored in his bio-memory, and accumulated as his muscle-memory. So, you do not know the reasons for the act you performed. Muscle-memory is the memory you accumulate in this janma (lifetime). Bio-memory is the memory you bring from the past births. Even in this birth, the muscle-memory can become bio-memory. When you psychologically collapse, with whatever ideas you elevate yourself and stand up, those ideas will become bio-memory in you, even though you accumulated them in this body.

Does God Exist?

Many religious rituals are designed to build the right muscle-memory and bio-memory in us. Going to a temple or a satsang (spiritual gathering) reinforces our desire to move forward spiritually. They create the right space, the environment, the mood for the right decision to happen. These actions cannot liberate or enlighten us. However, they can create the right inner space in us and program our unconscious mind, the muscle memory and bio-memory to work in a particular way. They can rewire us.

In the Hindu tradition, the power of sound is used. Hindu chanting is nothing but becoming It just by declarations. Every morning you declare, 'Aham Brahmāsmi Ahaṁ Brahmāsmi, Ahaṁ Brahmāsmi (I Am That)! Śivoʻham Śivoʻham Śivoʻham (I Am Śiva).'

Science is about facts that can be recorded. Spirituality is about the truth that needs to be experienced. That is why our scriptures never bothered about historical accuracy and factual details. They dealt with issues that affected our consciousness. To understand our scriptures, we cannot use logic. Truth has nothing to do with our head. It has everything to do with our being.

Everything is experienced by you as per the space you carry. Everything - your reality of God, reality of yourself, reality of society and reality of Universe is experienced by you as per the space you carry. Whether it is the great realities of cosmos or the realities of life or the realities of mind, the space you create, creates your reality. God can only be experienced when we drop our root patterns and create the space of completion. How can we prove His existence through the logic of our mind? If we can comprehend Him through our mind, our patterns, how can He be in any way superior to us? How can He then be God?

God can only be experienced. He cannot be proved or disproved. He cannot be believed or disbelieved. If you wish to experience God, if you have courage, find your root thought pattern and complete with it and you will experience Him in you. Kṛṣṇa wants to take Arjuna there to the space of completion. In fact, He already took him there when He revealed His cosmic form to Arjuna through Viśvarūpa Darśan Yoga (chapter 12). Now, Kṛṣṇa wants to take the rest of humanity to the same space of completion. So again and again, without giving up on us, He repeats the techniques of completion so we may realize our divinity. In His deep compassion He gives us a chance to catch the lifeline. He is throwing us so that we can be saved.

You Can Achieve My State

For the first time, Kṛṣṇa says that we will reach His state. So far He said, 'Worship Me. Surrender unto Me.' Now He says, 'You will achieve the same state in which I am. Anyone can attain the transcendental nature like My own, mama sādharmyam āgatāḥ.'

idam jñānam upāśritya mama sādharmyam āgatāḥ | sarge ʻpi nopajāyante pralaye na vyatthanti ca || 14.2 ||

We can achieve the state in which He is. Kṛṣṇa is the first Master courageous and bold enough to declare that Enlightenment is available to everybody; anybody can achieve it. Enlightenment is not an accident. It is an incident that we can create.

Until the time of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the Upaniṣads, Brahma Sūtra and other scriptures spoke as if Enlightenment was an accident. Some people became enlightened; however, nobody knew why. Nor did they know why others could not get it or how exactly to get it. Nobody knew. They merely knew that some people were blessed, almost as if God was sitting up there and reviewing applications, and to some, He said, 'Alright, yes, granted' and immediately that person became enlightened.

Kṛṣṇa is the first Master who showed how to write the application or present the resume for Enlightenment. He showed how to achieve Enlightenment. He showed the exact science of Enlightenment. We can experience it through our conscious decision to create the space of completion.

He says that by being fixed in this knowledge, 'One can attain - mama sādharmyam āgatāḥ.' He doesn't say, 'You can attain it,' indicating only Arjuna. He says one can attain it, meaning that anybody can attain it.

Kṛṣṇa beautifully declares, 'By establishing yourself in this knowledge, you can achieve the experience, or you can establish yourself in the same state in which I am, like My own.' 'Mama' means 'My own'. Kṛṣṇa declares, 'This truth will directly lead you to the state in which I am established - mama sādharmyam āgatāḥ.'

There are very few concepts Kṛṣṇa repeats in Bhagavad Gīta. One concept is, 'Understand Me, you will become God'. It may look very arrogant for an onlooker. Kṛṣṇa says, 'Understand My Divinity, you will become God'; 'Understand Me you will become Me'; 'Understand My inner space, you will achieve that space'.

Please understand, it means that when you understand the inner space of enlightened beings, without even missing a single step, you know the method to reach that space.

See, when you look at the personality, the power, the valor, the courage of an enlightened being, you take Him for granted and think, 'He is from a different plane. He will be like that only.' Personality of the enlightened being is not a person, it is personification. When you grasp the personality of an enlightened being, suddenly you know why you are the way you are, why you think the way you think, why you behave the way you behave. You know all the possible confusions and incompletions. And you will see, you will simply know the methodology to experience completion, pūrnatva.

You are Eternal, not limited by Birth and Death

Kṛṣṇa talks about the truth that one is eternal, and not limited by birth and death. The state of being eternal transcends creation and dissolution. It transcends the past and future. Eternal is to be here and now. Eternal is the present moment of completion.

He declares - sarge api nopajāyante pralaye na vyathanti ca (14.2).

Brahma is the Lord of creation. Creation is of the past. To exist in the physical plane, we need to have been created. To maintain is the job of Viṣṇu. Maintenance is about the future. It is about how we wish to be, what we wish to have, our desires, our expectations and everything related to the future. Śiva is the Lord of the present. He is the Destroyer of the future, making it flow into the past, by way of the present. He is the Master of the here and now.

Śiva is the Rejuvenator, not just the Destroyer. The present always rejuvenates. In Sanskrit, Śiva means 'causeless auspiciousness'. The present is the most auspicious; whatever happens in the present is auspicious. We should develop the attitude of accepting what happens in the present as auspicious.

Past, present and future, all three are in the same DNA seed of Kāla. If Kāla is the seed, past, present and future, all these three are in that seed, in the form of DNA. Your attitude towards the past and your attitude towards the future will be same. If you think that you are powerless, you were powerless in your past and you will be powerless in the future also. Understand, the impact of the past enters as a perverted inadequate cognition in your present and destroys your future.

Your inner space experiences the past and future in the same language, in the same way. Incidents, your perceptions and your self-assessments are the pillars on which your past is built. If you complete yourself now, if you complete your perception and self-assessments, sixty percent of your past will be burnt. Then can your past stand as it is now? No! It will just be with facts. So, your past will lose its power over you. Your past will be transformed. That is the way your future will be transformed.

You need to catch it and live it. The words you utter inside and outside you is hundred percent you. It is not bad news. It is good news. Understand, because you can change now. You can utter the word now and complete, 'I drop the past; it has no power over me,' 'I am declaring and committing to myself that I am a winner. I am a success. I am Śiva - mangalatva (auspiciousness)!'

You can be complete now! By declaring that you are complete, just once in the present, you can finish off all your millions of declarations in the past. Because when time and space cross, the declarations you make are alive and powerful. Time and space always cross in the present moment. In any legal system, the latest order will be the order that will be executed. Even in your life, only your latest declaration will be executed.

Śiva is completion. Completion is auspiciousness. If you declare completion now, you are complete. When you complete, you transcend the past and the future. Wherever you go, you are going to be carrying this auspiciousness, radiating it. You will be a moving auspiciousness.

There are two kinds of people. The first type looks at everything suspiciously. They find everything unsatisfactory, incomplete. These people say, 'All very well, but…' They cannot say anything without 'butting'. Such people can never be happy. Their logic gets sealed in inadequate cognitions when incompletions drive them. They live with an idea of what life should be, rather than accepting it as it is. They are purely materialistic.

Please understand, when you are driving out of incompletion, you may have one dimension success in the life. But you will fail in life itself. One dimension success in life is not success. For example, if you have a root thought pattern of fear or shivering in you, even if you make billions of dollars out of that root pattern, you will not achieve satisfaction. Because the reason why you are making money is to feel secured. You will feel secured only when you break that pattern and not by making money. It is wrong strategy, for the wrong reason.

Life has no 'ifs' or 'buts'. But our fear does not even allow us to think that there is a space where there is no 'ifs' and 'buts'. This space of no 'ifs' or 'buts' is Enlightenment.

The second type of people find everything to be auspicious. Whatever happens is as it should be. They welcome life as it is. They carry the space of completion. These are the people who Kṛṣṇa says transcend creation and dissolution, past and future - sarge api nopajāyante pralaye na vyathanti ca. They live in Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

The Great 'Why'

Kṛṣṇa is trying to answer philosophical questions that can never really be answered: How is the whole Universe created? If everything is God, why is the Universe created? How are we born? Whoever tried to answer these questions just created another philosophy.

You need to know one important truth. When it comes to cosmic questions, unless you discover your answer, you will never be in peace. 'Why', 'the why' related to the outer world can be answered by others. 'Why should I drive the vehicle from the left?'; 'why should I drive a vehicle at all?' 'Why' related to the outer world can be answered by the law of the land or the outer world science. But all the 'whys' related to cosmic law, all the 'whys' related to life can be answered only by yourself by discovering it. The religion you discover is your religion, not that the religion you are born in is your religion. The answer you discover is your answer.

For this great 'why' you have to discover an answer. If you accept anyone else's answer for 'why', you will be living for that person's answer. At the most, Master's answer should be an inspiration for you to find out the answer for 'why'.

Kṛṣṇa tries to answer these questions as an inspiration for Arjuna to find his own answer for his 'why'. However, this answer is not the ultimate Truth. He says, 'Please wait until the teachings are over.' Normally when we don't receive an answer for our philosophical question, we will be stuck with that 'why'.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'I am the seed-giving father, the pitā, I am the root cause for everything - ahaṁ bīja pradaḥ pitā (14.4).' 'Why', this 'great why' is Kṛṣṇa's seed put inside you and sent, so that you won't rest until you become a tree. Understand, each seed has an energy called 'vīrya' that does not rest until it produces more seeds. Until then, it cannot rest. Even if you destroy the seed or eat the seed, that vīrya goes into your body and does its job in some other way. Here, Arjuna also comes back to the same great 'why' again and again and gets stuck. For the sake of inspiration or just for the sake of giving him an understanding, Kṛṣṇa gives an answer.

Kṛṣṇa's words can be fully understood only when we experience the consciousness of Kṛṣṇa. Until then, it is just a cognition. Even if it is a cognition, it is okay. Proceed with this new cognition into the next chapters, into the next verse. Suddenly, when you see the result, we will understand that whatever you have cognized is the truth. Kṛṣṇa makes this declaration so that you can understand the truth. You can discover the root cause based on which you cognize your whole life, based on which your consciousness functions.

Natural Attributes, Gunas

14.5 Material nature consists of the three modes: goodness, passion and ignorance. When the living entity comes in contact with nature, it becomes conditioned by these modes.

14.6 O Sinless One, the mode of goodness, sattva, being purer than the others, is illuminating, and it frees one from all sinful reactions. Those situated in that mode develop knowledge, but they become conditioned by the concept of happiness.

14.8 Know, O Arjuna, that the mode of ignorance, tamas, the deluder of the living entity, is born of inertia. Tamas binds the living entity by carelessness, laziness, and excessive sleep.

Material nature consists of three modes or attributes: goodness, passion and ignorance. These are called guṇas in Sanskrit. Kṛṣṇa explains how we operate through three different types of root thought patterns. One is sattva, the other is rajas and the third is tamas. These are translated as goodness, passion and ignorance; however, these are not exact translations.

Sattva refers to the root patterns that lead us to bliss, the space of completion. These root patterns lead us to joy and ecstasy. Rajas refers to the root patterns that lead us to restlessness, excitement and to work intensely. They make us active and materially productive. The third attribute, tamas, refers to the root patterns that lead us to depression, laziness and to dullness. Root patterns that lead to ecstasy and bliss form sattva. Root patterns that lead to restlessness, anger and emotional imbalance form rajas. Root patterns that lead to depression, dullness and low moods form tamas. Those root thought patterns that automatically arise and imbalance our cognition and lead to depression are called tamas.

Sometimes a thought suddenly comes up, 'I will not let him off so easily. I will see that he learns a lesson. I will not let him go.' We may unexpectedly make an angry gesture with our hands while engrossed in this thought. Patterns that make us active or cause anger or violence and imbalance our cognition are called rajas. We are normally caught between rajas and tamas. Very rarely do we get sāttvic patterns. Sāttvic patterns do not disturb us. They give rise to a memory of deep completion, bliss or joy that we have experienced. If we are pulled inwards, if we are made to do something good that leads to bliss, ecstasy and peace of mind, it is due to root patterns of sattva, sāttvic memories.

The Science of Completion

These three different types of root thought patterns or saṁskāras rule our entire life. Knowledge of these root patterns is the basic knowledge that must be possessed by anyone who wants to live successfully. Ayurveda, the Hindu science of health and wellness, is structured around the concept of guṇas and their effect on our body-mind system.

Understanding the three different root thought patterns or saṁskāras is the operating manual for the mind, the inner space. The science of completing with these roots thought patterns is the owner's manual for life. This is the basic life science. Kṛṣṇa calls it Guṇatraya Vibhāga Yoga.

When we don't comprehend this manual, we are not able to catch the whole understanding of life. We miss so many opportunities. We miss expansion in life, growth in life. We miss many possibilities in many dimensions. We miss the actual life itself. Because we have never learned or understood about the guṇas, we live only a very small fraction of what is possible in life.

At the outset, root patterns are not dead memories. Mūla vāsanas are living biomemories and muscle-memories, not dead memories. The more we travel with these memories, the more we live with these memories, the more they become a part of our being. They take up residence in deeper levels of our consciousness. They get engraved into our brain structure.

Kṛṣṇa explains step-by-step how we become caught in these three levels of root patterns and how we are pulled and pushed by these patterns. It is almost like having three wives. If we have one woman in our life, enlightenment is a luxury. If we have two women, enlightenment is an option. If we have three women, enlightenment is compulsory! With three wives or husbands, one cannot live without enlightenment.

Here, Kṛṣṇa gives us an understanding of how to find these root thought patterns and complete with these bio-memories and muscle-memories. Another important point is that because these memories are living energies, they can be used for creating powerlessness, the space of incompletion or powerfulness, the space of completion.

Understand, the inner space you carry is such a powerful space. When a person has energies to do powerless acts out of incompletion, we can tap into those energies and make him do powerful acts out of completion. You are hypnotized to believe that your past has influence over your future. No! Till this moment if somebody is a sinner, in the next moment he can become a saint. Till this moment if somebody is a saint, next moment he can become a sinner. That is the beauty of Mahākāla, Time.

Please understand, how the science of completion and incompletion work, how powerfulness and powerlessness work, how the space of satsaṇga and nissaṇga work. When you associate yourself with powerfulness, you are in satsaṇga. When you associate yourself with powerlessness, the wrong association, you are in nissaṇga.

When you allow incompletion, you cannot say, 'Oh! I allowed incompletion only for three minutes, then how can thirty years of completion be destroyed?' You cannot say, 'Oh! I put only a drop of poison in the milk!' Same way, in one minute of deciding to be complete, your janmas (births) of sins will be washed away. You cannot say, 'What is this? It is unfair. This person was in completion space for only one minute. How can all his sins be washed away?'

When we entertain and associate ourselves with powerlessness, powerlessness is so powerful that it can destroy us. Powerlessness is worse than alcohol and poison. Poison destroys our physiology. Alcohol destroys our psychology. Powerlessness destroys both our physiology and psychology. If we entertain powerfulness, if we complete, the same way completion will raise us so quickly. Please understand, even for a few minutes if we decide to be in incompletion, it can put us in a space where we will stoop so low, all the janmas (births) of spiritual achievement will be destroyed. In the same way, if we decide to be in the space of completion for a few minutes, it can open a new consciousness for us.

The powerfulness and powerlessness, completion and incompletion doesn't work logically, it works miraculously. Miraculous changes happened to these sinners and a cognitive shift took place in their being. The shift usually happens in the way that our mind receives data, processes it and delivers the result based on the root patterns.

Once the cognitive shift takes place, we receive data, process it and go inside instead of outside. We respond from the complete cognition we carry inside and create more and more completion outside also. As long as we operate from the incomplete cognition, we react externally and we work towards depression, powerlessness. However, once we go in and complete with our root patterns, and associate ourselves with powerfulness, we move into bliss.

How the Mind and Senses work?

Kṛṣṇa explains how root thought patterns disturb our inner space and through this understanding, we can transform our being. Please see the above diagram through which we can understand how patterns affect our cognition, our decisions and how to come out of the influence of patterns.

Please understand how we receive information or data from the outer world, how we internally process it or cognize it, and how we make decisions.

Cognition is the process of receiving information through our five senses, processing that information internally, relating with it based on our root patterns, and responding to life based on our patterns. This is known as cognition.

First, we see something through the eyes. This is the example of sight but we can replace it with any other sense: like hearing, smelling, tasting or touching. Among these five jñānendriya (senses of perception), any one can be used here.

There are five jñānendriya and five karmendriya (senses of action) that are the means of communication between the external world and us. Jñānendriya are the senses of perception, the five senses of smell, taste, sight, touch and hearing. The karmendriya are five actions of elimination, procreation, locomotion, grasping and speaking. Each sense is related to one of the energy centers (cakras) in our body-mind system.

First your eye captures the whole scene of what is in front of you like a picture and this picture goes to the cakṣu (the energy behind the eyes). Understand, we don't see with the eye, we see through the eye. There is an energy that is inside or behind the eye that actually sees. There is an energy inside or behind the ears that hears. The ears by themselves cannot hear. That is why when we are engrossed in a book, we may not hear the alarm or doorbell ring. So, there is an energy inside the eyes that sees. We call this energy cakṣu. The whole scene is converted into a file like in a digital signal processor in a computer so that our mind can process the data.

The cakṣu is almost like the digital signal processor or the DSP in electronic systems. In a computer, whether it is an audio or visual file, it must be converted into a digital file. In the same way in our inner space whatever we see or hear is converted into a bio-signal file like a digital file.

Then the file starts moving up, step-by-step. The file goes to the part of the mind called citta. If we understand this, our whole life can be transformed. We will know why we do the way we do, and how we react. We will cognize how we make big decisions based upon our root thought patterns and consequently suffer.

The file goes to citta, the place where past bio-memories are collected. Citta means mind, inner space. This area is where the work of excluding happens as - 'Na iti, Na iti' - this is not, this is not. The process of neti neti (this is not, this is not) takes place in this area. Upon seeing this file, our citta starts eliminating whatever the object is not.

Take the example of this scene: First you see the Master, the whole scene is photographed. It goes to cakṣu and becomes a bio-signal file. The file is then taken to citta, bio-memory. Citta says, 'This is not a tree. This is not an animal. This is not a plant. This is not this. This is not that.' The excluding process happens in citta.

Next, the file goes to manas, another part of the mind. The manas tries to positively identify, 'This is a human being. He is wearing a saffron robe. He is standing on a stage.' The identification process, 'iti, iti' (this is it, this is it) identification process happens in manas. In citta, 'neti, neti' or the 'not this, not this' elimination happens.

Once this positive identification happens, the file goes to a third part of the mind called buddhi or intelligence. Buddhi is where the trouble starts. Here the analysis starts, 'How am I related to this file? How am I connected to this scene? How is it relevant to me? How should I respond to this scene?' If past bio-memories about Master have been good or pleasant according to your intelligence, you cognize and respond in a positive way. You immediately refer to those past memories and review, 'It was so good at yesterday's discourse.'

Your intelligence refers to the past bio-memory and muscle-memory and makes a decision based upon your cognition of these experiences. If your cognition about the past experiences with Master has been positive, your intelligence tells you to stay and listen. If your cognition of the past experiences has been inadequate, unpleasant and you felt bored, your intelligence tells you that this is not the place for you and that you should leave. These are logical decisions based on conscious memories retained by your mind.

Up to this point, your cognition, the transmission of what is perceived by the senses and what is the response based on that pattern is relatively straightforward. It is a conscious process. From the conscious mind, the information is passed to the unconscious space of the mind, the ego. This unconscious space of the mind is the ego, not because it is arrogant, but because it provides you the identity of who you are.

Your identity stems from your unconscious incompletions which are your root patterns. You project who you wish to be, never who you are. You do not even know who you are. Who you are is deeply buried in your unconscious. All the major decisions that shape your life are consigned to this unconscious space.

This is the repository of all those emotionally-filled memories, the root thought patterns and beliefs about yourself; which constitute what you believe as you, what you project as you, what others expect you to be, and what you expect others or life to be for you and therefore, create your identity. This is the ego. Identify your root pattern. Root pattern means the first time in your life when your cognitions were imbalanced, disturbed by some external force; and your terrorized being started defining yourself with a disempowering word and started defining the world in that disempowering powerless state; and to compensate from this death, the disempowering inner identity, the inner image, you create a pseudo alternative compensating cognition, the outer image. This is the root pattern.

When your root pattern starts, that is the moment you feel yourself as an individual identity. If it starts in an accidental moment, your life will be an accident forever. It is an eternal accident. Till you complete with that root pattern, you will continue to have accidents in your life.

Completion takes away the agitated confusion and the alternative compensating image we create in our life. Understand, this example of your life. Because we have a very disempowering cognition about ourselves, we go on creating an alternative compensating cognition to compensate with our inadequate cognition. It is like you first declare you are a beggar, forgetting the billions of dollars you have in your bank balance, and then you yourself try to project the rich image to cover your belief that you are a beggar. But unfortunately, the final thing is you will project that your whole life - that you were a rich man, but lived as a poor man, but in reality you were the richest man.

Understand, you project and you try so hard to prove to the world that you are a rich man, but you always believed yourself and lived as a poor man; but in reality you are the richest man. You never knew about the wealth you had in your bank balance. It is like you kept all your money in some Swiss Bank and you forgot the number. To compensate the inadequate cognition which got created unconsciously inside you, which is your inner image, mamakāra, you create an alternative compensating cognition which is your outer image, ahaṁkāra.

Till the end you never feel satisfied, because you feel the guilt you showed, which is not true, without realizing your true identity is much more than what you can imagine and show. So, your whole life ends in deep incompletion and the trial and error methods you do with these incompletions.

If you complete now, the first thing you will realize is that the alternative compensating cognition is a lie and it will melt down. Second thing, your disempowering cognition about yourself will melt down. Third, you will realize that your original self is much more than what you projected as your outer image, the alternative compensating cognition. And you will have complete easeness between what you feel as you, what you show as you, and what you are as you.

The conscious mind does not make important decisions. It makes a few decisions that can be reached by its limited intellect. Anything important moves to the unconscious ego or root patterns. Our unconscious handles all life-threatening situations with the disempowering cognitions, the so-called fight-or-flight decisions. Our conscious mind is too slow to handle them.

For example, the file travels to the ego, and the ego makes the decision, and we execute it. If there are more incompletions, the file travels to every table like in a bureaucratic office. Each incompletion stamps, puts its signature and writes its opinion. The effects of your root pattern are your conflicting patterns. Conflicting patterns are the branches which sprout from the root pattern.

When the file reaches the ego, the ego comes to a conclusion based on all the 'yes' responses and all the 'no' responses based out of your conflicting patterns. Yes or no is not a problem; however, we have wasted so much time and energy on this small decision. Not only that, any decision you take out of powerlessness, restlessness, will lead you to more and more powerless space. Understand, it is very important. Any decision, whether you get into some challenge, or you get into any relationship, or you get into a business decision, any decision, please see to it that you are in the space of powerfulness, completion.

You break relationships, you break businesses, you break partnerships, you break families, you break life itself when you are powerless, incomplete. Powerless moments in life create more and more powerless moments in life. For example, when we sit in our office, not doing anything, just sitting and worrying, we become stressed. Within fifteen minutes, we have pain in our shoulders. Worrying about simple decision-making leads to shoulder pain.

Continuously, again and again, look into the reasons for your powerlessness - why are you in conflict? Why are you in a powerless space? Whenever you are possessed by powerlessness, confusion, agitation, and you don't know what to do, please don't take any decisions in your life. All restlessness is powerlessness. The more patterns you have, the more powerless you feel, the more restless and rājasic you will be.

Take the example of smoking: According to the data collected at the conscious level, we know smoking is injurious to health. However, when the time comes, suddenly we decide to smoke. How does the file take such a quantum leap? How is the decision totally changed? When the file travels to the unconscious space, patterns say, 'No, no! The last time I smoked, I felt really good, I felt relieved from all the stress.'

We make countless decisions based upon root thought patterns. We repent and suffer later on. Suddenly we shout and after ten minutes, we repent, 'Why did I shout? I always wanted to keep a smiling face. Why did I shout?' We reacted suddenly due to these patterns.

We will see later how root thought patterns disturb and torture our decisions. Kṛṣṇa says that we should ask our being how we missed reality. Why are we deluded by root thought patterns?

Kṛṣṇa speaks of sattva guṇa saṁskāras that lead us to bliss and peace, rājasic guṇa that lead to restlessness and violence, and tamasic saṁskāras that lead to depression. He further explains how these saṁskāras influence our decision-making process.

When we try to work with different types of conflicting patterns, sattva, rajas and tamas and all three cross each other, they create hell in our lives. We need intelligence to even look into our lives to find our root pattern and see how many times we have carried the same pattern. We usually react out of arrogance or guilt. We say, 'So what if I made a mistake?' We brush it under the carpet leaving it incomplete. This is one kind of attitude, the attitude of might is right. The other attitude is that of suffering from guilt. Kṛṣṇa gives techniques on how be complete with these three guṇas.

Seven Energy Layers of the Body

These are the seven energy layers of our body-mind system. These are seven parts of our inner space, our being.

The first is the physical body, our flesh and bones. Next is the prāṇic layer, the energies of prāna, vyāna, udāna, apāna and samāna or the five air movements that take place in our body-mind system. The third is the mental body. This is where our mental inner chattering continuously takes place. This is inner chattering or the mental body or caṅcala, which means inner movement. The fourth is the etheric body. This is the space where our intense emotions and painful experiences are stored. Usually intense emotions are of pain and suffering.

The prāṇic layer is the body filled with desires. The mental body is filled with 'I should have' or guilt feelings. The etheric body is pain. Understand these three. Desire, guilt and pain are the feelings or the experiences stored in these layers.

When emotions, desires and feelings arising out of these three attributes are pure, they are called sattva, rajas and tamas depending on the quality of the emotion. Usually, they are impure. They are mixed with each other. We should know how to purify them. If we can purify our desires, we will be liberated. We cannot live without desires. We can only cleanse and purify the desires, directing them towards the right path. Without desires, we can't breathe. Desires must be handled properly. That's what we need to work towards, sattva.

Next comes guilt or rajas. Our restlessness is created by thoughts like, 'I should have done that', 'I should have lived like that', 'Because I did not do it then, let me do it now', 'Let me teach him a lesson, I know what to do now.' This is how restlessness or rajas operates.

The third is pain. Whether we do right or wrong, we know how to make it painful. Whatever it is, we know how to create suffering through tamas.

The first four body-mind layers are influenced by the three guṇas. The mind cannot experience the remaining three layers beyond the fourth layer. They can be experienced only through meditation. In the fifth layer, the causal body, we sleep soundly without dreams. It is called kāraṇa śarīra, the energy layer that we experience during deep sleep. The sixth layer is the cosmic layer, filled with joyful memories, and the seventh is the nirvanic layer or the bliss body.

Powerlessness in the level of physical body is tiredness and boredom. Powerlessness in the level of prāṇic body is dilemma. Powerlessness in the level of mental body is worry. Powerlessness in the level of subtle body is depression. Powerlessness in the level of causal body, kārana śarira is inability to trust life.

Just remember the first four layers of physical, prāṇic, mental and etheric energy. That's enough, because we will work only on these now. Kṛṣṇa has already spoken about the physical layer. Now He works on the other three guṇas of sattva, rajas and tamas. Satva is related to the second layer that is the prāṇic layer, rajas is related to the third layer that is the mental body, and the fourth layer is the etheric layer of tamas.

Sattva is related to desires and the prāṇa śarīra. When our desires change, our prāna flow or our airflow changes. It is prāṇa that sustains life in us. This prāṇa is affected by the changing desires in us. For example, if we are caught in lust or an intense desire, our inhaling and exhaling becomes intense. The prāna going in and coming out increases. With any desire, the prāṇa flow totally changes. If we are in a silent, peaceful mood, the prāṇa flow will be so mild, we will not know prāṇa is flowing. Understand that this prānic layer is filled with desires. What should we learn about sattva, about this prānic layer?.

Your Inner Space is Pure Consciousness

Whether we believe it or not, accept it or not, we are God. We are pure consciousness. No matter how many millions of reasons you give, there are some things which cannot be changed. Our inner space is all-powerful. Our inner space is infinite and infinitely powerful. Our inner space carries the DNA of Ahaṁ Brahmāsmi (I Am That).

How many ever arguments we may give, a country's constitution cannot be changed. In the same way, we may give a million reasons, many arguments to prove that we are not God, and we are not divine, and we are not powerful.

You think, 'I am not even able to get a cup of coffee when I want it. Then how can I be all-powerful? I don't even know what is happening in my spouse's mind. How can I be all-knowing?' You have very silly reasons to deny the possibility of your inner space. Please understand, you never tried to explore your inner space. How can you deny it before even trying?

Please understand, the space you create inside is so powerful, it can straightaway affect the way you experience life and the way others around you experience life.

How you feel things are going to be is the 'space you create inside'. If you are very clear that your space is already in a low energy, and you have thoughts like 'Anyhow, whatever I do is not going to work out, it is not going to be successful!,' then you have already dictated it. You have already given the plan to the Cosmos - 'I want my life to be like this only, as a big failure. Please make it happen for me.' So Cosmos will stitch it and give it to you.

The space you carry inside is not the effect of the happenings of your life, it is the command you are giving to the Cosmos. You may put the blame somewhere else. You may say, 'No, no, no! I am in low mood because of the continuous failures that have happened in my life. If you were in my shoes, you would understand why I am like this.'

Please understand, the space is the order you give to the Cosmos to prepare your future. Just like how you place the order in the restaurants after looking at the menu card, the inner space you carry is also an order you give to the Cosmos, 'I want this, this, this in my life.'

Whatever you carry in your inner space is a possibility. If you are carrying sadness, you are ordering the Cosmos to bring greater sadness into your life. If you are carrying joy, you are waiting for more joy to come in your life. If you are carrying an inability, 'Yes, I have the wrong inner space. I am depressed, but I don't know how to change it,' that is one more inner space; it means you are ordering the Cosmos to give you more powerlessness.

Whatever thoughts we create in our pure consciousness gain power. This inner space exists in all of us and is called Self, ātman, or inner divinity. Whatever thoughts we create in this inner space, the deeper they are, the more power they get from this consciousness.

But, the problem is that we create self-conflicting desires. We suffer with our desires because of this. Whether our desires are fulfilled or not, the resulting suffering is inevitable. If the desires are fulfilled, there will be emptiness and if they are unfulfilled, there will be restlessness. In both cases, we move towards tamas. Why?

It is a subtle understanding. Many times people ask, 'How can I complete just by declaring completion?' You can! You are nothing but the bunch of words you uttered, consciously or unconsciously to yourself and to others. Unfortunately, most of it is unconscious. That is where the problem starts. Many times, you do not recognize the power of the words you utter, especially towards yourself.

Whatever words we repeat unconsciously in our inner space become reality in our body, mind and in our world. It is because we have the power to give life to any word. If the words 'Let me get up and go', come to our mind, with those words, immediately our body will move, we will stand up and start going.

Understand, the first lesson you need to learn is the ability to trust the power of integrity.

If you say, 'I am free,' then, you are free. If you say, 'I am a liar,' then, you are a liar. If you say, 'I am powerful,' then, you are powerful. It is just you. The words you utter to yourself and others is life. It can be great news for you if you start living it. It can be good news for you if you start believing it. It can be bad news for you, if you start worrying about it. But the words you utter towards yourself and to others is you.

One word can make us do whatever we want. Words that appear in our inner space are mantra (sacred sounds). When put together, all the words that appear in our inner space form our life, especially the words that we repeat unconsciously.

Thoughts that we repeat unconsciously are more powerful than words we use consciously. Your inner space is nothing but the words you repeat, again and again within you. So, now decide consciously that you will repeat the right words within you.

Whatever mantra or word we use in our inner space, that dhyāna or meditation automatically happens in our unconscious. If we use the word 'headache' again and again, we will be meditating on the headache. If we use the word 'health', again and again, we will be meditating on health.

That is why when we start to meditate upon God, we start with a dhyāna śloka or meditation verse. It is like the invocation verses that invoke God with the right words. In these verses we verbalize what good things we wish to visualize in our lives.

Verbalization of visualization is the dhyāna śloka. Whatever we visualize again and again will be inscribed in our memory, in our inner space, in our inner being. If we have a disease, please never create and repeat a word that carries the name of the disease. Always use these powerful words, 'Let me be wealthy'; never say, 'Let me be free from my poverty.' Declare, 'I create the space of completion'; not, 'I am working hard on my incompletions.'

Please do not abuse the inner space or icchā śakti (power of creation). The prānic layer is our icchā śakti. It has the energy to make things happen. It has the energy to fulfill our desires. Do not waste icchā śakti by creating self-conflicting or self-doubting patterns. Declare completion with all the self-doubting patterns.

Complete with Self-doubting Pattern

Understand, all of you have one important pattern of self-doubting. Along with your root-pattern and split-up of your personality, one more thing has entered into you - constantly doubting. This is because any part of your personality decides or does anything, the other part doubts that cognition.

Whatever your right hand does, your left hand is doubting. Whatever your left hand does, your right hand is doubting. But, you have to do everything with both hands, only then it will be successful.

Self-conflicting and self-doubting patterns corrupt our whole sattva space. The sattva space, restful awareness with you is your basic right and it is possible for you to reclaim your basic right. In the cosmic constitution, restful awareness is your basic right. Enlightened beings land on planet Earth to ensure that your basic right is restored to you.

We continuously allow ourselves to be exploited by what we hear and see. People who don't know the truth about how the mind and consciousness influences us. All these problems arise because we don't know that pure joy of inner space is possible.

No medicine or chemical can help our mind. All antianxiety medicines, all anti-depression medicines are consolations. First, we visualized that we suffered from depression and now we visualize that we have taken some medicine, that's all. You go on telling yourself, 'My time is not good, I will not be able to do anything.' And even after you do it, you start believing it so strongly that you fulfill it.

You are the astrologer, you are the trainer for you, and you are the judge for you. You first give the self-fulfilling prophecy, 'I am a failure'. Then you train yourself for that, so that even the Guru should not make you successful, even by mistake and you wait for those kinds of responses from society. You do not bother about the support you receive, but you are haunted by the discouragement you get, because you are training yourself to be a failure. So, who is the decision-maker for your life?

First, you are an astrologer who declares that you are a failure. Then, you are a trainer who trains yourself to be a failure, and if failure does not come even then, you become a judge and you declare that you are a failure. Don't be caught in that self-doubting game. We disturb the sattva, the pure space of our being, by creating self-conflicting and self-doubting patterns.

Sit with yourself. Complete with all the negative conflicting patterns. Complete with all the self-doubting patterns. Allow the grace to move in you. Create the right inner space by completing again and again with yourself by doing svapūrṇatva, self-completion. Create the right space, right mood, and right experience.

Completion with Rajas Pattern

Next, let us see how two desires conflict one another. We want to lead a peaceful life and we want wealth. With wealth comes responsibility as well. If you actually analyze your attitude towards wealth with integrity, you will understand that you are actually afraid of wealth. You hate wealth.

The fear of responsibility and the greed for wealth always go hand in hand. If you look in, you have greed for wealth, but you are not ready to take responsibility that comes with wealth. This is the self-conflicting desire. Either decide to take responsibility or decide to relax from that desire and restore your integrity by completing with it and accept whatever happens.

Only one thought should be strengthened when two desires conflict. When we have both, we have a self-conflicting mental setup. In the sattva space, when we create self-conflicting patterns, we are automatically thrown into rajas.

Kṛṣṇa says rajas is the mode of passion that is born of unlimited desires and longings. Kṛṣṇa says, because of this rajas, mode of passion, born of unlimited desires and longings, the embodied living entity is bound to doing result-oriented actions.

rajo rāgātmakaṁ viddhi tṛṣṇā saṅga samudhavam | tan nibadhnāti kaunteya karma saṅgena dehinam || 14.7 ||

He talks about desires and longings. What is the difference? Rāga means desire; tṛṣṇā means craving, longing. Some memories have our emotional support whereas some memories have been inserted into our being by advertisements. Advertisements are not only on the television or in a movie theatre. If our father repeats something time and again, that is an advertisement. If our mother says again and again, 'This is right, this is for us, this is for you,' that becomes an advertisement. Some desires have our mental support. We feel these will give us fulfillment; we feel these are our genuine needs. Some desires have been sold to us by someone else. That is the difference between desires and longings.

Desires, rāga are ours and longings, tṛṣṇā have been given to us by society. Desires are inborn. They are our nature. If we fulfill desires, we feel fulfilled, relaxed and complete. With longings, the moment we fulfill them, we feel empty, incomplete. This is the difference between desire and longing. Desire gives us fulfillment, completion. Longing gives us emptiness, incompletion.

Kṛṣṇa shows us how self-conflicting desires lead us to rajas. When desires contradict each other, we get confused. We fall into rajas, restlessness. The more patterns you have, the more time it takes to make a decision. We will suffer and be in a dilemma. Man is a dilemma. Continuously we think, 'I should have done this,' or 'I should have done that.'

Life is a failure if in your old age you think that you should have done all this when you were young. Dilemma is due to too many conflicting patterns. Dilemma is what Kṛṣṇa calls rajas and restlessness. All restlessness is powerlessness.

In rajas, we have tremendous anger, violence and inner restlessness. A person caught in rajas shouts at others and experiences an irritable mood. He has a poisonous tongue. He waits to vomit out his irritation and anger on others. What is agitation? Not taking the responsibility for what you mean to others is agitation. When you don't take responsibility for your commitments to others, you get agitated. You get irritated. If you take the responsibility for your commitments, you will not be agitated or irritated.

How to complete with the rajas patterns? The first truth you need to know about completion is do completion just to be in the space of completion. All other reasons lead to more and more incompletions. Completion done in the space of completion transforms your personality, transforms your being; the intense, constant agitated violence you carry towards you and others due to rajas patterns.

When you drop a stone in the water how the ripples are created; in the same way the moment incompletion is dropped in your consciousness, the ripples of violence towards you and others starts in your being. Worrying becomes your lifestyle. Worrying becomes the compulsive pattern in you. Not only worrying, because of worrying, the inability to handle life. At the most, you only push your life under the carpet. Pushing life under the carpet is not going to be the solution.

See, there are only three ways to handle your incompletions. One, by pushing them under the carpet. Second, by trying to forget them either by alcohol or by other entertainments. Third, by completing them and liberating yourself.

Continuously completing for the sake of completion leads you to the experience of Enlightenment. When you try to push your incompletions into your unconscious mind, unfortunately, it reaches deeper and goes closer to your consciousness. Anything closer to consciousness becomes powerful. That is why a small incompletion that happened in your life when you are young or a small incompletion which you are suppressing without completing it, it explodes in you as a dangerous imbalance of your rājasic guṇa patterns.

Many times, your imbalance is such that you do not care about your destruction. You go on waiting in anger and expecting the other person's destruction. If you drink poison, how can the other person die? It is not possible. That is the biggest foolishness human beings get into. They drink the poison thinking the other person is dying.

All vengeance is rooted in incompletion. Complete it. Trust the Cosmos and complete it. Once we do completion with the rajas patterns, we can make one thousand decisions without any stress, violence or suffering. That is why Kṛṣṇa says that when we don't expect the result, when we don't think of karma phala (result of the work done), we can do the work intensely.

When we don't expect or worry about the result, we work beautifully because there are fewer patterns. We will not suffer or be tortured by root thought patterns. We will be in the space of completion, which will lead to more and more completion.

Consciousness Can Never Be Tired

In the next verse Kṛṣṇa talks about tamas. He addresses Arjuna, 'Oh son of Bhārata, know that the mode of darkness, tamas, is born out of ignorance . It is the delusion of all embodied living entities. The result of this mode is madness, indolence and sleep, which bind the conditioned soul.'

tamas tv ajñānajaṁ viddhi mohanaṁ sarva dehinām | pramādālasya nidrābhis tan nibadhnāti bharāta || 14.8 ||

If there are more vāsanas or patterns, the file does not reach the ego easily or even fully. A powerful pattern may make the decision on the way. Why does this happen? Why do you decide unconsciously and regret later?

This unconscious space is filled with negative bio-memories and powerlessness, restlessness. All our past bio-memory or root thought patterns are stored in your inner space as files without any logical connection between them. When the file takes a quantum leap to this space, it does not reach the ego properly for a decision. It is as if your computer hard disk is loaded with high-resolution photographs and there is no further scope to work on your hard disk. Like that, when your unconscious is loaded with past root thought patterns and memories, it becomes inadequate, inefficient and incomplete and makes superficial, illogical decisions.

Take this example: Why does drinking alcohol become a pattern, but drinking water is not becoming a pattern? Both of them people drink every day. People even drink more water. Then, why does drinking alcohol become a pattern and drinking water never becomes a pattern? Because drinking water gives you completion and you are not stuck. After drinking water, you are out of thirst and are more energetic. But unfortunately, all alcoholics are either stuck with elated mood or belated mood or depressed mood.

It is the mood associated with alcohol that makes people stuck, not alcohol itself. Please understand, when a person drinks alcohol, if he feels elated or belated, he wants that mood again and again. That is why he starts and continues drinking alcohol.

Sometimes, people start enjoying even the self-sympathy, the victim mood, the depression. Even for that reason they start drinking alcohol. When there are no patterns, there will be no need for the file to drop into the unconscious inner space for a decision. It straightaway meets the buddhi and ego after the mind. There are no blocks. The time taken for the unconscious process will be less than the conscious process. We will be intuitive or at the level of God.

The level of an animal is the level of instinct; the level of man is the level of intellect; the level of God is the level of intuition. The level of instinct is the level of tamas; the level of intellect is the level of rajas; the level of intuition is the level of sattva.

In sattva, our mind works continuously and we make decisions, yet we do not become tired. We can be active for twenty-four hours and yet remain peaceful. This is action in inaction and inaction in action. Kṛṣṇa says we will be centered when we are in sattva. Though lots of activities go on around us, we will remain utterly relaxed in restful awareness.

The whole thing is dependent on one thing: our root thought patterns or bio-memories. The number of root thought patterns determines whether we are caught in sattva, rajas or tamas. These three are not enlightened states. Enlightenment is beyond these three.

If we are caught in tamas, we need to move towards rajas. If we are caught in rajas, make the move towards sattva. If we are caught in sattva, it will automatically lead us to enlightenment. How do we do this? For example, we create a self-conflicting desire at the sattva level. Because of that we create restlessness, the powerless space in the rajas level. When we feel too restless, we drop everything. We decide not to take any responsibility and we sleep instead. We fall into tamas.

Tamas is not only tiredness, sleep or depression, not taking enough responsibility is also tamas. Work does not need to make you tired. It is the wrong idea taught to you by the society. The only two enemies human beings have are boredom and tiredness. When you entertain them, you build wrong patterns. When you are bored of doing some work, you invoke tiredness and depression.

Scrutinize your inner space with integrity. You will see that whenever you don't want to take responsibility, you invoke boredom, tiredness, and fear. Sometime, even greed is used as a substitute for enjoyment. Greed and fantasy are used as substitutes for alcohol and drugs. When you have a pattern of addiction and drugs, you go for it. When you are afraid that they will spoil your health, you use fantasy and greed as a powerful substitute for alcohol.

For example, we are in tamas if we studied to become a doctor and we do not practice our profession out of laziness. If we don't practice for some other reason, that is fine. However, if we are avoiding because of laziness, we are in tamas.

If we drop out because of a spiritual reason such as to meditate, to go on a pilgrimage or to do spiritual work, that is fine. However, dropping out and giving up on you due to tamas means that we don't have enough energy and we cannot make a responsible decision. Why? Too many patterns block our decision process. By the time we make one decision, we feel tired and want to sleep. That is why we attempt to escape from life. Escapists are tāmasic people.

How many of you struggle with this tāmasic pattern of tiredness and laziness? It is just lack of integrity. Be integrated to your soul. The soul can never have tiredness; consciousness can never have tiredness. That is the truth. Whether you realize or not, you are soul and consciousness.

Guarding The Senses

14.12 O chief of Bhārata, when there is an increase in the mode of passion, the symptoms of great attachment, uncontrollable desire, hankering, and intense endeavor develop.

Kṛṣṇa further explains the three modes. 'O Bhārata, sometimes the mode of goodness, sattva, becomes prominent, defeating the modes of passion and ignorance, and at other times, ignorance defeats goodness and passion. In this way, there is always competition for supremacy.'

All of us are not completely caught in sattva or rajas or tamas. We swing between sattva, rajas and tamas. Sometimes we get up in the morning and feel fresh. We feel as if all our questions are answered; we are fresh, alive and we think we have become almost enlightened. Everything goes beautifully until evening. Suddenly we become restless. The very next day, we are in tamas. We don't want to do anything. These mood swings take place continuously.

Obesity and mood swings are closely related. When we allow these mood swings to happen, we torture ourselves. Sometimes we are restless, sometimes we are peaceful and sometimes we are in tamas. When we are in tamas we don't want to do anything; we want to escape from everything and run away. We are caught in these three modes of nature: sometimes in instinct, sometimes in intellect and sometimes in intelligence.

Why Do We Have Mood Swings?

Why? This happens if we have collected too many patterns about something over many years. For example, the pattern of drinking develops if from a young age, you were repeatedly taught not to drink and that drinking is a sin. This raises your curiosity to taste alcohol at least once. Never give a law to children. Instead give them understanding and the spirit behind the law.

If we want to bring up children blissfully, we need to bring them up without guilt. Breaking rules creates guilt. To give understanding, we need two things. First we need to be intelligent enough to understand the meaning behind the rules we are trying to enforce. Next we need patience to explain it all to them. Even though it takes more time and energy, focus on giving them understanding.

Understand, without completing your root thought pattern, your DNA layers are not awakened, mitochondria cell energy is not awakened. For common human beings, two layers of DNA are awakened. If you find your root thought pattern and complete, six layers of DNA, your kuṇḍalinī (potential energy) will be awakened in you. If six layers of DNA remains as an incompletion. The incompletions embedded in you go on creating more and more incompletions. So, first find the root of incompletions, the root pattern.

The moment a root pattern enters your system you are dead. After that only the root pattern lives through you. You don't live. Your life is over. Your body may be functioning but your life is over. The first thing any human being should do is learn this science of discovering the root pattern. Anything you discover is yours. Anything you have not discovered is not yours. When you discover your root pattern and complete with it, your whole being will be filled, your being will have the space to live integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching.

This whole chapter called Guṇatraya Vibhāga Yogaḥ, is about the science of completion - discovering your root thought patterns, mūla vichāra dhārā, your guṇas (root attributes) and completing with them to experience the space of completion, pūrṇatva.

Completion means consciously reliving the same experience and relieving the powerful impact of the past which makes you powerless in the present.

The powerful impact of the past which makes you powerless in the present should be relieved from your system. Past should not bind you in the present. What we term perception is not the experience we perceive through our senses; perception is how we respond emotionally to the experience. This response is an incomplete, inadequate response based on our root thought patterns.

Modern psychology tells us that almost 90% of our mind is unconscious. This means that we typically use 10% of our conscious mind. In other words, our conscious mind drives only 10% of our thoughts, words and actions. The rest is driven by the unconscious. We have no control over how our unconscious mind functions. Many unconscious memories called root thought patterns are based on fear and pain. They rise up in moments of trauma or difficult situations. They influence decisions with no awareness on our part.

All that we perceive is not true; all that we do not perceive is not unreal. It is a simple truth that what you cognize is only a fraction of what our five senses perceive. The rest goes directly into the unconscious as a pattern. Yet this does not mean that these perceptions and the memories of these perceptions are forgotten. They remain as deep incompletions in us. And these memories strongly drive our actions.

You don't see what IS. You only see what you want. You create what you want. Human beings are in such an unfortunate space, they very strongly believe that only what 'IS' is perceived by them.

What is your reality? It is just your perception - your perception about what you feel as you - your mamakāra, what you project to others as you - your ahaṁkāra, and what others expect about you - anyakāra.

Please understand, all human beings need to know why you behave the way you behave, why you do the way you do, why you do what you do. You may be a doctor, an engineer in the corporate field, or a politician, or in the field of finance or religion - whatever you may be, whether you act with softness, peace, agitation or irritation, it is your root thought pattern that is responsible for the way you react, the way you function.

Understand this. The first strong cognition you go through in your life which influences you to continue to function based on the same cognition is root thought pattern.

Once some root thought pattern starts in you, your growth stops. After that, only that pattern grows in you, not you. Only pattern grows in you, not you.

Find the Root of Your Happening

How you behave, how you feel, how you respond - this means the cognition that happens in you and fills you at a very young age and overpowers you. Sometimes it is fear, sometimes it is greed, sometimes it is jealousy and sometimes it is the decision to prove yourself. Sometimes it is just being blocked out with confusion and worry.

The first thing you need to know is that only when you find your root thought pattern and complete with it, your life as a human being starts. Otherwise, you go on cheating yourself most of the time.

We tend to think that our actions are based on a logical sequence of thoughts. However, almost all our decisions have neither logic nor awareness. One of the worst things is that the root thought pattern becomes so much part of you are awakened, your child will be an enlightened being. If you decide to have children, have the intelligence to give them the right cognition behind all that you tell them.

Never enforce rules on kids. We are suffering from rules given to us by our parents. The rules given by our parents are in our rajas and tamas layers. They lead us to restlessness and deep depression again and again. They create more and more incompletion, powerlessness for us.

Desire and Guilt Patterns

Desire and guilt are two forms of the same energy. One is related to the future. The other is related to the past. Desire is related to the future. Guilt is related to the past. 'I should have done that' plays a major role in our 'I should do this.' 'I should do this' is determined by 'I should have done that.'

Guilt that is created by rules handed down to us by our elders creates hell in our life and leads us to tamas. Kṛṣṇa says we are led to antaha (the end). We fall into ignorance or into the end.

Kṛṣṇa says the manifestations of the modes of goodness can be experienced when all the gates of the body are illuminated by knowledge. This is the technique. The gates of the body are the gates through which we cognize: we receive knowledge or information through the eyes, ears, nose, tongue and the sense of touch or physical pleasure. These are the files through which we receive information from outside. He says that we should keep these five carefully guarded by prakāśa (illuminated knowledge). We should ensure security at these gates and knowledge is that security.

We should have knowledge about what should be taken in and what should not be taken in. Knowing this, we will reside in sattva forever. We will reside in bliss forever. He says we should appoint a guard for the gates of our body. There is no security system for our body. We have security for our home. We reside twenty-four hours every day in this house called our body, yet we don't have a security system.

Ramaṇa Mahaṛishi sings in beautiful homage to the sacred Aruṇācala Hill in Tiruvannamalai in his famous song 'Aruṇācala Akśaramaṇamalai', 'When these thieves, the five senses, have entered into the house, Oh Aruṇācala, were you not at home? How did they enter?' He asks Śiva, 'When these five senses entered the house (body-mind), were you not there? Why did you let them enter?'

Kṛṣṇa says, let us have the security, the protection of knowledge at the five gates, and we will reside in continuous bliss. Completion is bliss. This means that we should not allow the incomplete thoughts that create suffering to enter our inner space through the eyes and other senses.

This means, avoid the television or media. At least do not watch programs that create violence, depression, and powerlessness in you. We should only watch programs that give joy and make us complete, blissful. When we protect our senses with sattva, we will not allow negative patterns to come in.

Please do not infuse your consciousness with powerless thoughts that create suffering in you. Continuously add thoughts of completion that give power, bliss and peace. We may think this is impractical. We may think, 'How can we live in society without knowing what's going on in the world?' Be very clear, knowing what's going on in the world is a disease. Collecting information is a disease.

Life is much too valuable and too short to be spent worrying. Do not allow powerless thoughts that create depression, low mood and longing, into your system, especially at sandhyā time or the twilight time at which day and night meet. Our ancient Masters knew that sandhyā time, when day and night meet, is a critical time. There are two sandhyās, dawn and dusk. Our Masters knew that whatever thought-seeds are sown inside our being at sandhyā come out as full-blown trees. That is why the Masters insisted that at sandhyā time, one should spend time in a temple, praying, listening to prayers, reading devotional material. Meditate or go to a temple and do something spiritual at this time. These spiritual ideas go inside as seeds and become a valuable complete tree in our life.

Protect your senses twenty-four hours a day. Do not entertain any form of powerlessness at any time of the day, in any level of the body, mind and consciousness. If you cannot guard your senses at all times, protect yourself at least during sandhyā time.

Kṛṣṇa gives one technique, one suggestion: Protect the five senses from negative ideas of powerlessness, the incompletions and infuse positive ideas of completion through the five senses. Whatever we feed upon becomes our being and we radiate that energy.

Next, Kṛṣṇa says that attachment, greed, craving, and restless actions are indications of rājasic behavior. This fits most people, but it fits most aptly anyone in business or a corporate career.

Greed is the corporate creed. People who recruit and train employees use motivation as their only tool. What is motivation? The whole idea of motivating someone is ill-motivated. To motivate someone, we must hold a carrot in front of him or her. Then the carrot becomes the goal. If we are donkeys, we follow the carrot. If we have any intelligence, we will realize that the carrot will always be dangled in front of us just out of reach. The donkey powerlessly runs after the carrot in restless action. It cannot stay still. The carrot is so near and yet so far. So how can it stay still? This is the story of the corporate people.

Instead of enjoying the path, we worry about the goal and constantly live in incompletion. We worry about when we will reach, where we will reach. In the process, we do not notice how we are traveling. We miss the beauty of the path.

When we torture ourselves with worrying about quarterly results, how can we enjoy work? How can results be achieved? As long as we struggle, we suffer even if we make money. The goal that we are chasing will be a mirage, an illusion. As soon as we reach that goal, we will be forced to chase another goal. Acquisition becomes the goal, not enjoyment.

We can never be happy in rajas. It drives us like a donkey until we are exhausted and we collapse with our incompletion. We need to decide whether or not this is the way we want to live.

Ask: Do I wish to be a donkey driven by a carrot dangling in front of me all my life? When we decide, 'No, this is not what I want,' it is time to break away from rajas and move towards bliss, nityānanda.

The Depression of Success

अप्रकाशोऽप्रवृत्तिश्च प्रमादो मोह एव च ।

aprakāśo'pravṛttiśca pramādo moha eva ca

14.13 O son of Kuru, when there is an increase in the mode of ignorance, Madness, illusion, inertia and darkness are manifested.

यदा सत्त्वे प्रवृद्धे तु प्रलयं याति देहभृत् ।

yadā sattve pravṛddhe tu pralayaṃ yāti dehabhṛt

14.14 When one dies in the mode of goodness, He goes where the realized souls are.

rajasi pralayaṃ gatvā karmasaṅgiṣu jāyate
tathā pralīnastamasi mūḍhayoniṣu jāyate || 14.15 ||

14.15 When one dies in the mode of passion, he takes birth among those engaged in activities. When he dies in the mode of ignorance, he takes birth in the space of the ignorant.

karmaṇaḥ sukṛtasyāhuḥ sāttvikaṃ nirmalaṃ phalam
rajasastu phalaṃ duḥkhamajñānaṃ tamasaḥ phalam || 14.16 ||

14.16 By acting in the mode of goodness, one becomes purified. Work done in the mode of passion result in distress, and actions performed in the mode of ignorance result in foolishness.

सत्त्वात्सञ्जायते ज्ञानं रजसो लोभ एव च । sattvātsañjāyate jñānaṃ rajaso lobha eva ca

pramādamohau tamaso bhavato'jñānameva ca || 14.17 ||

14.17 From the mode of goodness, real knowledge develops; from the mode of passion, greed develops; from the mode of ignorance develops foolishness, madness and illusion.

We act like a wind-up toy when we are steeped in rajas, and like a battery-operated toy with a dead battery when we are in tamas.

Kṛṣṇa uses powerful words to drive home how desperate that state is: ignorance, madness, illusion, inertia and darkness.

aprakāśo ʻpravṛttiś ca pramādo moha eva ca | tamasy etāni jāyate vivṛddhe kuru-nandana || 14.13 ||

It is surprising how quickly one can slip from rajas to tamas. To slip from restless activity into inactivity and inertia is simple. Activity without meaning, activity with tension and stress and activity totally focused on sensual satisfaction quickly leads to deep fatigue. The activity without any meaning that we find in tamas is not the same as activity without a purpose and goal that we experience in sattva. Please do not confuse the two.

The Purpose of Life

The real danger of rajas is that we are constantly focused on a goal and we forget to be in completion and enjoy the path as we pursue a meaningless purpose. Life has no purpose. It only has meaning. The meaning of life is to be in the space of completion; to be in restful awareness, to realize our inner divinity.

To be divine and to realize that inner divinity is our true meaning in life. Anything less than that is meaningless. Being aggressive, being restlessly active, or being constantly on the move does not help us understand or realize this meaning. We will be running after one thing or another. We are just plain greedy.

If we are driven by mere possessive obsession, we are bound to become tired sooner or later. Aggression results in deep depression. This is the 'depression of success'. People struggle to increase their material wealth, disregarding everything else. People change cars every year, houses every third year and their spouses every fifth year.

People run after material possessions and trophies without knowing the right context of 'why they are doing what they are doing'. One day when they have acquired and reacquired so many things and still feel incomplete, unhappy, uneasy and listless, they wonder why they acquired the things that they struggled for. They go into deep depression, deep incompletion what we call tamas.

The depression of success is difficult to address. To experience failure when we have always been successful and worked so hard is difficult to accept. What results then is depression, tamas. Tamas is generally born out of the ignorance of our true Self. Sometimes tamas can arise out of an effort to move out of that ignorance. A highly rājasic person, one who has been aggressively pursuing material gains, when moving into a spiritual path can easily move into tamas for a while.

Life happens to you inside and outside, both. If you think it is only inside and not outside, you don't know the outside. If you think it is only outside, you don't know the inside. If life is not happening to you inside, it is depression; if life is not happening to you outside, it is inefficiency. If life is happening to you inside, it is responsibility; if life is happening to you outside, it is success.

Tamas is darkness. It is negative. We can only remove darkness by bringing in light. In the same way, we dispel ignorance by bringing in awareness of the science of completion, pūrṇatva. The Upaniṣad says - tamaso mā jyotiṛgamaya - let my darkness be removed by light.

Let the light and wisdom of Kṛṣṇa, the Jagadguru, dispel your darkness and tamas. In these verses, Kṛṣṇa tells us where the person goes after death when steeped in these attributes of sattva, rajas and tamas. A sāttvic person becomes divine. A tāmasic person chooses a lower life. A rājasic person continues to suffer due to greed.

In another verse in the Gītā, Kṛṣṇa tells Arjuna that a person is reborn based on the last thought before death. Here Kṛṣṇa explains how that last thought is not an accident. It is based on one's guṇa, nature, his patterns. The mental setup, the conditioning, the mūla vāsanā with which we led life and with which we leave our life as well. When we are reborn, our spirit finds another body to occupy.

Be Reborn with Gods

Every birth is your declaration of completion. You decide, 'Come on! I declare completion. I will now work from the space of completion.' During the birth you declare completion and start the whole thing anew; and if you fall from the space of completion, you bring some of those past incompletions back. That is what is prārabdha karma. Karma which you bring back from the past incompletions is prārabdha. Whatever bio-memory you brought with you when you assumed the body is prārabdha. The muscle-memory you are accumulating is agāmya, and all collective bio-memories is sañcita. If you come to planet Earth only with bioenergy, without bio-memory, you are an Incarnation.

Only when you have found your root thought pattern and removed it and regained your consciousness, you will understand, 'Oh, God! I have literally wasted my whole life!'

Kṛṣṇa says that a person living in sattva goes to higher spaces, the abodes of the realized sages. He becomes divine, tadottama vidāṁ lokān amalān pratipadyate (14.14). When we are steeped in sattva, we live in restful awareness, the space of enlightenment. We live in the present moment. We are no longer attached to the results of our action and we are no longer controlled by fear and greed root patterns. We stop thinking about ourselves and we start living for others.

When one is in tamas, in deep ignorance and darkness, one sinks lower in rebirth. Kṛṣṇa says such a person is reborn as an animal. The lowest energy center of a human being is the mūlādhāra cakra, the root center. Human beings are provided with intelligence to move upward in consciousness. We have the freedom to make mistakes and we do make mistakes. When Kṛṣṇa talks about being reborn in ignorance and as animals, it is not to denigrate animals. He means, a human being who behaves instinctively, out of a blocked mūlādhāra cakra, and out of an animalistic nature, is ignorant of his potential as a human.

We are not human beings striving for a spiritual experience. We are spiritual beings enjoying a human experience. That is the truth. We can be in this state only when we are in sattva. When we are in tamas, we forget our spiritual nature. When we are in rajas, we have a vague idea; however, even that spiritual experience becomes an attachment, another pattern, goal and desire. We become attached to something that is beyond attachment. Kṛṣṇa says that we are reborn into this human form, back into this cycle of life and death, this cycle of saṁsāra, with all its suffering.

It is our choice to be instinctive and unconscious, in deep tamas, like an animal, or to be logical and chasing objects out of rajas. The third choice is to be beyond attachments, in a super conscious state of completion, in an intuitive state, in tune with our sublime sattva nature. This choice determines our next birth. In fact, it determines whether we will even be born again.

Your True Nature is Pūrṇa Beyond Triguṇa

Our center is our true nature. Our true nature is divine. We are one with the universal energy, God, Parāśakti or whatever we want to call it. We cannot describe it. We can just experience it. We experience bliss when our focus is in that central core and not out at the edges of our personality. Throughout life we run away from that center, that core of bliss, that space of completion.

Completion is removing the delusion of incompletion, which makes you cognize the other is separate from you; the delusive cognizance, the delusive cognition.

Our senses lead us towards the periphery where incompletions are, where material objects are. Our inner core is empty: it is śūṇya. But it is also pūrṇa, complete by itself with nothing else needed to top off the bliss. However, the outer periphery of incompletions is forever changing. Nothing is eternal about it. Even when objects are the same, our perceptions keep changing. This periphery is maya, illusion, tamas, ignorance. Understand, incompletion has no existence. Incompletion is the delusive cognition that stands between you and the Whole. Complete with everything.

Our rājasic nature, the restless activity that strives to introduce purpose into something that is essentially without purpose, keeps driving us away from the center of completion into this peripheral darkness of incompletions, tamas and māyā. Rajas always drives us into tamas. Aggression, passion, attachment and aversion eventually take us into delusion and ignorance.

But from time to time we get that spark of intelligence that says - there is more meaning to life than fantasies. We start searching. When we seek our true nature, we move towards our center, the core of bliss. Then something in the external space attracts us and we move out to the periphery. We keep moving in and out, from center to periphery, from periphery back to center. That is why human beings are eccentric. They can neither be in the center nor in the periphery. They settle in between and keep oscillating. They are eccentric. They are neither in complete madness nor in completion with their divine consciousness. The movement towards our core, our true self, ātma is driven by sattva. The movement outwards is driven by rajas. When we are fully settled in the periphery, we are caught in tamas. We are no longer human. When we settle into the center which is the space of completion, we go beyond the three guṇas. We become the triguṇa rahita, the Divine one who is beyond the three attributes, who is pūrṇa, complete.

Where Do We Go From Here

14.18 Those situated in the mode of goodness gradually go upward to the higher planes; those in the mode of passion live on the earthly planets; and those in the mode of ignorance go down to the worlds below.

nānyaṃ guṇebhyaḥ kartāraṃ yadā draṣṭānupaśyati
guṇebhyaśca paraṃ vetti madbhāvaṃ so'dhigacchati || 14.19 ||

14.19 When we see that there is nothing beyond these modes of nature in all activities and that the supreme Lord is transcendental to all these modes, then we can know My spiritual nature.

गुणानेतानतीत्य त्रीन्देही देहसमुद्भवान् ।
जन्ममृत्युजरादुःखैर्विमुक्तोऽमृतमश्नुते ॥ १४-२०॥ guṇānetānatītya trīndehī dehasamudbhavān
janmamṛtyujarāduḥkhair vimukto'mṛtamaśnute || 14.20 ||

14.20 When the embodied being is able to transcend these three modes, he can become free from birth, death, old age and their distresses and can enjoy nectar even in this life.

Kṛṣṇa provides the key to liberation here. Those who go beyond the three guṇas, beyond the activity-producing attributes, beyond the root thought patterns and become complete, free of bondages, enjoy bliss in this world. This is the assurance of the Master. This is a guarantee.

These words are a great technique.

Step one is when we realize that each of our thoughts, words, and activities arises from one of the three root patterns, guṇas - sattva, rajas and tamas.

Step two is the understanding about which guṇa, root pattern it is and exactly what that guṇa is doing to us; what disempowering cognition that guṇa is building about our inner image (mamakāra), our outer-image (ahaṁkāra), others' image (anyakāra), others' expectation about us, and life's image (svānyakāra).

Step three is to do the completion and the creation process; do completion with that guṇa or root pattern and do creation of the sattva guṇa, the right inner space to create the reality that we want. Finally we transcend sattva guṇa and enter into nirguṇa or 'no guṇa state'.

Whatever we are doing, whatever is happening to us, we need to become aware of the attribute, the guṇa, the pattern that is driving us and complete with it. If it is a fantasy, we work out of tamas. If it is fear and greed, we work out of rajas. And if we are complete, unattached and undisturbed by all that is happening in and around us, we act out of sattva guṇa.

Here Kṛṣṇa assures, 'Those situated in the mode of goodness gradually go upward to the higher planes - ūrdhvaṁ gacchanti sattva-sthā (14.18).' A continuous tireless completion process creates the basis for higher level practices, for higher planes.

We have talked about the saṁskāras or root thought patterns that are buried in our unconscious. They drive us through one of these attributes (guṇas). Conscious, logical and analytical procedures cannot easily identify them, let alone remove or repair them. That is why so-called catharsis processes that aim to rid us of negative emotions give only temporary relief. The basic negativity remains buried.

Only Enlightened Master Dissolves Guṇas

Visualizing consciously or unconsciously does not take us out of rajas and tamas. We can be dragged deeper into the fantasyland of tamas. Those moments are the most dangerous moments you are spiritually vulnerable. Listen. Crying out of powerlessness due to rajas or tamas is not okay. When your immune system is down, any wrong negative spiritual concepts can infect you. Infection by the root pattern can happen in you during those powerless moments. When the infection of negative patterns happens in you, it is almost incurable. Only an enlightened Master can do the surgery and cure it. That surgery is called Inner Awakening.

The only way to move into satva and dissolve saṁskāras is to move into a super-conscious state through powerful meditations processes on root pattern completion. There is no other way that we can achieve it ourselves. Only the presence of super-conscious energy, the Enlightened Master can dissolve saṁskāras, the root patterns and burn out our vāsanas, the conflicting patterns developed through these root patterns. It is the only way. All other techniques do only one thing; they make money for those who promote them and put those who are seeking help into deeper trouble.

So first bring integrity to your thoughts and actions. Identify which guṇa they come from. If it is a fantasy, rooted in tamas, complete and drop the fantasy and move into the present reality. Every one of you has a fantasy deep down about you becoming all-powerful, all-knowing, sarvajña, that's all. I tell you, living as per the expectations of you, behaving as you expected about you, is the greatest joy you can experience in life. Completion does that to you! I tell you, nothing else can do that to you. This realization and awareness that completion helps you move out of the zone of fantasies and creates your reality as you want, can only come as a result of learning the science of completion.

Going Beyond the Gunas

14.22 Śrī Bhagavān says: He who does not hate illumination, attachment and delusion when they are present, nor longs for them when they disappear;

14.23 Who is seated like one unconcerned, being situated beyond these material reactions of the modes of nature, who remains firm, knowing that the modes alone are active;

समदुःखसुखः स्वस्थः समलोष्टाश्मकाञ्चनः ।

samaduḥkhasukhaḥ svasthaḥ samaloṣṭāśmakāñcanaḥ

14.24 He who regards alike pleasure and pain, and looks on a lump of earth, a stone and a piece of gold with an equal eye; who is wise and holds praise and blame to be the same;

मानापमानयो स्तुल्यस्तुल्यो मित्रारिपक्षयोः ।
सर्वारम्भपरित्यागी गुणातीतः स उच्यते ॥ १४-२५॥ mānāpamānayostulya stulyo mitrāripakṣayoḥ
sarvārambhaparityāgī guṇātītaḥ sa ucyate || 14.25 ||

14.25 Who is unchanged in honor and dishonor, who treats friend and foe alike, who has abandoned all result-based undertakings - such a man is said to have transcended the modes of nature.

With great clarity the Master tells us what to do. He uses specific terms that cannot be misunderstood or misinterpreted. Kṛṣṇa explains the nature of one who has transcended the three guṇas, one who has gone beyond his natural attributes, one who has completed with his root patterns. He explains what we need to do to become a triguṇa rahita, to become liberated from the influence of the three guṇas.

One who is beyond the three guṇas is unaffected by their play. He is beyond the play of emotions. Whatever happens is right for him. Success and failure mean the same. Friend and foe make no difference. Poverty or richness has no influence. Such an attitude of total detachment requires one thing: complete trust. When we trust that whatever happens is what needs to happen and we accept whatever happens as it arises, we are totally detached. Then whatever happens will be right. Such trust can only come from surrender.

When we are one with Existence, one with nature, nothing affects us. If we trust nature, nature looks after us. We create pain and pleasure through association with powerlessness, through conditioning. We create greed and fear through association. Our root patterns, our conditioned muscle memories and bio-memories, create pain and pleasure.

Light and darkness, good and bad, right and wrong are based on root patterns. Our inadequate cognitions, the civilized education and refinement tells us that a person dressed in a particular manner is acceptable in society and another dressed differently is not. No scripture ever said that one person is inferior to another. All scriptures affirm that every human being is a spiritual being; all of us carry the seed of divinity in us.

When you complete with everything, animate or inanimate, you will experience the space of non-duality, advaita. Relationships are nothing but your own extensions. Relationships are not outside; they are just your own extensions. The you extended outside you are your relationships.

Completing with all your extensions, you learn to complete the incomplete you present in the other. Your negative cognitions disappear and from the space of completion, all that one can see is the divinity in others, the space of non-duality, Advaita.

The Divine Expression of Consciousness

मां च योऽव्यभिचारेण भक्तियोगेन सेवते ।

māṃ ca yo'vyabhicāreṇa bhaktiyogena sevate
sa guṇānsamatītyaitān brahmabhūyāya kalpate || 14.26 ||

14.26 One who engages in full devotional service, who does not fall down in any circumstance, at once transcends the modes of material nature and thus comes to the level of Brahman.

ब्रह्मणो हि प्रतिष्ठाहममृतस्याव्ययस्य च ।
शाश्वतस्य च धर्मस्य सुखस्यैकान्तिकस्य च ॥ १४-२७॥
brahmaṇo hi pratiṣṭhāham amṛtasyāvyayasya ca śāśvatasya ca dharmasya sukhasyaikāntikasya ca || 14.27 ||

14.27 And I am the basis of impersonal Brahman, which is the rightful state of ultimate happiness, and which is immortal, imperishable and eternal.

Kṛṣṇa concludes the chapter by saying that the transcendental state beyond the three attributes of nature, the guṇas, is Brahman, the ultimate cosmic consciousness, the ultimate space of completion. He says you reach this through devotion. He says that He is that Brahman, the Source of eternal bliss; brahmaṇo hi pratiṣṭhāham.

brahmaṇo hi pratiṣṭhāham amṛtasyāvyayasya ca | śāśvatasya ca dharmasya sukhasyaikāntikasya ca || 14.27 ||

Kṛṣṇa speaks as Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, the supreme energy and not as Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa, the individual. He is in the expanded consciousness of Brahman, and beyond the three guṇas. He is the Source of the guṇas.

Your Level of Completion Decides

What is the difference between Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa (ultimate consciousness) and Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa (the physical person, the son of Vāsudeva)? In the case of an ordinary human being, even though he has the potential of divinity, he has not realized it. That is the difference between you and an enlightened Master. Both of you are divine to the same extent. Yet you are unaware of your divinity, whereas the enlightened Master is fully aware of it.

In the case of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, He is the Master. Why then the difference? The difference is not to do with Him. It is to do with us. When you complete, complete, and complete, then everything what you read in the Hindu tradition becomes reality. It can be reality. Completion is the bridge to reach the Hindu tradition, to reach extraordinary powers, to experience divine expressions in your life.

Completion is life at every level. The only difference between you and Śrīnivāsan Rāmānujan, the genius mathematician is the level of completion. The only difference between you and Ādī Śaṅkara is the level of completion. The only difference between Arjuna and Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa is the level of completion. With completion you start living with God directly.

The frequency of Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa is not visible to and approachable by mortals. That is why Arjuna had to be given the divine vision to perceive Parabrahma rūpa or viśvarūpa. In order for humans to perceive Him and interact with Him, Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa must become Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa. To a certain extent He must subject Himself to the play of the guṇas. When an enlightened being has merged with the universal energy and incarnates in human form, that Incarnation must have some sattva guṇa infused into him in order to take human form. Within some time, this sattva guṇa also disappears, leaving the being beyond the three guṇas and once again in an enlightened state.

Each enlightened Master, each Incarnation is unique in his expression of the experience as the Divine. Some express experiences and some don't. Our scriptures say that if two enlightened masters say the same thing, one is a fake. The experience is the same, yet the expression is different. Kṛṣṇa is different from Buddha and Śiva. Each has the same theme of compassion, yet the way the compassion is expressed is different. Buddha expressed it as contemplation and Kṛṣṇa as joyous loving completion. So we choose a Master based upon how we vibrate to His expression. If our path is devotion, we gravitate to Kṛṣṇa; He is lovable. If we are the meditative type, we go to Śiva, the Master who teaches in silence.

Surrender out of Completion is Real Surrender

It does not matter who our Master is. What matters is our faith, trust and the attitude or space of surrender. Our Master can be an unenlightened being. If we trust him, we can become enlightened, even though he may not be. What matters more is our attitude and feeling connection based on the level of our completion, our guṇa, and not the Master's state. Even if we worship a stone and surrender to it from a complete inner space, cognizing it to be our ultimate savior, we will be liberated.

When you practice the right reason, right results come. When you practice even the same values with smaller reasons, only the small results come. More than what actions you do, what matters is the space from which the actions are done.

If you do not have the right context, even when you worship a deity or a God, it is useless because even while you pray, if you strengthen the space that you are poor, you are weak, if that gets strengthened more and more, even your prayer will make you weak. Surrendering not even bothering to whom you are surrendering, as a quality of surrendering is Enlightenment.

Humbleness as a fact not as a quality is the right context, the right space. Humbleness as a quality can bring ego, incompletion. 'I am very humble, I am very humble'. Humbleness as an effect of the space of completion, this is the way - 'I am in humbleness without feeling humiliated.' These are different qualities, guṇas.

So, don't even bother to whom you are surrendering. It is the joy of surrender, the celebration of surrender. In Hindu tradition, we can surrender to even a tree or a tulasi plant (holy basil plant). The faith and the surrender help us transcend the nature of all activities. We surrender the result of our actions to that Master, whomsoever He may be, whomsoever It may be. We do everything contemplating that Master and surrender it all at his feet. That attitude of completion alone liberates us. This is what Krsna means by devotion, bhakti-yogena sevate (14.26), which is unfailing in all circumstances. Nothing more is needed. Kṛṣṇa is not talking about the flute-playing, yellow-robed Kṛṣṇa. Anyone that we surrender to totally is Kṛṣṇa and we then fall into Kṛṣṇa consciousness, the consciousness of completion.

ॐ तत्सदिति श्रीमद्भगवद्गीतासूपनिषत्सु ब्रह्मविद्यायां योगशास्त्रे श्रीकृष्णार्जुनसंवादे गुणत्रयविभागयोगो नाम चतुर्दशोऽध्यायः ॥ १४॥

Thus ends the fourteenth chapter named Guṇatraya Vibhāga Yogaḥ, The Yoga of Division of the three Guṇas,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 15
Puruṣottama Yogaḥ

No Questions, Only Doubts

Only Kṛṣṇa speaks in chapter 15 of Bhagavad Gītā. Arjuna does not utter a word. Arjuna's inner space has been silenced. He is in the pure space of listening. As a result, his questions have disappeared. Arjuna, who is Puruṣa, is now established in Upaniṣad, mirroring the super-conscious Supreme Being or Self, Puruṣottama Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

Kṛṣṇa expounds upon who He is and what He is. This chapter is traditionally titled Puruṣottama Yogaḥ, Yoga of the Supreme Being. Kṛṣṇa unveils the reasons why He is Puruṣottama, Supreme amongst beings and explains that what He has imparted to Arjuna is the most profound secret. Kṛṣṇa is convinced that Arjuna is ready to receive the Truth.

Arjuna has settled into his Self. His confusions have disappeared; questions have dissolved due to his cosmic experience in Viśvarūpa Darśan Yogaḥ - having the vision of Kṛṣṇa's cosmic form - and his direct spiritual experience. He has achieved the depth of knowledge and the complete cognition required to intranalyze and radiate whatever Kṛṣṇa has taught him so far. He has achieved the intensity of spiritual experience. He is a new being. He can no more be called Arjuna. He is expressing the power of living with enriching, overflowing with devotion onto Śrī Kṛṣṇa present in everything and everything present in Kṛṣṇa.

With the revelation of Kṛṣṇa's cosmic form, Arjuna has the awareness of his own part in the collective consciousness. This experience of completion has put him in a devotional mood, which is now overflowing as enriching. This devotion is not merely towards Kṛṣṇa, but through Kṛṣṇa, to all of humanity. Only for enriching others, Arjuna speaks and listens on behalf of humanity and not for himself. From now on, everything that Arjuna does is enriching, enriching, enriching his own extension in others. He becomes the cause for creating the ultimate reality for humanity in the cosmic play of the complete Incarnation, Pūrṇavātar Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

Arjuna doesn't have any more intellectual questions. He has reached a point where he is totally ready to receive and mirror Kṛṣṇa. He has moved forward from a state of thoughtfulness, where he is confused, incomplete and full of questions, to a no-mind state of completion where questions disappear.

Doubts Are Necessary

Masters convey their experience. It is an energy transmission that occurs. To convey an experience in words denies the experience. Once verbalized, the experience loses meaning. Kṛṣṇa is different. He is engaged in a dialogue with Arjuna for the benefit of enriching mankind to resolve those conflicts and doubts that arise in all humans. After seeing Kṛṣṇa's cosmic form, Arjuna's questions are about the nature of the divine Kṛṣṇa and how to approach Him. Kṛṣṇa now explains to him what He is and how to reach Him.

Doubt means a person is ready to receive the Master, ready to live the Master, ready to express and radiate the Master. Whatever word comes out of the Master completes the doubt. Doubt makes the Master express himself. Questions make the Master close himself.

Man cannot handle too much truth. He can handle half-truths. Beyond that, truth starts transforming him. He feels that the ground he is standing on is slipping away. None of us wants to know the truth. If truth is given honestly, only a few will be willing to listen. People become frightened the moment honest truths are given. So, they question the truth. We feel that we cannot afford to be truthful in verbal language as well as body language. The truth straightaway gives us Enlightenment. It transforms us. The moment someone authentically intranalyzes or catches a single dimension of truth, it does wonders.

If we scan our whole day, we will find it is filled with lies and inauthenticities. Our smiles are false. When we smile, we don't want the other person to know what is in our mind; so we don't look into each other's eyes. Why? We fear that the other person will read our mind and our inauthenticity will be exposed to them. However, nothing can be hidden in our eyes. Eyes are the doorway to the soul. Straightaway we see the being in another person's eyes.

Truth Shines by Itself

Truth endures logical questions and arguments. It withstands the test of logical analysis. If someone needs to verify whether something is pure gold, we must put it in acid to test it. An acid test is required to test the truth of gold. In the same manner, if we wish to know whether something is pure truth, we must put it to an acid test of logical analysis. Our inauthenticity will simply burn out. Our logic will simply fall and fail. If it is the ultimate Truth, if it is authentic, it must stand the test of logical analysis and prove itself.

If the disciple is in the questioning mood, the Master must prove his words. He must be prepared to go through the acid tests demanded by the questioning disciple. It is a big load. If the disciple is in doubt, the Master will open up with the truth. He will not cover the truth with words. He will not play with words. The naked truth will be told directly. Any truth can be served and explained to a mind with doubt. To a questioning mind, nothing can be explained.

The disciple's mood decides whether the Master's words will be advice or a powerful transformation technique. If the disciple is completely feeling connected, the Master can enrich him. The Master need not even be enlightened.

If the disciple is in a receptive mood of listening with integrity, even casual words of the Master can be techniques for his growth; it will enrich him. Even if the master is unenlightened or if the master has no belief or experience of his own words, the disciple's authentic belief in the possibility surmounts any obstacle.

Doubt and faith are two sides of the same coin. We cannot have faith without doubt. As doubt is cleared, a greater faith, the courage of authenticity develops. Then, the next level of doubt occurs. A new layer of understanding is revealed. Ultimately, the disciple transcends doubt and faith. He reaches the truth. Until such time, it is normal to have recurring doubt and faith.

Now, Arjuna has come to an understanding. Because of his firsthand spiritual experience, he has come to the level of doubt. No more questions. He does not ask what is beneficial for him. Those self-serving calculations have gone. No more questions like kim tad brahma kimadhyātmaṁ kim karma puruṣottama (8.1) - What is Brahman? Which is duty? etc. He was playing with words then. Now everything has disappeared. In the first chapter, Kṛṣṇa was totally silent.

Arjuna spoke at length. He quoted on righteousness and from ancient scriptures. In this chapter, Arjuna is completely silent.

This is the problem faced by every Master descending on planet Earth. An innocent disciple is better than an ignorant disciple.

Unlearn to Learn

All Masters descending on planet Earth bring the same śāstra, the knowledge that is written down. But they also bring the life that is infused in this knowledge. No book can give the ultimate Truth. The problem is that some people take books and their intellect as the ultimate authority. Instead of living the truth with integrity and authenticity, they take books as authority. They demand proof for the masters' words based on books and scriptures they have read.

The main problem is the meaning of words. For example, if a Master utters the word 'ātman,' he says it from the Sanskrit dictionary. But we look for 'ātman' in our own Oxford dictionary. Naturally the problem starts. When we are in the presence of a living Master, we can immediately seek clarification and can complete with doubts. A Master knows by seeing our faces and our inner space that we are unable to cognize. Never giving up on us, he explains further till things fit together and we experience completion. If our search is real, if it is an urge, we will be seeking a living Master. On the other hand, if our search is an entertainment, just passing time, we feel comfortable with books and old Masters' photographs. If our search is intense, we feel deeply connected with a living Master.

Facts and truth do not always go together. Facts are one-dimensional, relating only to time, whereas the truth is space and time; it is multidimensional. Here Arjuna has come to a level of maturity that is no longer satisfied with factual information. His quest is for truth. He has no more questions, only doubts. Doubts are great. They are clear green signals that the disciple is ready to receive and live the Master. If the disciple is not in a receptive state, he is even unable to recognize his Guru. Questions arise from ego. Doubts arise from consciousness.

Arjuna did everything. In the second chapter, when Kṛṣṇa spoke about ātma, saying: nainaṁ chindanti śastrāṇi nainaṁ dahati pāvakaḥ (2.23) - The soul cannot be touched by any weapon or be burned by fire - Arjuna immediately asks: How will an enlightened man speak? Why? Why did he ask that question? It was out of pure ego, to judge Kṛṣṇa, to see whether Kṛṣṇa was enlightened. Arjuna was checking the authority of the Master. It started with violence, with questions.

Gradually, by chapter 9, when Kṛṣṇa revealed Rājavidyā Rāja Guhyaṁ Yogaḥ, royal knowledge and royal secret, that Existence is intelligence, that the cosmic energy is intelligence, Arjuna's questions very slowly settle down, and intelligence happened. In chapter 10, with Vibhūti Yogaḥ, divine manifestation, devotion started flowering. When he heard the glory of Kṛṣṇa, love started flowering in him. In Chapter 11, with Viśvarūpa Darśan Yogaḥ, Arjuna had the experience. Now all questions are over. Arjuna experienced the ultimate consciousness.

Here, Arjuna has finished everything. His calculations are over. He has come down to the level of doubts. With questions, the tone is different. Questions demand proof from the Master. Doubts are not like that. They are just asking for some tips, tips for enriching your own self in others. Arjuna has come to the level of complete acceptance of the Master. That is why, throughout this chapter, Arjuna is silent. He is ready to mirror the Master. He is now soaked in devotion, ready to powerfully live and blissfully radiate everything transmitted to him.

Journey Into the Causal Body

15.1 Bhagavān says: It is said that there is an imperishable banyan tree whose roots are on the outside; leaves and branches are under the earth. The leaves are said to be the Hindu hymns. He who knows this tree knows the Vedas.

अधश्चोर्ध्वं प्रसृतास्तस्य शाखा गुणप्रवृद्धा विषयप्रवालाः ।

15.2 The branches of this tree extend below and above the earth, nourished by the three human attributes, guṇas. Its buds are the sense objects. This tree also has roots going down and these are bound to the resultant actions of humans.

Kṛṣṇa refers to the causal body as the banyan tree. This is a continuation of the previous chapter. Chapters 14 to 17 are connected discourses. In chapter 14, Guṇatraya Vibhāga Yogaḥ, yoga of the division of the three guṇa (attributes), Kṛṣṇa speaks about the first four layers of our being. In this chapter, Puruṣottama Yogaḥ, yoga of the Supreme Being, He refers to the fifth layer.

The totality of the seven layers is our body-mind-spirit system. The second layer is the prāṇic body, the body that controls air movements inside our physical body. In the previous chapter, Kṛṣṇa explains that this prāṇic layer is filled with desires. He further explains how we create conflicting desires and suffer with rajas (restlessness) and forced into tamas (inactivity or depression).

The fifth layer is the causal body. It is where all saṁskāras, our root patterns, are stored in seed form. Every night we enter the causal body in deep sleep. We take saṁskāras out from this layer and create the world.

In this chapter, Kṛṣṇa reveals the secrets of this causal layer. In the previous chapter, Kṛṣṇa explained how to use the power of desire energy with the power of thinking and words. Desire is an energy. That energy is abused by creating self-conflicting desires and self-doubting patterns, which put us into restlessness. If we don't complete with our self-doubts (ātma sandeḥ), we fall into depression, into self-revenge (ātma droha). He gave techniques to clear self-conflicting desires.

The Seed of Patterns

Our own desires, born out of our mūla vāsanās, the root patterns, carry their own energy for fulfillment, as they are the basic needs and purpose with which we were born.

The Universe blesses us with the power to meet all our real needs. When we are born on this planet we are sent with all that we need. However, once here, we accumulate other desires. Because of our root patterns, these desires are the wants that we borrow from others by comparing, copying and envying others. Rāmaṇa Maharishi says, 'This universe can fulfill the needs of all its inhabitants; but it cannot fulfill the wants of even a single person.'

When desires are borrowed, when they are based on coveting other people's belongings, there will be a serious conflict between our wants and needs. Fulfillment of our needs gives happiness, true joy, and completion. That is why a poor man eats his simple meal of roti and dal (bread and curry) with such gusto. Desires are caused by saṁskāras, root thought patterns or bio-memories of experiences and sense perceptions.

Saṁskāras are stored in our unconscious mind layer. Root thought patterns, saṁskāras, drive our actions. The Bṛhadaranyaka Upaniṣad says, 'We are our desires. Desires shape our will. Our will shapes our actions. Actions make us what we are.'

Now, Kṛṣṇa moves on to the next layer, where saṁskāras are stored in the seed form. Even if we move beyond the three layers of desire, restlessness and depression, these root patterns, saṁskāras in seed form, called bīja saṁskāra, (bīja meaning seed) need to be cleared and completed. Kṛṣṇa speaks of techniques to destroy these bīja saṁskāras. These may not express themselves in us right now. Yet if they are allowed to be there in seed form, at one time or another, they will exploit us.

In an office, some files are on the table, some are in the archives, while others are in the safety vault. The previous three layers are like the office table and archived material. This causal layer is the office safety vault. The next two layers are the external vaults. In the previous chapter, Kṛṣṇa explains techniques to clear the table. Now He gives techniques to empty the office safety vault.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'The roots of the tree are on the outside; the branches are inside.' From the causal body, if the roots are taken to be outside, it should be in the earlier three layers ending with the physical body. In a tree, the roots feed nutrients to the tree. The tree takes water and minerals through the roots. The roots decide the condition and growth of a tree. That is why Kṛṣṇa says the roots of the tree are in the physical body. The tree of saṁskāra is watered by the five senses of the physical body and our actions. The saṁskāras in seed form in the causal body are formed and watered by the five senses of the physical body.

Your Words are Hindu Hymns

Kṛṣṇa further says that the leaves are the Hindu hymns - chandāṁsi yasya parṇani - and one who knows the tree is knower of the Vedas - yas taṁ veda sa veda-vit. He says saṁskāras are the Hindu hymns, the mantras. Mantras are defined as manasasya sthiraha iti mantraḥ, whatever controls or stabilizes the mind, or manaḥ trāyate iti mantraḥ, that which reclaims and completes the life of man.

śri bhagavān uvāca

ūrdhvamūlam adhaḥśākhaṁ aśvatthaṁ prāhur avyayam | chandāṁsi yasya parṇāni yas taṁ veda sa veda-vit || 15.1 ||

Words that are settled in our inner space form the bone structure of our life. Words expressed or coming out when we are alone, are the root patterns or saṁskāras printed in the causal body. Our lives revolve around them. If we give conflicting, contradictory words, the bone structure of our life will be a circle put on a square and rectangle - all crooked perversions. So, if you start building your life on it, how will it be? Crooked, perverted, incomplete, and useless.

If you give a word, be very clear that you have started building your life. You have to fulfill it. It is your life. Dropping the word and completing is like pulling down the structure and rebuilding it. How many times do you pull down the structure and rebuild?

Words are double-edged swords. When we lack integrity, whatever words we use to offend others settle in our inner self. They emerge whenever they find a chance to push out of our inner self. No man is intelligent enough to use harsh words on others and smooth words inside. It is an unconscious action. That is why, in ancient Hindu society, the usage of harsh words was controlled by various customs.

Our mind is constantly occupied in inner chatter. Eventually we express part of this chatter in words. Part of it we suppress for fear of societal repercussions. We do not express what we fear would hurt others or what might be unacceptable to others. All these words settle deep inside our maṇipūraka cakra, the navel energy center, which is the seat of words. Words that are harsh, whether expressed externally or internally, settle down within us. What goes out also goes in. These settle within our navel energy center. Both expressed and unexpressed words build our bank of root thought patterns, saṁskāras.

If you have given a word, it just has to be lived. Word is mantra. Brahma created the world out of the word. The integrity of Viṣṇu is the lotus from whose navel creation or Brahma happens; and the tongue of Brahma is the word 'Veda', out of which the world happens. Understand, integrity should be the root foundation from which the lotus of the word blooms. Out of that word, creation happens. Creation happens out of the word from integrity. When a person with integrity says, 'Let there be a huge organization here,' it happens just like that.

Understand, when your words are rooted in integrity, the word is Brahma. If it is rooted in Viṣṇu or integrity, it just becomes reality. Integrity is capable of maintaining creation. Viṣṇu maintains creation. Creation is possible only when you are established in the state of integrity and utter your words. When you utter your words from the space of integrity, creation is possible, creation happens.

Life is built on commitments. If you do not have respect for your commitments, your commitments also will not have respect for you. If you are integrated to your commitment, your commitment can make it into reality. Even in your day-to-day life, if you are integrated to your integrity, your integrity will be integrated to you.

One who understands this can influence other people through his thoughts and words, perhaps more effectively than through his actions. Even we do not know how our thoughts and words influence and affect other people; they may not be as focused and effective, but they will still affect others and us.

For those in business and corporate life, communication is the key to success. Communication is not about our facility with language. It is not about the accent we cultivate or how fluently we speak. Communication is expressing and living what we feel with integrity and authenticity. If our feelings and thoughts are negative, when we lack taking the responsibility to be integrated, however much we try to hide these, our words or body language reveal the inner inauthentic feelings and motives.

However, if we constantly complete with the negative words that we use towards ourselves and others to express our feelings, we will get rooted in integrity - Viṣṇu, the space of positivity. From this positive space, we will express the power of words and Brahma, creation happens. With completion the creation of space happens for whatever we want to make as reality.

The Transient and The Permanent

Kṛṣṇa further states, 'One who knows this tree is the knower of the Vedas, yas taṁ veda sa veda-vit (15.1).' He says one who has the knowledge that the root patterns or saṁskāras, which constitute the causal body, are the result of the five senses, knows the Vedas or has the knowledge of life's guiding force.

The water a tree receives through its roots mainly decides the condition of the tree. If good water and manure are available, the tree flourishes. The leaves will be green. If poison is poured on it, the tree sheds its leaves and slowly dies.

This tree of saṁskāras, which is in the causal body, lives mainly due to the five senses. Kṛṣṇa uses the word aśvattha which also means that which is transient, that which is not today as it was yesterday and which will not be tomorrow as it is today. It refers to material life where nothing is what it seems to be. Everything is temporary.

Life, as people say, is not unreal. If it were truly unreal, we would not be able to experience it. The fact that we experience material life and seem to enjoy it, even if temporarily, means it is real. It is unreal to the extent that whatever we experience is transient and impermanent. Unreal does not mean nonexistent. If something is nonexistent, we cannot perceive it or experience it, even temporarily.

Even a dream is real. We say dreams are unreal, but we cannot deny that we experience dreams. However, it is a fact that we do not have self-awareness while dreaming. Once we become aware, we wake up from the dream. It has never happened that a lion or a murderer chasing a person has caught that person in a dream. As soon as we are threatened, as soon as we become aware of ourselves, we wake up and the dream ends.

Dreams are not unreal in the sense that they are nonexistent; they are unreal to the extent that we are unaware. In the same manner, sages tell us that we are unaware even when we are awake. 'Jāgrat, jāgrat,' they say, 'wake up, wake up.' They do not ask us to wake up from sleep. They ask us to wake up from our unaware wakefulness into an aware wakefulness.

Aśvattha signifies this state of unawareness. To understand this unawareness produced by our senses and directed by our root patterns, saṁskāras, is to gain knowledge, the Vedas. Kṛṣṇa goes on to explain more about this state of unawareness.

Kṛṣṇa says the roots go upwards as well as downwards. He says the leaves of the tree are decided by the tricks of the five senses and the resultant action of mankind. The roots are not only in the physical body, but also in the action. Kṛṣṇa says the tree is deeply rooted because the action of the entire mankind is always result-oriented. It is always guided by greed and fear.

The aśvattha tree, the banyan tree, is like a human body. Its roots, like in a human being, are above, like our hair. The hair is said to be a channel to draw in cosmic energy. Our limbs, hands and legs are like branches of the banyan tree. The human system is truly upside down.

Kṛṣṇa gives a beautiful tip to be complete with the root patterns, saṁskāras. If we are not guided by greed and fear patterns, if our actions are not result-oriented, no root patterns will be created. If you enrich selflessly for at least half an hour a day, it will do you a lot of good. It will create the space of completion in you.

While enriching others and yourself, don't plan anything. Don't even plan to have a group of volunteers do the enriching service. Just do any work that you can do. It may seem silly and a waste of time. But at a later date, this time alone will be felt as purposeful and complete. If your enriching service is fueled by the patterns of greed or fear, you may end up in a mess and be a nuisance to others, too. You need to know, if you are enriching with a vested interest, you will give up on people. Don't have any vested interest. Enrich just for the sake of enriching.

We have a very wrong idea, 'First, let me experience; then I will enrich.' It is like, 'First let me get cured; then I will take medicine.' Understand, enriching is the cure. Enriching is the experience. Enriching is tapas. It is enriching which unclutches you from your past incompletions. It is enriching which distances you from your past incompletions. It is enriching which makes you grow. If a child tries to unclutch from a toy car, he will be struggling. But if he just grows, the toy will automatically drop him. Enriching makes you just grow to the next level of you.

Enrich and Be Free from Kārmic Cycle

Don't plan anything. Just do enriching service anywhere. Then the enriching you do will infuse enormous power into your being. Enriching is the power of your being.

Understand this truth: Whenever life energy expands in you, it happens only through enriching. Whenever you enrich, expansion in the life energy happens; not otherwise. Listen, even your breathing can be enriching, but real enriching does not stop just by breathing. Real enriching means you transmitting the highest possible consciousness to others.

Real enriching is helping everyone, making everyone live enlightenment. Without giving up on people, day in and day out sit and continue to enrich people. If you have wealth, use the wealth to enrich everyone to live enlightenment. If you have intelligence, use intelligence to enrich everyone to live enlightened life. If you have an orating capability, use your orating capability to enrich everyone to live enlightened life.

Bhagavān says, 'karmānubandhīni manuṣya loke.' All our actions revolve around results. So, at least in enriching, don't think of dollars or fame. Don't plan to impress. Don't plan to make your presence felt. Do the work for its own sake.

Many times you enrich others as a selfish motive. You think, 'If I enrich, I may get this, this, this back.' Do not enrich with the small purpose. The right and complete reason for enriching is, because everyone is part of you, enriching every being is nothing but enriching some part of you. Enrich others. Anything you see is extension of you. Anything or anybody you experience is extension of you. So, when you enrich them, parts of you are enriched. When they feel completion, part of you will become complete.

Mostly we do charitable work based on notions of earning brownie points that will do us good in our afterlife, whether we believe in rebirth or not. Or we would like to see ourselves in the media and feel good. It fulfills our need for attention either in this world or in another world after death.When you work, whether it is charitable as you and society define it, or commercial, as long you do it with no expectation of results, just enriching because others are your very own extension, your actions will be selfless. These actions are not motivated by fear and greed patterns. They will not result in the hangover of root patterns, saṁskāras.

When you enrich, you can define the process of your actions and not the results. When a defined process is followed, results naturally follow. If we follow the right path with the right reason, we reach the right destination. It takes courage of authenticity to create the space of possibility and implement this. It takes courage of your being to say that we will work only to enrich without expecting rewards. It takes a truly complete person to cognize the right reason for enriching; that what is important is 'doing' and not 'doership' and that status is not as important as the state of doing.

If we are able to create this right space of enriching, we will find a true liberation within ourselves. We will experience the power of living, constantly expanding. A load will be lifted from our shoulders. The anxiety of constantly looking over our shoulder to peep into the future will be gone. We look at past results to define what needs to be done for the future.

All what needs to be done is being in the space of completion in the present, define an enriching path in everything we do and take responsibility that the 'doing' happens with integrity and authenticity. If this is done with awareness, results will follow. Real enriching is making people live enlightenment. Take up this as a life. You will see all kinds of miracles happening in your life.

The Tree Cutting Down

न रूपमस्येह तथोपलभ्यते नान्तो न चादिर्न च सम्प्रतिष्ठा ।

aśvatthamenaṃ suvirūḍhamūlaṃ asaṅgaśastreṇa dṛḍhena chittvā || 15.3 ||

15.3 The real form of this tree cannot be perceived. No one can understand where it ends, where it begins, or where its foundation is. But with determination one must cut down this strongly rooted tree with the weapon of detachment.

ततः पदं तत्परिमार्गितव्यं यस्मिन्गता न निवर्तन्ति भूयः ।
तमेव चाद्यं पुरुषं प्रपद्ये । यतः प्रवृत्तिः प्रसृता पुराणी ॥ १५-४॥

tataḥ padaṃ tatparimārgitavyaṃ yasmingatā na nivartanti bhūyaḥ tameva cādyaṃ puruṣaṃ prapadye yataḥ pravṛttiḥ prasṛtā purāṇī || 15.4 ||

15.4 One must then seek that place from which having gone, one never returns, and surrender to the supreme Being from whom all activities started in ancient times.

Kṛṣṇa speaks further about the causal body where saṁskāras are stored. He is an extraordinary scientist. A scientist can honestly search for the truth; he can give up his own faith and belief for the cause of this search and is courageous enough to express the secrets, which he discovers step-by-step.

We see these qualities in Kṛṣṇa. He is authentic in His expression or search. He is ready to give up yesterday's truth for today's updated intelligence.

Kṛṣṇa continuously updates Himself. Lastly, He is courageous to open up the secrets in public. He is not worried about copyright and intellectual property rights. The ancient Hindu society in Bharat believed that knowledge was free. The idea of copyright did not exist. Kṛṣṇa is courageous enough to open up all the secrets.

Bhagavān beautifully says, 'narūpamasyeha tathopalabhyate (15.3).' No one can perceive the real form of this tree. No one can understand where it begins, where it ends or where its foundation is. However, with determination one should cut down this tree with the weapon of strong will and detachment, asaṇga śastreṇa dṛdhena chittvā (15.3).

Noone can see what one has stored in one's causal body. It is like Pandora's Box. All the saṁskāras stored in the causal layer reveal themselves one by one. When we erase four of them, ten will surface. What is inside nobody knows. Only one thing is possible. All the saṁskāras can be cut by a strong will of detachment. With a strong will, with intelligence, the entire causal layer can be completed.

People ask the Master to show them how to get rid of root patterns, saṁskāras. Only strong will and intelligence can do that. Do we ask the Master's help to take our hands out of the fire? No! We know fire burns. So, we withdraw our hands immediately. We ask the Master only because the understanding is not there.

If the understanding is present, right action follows. If right action does not happen, be very clear that the understanding has not happened. Similarly, root patterns are dangerous. All that is needed is intelligence and a strong will of detachment.

Kṛṣṇa explains that after cutting the tree of root patterns, surrender to the space of eternal silence, from where there is no coming back, tam eva cādyaṁ puruṣaṁ prapadye (15.4). This is the space in which the whole of Existence is established.

One's identity is the collection of one's root patterns, saṁskāras, past bio-memories and incomplete desires that are stored in the unconscious mind. This is in the causal layer of our energy. Through deep and focused meditation, we can access this unconscious causal layer and dissolve the saṁskāras stored here. Once done, we no longer return as the same person. We are free of saṁskāras and liberated.

The spirit that leaves the body goes through a comatose state when it passes through this causal body layer. As long as the spirit has not crossed this layer, it can return to the body. This is the power of saṁskāras. These bio-memories or desires can pull the spirit back. That is why sometimes after many years in a coma, people return to consciousness. They are pulled back by unfulfilled desires. However, once the spirit crosses the causal layer, it cannot return to the body. It must move on to the next layer, the cosmic layer.

Once we access this point of dissolution of saṁskāras and move on to the cosmic layer, we no longer operate unconsciously at the behest of our stored bio-memories. We move into an intuitive state of completion, as opposed to our earlier instinctive state of incompletion. We are no longer in an ignorant wakeful state, but in the truly awakened state of consciousness. Bringing awareness into the unconscious through the super-conscious meditative route of completion is the only correct way to dissolve accumulated saṁskāras.

Completion And Creation Techniques

15.5 Those who are free from pride, delusion, and attachment, those who dwell in the Self, who are complete with lust, who are free from the dualities of joy and sorrow, who are not confused, and who know how to surrender to the supreme person, attain the eternal consciousness.

15.6 That supreme space of eternal consciousness, My consciousness, is not illuminated by the Sun or the Moon, or by fire. Those who enter that space never return to this material world.

Kṛṣṇa explains the same truth again at a deeper level. He had expressed the same idea in earlier chapters. But Arjuna was unable to understand. At that time, Arjuna was in the questioning mood. In the questioning mood, we miss the whole subject and are busy preparing questions. Now that mood has gone and there are only doubts, no questions.

Beyond Attachment, The Eternal Consciousness

Nirmāna mohā jita saṇga dośa adhyātma nityā vinivṛtta kāmāḥ | dvandair vimukhtāḥ sukha duḥka saṁjñair gacchanty amūḍhāḥ padam avayayaṁ tat || 15.5 ||

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'Those who are free from pride, delusion, and attachment, those who dwell in the Self, who are complete with lust, who are free from the dualities of joy and sorrow, who are not confused, and who know how to surrender to the Supreme Person, attain the eternal consciousness.'

He does not say who have 'renounced' lust. No, because renunciation won't do. Vairāgya means beyond attachment and detachment. Rāga means attachment. Arāga means detachment. Virāga or vairāgya means beyond attachment and detachment. It is non-attachment.

Until the age of seven, we are attached to toys. By age eight or nine we are forced to be detached from these. By twenty, most people are complete with toys, beyond attachment or detachment to children's toys. With detachment, we might have renounced it externally. But the inner urge for it prevails.

That is why Kṛṣṇa uses fitting words: vinivṛtta-kāmāḥ, those who are 'complete' with lust. Nivṛitti is the completion you carry that leads to more and more completion. In this state, we know what we can afford. We know it is there at our disposal. We don't possess anything, we don't own anything, but everything is at our disposal. We can use it or drop it based on the need. Life is also like a toy. If this is fully understood, you will live like a king, not an ordinary materialistic king, but an enlightened king, a Rājaṛṣi. This is a tattva (principle). This is not for understanding. This is to be meditated upon. On meditating upon this technique, these characteristics will start flowering in you and give you a clear-cut idea about the causal body.

Earlier, Kṛṣṇa explained ways to erase and complete with our root thought patterns, saṁskāras. Now He speaks on the creation of a proper layer. It is about re-programming your causal layer with the space of completion.

Programming the Causal Layer

Completion and creation of space is the essence of the Hindu tradition - using your ātma jñāna, using your conscious energy, using your peak possibility and making it into reality, making it into life.

Kṛṣṇa gives the essence of the most secret science, the science of completion and creation of space. He gives the technique for creation of the causal body. Kṛṣṇa's words are mantras. Actually Kṛṣṇa uses the same words again. Not only words and expressions, He uses the same letters again. Earlier He used these words as advice. Now He uses same words as programming techniques for completion and creation.

This chapter is about programming our causal layer; completing our root patterns, saṁskāras. This program creates the space in our causal layer to make our conscious energy into our reality; for life to happen in its peak energy.

As long as Arjuna was in the questioning mood, these same words were spelt out as advice. When he enters into the mood of doubts, he receives the same words as techniques. When the disciple is in a questioning mood, the Master's words will be taken as advice. Only when the disciple stops questioning and starts listening, these same words will be techniques. With advice, you need keys to open the door. Techniques are the keys themselves. They are ready to open the door.

Arjuna receives the gist of earlier chapters. He receives the juice in this chapter. In many monasteries, this chapter is chanted before every meal. This 15th chapter must be chanted before meals, since this chapter is a programming tool of the inner space. The mere words of this chapter can do wonders in reprogramming your causal layer with the space of completion and creation.

It takes less than five minutes to chant it. Anybody can do it. Don't worry about the meaning. If you understand the meaning, it is good. Yet, it is highly useful even if chanted without understanding. Repeating these words can program your causal layer with the power of completion and creation. Especially, when you chant them in a mood of surrender, with due respect to the Master, it directly touches the causal layer.

Arjuna is completely in a receiving mood. He is fully connected to the Master. If the disciple is completely feeling connected to the Master, Existence helps him through the Master. Arjuna needs no explanations, no logic. He is ready to live the Master.

Hence, Kṛṣṇa utters the following words to program the causal layer. He gives techniques to create the space of completion and creation in Arjuna.

He says: 'Those who are free from pride, delusion, and attachment, those who dwell in the Self, who are complete with lust, who are free from the dualities of joy and sorrow, who are not confused, and who know how to surrender to the Supreme Person, attain eternal consciousness.'

Lust is difficult for a man to shed. Even the greatest of sages have succumbed to lust. Lust is of the body and as long as body consciousness remains, lust will stay. Only a person who has gone beyond body consciousness can drop lust.

Suppressing lust externally and not indulging in sex does not and will not make one enlightened. It only turns one insane. Celibacy of the body, without eliminating the fantasies of the mind, creates greater suffering than indulging in lust and sex. Enlightenment helps one transcend lust and sex by transcending the senses and attaining a no-mind state.

An enlightened Master transcends sex. He is genderless. He becomes ardhanārīśvara, a man-woman, a person who expresses both traditionally male and female qualities or attributes. One key attribute of enlightenment is genderlessness.

Kṛṣṇa is direct. He does not believe in giving brain candy to keep you happy. He is brutally direct. He says, 'He who has conquered lust.' Lust is a primal emotion provided by nature for continuation of the species. Going beyond lust, conquering by completing with lust, is the first major step in realizing super-consciousness.

Human beings are forever confused between love and lust. They think only animals are lustful. Actually, only animals are capable of pure lust when they mate. Humans, with their rationalization, can neither be lustful nor loving. So, they are forever in the twilight zone, dissatisfied and unfulfilled.

In ancient times, lust and sex left the householder around the age of forty because they had enjoyed these fully. When a desire is fully experienced it leaves your system. Now marital relationship has become a business for security or material benefits. You may live in the same home, but not in a homely way. You have to remove the imagination and dreams from your lust, both about your partner's body and your own body.

Add friendliness to love. As of now, our love and lust are deep-rooted violence, to own the other person while he or she resists. It's a war. Instead, add friendliness to relationships. Welcome the partner as he or she is; do not just accept him or her. Welcome and accept the mind, body and being as it is.

Many of us are ashamed of our body. We hate it. All body pains and chronic skin diseases arise out of low self-esteem and disrespect to our body. We would like to be someone else. We would like to shape our body and dress like someone else. We stop staying within the boundary of our own skin and fantasize about being someone else.

Whenever we hear our name we think of our face, not our whole body, because we are not comfortable with our body. When we do not accept ourselves fully and copy someone else artificially, we can be beautiful at best, but never graceful. Grace comes from within.

For the next few days, watch your body with love. Feel comfortable. Our body oozes bliss all the time. Yet we feel only the pain. If we are relaxed with our body, our mind will not wander. Usually, when we are at home, our mind is in the office and when we are working, we wish we were at a party. Where our body is, our mind will not be.

Drop your imagination and dreams, and be complete. Add friendliness towards yourself and others, towards their body, mind and being. Carry words that heal others. Carry your body in a way that heals others. Carry friendliness with you always. This is a spiritual process. Carry the grace and goodwill of Lakṣmi instead of observing fasts and pūjā.

The first time you approach others with friendliness, they may not receive you openly because of your past inauthentic behavior. Persist and persevere. Complete with the idea of impossibility. Complete with your self-doubt. Stand up powerfully. Don't give up on you and others. Don't stop even if others do not reciprocate. Carry on till others feel enriched and reciprocate. Complete. Create the space of friendliness towards yourself and others and persevere. Lust will turn to love. Your being will be in eternal bliss.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'That supreme space of eternal consciousness, My consciousness, is not illuminated by the sun or the moon, or by fire. Those who enter that space never return to this material world.'

na tad bhāsayate sūryo na śaśāṅko na pāvakaḥ | yad gatvā na nivartante tad dhāma paramaṁ mama || 15.6 ||

These words are not advice. They are for contemplation. Advice is the only thing everybody gives and nobody takes. Kṛṣṇa gives these words to program our causal layer with completion. These are words to contemplate, to meditate upon. They are the hymns to be meditated upon.

The causal layer of energy is the passage through which the spirit passes on its last leg before it leaves the material world. When the spirit is stuck in this causal layer, one is in coma. One can be stuck in this layer for a long time.

Those who go past the causal layer, this layer of energetic darkness, where neither the sun nor the moon shines, nor fire warms, progress onwards to the cosmic layer and then to the nirvanic layer, which signifies true liberation.

One can meditate upon this technique, upon this truth expounded by Kṛṣṇa, through the darkness meditation which focuses on darkness, liberates one from the fear of death and the fear of loss of identity that causes the fear of death.

Death is not an option. Death of the body is certain. Separation of the spirit from the body-mind is painful. Vivekananda says it is like a thousand scorpions stinging at once.

At death the spirit leaves the body shell and merges into infinite energy. It then reappears in another shell, another body. It is like drawing circles on a whiteboard. The background is universal energy and the perimeters of the circles drawn are the bodies that envelop the individual spirit. These circles separate individual spirit or self from universal energy or Self.

When we erase these circles with the process of completion, the whiteness within the circles merges into the whiteness of the background. Individual self merges with universal Self. When the spirit is such that it has completed and created the space beyond attachment and lust and is constantly focused on the Self, then there is no return for that spirit into another body-mind complex. Else it returns.

Kṛṣṇa points out that the death of the body is a certainty, however, the death of the spirit is impossible. The spirit lives on. When the spirit is evolved it doesn't revert to a mental setup and root pattern that it transcended in the previous birth.

Mind is the Conditioning

ममैवांशो जीवलोके जीवभूतः सनातनः ।
मनःषष्ठानीन्द्रियाणि प्रकृतिस्थानि कर्षति ॥ १५-७॥

mamaivāṃśo jīvaloke jīvabhūtaḥ sanātanaḥ
manaḥṣaṣṭhānīndriyāṇi prakṛtisthāni karṣati || 15.7 ||

15.7 The living entities in this conditioned material world are a portion of My eternal Self. In this conditioned material world they are attracted by the six senses, which include the mind, dwelling in prakṛti, the active energy principle.

शरीरं यदवाप्नोति यच्चाप्युत्क्रामतीश्वरः ।
गृहीत्वैतानि संयाति वायुर्गन्धानिवाशयात् ॥ १५-८॥ śarīraṃ yadavāpnoti yaccāpyutkrāmatīśvaraḥ
gṛhītvaitāni saṃyāti vāyurgandhānivāśayāt || 15.8 ||

15.8 The spirit in the body-mind living in this material world moves from one body to another carrying these just as wind carries fragrance.

Jīva bhūtaḥ - conditioned living entity, 'conditioning' is the new word that Kṛṣṇa uses here. Recent research tells us that human beings walk on two legs due to conditioning. Everything we consider as human nature is nothing but conditioning.

mamaivāṁśo jīva loke jīva bhūtaḥ sanātanaḥ | manaḥ ṣaṣthānīndriyāṇi prakṛti sthāni karṣati || 15.7 ||

Here Kṛṣṇa says, 'conditioned world, jīva-loke'. Everything is conditioning. Right and wrong, honor and dishonor, are all conditioning, all are patterns. We think of honor or dishonor because we are taught that way.

We are conditioned. If a group of people give us a certificate and clap their hands, we take it as an honor. That is the way we are taught. But never judge yourself by others' applause. This idea of honor drives many people mad. Never accept the judgment of the crowd.

Consciousness Carries the Mind

Here Kṛṣṇa gives these meditation hymns to re-program your causal layer for completion of your saṁskāras and creation of space. After crossing the three layers and going beyond the causal layer, you enter a space where you are free from conditioning. This is the space of completion and creation. May you be free from all conditioning.

Kṛṣṇa says: 'They are attracted by the six senses that include the mind - manaḥ ṣaṣthānīndriyāṇi prakṛti sthāni karṣati (15.7).'

There are five physical senses and the sixth sense is the mind, ṣaṣthānīndriyāṇi. The mind jumps around. If the mind can be handled, all the other five can be handled.

Enlightenment is the removal of root thought patterns, saṁskāras and the dissolution of conditioning. We return to our pure original state. This is why enlightenment is referred to as samādhi. The Sanskrit word samādhi means 'returning to the original state'.

The spirit in the body-mind living in this material world, moves from one body to another carrying these root thought patterns just as the wind carries fragrance. Saṁskāras in one body quit that body and take shelter in another. This continuous vicious cycle of movement of saṁskāras is what Kṛṣṇa refers to as saṁsāra, the life-and-death cycle.

Kṛṣṇa says 'taking these, gṛhītvā etāni saṁyati (15.8)'. What does He mean by 'these, etāni'? In the previous verse, Kṛṣṇa talked about the six senses, including the mind. He refers to them here. When the spirit leaves one body and moves to another body, it carries the six senses, ṣaṣthānīndriyāṇi, the five physical senses and the mind, in the same way as the wind carries fragrances, vāyur gandhān ivaśayāt (15.8). Just as the wind carries fragrances, consciousness carries saṁskāras, causal level imprints, from body to body.

Kṛṣṇa answers a frequently asked question about sin. People ask whether sins come with them from one birth to another. Sins never follow. Only imprints travel. For example, if a man commits one hundred murders, the quantity will not follow, but the basic mentality of violence accompanies and tortures him. Only the mental setup is carried. The concept of karma is often used to justify actions, by saying, 'It is our karma,' 'It is our fate,' 'It is our destiny, what can be done?,' 'Whatever had to happen has happened.' This is pure fabrication and justification of our negative deeds. We have the freedom to act: the free will to decide and act. Ironically, only an enlightened Master has no freedom. Enlightened Masters are driven by Parāśakti's will; they are guided by Her, that universal power, into doing what they must do.

The ordinary human being, jīva bhūta is in control of his destiny. All that nature provides are paths in our lives and we choose the path we travel by. We decide the path. What drives us into taking one fork or another is vāsana, the 'smell' that the spirit carries. It is the subtle imprint of our past actions, saṁskāras and karmas. It is not definitive or predestined. We have the choice to redefine that vāsana, that smell, into either a stink or a wonderful fragrance. It is in our hands only. Whether we wish to travel in the same merry-go-round or decide to break out and walk free is our decision.

We create big buildings. We accumulate a good bank balance. We have friends. Just as we start enjoying life, suddenly death appears before us. We fear death only because it takes everything away from us. If we are unattached, if our causal layer is not filled with saṁskāras, if we are not gripped by social conditioning, we will not fear death. We know it is like moving from one room to another. As Kṛṣṇa says in Sāṅkhya Yogaḥ, 'It is like changing one dress for another.' The saṁskāras of this life are the result of prārabdha karma, the mindset and bio-memory, along with the spirit from the vāsanas, the imprints of the past birth that are carried into this birth. It is always a mix of pain and pleasure.

You Are Your Samskaras

श्रोत्रं चक्षुः स्पर्शनं च रसनं घ्राणमेव च । अधिष्ठाय मनश्चायं विषयानुपसेवते ॥ १५-९॥ śrotraṃ cakṣuḥ sparśanaṃ ca rasanaṃ ghrāṇameva ca adhiṣṭhāya manaścāyaṃ viṣayānupasevate || 15.9 ||

15.9 The living entity, the spirit, leaves one body, takes another body and gets new eyes, ears, nose, tongue and sensing body according to the saṁskāras it had in its causal layer and enjoys the new mental setup.

उत्क्रामन्तं स्थितं वापि भुञ्जानं वा गुणान्वितम् ।
विमूढा नानुपश्यन्ति पश्यन्ति ज्ञानचक्षुषः ॥ १५-१०॥ utkrāmantaṃ sthitaṃ vāpi bhuñjānaṃ vā guṇānvitam
vimūḍhā nānupaśyanti paśyanti jñānacakṣuṣaḥ || 15.10 ||

15.10 Fools can neither understand how a living entity can quit his body nor what sort of a body he enjoys under the spell of guṇas, the attributes and moods of nature. Only those whose eyes are trained by knowledge can see these things.

The living entity, the spirit, leaves one body, takes another body and gets new eyes, ears, nose, tongue and sensing body according to the saṁskāras it had in its causal layer and enjoys the new mental setup.'

Here Kṛṣṇa reveals another secret. He says, 'You create a body according to the root thought patterns or saṁskāras in the causal layer, adhiṣṭhāya manaś cāyaṁ (15.9).'

There is a Hindu science called sāmudrika lakṣaṇa śāstra, the technique of studying body features. By observing our physical body structure, experts can read and reveal our mental setup. They know the relationship between mind and body.

Kṛṣṇa says that we create our sensory organs, according to saṁskāras in our causal layer. Kṛṣṇa says that living entities create all five senses through the mind or mental setup. This happens not only when we take another body. Every day when we wake up from deep sleep, our senses are recreated. If we change our mental setup, within a short time, our face changes.

You Create Yourself Every Moment

Our mind, 'manas' is the intelligence spread all over our body. It is the intelligence that resides in our cells. Each cell carries genetic intelligence. Body and mind are not separate entities. It is just body-mind or mind-body, one system. Within this body-mind system, scientists say that every moment of your life thousands of cells die and thousands of new cells are created. This is a constant process that Nature, the universal intelligence, dictates. It does not happen because of us; it happens in spite of us.

In a period of a little under two years, every part of our body, every cell in our body, gets renewed. Our body as it was a year ago is not the body it is today. This is not fiction; it is a proven scientific fact. Then why do we behave the same way as we have for years? Why do illnesses plague us for years, even though the cells are no longer the same?

Each cell as it dies, leaves behind a memory that the newly created cell follows. That is the bio-memories, saṁskāras within us. The saṁskāras ensures the continuation of a pattern despite complete changes in the body-mind system. These saṁskāras are more powerful than the rest of the body-mind system. It decides and drives.

The deep sleep we go into everyday is a rehearsal of our death process. We die and are reborn. Our subtle body leaves the gross body and returns reenergized if we allow it to. It is in our hands to maximize this process of rejuvenation that happens automatically everyday.

Through meditation we can clear our saṁskāras and be reborn. We can change our features, our character and behavior, all by reprogramming our saṁskāras.

That is why people radiate grace after they start meditation. Beauty is created by makeup. Grace is radiated by meditation. Grace makes the occupant feel at home. It soothes the atmosphere. Beauty creates excitement. Beauty moves the other person into rajas (restlessness). Grace creates calmness, satva. Grace puts the other person in energy.

People reminisce about great Masters like Rāmaṇa Maharishi and say that He imparted wisdom through silence. It is the enlightened Master's grace that penetrates the other person's energy and changes that person's saṁskāras. All that we need to do in an enlightened Master's presence is just be, be open and silent and allow the Master's eternal grace to penetrate us. There is nothing that we need to do. The Master's grace does whatever is needed.

One version of the great Hindu epic Rāmāyaṇa says that when princess Sītā, the incarnation of Devi Lakṣmi, entered the court of King Janaka, her father, all the great kings, monks and mystics stood up automatically. This was not a protocol. The grace She radiated caused this response in them. Beauty can create only temptation in the other person. Only grace can create respect. The grace radiating from Sītā's being made everybody stand up.

The negativity, arrogance, violence, negative saṁskāras in our causal layer, makes us feel heavy on earth. If we feel heavy around our navel area, we carry negative saṁskāras.

The feeling of heaviness is not connected to our weight. It is due to imprints in our inner space. A person who feels light radiates grace from his being and he never creates a path on a lawn. He never kills a blade of grass by his walk. We are spiritually evolved souls only when our feet do not create a path, when we float while we walk, when we do not go against nature.

Here Kṛṣṇa says, we create our senses according to our root patterns, saṁskāras. This happens not only when we die and take birth; we redesign our senses to suit our root patterns everyday, when we wake up too. If we wake up with the right mental setup, we will have our senses accordingly and for the whole day we can enjoy it. If on the other hand, we get up with negativity, we suffer.

The few moments immediately after we wake up are crucial. Whatever we feel will be reflected the rest of the day. If we radiate joy, our whole day will be joyful. If we are irritable, our whole day will be irritable.

Do this with the space of completion everyday at least for twenty-one days. You will be amazed at the changes that happen within your body-mind. You will develop grace and equally important, you will learn to love yourself, which means that you can love others without difficulty.

Kṛṣṇa further says, the type of senses we create determines the type of sensory objects we enjoy. If we create positive senses, we enjoy a positive life. If we create negative senses, we suffer a negative life. The type of senses we create determines what type of objects or pleasures attract us, and we experience that.

Our senses, intelligence and our body-mind system create the energy field around us. This energy field attracts similar energy fields. If we are negative, if our perceptions are negative, we attract people with negative mindsets and descend into a vicious cycle. However, if we do completion with all our negativity, sufferings of the past and do the creation of a space of positive emotions and positive perceptions, we attract like-minded, positive people and situations.

Just by completing with your past lifestyle, you can get out of all your sufferings of the past. Just by declaring completion with all the past mental setup, you can get out of all the side-effects, after-effects, and impact of the past over you. So, completion forms the basic truth, the basic principle. The whole energy field supports you to fulfill your life as you want.

This space is extremely important in spiritual progress. It is easy to make progress and evolve when we are with a Master. However, when we get into the company of people who are not following the path, it is easy to slip from our path.

Only Eyes of Knowledge can See

Kṛṣṇa provides a wonderful punchline in the middle of this chapter.

'Fools, vimūḍhā' He says. Kṛṣṇa uses the Sanskrit word 'mūḍhaḥ' that means 'fool'. Fools can neither understand how a living entity can quit his body nor what sort of a body he enjoys under the spell of guṇa, the attributes and moods of nature. Only those whose eyes are trained by knowledge can see these things.

The first thought with which we get up from our bed plays a major role in our enrichment throughout the day. What is our first thought usually? First we feel awake. We feel our body. Then it may be the fear that we must go to our office or it may be the greed to finish some work. At the stroke of the thought, fear or greed, our body jumps out of bed. We connect to our body through fear or greed.

Kṛṣṇa says that if we catch our body with fear or greed, we attract more and more fear or greed throughout the day.

There are many gates to enter the body. Never enter through the fear or greed gate. Get up with a spiritual thought that brings completion in you. Remember your Master or favorite God and thank Him. Thank Him for the extended life. Everyday that you wake up is an extension to your life on planet Earth. Thank divinity for the grace, for the extension.

Let your first thought be spiritual. Practice it consciously for a few days. Then it will become your routine. Don't connect to your body with fear or greed; you will attract more and more greed or fear.

Waking up from bed is not our birthright. Of course, birth itself is not our right. It is a pure gift from Existence. Be grateful to the Divine for this day and extension here. Completion forms the basic rule for gratitude, enlightenment, and liberation.

Please listen to these basic truths: Grace is flowing in you forever. Life is flowing in you just to make your life as you want. Life is not sadistic. God is not sadistic. And God is not enjoying your conflicts and complications. Don't think that. Please listen, if you are able to wake up in the morning and if you are able to breathe, understand that His Grace is there on you. He wants you to fulfill your life as you want.

If we wake up from bed with spiritual thoughts of completion, that consciousness stays with us the whole day. If we are made to get up from bed by incomplete material thoughts, we start our day with incompletions, irritation, worry, and agitation. The entire day we carry the same irritated mood.

When we are in deep sleep, we are in touch with the causal layer. While waking up, we travel along the other three layers and reach the physical body. The three layers are like a shopping mall with various saṁskāras. According to our causal layer, we pick up the related saṁskāras and contact our physical body and design our senses accordingly.

Just for twenty-one days, every night before sleeping do self-completion with all your incompletions for at least forty-two minutes; reliving and relieving your past sufferings and root patterns. This completion process will directly work on your causal layer. Always sleep in the space of completion. And wake up with a spiritual thought of completion. Then, check your face. It will be changed. Your eyes will have a new look. Your body will have the grace.

One more thing, understand, if you have dreams, whatever type of dreams it may be, whether it is good or bad, or whatever; if you have dreams, then you have incompletions in you. When you start doing completions every night, your dreams will reduce.

Incompletions expressing when you are unconscious is dreams. Incompletions expressing when you are conscious is thinking. If you have a dreamless sleep, you will have birthless life. If you have dream-free sleep, you will have birth-free, death-free life.

Don't contact the body with tamas or rajas (depression or restlessness). If you get up with greed or fear, you design a body that radiates greed or fear and thereby attracts incidents that put you in greed or fear.

When you travel from the causal layer to the physical body, pick up completion, the sattva (peaceful or blissful) saṁskāras. Have a spiritual thought of completion as the first thought. Think of your Master or God or anything that gives you a spiritual memory. That is why in Hinduism, ancient mystics tell us to meditate early in the morning. At least for a few seconds be in a blissful mood. Your inner space will be fresh and new.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Only those whose eyes are trained by knowledge can see the truth of this science, paśyanti jñāna cakṣuṣaḥ (15.10)'. The whole science of completion is before you. He says fools cannot understand and only those with eyes of knowledge, can see. The choice of being a fool or a man with eyes of knowledge is left to us. The choice is completely ours.

15.14 I am the fire of digestion in every living body and I am the breath of life, exhaled and inhaled, with which I digest the four-fold food.

Kṛṣṇa uses the word 'yoginaḥ' in this verse. It is important to understand what He means by this. Yoga has become a buzzword; a trendy, fashionable word for cool people.

Yoga is the link, the union, between the individual self, ātman, and universal Self, cosmic consciousness, Brahman. Awareness of this link, awareness that the self is the same as the Self, leads to liberation. The understanding happens in an instant; however, the practice leading to it requires a disciplined approach. In today's world, dhyāna, meditation, is best suited for spiritual progress and for the realization that one's self is part of that cosmic Self.

Kṛṣṇa says that until that awareness happens, however much one may strive, one will not reach Him. Understand, here we are talking about awareness, not achievement. The truth is that our individual self is an integral part of the Universal consciousness, the Self. This truth is not something that we need to work towards. It exists. It is. We are blinded by individual ego, māyā, the illusion of our individual identity, in forgetting that we are part of the collective consciousness. Yogis, sincere spiritual practitioners, lift this veil of māyā, destroy the illusion, to see beyond into the truth of their oneness with the Divine. Meditation is the path and technique to lift this veil. Meditation enables the practitioner to go deeper and deeper into himself. Meditation brings about awareness of what is.

Master - The Dispeller of Darkness

Light is awareness. Light is the sustainer of life. Light is one of the first manifestations of the Divine in creation. Without light and heat from the sun, life as we know it would be impossible. Everything in this world revolves around energy received from the sun in the form of light and heat. The sun is also the dispeller of darkness. Not only does Kṛṣṇa establish that He is the creator of this Universe - the solar system, sun, moon and the fire which sustain our lives, but He also tells us that He is the Dispeller of darkness. Kṛṣṇa, as the Master, as the Guru, is the Dispeller of darkness. Guru means one who dispels darkness. As the sun, moon and the fire, Kṛṣṇa is the ultimate Master who leads us into awareness of our natural state of completion.

You are vibrating a magnetic field. There are two frequencies inside you. There is a self in you which has a frequency of its own, this is the energy of possibility of enlightenment. In Sanskrit we use the word jīvātma or individual soul. Then, there is the mind in you which it has the frequency of its own, this is the energy of the pattern and suffering present in you, which derived energy from the ātman.

You need to understand: suppose there is a mirror in front of you. If you always saw the mirror only reflecting lights, because, you have always seen the mirror lit up, you forget that it only reflects, it does not have its own radiation, its own natural light. In the same way, because you always see the Moon reflecting the Sun, you forget Moon does not have its own light. Same way, your mind does not have its own energy. But, from the time you saw your mind, it was always reflecting the consciousness. Because of that you started thinking, you started feeling your mind as independent energy, which is not. So, the patterns you carry inside you have no independent energy or power. At any given point in time, you are either used by the frequency of your Self or the frequency of your mind.

Please listen to the truths. First, you have a frequency of consciousness in you. Second, you have the frequency of mind in you. The frequency of the mind is the pattern, incompletion, suffering present in you. Third, at any given point in time, you are either used by the frequency of your soul, ātman, consciousness or the frequency of your mind, the patterns.

Kṛṣṇa is the destroyer of our root thought patterns, saṁskāras. Saṁskāras are products of darkness, our unconscious. Darkness is not a positive entity. It cannot be shifted from point to point. However, it can be destroyed by light. The presence of light dissolves darkness. The presence of awareness of completion, our frequency of consciousness destroys saṁskāras. Darkness has no existence of its own. It only exists when there is no light. We cannot create darkness. It is the absence of something.

When someone cannot see, he is not bothered by darkness. He is not afraid of darkness. To a blind man, darkness is his nature. A blind man will not say that he sees ghosts and spirits in darkness. Darkness is the state that he exists in.

A truly courageous man established in completion is also not disturbed by darkness. Someone who is not afraid of anything does not fear the loss of ego, loss of identity and death. To him, darkness poses no fear as well. He can equally handle darkness and light, without fear or attraction. Other than these two classes of people, darkness poses problems and presents fears for everyone else. In this sense, Kṛṣṇa is not only the Lord of light, but of darkness as well.

From Me comes Light, Fire, Life energy

Kṛṣṇa further expands on His pervasiveness. In the form of light and heat, He is the Sustainer of all beings within this Universe. He says that He is the energy of the watery moon and through this energy He is the life energy within plant life, puṣṇāmi cauṣadhīḥ sarvāḥ somo bhūtvā rasātmakaḥ (15.13)'.

Kṛṣṇa affirms that He is Brahman and through His manifestation of the various natural elements of space, air, fire, water and earth, He is responsible for plant life and therefore for food and human beings. Without plant life, there is no food. Without food, there is no body and mind. Body and mind become food for others after death. Food is an expression of divinity. The energy behind food is both the creator and destroyer of saṁskāras.

Most of us treat food as a basic necessity or an object of sensual pleasure. We ignore it or become addicted to it. We need to be aware of what we eat. Before eating, offer gratitude to the Universe for what you have received and meditate upon the food. Traditionally Hindus offer oblations to the Divine and chant prayers before eating. Major changes happen when you follow these customs with awareness.

A person who can be so settled in the present is one who is aware and complete. He is one with Kṛṣṇa. The role of the sun as the giver of light and heat energies is obvious. It is also obvious that without the sun, all life forms will cease to exist. However, the fact that the moon is a nourishing energy providing life energy to plants and therefore to humans is not that well appreciated. The moon controls our behavior, moods and minds. Soma, the name for the moon, refers to its fluidity and the transient nature of waxing and waning.

Kṛṣṇa then talks about vaiśvānara, prāṇa and apāna.

ahaṃ vaiśvānaro bhūtvā prāṇināṁ deham āśritaḥ | prāṇapāna samāyuktaḥ pacāmy annaṁ catur-vidham || 15.14 ||

The Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad says:

'This fire that is within the human being and which digests the food that he eats is vaiśvānara. The sound of this fire vaiśvānara is that which one hears by closing the ears. When death nears and the spirit is about to leave the body, he no longer hears this sound.'

This Upaniṣad goes on to say that neither āhāra (food), nor prāṇa (breath), can function alone, one without the other. Food will decay without breath and breath will dry up without food. Together, when the awareness of their union happens, true consciousness results.

Food is also related to the four elements other than space: air, fire, water and earth. The ancient Hindu traditional medicine system Ayurveda works on this principle of vaiśvānara. The quality of this inner fire determines our state of hunger or lack of hunger as well as the state of health. What Kṛṣṇa implies here as well is that food is divine since it has His imprint on it. We tend to take food for granted. Offering food to other living beings, has been considered a form of worship in Hindu tradition. Food has always been considered the repository of the Divine.

From Me Comes Memory and Knowledge

15.15 I am seated in everyone's heart and from Me came memory, knowledge and their loss. am known by the Vedas; indeed, I am the creator of Vedānta and I am the knower of the Vedas.

dvāvimau puruṣau loke kṣaraścākṣara eva ca
kṣaraḥ sarvāṇi bhūtāni kūṭastho'kṣara ucyate || 15.16 ||

15.16 There are two things, the perishable and the imperishable, in this world. There are the living beings who are perishable while there is the unchangeable, the imperishable.

Kṛṣṇa says that He is seated in everyone's heart, sarvasya ca aham hṛdi sanniviṣto. He is memory, He is knowledge, He is forgetfulness, mattaḥ smṛtir jñānaṁ apohanaṁ ca (15.15). What does this mean? How does our mind work? How does it invent beliefs?

Every cell in our body has inbuilt intelligence. These cells constantly regenerate themselves. These cells present everywhere make up our body-mind system. Therefore, there is no one place where our mind is definitely located; certainly it is not in our head.

Intellect and Intuition

All our decisions are influenced by our past experiences that are stored as root thought patterns in our unconscious mind.

This unconscious area or the root where the mind is born is powerful enough to make you feel powerless or powerful. It can be used in three ways: at the instinct level, intellect level or intuition level. As long as the unconscious is overloaded with negative memories and restlessness, it works at the instinct level. We decide instinctively, unconsciously, just like an animal does. Next is the intellect level. Here, we are conscious; we make decisions logically, but we don't have extra enthusiasm or energy. We are not creative or innovative; we don't take big steps; we don't grow. We don't experience the space of possibility and expansion. We make decisions in a logical and conscious way, that's all.

When we are at the intellect level, we are not tired; yet we are not energetic either. We are in a break-even state. At this level, we do not use our potential to the maximum. Constant completion with our root thought patterns, and bringing integrity in our words, authenticity in our actions melts the intellect layer.

The level where we can actualize our entire potential with power of thinking, power of words, power of feeling and power of living is the intuition level. This is the space of completion and creation. If we can infuse deep silence and completion into the unconscious zone and replace root thought patterns, then we are at the intuition level.

If you come to a decision without a thought, you are living in the space of intuition. If you come to a decision after multiple thoughts, it is ignorance. If you come to a decision after one clear flow of thoughts, it is called intelligence. If you come to a decision without any thought, it is called intuition. Please understand, completion is equivalent to inner cleansing. All your muscle-memories come to peace and rest in peace.

The greatest wealth lies within, not outside. The greatest joy lies within, not outside. In the outside world, every experience of joy is followed by sorrow. Joy creates expectations and when expectations are not fulfilled, they lead to sorrow. When the search begins inside, expectations drop, attachments drop and a new joy of completion happens. That joy is eternal, never ending. It is ānanda, nityānanda, eternal bliss.

Because we are unaware of this, we search outside for happiness, because that is the only way we know. In his commentary on the Gītā, Ādī Śaṅkara says that memory and knowledge come from Kṛṣṇa to those who do good enriching deeds and loss of memory and knowledge to those who do evil deeds. The reference to memory and knowledge here is to the understanding of our true nature, the understanding and realization that we are one with the Divine, that Kṛṣṇa is seated in our hearts.

Perishable and Imperishable Puruṣa

Kṛṣṇa takes Arjuna into a deeper understanding. Kṛṣṇa talks about puruṣa, the principle of energy that underlies our existence. Sāṅkhya philosophy talks about puruṣa and prakṛti. Puruṣa, in one sense is energy, and prakṛti is matter. Puruṣa is the unmoving, passive energy principle, whereas prakṛti is the active material principle. Puruṣa is the male principle; prakṛti is the female principle. Puruṣa is Śiva and prakṛti is Śakti. Kṛṣṇa goes beyond that philosophy. He says Puruṣa is twofold, one imperishable and the other perishable. He says all living beings are the perishable puruṣa and they are situated in the imperishable energy.

dvāv imau puruṣau loke kṣaraś cākṣara eva ca | kṣaraḥ sarvāṇi bhūtani kūṭa-stho 'kṣara ucyate || 15.16 ||

In earlier chapters, Kṛṣṇa has covered in depth, these aspects of prakṛti, which operate through the mind, senses and the attributes, the three types of guṇa. Here, He expands upon puruṣa. Puruṣa is the ultimate energy from which all emanates. 'īśā vāsyaṁ idaṁ sarvaṁ' says the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad , 'All that exists is energy.' When Einstein read this verse from the Upaniṣads, written possibly five to ten thousand years ago, he said, 'I felt proud that I had discovered that matter is energy. Many thousand years ago, these sages knew this and also knew that matter arises from energy. The last step in science is the first step in spirituality.'

More and more, scientists are beginning to sound like the Eastern mystics. They no longer have the attitude of scientists of a hundred years ago who felt that they were rewriting the laws of Nature. Our Hindu scriptures said this over a thousand years ago. Śaṅkara has said again and again that the seer influences what is seen. That was over a thousand years ago.

The primal energy principle, puruṣa is like potential energy. It is energy, but passive. It is the operating principle behind the entire Universe. Without this energy, nothing will exist. Nothing will live. Kṛṣṇa says that there are two kinds of puruṣa: one is eternal, akṣara and one perishes, kṣara. The puruṣa that perishes is the body-mind energy embedded in all beings, including humans. This energy has a definite, limited lifetime. It is always changing. There is nothing permanent about it. It is programmed for deterioration and destruction.

The puruṣa that is kūṭastha is the imperishable aspect of this energy. It is the energy of the spirit that is indestructible, akṣara. It is the soul that is forever, that which cannot be destroyed.

Kṛṣṇa points out that primal energy manifests in different ways, as perishable and imperishable. Both are aspects of primal energy. One is destroyed and the other lives. One who realizes this difference and understands the true nature of puruṣa is liberated.

Collective Consciousness

15.20 This is the most confidential teaching disclosed by Me, O Sinless One, and whoever knows this will become wise and his actions will bear fruit.

Kṛṣṇa says that beyond these two aspects of puruṣa, the perishable body-mind energy and the imperishable spirit energy, there lies another level of energy that is the Supreme Puruṣa. He goes on to say that He is that Supreme Puruṣa, Puruṣottama.

Puruṣa is the energy that pervades us. Puruṣottama is the energy that pervades the entire Universe. Puruṣottama in that sense is no different from Parāśakti, the cosmic energy. It is only a play of words to separate Puruṣa as male and Śakti as female, while describing the ultimate cosmic consciousness.

All-pervading Energy Behind Life

The Universe is imperishable. The energy behind the Universe is imperishable. Kṛṣṇa says that He is that energy, the Puruṣottama, that drives the Universe eternally - prathitaḥ puruṣottamaḥ (15.18).

Modern astrophysicists speak about many universes, not just one. They say there are millions of galaxies in each universe, millions of stars and planets in each galaxy. Even with the aid of advanced equipment, we cannot determine where the universe starts and where it ends. It will never be possible with material aids. The energy behind the Universe is spiritual. It is intangible, invisible and immeasurable.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Beyond the perishable and imperishable, I am Puruṣottama.' He is not talking about the Yādava king Kṛṣṇa, Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa, son of Vāsudeva and Devaki. He is talking about Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, the Īśvara. He is saguṇa, the universal form and nirguṇa, the formless energy. He is that Brahman into whom both the soul, the individual imperishable Self and the perishable body-mind, merge.

He is the Brahman into whom the six-billion humans and countless billion living beings on planet Earth as well as countless trillion upon trillion entities in all the Universes merge. He is Puruṣa, the energy, and Prakṛti, the matter. Without Him, nothing moves. We see Puruṣottama in different ways, depending upon our upbringing and capabilities. We see Him as the six-headed, twelve-handed Kārtikeya or Murugā, or the two-handed Rāma or the two-handed, peacock-feather-adorned, flute-playing Kṛṣṇa. We see Him in a way that is comfortable for us to see Him, so that we can reach Him.

What difference does it make whether we call Kṛṣṇa 'Brahman, Puruṣottama, Parabrahma, Prakṛti,' or any other name? By whatever name He is called, He is the supreme energy who causes us to move. It is the unbounded authority of Kṛṣṇa, with which He declares Himself to be Puruṣottama, that makes Gītā a scriptural authority. It is not the wisdom contained in it, nor the eternal truths, but the courage of that one person, who declared Himself to be the Transcendental Being, that defines this work as an eternal scriptural truth. May that Puruṣottama, that Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, bless us all!

Know Me as the Supreme and Know Everything

Now, Kṛṣṇa presents the great truths about His true representation as the collective consciousness, the Supreme Self.

This may surprise you or it may be something you already know. Irrespective of whether this concept is new or old, analyze this truth for the sake of internalizing, question it until your logic fails.

The first truth: All our minds are not individually separated pieces of the Universe. They are all one and the same. All our minds are interlinked. Not only interlinked, they directly affect each other. This is collective consciousness. Anything we think affects people around us. Not only are those near us touched by our thoughts, so is everyone living on planet Earth.

We are not individual islands, separated from each other and uninfluenced by each other. Only one truth called collective consciousness links all of us.

The next truth: Not only at the mental level, even at the deeper level of consciousness, the deeper we go, the deeper we are connected. In Existence, there is no such thing as a separate individual identity. Once we know this truth, we will go beyond pain, suffering, depression and disease.

Understand that as long as we hold onto the concept of individual consciousness, we will be continuously suffering, physically or mentally or on the being level. Why do we continuously resist nature? Whatever nature offers, we resist. When the weather is cold, we resist. We think we are different from Existence. It is only when we think that we are different from the atmosphere, from the air around us that we resist it.

You see, we are a part of the Whole. If we fall in tune with the Whole, the Whole behaves as a friend. The moment we think, discriminate or behave with the Whole in the opposite way, it acts like an enemy. Be very clear, the Whole is not here to kill or destroy us.

An example is what happens when a person dies of drowning. The dead body floats. The dead body is heavier than water. Yet, it floats. But, a living body that is lighter than water, does not float. It drowns. Why is this so? As long as we are living, we are unable to relate with water. Our ego prevents that. Our mind prevents that. In the dead body, there is no mind and no ego. It is the mind and ego that causes our heaviness. When we are in completion with the collective consciousness, when we become a part of collective consciousness, Nature is our friend and Nature protects us.

When we think that we are different from Nature, as long as we think that we are an individual consciousness, Nature protests against us. If we disappear into the collective consciousness, we are protected and taken care of. We attain complete success, not only socially and economically, but we experience it as well. It will be a feeling of fulfillment, an experience of complete completion.

The third truth: At the ultimate level, at the spiritual level, the moment we understand that we are deeply connected, totally connected to the whole group, to the whole Universe, not only do we experience bliss, but we really live, opening many dimensions of our being.

Right now we are stressed out and disturbed continuously. With our separate body-mind, we need to think too much, we need to try too hard to enjoy life. If we disappear into collective consciousness, we open many dimensions, many possibilities.

See, now with only this one body we have, we can enjoy so much. Imagine what we can do when we have many bodies. If the multitudes of bodies increase, so does the joy, the bliss. This is our experience when we realize we are a part of the collective consciousness.

When we experience that we are boundariless consciousness, we experience the infinity. It is difficult to imagine. When we experience the feeling of non-duality, Advaita or collective consciousness, when we experience the bliss of collective consciousness, we forget differences of name, wealth, social status and prestige; whatever we think of ourselves disappears. The truth of who we are is revealed.

Life is not restricted to animate forms. Life is happening in everything; may be in a frequency where it is not realized, recognized by you. But, everything has life. Learn to complete with everything. The state of completion is the best way to prepare yourself for life; and completion is the best way to prepare for death.

When we complete with everything, animate and inanimate, we experience the space of non-duality, advaita, where each one is infinitely powerful and infinitely intelligent. Completion should be carried till we become enlightened.

Understand, till we feel we are one with the space of nithyānando'ham (I am nithyānanda, eternal bliss); till we experience the space of nityānando'ham.

Kṛṣṇa declares, 'whoever knows Me as the Supreme, Puruṣottama, without a doubt, is to be understood as the knower of everything, and worships Me with all his being.'

yo mām evam asammūḍho jānāti puruṣottamam | sa sarva-vid bhajati māṁ sarva bhāvena bhārata || 15.19 ||

The difference between the puruṣa, self and the Puruṣottama, Self, the difference between the perishable and the imperishable, are for the 'deluded' and 'confused' as Kṛṣṇa says. Once one has the awareness of collective consciousness, he becomes the knower of everything. Everyone merges into the collective consciousness, the space of oneness, advaita.

The wave thinks that it is separate from the ocean. It does not realize that it comes from the ocean and goes back to the ocean, that it is the ocean. Just as the wave is part of the ocean, we are part of Existence. How can we attain or reach Puruṣottama, when we are already a part of Him? We can only gain awareness that we are a part of Him.

This is the profound secret teaching of Kṛṣṇa. In this chapter, Kṛṣṇa becomes the ultimate Master. Arjuna is completely in silence, the best way to imbibe the Master.

We don't have to become something new; we need to wake up and realize what we already are. The Master never allows us to stop at any step before the full flowering. Again and again, he inspires and takes us to higher levels of conscious experience, until we realize we are that eternal consciousness; our true potentiality.

Masters use these techniques only with those who feel completely connected with them. They operate on disciples who have devotion for them. This is the ultimate technique that is used in the most loving, caring way. To the outsider, it may look harsh; however, the disciple understands the love and care behind it when the Master uses it on him and is eternally grateful for such surgery.

The Master never allows anyone to get stuck with ordinary experiences. Even though we call it a spiritual experience, it is only when we stop experiencing anything that we enter into a real spiritual experience. Only in such an experience, the experiencer, the experienced and the experience, disappear into one; all three merge into the experience. Only 'we' remain, even the word 'we' can't be used since there is no other, all boundaries are lost.

Unless that experience of 'tat tvam asi, that are thou,' happens, the Master never rests. The Master is the ultimate master surgeon who removes the ego at all levels, the ordinary or the spiritual. People have spiritual ego when they have a 'holier than thou' attitude. The Master will never allow us to be stuck in that area. He pushes us forward until we experience the ultimate. The more we allow his surgery, the more we realize the truth. A few people run away from the operating table during surgery; that's dangerous. Before surrendering, do all the checking, verifying, window-shopping. But once you surrender, allow him to work on you.

ॐ तत्सदिति श्रीमद्भगवद्गीतासूपनिषत्सु ब्रह्मविद्यायां योगशास्त्रे श्रीकृष्णार्जुन संवादे पुरुषोत्तमयोगो नाम पञ्चदशोऽध्यायः ॥ १५॥

Thus ends the fifteenth chapter named Puruṣottama Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of the Supreme Being,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 16
Daivāsura Sampad Vibhāga Yogaḥ

You And Me

This chapter is traditionally called Daivāsura Sampad Vibhāga Yogaḥ, or the Yoga of divine and demonic nature. Here Kṛṣṇa explains the concept of saṁskāras (root thought patterns) from an even deeper level.

In the 14th chapter, Guṇatraya Vibhāga Yoga, He spoke on sattva, rajas and tamas, the three attributes of nature in which all living beings exist. He also explains the three layers of the body-mind system: prāṇa śarīra, manaḥ śarīra and sūkṣma śarīra, which are the physical, mental and subtle bodies, respectively. In the 15th chapter, Kṛṣṇa speaks extensively about deeper body-mind layer, the causal body. That chapter is called the Puruṣottama Yogaḥ or the Yoga of the perfected being. Kṛṣṇa points out how the body-mind system is like a unique tree, with its roots in the physical world, and the branches in the causal world. Here, in the 16th chapter, He moves into the deeper energy layers of the body-mind system and takes us to the Cosmic layer.

Kṛṣṇa speaks about the qualities of the divine, daiva and the demonic, asura. The beauty is that both these words have the same root. Of course, it is not accidental; both qualities are rooted in the same energy. It is just a simple decision. When you choose the word 'you', you become divine, and when you choose the word 'me', you become a demon. That's all.

Śrī Ramakrishna Paramahamsa speaks beautifully of the same energy. No energy can be destroyed; your love can never be destroyed. It can only be converted. He says that as long as the calf says, 'ahaṁ, ahaṁ' ('me, me') it must work, suffer, get beaten and tortured. Once it is killed, musical instruments are made out of its skin; then when we beat the instrument, it says, 'tumi, tumi' or 'tum' ('you, you'). As long as it says, 'ahaṁ, ahaṁ' it suffers, when it says, 'tuṁ, tuṁ,' it starts being used for wonderful purposes like singing the glory of the divine.

The moment the cognitive shift happens in us, that is when the 'tumi, tumi' ('you, you') happens, we will be a blessing for ourselves and for others.

All the root thought patterns or bio-memories, saṁskāras, are stored in the causal layer. They operate without our control. Decisions are made without our knowledge. However, at the deeper level, in the cosmic layer, we decide consciously: you or me, divine or demon, daiva or asura.

When we make the decision of 'You,' we radiate divine qualities. When we make the decision of 'me,' we radiate demonic qualities.

The decision about 'You' or 'me' is made in the Cosmic layer. If we decide with the attitude of 'you,' the whole thing becomes divine; if we decide with the attitude of 'me,' the whole thing becomes demonic. The mind or citta, the inner space is neither negative nor positive.

None of these, including the guṇa (attributes) are negative or positive. Even tāmasic qualities, such as laziness, are neither negative nor positive. Many enlightened Masters seem passive, not doing anything at all. We cannot differentiate between their attitude and laziness. For instance, Bhagavān Ramaṇa Maharishi sat throughout his life in one little town, Tiruvannamalai. He never moved out of there. He was mostly in silence. Yet we cannot say he was in tamas since he never made any decision out of 'me.' The whole process was happening with 'you' as a center, not 'me.'

We cannot call the citta, the mind or samskāra, the root pattern good or bad. In the superficial layers, they are neither. However, the decisions we make in the cosmic layer, in the deeper layer, determine whether they are good or bad. The energy behind passion and compassion is really one and the same. When we decide based on 'me', it is passion; when we decide based on 'You', it is compassion.

We need to understand one important thing. If we feel passion strongly in our being, but our compassion has only a little intensity, then our compassion is just a pseudo-expression, perhaps for the sake of name and fame, not for anything else. If we are not integrated to compassion as intensely as our passion, all our activities are based on ego. Even this Gītā discourse can become food for the ego, if the decision is taken out of 'I' and 'me'. When the decision happens out of 'You,' even ordinary daily activities can become divine, not just Gītā discourses.

We need not work on the 'doing'; we need to work on the 'being'. Doing can never lead us to anything. As long as we believe that doing can lead us to the Ultimate, we have karma. This is called Pūrva Mimāṁsi (those who interpret the Hindu rituals literally).

Only when we understand that only being can lead us to the Ultimate, we are called Uttara Mimāṁsi (those who interpret the Hindu scriptures according to Vedānta-based non-duality). According to the Vedas, there are two major types of people: People who believe in doing and people who believe in being. People who believe in transforming the 'Being' are Vedāntins, people who believe that the transformation to the Ultimate can be achieved by 'doing' are Karmakāndis.

Of course, the Ultimate can be achieved only by working on the being, not by working on the doing. If we work on the doing, we either suppress or express. We continuously fight with ourselves; nothing else is achieved. Only a man who transforms his being can achieve the Ultimate.

Whether to be a demon or divine, we decide at that one point. When we receive the data through our senses, process it and deliver the result or command, how is the command delivered? If the command comes out with the thinking, 'What is there for me?' then whatever we do, including meditation, will be only ego satisfying, not enriching.

Please understand that bliss is choicelessness. When we are absent, when our identity disappears, we experience bliss. The moment we want the bliss back, we have already chosen. We have made the choice/ The moment we choose, we will always choose suffering.

All choices are suffering, because choice is based on the mind. It is based on duality. Bliss is choicelessness. It is beyond duality, advaita, therefore there is nothing to choose 'between'. The moment the space of 'me' or 'mine' appears and decides, it destroys the bliss. We can no longer be divine. When we are blissful, we have said, 'No' to 'me'; we are relaxed in the 'You' idea. The moment we want to possess bliss, we have said, 'Yes' to 'me'.

'You' and 'me'

We need to understand 'You' and 'me' properly. The word 'me' means ego; the word 'You' means the whole of Existence. When our identity evaporates, when our ego dissolves, whatever is left is Existence; it is divine, daivic. We create the demon by bringing in the idea of 'me'. The moment we bring in the idea of 'me,' whatever is there, is demonic. The moment the 'me' idea is removed, whatever there is, is divine.

With the 'me' idea, whatever we do, be it meditation, rituals, learning, or knowledge, it will only strengthen the ego. Anything done to strengthen the idea of 'me', naturally leads to more ignorance and suffering. Anything done with the attitude of 'You,' whatever it is, naturally becomes divine and leads to bliss.

In Sanskrit, we have two words: nivṛitti and pravṛitti. Nivṛitti is looking inwards or liberation or completion and is centered on the idea of 'You'. Pravṛitti is looking outwards or bondage or incompletion nd is centered on the idea of 'me'. Whatever is done out of 'You', leads to liberation; whatever we do out of the idea of 'me', leads to bondage.

As long as we are centered in ourselves, we are in the bondage of attraction and aversion, greed and fear. Most people are centered in their mūlādhāra cakra, the energy center in our body associated with the emotion of greed, or in the svādiṣṭhāna cakra, the energy center in our body associated with fears and insecurity.

The mūlādhāra is all about 'me' or our possessions: 'What is in it for me? Where do I go from here?' The svādiṣṭhāna is about 'I', our identity, insecurity and fear arising from our need to protect the body-mind system. Both these bind us, block us, and keep us firmly locked in the material world.

As our higher centers of energy get energized and unblocked, and our energy rises from the mūlādhāra and svādiṣṭhāna, to anāhata (heart center) and beyond, we look beyond ourselves. The 'me' starts dropping. When the ājñā cakra (energy center between the eyebrows) becomes energized, the ego, the identity, the 'I' and 'me', disappear and the 'you' takes over. The demon becomes the Divine.

When we shed our ego, we become boundary-less. We are no longer limited by selfish thoughts about 'me' and 'mine', our kith and kin. The whole world is ours to care for. Kṛṣṇa refers to this as Vasudaiva Kuṭuṁbakaṁ, 'the whole world is one family'. As long as we feel that our body-mind is our boundary, that we are separate from the rest of the Universe, we will continuously fight with Existence, with the nature, with the Whole. Understand, the part can never succeed when it fights with the Whole.

Whatever we think, speak or do based upon the idea 'me', it leads to more and incompletions, more and more suffering. This whole Universe is God's will and so are we. However, God has willed that we use our free will. That is why He has given us consciousness, so that we are aware of what we do. If we truly believed in God's will, we would do our very best and leave the result to Him. This is what Kṛṣṇa declared earlier - karmaṇy evādhikāraste mā phaleṣu kadācana (2.47). Do what you have to do without bothering about the results.

When we move into the space of 'You', we move into the attitude Kṛṣṇa speaks about. When we are no longer worried about ourselves and we think of everyone else's needs as our own, results lose meaning. There is no selfish pressure. There is no identity that directs us towards success instead of failure, based upon how we imagine success looks.

Whether we act demonic or divine, the inner space in all of us is Divine. The inner space is pure; it is uncontaminated. Whether we are tuned inwards towards that purity or tuned outwards towards gratification is the choice we make through our free will. A Rāvaṇa had the choice of being a Rāma, and a Duryodhana had the choice of being an Arjuna. Through their own free will, they did not exercise that choice.

16.3 Vigor, more forgiveness, fortitude, cleanliness, freedom from envy, and from the passion for honor, these transcendental qualities, O Son of Bharata (Arjuna), belong to divine men, endowed with divine nature.

Kṛṣṇa lists a number of qualities that take us to a higher plane of consciousness; qualities that make us divine.

Qualities of the Heart not the Mind

Now when we listen to these things with the space of 'me', what do we usually do? We start practicing all these virtues. Be clear that if we try to practice all of these qualities, one thing is sure: we will become mad. We will not be able to do anything because we will be fighting with ourselves. We will be controlling our senses to strengthen our ego. When we try to understand these ideas with our ego, with the space of 'me', we practice them to strengthen the idea of 'me', to improve ourselves and become better beings. Again and again, Masters prove that they are not better beings; they are totally transformed beings. There is a difference between better beings and transformed beings.

If we start practicing these qualities listed by Kṛṣṇa, we may have a stronger ego. That is why so-called tapasvi (ascetics, people performing penances), people who repress themselves, have a strong ego. People who perform penances or repress desires, radiate ego. We clearly see that they do these things to strengthen their ego.

When we are in the space of completion, completely blissful and relaxed, austerity, tapaḥ happens. When we force ourselves to do penance, we continuously burn inside with incompletions; as a side effect we often have self-doubts about our path and ourselves. This self-doubt makes us continuously do something; we then make others guilty about the path that they are following.

Penance is supposed to happen naturally out of completion, joy and bliss, just as a natural thing. Anything done by force is not going to enrich us or society. Society teaches us that we are sinners. First of all, this is not true. No enlightened Master who has realized the divinity within is capable of saying this. Secondly, who gains anything at all by calling everyone a sinner?

Kṛṣṇa tells us to be without fear and greed. He also says to be without anger. He says to be truthful, simple, meek, gentle, non-violent, and to be without expectations and to renounce. These are qualities of the Divine; these are qualities that you express when you are focused not on your own self but on others. These are qualities that arise from the heart and not from the mind. These are qualities that arise from love and not from desire. These are enriching qualities that naturally express from completion not compulsion.

God, the very idea of God, should evoke love and not fear. God in any religion should be portrayed as compassionate. No enlightened Master has experienced otherwise or expressed otherwise. The concept of a fearsome God with vengeance is a manmade myth. It is created by man, to set one man against another, to divide, control and conquer. We are conditioned to believe in them because this is the easiest way to control us, through fear and greed. The greatest fear of any religion is that we might start thinking for ourselves. Worse still, they are afraid that we may stop thinking, and drop our mind.

The very lack of awareness that we are divine is a sin. When we got into thinking and started clutching onto our thoughts, we became ignorant. If at all there is an original sin, it is the clutching onto our thoughts, associating with our incompletions.

God resides in you and me. We know everything that we do. When we do wrong, we know. No one has to tell us. That becomes our sin. The guilt makes our life hell, nothing else.

When we are complete, free and liberated, we are in sheer enjoyment and we are in heaven. If we focus on enriching others, on 'You', we expand with the power of living. In fact, the more we focus to create the inner space of completion, the more we open up to enrich others. We move from the 'me' to 'You.' As we move inwards, our higher intelligence awakens. Our higher intelligence is nothing but the Divine. That completion alone makes us God. Completion is God. Completion is Divinity.

As human beings we have the opportunity to expand into this energy, into this higher intelligence. Unfortunately, animals do not have this ability, this consciousness. Humans do. To ignore this gift, this opportunity, this consciousness, is our original sin. The entire meaning of our life is to discover this truth and become divine. That is why, if we die without realizing this truth, we are born again.

We go through this cycle of life and death again and again because we do not recognize who we are. As Buddha says, that is the cause of our suffering. When we realize our own Self, our true divine potential, we realize the meaning of our life, and there is no need to be born again. We become liberated.

Living the Divine

Here Kṛṣṇa gives all the divine qualities, one by one. It is not necessary to explain all the qualities. Let us take a few. Let us take fearlessness, abhayaṁ for example. As long as we carry the instinct to survive, we have fear. Fear can never be taken away from our being, as long as we want to survive. Surrendering to Existence, surrendering to death is the one and only way to achieve fearlessness.

In the Kaṭhopaniṣad, the beautiful Upaniṣad, which comes from the wonderful system of Vedānta (essence of the Vedas including Upaniṣads), they have gone deep into the science of death. The West has dedicated its entire energy to understand life, whereas the East has dedicated its energy to understanding death. That is why Ṛṣis live even after they die. They exist; they discovered the science of living even after death. However, people who are caught in the material world die each moment, even as they live. This Kaṭhopaniṣad is the science of death.

A young boy, Naciketa, who goes to the abode of Yama, the Lord of death. Yama was not there when Naciketa went to meet Him. Yama receives him after three days. Yama welcomes him.

At this point, we must understand that no one goes to Yama's abode; always it is He who comes. When we try to escape from Him, He is death as we know it ordinarily; He will take away our 'I' and 'mine', all our possessions and relationships; we cannot sign our check or drive our car once He takes us. Whatever we think is ours will be taken away: wealth, relationships, bank balance, everything. What we think is 'I', the body, even that will be taken away. When death comes to us, everything is taken away. On the contrary, when we go to death like Naciketa did, fearlessly, death welcomes us. Yama becomes our host.

Here, Yama receives Naciketa with love and care. First thing: He becomes a loving host. Next, He offers him three boons. Naciketa first asks for good relationships. He says, 'When I go back to my family, my father should accept me, love me and take me back.' Yama blesses him with good relationships, completion with others. After that Yama blesses him with completion with wealth, and shows him how to create wealth, pleasure and comforts. Now, Yama is behaving like a God. Ultimately, Yama gives him ātmajñāna or knowledge of the Self, completion with the Self. Now, He is behaving like an enlightened Master himself. The third boon He gives because Naciketa asks Him for the secret of death. Understand, Naciketa is the embodiment of authenticity. Pleased with the boy's integrity and courageous authenticity, śraddha, Yama blesses him with enlightenment itself.

Look at the paradox of life: When we run away from death, Death or Yama chases us, wherever we are. Death takes away all our wealth, our relationships, whatever we think of as 'I' and 'mine'. But here, with Naciketa, the whole situation is just the opposite. When we surrender to Yama, when we go to Him, He is a loving host. He is not something terrible as we imagine Him to be. He says, 'Welcome! You are the form of Agni, fire.' A guest is considered to be the form of fire that we worship.

Yama tells Naciketa, 'You are my guest and you have come to my house in the form of 'vaiśvānarāgni' (the fire that we worship).' The vaiśvānara (priest) is considered to be the embodiment of the divine Agni. 'You have come to my house as the embodiment of the Divine. Let me pay my respects to you. Please forgive me for not being here for three days to receive you.'

Usually we postpone Yama (death). Usually we try to escape from Him. But when we go in search of Him, He will not be there, as we feared. That is the essence of this whole history. Understand this important point. It has a tremendous truth. When Naciketa went to death, death was not there. Whatever imagination we have about death will not be there when we surrender to death. Now, because of our fear, we try to escape; because we try to escape, He chases us.

Thinking about Fear Liberates you from it

Most of your sufferings are because you are afraid to think about some parts of your life, some components of your life. You are afraid of thinking. You always think that because you are thinking, you are getting fear. No! You are actually afraid of thinking. That is why those thoughts may cause fear in you, you think and then you stop thinking.

If you are afraid of poverty, but you don't want to think about it logically, it is not that you are not going to think about poverty. You will constantly be afraid of poverty and you will be brooding over poverty unconsciously, wasting all your energy; because that is going to be sitting in your unconscious space as a big tumor. Thinking about fire and its after-effects is not going to burn your body. When you have that clarity, you will know how not to be afraid of thinking. Ironing out your thinking and not being afraid of thinking about anything, taking any thinking to the logical conclusion is integrity.

Whenever you want to think about poverty or death, you are always afraid that if you think about all that, it may come true in your life. But whenever you want to think about being rich to fulfill your desires, you always have the fear, 'Even if I think about it, I won't get it.' See the funny way your brain functions. See, all the things that you want in your life, you think that you won't get them, even if you work for it. But all the things that you don't want, you are afraid that you will get them, even if you just think about them.

Life is not that unfair with you. Anything happens only when you take the responsibility of inviting it and making it happen. You should know very clearly and see your own hypocrisy. What a funny belief space we create about life and then we go on blaming life! If you create this kind of space, will life respond to you?

Ironing out your thinking to the logical flow of your thinking needs to be done as the first step for awakening the divine qualities. First thing you need to do is sit with yourself and list out all the areas of your life that you are afraid of. Whatever you are afraid of, write it down and logically think about it. Allow all of them to surface. Let your mind face the fears. Let your mind speak everything. Think intensely and logically about the fears. Give it half an hour. You may feel afraid, tears may roll and your whole body may shake. Let everything come out. What can be done? If you could do anything, you would have done it. Allow the fear come up to your conscious layer without being suppressed.

Whatever you are afraid of, sit in a very cool and comfortable way and know very clearly that just because you are thinking, you are not going to have it. Millions of things about which you thought, you didn't have them. You also wanted a private jet, but did you get it? No! So, know very clearly, mere thinking is not going to get you the results. Only creating the space is going to get you the results. Creating the space means taking the responsibility and thinking.

Accept that there is a possibility for all these fears to come true: your wealth may be stolen, you may have an accident, a near or dear one may die, or you may die. All these possibilities are real. Yes. What can be done? This is life. This is what is called facing reality as it is.

So, sit comfortably and tell yourself clearly, 'Now I am going to allow myself to think to the extreme conclusions, the logical conclusions of any thought-trend which I am afraid of. If I am afraid of poverty, let me sit and think about the extreme possibility of poverty.

Anything that stays in your unconscious as a weight and makes you brood over it, bring all of them out and consciously think through them to the logical conclusion. With integrity, fear of thinking will disappear, and once fear of thinking disappears, they cannot cause fear to you.

When you lose fear of thinking, thinking loses fear of you. When both of you lose fear of each other, you live happily, blissfully, ever after. Having eternal romance with your thinking is integrity. Integrity takes away the fear component in your thinking. You can think about anything; you will take responsibility for the right thing.

Qualities of a Demon

16.4 Pride, arrogance, conceit, anger, harshness or cruelty, and ignorance - these qualities belong to those born with demonic nature, O Son of Prithā.

16.5 The transcendental qualities are conducive to liberation, whereas the demonic qualities make for bondage. Do not worry, Pāṇḍava, you are born with divine qualities.

16.6 Pārtha, in this world there are two kinds of created beings, one is divine and the other, demonic. I have explained at length to you the divine qualities. Now hear about the demonic qualities also, so that you will understand and live your life blissfully and happily.

प्रवृत्तिं च निवृत्तिं च जना न विदुरासुराः ।
न शौचं नापि चाचारो न सत्यं तेषु विद्यते ॥ १६-७॥ pravṛttiṃ ca nivṛttiṃ ca janā na vidurāsurāḥ na śaucaṃ nāpi cācāro na satyaṃ teṣu vidyate || 16.7 ||

16.7 Persons with demonic nature do not know what is bondage and what is liberation; nor what is cleanliness; truthful behavior is not in them.

What is demonic nature? Kṛṣṇa says that all actions done out of arrogance, out of pride, out of ego, for name and fame, and for power, are demonic in nature. As in the case of Rāvaṇa, they benefit neither the person himself nor others. Their actions are performed out of ignorance, and ultimately lead to their own downfall.

Rāvaṇa did penance; however, his powers neither helped him nor others. He became a demon for others and for himself. He killed others, and finally destroyed himself. His penance was done with the attitude of 'me' and 'what is there in it for me?' The whole history happened to strengthen the 'I' and 'mine'. Please understand that whatever we do, whether we study the scriptures, do charity or social service, or perform pūjā (prayer), rituals or meditation, if they are done to strengthen the 'I' and 'mine', they always lead to suffering.

Focusing on the 'I' is instinctive. It is a call for survival. It is a call for our survival based on our conditioning and insecurities. The instinct to survive is what is called 'I', and the instinct to possess is what is referred to as 'mine'. The person who understands that both are illusions is a complete person. Such a person realizes that the instinct to survive does not help, and no matter what one may have, one still cannot survive forever.

The instinct to survive is pure illusion. At the most we can survive perhaps for 70 to 80 years. Sometimes a person lives to be 90 to 100 years with the same identity. Yet the instinct to survive tries to extend itself. It wants to make life eternal. No one wants to die. Naturally we are then walking towards suffering. As long as we carry this instinct to survive, we repeatedly hurt ourselves.

A sensitive person lets words pass through him. He never suffers. Suffering is from arrogance, never from sensitivity. A person who is sensitive never suffers. We suffer from words when we stop them, when we resist them, when we make our own meaning out of them. When we do not make meanings out of words, we do not suffer. It is like playing with words. We choose nice words to support our ego. We do not say, 'I am hurt because I am arrogant.' We use polished words such as, 'I am hurt because I am sensitive.'

Please don't cheat yourself with words that lack integrity. Let straight integrated words be used. Let us be integrated about what we mean. Let us use the same integrated words to express what we really are and what we really feel. Ramakrishna says, 'Let your words and mind be straightened.'

From Survival to Gratitude

When we think of the possibility of death, we will never take life or our spouse for granted. We will start really living an enriching life. Similarly, when there is a possibility that our good health may be taken away from us, we will not take our health for granted; we will start living life with integrity and authenticity. We will realize the gift of life that Existence has bestowed upon us.

Here, when Kṛṣṇa speaks of fearlessness, He means, 'Face it, face the fear, only then fearlessness can happen.' Only when we face the instinct to survive and the instinct to possess and experience completion, will we enter the space of fearlessness. Until then it can never happen. You can face and complete with the instinct for survival or the instinct for possession only by making decisions based on the concept of 'You', not on the concept of 'me'.

As long as you act, speak and think centered on 'me, me, me', you will be a demon; you will work out of the instinct for survival and possession. When you work based on the space of 'You, you, you,' you will radiate a new energy, the energy of enriching.

Try this simple experiment: Try living for others' sake out of gratitude for just one week. Try to live with the new root-cognition of 'You'. You don't need to give away your property or any such thing. Please catch this principle of root cognition. Basically, what you strongly believe as you is root cognition.

Usually we think, 'What is there in this for me?' For example, if your wife calls you up to see a movie, you say, 'No, I want to go to the beach.' You always force your preference. Just for one week, in your office, in your house, wherever you go, decide and be with the new root cognition of 'you' instead of 'me'. Try this with simple, day-to-day life decisions. Immediately the mind thinks, 'If I start thinking based on 'you', people will take me for granted, people may exploit me, people may cheat me.'

Alright, that is fine. Now nobody is cheating you. You are living centered on the idea of 'me'. You are protecting yourself. Are you happy? Come on, be frank, are you happy? Not really!

So why not then give a chance to be centered on the root cognition of 'You'? We live all our life with this 'āsuri sampat,' what Kṛṣṇa calls demonic nature, the inauthentic attitude of 'me, me, me'.

Living Beyond 'Me'

Now, for just one week, put that 'You' into your being. You will not know from where the bliss suddenly comes. Suddenly you will feel that your whole being is relaxed. When you don't give attention to 'me', you will never be 'in tension'.

When you replace your root cognition of 'me' with 'You', a deep inner healing, a deep completion happens in you. Please understand, completing with the root cognition is completing with self-doubt.

This is not morality. This is not teaching you how to live happily. This is a spiritual practice. This is not just the science of success but it is the science of deathlessness. This is not just the science of ānanda (bliss) but the science of nithya (immortality).

If you thing you are really a seeker, then do this one spiritual practice for seven days. Work based on this single statement: instead of deciding based on the default root cognition of 'me, me, me', decide based on the new root cognition of 'You, You, You'.

You will become a hollow bamboo. Whenever you become a hollow bamboo, you are a flute in the hands of the Divine. Whatever happens through you will be divine; you will imbibe the divine nature.

Kṛṣṇa further explains step-by-step how to imbibe divine nature: How to cause the cognitive shift at the deep, subtle level of our root cognitions.

Please understand that working at the level of sattva (equanimity), rajas (aggression), or tamas (slothfulness) is difficult. It is akin to changing all the servants in order to change the master. We will never be able to do that. Just change the master and all the servants will be transformed.

Here, Kṛṣṇa gives the technique to change the master, the ego or the root patterns that makes decisions. He gives the straight technique for the cognitive shift to happen. At present, the root cognition happens in us keeping the 'I' as the center; He gives a simple technique to replace the 'I' with 'You' so that the cognitive shift happens. This same system will be used for the divine nature.

Rāma and Rāvaṇa in the Hindu epic Rāmāyaṇa, are both energetic; both have the brahmāstra (high energy weapon). The only difference is that one is centered on the root cognition of 'I'; the other one is centered on the root cognition of 'you.' That is the only thing that makes one person divine and the other demonic. Rāma is divine, Rāvaṇa is demonic.

Please understand, first you need to find out whether your thinking is acting as divine inside you or as a demon inside you, whether your thinking is acting as a god inside you or as a ghost inside you. Sometimes, many of you are possessed by a ghost. What is that ghost? 'Me, me, me'.

Kṛṣṇa goes further to give subtle techniques to experience the consciousness of 'You', the ultimate consciousness, the consciousness of the Whole, the 'daivika saṁpat' or divine nature of your being through this root cognitive shift.

Step-by-step Kṛṣṇa explains all these great qualities. Please don't try to practice these qualities as a separate effort. The more we try to practice these separately, the more schizophrenic we will become. We will be fighting with ourselves.

Enrich others with the space of 'You' which will naturally make you express these divine qualities in life. Enriching will be just your lifestyle. You will understand that enriching the 'You' enriches the 'I' back. Enriching others enriches you back. Experientially you will understand that 'you' is one with others, others are one with you. Automatically you will become blissful, free from anger and full of dhārmic (righteous) qualities.

Ramaṇa Maharishi says beautifully, 'When you don't ask, you will be given.' When you don't do from the 'I', you won't feel like something is being taken away from you. Above all, you will feel tremendous fulfillment, the space of completion. Anything you do with the space of 'you' will make you radiate these beautiful, divine qualities.

Serving is not always Devotion

There are four muktis or levels of liberation: sālokya mukti, sārūpya mukti, sāmīpya mukti and sāyujya mukti. Sālokya means 'same place'; it means we will be allowed to stay in Vaikunṭa, Viṣṇu's abode. We will have a residence in heaven. Sārūpya means we will have the same form as the Lord. For example, we can see Jaya-Vijaya, the gatekeepers of heaven; they have the same ṣankh (conch), cakra (discus), gadā (mace), padma (lotus) - all the accessories of Viṣṇu in the same svarūpa (form).

Sāmīpya (being near) is being in the inner circle; the cakra that Viṣṇu is carrying has achieved sāmīpya mukti. Becoming enlightened oneself is sāyujya mukti. Sāmīpya mukti is the best enlightenment because we can enjoy Him forever. It is like an ant forever enjoying the sugar candy.

Even if they run after the Divine, people with the root cognition of 'I' can never reach the Divine, because the Divine runs away from them. If we live with the root cognition of 'you', even if we live in a hut with a thousand holes, Kṛṣṇa waits for us at our doorstep.

Are you Divine or Demonic?

Now, here is another important point. After hearing about 'You' and 'me', the next thought that may come to our mind is, 'I do not know whether I am working based on root cognition of 'You' or based on 'me'. I am worried about whether I am a demon or divine. Please guide me, tell me, based on which quality I am working.'

If this fear arises in you, you are divine. The person who is ready to look into his mind, the person who is afraid about whether he is living rightly or wrongly, always lives rightly. Only the person who is arrogant is demonic. The person who is demonic never considers whether he does right or wrong. He thinks that he is always right.

Arjuna also has that fear, 'Bhagavān, am I living with divine or demonic nature?' He is not expressing that feeling, but his face reveals his fear.

daivī sampad vimokṣāya nibandāyāsuri matā | mā śucaḥ sampadaṁ daivīm abhijāto 'si pāṇḍava || 16.5 ||

Now Lord Kṛṣṇa explains that living with transcendental qualities, that is the right space of 'you', one achieves liberation or enlightenment, nivṛitti. By living with the space of 'I' we create more bondage. The demonic qualities make for bondage, meaning pravṛitti. Lord Kṛṣṇa assures Arjuna that he is born with divine qualities.

If we have ever contemplated whether we were living with 'You' or 'I', if the doubt ever arose, if we have suffered, if we have felt fear or guilt, be clear that we are born with divine nature. On the other hand, if we feel that we are living properly, and that we came here because we had no other entertainment, with the thought, 'Let me listen to whatever Master is saying,' if we have that attitude, then we know our nature.

If we have looked once into our being, considered and thought, 'Am I living with demonic nature? Or am I living with divine nature? What is my nature?' If we looked even once into our being and tried to measure ourselves with this scale, we are in the position of Arjuna. Be very clear that we too are born with divine qualities. So if you are worried after hearing the qualities, then be sure, you are born with divine qualities and you don't need to worry about it any further.

When a person who is righteous listens to such words, he will try to verify his own nature, since he is centered on dharma, righteousness. A person who is divine tries to chisel or correct himself, whereas a person who is demonic tries to correct others. With demonic nature, the person holds the hammer and chisel towards others, whereas with the divine nature, he holds the hammer and chisel towards himself.

When we carve ourselves, we become God. If we have ever looked within ourselves, then we are born with the divine nature. Now Arjuna has become mature; the moment he hears these truths, he looks into his being. Naturally then Lord Kṛṣṇa tells him that he is born with divine nature.

Kṛṣṇa describes the qualities of a person who lives based on 'I, I, I.' There is no need to read these qualities, because we know enough of them. All that we need to know is how to live with the attitude of 'You, You, You'.

Please understand that when we live with the root cognition of 'You, You, You', we completely forget ourselves; we disappear into Existence. We are in bliss.

Technique to Experience Divinity

Here is an important technique that Lord Kṛṣṇa speaks about.

For three days, create a space and think you are somebody else. It may seem funny. For instance, if you are a doctor, for three days think you are a sports person or a divine being with whom you feel connected. Clearly visualize yourself as that divine being, not as a doctor. The moment you change the idea, the root cognition about yourself, a tremendous freedom happens to you. Your tension disappears.

For three days try this meditation. For three days, create the space and think you are somebody else. Whatever you think of as your property, forget it; whatever you think are your problems, throw them out; whatever you think of as your profession, give it up. You can pick it up later, but for three days throw it all away.

You will see a new consciousness rising in you. If you throw away the 'me', that alone liberates you, and if you start working on 'You', you experience tremendous bliss. When you drop 'me', you experience peace and completion; when you start working with 'You', you experience peace and bliss. This is the straight path to peace and bliss.

A demon is not one with horns on his head, with protruding teeth, with six hands and a fearsome look. Kṛṣṇa says that one with a demonic nature is not aware of what bondage is and what liberation is. People of this nature are so deeply immersed in their attachment and aversion that they no longer feel themselves separated from these qualities. They are so much in bondage to their senses that they can no longer know they are in bondage.

pravṛttiṁ ca nivṛttiṁ ca janā na vidur āsurāḥ I na śaucam nāpi cācāro na satyam teṣu vidyate II 16.7

Even if you start with the doubt, 'Perhaps I'm not divine,' you start moving into that default divine nature. Caring for enriching others, focusing on the 'you' instead of 'I,' automatically takes you to the path of the Divine. The problem with most people however, is that their caring is a business transaction. They care when there is something in it for them. Whether the transaction is with mother, father, spouse, son, daughter, relative or friend, there is a 'What's in it for me?' attitude.

When the focus is on 'you,' as in caring for enriching someone with no expectation, with no conditions, we slip into a state of bliss. This state of bliss is our natural state. When you are focused on 'I', you invite suffering and misery.

Remember one thing: God is closest when we are blissful; when we are in misery we are farthest from God. The dilemma is that most of us remember God when we are in misery and that is the moment when we are farthest away also. Even if we shout from a place of misery, our voice cannot reach Him. When we are blissful, we need not even whisper. Without saying a single word, our prayer is understood. Even our silence is eloquent.

When we are in a blissful moment, when we feel blessed by Existence, let us be enriched that moment. That is when we are closest to God. Let that moment be of gratitude, prayer, and meditation. In that moment, remember God existentially, not verbally. Let your whole being feel the vibration and become overwhelmed with the beyond. Don't lose that moment. It is precious.

Everybody is born ready for divinity. If we miss it, it is totally our responsibility. We miss it because we never look within. We miss it because we never use the opportunity that life gives us. We miss it because we are lazy and we give up on our ourselves. We miss it because we are unconscious, sleepy. We miss it because we are not aware of the great blessing that life is.

How To Save Our Planet?

16.8 They say, the universe is without truth without (moral) basis without a God; not brought about by any regular causal sequence with lust for its cause; what else?

etāṃ dṛṣṭimavaṣṭabhyan aṣṭātmāno'lpabuddhayaḥ
prabhavant yugrakarmāṇaḥ kṣayāya jagato'hitāḥ || 16.9 ||

16.9 Holding this view, these ruined souls of small intellect and fierce deeds, come forth as the enemies of the world, for its destruction.

Please understand, the energy that is within us, the energy that drives us is the same energy that drives this Universe, this solar system and planet Earth. This energy is intelligence, the highest intelligence.

Kṛṣṇa says that when we are unable to recognize this energy, we are demonic. We do not believe everything operates out of this energy; instead we believe we make things happen with our greed, lust and desires. We believe we run this world with our puny intellect that we consider intelligence.

For years, many religious institutions believed planet Earth was the center of this Universe. They killed millions for believing otherwise. They assumed that they ruled earth, and that there was nothing beyond them. We need not even be irreligious to be demonic. We just need to be so self-centered that even our God is at our disposal. Then we are demonic.

Such a belief is different from the concept of believing that you are God and that God resides in you. This belief arises from deep awareness and completion instead of dark ignorance and is totally selfless. Once you become God, the rest of the world is part of you and you are part of that world. There is no longer the duality of 'I' and 'You'. Both merge into the non- duality of either 'I' or 'You'; it does not matter.

People who think the world is pure chemistry become demons. Naturally, if we think this whole world is just inert matter, we try to acquire more and more by killing everybody, by right or wrong means, and we do what we want to. Only when we understand that this Universe is intelligence, and that it responds to our thoughts and actions, will we live in the space of completion, and start really living.

Whatever we may achieve, wherever science may go, the Divine is alive. God exists and the cosmic intelligence runs this whole Universe. We cannot create dust. It has to be God's dust. There is a pure energy and intelligence that is the Source, the thread of the whole Universe.

When a person is living within the limits of the intellect and 'me', he cannot experience the Whole. He knows only logic and calculation and with that arrogance thinks he knows everything. People with demonic qualities say the world is produced out of sexual desire and lust. Please be clear that lust cannot be the reason. Intelligence, the divine energy is the cause and effect of this whole Universe; the cause and effect is the Divine that is responsible for the Universe. However, when we think it is lust or that we are responsible, we live with the idea of 'me, me, me'.

Kṛṣṇa says firmly that when we believe that we are the cause of this Universe, this Existence, we are so deluded and locked in our own little identities, with small intelligence, we destroy the world and ourselves as well.

Our ancient sages, the great Ṛṣis, were not fools. They did not retire to forests because they had nowhere else to go. Many were great kings, rulers of this planet, and they voluntarily left behind all that they had, so that they could understand where they came from. It was not enough for them to read and listen to the experiences of others; they chose to experience the truth themselves.

In the process, they realized themselves and became liberated. As many others over thousands of years have discovered, they discovered that they were part of this cosmic Existence. They realized and experienced that they too were Gods. They found that the same energy that operated in this Universe operated within them. They experienced that every living being on earth came from the same Source and is the same Source.

Now, what do we do when we need water? We dig a well and, as if by magic, water appears. Now our neighbor wants water; he too digs a well and finds water. Yet are these waters different? The locations are at two ends, but the source is the same. Not merely the source, the water is also the same. Yet, we fight over common resources, thinking that we created them and therefore we own them.

This cognition of selfishness leads only to destruction of everything, kṣayāya jagato 'hitaḥ (16.9) - the environment, the world and all living beings. One part of this world, perhaps with less than one-sixth of the world's population, the so-called developed world, the so-called Western world, consumes more than half of the natural resources of this world. What right do they have to do this? When we are not in the present, we are in a state of low intelligence, alpabuddhi; we become demons. Low intelligence leads to cruel deeds, prabhavanty ugra karmāṇaḥ (16.9). When we have no awareness of who we are, we do not care about anyone else.

All this can be changed. All that is needed is the cognitive shift from the demon to the divine, from 'I' to 'You'. The environment we live in, the oxygen we breathe, the water we drink, the soil that gives the food we eat, all this is energy. This is what we call panca bhūta in Sanskrit, the five elemental energies that sustain us. When these are destroyed by our low intelligence, out of our selfishness, the world around us collapses.

16.12 Bound by hundreds of ties of desire and enslaved and filled with anger, they strive to obtain wealth by unlawful means to fulfill sensual pleasures.

What Kṛṣṇa says here is applicable to a vast majority of people today.

Times have changed since the days of the Hindu educational system where, from childhood, one was guided toward self-completion. Modern day education is based upon logic, science and rules, and is short on self-completion and dharma, righteousness.

When we are caught in the material world, focused on 'I' and 'me', we are stuck in the mūlādhāra and svādiṣṭhāna cakras. Greed and fear rule us and we are forever in the bondage of attachment and aversion. Whatever we do is with selfish and impure motives and results in consequences that are mostly illusionary.

In the earlier verse, Kṛṣṇa explained how a person with demonic nature could destroy this world. Here, He shows how such a person can destroy himself. Out of pride, arrogance and hypocrisy, such a person moves in a path directed by purely selfish and material objectives and derives results that produce suffering. When we focus on matter, we tend to lose sight of the energy inherent in matter. When we focus on the form, we cannot see the formless that enables the form. What is permanent in both cases is the formless energy that drives the form and matter.

Science has moved a long way from the Newtonian model based on matter and form. This model is no longer relevant. From the days of Einstein, when matter and energy were linked inextricably, the concept has changed. Today all sciences accept that matter and energy not only co-exist, but also that the same object or event can be perceived or experienced by the observer as matter or energy or both.

So, we are back to the Hindu master Ādī Śaṅkarācarya's theory that the observer determines what is being observed. We may think this is fanciful. However, this is an accepted theory in the most advanced form of Quantum Physics today. Elementary subatomic particles, when observed in identical conditions with identical tools, appear differently to different observers. As yet there is no explanation for this phenomenon.

Our ancient sages explained that this happens based on our deep root cognitions, which colors our perceptions. When science is sufficiently advanced, it will accept this truth.

Just as the army tanker has teeth in its wheels and leaves its footprint when it goes on the road, in the same way, you leave the imprint of the guilt from your past, when you plan your future with fantasy, without responsibility. When you take responsibility, it is no more a fantasy. But when you don't take responsibility, it is a fantasy. When you plan for your future without responsibility, you leave the imprint of the guilt from your past.

Once we know how to lead our life without fantasies with responsibility, the fear of death disappears. Then suffering and misery dissolve automatically. We move from the demonic into the divine realm.

Here Lord Kṛṣṇa explains the same concept in a deeper way and gives a beautiful punchline. Many take shelter in pleasures and pain that end only with their death. With some, even at that time, it doesn't end. They think of the money they paid for insurance, casket, marble gravestone, etc. They regard gratification of desires as the sole objective in life.

The nature of the unconscious mind is to react to the senses. We may think we respond consciously. But almost all the time our reactions are instinctive, decided by vāsanās and saṁskāras, conflicting patterns and root patterns, rather than by conscious application of our rational mind. This is what Kṛṣṇa refers to as the nature of a demonic person.

Instinct is the nature of animals, and because it is their nature, it works well for them. They flow with nature. Instinct is not the nature of humans. Human consciousness can rise to the intuitive level, in which awareness results in high action. This is the potential of the Divine inherent in all of us. Instead of rising to the intuitive level, the super conscious level, most people find it easier to descend into the instinctive or unconscious level.

The problem is that we do not know how to fulfill desires. We go through peaks of emotions goaded by our desires and then slip into valleys of depression and guilt. Our emotions are not authentic because they do not touch our inner core. If we intensely experience these events born out of desires and perceived by our senses, we find that neither the peaks thrill us nor the valleys sadden us. We don't need to suppress or ignore these emotions; we can experience them fully without differentiation and move on.

We rush towards pleasure and away from pain. We are so eager to fulfill our desires that we go to any length to amass wealth and do any deed, however questionable it may seem. As Kṛṣṇa says, this goes on until we die. If we expect that we will suddenly be filled with thoughts of the Divine at death, even though our whole life we chased only pleasures, this is another foolish fantasy.

If all our life we have been chasing money, at the point of death also, we will be obsessed with money, even if we realize that we can't take it with us. If all our life we have been obsessed with lust, we will die in lust. If we live as a demon, focused on 'me', we cannot suddenly take the leap to 'You' at the point of death. That does not happen.

Only if man blossoms in his consciousness, he is God; he is bliss. He is in nityānanda.

Sensory Traps

anekacittavibhrāntā mohajālasamāvṛtāḥ
prasaktāḥ kāmabhogeṣu patanti narake'śucau || 16.16 ||

16.16 Thus confused by various anxieties and caught in a net of illusions, one becomes too deeply attached to sensory pleasures and falls into hell.

Kṛṣṇa does not let go. He wants Arjuna and mankind to understand how deeply the human psyche is damaged by the ego.

Śaṅkara defines āhāra or food, in one of his commentaries, to mean all sensory inputs, whereas traditionally āhāra is translated as food. Food, as we normally understand it, is what the mouth consumes. This is the sustenance upon which the physical body feeds and grows. Many live only to eat, but a few aware ones eat only enough to sustain them, so that they can live.

Every sensory organ has its own āhāra, inputs, upon which it feeds. Based on these inputs, the eye, ear, tongue, nose and skin develop their desires and convey these desires to the bodymind system. Control of these senses and the desires that they weave is what sage Patañjali prescribed as pratyāhāra, one of the eight methods of his Aṣṭāṇga Yoga.

Pratyāhāra is not suppression or starving the senses. Just as we need to eat in order to live, the senses need inputs to function. However, these inputs can be regulated so that the fantasies they weave are kept in control.

The average human is led by his senses; he does not lead his senses. His karmendriya, the organs of action that are responsible for movements are driven by these senses without the need for input from the conscious mind. Instinctively, they avoid pain and welcome pleasure.

Understand: Once we allow our mind to get driven away by the senses, there is no stopping. We won't know how to make it stop either. So we continue with our fantasies. We fantasize about accumulating wealth. Unfortunately for us, the purpose of gaining wealth is rarely to enjoy it. If that was the reason, all we need to do is to gain some wealth and then spend it on enjoyment.

In most cases, the joy of acquisition becomes the drive for the person rather than the joy of using the wealth. It has nothing to do with what one can do with the wealth. It has to do with how much more we have than all the other people that we know.

The day our neighbor buys a new air-conditioner, the temperature in our house goes up. The day our neighbor buys a new car, our car, which till that day ran well, will stall. As soon as we see another woman wearing the latest style shoes, our shoes that had fit absolutely fine, start pinching.

We are driven by comparison and envy. We are not merely fulfilling our needs, we are actually fulfilling other people's wants and desires. From childhood, we are taught to grab. Nothing we have is enough. Nothing fulfills us. Until death, we are driven by greed.

Existence is waiting to shower us with all that we need. The problem is that we never stop to understand what we need. All the time we are caught in the web of our sensory fantasies, and we run after what others own; we let our senses lead us.

Once we move from the 'me' focused demonic state into the 'you' based divine state, we no longer need to worry about creating wealth, developing a power base, establishing relationships or whatever else we have focused attention upon all our lives. Existence takes care of all this. Existence takes care of us. If instead, we are focused on our own self, 'me,' be sure, we are moving in a downward spiral that Kṛṣṇa says takes us into hell.

Cast Into Suffering

16.20 These foolish beings attain repeated birth amongst the species of demonic life. Without ever achieving Me, O Kaunteya, they sink into the most abominable existence.

Kṛṣṇa has said in other verses that He will receive anyone with compassion and liberate them. Here He says He will cast them aside into suffering. How do we reconcile these two positions?

Both positions are true. After all, every word that an enlightened Master utters is true. It is our understanding that needs to evolve.

Kṛṣṇa is compassion Incarnate. Anyone who surrenders to Him is liberated. That is the absolute truth. The problem is that we only pretend to surrender. What we have are mere words with no integrity and no authenticity. Our thoughts do not match our words, and our words do not match our actions. As human beings we have free will. The problem is that we feel free, yet we are unwilling to exercise our will.

People ask whether they are controlled by destiny or free will. Actually no destiny binds them; they are free to exercise their will.

The Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad puts it so well: as are your thoughts, so is your will; as is your will, so your action, as are your actions, so is your destiny.

Destiny is nothing but the end result of how we exercise our free will. The problem is, we have no will; in the morning we want to do one thing, by noon it is something different, by night it is totally different. So, if our will keeps changing, how can it ever be converted into action?

Create the Space of Surrender

People say they have not been able to create the space by visualizing it in the present and make things happen in reality; they claim they have tried and nothing happens.

Nothing happens because you are full of self-contradiction, self-doubt, self-hatred and impossibilities. If we wish to get rid of back pain, and we keep saying, 'Let this back pain go,' it will never go. Every time we utter the words back pain, our mind latches more firmly onto the past hangover of pain. If we want to get rid of pain, we must complete with all self-doubts and create the space for health visualizing it in the present; not pain, not getting rid of pain, but feeling healthy.

When you create the space to make something into reality, complete with all the doubts, complete with all the impossible ideas that come to you, complete with your ability to even create the space. Stand up powerfully without listening to any form of impossible shouted by your mind towards you.

When you create a space, first thing itself you will face is depression of past failures and complete distrust. 'How can this be reality? I suffered too much! I know it is not possible!' This is the first thing you go through, and two days you get depressed and lock yourself in the bedroom. So, understand, when you create a space, this is the first thing you face. So, complete with that first. Completion with that is the most important thing.

Bringing your past hangover into the present is incompletion. Bringing your future possibility into the present is space creation.

Bring your future possibility into the present and decide you will not challenge the power of the space, but you will take the responsibility to fulfill that space.

When we surrender to Kṛṣṇa, our surrender must be total. We must take the responsibility to fulfill the space of surrender. There can be nothing between Him and us. Then, He surely liberates us. Because then we are already liberated, we are in Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

Here, He talks about people who feel no need to surrender to Him. They are so full of ego, that they feel He is their competitor. He says He will cast them into the material world. In this material world, they can follow their senses, sense objects and what they consider to be sensual pleasures till death. It is our decision. Even Kṛṣṇa is helpless to change it, because He has given us the power to decide. He has handed over the decision to us; to decide whether we want to be 'me' or 'You' focused: demonic or divine.

'You' - The Foundation of Surrender

Saying again and again, 'I believe in what Kṛṣṇa says,' has no meaning. It does not help. Faith does not mean belief. Belief is not trust. Belief is a pseudo-trust, imposed, cultivated out of fear. It is not something that has grown from within us. Rather, it is something that has been implanted by others: society, religion, the state. Believers remain stupid; they never grow in intelligence. And society does not want people to be intelligent.

The 'yes' of a man who cannot say 'no' is always powerless. First a man must learn to say 'no,' only then does his 'yes' have meaning.

Faith is different from belief. With faith we grow. We grow in love to a Master and to God. Most of us look to God as a person to pray to, to worship. We feel God is a third person. He is not us. Prayer and worship become important pathways to reach this form. The moment we drop the idea of a person, prayer disappears; instead, meditation becomes significant.

Meditation is going inwards. So, it is more difficult for many who are educated rationally. That's why meditation never became the central core of religion in the West. In the East all the great masters founded their teachings on meditation. They taught followers to turn inwards. They taught them to be God, not to worship God. Meditation leads us to surrender. Meditation is the process of creation of the space of completion. Completion is the knowledge that we are one with the Universe. It is then about 'you' instead of 'me'. The feeling of 'you' and the absence of 'me' dissolves the idea of 'I' as identity. This is the foundation of surrender.

Become a servant of love. You then become a master of humanity. One begins as a servant. However, one ends as a master. In this world, you often begin as a master and you end up as a servant. That is the law of the external world. In the inner world there is a totally different law. You begin as a servant and you can end up as a master. You surrender to love, you surrender and love and you shall certainly conquer the world.

Buddha has said: In the outer world everything is sweet in the beginning and bitter in the end; in the inner world, everything is bitter in the beginning and sweet in the end. Only the end matters. Where you begin is not in your control.

Once you understand how to love the people around you, only then can you love God. You cannot hate your neighbor, brother or spouse and love only God. This is impossible. When you start loving those around you, you start loving yourself more. Strangely, you start thinking less about yourself. In your defeat, you win others.

This is what surrender is about: It is asking for your defeat. Surrender, renunciation of the self, or sannyāsa is a defeat, a defeat of the ego. God is realized the moment the ego is dissolved.

Surrender is the search for the divine principle. Call it God, truth, freedom, or nirvāṇa. They mean the same thing. The search is for something that is missing in life. We are alive but unaware of what life is about. We exist, but we are completely oblivious to the fact of who we are.

This is what Kṛṣṇa talks about in this chapter. The courage to move from 'me' to 'You' is the courage to trust, love and surrender. When that happens there is nothing else but Him. We become Kṛṣṇa.

When we are one with the Universe, one with Kṛṣṇa, there is nothing else we need to look up to. There is nothing else to look for. We have reached eternal bliss, nithyānanda.

16.22 Those who have escaped these three gates of hell, O Kaunteya (son of Kuntī), behave in a manner beneficial to the (evolution of the) soul, and thus (gradually) attain the supreme destination.

यः शास्त्रविधिमुत्सृज्य वर्तते कामकारतः ।

16.23 But he who discards scriptural injunctions and acts according to his base impulses attains neither perfection, nor happiness, nor the supreme destination.

तस्माच्छास्त्रं प्रमाणं ते कार्याकार्यव्यवस्थितौ । tasmācchāstraṃ pramāṇaṃ te kāryākāryavyavasthitau jñātvā śāstravidhānoktaṃ karma kartumihārhasi || 16.24 ||

16.24 By the regulations of the scriptures, one should understand what is duty and what is not duty. After being versed in scriptural injunctions, one should act accordingly.

Kṛṣṇa ends the chapter with this advice: Shed anger, greed and lust and we will be saved. He calls them gates to hell. These are the qualities of the blocked mūlādhāra cakra. These are attributes that bind us to 'me' and 'mine'. We mistakenly believe that these qualities are essential for our life on this planet. Nothing can be more wrong.

tri-vidhaṁ narakasyedaṁ dvāraṁ nāśanam ātmanaḥ | kāmaḥ krodhas tathā lobhas tasmād etat trayam tyajet || 16.21 ||

As long as we are bound by anger, lust and greed, kāmaḥ krodhas tathā lobhas, what He calls the three gateways to hell, we are in bondage; we are in suffering. We do not need to die and be escorted to some place called hell. We live in it day after day and suffer. Kāma, krodha and lobha: lust, anger and greed - when we shed these we are liberated. Ramakrishna says again and again, drop kāñcana and kāminī, gold and women, greed and lust, and we will be liberated. Lust for women, and greed for gold, these two desires more than anything else, cause all our sufferings.

Krodha, anger, arises out of the suffering. We feel thwarted and we feel angry. The cycle goes on. When these three combine, they create moha, or delusion. At one level these emotions are desires. Anger, greed and lust are expressions related to desires. Desires are energy. Lust is what drives us into reproduction and it is essential for the survival of species. Greed is the extreme expression of our survival needs. Anger is often the driving force to get things done. They achieve positive results, too. However, Kṛṣṇa refers to the expression of these emotions in the context of self-gratification. He refers to the gratification of base impulses. The baseness of the impulse is related to the intention, the context. As long as these are expressed with the cognition of 'me,' they are base and demonic impulses. There are no liberating features.

Lust can be transformed when it is expressed in an unselfish and unattached way. Lust will then totally disappear. Compassion and caring will be in its place. Lust is one aspect of the broad spectrum of desires. Unending desire is greed. When a desire is truly fulfilled, it leaves us. Karma is unfulfilled desires that goad us into action. We can never fulfill our desires because many of these desires are not truly ours. We borrow these desires from other people. There is never contentment. Each desire is the seed of suffering. That is why Kṛṣṇa calls it a gateway to hell. But how do we get rid of these desires?

Anger and guilt are byproducts of desires. What we cannot acquire makes us angry. Anger produces guilt. Being angry towards a person is fruitless. Much of the negativity expressed towards others comes back to us. It depletes our energy. Anger or even guilt is also often an expression of one's inability to do something. It is a self-centered emotion born of one's weakness, powerlessness.

Suppression of anger does not help. It can actually lead to chronic diseases like cancer. When we learn to complete with the emotion of anger instead of controlling it, it becomes energy instead of a disability. Anger needs to be completed with and transformed into the positive energy of authentic action.

What Kṛṣṇa asks us to do is to complete with the negative emotions like lust, greed and anger and create the space, with responsibility, to transform them into positive energies. He tells us that these are gateways to hell so long as we use them from the root cognition of 'me.' When we do completion and transform these emotions into energy, by creating the space of 'you', these same emotions become gateways to heaven, gateway to bliss.

Bliss Comes with Total Trust in Existence

Bliss is never an achievement on our part. Whatsoever we do to achieve bliss is doomed to fail. Bliss always comes from the beyond as a gift. We must be passively receptive to it. We are not to be aggressively active for it, just be receptive like a womb. We must be feminine to receive bliss. We must become pregnant with God. When ego or 'I' disappears, anger, greed and lust also disappear. What is left is bliss.

Bliss is a by-product of total trust in Existence or in God. God is not a person but the impersonal presence. The very life or Existence is God and the living energy is God. And to trust in it means to stop struggling against it. Struggling against it creates misery; it is trying to go upstream.

Trust means surrender, going with the stream. And going with the stream is bliss. All misery is because of the ego and its struggle, its resistance. Trust means that resistance has been dropped. You don't think of yourself as separate from the Whole; you are just an intrinsic part of the great harmony of Existence. Then bliss is natural.

The way to bliss is through the heart and through devotion. The real transformation happens when your energy moves from the head to the heart. When you reach the heart, you reach the core of your consciousness. God loves us: He has not given up on us, He is not indifferent to us and He is continuously concerned about us, He cares. The deeper this idea enters your heart, the better, because when you feel more loved by God, you will be able to have love for God, and you will have love for others. That's how we are able to love: if we are loved, we can love. If we are not loved, we don't know how to love; we don't know what love is.

God is our substance, our very being. He is not something outside us; He is our innermost core. We do not need to seek and search for Him. Only this has to be remembered: we have forgotten it. God is not lost; only we have forgotten who we are.

Don't be identified with the body. Don't be identified with your mind, country, race or religion. Don't be identified with anything. Don't think, 'I am this' or 'I am that'. Remember, neither 'this' nor 'that'. That is one of the secret teachings of the mystics: neti-neti, neither 'this' nor 'that'. If you can avoid both polarities, day and night, life and death, body and mind, then slowly a third energy arises in you, a third force arises in you. That is consciousness. That's your reality. That is freedom - freedom from fear, anxiety, misery, freedom from the world, freedom from the wheel of life and death. Then you are a witness, watching a mirror reflecting but not getting caught in any reflection. When you are a witness, the 'me' and 'mine' drop. What remains is identification with your energy, with your state, not your status. In that state, you are one with all. You are in the space of living advaita, oneness, living the truth that everything is 'you' and 'you' are everything. Because 'you' is 'me', 'me' is 'you', 'you' 'me' becomes 'you-me'.

It is 'you-me' that becomes the center, no longer 'me'. You become divine, daivik.

Thus ends the sixteenth chapter named Daivāsura Sampad Vibhāga Yogaḥ, 'The Yoga of Divine and Demonic Nature,' of the Bhagavad Gītā Upaniṣad, Brahmavidyā Yogaśāstra, the scripture of yoga dealing with the science of the Absolute in the form of Śrī Kṛṣṇārjuna saṃvād, dialogue between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna.

Chapter 17
Śraddhatraya Vibhāga Yogaḥ

Authenticity - Straight Way To Liberation

In the seventeenth chapter, Kṛṣṇa straightaway gives the methodology or technique to imbibe whatever He speaks in Śraddhatraya Vibhāga Yogaḥ, the Yoga of Discerning the Three-Fold Faith. After all the words that Kṛṣṇa expressed in earlier chapters, no new teaching is given here. All that Kṛṣṇa has spoken and taught so far is a prelude to what He is speaking now. Here, Kṛṣṇa speaks about authenticity, śraddha. Please understand that śraddha is not faith; always the word śraddha is translated as faith. This is not correct.

Authenticity to Live the Truth

Listen, human beings do not suffer because they don't get to listen to the truths. They suffer because they don't live the truth. Śraddha means faith plus the courage of authenticity to live the truth. Śraddha means the courage of authenticity to live your peak possibility. With authenticity, śraddha you awaken the power of thinking, mano siddhi to live the truth.

With authenticity, there is no more space for unconscious thinking, because we will always be aware of the causes and effects that are playing in our life. With śraddha we will never fail. Understand that there is a possibility that we may fail with faith alone. When we have faith without the courage of authenticity to experiment, to live the truth, it is like going to a restaurant, reading the menu card and just leaving. We miss eating. We never taste the food. We never experience the great powers of thinking and living the truth. However, when we have śraddha, authenticity, there is no chance of missing the truth. A person never misses when he has śraddha.

Lord Kṛṣṇa explains and now puts all His emphasis on śraddha. After sixteen chapters of teachings, He has nothing new to add. He has said whatever can be said. He has explained all the seven layers of energy. In the fourteenth chapter, He started with Guṇatraya Vibhāga Yoga - the three guṇas (attributes) of sattva, rajas and tamas, the three-folds of root thought patterns. Then in the Puruṣottama Yoga, He explained the causal layer, where the root thought patterns are stored in seed form. The deeper layers of the cosmic and nirvāṇic bodies are explained in the sixteenth chapter. Kṛṣṇa elaborates on the attributes of the Divine and the demon, the no-ego and ego, 'you' or 'me'. The root cause of our identity that separates us from our core space of completion, which is divine, is explained in the sixteenth chapter.

Now Kṛṣṇa comes to the seventeenth chapter, Śraddhatraya Vibhāga Yogaḥ. Nothing more needs to be added. Whatever can be said has been said. Now all we need is śraddha. If somebody has had a good feast, his stomach is full. All he needs is an antacid, 'Digene'. Throughout the chapters Lord Kṛṣṇa has given Arjuna a beautiful spiritual feast. All Arjuna needs is 'Digene' to digest the whole thing and enjoy. This chapter is 'Digene'. The whole emphasis is on śraddha: authenticity, integrity, truthfulness and straightforwardness.

We may question, 'Why would He devote one full chapter for śraddha?' Please understand that we invariably miss Enlightenment because of lack of understanding and intranalyzing of this subject, śraddha. It is not that we don't know the truth that Lord Kṛṣṇa speaks. We know whatever Lord Kṛṣṇa speaks of and all that He has spoken so far. We know it all. It's not that we don't know. Yet why have we not become Kṛṣṇa?

We miss one thing - Śraddha. That's the only thing we need. Our problem is not that we don't know. Our problem is that we know too much and we are unable to digest and live it.

Swami Vivekananda says beautifully that instead of knowing the whole library, we should know just five concepts. We should experiment to live with these five concepts with śraddha, authenticity. Let the five concepts become your life. That is enough. Nothing else is necessary. Instead of having the whole library in your head, have the five concepts in your heart.

Please understand, you might have struggled, spent money, time and energy, and finally passed your driving test to get your driving license, but it will be useful to you, only if you are regularly driving. In the same way, Śrī Kṛṣṇa's song, His words will directly be useful to you, only if you are living them. Use all the principles. Use all the truths. Don't deny them in the name of practicality or convenience. Be very clear, once you are convinced, you will live the spiritual truths.

Living has nothing to do with some hard and strict rules. Wherever you can, pull the truths into your thinking. Not having gap between your spiritual understandings and your day-to-day life is Living.

Here, Kṛṣṇa emphasizes the importance of śraddha: how śraddha and only śraddha can transform your whole life. Understand, whatever you believe, if you have śraddha, if you have authenticity in aligning that belief in all your identities - inner image, outer image, others' image and life's image, you will achieve the Ultimate. Understand, śraddha, authenticity. Authenticity is nothing but being sincere to the four aspects of you: what you feel as you or inner image; what you project you to others or outer image; what you think about others and life or others' image, and what others hold you as or life image. Being sincere to all these four is authenticity.

What is being sincere in all these four identities? Having the best inner image, having the best outer image, having the best idea about others and life; and being very sincere about what others hold as you. Just create the best image, the most sincere image that you wanted to feel, think and project about you.

Again and again, align your thinking to authenticity. See very clearly: Are you functioning towards the best inner image by constantly developing liberated thinking? Liberated thinking means your thinking should not have or lead you towards powerlessness. Constantly your thinking should be leading you to being in a powerful space.

It is neither difficult nor easy, but you have to do it. It is nothing but tuning yourself to a certain frequency. How tuning or changing a channel is neither difficult nor easy, it is a simple technique; same way, go on tuning your thinking to śraddha, authenticity. Always think about your thinking and align your thinking to authenticity.

Kṛṣṇa declares earlier, 'śraddhāvān labhate jñānaṁ (4.39) - the person who is established in authenticity, experiences the true wisdom, Enlightenment.' Listen, śraddha, authenticity will become reality in you, only when you live it.

Live authenticity. Many people have achieved God, Enlightenment and attained the Truth through the path of living authenticity. Buddha never spoke of God. Yet not only did He become enlightened, thousands attained enlightenment because of Him. What you believe is not important, how intense you are is important; how integrated and authentic you are in living all the four identities is important.

Working with the truth and creating the most sincere inner image, outer image, others' image and life's image based on that truth is authenticity. Authenticity is not just listening, reading or believing in the truth. Authenticity is working with the truths with responsibility. It is straightaway executing them to your peak possibility, experimenting with them and having the courage to play with them.

Just listening to these truths is not enough; start living them by taking up higher responsibilities. Only then you pull the tattvas into your life, and the tattvas pull you into their life. That is the only way any growth is possible.

Possible to Live the Gītā

Both meditation and gambling require courage. We need courage for gambling. And we also need courage for meditation. Meditation is the ultimate gamble we take up with higher responsibility. With ordinary gambling, we gamble with money out of irresponsibility. In meditation we take the responsibility to gamble with our ego. We take the highest responsibility to gamble with our whole being to experience the space of possibility, authenticity, śraddha. But one thing is for sure in the gamble of meditation: if we lose, we win. Only losers win in this game.

Spiritual life needs the courage of authenticity. That is why Swami Vivekananda calls his spiritual disciples 'dhīraḥ'. Dhīra means someone who is courageous, who is courage personified. We might ask, 'Why do spiritual people need courage? For spiritual life, don't we need to be silent?' No! Spiritual life calls for courage to declare completion and live it with integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching. We need the courage of authenticity. We need to take the responsibility.

When you landed on planet Earth, so much energy and power is deposited in your bank balance, and the cheque book is available in your hand. You just need to sign it. The signature is authenticity, śraddha. Reclaim it.

In the past sixteen chapters we have heard many different teachings, different understandings and so many different techniques directly from the Master of Masters, Śrī Kṛṣṇa. We have heard everything. All of this can help transform our life only if we have the courage to live them. Otherwise they add more weight to our head, that's all.

Please understand that if we receive these teachings and store them in our head, we gain more head weight, nothing else. Now we think, 'I know the Gītā.' However, we need to create the space of possibility in our heart and live the Gītā. We need authenticity to live Gītā.

For example, if we eat too much food and we are unable to digest it, what happens? We have a stomach ache and we vomit. Similarly, if we hear all these things and we don't experience it, we will get a headache. We will catch people and vomit all these things on them. Please be very clear that unless we have authenticity, unless we experiment to live these truths to our peak possibility, listening to these truths is dangerous.

Everything that we listened in the Gītā, all that we cognized inside our minds, should be responded with the idea 'Possible'! Possible! Possible! That should be the word, the mantra ringing in our heart, our inner space.

If you don't practice, listening to these truths is dangerous. We may ask why. Because now, by and by, even after so many days of listening or reading these great truths, we will start hallucinating that we know, without knowing. That is the most dangerous game. Never ever get caught in that game.

When you bring yourself to the peak of you, there is no wastage of inner powers. When you waste your love, it becomes lust. When you waste your responsibility, it becomes jealousy. The lower dimensions of you are nothing but rejected parts of your higher dimension. When your higher dimension is not materialized, when it is not realized, your lower dimension is empowered.

Bring yourself to the peak possibility. It can happen only when you practice living the truth of Gītā every moment. Spiritual life needs courage to harness the power of words by integrity, power of thinking by authenticity, power of feeling by responsibility, power of living by enriching; and the consciousness of dhīraḥ, courage.

Bharaṇi - Killer of Thousand Minds

A beautiful history:

The great saint, Dakśināmūrti Swamigal, lived in Tamil Nadu, South India, near a place called Tiruvaroor. Here is a historical incident from his life:

A poet from the king's court met Dakśināmūrti Swamigal and was inspired by his presence. Consequently, the poet wrote one thousand songs in the Bharaṇi style in the saint's honor. Bharaṇi is a special style of poetry involving one thousand verses. The rule is that only someone who shows courage and power and kills one thousand elephants in war is qualified to have such a song written about him. Here, this poet was so inspired by the saint's presence that he simply wrote the songs on him on the spot.

The king also considered himself to be Bharaṇi. Suddenly, one day in court, out of ego and pride, the king announced, 'I am the only Bharaṇi in this whole country, in this whole region.' One of his poets stood up and said, 'No O king, you are wrong. Dakśināmūrti Swamigal is also a Bharaṇi. One of your court poets has sung a Bharaṇi about him.'

The king's ego was hurt. He said, 'What? Who is this person deserving Bharaṇi? Bring him here.'

The poet said, 'No, no, he is a beggar. He will not come here.'

Beggars can never be forced. We can force anybody but a homeless person to do what we want, because he has no desire. As long as someone has some desire, he obeys the social system. But the one beyond desire does not care for name, home, fame or security. In this case, this man was a beggar and a saint. They could not bring him to the king.

The king felt deeply offended. He said, 'What? For a beggar, Bharaṇi! Which fool sang the songs? Call him to me right now.' The poet was summoned to the court. The king said, 'Fool, how dare you sing bharaṇi for a beggar.' The poet replied, 'O King, please forgive me. Before you say anything, before you abuse that Master, it would be nice if you would go to see him.' The king said, 'What kind of advice are you giving me? Tomorrow morning your head will be cut off.'

That was the king's usual trend, direct violence. Only foolish people immediately express violence. When they can't behave in an intelligent way, when they don't know the truth and they don't have enough energy to convince the other person of the truth, they take to the sword.

Take for example the history of Buddhism or Hinduism. They never converted anyone with the sword. They had intelligence. They transformed through logic, analysis and enriched the other person with the Truth. For example, great Masters like Ādī Śaṅkarācārya and Maṇḍana Miśra had different views on a particular subject, still they did not fight with each other. Śaṅkara did not say, 'If you don't convert to Vedānta, I will kill you.' They sat together and analyzed what they knew. It was a loving discussion. It was a beautiful scene. Śaṅkara and Maṇḍana Miśra sorted out their philosophical differences with a deep respect through khandana-mandana, positive discussions and expositions without rancor.

The person who acted as judge in the discussion was Maṇḍana Miśra's wife. Can you believe that the wife of one of the competitors was the judge? Never! And here, Śaṅkara appointed Maṇḍana Miśra's wife, Bhārati as the judge. And finally, she passed judgment of the debate in favor of Śaṅkara. The whole thing happened out of love. There was no violence, no cutting, no killing, nothing. It was just a simple discussion.

Throughout the history of Eastern religions, there was never any cutting or killing. They never converted through the sword because they did not believe in killing. They had enough intelligence to express the concept. And one more thing, the loser automatically joined the group which expressed the truth more clearly. When Śaṅkara convinced Maṇḍana Miśra, Miśra dropped everything and surrendered his life to Śaṅkara. He became a disciple of Śaṅkara and took the spiritual name Sureśvarācārya. He followed the path of Śaṅkara's teachings.

We can never achieve anything by the sword. Only destruction is possible through the sword, never construction. This king, foolish as he was, straightaway said, 'Kill him. Tomorrow morning the poet should be killed.' The poet replied, 'I have no problem. I have experienced Truth through this master. I am ready to die; however, if you are really intelligent, meet this Master at least once. Don't punish me until you have seen him. Then I will be ready to die.'

The king agreed, 'Alright, I will see him. If he is not a real Bharaṇi, we will kill him also.'

The king set off to meet the Master with all his paraphernalia: chariots, foot soldiers, elephants, armies and all his warriors. Kings always travel with their paraphernalia because they lose their identity without their paraphernalia. In contrast, Dakśināmūrti Swamigal was a Paramahamsa, an enlightened Master. Masters always live by themselves. They do not need any paraphernalia. This Master was an Avadhūta, which means he never wore clothes. The king found him sitting under a big banyan tree, without any paraphernalia.

This was the scene: This simple beggar sat in a corner without any clothes. He was in bliss and peace, completely soaked in Existence, in brahmajñāna (knowledge of the Supreme). He sat in intense silence and peace. This silence penetrated anyone in his presence. The king appeared with his warriors and entire army to confront this yogi.

The king jumped down from his chariot and advanced towards the Master. The Master did not move. There was no movement in him even after seeing the king and his army and hearing all the commotion. He opened his eyes and looked straight into the king's eyes. It was the first time that someone looked straight into the king's eyes.

The king had always looked at others straight in their eyes and they had always put their heads down. For the first time somebody looked straight into the eyes of the king. After a few seconds, the king put his head down. The king clearly felt something happening inside his being. He felt like a mere beggar in the Master's presence. He did not know how to act or react. It was a strange situation. He was at a loss. He could not decide what to do. He felt overwhelmed.

Dakśināmūrti Swamigal signaled to the king to sit down. There were no words from him. He simply made a sign asking the king to sit. All the ministers and the army dropped their weapons and also sat in silence. In ten minutes the whole army was sitting down. It is impossible to make an army sit. Even the leader of the army can't make the army sit. But here the whole army sat in silence.

One hour passed. Then three hours passed; then the evening also passed; one day got over. The Master, the king and the entire army sat in silence. Not a single word was exchanged. There were no instructions, nothing. They did not even greet each other. They were merely sitting.

Three days got over. Now the Master thought, 'This is too much. The poor man and his entire army have been simply sitting for three days without food and even without toilet visits. These people must return to their kingdom, to the palace. The king must take care of the country.

The Master opened his eyes and said, 'Now you can go.' The king fell flat at the Master's feet, did namaskār (obeisance) and came out of the forest.

Then the king summoned the poet and said, 'Leave alone thousand elephants, you may sing for the Master praises that you usually sing for the one who has killed ten thousand elephants!'

The poet made a beautiful statement, 'Killing ten thousand elephants is easy. It is not a big deal. You don't need any powers for it. You just need the weapons and you can simply kill; however, killing one's mind is the real achievement.'

This Master had killed the king's mind. Not only had Dakśināmūrti Swamigal killed his own mind, he could kill anybody else's mind if they sat in his presence. He made the impossible into 'i m possible' with his power of authenticity, the space of possibility. Killing ten thousand elephants doesn't take courage, but killing your mind requires the courage of authenticity.

Courage of Authenticity

All we need for real spiritual life is courage of authenticity to experiment with the truth. We typically lack that quality. We listen to everything. Wherever there are discourses and lectures, we go and listen to anyone who speaks. We read all the books. When it comes to facing the reality of putting this knowledge to test, there is no action.

Compromising is cowardice. Please understand that the person who compromises never experiences anything in his life; not only in the spiritual life, even in the outer world life. He can never experience life itself.

Authenticity to experience a single truth is enough. Nothing else is necessary. We don't need to do big things. Please be very clear, we can't call somebody 'a big person' if he does something big. What he does is unimportant; how he does it is important.

As an example, the great saint Nammalvar, who lived in Tamil Nadu, made garlands for Viṣṇu throughout his life. He did nothing else. He picked flowers from a garden, made garlands and gave it to God. He became enlightened. So many enlightened Masters did not do big things. They did small things in a big way. They had deep trust.

Another enlightened being did not even do that. He did not make garlands to offer God. Instead he threw a stone towards the Śiva liṅga everyday. His name was Sakyanayanar (Sakya refers to the clan of the Buddha, and Nayanar is a name for devotees of Śiva). Somehow he became a Buddhist monk. Because he was a Buddhist monk, he could not worship the Śiva liṅga in public. Yet he had tremendous respect and devotion for Śiva.

In Buddhism, at least one son from every family is given to the monastery at a young age. They bring him up and make him a Buddhist monk. Like that, Sakyanayanar was given away to a Buddhist monastery. Still, he had a deep devotion to Śiva. Everyday he went near the Śiva temple. It was not even a regular temple, it was just a small Śiva liṅga under a tree. From a distance he took a stone, visualized it as a flower and threw the stone at the Śiva liṅga. If someone observed him and asked, 'What are you doing?' he would say, 'I am only throwing stones at the Śiva liṅga.' He would throw the stones and leave that place.

One day when he threw a stone, an old man suddenly appeared and asked, 'What are you doing?' He replied, 'I am only throwing stones at the liṅga.'

The old man said, 'No, the way in which you throw shows your devotion. You may be throwing stones, but the way in which you are throwing shows devotion. Tell me who are you?'

Sakyanayanar replied, 'Somehow I was born in a Buddhist family, yet I am deeply devoted to Śiva. Everyday I come and offer my being to him by throwing a stone.

Immediately the old man turned around, gave darśan (vision) as Śiva and blessed him with Enlightenment.

Understand that what we do is unimportant; what we think is important. Even if we just clean our house, it is okay as long as we do it with complete and intense authenticity in our thinking in that moment. Authenticity is the power of thinking. In one moment we can make anything look like God; within the next moment, we can make anything look like a demon in our lives. Please understand, if we bow down to even a small stone, it can become a God. If we are afraid of that, even God will look like demon.

Live the Truth Through Words, Mind and Body

Understand that spiritual practice does not mean you need to go into a deep forest, hold your nose ten times, and breathe this way and that way. You will only torture yourself. Do anything, but do it with intensity, with authenticity. Have courage to express whatever you believe.

Don't bother whether the truth you believe is the ultimate Truth. You will never know whether it is ultimate unless you have the courage to authenticity to live it. Without living it, you cannot conclude. If you conclude without living it, it is prejudice. You cannot conclude without living it to your peak possibility. All you need is authentic courage to experiment living the truth that you believe.

Tamil has three words for satya (truth). One word is vaaimai, which means speaking the truth through the mouth. Another word is unmai, which is speaking the truth through your mind or heart. The third beautiful word is meimai, which means living the truth through your body.

In Tamil, 'mai' means body. Truth means living the truth through the body. All of us understand speaking the truth through the mouth and speaking the truth through the mind. However, what does 'living the truth through the body' mean? We have never heard this before.

This is where we miss the boat. We continuously think about the truth. We go on contemplating on the truth from morning till night. We speak what we think is the truth. Nonetheless, we forget one important thing: executing the truth in life, living the truth in life. That is where we miss. Living the truth in life is the essence.

Patañjali gives satya as the first instruction in his Aṣṭāṅga Yoga. This satya refers to truth in thought, word and action. It is vaaymai, unmai and maimai, all the three combined.

The authenticity with which we practice leads us to enlightenment. It is not necessary to have an enlightened Master as our Guru to become enlightened. Any master whom we follow sincerely with integrity and authenticity can lead to enlightenment. Even if we truly believe a stone idol will deliver us into liberation, it will do so. Our approach, our conviction, our courage and our trust elevate us.

Śraddha is total conviction in what we are feeling, thinking, speaking and doing. There should be no doubt in our mind about the path that we are following and why we are following it. All great Masters had undivided integrity and authenticity in their thinking and words in whatever they did. They never swerved from their chosen path no matter what challenges and problems they faced, including threats to their lives.

Śraddha, authenticity has to be practiced in every dimension of your life, at every level of your thinking, and at every level of your cognizance.

Bring yourself to the peak, whether it is related to your body, profession or relationships. When you bring yourself to your peak possibility relating to your body, it becomes health. When you bring yourself to your peak possibility relating to your profession, it becomes success. When you bring yourself to your peak possibility relating to others, it becomes happy relationships. When you bring yourself to your peak possibility relating to your whole life, it becomes Enlightenment. Understand that the ultimate step or the straight way to Enlightenment is authenticity to live the truth.

Way to Worship

teṣāṃ niṣṭhā tu kā kṛṣṇa sattvamāho rajastamaḥ || 17.1 ||

17.1 Arjuna says: What is the mode of devotion of those who perform spiritual practices with authenticity, but without following the scriptural injunctions, O Kṛṣṇa? Is it in the mode of goodness, aggression or ignorance?

Arjuna asks a beautiful question. Arjuna asks: 'Kṛṣṇa, those who discard the ordinances of the scriptures, śāstras and perform sacrifices, what is their position? Is it sāttvic, rājasic or tāmasic? What is the state of people who don't follow the instructions of the scriptures, the ancient books, and instead worship with śraddha, authenticity according to their own beliefs? Is it rajas, tamas or sattva? Are they in a peaceful (sāttvic) state, restless (rājasic) state or an ignorant (tāmasic) state?'

ye śāstra-vidhim utsṛjya yajante śraddhayānvitāḥ | teṣāṁ niṣṭhā tu kā kṛṣna sattvam āho rajas tamaḥ || 17.1 ||

Worship can occur at many levels. Arjuna's question is based upon the three attributes or guṇas. Worship is also dependent on our energy levels. Many people are comfortable worshipping at the physical level, the gross level, through techniques such as pūjā, going to temples to worship the deities, bathing in holy rivers, etc. From an energy point of view, these are linked to the earth energy and the water energy.

At another level of energy, one may perform fire sacrifices such as yajña or homa. These are related to the fire energy. Typically the energy of the fire is transferred to water pots that are placed around the sacrificial fireplace. This water, which is energized by the ritual, is then poured over idols, or sprinkled over people or upon the earth to energize them.

The energy of air, vāyu can be accessed through breathing techniques such as prāṇāyāma or chanting of verses. In the first nine verses of Śiva Sūtra, Lord Śiva explains these types of techniques to Devi, His disciple.

It is possible to access the etheric energy, ākāśa through meditation, though this requires understanding and awareness.

Each form of worship or sacrifice is based upon one's aptitude and inclination. Each of these is guided by scriptural instructions on how to perform the worship, when and where, etc.

Arjuna asks, 'How important is it to follow these instructions? What happens when one follows one's own inclinations and worships?'

This is an interesting question. A saint named Kannappan in Tamil Nadu worshipped Śiva with such intensity that he cut out his eyes and placed them on the Śiva liṅga. Other Masters placed all kinds of material at the altar including raw meat. Ramakrishna placed a thread under the nose of Kāli's deity to check whether She was breathing before he offered Her the ritual food.

Many Masters have followed their inclination when worshipping their favorite deity, iṣṭa devatā. Scriptures never stood in their way of worship. However, these Masters were completely authentic in what they were doing. They had śraddha. That is important. Arjuna's query is in this connection.

Don't Torture Me

17.2 The Supreme Lord Kṛṣṇa says: The natural authenticity (faith) of embodied beings is of three kinds: goodness, aggression, and ignorance. Now listen about these from Me.

17.3 O Arjuna, the authenticity of each is in accordance with one's own natural disposition. One is known by one's authenticity. One can become whatever one wants to be.

17.4 Men in the nature of goodness worship the deities; those in the nature of aggression worship the demons and those in the nature of ignorance worship ghosts and spirits.

17.5 Ignorant persons of demonic nature are those who practice severe austerities without following the prescription of the scriptures, who are full of hypocrisy and egotism, who are impelled by the force of desire and attachment and who senselessly torture the elements in their body and also Me who dwells within the body.

17.6 Senselessly torturing all the elements in the body, and Me also who dwells within the body — you may know these to be of demoniacal resolves.

Kṛṣṇa explains that the way we worship depends upon our natural disposition, the guṇa, attributes that we are born with.

When we are born, we carry within us the vāsanā, the essence of the mental cognition or bio-memory from our past lives. This comes with the prārabdha karma (unfulfilled actions from past lives) and the saṁskāras (root thought patterns), that drive our mental makeup and actions throughout our present lives. In turn, guṇas or the attributes we are born with are determined.

Our being, our undying spirit, keeps an account of every thought we have and every move that we make. There is no escape from this account keeper. When we reach the end of the road, when our body dies, the spirit plays back all that happened during the journey of life and goes through the pains and pleasures. According to Kṛṣṇa, the attitude, the space or the last thought with which we left our body carries over to our next birth and the next body that our spirit moves into. Hence we are born with a natural inclination based upon our last life and attitude. Depending on the attitude, we may have the attribute of sattva - goodness, rajas - aggression, or tamas - ignorance as our driving nature.

All societies, religions, faiths, castes or creeds are simply translations of these basic natures or root thought patterns or mental conditionings; nothing more. After taking birth on planet Earth, we adopt the nature into which we are born that is according to our past bio-memories. In our new birth, we settle into a religious belief dictated by that natural attribute. However, we do not realize that we are a part of the Whole, a fragment of Existence or the supreme consciousness. We do not realize that our true nature transcends all material associations and conditionings.

When this relationship with Existence is forgotten, we give energy to our inauthentic associations in material life. We develop allegiance to the blind rules of some religion. Such an existence is purely materialistic and the association itself is artificial, inauthentic. To come out of this, we must do completion and break out of our material bonds and enter authenticity, the path of Self-realization.

Śraddha here refers to the faith that comes out of authenticity in action or good work. Yet pure goodness goes beyond all material acts. It is transcendental. Hence there is nothing like fully good, completely good in material life.

If you don't bring authenticity, inauthenticity is waiting to take you over. Because you trained yourself for so many years with inauthenticity, inauthenticity is waiting to take you over. Bring authenticity continuously; go on expanding, go on expanding. Authenticity is the possibility of life in you.

One of the biggest mistakes you make in your life is thinking that you are still a possibility, but your life is a reality. That is why you feel weak. Your life is not a stone wall that is already built. It is a wax model that is getting ready.

Understand, the reality you experience is not a stone wall that is already built. It is only a wax model that is getting ready. Authenticity is the intelligence to alter your possibility consciously, in the right way. Authenticity is a great possibility for you to alter your life in the right way.

Whatever you perceive about you is only a possibility. If you think you are a good person, a Swami (saint), even that is only a possibility for a greater saint to happen. If you think that you are filled with jealousy, dirt, disease, depression and what not, that is also not reality. It is a possibility for greater disease, depression, and disorder to happen.

Now, almost all of us experience our self as a mixture of both. You experience your self as a mixture of both - a little health and a little disease, a little goodness and a little badness, a little sattva, rajas and a little tamas, a little joy and a little depression, a little fight and a little reconciliation, a little wealth and a little poverty.

So you are a possibility for any extreme. You are a possibility for any possibility. When you are in the state of possibility for any possibility, you are called a seeker. Please be very clear, only a person whose nature is pure goodness can connect with the Divine, with Existence - yajante sāttvikā devān (17.4).

An enlightened Master goes beyond the three guṇas of sattva, rajas and tamas. He transcends these attributes because he burns out all his vāsanās, saṁskāras and karmas, of which these triguṇas are a product. An enlightened Master has no bondages. He is not bound by desires, greed, fear or attachment. He is beyond the illusion of material existence. He dissolves into the cosmic energy when he chooses to leave the body and it perishes. When the energy of an enlightened Master is reborn on this planet, when it takes human form, it is imbued with some sattva guṇa, since all beings in physical form must by nature have an attribute. Such a being is an Incarnation, an Avatār.

Upon realization of the being's enlightened state, that Incarnation reverts to its transcendental state of being without attributes or guṇa. In some cases, the Incarnation continues upon this planet to fulfill the mission that Existence has sent it to accomplish. In other cases, upon realization of its true nature, the Incarnation reverts to its original cosmic state.

The classic examples of these two different events are Ramakrishna and Vivekananda. Both were Incarnations who reappeared upon this planet on the mission of Existence, Parāśakti. Ramakrishna continued after realization of His state of enlightenment. However, Vivekananda, as predicted by his master Ramakrishna, left his mortal body once He realized his enlightened state.

If a tāmasic person becomes enlightened, he goes through the stages of rajas and sattva before the realization happens. The transition may happen quickly but it must happen. Vālmīki, the great sage, was once a robber who terrorized and killed people. His nature was deep tamas with a layer of rajas. When he caught hold of Nārada and demanded money, Nārada offered him the name Nārāyaṇa. The moment Vālmīki uttered the name of the Lord, he was transformed. He shifted to sattva and became the enlightened Master who wrote the Ramāyaṇa epic.

Kṛṣṇa says that our style of worship depends upon our nature - sattvānurūpā sarvasya śraddhā bhavati bhārata (17.3). A person established in satva worships devatas (deities, gods) who are peaceful - yajante sāttvikā devān. A person established in rajas worships yakṣas (supernatural beings) and rākṣasas (demons) - yakṣa-rakṣāṁsi rājasāḥ. A person established in tamas (ignorance) worships pretas (spirits of the dead) and bhūtas (ghosts) - pretān bhūta-gaṇāṁś cānye yajante tāmasā janāḥ (17.4).

Please understand, whatever is your ideal, whatever you hold in high esteem, whoever you feel connected to, whatever you worship, that is your nature and that decides your quality. If we worship the right ideal, we are established in sattva. If we have Swami Vivekananda's poster or Śiva's photo in our room, we are in sattva. If we have an actor's photo or poster in our room, we are in rajas and tamas. Tamas is like watching a violent fighting show. If you continuously sit in front of the television and watch fighting, you are established in tamas. Kṛṣṇa says that based upon our ideal, our guṇas (attributes) can be described.

Do Not Abuse Your Body, I Reside In You

In the last verse, He says, 'Please do not punish your body. You not only punish yourself, but you also punish Me because I reside in you- mām caiva antaḥ śarīra-stham'.

karṣayantaḥ śarīra-stham bhūta-grāmam acetasaḥ | māṁ caivāntaḥ śarīra-stham tān viddhy āsūra-niścayān || 17.6 ||

The scriptures do not recommend severe austerities and penances. Walking on fire and such other things are unnecessary. Kṛṣṇa says there is no need for all these things. People perform them out of pride and ego, merely to show,

'I did all these things.' They are done out of pride and egoism. They are done out of lust and attachment. Some people, for example, sit for years on a bed of nails or sit with one hand raised. All these painful contortions are foolish. These people torture their bodies and the material elements as well as the Paramātman (supreme consciousness) dwelling inside them.

Beautifully Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says, 'Please do not torture the soul inside your body. Don't abuse your body. The body is the temple of God. By torturing the temple of God, you torture the supreme consciousness residing inside- mām caiva antaḥ śarīra -stham.' He says that those who torture the supreme consciousness inside the body are certainly demons - tān viddhy āsura niścayān (17.6).

You need to understand that only an enlightened being can curse. Only he has that power. But an enlightened person will never curse. It is not that anybody can curse and it will become reality. No, only an enlightened person can curse, and an enlightened person will never curse. If he curses, he is not enlightened. Nobody can curse you. If he is not enlightened, don't be concerned about it. It will never work because for a curse you need satya-saṅkalpa, the backing of Truth. Only the words of a person who has achieved the ultimate energy can become reality. Because the enlightened person is in universal consciousness, cursing another person is the same as cursing himself. One thing is sure, if someone curses, he hurts himself more than he hurts others. So never be afraid of curses.

Spiritual relationships can never exist out of fear or greed. Never be obedient to somebody out of fear. Simply throw things out if it is forced on you out of fear. Never be afraid of anything. Here Kṛṣṇa says that there is no need for all this penance. You cheat yourself with all this penance out of pride and ego but you never really achieve anything. The person who does these things out of ego and pride is a demon, a rākṣasa. A demon is in deep tamas, in ignorance. All that drives such a person is the boost to his ego, his inauthenticities without consideration for himself and others. Such a person is a spiritual cipher.

Trust and Practice Authenticity

आहारस्त्वपि सर्वस्य त्रिविधो भवति प्रियः । यज्ञस्तपस्तथा दानं तेषां भेदमिमं शृणु ॥ १७-७॥

āhārastvapi sarvasya trividho bhavati priyaḥ
yajñastapastathā dānaṃ teṣāṃ bhedamimaṃ śṛṇu || 17.7 ||

17.7 Food that we consume is of three kinds, according to the three types of material nature. These are sacrifice, austerity and charity. Listen to the difference between these three.

Kṛṣṇa now speaks about food. Three different types of people enjoy three different types of food. First let us understand the three different types of śraddha based on what we are.

āhāras tv api sarvasya trividho bhavati priyaḥ | yajñas tapas tathā dānaṁ teśāṁ bhedam imaṁ sṛṇu || 17.7 ||

Please understand that one group of people is completely negative. They lack integrity, the space of positivity. They only doubt, doubt and doubt. They doubt themselves and others. They have decided not to believe in anything. They have decided not to raise themselves in their lives. They remain dumb in self-doubt. We can't do anything with them. This is the first group.

The second group consists of people who positively believe, who are integrated, but do not practice authenticity, the space of possibility. They build the pattern of impossibility. They continuously resist expansion. Understand, while on the surface they believe that they are confronted by patterns and limitations imposed by their patterns, deep down inside them, they actually resist expansion. Just see, look around the society. Everything is nothing but the resistance to expansion.

The third group of people believes and practices authenticity, the space of possibility with responsibility. They know that nothing is impossible. For them, life is all about making the impossible into I-M-Possible.

There are three groups. One group is in self-doubt. Even the word doubt is too good to describe it. They are in self-denial. They are prejudiced. This group is in tamas. The next group is the believers. They are in rajas. The third group is authentic. This group is in sattva. Kṛṣṇa beautifully explains the differences between the prejudiced group in self-denial, the believers with positivity and the authentic group with possibility. He then talks about their ways of life, character and how we can achieve the authenticity of sattva and imbibe the truths explained in the Gītā.

He gives a beautiful step-by-step explanation and the teachings on how to raise ourselves from the prejudiced level to the believing level, and from the believing level to the authenticity level. The moment we jump into the level of authenticity, śraddha, we experience the truth. We become Kṛṣṇa. We experience Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

Technology to Experience Authenticity

Now, we will enter into the technology of experiencing the authenticity, the technology of Kṛṣṇa consciousness.

Practicing integrity creates the space of positivity in you, and practicing authenticity creates the space of possibility in you. The clear decision that you will continuously expand your possibility for you and you will not be satisfied with what you are now, is more than enough. You do not need any other separate practice. That is the good news that conscious decision is enough.

The cognitive shift itself will make you live the principles. It is unfortunate that we do not understand the importance of cognitive shift. We think that some form of practice is required. Spiritual practices like kriya, yoga and praṅāyāma are good for the purpose of purifying your bio-memory, purifying your body and to cure some diseases. But that is not the first priority in spiritual life. It may be like a pickle, but it is not the main meal. The main meal is cognitive shift. Shift in your cognition, shift in your perception, shift in your decision.

You need to know the power of your authenticity. Even if it looks like inauthenticity in the initial level, stand by it. It will rise and rise to the next-next levels of authenticity. When you are authentic towards your inauthenticity, it will lead to authenticity. Like any number, any equation multiplied with zero, becomes zero. In the same way, however much your inauthenticity may be, if you are authentic towards your inauthenticity, you will become authentic.

Please understand, the gap between your desire and your responsibility is your inauthenticity. Bring more and more authenticity. Take more and more responsibility. So, when you take responsibility, sit by creating the space and be ready to sacrifice. The world will simply move based on your word. The world will move as you want.

Let these words penetrate you. May you consciously decide to experiment with the truths of Bhagavad Gītā. If you don't experiment, at least it will be mentally clear to you that this is not the truth.

Courageously Decide to Expand Your Possibility

Have the courage of authenticity and experiment with the space of possibility. Life starts with the space of possibility. Bliss or ānanda means 'the space of possibility, where life oozes out of you'. Everything should create a space of possibility in you. Take one single idea. You don't need to experiment with the whole Gītā. Take one single principle and intranalyze that to the core. Let your whole being vibrate with that single thought.

Swami Vivekananda says, 'When you commit to a single idea, your blood should boil with that single idea. Even your hair should stand in that direction. Your bones, your thoughts, your body and your mind should all stand for it. Your whole being should be directed towards that concept. Only then success is certain.'

Please understand, take one life principle and work with it to the peak of your possibility. The peak of possibility should be realized in every human being so that you become empty. You are nothing but a 'No'. When the 'No's' disappear, you disappear and the truths, satya start living through you. Your personality is made of No's and your identity is made of 'Yes'. Let your personality be dropped and identity be awakened. Your personality is given by society but identity is natural.

If you fail, there is nothing wrong. But have courage to work with it. If you succeed, you will know it is the truth and you will be liberated. You will be in the space of completion. You will have bliss. If it fails, you will know that it is not the truth and you will be clear. You can continue your search elsewhere. So be very clear about it. The basic truth Kṛṣṇa is telling you is about integrity and authenticity.

Three Groups of People

Please listen. There are three groups of people - tāmasic group, rājasic group, and sattva group.

The tāmasic group is prejudiced, meaning negative and lacks integrity. Understand, it is due to the fear of your possibilities you get into the space of impossibility. Your patterns, fears, everything is directed only in one line - fear of your possibilities. Lack of integrity is nothing but fear of confrontation. You strongly believe that the manipulativeness of your mind has saved you, helped you in many situations. A lion not realizing it is the lion and thinking it is a sheep is also not that big a crime. But the lion thinking it may need the help of a fox in its life and keeping the fox as a friend and companion, is the biggest crime.

Please understand, deciding not to declare integrity in your whole life, itself is nothing but the lion believing strongly it may need the help of a fox and keeping it with himself continuously and pampering it, 'No, no! Please don't go away. There may be some time when I may need your help.' Slap the wolf. If needed slap yourself once.

Realize you are the lion who does not need the help of the wolves and foxes. Realize you are the being who does not need the help of the manipulative mind. So, integrity is your strength. Lion's roar is enough. No animal will even stand in that area. Your integrity is enough. No problems can even stand in your breathing space.

Next, the rājasic group believes intellectually but lacks authenticity in action, which is the space of possibility. They carry self-doubt and the space of impossible. Understand, why do you feel you can't commit to live the great principle of authenticity? It is because you have an innate fear, innate pattern, self-doubt about your laziness; self-doubt that your laziness may overpower your consciousness. That's the biggest enemy for authenticity, śraddha.

You have to complete with the pattern of laziness and with the greed for vacation. You have to complete with the desire for being in non-doing physically, but lot of doing mentally. Please understand, non-doing physically. See, if you love non-doing mentally, that is great. But you love non-doing physically, but lot of doing mentally. A lot of doing happens mentally. Authenticity brings life in you. Authenticity is Life. Life is the possibility of expansion.

Even your ignorance is nothing but fear of expansion. Many times you continue to be in ignorance, because of your fear of failure. Expansion is possible when we are ready to become responsible to have it. Why do we feel the fear of responsibility? Because it brings more and more of our possibilities to our light. This means that we can't continue to be asleep, we have to wake up.

Wealth wakes us up to more responsibility. Health wakes us up to more responsibility. Happy relationships wake us up to more responsibility. Everything we love wakes us up to more responsibility which we don't like.

You love many things in your life, but you don't like the path to achieve them. See the conflict. Complete with the laziness, the tiredness, the boredom pattern continuously. Then starts life; then starts something in your life.

The third group, the sattva group has the power of authenticity. They not only believe, but they have the courage to create the space of possibility and play with the words and ideas as well. They don't settle with the patterns of 'impossible'. They go on expanding their possibilities.

There is nothing impossible. Actually what separates you from the Cosmos? The skin and the identity that you are only up to your skin. What separates your mind from the Cosmic mind? It is just the borders you made that separates your mind from the Cosmic mind. Just as the wall separates the ocean from the boat jetty, your 'Impossible' separates your individual mind from the Cosmic mind. Break that wall. After that, for anything that happens in your individual mind, the Cosmic mind will say 'tathāstu - so be it!'

Go on making impossibilities into possibilities. What is life? Continuously making impossibilities into possibilities is life. When you accept that impossibility as impossibility in your life, you are dead. After that, where is life? Life is life as long as you are making all 'Impossible' into 'I-M Possible,' all 'Impossible' into 'I Am Possible'!

Please do not miss authenticity, the fragrance of courage. Let these words penetrate you. The work that a disciple enters into is with the unknown, the uncharted and the unmapped territory; so fear of expansion will be there. That is the only barrier. In spite of it, we should go on expanding.

Let fear be there. It will hang around for a while. When we do not listen to it, it will leave us. It is a great day when fear of the unknown leaves us. From then on growth becomes simple, easy and spontaneous. This committed journey leads to bliss, eternal bliss, nityānanda.

We Are What We Eat

17.8 The foods that promote longevity, virtue, strength, health, happiness and joy are juicy, smooth, substantial and nutritious. Such foods are liked by persons in the mode of goodness.

17.9 People in the mode of aggression like foods that are very bitter, sour, salty, hot, pungent, dry, and burning, and which cause pain, grief and disease.

यातयामं गतरसं पूति पर्युषितं च यत् ।
उच्छिष्टमपि चामेध्यं भोजनं तामसप्रियम् ॥ १७-१०॥
yātayāmaṃ gatarasaṃ pūti paryuṣitaṃ ca yat ucchiṣṭamapi cāmedhyaṃ bhojanaṃ tāmasapriyam || 17.10 ||

17.10 People in the mode of ignorance like foods that are stale, tasteless, putrid, rotten, refuse and of impure energy. Kṛṣṇa talks about the nature of food consumed by people of sattva, rajas and tamas temperaments.

He explains what kind of food these people like, what kind of lives these people lead and what kind of understanding these people experience in their lives. The most important thing is what kind of understanding they acquire. See, the same words can be cognized in many different ways.

We need to understand the word in the context of its spirit. Words can easily be misunderstood. Please don't miss the essence of the words. It is easy to miss the spirit, the true meaning behind the words. Experiment with courage. And if you can't, if this is not the truth for you, forget about it. At least you will be free to search somewhere else.

Experiment and Experience

If you think that it is the truth and you don't execute it or experiment with it in your life, then drop it. Otherwise it will become a habit to listen to the truth and not practice it. It will become an inauthentic mental setup. It is the most dangerous mental setup.

Inauthenticity is the most dangerous thing that can happen to any being. Please be very clear, receiving the truth and understanding it intellectually without having the courage of authenticity to live it is the worst possible mental setup. That is the worst devil or demon that can catch hold of you. So at least have the courage to decide, 'This is not for me because this is not the truth.' If you believe this is the truth, then have the courage of authenticity to experiment with it.

Weakness is death which you give to yourself. Nobody can save you. Vivekananda is right when he says, 'Nobody can save a person filled with weakness.' You don't need to swim and save yourself. If Master comes in the ship and throws the rope, you can at least hold the rope so that Master can lift you. If you don't have the power even for that, then nobody can save you.

You have heard many things. Kṛṣṇa does not say anything new in this chapter. He says only one thing, 'Be authentic.' Authenticity is the straight way. Authenticity is the basic spiritual virtue. First be a gentleman, then you can be a spiritual man. Gentleman means to be authentic to what you feel as you, what you project as you, what others' expect from you, and what you expect from life - being aligned and truthful to the core to all these four identities.

Never do anything without being clear and complete about the truth and never stop doing anything if you know it is the truth. The scientist is courageous enough to authentically go after the truth. Wherever the research takes him, he is ready to experiment. The brain which is established in integrity and authenticity can read any book and understand the truths from that book. It can.

Just like how the Paramahamsa swan can separate the water from the milk in a mixture of milk and water, the brain established in integrity can separate truth from untruth. The brain established in integrity and authenticity is Paramahamsa.

In the same way, you must become an inner scientist, a spiritual scientist. You must have the courage of authenticity to go behind the experience within the words. You must be able to play with them.

When you stand up, you understand the whole saṁsāra sāgara, the ocean of Life. Whatever you consider to be the great worries of your life are not even up to your knee level. They are just up to the ankle level. Because you are lying down, because you never stand up, you think you are drowning; you think you are going to die.

If you stand up with the power of authenticity, you will realize that the water is only knee-deep. Whatever you regard as the saṁsāra sāgar (ocean of life) is only knee deep. It is nothing. There is no way it can affect you. But you need courage of authenticity to stand up.

You need the power. Stand up with the courage of authenticity as your bone marrow. You need the courage to stand up with authenticity and see the truth by yourself. Nothing will be lost. If something can be lost, it is better to lose it as soon as possible. May you be rid of that thing or situation. If something can be lost by practicing the truth, may it be lost as early as possible. The earlier it is lost, the better for you.

May you flood your being with the Truth. Whatever cannot stand, whatever is washed away, let it be washed away. May it be lost from your being as early as possible.

Kṛṣṇa explains here about the energy of various food substances. Generally, all food that is not from plants i.e., from animal origin, has negative energy. Food that is hot and spicy tends to aggravate desires. Vegetarian food that is fresh and not spicy is ideal for spiritual practices.

Any serious meditation technique requires one to be in the energy field. The word āhāra used by Kṛṣṇa can be expanded to mean food for all senses, not merely for the tongue. All sensory inputs need to be of the same description that Kṛṣṇa uses here, promoting 'longevity, virtue, strength, health, happiness and joy' to aid one's progress in one's spiritual path by the sāttvic route.

Ayurveda recommends different foods for each constitutional type based upon tastes such as sweet, sour, bitter, pungent, etc. These are specific recommendations as to what tastes would be healthy for which constitutions and based on this what kind of vegetables and fruits one should eat and so on. Even cooking methods are specified that can be used to provide wholesome ayurvedic food.

Kṛṣṇa outlines a more general classification based upon the purity and nature of food. Kṛṣṇa explains that tāmasic food, putrid and stale, is forbidden for consumption by Hindu tradition. The injunction is to eat food within a few hours of cooking. Beyond that, the food should be discarded.

Eat fresh food in silence and with completion and gratitude. Pay attention to each morsel of food and eat with gratitude and love. Eating does not need to be a social occasion. It should not be. Enjoy your social interactions before and after meals, not while eating. Be in the present moment while you eat.

What Kṛṣṇa says makes pure sense for wellness. Natural foods contain their own flavor and goodness. You do not need to add spices and flavoring agents to corrupt their taste. He says eat food as it comes, fresh from the earth, and cooked with the energy of fire. Eat it while it is fresh. You will be in sattva. You will be in bliss.

Enriching Without Expectation

17.12 O Arjuna, that sacrifice that is performed with expectation of result or for show out of pride, is of the nature of aggression.

विधिहीनमसृष्टान्नं मन्त्रहीनमदक्षिणम् । श्रद्धाविरहितं यज्ञं तामसं परिचक्षते ॥ १७-१३॥ vidhihīnamasṛṣṭānnaṃ mantrahīnamadakṣiṇam
śraddhāvirahitaṃ yajñaṃ tāmasaṃ paricakṣate || 17.13 ||

17.13 Sacrifice that is performed without following the scripture, in which no food is distributed, which is devoid of mantra, authenticity, and gift, is said to be in the mode of ignorance.

Kṛṣṇa talks about how to give, how to sacrifice and how to enrich others.

In the Hindu tradition, enriching sacrifices such as fire rituals (yajña and homa) were not mere rituals to worship celestial beings. They had a far deeper meaning of enriching for the benefit of the living and the poor.

Every ritualistic offering had a major element of gifting the deserving poor. Whoever came to such a ritual never went away empty-handed. When the great Ṛṣis, the Masters, performed rituals, they had nothing to seek. They performed these in line with the truth of their experiences, which were the scriptural understandings. They expected nothing. They performed rituals as a day-to-day living expression. These rituals were conducted so that the celestial beings and nature were pleased and humanity benefited. These were selfless offerings of sattva guṇa (good nature).

Great kings also practiced these rituals. Kings performed fire rituals to display power and to show that they controlled other kings. These were a display of ego. Kings such as Yudhiṣṭra performed the horse sacrifice, Aṣvamedha Yāga, and the Rājasūya Yāga to announce their supremacy over other kings. However, these were required of kings and were also occasions to give their wealth away generously. These were performed in the mode of aggression, rajas.

Other extreme sacrifices were also performed by demonic creatures with no concern except to show their brute strength. These did not involve any enriching, any charity or generosity. These did not follow the scriptural guidelines. These were carried out purely for selfish reasons.

Please understand that an enriching sacrifice is not measured by how much we give. It is measured by how much we give that we cannot afford to give. It is measured by how much we give when it hurts us to give and that too without any expectation in return. Such an enriching sacrifice straightaway leads to liberation.

Many people give with wonderful intent. It is not charity if they give part of their wealth without it affecting their lifestyle. It is no sacrifice.

An enriching sacrifice must hurt to be genuine. It must cause you discomfort and yet be given with total completion, pleasure and without expectations. That is the spirit of genuine surrender. That is the spirit of doing things without expectation of the fruits of action. The charity that many wealthy people do without posing for photographs, they do it with good intentions of helping the disadvantaged. That mental attitude of giving and sharing what they have with the needy, benefits them. That vāsanā of generosity stays with their spirit. There is no doubt in this.

However, that charity will be in the mode of rajas, not sattva. When people move from this rajas state of giving to the sattva state of giving, wealth seeks them out. Lakṣmī, the goddess of wealth comes to them without being asked. She knows these people will be the route for enriching mankind.

There is nothing degrading about wealth and power. They are great energies. Like all great energies, the problem is handling them with responsibility without letting them go to one's head. As an example, look at the difference between Rāvaṇa and Janaka. Janaka was a Rājaṛṣi, the king who was also a sage, a complete being. He ruled a kingdom, but treated the power and wealth as if they belonged to someone else. He was a mere keeper, a mere witness. He ruled from the space of enriching others. On the other hand, although highly gifted and a great tapasvi, who undertook many severe penances, Rāvaṇa was ruled by his ego, incompletions and senses. That brought about his ruin.

The Universe operates on the principle of abundance. There is no shortage of anything in the Universe. What we need, we get. The trouble is that we are dissatisfied with what we need. Our wants are immeasurable. Great masters have said that it is possible for the Universe to fulfill the needs of all the people on planet Earth, but not the wants of one single person. Our greed has no limits.

May your desire to enrich others and give away be limitless. May your desire to acquire become zero. You will be amazed at how wealth seeks you.

Deeds, Words and Thoughts

17.15 Speech that is non-offensive, truthful, pleasant, beneficial, and is used for the regular study of scriptures is called austerity of word.

17.17 The above mentioned threefold austerity (of thought, word and deed), practiced by yogis with supreme authenticity, without a desire for the fruit, is said to be in the mode of goodness.

17.18 Austerity that is performed for gaining respect, honor, reverence, and for the sake of show, yielding an uncertain and temporary result, is said to be in the mode of aggression.

mūḍhagrāheṇātmano yatpīḍayā kriyate tapaḥ
parasyotsādanārthaṃ vā tattāmasamudāhṛtam || 17.19 ||

17.19 Austerity performed with foolish stubbornness or with self-torture or for harming others, is said to be in the mode of ignorance.

Kṛṣṇa defines austerity of deeds, words and thoughts. Tapas or penance is the austere, simple way of living, the mode of aparigraha (simplicity). It is based upon what one needs and not what one craves for. One who successfully practices this is a tapasvi. Kṛṣṇa explained earlier and repeats here that tapasya, austerity or penance, doesn't mean inflicting pain or torturing oneself and others. This includes not merely physical torture and pain, but also takes into account pain through words and thoughts. Penance undertaken in this manner is abusing oneself and the God who resides within, forgetting that the body is a temple of God.

Penance performed out of foolishness and self-torture destroys or injures others. Please understand, such acts are done out of ignorance. That's what I explained earlier with regard to black magic. No black magic can be done. No evil spirit can be sent to you. No one but an enlightened Master can curse, and an enlightened master cannot curse. He can only bless. Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says that the people who are in rajas carry out sacrifices for the sake of respect, honor and worship. When they do penance or sacrifice in this manner, it is unstable. When people don't respect them, they stop doing it. They do it as long as people fall at their feet. If the respect is lost, they stop their tapasyā.

Penance performed with the view of obtaining any result, even a noble ideal like enlightenment as a result, is in the mode of rajas, aggression or passion. Only when it is in the nature of total surrender, with no expectation of any results, it is in sattva and of spiritual value.

Here, Kṛṣṇa uses the word Saumyatvaṁ beautifully.

We have no exact English translation for this word Saumyatva; manaḥ prasādaḥ saumyatvaṁ (17.16). Saumyatvaṁ refers to satisfaction and a feeling that is so comfortable. It refers to one whose presence makes you feel totally relaxed, complete and induces thoughts that calm and center the mind. Please understand saumyatva and pleasing words are basic qualities to be practiced by a spiritual person.

Swami Vivekananda and Paramahamsa Yogananda were great souls who shared their experiences for the benefit of enriching others. That was their mission. Their power was the space of completion they carried.

Bhāgavatam says that people who explain or enrich others by sharing the truth, such as Śrī Kṛṣṇa, are Incarnations. Incarnations still landing on planet Earth to make all of you enlightened is nothing but the Universe practicing responsibility. Even after so much torture and abuse by human beings, enlightened beings and Incarnations are continuing to enrich planet Earth; this is nothing but the cosmos deciding to do whatever it takes to enrich all of you.

Sukha Brahma was the son of Vyāsa, the compiler of the Vedas and author of Bhāgavatam and Mahābhārat. Sukha Brahma Ṛṣi was an enlightened Master who wore no clothes.

Sukha Brahma was questioned, 'What is the difference between enlightened people and avatārs or Incarnations?'

Sukha Brahma says beautifully: Soundaryatva, Tejavastva, Sārasvatya, and the power, lakṣmitva. Soundaryatva means that if we see them, we will automatically feel like sitting and listening to them. We will automatically feel like turning around once more to capture their grace. That which simply attracts our mind is soundaryatva.

The next attribute is tejas, a sharp radiating energy and clarity. The third is sārasvatya. This means that no matter how difficult a concept or idea is, they can explain it in a simple way. It merely flows from their tongue where Sarasvatī (goddess of knowledge) resides.

Above all is Lakṣmītva. This means that just by their thought, wealth and work will happen. Everything happens according to how they want it to happen. When somebody radiates all four of these qualities, he is an Incarnation.

Austerity of Body, Words and Mind

Here, Kṛṣṇa says the same thing - Saumyatva. Please understand, even for Incarnations, Soundaryatva and Saumyatva are necessary qualities. Now surely we should imbibe these qualities in our lives.

The penance that is supposed to be done by words, is speaking the truth and speaking pleasing words - satyaṁ priyahitaṁ ca yat (17.15). Please understand, creating a healing effect through words is important. Creating a healing effect through our words is basic for a spiritual practitioner who is established in integrity. We should not utter words that hurt others - anuvega karaṁ vākyaṁ. Our presence should be healing and enriching others. Based on the words we utter, people can find out what kind of a space we are carrying.

Always use pleasing words. Never use sharp or disturbing words. One more thing, sometimes we don't understand how our words disturb others. We do not know how our words disrespect or emotionally disturb other beings. We must bring integrity in the words we utter to ourselves and to others and bring completion to our speech. Kṛṣṇa calls this austerity of words, vān-mayaṁ tapa ucyate (17.15).

Please be very clear, the words you utter are you. If you constantly utter the words, 'I am this, I am this', you will become that. Constantly utter right words about you, inside you and outside you. Please listen about the power of words. Unfortunately, we don't harness the power of words. And as per the law, when we don't use any power properly and play with it without the knowledge about it, it destroys us. It is like electricity, we can use electricity for the best things in our lives. But, if we don't want to use it properly and misbehave with it, it destroys us. It kills us straightaway. That is why learn to harness every power available to you. Understand, aligning yourself more and more, deeper and deeper into your completion, aligning your words, internal and external, towards the space of completion is Integrity.

When you start practicing integrity, you will harness the power of words. The words you utter will have so much power that just through the words you will be able to change your life and others' life, for the better.

When we sit with somebody, that person should feel, 'Can I sit for longer time with him? Can I meet him tomorrow? Will I see him again?' We should create that healing feeling in the other person. People should wait for us rather than run away from us. Usually we create a negative effect. We create an uncomfortable feeling. People just run away from us. A simple, single word if used improperly, can destroy a whole relationship.

Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says a spiritual person should use pleasing words and not agitate others. When we do not agitate others, we will not be arrogant. See, this is not even a social morality. This is a spiritual practice.

The same words that we use to hurt others will hurt us as well. We will use these same words towards ourselves as well. This truth is embedded in the science of energy and vibration. So, we must be in integrity to harness the power of words. The ability to speak, the ability to utter words towards yourself, and the ability to utter words towards others - each one of us has this powerful ability. We can use it either to make our life or break our life. Right words that we utter in right time will make our life. Wrong words uttered in the wrong moment can break our life - especially the words we are uttering towards our self and towards others.

Kṛṣṇa says to study spiritual literature regularly. By regularly studying scriptural literature, these ideas go again and again into our brain. Consequently, we acquire the courage to experiment and live the truth.

Take up any truth and practice it at least a few times. For example, not to continuously function based on the idea 'me, me, me' and instead try the idea 'you, you, you.' Try that at least ten times and see the effect in your life. If it does not work out, you throw can it away, it's up to you, but at least try it out ten times. You will get a glimpse of the truth expressed by Kṛṣṇa.

Intellectuals have two weapons: words and logic. They can be helpful teaching tools if properly used or they can be frightening weapons. It is up to us to choose how to use them: whether in the mode of ignorance, aggression or goodness.

Kṛṣṇa talks about austerity in action, śarīraṁ tapa as well. He speaks about the five conditions that are also in Patañjali's Aṣṭāṇga Yoga as the five disciplines of yama: satya, ahiṁsā, asteya, aparigṛha and brahmacarya. These mean truth in thoughts, words and deeds embodying nonviolence, non-covetousness, simplicity and living in reality with the focus on the Supreme as the ultimate in any kind of penance.

Many feel that the truth must be told even if it hurts. Please understand that if it hurts someone, it cannot be the truth. It is only our perception of the truth. It is only a reflection of our ego presented by our minds as the truth. We are not in the truth if we perceive something with our senses and we draw conclusions with our limited knowledge based upon those perceptions and then express these as our truth and hurt someone. If we do this, be very clear, we are in aggression and ignorance. We are not in the truth. We are not in goodness.

Truth is a reflection of compassion. Truth is an expression of compassion. Truth and compassion always go together. For that reason, truth can never hurt.

How To Give?

17.20 Charity that is given at the right place and time as a matter of duty to a deserving candidate who does nothing in return is considered to be in the mode of goodness.

yattu pratyupakārārthaṃ phalamuddiśya vā punaḥ

17.21 Charity that is given unwillingly or to get something in return or to gain some result is in the mode of aggression.

अदेशकाले यद्दानमपात्रेभ्यश्च दीयते ।
असत्कृतमवज्ञातं तत्तामसमुदाहृतम् ॥ १७-२२॥ adeśakāle yaddānamapātrebhyaśca dīyate asatkṛtamavajñātaṃ tattāmasamudāhṛtam || 17.22 ||

17.22 Charity that is given at a wrong place and time to unworthy persons or without paying respect to the receiver or with ridicule is in the mode of ignorance.

Kṛṣṇa speaks about the concept of dāna, enriching charity. Dāna, charity is sharing out of the space of enriching. It is not done with the attitude of giving. It is done with the attitude of sharing and not expecting good results because of it or some easy route into heaven because of it. Charity is done out of love and gratitude.

'O God, you have given me so much, now let me share a little bit with society and with the world.' Charity is the attitude of sharing and enriching. Charity that is done out of the responsibility to enrich others, without any expectation means feeling complete and committed to the Whole, to God, and with that feeling giving as a natural commitment. It is given with the enriching attitude that it is my quality and I have to do it. Only then it becomes real dāna. Sharing at the proper time and place and with a worthy person is charity in the mode of goodness, satva.

There are three kinds of dāna.

Understand, annadāna means giving to enrich with food, clothes and whatever is related to someone's physical needs.

Next is vidyādāna. This means giving to enrich with education and also whatever someone needs for mental growth. For example, when somebody is depressed, if you enrich him with some consoling ideas, this is vidyādāna. If somebody does not know how to clean a room and you teach him, this is vidyādāna. If somebody does not know how to cut grass and you teach him, this is vidyādāna.

And the third kind is jñānadāna, giving to enrich with spiritual knowledge.

If we give annadāna, we satisfy a person for three hours. After three hours, again he needs food. If we give vidyādāna, education or knowledge, he will have food for himself for one life. If we give education, he can earn food for himself. He will make money and buy food for himself. If we give jñānadāna, we will satisfy that person birth after birth.

Annadāna satisfies for three hours. Vidyādāna satisfies the receiver for one life. If we give jñānadāna, it fulfills that person for life after life. He will never fall into depression or the ocean of material world, birth after birth.

The Ultimate Enriching Charity - Jñānadāna

Jñānadāna is the ultimate sharing of enriching with knowledge.

Even if you have come just to check it out and you land up listening to the whole Gītā, it will enrich you. At some point in time, you will remember these truths and live them. Naturally you cannot be the same person again. You will be enriched! At some point in time when you are about to make a mistake or you fall into powerlessness, you will remember these truths. These thoughts have gone inside you. They will make you complete with yourself choicelessly and lead you to completion. This is jñānadāna.

The knowledge that you have received now will transform your whole life even if you don't practice it. These words are so powerful that automatically they will start working on you. You will not remain the same person. Your depth of depression will be reduced. Your depth of suffering will be reduced. You will feel that you are entering a new life.

You will become courageous and a new confidence will enter your life. This is jñānadāna. This is the ultimate puṇya (virtuous deed) of giving knowledge. No other good deed is equivalent to giving spiritual knowledge.

Giving food bestows three hours of satisfaction. Giving education gives satisfaction for this one life. Giving spiritual knowledge satisfies souls life after life. Kṛṣṇa says when charity is done purely out of a feeling of sharing to enrich others, it is sāttvika, the ultimate good, the ultimate purity - tad dānaṁ sāttvikaṁ smṛtam (17.20).

One more point is that the person who gives loses nothing with jñānadāna. With all other dāna, the person who gives has a little less. In annadāna, he who gives will lose and he who receives will gain. In vidyādāna, the giver does not lose. He retains the same level. In jñānadāna, the secret is the more you share, the more it grows in you. The more you enrich others with the science of completion, the more you grow in completion. It is a win-win situation. Here, you receive automatically. It grows in the person who shares and enriches.

Another important secret: Don't think you are the only one being enriched by listening to the speaker. By expressing these truths, even the speaker being enriched. Enriching others enriches you back.

A simple analogy will help explain how this happens. When a woman gives birth to a child, not only is the child born, the woman too takes birth, as a mother. Until then she is only a woman. Once she gives birth, she is called 'mother'. When a child takes birth, not only does the child take birth, even the mother takes birth. Before that she is not a mother. She is only a woman. The moment she gives birth to a child, both the child and the mother are born.

In the same way, when you receive spiritual knowledge from me, Master also grows. That is why in the Hindu system, they recite the following mantra before spiritual lessons:

Oṁ sahanāvavatu sahanau bhunaktu saha vīryam karavāvahai

tejasvi nāvadhītamastu mā vidviśāvahai Oṁ śānti śānti śāntiḥ

This śānti or peace mantra means: may we both (Master and disciple) achieve perfection or completion. May both of us grow. May both of us enrich each other. May we not have enmity towards each other.

Understand, the mantra doesn't say, 'May you learn.' It says, 'May both of us learn.' The Hindu system is so humble. Only an egoistic person thinks that the disciple is benefited. No! The Master also benefits, he is also enriched. He can become a Master only when a disciple happens. Only when a child is given birth, the woman is called a mother. Only when a disciple becomes enlightened, the Guru becomes a Master. Otherwise, he is not a Master.

If the woman is unable to give birth to a child, she cannot be a mother. Similarly, until you become enlightened, Master cannot be called a master. Be very clear, by sharing the knowledge, Master also grows. The person who shares with simplicity and humility, who is very clear, very integrated and authentic about the whole truth of sharing and is not caught in the false ego, his dāna, his sharing of thoughts is sāttvika and is related to sattva guṇa or the attribute of goodness.

When you ask questions, if Master doesn't know the answer, He says 'I don't know the answer.' People ask, 'What is this? You are enlightened and you say you don't know.'

Only an enlightened Master says 'I don't know'. Only he has the courage to speak the truth. If a normal person doesn't know, he minces words. He puts some words here and there and confuses the audience. Confusing the audience is not a complicated job. It is easy because they are already confused. There is nothing more to be done. Just use some words, that's all. And it's not a big thing. Only an enlightened person is courageous enough to say, 'I don't know' when he doesn't know. To answer a question without knowledge doesn't require enlightenment. It needs foolish hypocrisy. The straightforward, integrated and authentic approach to the truth is what Kṛṣṇa calls sāttvika dāna.

And He goes on to explain rajas dāna and tamas dāna. Many times, the dāna is not given voluntarily. Or they may give something away as a part of a ritual. For example, in a Hindu wedding the giving away of a bride is called kanyā dāna.

People give their property for charitable purposes in their will. What choice do they have? They cannot carry it with them. In many cases they may have fought with their children and decided not to leave them anything. So instead of giving away the wealth to their children, these people give it away as charity. Such acts are not acts of charity. They are done with ulterior motives.

There are others whose charity it is better not to accept. Kṛṣṇa refers to this as giving in ignorance, tamas.

Om Tat Sat

ॐतत्सदिति निर्देशो ब्रह्मणस्त्रिविधः स्मृतः ।
ब्राह्मणास्तेन वेदाश्च यज्ञाश्च विहिताः पुरा ॥ १७-२३॥ oṃtatsaditi nirdeśo brahmaṇastrividhaḥ smṛtaḥ
brāhmaṇāstena vedāśca yajñāśca vihitāḥ purā || 17.23 ||

17.23 'Oṁ Tat Sat' is said to be the threefold name of the Eternal Being (Brahma). Persons with good (brahmanic) qualities, the Vedas, and the selfless service (seva, yajña) were created by and from Brahma in the ancient times.

तस्मादोमित्युदाहृत्य यज्ञदानतपःक्रियाः ।
प्रवर्तन्ते विधानोक्ताः सततं ब्रह्मवादिनाम् ॥ १७-२४॥ tasmādomityudāhṛtya yajñadānatapaḥkriyāḥ pravartante vidhānoktāḥ satataṃ brahmavādinām || 17.24 ||

17.24 Therefore, acts of sacrifice, charity, and austerity prescribed in the scriptures are always commenced by uttering 'Oṁ' by the knowers of the supreme being.

तदित्यनभिसन्धाय फलं यज्ञतपःक्रियाः ।
दानक्रियाश्च विविधाः क्रियन्ते मोक्षकाङ्क्षिभिः ॥ १७-२५॥ tadityanabhisandhāya phalaṃ yajñatapaḥkriyāḥ
dānakriyāśca vividhāḥ kriyante mokṣakāṅkṣibhiḥ || 17.25 ||

17.25 Various types of sacrifice, charity, and austerity are performed by the seekers of liberation by uttering 'Tat' (or He is all) without seeking a reward.

सद्भावे साधुभावे च सदित्येतत्प्रयुज्यते ।
प्रशस्ते कर्मणि तथा सच्छब्दः पार्थ युज्यते ॥ १७-२६॥
sadbhāve sādhubhāve ca sadityetatprayujyate
praśaste karmaṇi tathā sacchabdaḥ pārtha yujyate || 17.26 ||

17.26 The word 'Sat' is used in the sense of Reality and goodness. The word 'Sat' is also used for an auspicious act, O Pārtha (Arjuna).

यज्ञे तपसि दाने च स्थितिः सदिति चोच्यते । yajñe tapasi dāne ca sthitiḥ saditi cocyate karma caiva tadarthīyaṃ sadityevābhidhīyate || 17.27 ||

17.27 Authenticity in sacrifice, charity, and austerity is also called 'Sat'. Selfless enriching for the sake of the supreme is, in truth, termed as 'Sat'.

अश्रद्धया हुतं दत्तं तपस्तप्तं कृतं च यत् ।
असदित्युच्यते पार्थ न च तत्प्रेत्य नो इह ॥ १७-२८॥ aśraddhayā hutaṃ dattaṃ tapastaptaṃ kṛtaṃ ca yat asadityucyate pārtha na ca tatpretya no iha || 17.28 ||

17.28 Whatever is done without authenticity, whether it is sacrifice, charity, austerity, or any other act is called 'Asat'. It has no value here or hereafter, O Pārtha (Arjuna).

In conclusion, Kṛṣṇa moves on to a different plane altogether.

So far He explained the distinctions between sacrifice, austerity and charity- yajñas tapas tathā dānaṁ tesāṁ bhedam imaṁ śṛṇu (17.7). He clarified what needs to be done and how. He spelled out the different modes based on the nature of people in relation to performing sacrifice, austerity and charity.

Please understand that all kinds of food, penance, sacrifice or charity fall into the basic three categories explained by Kṛṣṇa - sāttvic, rājasic and tāmasic. These translate as the modes of goodness, passion and ignorance. But the important thing is that as long as they are done in the materialistic world, they are conditioned. When they are done from the space of completion with the attitude of gratitude to the Divine and Existence, only then you encounter spiritual progress or spiritual elevation.

Our scriptures explain that anything done in the nature of rajas or tamas cannot give the ultimate result. Only the act done from the space of sattva or goodness gives the final result. One who does such acts without this awareness has temporary results but not the final result.

In the days of Mahābhārat, sacrificial rituals were a part and parcel of daily life. This is not the case today. The brāhmaṇas (highly learned sect of people) were the keepers of the sacred knowledge that connected the physical ritual with the metaphysical truth expressed by the great sages in the Vedas. They were the keepers of the flame, in a real sense, since most Hindu rituals invoked and addressed the fire energy.

Sacrifices or yajña were directed towards enriching the elemental energies and celestial beings. Austerity or tapas was directed towards enriching your own self. Charity or dāna was directed towards enriching those around you. The brāhmaṇas were expected to lead an austere and charitable life in keeping with the spirit of their profession.

In this chapter Kṛṣṇa elaborates on these concepts so that everyone can move forward on the path to completion or liberation. It is not only for the brāhmaṇas, it is also for kṣatriyas, vaiśyas and śūdras, the other castes. Any member of any caste is qualified for completion if he follows these principles. Completion has nothing to do with birth.

The prime requirement is authenticity, śraddha. Śraddha refers as well to the understanding that the enriching act of sacrifice, austerity or charity, yajña, tapas or dāna is not directed towards oneself or a material goal. They are directed to the enrichment of Supreme consciousness.

Commit to complete with yourself and others - not only friends and family and relatives who are present in your life but also your kula devatā (family deity), your kula guru (family guru), your house, the plants with which you are living, your pet, the different energies of the Cosmos, everything. Continuously complete and continuously enrich others.

The real scale and measure of your completion is whether you are able to move the others' space and enrich others and life continuously. If you are not enriching constantly, be very clear, the completion has not yet happened in you. All our selflessness is also packed in our selfishness. If you are getting tired, please be very clear, still you have incompletions in you. You have to complete.

This is the scale - having a tireless mind. Once you complete, you will suddenly realize, 'Why should I live now?' 'For enriching, nothing else.' Complete. Complete. Complete.

In the last three verses Kṛṣṇa provides the technique to achieve this space of completion that expresses as the space of enriching, the shift of space from self to Self. He provides the method by which anyone can surrender the results of his activities, the fruits of his action called karma phala to the Divine. He provides the tool in the form of the invocation, Oṁ Tat Sat.

oṁ tat sad iti nirdeśo brahmaṇas tri-vidhaḥ smṛtaḥ | brāhmaṇās tena vedās ca yajñāś ca vihitāḥ purā || 17.23 ||

The three words 'Oṁ Tat Sat 'are the words of the Divine.

'Oṁ iti etat brahmano nedisthaṁ namaḥ', shows the first goal, the beginning.

'Tat tvam asi' indicates the second goal, the continuation.

'Sat eva saumya' is the third goal or final result.

All three combined give the words: Oṁ Tat Sat.

This is why these words have such great importance or significance. Any person doing enriching or working with the space of addressing Oṁ Tat Sat will be with Existence, the Divine consciousness.

These three words simply imply: 'I offer all to that Truth. I surrender everything to that Divine. Let that be the Truth.' This is the Mahā-vākya, the great truth, handed down by the Master to Arjuna as the technique to ensure śraddha, authenticity in all activities of sacrifice, austerity and charity. Please understand that any action, whether penance, charity or sacrifice, has no meaning when the purpose is not to achieve the Ultimate, the Divine. The final aim in all the Vedas is to gain the experience of Kṛṣṇa or the supreme consciousness. No success, completion, fulfillment or happiness is possible without following this principle.

The Guru or spiritual Master is the only being who can enrich you and guide you into the space of completion to make your life successful and fulfilled. Understand, people are conditioned to worship all kinds of deities or demi-gods or spirits right from birth. This is simply because their nature is from one of the three guṇas. Among the three guṇas, sattva guṇa is considered the best and higher than the other guṇas, namely rajas and tamas. But the path of achieving the ultimate consciousness, the understanding of Kṛṣṇa, goes beyond and transcends all three guṇas.

This is where the role of a Guru or a spiritual Master is important. He directs and leads you on the path of complete cognition for an experience of the ultimate consciousness. Such an understanding, such a perception, leads to faith and ultimately to love for the Divine. This is the purpose and final goal of life.

Let us all pray to Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa with all authenticity to give us the experience of this chapter of the Gītā that leads to attainment of the ultimate consciousness, nityānanda! Let us all experience śraddha, the authenticity and imbibe and experience the truths of Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa (cosmic Kṛṣṇa). Let us pray to Him to give us all the authenticity and experience of the truth that He is teaching through the Gītā, to all of us, and let Him make us experience and establish ourselves in eternal bliss, nityānanda.

Chapter 18
Mokṣa Sannyāsa Yogaḥ

Drop everything And Surrender

Drop everything and surrender. This is the gist not only of this final chapter of Bhagavad Gītā, but it is also the essence of the entire Bhagavad Gītā. In addition, throughout the ages it has been the basis of the teachings of all the spiritual Masters.

Kṛṣṇa concludes the Bhagavad Gītā with one subject: drop everything and surrender. Beautifully He says:

sarvadharmān parityajya mām ekaṁ śaraṇaṁ vraja | ahaṁ tvām sarvapāpebhyo mokṣayiṣyāmi mā sucaḥ || 18.65 ||

Drop everything, whatever you know as dharma, whatever you know as life, whatever you think you know, just drop it. Drop everything and surrender. Whatever you know is only your knowledge, it is just what you know. It is not what is.

Knowledge Does Not Prove Existence

In fact, wisdom and truth are about what we do not know. What we know cannot lead us to the ultimate Truth. Knowledge of the mind, that we take so much pride in, functions like blinkers that we wear to shut out the truth of Existence. The mind is not the scale of measure of Existence. What we are has nothing to do with our thoughts. What we are is beyond our thoughts. If our thoughts alone could define what we are, we would be nothing more than a biomechanical machine.

Humans think. That is the problem. Our great sages, the ancient Ṛṣis declare, 'Drop your mind and you will be complete. You will realize your true potential as a human.'

Ādī Śaṅkarācārya, one of the greatest Hindu philosophers, proclaims this so beautifully in the verses of his Ātma Ṣaṭakam. To define what he truly is, Śaṅkara negates his body, mind, senses, emotions and all his relationships. By negating all this, he declares his inner divinity boldly and beautifully.

Understand, we are spiritual beings in human form, and not human beings striving to be spiritual. Our potential is infinite. Our intelligence is unlimited. But our intellect is limited.

When we started the Bhagavad Gītā series, we learned what śāstras, stotras and sūtras are. Śāstra is knowledge of the intellect. It is acquired by reading and understanding. Stotra is knowledge acquired through learning, through the heart, that is through devotion. Sūtra is learning through the being, that is through meditative techniques that cut to the core of what is essential.

Even knowledge about God creates bondage when it is merely intellectual because we will only know about God. That is all. We will not know God. Please understand this. Knowing about God is not the same as knowing God. When we completely surrender everything, we will not even have the idea that we know God. When that idea does not exist in us, we know God. Otherwise we may know about God but we do not know exactly what the Divine is.

Words do not express God. No expressions can lead to the experience of God. God is when expressions cease. Masters say that the finger pointing to the moon is not the moon. It is only a pointer, a reminder. Words about God in any form, however sincere they may be, are mere pointers and reminders. The problem with religions is that they teach us about God. They do not teach us how to know God. All moral science and related classes do not help us reach God. Religions tell us a few things about God and instill fear and greed in us.

No spiritual Master preached violence. If he did, he would be no Master. Great spiritual Masters and Incarnations happen with the mission to raise us to a super conscious state. They aim to cause our Inner Awakening, awakening the individual consciousness, so that we realize that we are part of the collective consciousness of this Universe. They come with a mission to make us understand that we must move from the space of 'I' to 'you' and 'us.'

The ignorant followers of the great Masters fostered violence based upon their limited understanding of the truths that the Masters expressed. Instead of spreading spirituality that integrates beings, they built religious institutions that divide people. Unlike spirituality that spreads love among people, religion fosters violence.

Understand: Enlightenment is a gift. It makes no difference what effort we put in. Whatever we may have put in does not matter. We may have stood on one leg for hundreds of years. We may have fasted for thousands of years. We may have practiced meditation or yoga or some other technique. These are equivalent to buying the one-dollar lottery ticket. Anything we put in is comparable to that one-dollar lottery ticket. What we receive in return is a pure gift. Whatever we do is within the dream. How can that get us something beyond the dream?

Śrī Kṛṣṇa says, 'Drop everything and surrender - sarvadharmān parityajya mām ekaṁ śaraṇaṁ vraja.' First let us understand the word 'surrender'. The word itself frightens people. We must understand that we are not going to lose anything when we surrender. We are only going to gain everything. However, for lack of a better word, we must use this word.

Surrender and Understand

Realize first of all that we have nothing of any value to surrender. We only think we have something to surrender. The truth is that we have nothing to surrender. We simply need to open our eyes and see that everything that is, is divine. It is Existence. Whatever we think is ours does not exist. The 'I' and 'mine' that we hold onto are mere lies. The moment we understand this, we surrender. The moment we surrender, we understand.

When we call something 'mine', legally it may belong to us, but existentially, it does not. Legally we can fence off a piece of land and call it ours. Legally we can own things. But Nature or Existence does not know that it is ours. When a cyclone hits, it does not care whose property it is. It does not know the law. It does not know that legally a cyclone is not allowed on someone's property. For Existence there is no law.

Your idea of 'mine' is protected by the laws of society. You cannot truly use the term 'law of the land.' The land has no laws. Only society has laws. The land can have an earthquake at any time. We cannot have laws to govern Nature. The law of the land is beyond your comprehension. As long as you are caught with the concept of 'I' and 'mine', you will not understand the truth about Existence. You are caught in thinking that something is 'you' and something is 'yours'.

When Kṛṣṇa tells us to drop everything and surrender, He asks us to open our eyes and see the foolishness of the drama we play with our possessions and expectations. It is one thing if you play the game to cheat others; but, do not cheat yourself.

Please understand, there is no 'I', there is no 'mine.' The person who is intelligent and willing to open his eyes and see reality, will sooner or later wake up to the truth that there is no 'I' or 'mine'. Can whatever you think of as 'I,' either your body or mind, function without air? Can you say that the air belongs to you? This basic energy, prāṇa, which goes in and comes out, does not belong to you. If prāṇa stops happening, what you think of as 'you' disappears.

It is like saying that the foundation does not belong to me, but the first floor of the house is mine. You can do that legally. But it is impossible existentially. In the same way, the building may belong to you, but the earth that it sits on does not belong to you. The earth can give one small shake, and whatever you thought was yours just disappears.

The very foundation of whatever you think is 'you' does not belong to you. It belongs to the Whole. It belongs to Existence. It belongs to the Universe. It belongs to Nature with whom you are continuously fighting. The base or root of what you think of as 'you' does not belong to you.

We take for granted the air that continuously goes in and comes out. We believe that the air belongs to us. There is no break in this natural supply. Maybe if God called a strike, like a workers' union strike, we would understand that we cannot take even the air for granted. Suppose He called a strike for a minute, then we would understand that it did not belong to us. But He is a Karuṇāmūrti, god of mercy. Out of His compassion, He never goes on strike. That is why we take life for granted. Just because certain things belong to us legally, we think that the concept 'mine' is solid. The truth is that both the 'I' and 'mine' have no base.

Anybody who is intelligent enough to open his eyes and see, realizes that 'I' and 'mine' are a drama. The moment the air that goes in does not come out, it is over. 'I' disappears. Immediately your name will be taken from the nameboard outside your house and put on your tombstone. You will be called a dead body. You will be taken to the place where you can rest forever. Your house and car will be useless. So, whatever we think is 'I' and 'mine' is baseless.

Sometimes even the piece of land that we think belongs to us we may find doesn't, when we see the papers of that land. Our life itself is built on paper. The moment we have the intelligence to see this, the moment we wake up to this reality, we achieve the state of surrender. The moment we understand that in Existence nothing called 'I' or 'mine' exists, we immediately experience tremendous relief from the need to continuously protect ourselves.

These two instincts of holding onto 'I' and 'mine' are the reason for physical and mental problems. The instinct to survive and the instinct to possess are the root cause of our problems. On the other hand, when we realize that the 'I' and 'mine' do not exist, we realize how we have cheated ourselves and how foolish we have been in spending our whole life and energy in building sandcastles.

The whole thing is pure fun. We must understand that whatever way we live and whatever we may build, does not belong to us. If we do not internalize the outer incidents and if we treat them with the indifference they deserve, we experience surrender.

There is only one thing to remember: Do not internalize sensory inputs and do not take things too seriously. When you take life too seriously, you can be sure of one thing, and that is sickness. All seriousness is a form of sickness. When you think the 'I' or 'mine' is the truth, you create trouble for yourself. The moment you believe that there is an 'I' in your being, you start moving away from life.

The idea that you have of yourself has no base, whatever you may think of as you. Sometimes you think you are the body. Sometimes you think you are the mind. And other times, you think you are the senses. No matter what you identify yourself with, it is baseless.

There is another critical aspect to understand in this regard. Whatever aspect you think of as 'you' will not grow. If you think you are the body, you stop the growth of the body because you do not like change. When you think you are the mind, you stop the growth of the mind. You stop the inputs to the mind.

That is the reason egoistic people cannot listen to new ideas or read about them. They cannot learn because learning is against their vested interests. They think that they already know and have nothing more to learn. When you think that your mind is you, the very attitude of learning, the beginner's mind, is lost. Wherever you cling, you destroy that.

If you think you are the body, you do not let the body rejuvenate itself. You do not let your body do its regular work. If you think you are the mind, you do not let it learn anything new. You do not allow anything new to enter. That is a sure way of destroying it. The same applies to what you consider as 'mine'. This is based on the laws of society. In no way is it related to the laws of Existence.

You Are Not Who You Think You Are

It is well known to science that of the trillions of cells in our body-mind system, millions of cells die each day and millions of cells are reborn. After a few years, there isn't a single cell in our body which existed two years earlier. Every single entity in the body is new. This means that there is really no constant 'I' as we imagine. Yet, we carry that label proudly.

All we are is a bunch of memories, root patterns, collectively known as saṁskāras. Our root patterns define us. Our root patterns rule us and make decisions for us. That is what this 'I' is all about. When we complete with our root thought patterns and give up our possessions and attachment to possessions, we feel liberation. You can happily continue your normal life, but drop your attachments, fantasies, speculations, greed and fear about the past or the future.

So, you need not renounce what you already have. All you need to do to achieve the space of completion is to renounce what you do not have.

Renunciation does not mean sitting cross-legged with a tense look and eyes closed. If enlightenment could happen by shutting off our senses, it would be easy. We would just need to sit in soundproof rooms, wear blindfolds and have no contact with anyone. Renunciation, tyāga is a state of mind and not a mere state of the body. It is even more than a state of mind. It is a space of being. We can renounce attachments to relationships and possessions while being involved in material life. On the other hand, we could take sannyāsa, go to the distant Himalayas, and every time we close our eyes, our inner television would switch on.

The surrender that Kṛṣṇa talks about involves completing and dropping fantasies of the future, incompletions of the past, and surrendering to the reality of the present. The true reality, the only truth is that we are part of the universal energy. We are part of the collective consciousness. When we have this awareness, there is no room for the individual 'I' and 'mine' to rule our actions.

Throughout Bhagavad Gītā, Kṛṣṇa talks about renunciation. Śrī Ramakrishna Paramahamsa said that the Gītā is nothing but 'Tā Gī', meaning tyāga, or renunciation. Śrī Ramakrishna said, 'Keep repeating 'Tā Gī' and you will understand 'Gī Tā'.'

Again and again Kṛṣṇa speaks about renunciation: How we should surrender the fruits of action to Him, without renouncing the action itself, and how all knowledge and action should be surrendered at His feet. He prepares Arjuna for this final moment when He tells him that all that needs to be done is surrender. That is all.

Surrender is of three kinds. The first step is the surrender of the intellect. For most people, especially intellectuals, this is the easiest. Your ego must be ripe before it can fall. The more stuff you pack into your thick skull, the more bloated it becomes. You become intoxicated with your own knowledge. You become intellectually arrogant. You are then ripe for surrender. When someone appears on the scene and proves that intellectual knowledge is a pile of garbage, a person with a truly ripe intellectual ego understands and accepts the truth. Only those with half-baked knowledge who pretend to have intellectual status have a problem in understanding such a truth. A true intellectual can understand that all acquired knowledge is a mirage, an illusion.

When this happens, such a person surrenders his intellect to the Master who shows him the way. Many intellectual seekers and spiritual shoppers come to Master with loads of questions. After spending time with the Master, most of them tell the Master with great surprise that they no longer have questions. Master doesn't take the trouble to answer their questions. No one can answer such questions. All the Master does is add more words to them. They struggle with the new words and ultimately find the right answers themselves.

When the Master does answer, He answers the questioner. Master addresses the person, not his question. He looks into his being and provides the solution.

The next step in surrender is the surrender of the heart. People ask how they will remember the Master when they go away from Him. If He is their Master, they will have trouble forgetting Him. Remembering the Master is not an issue, forgetting Him is.

The thought of the Master will melt your heart. You will become emotional. You do not need to be in the Master's physical presence. The mere thought is enough. Tears will flow from your eyes. This is a powerful form of surrender. Ramakrishna says, 'Know this for sure: When the mere thought of your iṣṭadevatā (favorite deity) or your Master reduces you to tears, you are in your final janma, your final birth.'

What an enlightened Master says is always true. So powerful is this surrender that it can liberate you, complete you, enlighten you. This is the power of devotion, bhakti. Kṛṣṇa keeps repeating that this is the easiest way to reach Him. Do not worry about learning scriptures or performing rituals. Do not worry about techniques. He says, 'Just be devoted to Me and Me alone, and I shall save you.'

The third and final form of surrender is the surrender of the senses. When the surrender of senses happens, enlightenment happens, and when enlightenment happens, the surrender of the senses happens.

Walking with Arjuna after the Mahābhārat war, Kṛṣṇa points to a bird on a tree and remarks, 'Arjuna, look at that green crow!'

Arjuna responds, 'Yes, Kṛṣṇa, I see the green crow.'

Kṛṣṇa says, 'What a fool you are! How can a crow be green?'

Arjuna simply says, 'Kṛṣṇa, when you told me to look at that green crow, what I saw was indeed a green crow.'

Such was the state of Arjuna's surrender to his Master, whatever He said was what Arjuna's eyes saw. This is the final state of surrender.

The master-disciple relationship is the most mysterious phenomenon in Existence. It is not intellectually comprehensible. It cannot be proved in a logical way. Those who become sannyāsis out of a logical conviction by listening to Masters and becoming convinced that what the Masters say is true, are only on the periphery. The true disciple has nothing to do with what the Master is saying; the true disciple has something to do with what the Master IS.

The true disciple rises in love. It is not a question of conviction. It is something more mysterious and transcendental. Hence, a real disciple cannot explain to anybody what has happened. Everybody will think that he has gone mad, that he has been hypnotized and that he is no longer in control of his senses.

People who think like that are not to blame. Certain things are beyond explanation. They elude rationalization. And in fact, life begins when you come in contact with something incomprehensible, inexplicable, indefinable and unprovable; yet somewhere deep down, your heart says it is so. It is falling totally in love, and it is a love of an entirely new quality.

This love is not limited to the Master but it is experienced towards the entire world. You no longer think in terms of 'I,' but in terms of 'you'. This is compassion. This feeling of unconditional, uncalled for and uncontrollable love is compassion. This happens when your ego surrenders.

It may surprise you that an enlightened Master has no freedom to do what he wishes. His surrender to the cosmic energy is so total that every move he makes is dictated by that energy. Ordinary people have the freedom to do what they wish. All this talk about destiny has no meaning. Each of you has full freedom to do what you wish. After doing what you want and suffering, you claim it was because of your destiny. Whatever you do is within your power. In contrast, Master has no power to move on His own. Every word He utters is at the command of Parāśakti, the cosmic energy.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa's message to enrich Arjuna and to all seekers is to be complete, drop everything and surrender unto Him - māṁ ekaṁ śaraṇaṁ vraja (18.65). That is the only and final solution.

Actor And the Act

अर्जुन उवाच ।
संन्यासस्य महाबाहो तत्त्वमिच्छामि वेदितुम् । त्यागस्य च हृषीकेश पृथक्केशिनिषूदन ॥ १८-१॥
arjuna uvāca

sannyāsasya mahābāho tattvamicchāmi veditum
tyāgasya ca hṛṣīkeśa pṛthakkeśiniṣūdana || 18.1 ||

18.1 Arjuna says: 'O mighty armed one, Kṛṣṇa, I wish to understand what the essence of renunciation is and what being a monk is, O Hriśikeṣa, O Killer of the demon Keśī.'

Arjuna speaks now after being silent for a long time. He will stop speaking soon. He has just a few words. He is not questioning. He just expresses a few doubts. The arrogance or violence in Arjuna's being has disappeared. He has become like a flower due to the experience of the cosmic vision that Kṛṣṇa showered on him. He just wants to hear the truth from Kṛṣṇa again and again.

The words of a Master are energy. These words drill deep into you and transform you. At the time of listening, you may not realize their impact. But they never fail to impact and enrich you. Arjuna asks some of these questions in order to listen to Kṛṣṇa again.

arjuna ūvāca sannyāsasyā mahā-bāho tattvam icchāmi veditum | tyāgasya ca hṛṣīkeśa pṛthak keśi-niṣūdana || 18.1 ||

Arjuna says, 'O Mighty One, I wish to understand the purpose of renunciation and of the monastic life of Sannyāsa. O Hriśikesa (another name of Kṛṣṇa, meaning one who is in complete control of His senses), please tell me the truth.'

It is not that Arjuna does not know. He has just heard the whole thing. Still, he wants to listen to it once more. Sometimes we enjoy listening to the same thing over and over. It is not that we do not understand, but it gives us great joy to listen to the same thing again and again. Like that, Arjuna wants to listen to the same truth again and again.

Arjuna wants to know why a person would want to sacrifice everything and what is the process of renunciation.

Make it simple. Give out of your completion. Give unconditionally if you can afford it. Give even if you cannot afford it. That is when giving becomes truly enriching. When you sacrifice what you cannot afford to sacrifice, by the mere act of giving, you become a renunciate, a sannyāsi.

Arjuna is confused about the act and the actor. What is important is the act. Anyone can be the actor.

Never Give Up Selfless Enriching

श्रीभगवानुवाच ।
काम्यानां कर्मणां न्यासं संन्यासं कवयो विदुः ।
सर्वकर्मफलत्यागं प्राहुस्त्यागं विचक्षणाः ॥ १८-२॥
śrībhagavānuvāca
kāmyānāṃ karmaṇāṃ nyāsaṃ saṃnyāsaṃ kavayo viduḥ
sarvakarmaphalatyāgaṃ prāhustyāgaṃ vicakṣaṇāḥ || 18.2 ||

18.2 Bhagavān Kṛṣṇa says: The wise describe the essence of sannyās as giving up all selfish work based on desire, and renunciation as the freedom from all attachment to the results of one's actions.

त्याज्यं दोषवदित्येके कर्म प्राहुर्मनीषिणः । यज्ञदानतपःकर्म न त्याज्यमिति चापरे ॥ १८-३॥ tyājyaṃ doṣavadityeke karma prāhurmanīṣiṇaḥ
yajñadānatapaḥkarma na tyājyamiti cāpare || 18.3 ||

18.3 Some learned men say that all kinds of result-based activities are sins and should be given up, but there are yet other sages who maintain that acts of enriching sacrifice, charity and austerity should never be given up.

निश्चयं शृणु मे तत्र त्यागे भरतसत्तम ।
त्यागो हि पुरुषव्याघ्र त्रिविधः सम्प्रकीर्तितः ॥ १८-४॥ niścayaṃ śṛṇu me tatra tyāge bharatasattama
tyāgo hi puruṣavyāghra trividhaḥ samprakīrtitaḥ || 18.4 ||

18.4 Arjuna, here is what I say about renunciation; O tiger among men, there are three kinds of renunciation explained.

यज्ञदानतपःकर्म न त्याज्यं कार्यमेव तत् । यज्ञो दानं तपश्चैव पावनानि मनीषिणाम् ॥ १८-५॥ yajñadānatapaḥkarma na tyājyaṃ kāryameva tat
yajño dānaṃ tapaścaiva pāvanāni manīṣiṇām || 18.5 ||

18.5 Acts of enriching sacrifice, charity and austerity are not to be given up; they should be performed. Even the sages are purified by enriching sacrifice, charity and penance.

एतान्यपि तु कर्माणि सङ्गं त्यक्त्वा फलानि च ।
कर्तव्यानीति मे पार्थ निश्चितं मतमुत्तमम् ॥ १८-६॥ etānyapi tu karmāṇi saṅgaṃ tyaktvā phalāni ca kartavyānīti me pārtha niścitaṃ matamuttamam || 18.6 ||

18.6 O Pārtha (Arjuna), all acts of responsibility must also be performed without any expectation of result. That is My final considered opinion.

Kṛṣṇa replies: 'Bhārata, now hear my judgment about renunciation. Renunciation is of many types. Let me explain the truth.' And then Bhagavān starts.

Bhagavān says that some learned masters say that giving up activities based on material desires is renunciation, tyāga. Others say that giving up the results is renunciation. Hence some say that giving up activity is renunciation whereas others say that it is giving up the results.

No other Master is as compassionate as Kṛṣṇa. He is the ultimate Master. He does not merely teach. He knows it is difficult for people to believe. It takes time to believe. So He gives logic to support His teachings. Again and again, He tries His best to convince Arjuna.

Considering the level that He is at, there is no need for Him to come down to the level of Arjuna. He can say, 'This is the truth. If you want you can follow it, otherwise get out!' But He does not do that. He is compassionate. Again and again, He comes down and explains the truths step-by-step.

Some learned people recommend ritualistic actions, such as killing an animal for a sacrifice. Other learned people denounce that act. Thus there are different opinions regarding the same action by different sages. Kṛṣṇa clarifies these opinions now.

Enriching Sacrifice is the Path of Completion

After all, it is Śrī Kṛṣṇa in the form of the Ultimate who originally created the scriptures and laws. Therefore any explanation from Him should be considered the last word. He says that any process of renunciation should be considered within the context in which it is performed. Renunciation can be of three types: enriching sacrifice, charity and penance; yajña, dāna, tapaḥ. These purify even those who are already evolved and pure.

It must be understood that the purpose of performing yajña, enriching sacrifices is the purification or upliftment or completion of the human being on the spiritual path. They link cosmic energy with individual energy.

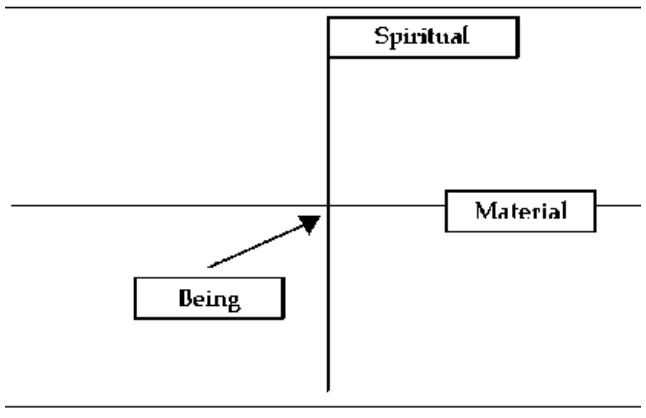
Kṛṣṇa says that any sacrifice done for the welfare or enrichment of humanity is not to be given up. As enriching sacrifices, yajñas are meant to achieve the Supreme, performing charity, dāna is recommended to purify one's heart and put one on the path of spiritual progress.

Sacrifice is normally understood to be rituals such as yajña and homa, etc. These are the fire rituals prescribed in Hindu literatures to propitiate the deities. When carried out with integrity and authenticity, these powerful techniques link us to the cosmic energy.

Here you must understand that Kṛṣṇa talks about the reality of what existed more than five thousand years ago when these rituals were performed with awareness, integrity and authenticity. In performing an Aśwamedha yajña, a powerful king let loose his prize horse to roam as it pleased in enemy territory and waged war with anyone who dared stop the horse. All the land that the horse covered became his vassal territory and those kings accepted the sovereignty of the owner of the horse.

This is what we know from the epics Mahābhārat and Ramāyaṇa that detail these sacrifices. The Upaniṣads talk about the metaphorical significance of these rituals. In the scriptures, reference is made to the inner Aśwamedha yajña, meditating upon the sun that is identified with Aśwamedha.

In our times, sacrifice refers to any selfless enriching service that enriches others and enriches you. Whatever enriching we do for others out of completion, without expecting anything in return is a sacrifice, an enriching sacrifice or yajña. Unfortunately, many people engaged in sacrifice are more interested in seeing their pictures on the television or in newspapers than in the service.



Charitable enriching, dāna is giving out of overflowing completion with no expectation in return. Charity is not giving while posing for a picture that will be published in tomorrow's newspaper. That is business. Those who are truly charitable never allow others to know what they are doing. That is why it is said that your left hand should not know what your right hand is giving. Only then charity achieves its authentic purpose of enriching others.

Charity should also involve pain. You can call it charity when you cannot afford to give something away and yet you give it away. Charity must become a penance, tapaḥ and lead to austerity if it is to be real.

Penance, tapaḥ is denying oneself sense pleasures and being complete with the senses. Ultimately, the purpose of all spiritual exercise is to be complete with the mind, body and senses and thereby controlling the mind and senses. Penance, tapaḥ is turning inwards whereas sacrifice, yajña and charity, dāna are focused outwards. 'All these enriching activities should be performed without attachment or expectation of results. They should be performed as a matter of responsibility, and this is My final opinion,' says the Master.

Only by enriching others does your life get enriched. Don't be selfish. Understand, responsibility is the fruit. Enriching is sowing the seed for the fruit to happen. Enriching is sharing the fruit to create more fruits. Every person who eats the fruit is responsible for sowing the seed for more fruits to happen.

Kṛṣṇa gives His ultimate opinion. Earlier He explained what others said about renunciation, as either giving up the activity itself or the results of the activity. Now He says that His opinion on renunciation is living without attachment, etāny api tu karmāṇi saṅgaṁ tyaktvā phalāni ca (18.6).

This must be understood in depth. Whether it is spiritual or worldly activity, as long as you struggle with a purpose and a goal, you can never relax. Whether it is the act of purifying your inner space by doing self-completion or purifying your outer space by enriching others, as long as you struggle, you will be in incompletion. Please be very clear about this. The person who surrenders to the flow of life, experiences the inner space and outer space at the same time. He enjoys the inner and the outer space at the same time. Whatever Kṛṣṇa has spoken in these seventeen chapters, He is now giving its gist.

Surrender Both Inner and Outer Space

Think of two intersecting lines, axes. The vertical axis is spiritual life. The horizontal axis is material life. The point of intersection is your being. This is the goal you have. You have some goal in your material life and also in your spiritual life. To achieve your goal in your material life, you are continuously struggling and working.

You are somewhere on the horizontal axis. To achieve your spiritual goal, you are again working intensely doing yoga, prāṇāyāma, pratyāhāra, etc. You practice spiritual techniques. You are somewhere on the vertical axis. So when you struggle with material goals, you are on the horizontal line whereas when you struggle with spiritual goals, you are on the vertical line.

As long as you are struggling, you can struggle either in this direction or that direction. As long as you struggle in material life, you avoid spiritual life. As long as you struggle in spiritual life, you avoid material life. As long as you struggle with completion, you don't enrich. As long as you struggle with enriching, you are not complete. Both are a struggle.

Kṛṣṇa says, 'Relax from both.' You may think, 'What is this funny instruction He is giving!' You think that if you relax in both you will lose both. However, the truth is that when you relax in both, you fall into your inner consciousness, your being or your inner space. When you experience this inner space, this inner consciousness, you will suddenly realize that you can explode in all directions. You do not need to choose between horizontal and vertical lines. You can travel on both lines at the same time.

Not only that, you can explode in all directions. The only difficulty is that you must surrender at least to your own being. You do not need to surrender to somebody else. To whom you surrender is unimportant. Just relax into your own being. Just relax into your inner space, into your inner consciousness. Just surrender to your own inner space. Stop your struggle in the material world and the spiritual world.

In the material world or my world, the world of 'mine', your properties are your goal. You struggle to achieve these goals, such as enriching with wealth, career, success, etc. In the spiritual world also you have certain goals, such as enlightenment, living in the space of completion, being integrated and authentic, etc. And you constantly run to attain that goal.

Actually, spiritual goals create more ego than material goals. At least with material goals, at some point, you realize that you cannot achieve real happiness by running behind them. It can be tiring. But with spiritual goals you do not even understand what you are doing. Both goals take your being away from your being. When you surrender and relax into your being, you suddenly realize you are neither the body nor the mind, to choose between the horizontal and the vertical lines.

As long as you believe you are the mind, you will be forced to choose between the vertical and horizontal lines. You will be in a dilemma because the mind wants to choose. The mind and dilemma are the same thing. The mind ceases to exist once dilemmas vanish. The mind exists as long as you have dilemma. As long as you have confusion, the mind exists. Has your mind existed without dilemmas? No, never! You may be in a dilemma even to answer this question; that is all. The mind continues to exist only in dilemma. You continuously worry about whether to choose this or that.

Whenever you choose something, someday you will definitely wonder and your mind will create self-doubt about the choice you made. The mind only exists because of dilemma. As long as you are based in your mind, you will be choosing between material and spiritual goals. The people who choose material goals will feel that they are missing spiritual life. And those who pick spiritual goals will feel they are missing material life. This is because you choose between the two.

For the first time, Kṛṣṇa gives the ultimate technique for Quantum Spirituality. He is the first quantum scientist of the inner world. He says relax and surrender and you will experience the completion of your inner consciousness. You will understand that you do not need to choose between the horizontal and vertical lines. You can explode in all 360 degrees. You need not make a choice. You experience choicelessness. Choicelessness does not mean that you do not choose anything. When you stop choosing, you will choose everything.

Enriching and completion, both should be practiced simultaneously. With more and more completion, more and more enriching will happen. With more and more enriching, completion will happen. Actually, when you complete with somebody, you already started enriching that person. You can explode in all 360 degrees with completion and enriching both. Enriching starts happening with completion. Without enriching, completion cannot happen. Without completion, enriching cannot happen.

When we stop choosing, both start together, one supports the other. You cannot say, 'First I will operate my heart; and then once the heart starts functioning completely, then I will start operating the lungs.' No! Lungs are completion. Heart is enriching. Both have to happen simultaneously. Lungs remove the carbon dioxide of incompletions from your system, and infuse oxygen of completion into your system. Heart circulates that whole oxygen into your blood and enriches your whole body. You cannot separate enriching and completion. If you are not enriching, please be very clear, completion is not happening. You are only fantasizing about completion. When you stop choosing between completion and enriching, your completion will be so powerful that you will simply enrich.

With real surrender you do not exclude anything. You include everything. You experience everything at once. You do not need to choose between horizontal and vertical lines. You can experience both and something more. You can explode. You experience something beyond your imagination. You experience different dimensions of your being.

Surrender does not mean you need to surrender to any God or Guru. God or Guru are symbols or representations. Just surrender to your own being, to your own consciousness, to your own inner space. The problem is you do not respect your inner space. That is why in the initial level you need an entity called God or Guru.

Duty Without Delusion

नियतस्य तु संन्यासः कर्मणो नोपपद्यते ।
मोहात्तस्य परित्यागस्तामसः परिकीर्तितः ॥ १८-७॥ niyatasya tu saṃnyāsaḥ karmaṇo nopapadyate
mohāttasya parityāgastāmasaḥ parikīrtitaḥ || 18.7 ||

18.7 Prescribed duties should never be renounced. If one gives up his prescribed duties through the illusion of renunciation, this is said to be in the state of ignorance.

दुःखमित्येव यत्कर्म कायक्लेशभयात्त्यजेत् ।
स कृत्वा राजसं त्यागं नैव त्यागफलं लभेत् ॥ १८-८॥ duḥkhamityeva yatkarma kāyakleśabhayāttyajet
sa kṛtvā rājasaṃ tyāgaṃ naiva tyāgaphalaṃ labhet || 18.8 ||

18.8 Anyone who gives up prescribed duties as troublesome, or out of fear, is said to be in the state of aggression, and does not benefit from renunciation.

कार्यमित्येव यत्कर्म नियतं क्रियतेऽर्जुन ।
सङ्गं त्यक्त्वा फलं चैव स त्यागः सात्त्विको मतः ॥ १८-९॥ kāryamityeva yatkarma niyataṃ kriyate'rjuna
saṅgaṃ tyaktvā phalaṃ caiva sa tyāgaḥ sāttviko mataḥ || 18.9 ||

18.9 But he who performs what is prescribed, as a matter of duty, without expectation or attachment to the results, his renunciation is of the nature of sattva, goodness, O Arjuna.

न द्वेष्ट्यकुशलं कर्म कुशले नानुषज्जते ।
त्यागी सत्त्वसमाविष्टो मेधावी छिन्नसंशयः ॥ १८-१०॥ na dveṣṭyakuśalaṃ karma kuśale nānuṣajjate
tyāgī sattvasamāviṣṭo medhāvī chinnasaṃśayaḥ || 18.10 ||

18.10 Those who neither hate disagreeable work nor are attached to pleasant work are in a state of intelligence, goodness and renunciation, free of all doubts.

न हि देहभृता शक्यं त्यक्तुं कर्माण्यशेषतः । यस्तु कर्मफलत्यागी स त्यागीत्यभिधीयते ॥ १८-११॥ na hi dehabhṛtā śakyaṃ tyaktuṃ karmāṇyaśeṣataḥ
yastu karmaphalatyāgī sa tyāgītyabhidhīyate || 18.11 ||

18.11 Human beings cannot give up all activities. Therefore the one who has renounced the fruits of such activity is one who has truly renounced.

अनिष्टमिष्टं मिश्रं च त्रिविधं कर्मणः फलम् ।
भवत्यत्यागिनां प्रेत्य न तु संन्यासिनां क्वचित् ॥ १८-१२॥ aniṣṭamiṣṭaṃ miśraṃ ca trividhaṃ karmaṇaḥ phalam bhavatyatyāginām pretya na tu saṃnyāsināṃ kvacit || 18.12 ||

18.12 To one who has not renounced, the three kinds of fruits of action - desirable, undesirable and mixed - accrue after death, but not to one who has renounced.

Kṛṣṇa says that nitya karma or obligatory responsibilities must be followed with discipline and consistency. Not doing these takes us into the state of tamas, inaction born out of ignorance and laziness.

Nitya karmas vary from person to person. The duties of a householder are different from those of a monk or a student. Each has clear guidelines in terms of what they should and should not do.

Many times the idea of dropping our responsibilities and taking up a different role is more attractive than growing in completion so that we can perform our own responsibilities well and without attachment. Be very clear, without the right cognition of completion, no role that we take up will work out for us.

Instead of taking up responsibility and expanding you and your life around you, watching television, sleeping or daydreaming seems much more pleasant and easy. We would rather do that than meditate or perform pūjā or whatever is our prescribed duty.

It takes just four days for your muscle-memory to taste laziness, boredom and tiredness and settle down with it. Never ever take vacation for four days continuously in your life. The very frequency in which you function is reduced. Because, in four days, your muscle-memory gets settled with tiredness, boredom and laziness. Even if you are without job for four days, be active in something. Go and meet your friends, family. Take up some voluntary service. Do not be without responsibility for four days.

You may ask, 'Why four days?' Listen! It takes four days for anything to become part of your muscle-memory. For four days in the morning, if you don't come for yoga, don't come for satsang, fifth-sixth day your muscle-memory will start proposing alternatives to you at that time. What are the alternatives? Sleeping, rolling on the bed, TV, so many things are there.

Feel Responsible in Your Being

One of the biggest diseases that people suffer physically is unable to be active, having incompletions with being active. Giving up the responsibility for what needs to be done because it is uncomfortable is not renunciation. That is convenient inaction born out of rajas.

When you don't take responsibility for anything, you live as slave, śūdra. When you take the responsibility for the money of the society, you become vaiśya. When you take the responsibility for weapons of the society, you become kṣatriya. When you take the responsibility for knowledge of the society, you become brāhmaṇa. When you take responsibility for everything, you become sannyāsi.

Only when you take responsibility, life happens to your body. If you have any disease, take responsibility for it; so that you can heal and then take care that you don't attract that disease again back.

In the same way, if you have broken a relationship because of your irresponsibility, unconsciousness, now take the responsibility that next time you don't do it. Life does not end by breaking one relationship. You don't need to be depressed or you don't need to start being in that same space of powerlessness. When you take the responsibility you can even patch up with the relationship you broke. You can approach the person and rebuild the relationship.

One of the biggest problems we have is, 'Let me have the power first, let me have the status first, let me have the position first, then I will take the responsibility.' No! That does not happen in life. Take the responsibility to build the state inside you. Then, after you are tested by the Cosmos, it gives you the status. That status can never be taken away.

Responsibility attracts more responsibility. The problem is we are afraid of more responsibility, so we deny even the responsibility that we have in our hand. But more and more responsibility adds more and more life energy into you.

Understand, because Siddharth took the responsibility and he became Buddha, the whole of Buddhism is built on responsibility and enriching. Integrity leads to authenticity. Responsibility leads to enriching. Take responsibility for everything happening around you. Buddha did not make that man old. Buddha did not make that man diseased. Buddha did not kill that man. But he took the responsibility for that state of affairs. He did not say, 'Oh! I don't know why he became sick. I don't know why he became old. I didn't kill him.' Had he thought in that manner, Siddharth would have been Siddharth; Buddha would never have happened. Fortunately, he thought that he is responsible for

it. He cognized His responsibility. Siddharth became Buddha when He applied the truth that the science of life is responsibility.

Kṛṣṇa says that doing what needs to be done because that is what is our responsibility, without attachment to the action and without desire is the ideal condition of sattva.

Kṛṣṇa has said this many times in the Gītā. He repeats it again so that the message sinks in our muscle-memory and bio-memory. Do what must be done. Do what your responsibility is, based on your societal or religious beliefs and codes. However, do it with integrity and authenticity without attachment and expectation of results.

The consciousness of 'I' and 'mine', in terms of the performance of the activity should be absent. The consciousness of 'feeling responsible in your being' should be present. Restricting your being in feeling responsible is conditioning. Responsibility in your being means the space from which you cognize, from where you make decisions, carrying responsibility in that zone.

If you don't feel you are responsible for something, you don't even think in that line. If you feel you are responsible for something, only then will you even look into that part of your life. When you feel responsible in your being, for any problem, or anything, you find solution for that problem or that situation. You don't need to do any action, you don't need to do any thinking. Decide from your being that you will feel responsible for the whole world. You will take actions towards your immediate responsibility as per your prescribed duty, but you will feel responsible for the whole.

Suddenly, you will see all your actions will have authenticity, your thinking will have integrity. Mainly, whatever you are doing, if you take responsibility for the world, even if you are a doctor, you will become a better doctor. If you are a lawyer, you will become a better lawyer. If you are an engineer, you will become a better engineer. If you are a politician, you will become a better politician.

If you are a doctor, know that you are responsible for the whole world. So you are responsible for your patients also. With this context when you start functioning, even you attending to your patients will become a spiritual practice leading you to enlightenment, because in any context you do any action, that context will become your bio-memory and reality.

If you are a cook and you are cooking with the responsibility that only if you cook you will have money, and with that money only you can take care of your needs and your family, then you may be a good family man, you may be a head of family, you may be a good cook, nothing more than that. But, if you do the same job with the cognition of 'I will enrich the world with the food. I am responsible for the whole world. So this cooking and enriching the world is the immediate action I will do, but I am responsible for the whole world,' just with this shift in your cognition, you will be a karma yogi because innumerable right things will be added to your thinking, to your being, to your action and to your life.

It is the amount of responsibility you bring into your being that makes your life juicy. If you bring more responsibility into your cognition, your life becomes exciting. Understand, if your cognition shrinks, you also shrink, your actions shrink, your integrity shrinks. If your cognition expands with more responsibility, authenticity happens in your action, integrity happens in your thinking and your words.

Kṛṣṇa says that a person in the sāttvic space of completion, calmness and awareness is undisturbed by external conditions. He is not bothered whether someone appreciates or condemns what he does. He just feels responsibility in his being. He is clear what he should do and he carries on with excitement.

Renunciation is in the true spirit of completion and is done out of goodness only when a person renounces the expectation of result.

It is natural that a human being cannot remain still without doing some work. Man must be doing something, anything, all the time. If not physically, at least mentally he does something. Even in sleep, he dreams. If we close our eyes, we watch our inner television. Mentally we think the whole day, but it is not directed in one direction, we are not useful to ourselves and to others. Please understand, when you lack integrity, when you have incompletions mentally, even if you think, it will not be useful thinking.

Only an enlightened person truly keeps his body and mind still. So the normal man is never without activity. This being the case, the only way man can be comfortable and at peace with himself is by not having any expectation of the result of his thoughts or words or actions. This can be achieved by every one of us. Kṛṣṇa says that one who is not concerned about the fruits of his action has truly renounced.

Attachment to action and to the results of action creates more desires. Even when an action has been completed and the expected result achieved, as long as one is attached to that action and its result, another desire crops up. Even when one desire is fulfilled, another unfulfilled desire rises. This is a constant, consistent sequence of incompletions. This is karma.

Karma is nothing but unfulfilled, incomplete desires. As long as we have attachment to the action as 'doer', which in turns creates an expectation of reward or punishment, we are caught in the cycle of karma and saṁsāra. Our concern about whether an action or the result is good, bad or a mix of both, follows us as our mental patterns or vāsanā after death.

Please understand that no one is 'up there' keeping an account of our deeds and misdeeds. Our own spirit does that job. So we can never escape. No amount of propitiation or contribution to 'noble' causes will erase the knowledge from our inner Self of what we have done. When we die, the body perishes but the spirit moves on to another body. That spirit carries its earlier mental patterns, its vāsanā. There is no exception to this rule. Saṁskāras or root patterns are the carried-over incomplete desires and they cause the cycle of saṁsāra, birth, death and rebirth.

However, we have no unfulfilled desires, karma, saṁskāra or vāsanā left when we renounce attachment to 'doership' and become a mere witness to both the action and the result. This means we act without expectation and attachment to the result of our action. Such a person breaks out of this cycle of saṁsāra.

Technology of Surrender

पञ्चैतानि महाबाहो कारणानि निबोध मे ।
साङ्ख्ये कृतान्ते प्रोक्तानि सिद्धये सर्वकर्मणाम् ॥ १८-१३॥ pañcaitāni mahābāho kāraṇāni nibodha me
sāṅkhye kṛtānte proktāni siddhaye sarvakarmaṇām || 18.13 ||

18.13 Learn from Me Arjuna, there are five causes that bring about the accomplishment of all action, as described in Sāṅkhya philosophy.

अधिष्ठानं तथा कर्ता करणं च पृथग्विधम् ।
विविधाश्च पृथक्चेष्टा दैवं चैवात्र पञ्चमम् ॥ १८-१४॥ adhiṣṭhānaṃ tathā kartā karaṇaṃ ca pṛthagvidham
vividhāśca pṛthakceṣṭā daivaṃ caivātra pañcamam || 18.14 ||

18.14 These are: physical body that is the seat of action, the attributes of nature or guṇa that are the Doer, the eleven organs of perceptions and action by the life forces and finally the Divine.

शरीरवाङ्मनोभिर्यत्कर्म प्रारभते नरः ।
न्याय्यं वा विपरीतं वा पञ्चैते तस्य हेतवः ॥ १८-१५॥ śarīravāṅmanobhiryat karma prārabhate naraḥ
nyāyyaṃ vā viparītaṃ vā pañcaite tasya hetavaḥ || 18.15 ||

18.15 These five factors are responsible for whatever right or wrong actions a man performs by deed, word and thought.

तत्रैवं सति कर्तारमात्मानं केवलं तु यः ।
पश्यत्यकृतबुद्धित्वान्न स पश्यति दुर्मतिः ॥ १८-१६॥
tatraivaṃ sati kartāramātmānaṃ kevalaṃ tu yaḥ paśyatyakṛtabuddhitvānna sa paśyati durmatiḥ || 18.16 ||

18.16 Those who think they, their body and spirit, are the doers, are ignorant and do not see things as they are.

In these verses, Kṛṣṇa gives the exact technology of surrender. These two verses can be called techniques.

Kṛṣṇa lists five factors from Sāṅkhya philosophy responsible for our activities. These are the body-mind system, the operator of the body-mind system (that is the individual), the senses, different efforts causing the activities and finally the ultimate power of God. All activities, right or wrong, good or bad, are caused by these five factors. If however, the individual considers himself to be the doer, his body and mind, he is not aware.

Kṛṣṇa uses the word ātman while saying that one who perceives one's spirit or Self as the agent, the doer, or the performer, does not see and is not aware. Kṛṣṇa draws a distinction between the individual Self and the cosmic energy. He differentiates between ātman and Brahman, mānava and Deva, nara and Nārāyaṇa, self and Parāśakti.

Kṛṣṇa concludes that while philosophical discussion mentions five players in all activities, the ultimate controller is the Divine. We are immersed in our body-mind-spirit system and caught in our sensory perceptions and believe that we are the power behind all that we do. So long as we have this deluded belief, we are rooted in ignorance.

Whatever you may understand as yourself, your body-mind-spirit system is the totality of many things. And individually each is responsible for something. In spite of this, you think that 'you' are responsible for the whole thing. That is where the trouble starts. Kṛṣṇa gives the technology for the deeper levels of surrender.

As we saw earlier, there are three levels of surrender. The first is intellectual surrender. This means you accept that the Master's intellect is sharper than your intellect; His intellect is of a higher order than yours. This is intellectual surrender. Next is emotional surrender. This is trusting that the Master's guidance on the emotional plane is more intelligent than your emotions. The third is surrendering the senses, your cognition or the root of cognition itself.

Surrendering the intellect is easy because it continuously tortures you. You have suffered with the intellect for many years. You want to get rid of it. So you surrender it. When you see somebody more intelligent and with clearer thinking, you just surrender. For example, when you hire a consultant, you surrender to his ideas. When you take on a lawyer, you surrender to his ideas because you know his intellect is sharper than yours in that field. In the spiritual field also, when you see a person who knows more, you surrender your intellect to that person. That is not a big thing. Surrendering intellectually happens easily. Most of the time you want to get rid of your intellect. Finding somebody to dump your intellect on allows you to relax from it.

Next comes emotional surrender. This happens when you feel deeply connected to the Master after experiencing some meditation or understanding. You respect his emotions more than your own. The Master's emotions mean the things he guides you in, the way he wants you to live. You give more importance to these things than what you think of as life. Slowly he becomes the center of your life. You respect him more than other emotional attachments. Priorities shift. The Master becomes the number one priority at the emotional level. Emotional surrender is when you feel totally connected at the emotional level.

Deeper Level of Surrender - Mind or Master?

Next is a deeper level of surrender. This is the level of the senses. The surrender of the senses means that your senses listen to what Master says. Normally, when you listen to the Master, a filter in your mind discounts what you do not agree with. You hear what you want to hear. However, when intellectual and emotional surrender happen, you are ready to surrender this disbelief and unblock your senses.

Once a disciple asked his Master, 'Why should I surrender?'

The Master asked, 'How do you know whatever you think you know about yourself?' The disciple replied, 'I know myself through my senses.'

The Master asked, 'Who do you think you are according to your senses?' The disciple said, 'As far as I know, I am the body and mind.'

His Master responded, 'You are God, not just body and mind.'

The Master said, 'Only when you surrender your senses, will you realize the truth of what I am saying. The moment you trust me more than your senses, you experience that you are God. You then understand the meaning of Tat Tvam Asi (literally 'You Are That', meaning 'you are divine').'

The Master again and again tries to show that you are God. Master keeps saying, 'I am not here to prove that I am God. I am here to prove that you are God.'

The Master stands for the idea that you are the infinite. He shows you various dimensions of your inner self that you have not explored or experienced. He shows you so many dimensions of your being. The Master stands for your multidimensional being. He tries to show you that it is possible. He shows that if it is possible for him, it is possible for you also. But as long as you believe your senses, you think that you are the body and mind.

When you trust the Master more than your senses, you understand that the Master's words are the truth and not your senses. Then you experience the truth of the Master's words. When the Master says you are God, you suddenly realize the truth for yourself. You understand that you are God. You realize that you are not the body or mind as your senses have led you to believe. When you believe the Master's words more than your senses, you experience this truth.

Two voices are speaking from two different levels. On the one hand, your senses tell you that you are the body and mind. On the other hand, the Master tells you that you are God; you are divine and have many dimensions to your being. He tells you to enjoy and experience everything. As long as you listen to your senses, you will not even listen to what the Master says. When you move away from your senses and come to the Master, you listen to Him and experience the truth that you are divine.

Final Surrender Itself is Enlightenment

In the inner world, the first and last tool you need is complete surrender. Only then can you wake up to the Truth. If Arjuna had trusted only his senses, he would have been at best a good warrior and king. Instead he trusted Kṛṣṇa more than his senses and became enlightened. He experienced the truth of Kṛṣṇa. When Kṛṣṇa said that the crow was green, he saw a green crow. Such was his faith.

You can experience Kṛṣṇa consciousness not just by surrendering the intellect and emotions but also by surrendering the root of the intellect and emotions, that is the senses. The senses supply the data. When you surrender them, the source of the data is surrendered. When you surrender your senses, the root cognition of yourself, you lose your identification with the body and mind. As long as you believe your senses, you think that you are the body and mind. Only when you believe the Master's words more than your senses, do you realize the truth that you are divine. On one hand, your senses say you are the body and mind. On the other hand, the Master tells you that you are divine and in eternal bliss. He tells you that you are the consciousness beyond body and mind.

It is up to you to choose. If you believe the senses, you cannot believe the Master. And if you believe the Master, you cannot believe your senses. Your way of life decides whether you surrender to your senses or your Master. It is for you to decide.

Kṛṣṇa says that only when you surrender at all three levels do you have the ultimate experience. Surrender itself is enlightenment. Please do not think enlightenment will be issued to you after surrendering. No! It is not a paycheck you receive by courier. Surrender itself is enlightenment. At that moment, you experience the Truth.

Usually we play with words. At least be aware of the moments when you play with words. People tell the Master that they have surrendered their life to Kṛṣṇa, Venkateśvara or Śiva. Then they say that their only wish is to be happy. If they have truly surrendered, surrender is enough. They will not need to ask for anything else. Sometimes people ask if they need to meditate since they have surrendered to God. If they have surrendered, they will have no doubts, nor will they need meditation. If they have doubts, they need meditation. As long as doubts remain, surrender has not happened, because the moment you surrender, you disappear.

A beautiful verse in Tamil says, 'When you give your 'I' and 'mine' to Existence, Parāśakti or Existence gives Her 'I' and 'Mine' to you.' Both bank accounts merge and become one. It becomes a joint account. You have nothing to lose.

When you think of yourself as body and mind, you have śariram rogamayam and manam sohamayam. Śariram rogamayam means that the body is filled with diseases. Manam sohamayam means that the mind is filled with sorrows or depression. Since that is the case, what can we surrender? Absolutely nothing, except a body full of diseases and a mind full of sorrows. When you drop these two at the feet of the Divine, He gives you His body and mind. And it becomes, śariram devamayam, manam sukhamayam, atma anandamayam - meaning, you get in exchange a divine body, a mind in happiness as well as a third thing which is a soul in bliss. A 'give one, get three free' offer!

Manickavasagar, the great enlightened Master, sings a beautiful Tamil song to Śaṅkara (Lord Śiva): tandadu entanai, kondadu untanai, sankara yaarkolo saturar? He says, 'I gave myself to You and received You in return. Who benefited most from this bargain? Who is more intelligent, O Śaṅkara?'

In surrender, you have nothing to lose and everything to gain. Surrendering does not mean giving up everything. It does not mean giving up your property. Keep everything; however, take care that you do not internalize them. Do not judge yourself based on your properties. You are far greater than you think. Do not judge yourself based on your bank balance. Do not judge yourself based on your relationships. Do not judge yourself based on name and fame. Do not judge yourself based on your friends. You are greater than all these things put together.

As long as you judge yourself based on these things, you internalize these into your being. These become the central points in your life. They push and pull you in all directions. You will not have yourself for your being. As long as these are the major factors in your life, these things will rule you. Even so, you are greater than all these things put together.

Understand that you are something beyond these things. The moment you wake up to this truth, you will not allow yourself to be put into any frame based upon bank balance, relationships, attitudes or name and fame. These things cannot be used to judge you. The moment you wake up to this truth, you have surrendered.

On the surface of the vast ocean, small bubbles are formed. One bubble starts thinking that it is an individual long lasting entity. It thinks that it must become strong. It lasts only for a few moments. Yet within those few moments, it collects other bubbles around it. One bubble is its wife, another bubble is its son and so on. Some are called parents or relatives, still others are friends, and so on. It collects bubbles on all sides to protect itself.

It collects a few grains of sand from the beach and thinks it is its property. It thinks one grain of sand is its bank balance, another is its jewelry and treasures and so on. Then it builds a fence to protect its property. How long can the bubble play this game? Only for a few seconds! Before it can complete its game, it disappears back into the ocean.

The bubble was part of the ocean in all three instances: when it was created, when it existed and when it disappeared. Even though it claimed to be different from the ocean, even though it thought it was an individual, and even though it thought many people and things belonged to it, it was always part of the ocean and very soon disappeared into it also.

In the same way, for a few moments you think you exist as an individual being in this universal consciousness. Within those few moments you catch hold of a few people as your relatives and friends. This makes you feel safe. You collect a few things as possessions. You feel secure with these things around you. With these things you form an opinion about yourself. You play the same game as the bubble.

Waking up to the Truth is Surrender

Suddenly the whole thing disappears. Before the game started, while the game is going on and when the game ends, whether you understand it or not, realize it or not, experience it or not, you belong to the ocean. You are God. You are one with Existence.

You are playing a game. You register your marriage to another bubble. You register some grains of sand as your property. The registrar is another bubble. A larger bubble is the ruler of the land or that bit of the ocean. And there is an understanding among the bubbles, 'You will not hit me and I will not hit you. You will not take my bubble and I will not take yours.' The whole game goes on in this way. Suddenly within one moment the whole thing is part of the ocean again.

Surrender means you wake up to the truth that you are in the ocean. When you are born, when you think you are an individual or when you become enlightened, you are always in the ocean. Just wake up Waking up to this ultimate Truth is surrender. Surrender these small ideas about yourself and wake up to reality. As a result, surrender automatically happens in your inner space, your inner consciousness. Otherwise you just play with the word 'surrender'.

We use inflated words when we define ourselves. We do not realize that we are beyond these descriptions. Any estimation you have of yourself except that you are God is an underestimation. You suffer from an inferiority complex if you think of yourself as anything other than God. Drop your ideas about yourself. Wake up to the Truth that you are the ocean.

Some fish swim along with the current and others swim against the current. Whether they go with or against the current, all the fish are in the water. Whether you flow with Existence or fight it, you are one with it. Whether or not you have realized you are divine, you are divine. There is no choice in this. There is only one choice, realize and enjoy or continue to struggle and suffer; that's all. You may try to create stronger fences around yourself or collect more bubbles around you, but can you ask the wave not to come? Whatever you may do, the whole thing is only a drama of a few seconds.

The next problem is what to do if you cannot surrender. Some people say, 'I am unable to surrender. What can I do?' Do not worry, because you have nothing to surrender. By understanding that you have nothing to surrender, you have already surrendered. Just relax. Whether you surrender or not, this is the truth. Whether you surrender or not, Existence takes care. Automatically life continues and you will relax. That relaxation itself is surrender.

Relax into the flow of life and wake up to the truth that you are something greater than your body and mind as suggested by your senses. You are led by society to think that you are something. Now wake up to the truth that you are greater than what you can imagine. You are beyond any imagination you can have of yourself. Surrendering will give you a new consciousness. You will not be the same person. One single moment of surrender will transform your whole life. You will be a new being.

Receive this truth of surrender and work on it. Suddenly you will wake up and give birth to yourself as an enlightened being. The moment you understand you belong to the ocean, that you are from it, that you are in it and that you will disappear into it, you will realize that you will never die, because you are the ocean.

As long as you identify with the bubble, you feel insecure. The instinct to survive and the instinct to possess torture you. The moment you realize that you are the ocean, the instinct to survive disappears because there is no death for you. There is nothing to fear, nothing to feel insecure about. Death creates fear as long as you think you are the bubble.

The moment you realize that you are the ocean, there is nothing to possess because everything belongs to you. There is nothing to lose and nothing to acquire. Hence, the instinct to possess disappears. You do not need to throw away whatever you have done for your 'I' and 'mine'. You do not need to throw away whatever you have. Just do not internalize them. Within yourself be aware and be complete that you are something greater than anything you can possibly possess.

At the age of seven, your toys are important to you. Do they hold the same importance today? You have neither renounced them nor are you attached to them. They are just there. Do you feel that you must return home because the toys are there? No! Do you feel the toys make your life a torture and that you must renounce them? No! You feel neither attached nor detached. You have grown beyond them.

Rāga means attachment. Arāga means detachment. Virāga (or vairāgya) means beyond attachment and detachment. As you grew up, vairāgya naturally happened towards your toys. So also, when you realize that you are the ocean, vairāgya will happen towards the few sand particles and bubbles that you have collected and gathered around yourself. You will have gone beyond these things. The instincts to survive and possess would no longer be relevant to you. Your property does not suddenly disappear. They are there, but you live them and enjoy them more intensely. You do not take them for granted. You do not feel bored with them. You do not think, 'same house, same wife, same life'. You take them for granted when you think they are your properties.

When you realize that they may be taken from you at any moment, you do not take them for granted. When you realize that you are the ocean and that they are also of the same ocean, you value them more. When you realize this, you are transformed at the level of body, mind and consciousness. When consciousness is transformed, you give birth to a new you.

Kṛṣṇa goes much deeper than these three levels of surrender: surrender of the intellect, surrender of the emotions and surrender of the senses. He gives Arjuna a glimpse of the greatest surrender. He gives Arjuna a glimpse of the ultimate experience itself. Kṛṣṇa already gave Arjuna the experience during Viśvarūpa darśan, the vision of His cosmic form. Even so, Arjuna was unable to establish himself in that experience due to fear.

Always you miss the first experience because of fear. Now Arjuna is more mature and capable of being established in the experience. Kṛṣṇa gives Arjuna the experience that will stay with him forever. In the next few verses Kṛṣṇa puts Arjuna into the experience of enlightenment. He wakes him up to the ultimate Truth.

Kṛṣṇa is waking Arjuna up from the long slumber called saṁsāra sāgara. This can also be called unconsciousness or tamas. Kṛṣṇa gives him a good shake by giving him the ultimate experience and puts him in that state forever. Kṛṣṇa puts Arjuna into that final level or highest level of surrender.

Extreme Statement

यस्य नाहङ्कृतो भावो बुद्धिर्यस्य न लिप्यते ।
हत्वाऽपि स इमाँल्लोकान्न हन्ति न निबध्यते ॥ १८-१७॥
yasya nāhaṅkṛto bhāvo buddhiryasya na lipyate hatvā'pi sa imāṁllokānna hanti na nibadhyate || 18.17 ||

18.17 One who is egoless, whose intelligence is not of attachment, though he may kill, is not the slayer and is never bound by his actions.

A very dangerous statement! Kṛṣṇa goes to the extreme. No Master except Kṛṣṇa can make such a courageous statement. Kṛṣṇa makes a bold statement here. One who is not motivated by ego, whose intelligence is not based on attachment, though he may kill many men in this world, he does not kill, nor is he bound by his actions.

Of course, one who has reached that level of completion does not think of killing. As long as we have the idea of 'I' and 'mine', we attack or kill. When we exclude, we kill. On the other hand, when we surrender, we learn to include everything.

One thing we need to understand. We kill others only when we feel insecure. We do not need courage to make war. We only need cowardice. Only cowards go to war. They are afraid for themselves and kill others. To kill others, we do not need courage. We simply need cowardice. The person who is courageous never kills others. He is established in non-violence. Only cowards continuously try to hurt others. A courageous person does not try to hurt others. That is the reason Kṛṣṇa makes this bold statement - one who is not entangled in ego, even if he kills, does not kill.

Kṛṣṇa emphasizes here: May you be liberated from entanglement. May you liberate yourself from ego, yasya nāhaṅkṛto bhāvo. He does not ask Arjuna to kill. One problem is that people give their own meaning to words. They have their own delusive cognition.

Understand, only if you start living completion, you will understand the quality of life. When there is incompletion, your life is stolen away from you. When the completion happens in you, you regain your life.

Kṛṣṇa asks you to complete yourself from your delusory cognition of ego. He does not ask you to go around killing people. Understand the truth behind the words. Only a Master like Kṛṣṇa can make such a courageous statement.

Kṛṣṇa uses killing as an extreme example to make Arjuna think. The focus is on nonattachment arising out of egolessness, which is the space of completion. You need to know, completion done to be in the space of completion transforms your personality, transforms your being, heals the intense, constant, agitated violence you carry towards you and others.

When one no longer feels the need to survive, anything that one does is without attachment and without expectation. When a person is in that state, he is truly in completion with Existence. If such a person destroys, it is similar to the destruction caused by Nature, which happens at a different frequency and understanding level.

Kṛṣṇa makes this statement to drive the point home to Arjuna that it is his responsibility to stand up and fight instead of running away from the battlefield.

18.28 The performer who is indisciplined, vulgar, stubborn, wicked, malicious, lazy, depressed, and procrastinating is called ignorant.

In these verses Kṛṣṇa explains the nature of man, the human.

Kṛṣṇa has already said that the final performer is not man, nara, but the divine, Nārāyaṇa. Even so the human is still the subject, the medium that we are dealing with. All the frailties that we have are inherent in our nature. These are the guṇas or attributes that define our behavior. These attributes control our thoughts, words and actions. One is not all the time, from birth to death, in one guṇa or attribute.

The guṇas are of three kinds: sattva, rajas and tamas. Sattva is defined as calm, peaceful, spiritual and good, etc. This is generally the attribute of spiritually inclined persons. Rajas is translated as aggressive, passionate and active, etc. This is the primary attribute of kings, warriors and business people. Tamas is lazy, ignorant and passive, etc. Tamas is seen as the inactive component that many of us experience at times. It is the active component of those who live to eat and sleep.

In these verses Kṛṣṇa beautifully defines in detail the qualities and effects of these guṇas upon us. His purpose in doing this is to make us aware of what happens within us. Majority of the time we are ignorant of 'why' we react the way we do.

As the Master explains in these words, and once we understand and cognize how we react, we can move to the next level of completion and shift to a superior attribute. If we find our own answer for the 'why' we will become spiritually enlightened.

Yes, all of us must be rājasic or aggressive, part of the time to accomplish things. Even so, if we can act aggressively without greed, anger or fear affecting us, as well as acting without attachment, we are in the sāttvic space, although superficially we seem to be in the rājasic space.

Swami Vivekananda says beautifully, 'First of all, the beaten and broken consciousness which has fallen into tamas, inertia, let it come to the awakening state of rajas, activism. Then it can be guided into sāttvic, spiritual balance.'

Kṛṣṇa defines a sāttvic person as one who sees the collective consciousness, the whole, in parts. He understands that he is not alone and not an island, rather he is linked with everyone and everything in this Universe. He understands his connection with the cosmic energy.

A sāttvic person is not focused on himself, he is focused on enriching others. Because he completes with his root patterns, He realizes that his survival and possessions, the 'I' and 'mine', are meaningless. His activities are selfless, without expectation of praise or reward, and without attachment to the process or result. Such a person is not affected by the seeming success or failure of what he undertakes because there is no feeling of 'I' and 'mine' involved in his actions.

It is not that difficult to move into a sāttvic state. You may not be able to stay there all the time, but once you understand how this state completes you, you try more and more to stay there.

To be in the sāttvic state is to understand that past and future are mere illusions. They do not exist. Past is gone, never to return. Why worry? Future is a mirage. All you can do is activate your present moment. That is all you can do. The present moment determines your future. Once you focus on the present, your space of completion increases manifold and you drop expectations and attachment. You just do what is needed. You respond to reality. You respond to the now. You are in sattva.

You fall into a rājasic state when you distinguish between 'you' and 'I', between this and that. There is no differentiation. Your mind, the ego, creates this differentiation. Your root thought patterns, saṁskāras overpower your complete cognition and bring up this delusory cognition of differentiating between you and others. A rājasic person does everything expecting a reward. He is selfish, aggressive and impatient. When he does not get what he wants, he is upset. Failure is a blow to his ego.

A rājasic person can never be happy and complete. Please understand, almost all of you are driven by rajas. This is the predominant attribute in modern society. Rich or poor, intelligent or foolish, educated or uneducated, almost everyone compares himself with the next person and wants what the other person has. As long as you are driven by your desires, and not complete with what you have, you are in rajas.

Too much of society has entered into human beings. You all have become social beings, you are no more human beings. You just have a set of manuals - at what age what is expected of you, at what age what you are supposed to do, and where you are supposed to be, how you are supposed to be talking, what you are supposed to be thinking, how you are supposed to be behaving. See, by default society is incomplete. So you are put in that rājasic space. Only if you are conscious, you can attract the space of completion.

The pure space of sattva seems to be a little heavy, little too much of joy. You feel you can't afford it. It is like you don't want to own the whole ocean, you want to own only the beach. Because only in the beach you can put a fence and ensure that others can't enter into it. Ocean you can own, but not possess. Please understand, owning is different and possessing is different.

All of us can own the whole world; that is not a problem at all. But we can't possess it, that is where the problem starts. Owning is different and possessing is different. The whole village owns the village temple, but you possess your house. We not only own our house, we possess it and make sure that others don't enter. We don't want to own the ocean, we want to possess the ocean. When we want to possess, we know that we can't possess the ocean. Not only we can't deny entry to other human beings, we can't deny entry to other animals. There are millions of animals below. When we want to possess that is where the problem starts.

Rajas corrodes you. It eats up your soul. There is no boundary to possessing, no end to greed and no limit to fear. These are the driving forces of rajas. Rajas is about trying to attain what you don't have, trying to eliminate and possess what you want to have, not being complete with what you have, not being complete about where you are and not being complete and happy when you are in the present moment. You are either constantly in the future, imagining what you would like to be and what you would like to possess, or you are in the past thinking about how you could have done better. Rajas is living in a fantasy world of possessing. Sattva is living in a reality world of owning and also letting others own.

If you want to own, you can own the whole world. See, unfortunately, only if you eliminate others, you feel that you are victorious, which is not right. This is a basic wrong understanding. A very important fact is never, ever will you be free by your efforts to be free. Freedom will happen to you only by the right knowledge about freedom, never by your efforts towards freedom. Never your effort towards freedom is going to give you freedom. It is only the knowledge about the freedom that will give you freedom.

So, the basic mistake that eliminating others is the only way you can possess or own is wrong. To own, you don't need to eliminate others. But because of this pattern, just because you want to eliminate others, you are ready to settle down with a few acres of beach. You are ready to forego the whole ocean. It is exactly with the same patterns, it is only with these patterns you define your identity. Without patterns, it is like you in the ocean.

In tamas one is fully in delusion, in the delusory cognition of incompletion. One sticks to root thought patterns, incomplete knowledge or inadequate cognition and conditions without making an effort to verify the answer of the 'why', whether they are right or wrong, appropriate or not, harmful or not. If one does not find the answer for 'why' and eats somebody else's answer, one can even be made as a religious terrorist. Religious zealots are in tamas. There is no difference between them; only their objectives are different. Both are dogmatic, violent and totally selfish. They adopt any means, even crime, to achieve their objectives.

Tamas does not just mean inactivity, laziness and procrastination. Yes, it is all that; however, it also includes mindless action performed without realizing that one is part of a whole. The ego is so enlarged that it believes it is the whole. It believes nothing else of significance exists; others are of no consequence.

18.35 Ignorant resolve that cannot go beyond dreaming, fear, grief, despair and delusion - such is in darkness, Pārtha.

Here Kṛṣṇa refers to the approach known as defining the puruṣārtha or meanings of life.

Dharma, artha, kāma and mokṣa are the four puruṣārtha. These can be translated as righteousness, wealth, desire or lust and liberation. These are the four-fold meanings of life. There is no purpose to life. Once we fix a purpose to life, it becomes a goalpost and attachments and expectations result.

Life is a path without a destination. Once we assume there is a destination, we hurry. The future becomes a stress-inducing factor. Let us say we travel from New York to Washington. Once we fix Washington as our destination, the next issue is, 'When will we reach there?' From then on, we are constantly tormented by, 'When will we reach there?' It is a different matter that we may have nothing to do in Washington once we arrive, and therefore there is no need to hurry. In the process we do not enjoy the journey. The journey becomes an irritation that we must cross in order to reach our destination.

In life, do not fix a destination. Each journey must be enjoyed being in the space of completion. The path and the journey are what life is. Life is completion. Have the space of completion for yourself. That will attract all the right experiences. Completion is power. Completion is Life. Enjoy the people you meet, the experiences you have and what you pick up on the way, without being greedy to acquire more. The journey, the path, becomes so enjoyable that whatever destination you reach is the right destination. Completion gets you all the best things of life. Completion is the basic need of life.

People who attach a purpose to life are disturbed. Philosophers who have no other work create false purposes to life. Philosophers exist to confuse people whereas mystics solve problems and provide guidance to awaken intelligence. When we let life lead us, when we let life enrich us, when we take life as it comes, we enjoy every moment. We truly live with completion in the present, like a God. We realize and manifest our potential, possibility and reality. As of now, man is only a possibility. A human being has everything in him to become the ultimate reality, the divine reality.

Puruṣārtha provides four meanings to life.

Dharma is right conduct or virtue. Dharma means the natural law of the cosmos. Buddha preached this as the middle path. It is an independent intelligence. The very DNA structure with which human consciousness is built, the natural law of human life, the dharma are these four principles.

Constantly give life to the four dharmas of authenticity, integrity, responsibility and enriching. When you protect dharma, it protects you. When you are integrated to it, it is integrated to you. When you are authentic with it, it is authentic with you. When you take responsibility for it, it takes responsibility for you. When you enrich dharma, it enriches you. Only then it is possible that your energy is awakened. Only then is your energy awakened.

Artha is the stuff that we pick up on our path and journey, the material things that we need to sustain ourselves.

Kāma is the pleasure of the senses we experience and enjoy on this journey. These are rightful acquisitions and pleasurable experiences. Do not feel disturbed by the need for these. But do not become caught up in them and forget to move on the path with completion and enjoy the journey to the fullest.

Mokṣa or liberation is the ultimate meaning to life. The meaning of human life is you experiencing completion, and working, radiating, showering others also with the same space of completion. This is the culmination of the liberation from expectation, desires, greed and fear, and liberation from attachment to desires. This understanding that experiencing completion with non-attachment and absence of expectation leads to liberation can fill us with bliss.

Here Kṛṣṇa gives the essence of how we should lead our lives to make it meaningful with completion. He says that goodness or sattva is the state of completion in which there is clarity about right and wrong, and whatever we do with our body, mind and senses is done with a view to liberate ourselves from attachment and desires in order to realize that we are divine.

Delusion of Senses

सुखं त्विदानीं त्रिविधं शृणु मे भरतर्षभ ।
अभ्यासाद्रमते यत्र दुःखान्तं च निगच्छति ॥ १८-३६॥
sukhaṃ tvidānīṃ trividhaṃ śṛṇu me bharatarṣabha
abhyāsādramate yatra duḥkhāntaṃ ca nigacchati || 18.36 ||

18.36 And now hear from Me, O Arjuna, about three kinds of pleasure. The pleasure that one enjoys from spiritual practice results in cessation of all sorrows.

यत्तदग्रे विषमिव परिणामेऽमृतोपमम् ।
तत्सुखं सात्त्विकं प्रोक्तमात्मबुद्धिप्रसादजम् ॥ १८-३७॥ yattadagre viṣamiva pariṇāme'mṛtopamam
tatsukhaṃ sāttvikaṃ proktamātmabuddhiprasādajam || 18.37 ||

18.37 The pleasure that appears as poison in the beginning, but is like nectar in the end, comes by the grace of Self-knowledge and is in the mode of goodness.

विषयेन्द्रियसंयोगाद्यत्तदग्रेऽमृतोपमम् । परिणामे विषमिव तत्सुखं राजसं स्मृतम् ॥ १८-३८॥ viṣayendriyasaṃyogādyat tadagre'mṛtopamam
pariṇāme viṣamiva tatsukhaṃ rājasaṃ smṛtam || 18.38 ||

18.38 Sensual pleasures that appear as nectar in the beginning, but become poison in the end, are in the mode of passion.

यदग्रे चानुबन्धे च सुखं मोहनमात्मनः ।
निद्रालस्यप्रमादोत्थं तत्तामसमुदाहृतम् ॥ १८-३९॥
yadagre cānubandhe ca sukhaṃ mohanamātmanaḥ
nidrālasyapramādotthaṃ tattāmasamudāhṛtam || 18.39 ||

18.39 Pleasure that is delusion from beginning to end and born out of sleep, laziness and illusion is said to be of the nature of ignorance.

न तदस्ति पृथिव्यां वा दिवि देवेषु वा पुनः ।
सत्त्वं प्रकृतिजैर्मुक्तं यदेभिः स्यात्त्रिभिर्गुणैः ॥ १८-४०॥ na tadasti pṛthivyāṃ vā divi deveṣu vā punaḥ sattvaṃ prakṛtijairmuktaṃ yadebhiḥ syāttribhirguṇaiḥ || 18.40 ||

18.40 No one, either here or among the celestials in the higher planetary systems, is free from these three states of material nature.

Earlier Kṛṣṇa spoke about the influence of guṇas (attributes) on the intellect, that in turn defines the way we act. Now He talks about how we respond as a result of our root patterns.

Kṛṣṇa says that spiritual practice, that is the state of satva, is difficult in the beginning, and it is like poison; however, it becomes life-giving nectar in the end.

Sensual pleasures born out of rajas, on the other hand, seem like nectar in the beginning but become poisonous. In the tamasic state, Kṛṣṇa says, one is deluded as if in sleep, laziness and illusion. Every human is in one state or another. Not merely humans, even the celestials who are supposedly more evolved are in the same mode. No one can escape the effect of the guṇas, the attributes of Nature.

How beautifully the Master summarizes how we become deluded by our senses! It is not easy to begin spiritual practice. In the Hindu tradition, in the Gurukul schools, from a young age children were brought up in an environment of spirituality. They learned to live in the pure space of completion and control their mind and senses at an early age and to focus upon Self-realization. They understood by the example of their Masters that there was something more pleasurable than sensory pleasures. This gave them courage.

In today's age, this education system is considered impractical. Invading Moghuls and the colonizing British destroyed the Hindu culture, especially the Gurukul tradition. This was not accidental or incidental. It was a deliberate strategy. British rulers identified the educational system of Gurukul as the key to Bharat's tremendous intelligence and targeted its destruction so that they could rule.

What we have today is a mass of literate Hindus who are uneducated. The whole civilization, the whole spiritual tradition is suffering now just because of not having completion with one another. They are totally unaware that the great tradition of our Hindu culture is established on completion. They think rituals are meaningless. We have lost the knowledge of the connection between these rituals and spirituality. Rituals, when carried out meaningfully, are the basis of spirituality. Please understand, the biggest asset a man can acquire is the space of completion. The biggest asset for any man, the best thing a human being can have in his life is completion, the space of completion.

We are behind our sensory pleasures now. When we are in the rājasic mode, only sensory pleasures of the body matter. In the tamasic mode, we don't even know we are in deep ignorance. The sensory organs are powerful. They are our windows to the external world. They are trained to run away from pain and chase pleasure. Bodily pleasure gives mental pleasure and therefore emotional satisfaction. Once we experience the mental pleasure, we constantly rewind and replay that pleasure. Our past drives our future. Attachments and expectations drive our actions.

We try to keep on experiencing pain and pleasure alternately. Either way it is only an illusion. If you lead your life with completion, you won't get caught in the illusions of attachment and expectations driving your actions.

Kaṭhopaniṣad says, 'The good and the pleasant approach man. The wise examines both and discriminates between them. The wise prefers the good to the pleasant. But the foolish man chooses the pleasant through love of bodily pleasure.'

'If you are given the option of 'right or pleasant', 'right thing, good thing or very pleasant, convenient and happy thing', always choose the 'right thing', not the 'pleasant' one, not the convenient one.' Understand, when you choose the pleasant, when you side with the pleasant, your destruction is inevitable.

Your Space of Completion is Kṛṣṇa

Look for the right, not for light. Your whole life is nothing but Mahābhārat.

See what the Kauravas' birth is. One child, Duryodhana is born who is unconscious, dead, aborted. So, that was broken into hundred pieces. When you are born, you are unconscious and you are broken into hundreds of root-patterns, and all hundred grow as demons. It means that all your root-patterns are growing as demons. When you are tired of being a demon, you also encourage some good qualities in you just for a change. Please understand, there is nobody who is hundred percent demon, because being hundred percent demon makes you feel bored.

Otherwise, why should Rāvaṇa do Śiva Pūjā? You cannot be hundred percent demon or hundred percent saint till you become enlightened. Till you become an enlightened soul, both sides will be there because you need choice. Life is all about just jumping from one side to another. A few good patterns which you develop in you just as a choice, as an alternative, those few good patterns are the Pāṇḍavas. The space of completion which you have inside you, which cannot be destroyed by any root pattern is Kṛṣṇa. Once in a while, Kṛṣṇa comes out and says, 'Hey! All you root patterns, you guys are doing wrong things! Don't do it!'

Then, all hundreds of your patterns stand and laugh at Kṛṣṇa, 'Ha, Ha! Can you can stop us? Do what you want!' Every time, every day, every moment, the struggle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas goes on. Kṛṣṇa also comes to the scene once in a while. But He comes for such a short time that you forget His existence. He goes back to Dwārka (the capital city that Kṛṣṇa ruled), He goes back to His space, the space where you push your completion.

All of us have the space of completion, but we push it under the ocean like Dwārka. We don't want to interact with that space every day, because that takes away many of our vested interests. Many things which we forcibly imagine as joyful and pleasurable do not look good with the space of completion.

Understand, your whole life is a Mahābhārat. Then, when your weight becomes too much for your own body, when your incompletions are too much for your own body; when Bhū Devī, the Earth Goddess, is unable to hold the weight, Kṛṣṇa comes and reduces the bhū bhāra, the weight of the Earth. It means that when your incompletions become too much even for yourself, Kṛṣṇa comes and destroys all your incompletions.

Kṛṣṇa describes the tāmasic person with great insight. He does not use the word poison in describing the state of such a person. A tāmasic person is like a drug addict, He says. At least a rājasic person enjoys the experience now and suffers later.

A tāmasic person has no enjoyment. He suffers without knowing that he is suffering. His delusion is so deep. That is why he passes his suffering on to others. That is how ignorant people who rise to become leaders act.

Rightful Conduct, Not to Perfection

18.47 It is better to engage in one's rightful conduct, even though one may not perform it to perfection, rather than to accept another's conduct and perform it perfectly. Duties prescribed according to one's nature are never affected by sinful reactions.

18.48 Every work has some defect, just as fire is covered by smoke. One should not give up the work that is born of his own nature, even if such work is full of fault, O Kaunteya (Arjuna).

Sreyān svadharmo viguṇaḥ paradharmāt svanuṣṭhitāt, says Śrī Kṛṣṇa. So-called scholars have interpreted this verse in a very inappropriate way compared to the other verses of the Gītā. The uneducated have also used this verse in order to condemn the Hindu culture.

First of all, one must understand how the caste system originated, as well as realize how it became corrupted. In the Hindu culture, under the Gurukul tradition, young children were left in the care of the Master. This is how Arjuna grew up with Aśvattama, Drona's son. No caste was considered inferior or superior to another. No caste was hereditary. The selection and training was scientific and done impartially. It enriched society well since everyone was living and expressing themselves according to their aptitudes, their peak possibility and their unique path towards liberation.

This is why Kṛṣṇa says it is better to do one's assigned work imperfectly rather than do another's work perfectly. It is possible that one can perform elements of another's work well. A brāhmaṇa, being a scholar, may excel as a vaiśya in commercial calculations; however, he will have neither the heart nor the head to be a businessman. In this Gurukul system, along with the Master, the child also was allowed to select his vocation. The child could express its passion and decide.

Over time, this classification of selection and training became corrupted. Those who were brāhmaṇa wanted their children to be brāhmaṇa and so on. The varṇa or caste system that had originally been a selection and training system in education led to the stratification of society based upon birth.

Before we condemn the caste system, realize that every society has stratification. Wherever equality has been forced on society, it has been a failure. Each person is unique and when similar people form groups, there will be stratification and classification. In Hinduism this classification was based upon talents and intelligence. In modern society it is based on money and power. Which is better?

Without the brāhmaṇa being the keepers of knowledge, our Hindu treasures would have disappeared thousands of years ago. Do you know that there is a group of scholars in Chidambaram, the dīkśitars even today, and similarly in other places, who take their traditional job of preserving Hindu wisdom so seriously that they will not travel out of their town limits? They have made this sacrifice for generations and for thousands of years so that this knowledge could be preserved for posterity. We make fun of them, revile them and denounce the system.

The people who denounce the system do it for power and money, not for any selfless reasons. They recommend no alternative means of preserving traditional knowledge. The problem with society and the societal structure is that they become exclusive; good societies should be inclusive. Today in the West as well as in other places, if we have money or power, we are respected. Does anyone rebel against that? No! How can we call a society advanced or progressive when its main criterion for respect is money?

When you see a homeless person approaching your car in the USA, you instinctively raise your windows and lock your doors. You are so afraid. In Bharat, is anyone afraid of a beggar coming and standing in front of them? Why? There is acceptance. People in the West say that acceptance is weakness, not violence. How strange societal values have become! You respect a person only when you are afraid of him.

We cannot evolve unless there is a fundamental change in our thinking. We have come to a stage where negative qualities are the hallmark of respectability. Violence and aggression never win. Acceptance and compassion do.

18.53 Relinquishing egotism, violence, pride, lust, anger, and proprietorship, one becomes peaceful, free from the notion of 'I' and 'mine', and fit for attaining oneness with the supreme Being.

These verses are the ultimate sūtra, the technique to liberate oneself and realize Brahman, ultimate Truth. Kṛṣṇa describes how to reach the ultimate Truth. He tells us to just follow His instructions.

The beauty of Kṛṣṇa's advice in Bhagavad Gītā is that He makes no assumptions. He goes to the depths of Arjuna's stated and unstated doubts and tells him in such clear words that there can be no ambiguity. Bhagavad Gītā is primarily a śāstra, a scripture that provides knowledge. Even though the author who delivers it is the Divine Himself, He must bring Himself down to the level of Arjuna, a mortal. Kṛṣṇa's compassion drives Him to repeat the same words and to ensure that Arjuna listens and understands.

As long as we question why, we never get a clear answer. Especially with Existence, the question 'Why?' has no relevance. We operate at a different frequency from the Divine, so even if it is explained, we will not understand. Spirituality is an inner science, not an outer science, and that is fortunate.

In the outer sciences, we keep asking 'Why?' and when we cannot get answers, we get stuck. Then, we produce half-baked theories that convince no one. 'Why?' is about logic. 'How?' is about realism. Śāstras answer the 'Why?' Sūtras answer the 'How?' Once in a while, the Master delivers the sūtra amidst the śāstra that He must deliver to keep Arjuna quiet.

He says, 'Settle the mind and control the senses.' Can you do that while sitting in the middle of a traffic junction? No. That is why He says go into solitude and cut yourself off from disturbances. Eat little, so that you are not disturbed. Go into meditation and shut your senses to external objects.

These are the clearest instructions on how to meditate. Prepare yourself to be away from potential disturbances. There is no point in meditating when you are sure the phone will ring or a guest will be arriving. Fix a time and place when you will be alone and undisturbed.

There are simple ways to reduce sensory disturbances. Closing the eyes is insufficient. Your eyeballs will still move and an inner television will still play. Mentally freeze your eyeballs. Think they are made of stone and still them. At the same time place your tongue on your upper palate and lock it. If there is movement of the tongue, that creates verbalization, then visualization is difficult.

These two tools of mentally freezing your eyeball movement and locking your tongue substantially reduce the wandering of the mind due to sensory disturbances.

Meditate on an empty stomach. A full stomach makes us sleepy; it will not take us into realization. Ideally one should meditate in the same location regularly to preserve the energy raised in meditation. These are the physical requirements. Next Kṛṣṇa repeats what He has been emphasizing all along.

Complete and drop your personality, He says, drop your ego and root patterns, your attachments, your ideas of 'I' and 'mine' as well as the emotions that bind you to survival and possession. Then you will be liberated, you will be in the space of completion and ready to reach the supreme Being.

Work Always Under My Protection

18.57 While being engaged in activities, just depend upon Me, and being fully conscious of Me, work always under My protection.

मच्चित्तः सर्वदुर्गाणि मत्प्रसादात्तरिष्यसि ।
अथ चेत्त्वमहङ्कारान्न श्रोष्यसि विनङ्क्ष्यसि ॥ १८-५८॥
maccittaḥ sarvadurgāṇi matprasādāttariṣyasi
atha cettvamahaṅkārānna śroṣyasi vinaṅkṣyasi || 18.58 ||

18.58 When your mind becomes fixed on Me, you shall overcome all difficulties by My grace. But if you do not listen to Me due to ego, you shall perish.

Kṛṣṇa explains how devotion is reached and how He protects the devotee.

Developing the state of non-attachment, being impartial to all beings, being unconcerned by success and failure, fully absorbed in Godhood, one becomes His devotee. In that state alone does one understand the essence of Kṛṣṇa. Once one understands this, one merges into Kṛṣṇa consciousness. When one is in Kṛṣṇa consciousness, the devotee, even if he is engaged in worldly activities, is protected by the grace and compassion of Kṛṣṇa. Without any difficulty such a devotee reaches the ultimate reality.

When we relax from the instinct that constantly works to protect us, the space created allows the power of extraordinary possibilities, coincidence to happen. Kṛṣṇa says that even though we may be engaged in the activities of the world, if we are His devotees, under His protection we experience eternal consciousness. If Kṛṣṇa only wanted to give us the spiritual experience, He would not have used the word 'protection, mad-vyapāśrayaḥ.' So Kṛṣṇa is referring to both the outer and inner worlds. The person who surrenders gets the best experience in both worlds. We simply need to get out and He will get in. Just get out and let Him get in. To protect does not mean that you should not lock your house. It means that you should drop the instinct of survival. The instinct of survival constantly tortures you. It is the greatest killer. If somebody kills you, you can only be killed once. But the instinct to survive kills you every moment. When you surrender this instinct, Kṛṣṇa will protect you.

Intellectually you cannot understand this. You think, 'How can somebody who made a statement thousands of years ago give me protection?' You think that only you can protect and look out for yourself. You are wrong!

You think that the survival instinct is essential in order to exist. You will realise the futility of the survival instinct only when you surrender. After that, you will automatically realize that you can live without the instinct to survive or the instinct to possess. You will realize that you can live in the material world without these instincts ruling you. This is what Kṛṣṇa means when He says that He will protect you. His energy takes care.

When you surrender, a space is created that allows the power of coincidence, the power of extraordinary possibilities to happen. Automatically things fall into place. Automatically you are taken care of by the energy of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

When you believe that you are intelligent enough to use your mind and go your own way, you are asking for trouble. Kṛṣṇa says you will perish if you follow your mind and senses instead of listening to Him.

Understand Surrender

We must understand two things. The first is about listening to one's mind and the second is about not listening to the Master.

Many people have an issue about accepting another human as superior, as someone to whom they should defer, let alone surrender. They think that prostrating at another person's feet is disrespecting themselves and quite uncivilized.

When you fall at someone's feet, you surrender your ego. It is good for you. It does not matter to whom you surrender. Whether you surrender to a stone or a human being, surrendering your ego raises you spiritually. This is the absolute Truth. You do not need to discriminate, search, filter and go through a lot of effort and time to surrender to an enlightened Master.

Someone asked me, 'What do you mean by surrender?' Surrender is when you find someone whom you can unconditionally love and you have no problem if it is obvious that you are in love with that person. Your identity then merges with that person.

Think of the person whom you would like to be with if God told you that the entire earth is about to be destroyed. Only you and one other person will survive and you can choose that person. Who will that person be? That person is the one you have surrendered to. Hindu chants end with the word namaḥ. What does this mean? It means 'I surrender to You.' Each time you utter a Hindu prayer, you say, 'I surrender to You, my Lord.' Is there another system of prayer that so thoroughly destroys your ego?

So, just because you do not surrender to a Master or a favorite deity, because one is human and the other is stone, do you think you are the Master, free and independent? You surrender to someone else for money, power or lust. One of these will surely happen. People run after someone because that person carries something that they want.

How much more sensible it is to follow and surrender to someone out of intelligence, because that person is more aware and complete, and can guide you on the path to completion? Why are we reluctant to surrender to another person? It is because we have been captured by our mind and senses. We are in a jail and we are captive. We fear losing the identity that our mind and senses have created for us. We fear letting go of that identity. Our mind fights against shifting our allegiance from that ego and identity to someone else.

Realize that you are a slave to your senses and not the master of your destiny as you imagine. Be aware that your pains and sorrows arise from the mistaken belief that you are the master of your destiny. Once you realize this, you will look for an alternative. You then understand what the greatest Master of all, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, says:

mac-cittaḥ sarva durgāṇi mat-prasādāt tariṣyasi | atha cet tvam ahaṅkārān na śroṣyasi vinaṅkṣyasi || 18.58 ||

'If you listen to Me, I shall protect you, whatever may happen. If you do not, and you follow your mind, you shall perish.'

Devotion and Knowledge are Not Separate

Kṛṣṇa says that 'having known Me in essence, one merges in Me' and refers to this as devotion.

bhaktyā mām abhijānāti yāvān yaś c'āsmi tattvataḥ | tato māṁ tattvato jñātvā viśate tad-anantaram || 18.55 ||

Please understand that bhakti (devotion) and jñāna (knowledge) are not separate. Where there is devotion, there is knowledge and where there is true knowledge, there is devotion.

Kṛṣṇa does not refer to dry intellectual knowledge, even if such knowledge is of the scriptures. Thousands of scholars and philosophers waste their time and everybody else's time by analyzing Bhagavad Gītā word by word and comparing it with other scriptures. What is the point? This is a pointless, foolish exercise that serves only to boost one's ego.

The entire purpose of Gītā is to enrich you to complete with your root patterns and drop the ego. All you need to do is understand one verse of Gītā, one statement of Kṛṣṇa, in its entirety. That is enough to enlighten you. This is what Vivekananda meant when he said that the study of one handful of earth can teach you about the entire earth. You need depth, not breadth of knowledge.

Every word of Gītā, every word of Kṛṣṇa, is energy. That is the knowledge that you need to imbibe and experience. This is what the 'knowing, tattvato jñātva' that Kṛṣṇa refers to. Once you 'know' this energy, you reach this energy. You become Kṛṣṇa. You are not only devoted to Kṛṣṇa, you become Kṛṣṇa.

There are two paths. One way is to 'know' the truth so clearly and completely that there is absolutely no doubt about your trust in the Master. There is no doubt that you are the same consciousness as the Master. Once you know this, there is no duality, there is the space of advaita, non-duality. You and the Master are the same. This is the height of devotion.

The other way is the deep surrender that happens within, the unbridled love that arises within you and through which you merge with the Master. Along with the merger, comes the knowledge that you are no different. Seemingly, knowledge comes from devotion; jñāna comes from bhakti.

The truth is that both happen simultaneously. Do you think Mīrā did not know that she was one with Kṛṣṇa? Do you think she could have drunk poison without knowing that whatever she consumed was being consumed by her Lord and Master, Kṛṣṇa? Do you feel Śaṅkara was just a dry philosopher when he beheld the form of Devi and sang the verses of Soundarya Lahiri? He is possibly the greatest philosopher the world has ever seen, and he melted in front of Her in devotion.

All this talk about the three approaches to Divinity as dvaita (duality), viśiṣṭādvaita (qualified duality) and advaita (non-duality) are best left to philosophers to argue about.

Duality happens when you are open to that cosmic energy but you still feel separate. You are like the ocean drop that knows it is part of the ocean but sees itself as separate. To reach this stage, you need to be open. When you are closed, you do not even accept that there is this huge ocean of which you are a part. You are ignorant. Duality or dvaita is the first step.

Next, you become available. Not only do you know that there is this huge energy around you, but you become aware that you are part of it. You are a part of the Whole. You realize that as a drop, you are a part of the ocean. This is qualified duality, viśiṣṭādvaita.

Then you suddenly realize and know that you are the ocean. There is no difference or barrier between you and the energy. You are the energy. You are God. This is non-duality, advaita. You just are. From being open, to being available, you just are. When you 'know' Kṛṣṇa, there is nothing else to know. Then, you become Kṛṣṇa.

Root Patterns Will Drive You

yadahaṅkāramāśritya na yotsya iti manyase

18.59 If due to ego you think: 'I shall not fight', your resolve is useless, and your own nature will compel you.

svabhāvajena kaunteya nibaddhaḥ svena karmaṇā
kartuṃ necchasi yanmohātkariṣyasyavaśo'pi tat || 18.60 ||

18.60 O Kaunteya, you are controlled by your own natural conditioning. Therefore you shall do, even against your will, what out of delusion you wish not to do.

ईश्वरः सर्वभूतानां हृद्देशेऽर्जुन तिष्ठति ।
भ्रामयन्सर्वभूतानि यन्त्रारूढानि मायया ॥ १८-६१॥
īśvaraḥ sarvabhūtānāṃ hṛddeśe'rjuna tiṣṭhati bhrāmayansarvabhūtāni yantrārūḍhāni māyayā || 18.61 ||

18.61 The Supreme Lord resides in everyone's heart, O Arjuna, and is directing the activities of all living entities, that are acting as machines under His illusive material power.

Kṛṣṇa delivers an ultimatum to Arjuna, 'Whether you like it or not, Arjuna,' He says, 'you will fight. In seeming intelligence, your ego tells you that you should not fight. You are under the illusion of your superficial knowledge that it is not right to wage war against friends, relatives and teachers. But you forget that your nature and your conditioning as a warrior drive you. You are a puppet in the hands of Existence, prakṛtis tvāṁ niyokṣyati. You will fight.'

These are extraordinary words. Whether we like it or not, whatever our intelligence may be, and whatever our will may be, Kṛṣṇa says we will be driven by our root patterns, saṁskāras. The Divine power drives the machine that is the kārmic cycle. There is no escape.

Nothing can be clearer. The law of nature drives us to fulfill our unfulfilled desires. Our past conditioning invokes these desires. Even though they may be in our unconscious, inaccessible to us, they determine what we do. The Master sees this even if we cannot. That is why Kṛṣṇa makes this bold statement.

The mind creates and stores the root patterns, saṁskāras. You can refuse to bow down to your mind and refuse to accept these saṁskāras that control you.

All meditation techniques bring you into the space of completion, being in the present moment. When you are in the present moment, you renounce attachment to fantasies about the future. You detach yourself from the results of your action. This alone leads you into liberation from the bondage of saṁskāra.

Surrender to the Master, surrender to the Universe, is the ultimate technique to do completion and rid oneself of all bondages of karma, vāsanā and saṁskāra, of the past, present and future.

This is what Kṛṣṇa, the greatest Master of all, the Parama Guru, the Jagat Guru, has repeated throughout the Gītā. He does not ask you to surrender to Him out of His ego. He asks you to surrender to Him out of His deep compassion. What can you give Him that He does not have? Where else would you want to go since only He can grant everything you want? More importantly, only He can grant you what you need to free you from your suffering forever. Who else can do this for you? No one. Don't lose hope. There is no need to do that. Kṛṣṇa is situated in everyone's heart. All you need is trust in Him.

Completely Surrender to Him

तमेव शरणं गच्छ सर्वभावेन भारत ।
तत्प्रसादात्परां शान्तिं स्थानं प्राप्स्यसि शाश्वतम् ॥ १८-६२॥
tameva śaraṇaṃ gaccha sarvabhāvena bhārata tatprasādātparāṃ śāntiṃ sthānaṃ prāpsyasi śāśvatam || 18.62 ||

18.62 Surrender unto Him completely. By His grace you will attain supreme peace and the eternal abode.

Kṛṣṇa switches gears and starts giving Arjuna the experience. He starts radiating eternal consciousness. He is putting Arjuna into that consciousness, into the experience of enlightenment.

Just relax for a few minutes. Relax from all the thoughts and ideas going on in your head. There is every possibility that you can also glimpse what Arjuna received by His grace. We always miss due to our instinct to survive and possess. For a few minutes, relax from thoughts. You can pick them up later. There is no problem in that.

Just for a few moments keep them away from your consciousness. Drop them from your inner space so that you may glimpse that consciousness. There is a distinct possibility that you may experience what Arjuna experienced by the grace of Kṛṣṇa.

tam eva śaranaṁ gaccha sarva-bhāvena bhārata | tat prasādāt parāṁ śāntiṁ sthānaṁ prāpsyasi śāśvatam || 18.62 ||

Throughout Bhagavad Gītā, Śrī Kṛṣṇa has been saying, surrender to Me. He has been saying 'I' and 'Me', meaning that He represents the Divine. Now, suddenly, He changes that and says surrender unto Him (tam) as a third person. For the first time He refers to the Divine in this way. This means that He has expanded beyond the body. He now speaks as Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, the universal Kṛṣṇa. He speaks from the eternal consciousness. That is the reason He says surrender unto Him and not surrender unto Me. Earlier He used the word 'I' or 'Me'. This change means that He is in an expanded state to put Arjuna into the experience. In order to give a disciple the experience, the Master must be in the same state, too. That is why Śrī Kṛṣṇa went into that expanded state.

Before a pūjā, the priest chants the aṅganyāsa karanyāsa mantra - anguṣṭhābhyām daśadibhyāṁ - these mantras are chanted in order to expand and go beyond body consciousness. These purify the body and help us go beyond the body. Actually, purifying and going beyond are the same thing.

So now Kṛṣṇa says 'Surrender unto Him, tam eva śaranaṁ gaccha' since He has expanded and He cannot use the word 'Me'. He says, 'Bhārata, surrender unto Him utterly. By His grace you will attain eternal consciousness and supreme peace.'

He has expanded into that consciousness and is about to give energy darśan. He is ready to shower His energy on Arjuna.

Surrender to Me, I Will Liberate You

इति ते ज्ञानमाख्यातं गुह्याद्गुह्यतरं मया ।
विमृश्यैतदशेषेण यथेच्छसि तथा कुरु ॥ १८-६३॥
iti te jñānamākhyātaṃ guhyādguhyataraṃ mayā vimṛśyaitadaśeṣeṇa yathecchasi tathā kuru || 18.63 ||

18.63 I have explained the knowledge that is the secret of secrets. After fully reflecting on this, do as you wish.

सर्वगुह्यतमं भूयः शृणु मे परमं वचः ।
इष्टोऽसि मे दृढमिति ततो वक्ष्यामि ते हितम् ॥ १८-६४॥ sarvaguhyatamaṃ bhūyaḥ śṛṇu me paramaṃ vacaḥ
iṣṭo'si me dṛḍhamiti tato vakṣyāmi te hitam || 18.64 ||

18.64 Because you are My dear friend, I express this truth to you. This is the most confidential of all knowledge. Hear this from Me. It is for your benefit.

मन्मना भव मद्भक्तो मद्याजी मां नमस्कुरु ।
मामेवैष्यसि सत्यं ते प्रतिजाने प्रियोऽसि मे ॥ १८-६५॥ manmanā bhava madbhakto madyājī māṃ namaskuru māmevaiṣyasi satyaṃ te pratijāne priyo'si me || 18.65 ||

18.65 Always think of Me and become My devotee. Worship Me and offer your homage unto Me. Thus you will certainly attain Me. This I promise you because you are My very dear friend.

सर्वधर्मान्परित्यज्य मामेकं शरणं व्रज ।
अहं त्वा सर्वपापेभ्यो मोक्षयिष्यामि मा शुचः ॥ १८-६६॥ sarvadharmān parityajya māmekaṃ śaraṇaṃ vraja

aham tvā sarvapāpebhyo mokṣayiṣyāmi mā śucaḥ || 18.66 ||

18.66 Abandon all principles and concepts of right conduct and simply surrender unto Me. I shall liberate you from all sinful reaction. Have no worry.

What powerful words! Only the Divine can speak these words of absolute authority, 'Always think of Me, become My devotee, worship Me and offer your homage unto Me. This is the way you will come to Me without fail. I promise this because you are My great bhakta (devotee) and very dear to Me.'

manmanā bhava madbhakto madyāji māṁ namaskuru | mām ev'aiṣyasi satyaṁ te pratijāne priyo'si me || 18.65 ||

Now He comes to the ultimate teaching. This is the essence of all His teachings, the quintessence of Bhagavad Gītā. He wakes up Arjuna with this verse and puts him into Kṛṣṇa consciousness, the eternal consciousness or enlightenment.

Kṛṣṇa showers Himself on Arjuna, waking him up to the experience of the Whole.

sarvadharmān parityajya mām ekaṁ śaraṇaṁ vraja | ahaṁ tvāṁ sarvapāpebhyo mokṣayiṣyāmi mā śucaḥ || 18.66 ||

He says, 'Give up everything, whatever you know as dharma, the rules and regulations of the outer life and of the inner life. Drop everything that you know and surrender unto Me. I shall liberate you from everything. Do not fear.' Kṛṣṇa gives him abhaya, complete protection.

He liberates Arjuna with these words. He gives the ultimate experience to Arjuna. With this verse, Kṛṣṇa makes Arjuna drop everything and liberates him. He gives him a conscious experience of the ocean. He asks Arjuna to drop his ideas about being a separate bubble, relax and realize the truth. Even the idea of the ocean or of God are simply our ideas. Kṛṣṇa makes Arjuna drop those ideas and makes him explode into Kṛṣṇa consciousness, the eternal consciousness.

Now Kṛṣṇa enters into the actual experience.

Kṛṣṇa liberates Arjuna and gives him the ultimate experience permanently. We cannot call him Arjuna any longer because he has become Kṛṣṇa. He has achieved Kṛṣṇa consciousness. Now only Kṛṣṇa exists. As long as Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna existed, there were two entities. But now that they have become one, neither exists. There is no name for it. It is only energy.

Forget about dharma, the codes of conduct laid down by religions, and turn to Me. I shall be your savior, says Kṛṣṇa.

Do not misunderstand, misquote and misuse these words. You will do yourself the greatest disservice. The Divine does not care whether you are good or evil. The Divine does not care whether you are a saint or sinner. A saint and a sinner, a celibate monk and a prostitute have equal chances of reaching the Divine. This is the truth. Of course, when you come close to the Divine, the energy transforms you. Negativities will be dissolved. Root patterns will be completed. They will be burnt and you will be pure as you were at birth.

Religion is the creation of men. Spirituality is the creation of enlightened Masters who live in the energy of the Divine with total completion. Kṛṣṇa, Śiva, Buddha, Mahāvira and Jesus are enlightened Masters. They related to no religion. The followers who interpreted them to the best or worst of their understanding created religions. The followers established dharma, the codes of righteous conduct. No God or Master is interested in coming down to tell you how you should behave. They tell you to be in the space of completion and that will put you on the right path to live advaita, the space of non-duality.

Thus, Kṛṣṇa says with absolute conviction and authority: Forget all codes of conduct, give up all religions and come to Me with completion. This is your enlightenment.

Śrī Kṛṣṇa is triguṇa rahita: beyond the attributes of nature and kārmic influence. Merging with Him, surrendering to Him takes you beyond all kārmic bondages.

If you understand this verse and act accordingly, you will be liberated. That is Kṛṣṇa's promise.

Take a few moments now to pray to Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa, the universal Kṛṣṇa, who showered enlightenment on Arjuna and gave him the ultimate experience. Pray that He may shower the same experience on us or give us a glimpse of the ultimate Truth. Take a few moments to pray. Please close your eyes and pray intensely to Him.

Do not think that He is unavailable now. He is always available to everybody on planet Earth. He may not have the body, but He is available in the form of energy. The deities in the temples are called arcāvatār. That means 'incarnation of the Divine'. He is available to us all the time, whenever we call Him.

Close your eyes and pray intensely to Him to shower us with the same experience He showered on Arjuna. Relax in silence and listen to the words of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

Without A Doubt, He Comes Back to Me

इदं ते नातपस्काय नाभक्ताय कदाचन ।

18.67 This knowledge should never be spoken by you to one who is devoid of austerity, who is without devotion, who does not desire to listen, or who speaks ill of Me.

18.68 One who communicates the supreme secret to the devotees performs the highest devotional service to Me, and at the end he will without doubt come back to Me.

18.69 No other person shall do a more pleasing service to Me, and no one on the earth shall be more dear to Me.

अध्येष्यते च य इमं धर्म्यं संवादमावयोः । adhyeṣyate ca ya imaṃ dharmyaṃ saṃvādamāvayoḥ

jñānayajñena tenāhamiṣṭaḥ syāmiti me matiḥ || 18.70 ||

18.70 I declare that one who studies this sacred dialogue worships Me with the sacrifice of his intelligence.

श्रद्धावाननसूयश्च शृणुयादपि यो नरः ।
सोऽपि मुक्तः शुभाँल्लोकान्प्राप्नुयात्पुण्यकर्मणाम् ॥ १८-७१॥ śraddhāvānanasūyaśca śṛṇuyādapi yo naraḥ
so'pi muktaḥ śubhāṁllokān prāpnuyātpuṇyakarmaṇām || 18.71 ||

18.71 One who listens with faith and without envy becomes free from sinful reactions and attains to the planets where those of merit dwell.

कच्चिदेतच्छ्रुतं पार्थ त्वयैकाग्रेण चेतसा । कच्चिदज्ञानसम्मोहः प्रनष्टस्ते धनञ्जय ॥ १८-७२॥ kaccidetacchrutaṃ pārtha tvayaikāgreṇa cetasā kaccidajñānasammohaḥ pranaṣṭaste dhanañjaya || 18.72 ||

18.72 O Pārtha, did you listen to this with single-minded attention? Has your delusion born of ignorance been completely destroyed, Dhanañjaya?

These words are meant not merely for Arjuna, but for all of humanity.

Kṛṣṇa says here that we should read, listen and understand this dialogue between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, between Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Nothing more needs to be read or listened to. Everything we need is here.

ya idam paramaṁ guhyaṁ mad bhateṣv abhidhāsyati | bhaktiṁ mayi parāṁ kṛtvā mām ev'aiṣyaty asaṁśayaḥ || 18.68 ||

This is Kṛṣṇa's promise: 'Only one who is in deep devotion to Me should read this. I have conveyed here that which is most beneficial, the secret of how to live and how to reach Me. One who understands this and drops his mind with his focus entirely upon Me, shall reach Me without a doubt.'

He blesses the whole Universe with His grace and compassion. He showered His blessing on Arjuna and made him merge with Him. The same consciousness is being showered on the whole Universe.

He declares that whoever studies this sacred conversation will achieve His eternal consciousness. He blesses us with His grace and assures us that we can achieve Him through this jñāna yajña, sacrifice of intellect. That is, by offering ourselves into that knowledge, by completely purifying ourselves in that knowledge, we can achieve Him. We can disappear into Him. When we put anything into the fire, it disappears. In the same way, when we immerse ourselves in the study of Gītā, we will not remain as we are. We will disappear into Him. Only He remains, only He exists.

adhyeṣyate ca ya imaṁ dharmyaṁ saṁvādam āvayoḥ | jñāna yajñena ten'āham iṣtaḥ syām iti me matiḥ || 18.70 ||

The whole experience of the Truth has descended on Arjuna. Kṛṣṇa's blessings are upon us also. Let us pray to the ultimate consciousness to put us into that same energy. Relax into that energy. May the grace and compassion of Kṛṣṇa that was showered on Arjuna, be showered on us.

Earlier Kṛṣṇa said that He would appear again and again whenever He is needed to restore equilibrium between good and bad. He is the only great Master who has the courage to say, 'I am not the last Master, it is not that there will be no one after Me.' Instead He says, 'I shall appear again and again, sambhavāmi yuge yuge.'

Kṛṣṇa will not reappear in His Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa form with peacock feathers and a flute. That is the mistake we make in our assumption. His energy will reappear. He will reappear in the form of enlightened Masters and Incarnations, time and again. He will come again and again to restore the balance, liberate the good and destroy the evil.

This is the last time Śrī Kṛṣṇa speaks in the Bhagavad Gītā. He asks, 'Arjuna, have you listened to Me with attention? Has your delusion disappeared?'

kaccid etac chrutaṁ pārtha tvayaikāgreṇa cetasā | kaccid ajñāna sammohaḥ praṇaṣtas te dhanañjaya || 18.72 ||

Until the end He is the teacher. He is full of compassion. His concern is only for Arjuna and the rest of humanity. 'Have you understood?' He asks. 'Have your doubts disappeared? Do you need anything more?' This is the greatness of Masters. Nothing concerns them except the deliverance of their disciples. That is why they have come here. Otherwise why should they waste their time on planet Earth? They can be immersed in the blissful energy that they are part of without disturbance. The only time Master feels anything like sadness is when a disciple leaves Him. It saddens the Master because He is losing a great opportunity. His spirit brought him to the Master for completion. If the body-mind does not cooperate, the spirit must live again and again until it gets the opportunity to be liberated. Each cycle of birth that the spirit undertakes, it suffers and regrets not having taken that final step. Those who have understood the formless form that resides in the Master knows that He is part of them. Wherever they are, Master is part of them. This is Śrī Kṛṣṇa's promise: Listen to Me, understand Me and come to Me; then you are a part of Me.

Krsna Is Present

18.74 Sañjaya said: Thus have I heard the conversation of two great souls, Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. And so wonderful is that message that my hair stands on end.

18.75 By the mercy of Vyāsa, I have heard these most confidential words directly from Kṛṣṇa, the master of all mysticism, who was speaking personally to Arjuna.

राजन्संस्मृत्य संस्मृत्य संवादमिममद्भुतम् ।
केशवार्जुनयोः पुण्यं हृष्यामि च मुहुर्मुहुः ॥ १८-७६॥

18.76 O King, as I repeatedly recall this wondrous and holy dialogue between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, I take pleasure, being thrilled at every moment.

tacca saṃsmṛtya saṃsmṛtya rūpamatyadbhutaṃ hareḥ

18.77 O King, when I remember the wonderful form of Lord Kṛṣṇa, I am struck with even greater wonder, and I rejoice again and again.

यत्र योगेश्वरः कृष्णो यत्र पार्थो धनुर्धरः ।
तत्र श्रीर्विजयो भूतिर्ध्रुवा नीतिर्मतिर्मम ॥ १८-७८॥

yatra yogeśvaraḥ kṛṣṇo yatra pārtho dhanurdharaḥ
tatra śrīrvijayo bhūtirdhruvā nītirmatirmama || 18.78 ||

18.78 Wherever there is Kṛṣṇa, the Master of all mystics, and wherever there is Pārtha, the supreme carrier of bow and arrow, there will certainly be opulence, victory, extraordinary power, and morality. That is my opinion.

In these last verses Arjuna and Sañjaya take over.

Arjuna bows down to the JagadGuru, Master of Cosmos, and says, 'All my doubts are gone and by Your grace, my memory is regained, O Acyuta; I understand. I am ready. I shall obey whatever you say and I shall fight.'

arjuna uvāca

naṣṭo mohaḥ smṛtir labhā tvat prasādān mayā'cyuta | sthito'smi gata sandehaḥ kariṣye vacanaṁ tava || 18.73 ||

The rest is history. Under the guidance of Arjuna, the Kaurava army is annihilated. All the Kaurava brothers, all the great teachers and all the great warriors perish. The Pānḍava brothers win and Yudhiṣṭira conducts the rājasūya and other fire sacrifices to signify his ascendance to the throne.

It is also history that in due course all the Pānḍava brothers die, as does the great Master Kṛṣṇa. He gives up His mortal form. This is the story of life. As long as you are in any form, the form will perish. The energy lives on. That is what Kṛṣṇa taught in these chapters and verses. Sacrifice your form and gain the formless.

Now Sañjaya comes back into the picture. Neither Kṛṣṇa nor Arjuna can speak since both of them are in a different mood. Arjuna has disappeared and Kṛṣṇa is in ecstasy. Both are in no mood to speak. Sañjaya started speaking when Arjuna was in depression and Kṛṣṇa had nothing to say at that time. Then when Kṛṣṇa was giving the first experience to Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa was in the higher consciousness and Arjuna was in ecstasy. Sañjaya came in to speak at that time because both were not in a mood to speak. Now Sañjaya comes back again. Not only are Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna not in a mood to speak, they are both no longer there. Arjuna has disappeared into the pure consciousness of Parabrahma Kṛṣṇa. They have nothing to say.

Sañjaya addresses Dhṛitarāṣṭra, 'O King, as I repeatedly recall this wondrous spiritual dialogue between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, I feel a great joy or ecstasy at every moment.'

Sañjaya is expressing his joy and bliss and says, 'muhurmuhuḥ, again and again, whenever I recall it, I am filled with ecstasy. This truth fills my being completely. I am showered with divine grace.'

Sañjaya says, 'By the mercy of Vyāsa, I heard these confidential talks directly from the Master of all mysticism, Yogeśvara Śrī Kṛṣṇa.'

vyāsa prasādāc chrutavān etad guhyam ahaṁ param | yogaṁ yogeśvarāt kṛṣṇāt sākṣāt kathayataḥ svayam || 18.75 ||

Sañjaya expresses gratitude and joy at hearing this by the grace of Vyāsa, Vyāsa-prasād. Vyāsa refers to the Guru (Master) here. Vyāsa is the Ādi Guru (first Master). So he expresses gratitude to the Master for giving him the opportunity to listen to the conversation between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. Vyāsa is also the author of the epic Mahābhārat, of which Bhagavad Gītā is a part.

Sañjaya says, 'O King, as I remember the wonderful form of Lord Kṛṣṇa, I am awestruck and I rejoice again and again.' He has nothing much to say. He overflows with ecstasy. He ends the whole thing beautifully with this verse.

'Wherever there is Kṛṣṇa, the Master of all mystics, and wherever there is Arjuna, the supreme archer, there will certainly be opulence, victory, extraordinary power and morality. This is my opinion.'

yatra yogeśvaraḥ kṛṣṇo yatra pārtho dhanurdharaḥ | tatra śrīrvijayo bhūtir dhrūvānītir matir mama || 18.78 ||

He ends the whole thing with a beautiful auspicious blessing. Wherever the name of Kṛṣṇa, the divine energy of Kṛṣṇa is present and wherever Arjuna dwells, there will also be victory, prosperity, wealth and morality. All the divine positive energy will shower there. He concludes with this beautiful blessing, this beautiful verse.

Whenever we read, teach or listen to Bhagavad Gītā, Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna are present. They are present in their formless form. Make no mistake, they are here. Go with this Kṛṣṇa consciousness and you will be in nityānanda, eternal bliss.

Surrender - Most Secret, Ultimate, Final Technique

Through out the Bhagavad Gītā, Kṛṣṇa gives many techniques. He teaches Arjuna various meditation techniques or methods to evolve from the ordinary level to the higher level of completion. They are methods to reach the divine consciousness. Every chapter, every verse, is a technique or method. After listening to so many techniques, Arjuna is totally confused.

He asks the Master, 'O Lord, after listening to thousands of techniques, after hearing about each and every method, I am more confused. Please tell me, what is the ultimate technique? What is the right technique?'

Even today, we are totally confused because we listen to many methods and techniques. Every Master declares his own technique as the best. When Arjuna was confused, he asked, 'What is the ultimate technique? I have listened to so many methods from you.' At least Arjuna received all the meditations from the same Master, but today, people listen from thousands of sources.

A confused Arjuna asks Kṛṣṇa. 'What is the way? Tell me the final way, the final method, the ultimate technique.'

Finally, Kṛṣṇa says very beautifully, 'This is the last technique, the ultimate technique: Dropping all the dharma, dropping all the confusions, surrendering at My feet. I will take care and give you liberation.'

This is the gist of the whole Bhagavad Gītā. This is a beautiful verse:

sarvadharmān parityajya mām ekaṁ śaraṇaṁ vraja | ahaṁ tvām sarvapāpebhyo mokṣayiṣyāmi mā śucaḥ || 18.66 ||

Drop all techniques, all methods and all the roots. Dharma means the way of living in the space of completion. 'Drop all roots, all methods and all ways of living. Drop everything. Don't bother about anything. Surrender everything at My feet.'

sarvadharmān parityajya māmekaṁ śaraṇaṁ vraja - 'Don't carry even a bit; just complete and drop everything, surrender your whole being to Me.'

ahaṁ tvām sarvapāpebhyo mokṣayiṣyāmi mā sucaḥ - 'I will remove all darkness, all negativities, all incompletions, and all sin from your being. I will liberate you. I will give you the ultimate enlightenment. I will complete you. Do not grieve.'

It's the final word given by Kṛṣṇa. It's the last word anyone could give. In every Master's life, the final teaching is surrender. What is the meaning of surrender?

As soon as we hear the word 'surrender,' we think: Oh, this is the easiest technique. For surrendering, we don't need to do anything. In any other method or meditation, we must do something. If it is a pūjā or a fire ritual, we need to do something. For every technique, we must do something. For surrender, we don't need to do anything.' Hence everyone feels surrendering means doing nothing. Most of the time, people use the word 'surrender'. They never understand what it means.

Now, let us look into the sacred secrets of surrender.

Deeper Meanings of Surrender

What actually is surrender? What do the Masters mean by the word surrender? The way they use the word 'surrender, śaraṇaṁ' is totally different from the way people normally use it. Let us see what the Masters mean by surrender.

There are three levels of surrender:

First: Surrendering the I. Second: Surrendering the Mine. Third: Surrendering the I and Mine, both. Let me explain step-by-step.

First: Surrendering the I. Surrendering the 'I' is surrendering the ego, the mind, the root thought patterns, the mental setup. This is surrendering your conditions, your cognitions.

Somebody asked Ramakrishna Paramahamsa, 'Master, I am addicted to alcohol. How can I give it up?' He said, 'Surrender it to goddess Kāli. You will automatically give it up. You will become all right.' The disciple asked, 'How can I surrender this to Kāli?' He replied, 'Before you drink, remember Kāli. Offer the drink to Kāli first, and then drink.' This is a strange situation. Even so, the man followed the Master's advice. Before drinking, he offered the drink to Kāli, and said, 'O Kāli, this belongs to you.' After that, he drank it as prasād (sacred offering). According to the record, three days later the man said, 'I am unable to drink anymore. I have totally forgotten such things.'

Of course, when you authentically surrender, a deep transformation happens. The change from mind and matter to energy happens in you. It's a deep transformation and difficult to explain. You can understand only when you have the taste, when you have at least one glimpse of surrender.

You may be surprised that a man could give up an addiction by offering alcohol to God, to a deity. But when he offered it, his heart began to wonder, 'How can I offer this alcohol to Devi, the Goddess whom I love?' Next he began to question, 'If I cannot offer alcohol to the Goddess, how can I drink it? After all, the same Goddess resides in my body, in my system. How can I offer that to myself?' Once he realized that he could not give the alcohol to God and that the same God resided in him, he naturally questioned, 'How can I pour it into myself and disturb the system?' Surrender gave him intelligence. Surrender gave him understanding. This natural understanding made him complete and drop what he had been doing.

One more thing, when you really, intensely offer your mental setup, or root thought patterns at the feet of the Master or God, it gets totally disintegrated. The mind in itself is a pattern, a habit. Your 'I' is a set of habits. Your ego is a set of conditions. When you offer that at the Master's feet, when you surrender the 'I', it becomes totally disintegrated. Understand, if you habitually drink coffee every morning at ten o' clock, as soon as it becomes ten o' clock, you don't need to think specially of coffee, the mind will automatically say, 'It is ten a.m. Get me coffee.' It is a pattern. It is an addiction. Because of the habit, the mind asks for coffee.

In the same way, even your thoughts are patterns or conditioning. Even your moods are patterns. Even your mind is a record. Just as you have the coffee habit, you also have the habit of worrying. You have the habit of having an excited mood. You have the habit of reacting to every situation.

If somebody criticizes you, you immediately react. You become disturbed. After that, you criticize him in return or you rebuke him. If somebody praises you, you immediately feel flattered. You give him a good smile and feel great. If he criticizes you, you choose to become disturbed or you decide to rebuke him. If he praises you, you choose to be flattered. Even this choice is your root thought pattern. It is your mental cognition.

When you surrender the 'I', your root thought patterns, to the Divine, you can't choose. When you really surrender, even if somebody criticizes you, you can't choose to be offended. You can't choose to feel disturbed. You can't choose to rebuke him. Whenever you bring in your root thought patterns, you react in accordance with your mental patterns. When this is still the case, you cannot say you have surrendered. Real surrender can and will transform your life.

When you really surrender, whatever you choose is not really your choice. When you have surrendered, you are immune to criticism. After being criticized, you cannot choose to be disturbed. You do not feel that you have been criticized. If you feel disturbed after some criticism, you have not surrendered. Again and again check whether you have surrendered or not.

Surrender is such a beautiful word that you can be easily cheated by it. We always say, 'I have surrendered everything to my Master, to God. He will take care.' But all our surrender is only skin deep. Scratch a little bit to see whether you have really surrendered or not.

When you have really surrendered your 'I', the root thought pattern is totally disintegrated. The egocentric mind becomes God-centric. Egocentric means eccentric. The egocentric mind becomes God-centric. When you surrender your 'I', your mind to God, your ego to God, your thinking system to God, it will be continuously bubbling with joy, because the Divine is always bliss, eternal bliss, nitya ānanda. Whenever you surrender your root thought patterns, you will be bubbling with joy, life and vibrancy.

As long as we are not conditioned, we don't have a mind. We don't have an ego. We have a special grace around us. We have joy and ecstasy. We have innocence and simplicity. A man who has surrendered becomes a small child once again. That is why there is a beautiful word in Sanskrit, dvijā meaning reborn. When you surrender, you are re-born. Our first birth is janma, which happens from the mother and father. Our second birth happens from the Guru and God. When you surrender your ego at the feet of the Guru or God, you take the next janma, the second birth. You are then called dvijā.

When you surrender the 'I,' the root pattern, you experience the space of completion with immense pleasure, joy and ecstasy. Pleasure, joy and ecstasy are different layers. Pleasure happens because of sensory objects. Joy happens because of seeing nature, such as a beautiful mountain, snow, ocean or a forest. Ecstasy or bliss is whenever joy happens for no reason; it happens from your inner being. Pleasure, joy, and bliss continuously happen in you, whenever you surrender your 'I', your ego.

When you surrender your ego, your mind becomes alive and spontaneously joyful. As of now, every moment you are preparing to live tomorrow. When you surrender, you move without a script. Whenever you move like that, in such a simple way, tremendous courage and trust walks through you. When we really surrender the 'I', the ego, we surrender the mind that continuously prepares the script for our life. We will live in the space of completion with tremendous spontaneity and courage. We will trust our intelligence. We will live our life as it is. We will accept, welcome and enrich life as it flows into us.

A beautiful verse in the Gītā says:

Ananyāś cintayanto māṁ ye janāḥ paryupāsate | teṣāṁ nity'ābhiyuktānāṁ yogakṣemaṁ vahāmy aham || 9.22 ||

'Continuously merge in Me. Merge in the Divine and all your needs and necessities will be taken care of by Me. Bringing them to you and taking care of them is My responsibility.' Kṛṣṇa assures us that He will manage both. We may think, 'How can this be?' Just by our surrendering to Him, how can He take care of our needs? What He means by, 'I'll take care,' is that He will activate or He will let you have the intelligence and courage to have everything and to love everything.

Surrendering 'I', surrendering the root thought patterns, totally changes your being. It shifts you from thinking to the energy, from the mind to no-mind, from incompletion to completion, and from mithya (the temporal) to nithya (the eternal). Second: Surrendering the Mine Here comes the big trouble. Mine means possessiveness, to possess the things that we have. We can surrender the mind, but never our possessions. We always think our ego comes before our possessions. On the contrary, Tantra says, 'Your ego is only based upon your possessions.'

Your ego is a byproduct of your possessions, of your 'mine'. It is from whatever you think of as 'mine', that is from your possessions, that your sense of identity as 'I' originates. If we look a little deeply, we can understand that our idea of 'mine' creates our idea of 'I.' Our mind is our possession. Even our body is our possession. So whatever we think of as ours, if we think, 'this is mine, that is mine,' from that root our ego starts growing.

If ego is akin to a tree, the root is 'mine.' The tree is 'I.' From the root 'mine', the 'I', the ego starts growing. If your 'mine' is growing, if your possessions are growing, you feel expanded. You become solid. You become somebody. You feel you have become free. By the expansion of comforts, the outer world possessions, by the expansion of the 'mine', you experience freedom. However, this is only freedom to choose your sufferings, and not to choose between joy and suffering.

Yes, you have freedom. Of course, if you have money, you can own a top quality car, home and all such things. You can have more choices. Still, these are choices between only suffering and suffering. They are not between suffering and joy. To have the freedom to choose between suffering and joy comes from dropping the 'mine' and 'I.' It does not result from possessing the 'mine'. Even if you enjoy your possessions, underneath the enjoyment and joy, you have a deep fear. It is the fear, 'I do not know when it will be lost.' The fear of losing your possessions will not allow you to enjoy those things or relationships. Tthe man who is not possessive enjoys the same object more deeply because he does not fear when he might lose it. The person who continuously possesses it, who feels it is 'mine', will only own it, never enjoy it.

There are two devatas, Hindu deities, related to this: Kubera and Lakṣmī. Wealth has two aspects: wealth with possessiveness and wealth without possessiveness. Wealth with possessiveness is Kubera or yakṣa. Kubera means the person who possesses and never enjoys. Yakṣa is a being that owns wealth, but never enjoys it. He feels so satisfied with possessing that he can never enjoy.

Kubera represents richness, whereas another deity, Lakṣmī, stands for wealth. Richness means you have but you never enjoy and enrich yourself. That is Kubera. Wealth means something that not only do you have, but you also enjoy and enrich joyously.

Lakṣmī means abundance. The abundance or wealth is there without possessiveness. There is no possessiveness, no sense of 'mine, mine, mine'. That feeling is absent. When that feeling is not there, we really enjoy and enrich our life. We can really live life. We each decide whether we are a Lakṣmī or a Kubera. If we surrender our possessiveness, the feeling of 'mine', we will be continuously joyful, ecstatic and enjoying. Whenever we complete and drop possessiveness, whenever we relax from the feeling of 'mine', we live even with the material comforts and enjoy life.

Whenever you surrender the 'I' to the Existence, understand this one thing. Never think that the world is running because of you. It is running in spite of you. Fifty years ago none of you was here. Was the world unable to run? It was running perfectly. Fifty years from now, none of us will be here. Do you think the world will stop? No! Even so, we think the whole world is running only because of us. Understand that not only you but your whole 'I' and 'mine' are taken care of by the Divine. It takes care in its own way. But we, out of our ego, keep all our headaches, all the loads, upon our own heads.

When you rest, when you really relax, when you surrender at the feet of the Divine, your space of completion awakens the space of creation. Ninety-nine percent of your energy is available for expressing your positive creativity and power, and for living and celebrating. You harness the power of words through integrity, power of thinking through authenticity, power of feeling through responsibility and power of living through enriching. Until then that entire ninety-nine percent is wasted in unnecessarily worrying, self-doubting and struggling with incompletions.

Continuous self-doubting with worrying, fear and greed creates incompletions in your life. When you surrender, when you have faith and trust in the Divine, when you relax in the name of the Divine, the energy and powers that you had been wasting on worrying turns towards the power of creation with positivity and possibility.

Ninety-nine percent of your worries, fears and greed never come true. Whatever one percent comes true is always good for you. When you surrender your 'I,' your suffering is transformed into the space of completion bringing intelligence, love, joy, and ecstasy. When you surrender your 'mine,' your richness becomes the space of creation for wealth, power, and celebration.

You start really living to enrich others and yourself with your possessions. You enjoy and celebrate whatever you have. You start living it, and really feel ecstasy and joy from the things that you have. You go beyond the fear of 'When will I lose them?'

Third: Surrender both I and Mine. Surrender your whole life unconditionally, completely. When you surrender both 'I' and 'mine,' your whole life is totally transformed. It becomes completely different. The proof that you have surrendered is that you no longer worry and suffer. If you have really surrendered, you will not have worry or suffering.

To whom you surrender is immaterial. There is no need to bother about to whom to surrender to. It is immaterial whether you surrender to God, the Guru, Śiva or Kṛṣṇa. It is unimportant. It has nothing to do with whom you surrender to. Surrender itself has the power to transform and complete you.

You don't need to bother about whom you surrender to. That has nothing to do with liberation. Surrendering itself will do the miracle. Surrender has the energy and the capacity to transform you and to bring the energy of completion to complete you. Don't bother about which form or name you surrender to. It does not matter.

Just Surrender! Don't Doubt, Don't You Worry

There is no need to worry about what will happen thereafter, or what will be the effect or next step after the surrender. Most of the time, before surrendering itself, we calculate logically, 'After surrendering, what will happen to this or that?' Can we logically calculate what will happen? Never. If we do so, we project our mind beyond surrender.

If you know what will happen after death, only then will you know what will happen after surrender. Surrender and death are the same. When you surrender, psychologically you die. You are reborn. Can you say what will happen after your death? No. In the same way, you can never imagine or visualize what will happen after surrender. If you are imagining, visualizing, be very clear, you are not surrendering.

This question, whether you have surrendered or not, will disappear. You will have no doubt about whether you have surrendered or not. Your whole being will be flooded and will be bubbling with ecstasy and joy. There is just a feeling of surrendering, utter relaxation and utter bliss. You will not bother about what happens next. You will be totally relaxed from your duties, pains, suffering and responsibilities. The responsibilities will be fulfilled effortlessly. Your body will be doing the right action effortlessly. Your mind will be doing the right thing without your intervention. It's not that you won't go to your office tomorrow morning because you have surrendered. You will go; the body will carry on. Everything will be happening. But you will see utter relaxation in your being, the utter bliss in your 'mind' and the utter 'IS ness' in your life.

When you surrender the 'I', there is utter bliss. When you surrender the 'mine,' there is utter relaxation. When you surrender the 'I' and 'mine', there is a beautiful 'IS ness' in your life. This is the scale to measure whether your surrender is merely lip service or it is real. With this scale you can measure whether you have surrendered or not.

Surrender is nothing but a clear, conscious decision to be complete. You will conclude, 'Why can't the energy that can move my body, this sun, this moon and this planet Earth, move and complete my life?'

Understand: The bread that we eat becomes blood. It is not an insignificant process. Still, scientists have not succeeded in converting bread into blood. And such a big process happens inside our body. Just six feet tall - in such a small system, this big process is happening. Air is taken in, the prāṇa (life force) is separated out, the air goes out; the process is happening inside us. If the Divine can manage so much inside our body, if the Divine can manage so much in this Universe, it can well manage and complete our life, too.

Understand. Existence is intelligence. The Divine is intelligence. Why do you pray? You pray because you think that God has the capacity to give, that God has the śakti (power) to give. But when you insist, 'O God, give me now, give me right now,' it means you believe that He has śakti, but you don't believe that he has buddhi, the intelligence to decide when to give. You believe He has energy, but you don't believe He has intelligence. That is what your prayer means.

When you surrender, you understand that not only does He have śakti, He has buddhi also. Every moment, something will be taught to you. When you surrender, you will not have any pain. You will feel complete and liberated.

So whenever you relax and complete, you transform your life from mithya (illusion) to nitya ānanda (eternal bliss). You transform your suffering to a space of bliss. You move from depression to expression, from self-doubt to Self, from 'me' to 'you', from worrying to wondering. The genesis of identity is transformed with the process of completion.

The knowledge of advaita, the space of non-duality, becomes a living reality in you with completion. You conquer all fears with completion. You conquer all wrong self-identification of 'I' and 'mine' with your completion. The feeling you have that you are inadequate, that you are incomplete, that you are not capable, that you can't and all the impossibilities will just disappear and melt down with completion.

Do completion and surrender. Everything, the wrong, inadequate cognitions you have will melt down, you will become complete. So may you decide consciously to declare your completion with everything and surrender. Don't question or doubt once the conscious decision is made. Once you surrender, even after the decision, you will have the feeling, you will have the self-doubt whether you really did surrender or not.

First just decide consciously to be complete and surrender. Surrender everything at the feet of God who runs this world. You don't even need to have any name or form in your mind, 'Oh, I surrendered to this god. So what will happen?' Don't worry. Just surrender to the energy that runs the whole world. Then everybody is included under that title - God, Guru, Divine, energy of this whole Universe. Just decide to let this run your life.

After that, naturally, you will have a self-doubt whether you have surrendered or not. Then just say, 'Even this doubt is a gift from the Divine, the same Divine that is running the world. The Divine gives this doubt also. The intelligence to surrender and to doubt my surrender are both His gifts. Let me offer my doubt also to Him. Let Him take care.'

Surrender your doubt also. Then you will see the transformation happens in you just as you are. Don't think, 'First I will change, and then I will surrender.' No. You cannot do that. Surrender as you are, consciously, totally. Whatever is in your hands, whatever 'mine' is in your hands, whatever position is in your hands, surrender completely. Your being will be flooded with a new feeling, a new life, a new energy and a new bliss.

So, may you surrender at the feet of the Divine. May you enter the space of completion. May you be in the energy. May you enter into the divine energy. May this happen to you. May you be in and may you become eternal bliss, nitya ānanda. Here ends the ultimate teaching of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and here starts our enlightened life. Let us take a few minutes to offer our gratitude to the great Masters.

First, offer gratitude to the great Master Śrī Kṛṣṇa who showered these great truths upon the whole Universe. Let us give our gratitude to Him. Then come all the Masters who preserved these truths so that we can enjoy and experience these truths in our life. Let us give our gratitude to the entire Guru Paramparā, the lineage of Gurus.

Introduction

The Brahma Sūtras is the compilation by Bhagavān Veda Vyāsā of the core teachings of Vedas and Upaniṣads, particularly the nature of Brahman (the Supreme Reality) and the path to realizing oneness with this ultimate truth. Compiled by Bhagavān Veda Vyāsā, the Brahma Sūtras are a concise, logical collection of aphorisms (Sūtras) that clarify complex philosophical ideas about Brahman and the self (Ātman). These sūtras serve as a guide to understanding the true nature of existence as described in the Vedas and Upaniṣads.

THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM BHAGAVĀN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM has revealed the essence of the Brahma Sūtras as the keys to explore and experience the Ultimate truth that the Brahma Sūtras explain in various ways like questioning, pure seeking, discrimination, intellect.

Bowing down to the great soul, Mahāpuruṣa Vyāsa, giving our humble respects, devotion and salutations to Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa. We will enter into his great gift to the world. The book is called 'Brahma Sūtrā'.

This great work 'Brahma Sūtra' can never be introduced. In your brain, at least a trillion cells exist, connected with trillions of planets, stars, and all of existence. When all the trillion cells are awakened, the whole cosmos is experienced inside the body. The Brahmaṇḍa is experienced in the Piṇḍāṇḍa.

Methods for awakening those trillions of cells vary. Yogis try to awaken the trillions of cells by kuṇḍalinī awakening through the breathing process, visualization methods, verbalization, and sounds. Devotees who practice devotion try to awaken those trillions of cells by deep surrender and a feeling connection to the highest consciousness in the form of a chosen deity or God. Karma yogis try to awaken the trillions of cells through continuous creativity. There are thousands of methods, systems, techniques, and technologies to awaken the trillions of cells.

On the banks of Saraswati, a unique experiment was conducted by some of the great inner scientists. They tried and succeeded in awakening the trillions of brain cells, leading a human being to the enlightenment experience simply by imparting an understanding. You can awaken your kuṇḍalinī shakti, the non-mechanical parts of your brain, and trillions of cells through prāṇāyāma, yoga, dhāraṇā, dhyāna, and samādhi-type techniques, or through deep devotion, a feeling of connection and surrender to the chosen deity as God through bhakti, or through intense, constant creativity without reason. It is an extraordinary self-sacrifice - constantly being creative without bothering about why you are being so creative. A man who works all the time may never even think he is working.

Real Karma Yoga means continuously working, being creative, not only without asking why you should be creative while working for so many hours, but even without thinking. When you are creative, all the non-mechanical parts of your brain awaken. The moment you think, "Why should I be creative?" you are back to being a human being. The moment you ask, "Why should I work? Why should I be creative?", you ask for a salary, you are a worker. You are no longer God. You fall from the state of God to the state of human being. The greatest thing in the world is being creative not only without asking, "Why should I be active?" but also without thinking "Why should I be creative?" Then your very breathing becomes creative. When you don't even think about why you should be creative, you expose yourself to hundreds of methods to awaken the human consciousness to its peak.

Hundreds of methods for inner awakening were experimented with, researched, developed, and experienced by the great ṛṣis, the inner scientists, in various parts of the Hindu civilization. This unique experimentation took place on the banks of the Saraswati, where the Saraswati descends to the Earth. The geographical place is near Mana, a little north of Badrinath in the Himalayas, almost on the border of India. There is still a cave where Vyāsa lived and compiled all his works, where he wrote the Mahābhārata, and where his unique transcriber, Mahāgaṇapati, stayed. That is also the place where Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa compiled this great work, the Brahma Sūtras.

It is one of the greatest and most successful experiments - awakening the non-mechanical parts of the brain and awakening the kuṇḍalinī śakti, just by giving an understanding. It is one of the most difficult paths to walk alone, but also one of the simplest paths if an incarnation is there to do it for you - opening the non-mechanical parts of your brain, awakening the trillions of cells in your brain, and awakening your kuṇḍalinī śakti, just through deeper and deeper understandings about existence.

If you have to do it by yourself, it is almost like having a matchstick and trying to measure the whole world with it. The moment you awaken one cell and move to another, the first cell has already fallen back asleep. What is awakening? It is when the experience you carry about yourself - the existing 'I' - functions and connects with reality. What you think of as you, the individual self, should function through all trillion cells and directly relate with reality. This is the exact definition of awakening.

Now, if that pratyagātma chaitanyā, the individual consciousness is functioning through the eyes and relating with the reality, already the tongue is sleeping or slipped into falsehood. If that 'I' is related with reality through the skin, the ears are sleeping or slipped into falsehood. Understand, any part in you or any cell in you which is not connecting with the Self and the reality is not being bridged with it, is either sleeping or slipping. All sleeping is slipping into falsehood.

For example, your ears are functioning, your eyes are functioning, but if you are not completely aware about the changes you are experiencing in your skin, the skin part is not in reality. Those cells are in falsehood, slipping into falsehood. So, you are not completely enlightened. All trillions of cells, connecting with the Self and the reality means all three are in tune. This experience is 'inner awakening'. If you have to do this by yourself it is almost impossible. Only a person whose all trillions of cells are awakened can be a person established in satya, truth. Till then, everything is mithyā - falsehood.

A man who can lie blatantly, knowing he is speaking about something other than what he knows, or other than what objectively is, or other than what he believes as his, will never be able to realize the depth of falsehood into which he is slipping.

The most unfortunate thing that can happen to a human being is landing in a profession where one must lie constantly. According to Cosmic law, even the worst professions, such as prostitution - do not damage your consciousness as much. They may damage your body, you can contract all kinds of diseases, suffer, and weaken your physical health but even those professions do not harm your consciousness as profoundly as an eternally lying profession. There are some professions where lying and success are inseparable. If you are a seeker, choose practices that do not damage your consciousness. Pick a lifestyle that preserves and strengthens your integrity and does not damage your consciousness.

There are millions of ways to make money. Take real estate, for example. In real estate, you don't need to lie. You can say, "This is the value of the land. I will sell it at this price; otherwise, I don't want to sell." Land has no intrinsic value - it is a value you assign - so there is no lying involved. "What rate I bought it for, you don't need to bother. If you pay this much, I'll sell the land; otherwise, no." It is straightforward and honest. So, choose professions where you don't need to lie.

If the part of you that creates lies awakens, all other parts will be dead - not just sleeping, but truly dead. This lying part gives tremendous confidence to your brain: "You are not needed. I will run life. I can keep the whole thing alive, because at every moment, I can cook up a story and maintain the illusion." It acts almost like a security agency - an army telling civilians to sleep and slip away. An army is useful in some situations, but sleeping simply because the army is there is not right. Neglecting your responsibilities expecting some protective force exists to take care of your responsibilities is not the right path.

This great experimentation of keeping the whole brain alive through deeper understanding was successfully conducted by Vyāsa. Without a Master, this cannot be done. Without a Master, you can succeed in yoga through yogic techniques - you can create kuṇḍalinī awakening and experience inner awakening. Without a Master, you can succeed in bhakti yoga - you can feel connected to a God or deity and achieve enlightenment. Without a Master, you can continue being creative. However, awakening all trillion cells through deeper understanding by yourself, without a Master, is impossible. When you have a Master, this becomes the easiest path.

In yoga, even if you have a Master, you still need to practice. In the bhakti path, even if you have a Master, you need to establish feeling connection. You need to connect with Him, to be in His physical presence. In karma yoga, again, you need to work and be creative. But in this path of understanding - Jñāna Yoga - you simply sit in His presence and listen, listen deeply to every understanding. He opens various parts of your brain - the non-mechanical parts - and inner awakening happens naturally. He awakens your kuṇḍalinī simply by giving you deeper and deeper understandings, nothing else. This was the greatest experimentation conducted in the Saraswati civilization.

Understand, the moment any experiment in any field becomes successful, it becomes an independent intelligence. It goes on repeating itself in history. For some reason, even if all the aircrafts in the science of making aircrafts disappear from Planet Earth, after 10,000 years, a new man exists, he will try, discover, rediscover the whole science of flying.

Once something is experimented with and succeeds, it becomes an independent intelligence in the Cosmos. It becomes an energy center and repeats itself in the flow of time again and again - including experiments like Hitler. Please understand, Hitler was an experiment, unfortunately a successful one. Successful experiments repeat over time, because once they succeed, they acquire independent intelligence.

That is why, in the Hindu tradition, we say: Hiraṇya, Hiraṇyākṣa, Hiraṇyakaśipu, then Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa, then Kaṁsa and Śiśupāla - these are negative but successful experiments. They became independent intelligences and continue repeating in the flow of time. Any successful experiment repeats itself throughout history. Whichever experiment you open yourself to and participate in, you become part of that experiment.

You can open yourself to politics and become part of the repetition of the successful experiments of politics. You can open your life to wealth and become part of the successful repetition of wealth. You can open yourself to living in a low-minded way, running around irresponsibly and becoming part of the mass unconsciousness - which is another independent intelligence. Or, you can open yourself and become part of the great repetition of the greatest conscious experimentation that has occurred in the Cosmos - the experimentation of Inner Awakening.

If you are feeling connected and actively participating in the group working toward inner awakening, being part of that repetition, you are a Brahmaṇa. If you open yourself to a group engaged in political revolutions, you are a Kṣatriya. If you open yourself to groups focused on the accumulation of wealth, you are a Vaiśya. If you go around irresponsibly with a group, creating fan clubs and leading an irresponsible life, you belong to the worker class, the fourth class. If you connect with groups that destroy others and become part of those experiments repeating in history, you are a caṇḍāla.

The great successful experiment conducted by Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa, along with a group of seekers - awakening the kuṇḍalinī śakti and the non-mechanical parts of the brain, purely through understanding, without any physical effort by the disciples was a remarkable achievement. That is the great successful experiment: awakening the non-mechanical parts of the brain and the kuṇḍalinī simply by expanding understanding repeatedly.

This process was first successfully carried out perhaps 10,000 years ago, when Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa performed it, and it became an independent intelligence. That happening has become an independent intelligence, much like a conscious star rolling through the Cosmos. Whenever the right muhūrta aligns with that star, it opens itself, and the experiment repeats itself.

When Vyāsa did this greatest successful experiment, he left a few code words in the Cosmos for the next generation of incarnations to pull out and make that successful happening repeat itself. Those code words are only called Brahma Sūtrās - Aphorisms of Existence.

Let Vyāsa and Saraswati flow in this tongue and liberate all of us, enlighten all of us. Let the great successful experiment Brahma Sūtrā repeat itself.

अथातो ब्रह्मजज्ञिासा ॥ १.१.१ ||

athāto brahma jiñyāsā 1.1.1

Inquiry into Existence

One remarkable aspect of this Brahma Sūtrā is that you don't need to practice anything. The entire process is the Master's responsibility. All you need to do is sit and understand the words the Master utters according to your own understanding, that's all. You don't need to concern yourself with the Master's dictionary. You understand according to your own dictionary, and it is the Master's responsibility to craft the right words - words that will lead you to inner awakening, interpreted through your understanding.

In other systems, like yoga, bhakti, or karma yoga, you need to perform some sādhanā. For the Brahma Sūtrā, no sādhanā is required. The only sādhanā you need is to sit in front of the Master. Take this act of sitting as your sādhanā. Sit for this great repetition of one of the greatest successful conscious experiments - the experiment of enlightening beings purely through understanding.

Throughout this book, there is no technique. The only technique-less spiritual book in the world is the Brahma Sūtrās. Nothing needs to be done. Absolutely nothing. There is no technique, no method, no homework. Vyāsa does not believe in homework; he believes in being homeless. Not only does he take away the homework, he takes away the very idea of home. He leads you beyond home - to the ultimate homeliness. He can make you feel at home with the entire Cosmos. He can make the Cosmos your home.

Vyāsa is the first inner scientist who successfully experimented and made this happen.

This is the most successful and powerful happening. Vyāsa is the modern man's Guru, because modern man does not want to do anything except sit in front of a computer. Vyāsa is the only practical Guru, both ancient and most modern, because he does not ask you to even sit straight. You can simply relax on a couch; the only requirement is not to sleep. You should try to have the cognition of what the Master is talking about, and that's all. Just as you sit and watch the news on TV, or watch cricket, or use the computer, in the same way, sit and listen with understanding. That is enough.

The inner awakening simply happens because Vyāsa performs surgery on the trillions of cells in your brain using the right words. When a certain cognition occurs within you, a specific part of your brain is awakened and acts as a bridge between the Self and reality. Vyāsa is such a great inner scientist that he constantly uses precise, powerful words to make that awakening happen, keep the bridge alive, awaken all the parts of your brain, and maintain the bridges - ultimately leading to complete inner awakening.

There are at least three observable effects. Anyone who sits and listens continuously, allowing this process to happen within them and truly understanding it, will experience the first effect: measurable changes in the brain. The brain shows intense, high-quality activity, mitochondrial energy increases, and deeper strands of DNA awakening.

Next, in a visible way, your skin tone will change, and a natural shine will appear in your eyes and on your skin. Please understand, these visible changes happen simply through understanding the Brahma Sūtrās. These are side effects of the Brahma Sūtrā happening in you.

First, there is a visible, quantifiable, and measurable increase in high positive activity in your brain, especially in the non-mechanical parts, along with an intense increase in mitochondrial cell energy and the awakening of deeper strands of DNA. Second, there are visible differences in the shine of your eyes and the radiance of your skin.

Third, it may sound extraordinary, but you will develop the ability to understand and live with anything in life. Truly, anything in life. Nothing will surprise you of ignorance. When you are ignorant about something, you experience a certain feeling of the unknown or surprise.

The idea of having something unknown will disappear from your brain center. The idea of the unknown is in your brain center, not in reality. In reality, everything constantly reveals itself to you. It just goes on revealing itself to you. You will not have that tiredness of living. If you are having too much unknown in your brain centers, you will be tired of living. Brahma Sutrā will take away that tiredness to live.

The modern-day youngsters have so much tiredness to live. They plan about their retirement by 35. By 35, they have started calculating the property they have, the money they can accumulate, when they can retire. The idea of retirement enters into modern youth's mind too early, because of the ignorance centers being intensely active in the brain. Brahma Sutrā will remove that.

Saraswati energy flowing through Vyāsā as Brahma Sutrās is one of the greatest conscious happening. First, let this happen, let's enter into the happening.

First Sutrā - 'athāto brahmajijñāsā'. Bhagavān Veda Vyāsā straightaway starts the subject - deliberation on reality. He is not starting with a shānti mantrā, he is not starting with some prayers, he is not starting with even an introduction, he is straight to the subject - 'athāto brahmajijñāsā.'

Let us see some existing translations. Swami Gambhirānandā translates as 'hence thereafter a deliberation on Brahmaṇ'. Swami Vireswarānandā translates as 'now after attainment of requisite spiritual qualities therefore as the result obtained by sacrifices etc., whereas the result of knowledge of Brahmaṇ is eternal, the inquiry into real nature of Brahmaṇ'.

Let's listen to what Saraswati translates - 'athāto brahmajijñāsā'. Now inquiry into the reality. Inquiry into existence. Cognition into existence. This Sūtrā means, now let us understand existence. It means you need to understand all the understandings you had till this moment is not existence, is not the truth. The ability to let go is what you need to know, you need to understand from this Sūtrā. The sacred secret you need to catch from this Sūtrā is now let us enter into existence. All the understandings you had about your body, mind, life, death, about life, is not reality. You need to move into reality.

This happening, this understanding will directly become part of even your dream and deep sleep states of consciousness.

If you leave your college and take up a job, it takes at least two years for your dream state to adjust. You left your college and are now in a job. To stop creating dreams related to college, it takes at least two years for your brain. Sometimes, even after twenty years, you may still have some dreams about college. Now, this understanding will be so deep and so sharp that, from tonight, it will become part of your dreams. Even in dream states, this understanding will remain part of your consciousness. Even in dreams, you will be hearing and understanding the Brahma Sūtrās.

'Athāto brahmajijñāsā'. Let us inquire into the nature of reality, into existence. Saraswati does two jobs. One, She lands on the Earth, flows over the Earth as a river. Second, She lands on the Earth, goes into the Earth as an under stream and spreads all over the Earth and stays as underground water. Understand, all underground water is Saraswati. That is why, all the underground streams are called Saraswati in Hindu tradition.

If it is Yoga Sūtrā, if the Sūtrā is uttered and added, expanded with more words, it is done. It is like Ganges, created in Ganges civilization. Yoga Sūtrā is created in Cauvery civilization in Chidambaram - Cauvery Delta. Upaniṣads are created in Ganges civilization. For commenting on Yoga Sūtrās, the Master just adds more words to the Sūtrās and expands like a flowing river, it is done. If Master is working on Upaniṣads or Yoga Sūtrās, this method is enough, because they all happened in Ganges civilization or Cauvery civilization.

But Brahma Sūtrās originated in the Saraswati civilization. Saraswati has two roles, two ways. First, She flows as a river on the Earth, and second, She goes into the Earth and remains as underground water everywhere. So whoever wants water and drills, She comes out. All underground borewell water is Saraswati. So now, Saraswati will flow into you.

First, more and more words will be added to give you the understanding that will stay in you like an open river, transforming your life, the way in which you live. The second part of Saraswati, which is drilled into your unconscious, gets into your system, stays there as underground water, and will come out whenever you need, whenever you ask, wherever you drill. Wherever you drill, whenever you ask, that is, whenever a need arises in your life, it just comes up. Now the process is: One, when the Sūtrā is repeated, more words will be added to give you an understanding. Then again, the Sūtrā will be repeated and each word removed to give you a different understanding.

"Athāto brahmajijñāsā". Let us now inquire into the nature of reality and existence. This is the overflowing river, commentary, open. Then the second part is, why so many words? Let's remove the words "Let us". Why existence, reality, nature? One word 'reality' is enough. Then, how can you inquire into reality, it is there. So remove the word 'inquire'. Finally what word is there - 'reality'. Why do you even need a word 'reality', when what is, is reality? Relax!

The sacred secret in this sūtrā is, let us enter into reality, so be ready to discard, let go, all the ideas you had about everything including reality and what you call life. That readiness makes you ready for Brahma Sūtrās, the greatest happening, repeating itself. Let us bow down to that great Saraswati flowing on Neelakanteshwara. On Neelakanteshwara hills only Saraswati is flowing and Vishnu is in Yoga Samādhi sitting there. That place is called Badrināth. Near Badrināth only Vyāsa stayed and that is the space where Saraswati is landing on the Earth, Vishnu is meditating and in Yoga Samādhi. Let that energy repeat itself on all of us. Let us all inquire into reality - "athāto brahmajijñāsā".

Saraswati flows in the modern day, not only underground but also above ground and in the sky! Now she is flowing in three ways. First, as a river - for those who are directly sitting and experiencing in the Master's physical presence. Second, as underground energy - even if people simply remember and meditate on the Master, they can start receiving these understandings within themselves. Third, as above-ground energy - through satellite waves and, wherever you access it, through the internet; you receive Saraswati in your home!

In the Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, the Guru transmits understandings that are irrevocable. In the path of devotion, God, your chosen deity, plays a major role. In the path of Yogā, the technique plays a major role. In the path of meditation, the technology plays a major role. Here, technology means all the supporting elements around meditation and the technique. With Yoga, you may not need music. In the path of Yogā, you may not need other accessories for the technique. But in the path of meditation, it is not just the technique; the technology is also needed, and you require some additional accessories. In each path, certain elements are necessary for the ultimate transformation to occur in you.

But in the Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, the one and only requirement is the Guru, that's all. If you and the Guru are both lost in a forest where nothing else is available, that alone is enough for enlightenment. Being in such isolation makes the process very easy and quick, because there are no distractions or entertainments. That is why, in the Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, the Guru and disciples are by themselves in the forest.

Here are some more truths related to Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya. Awakening your complete understanding, awakening your complete life, awakening your complete existence, fulfillment in awakening. This fulfillment happens through so many ways like yoga, meditation, dhyāna, tantrā or karmā. But the uniqueness of this Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, means the tradition of Vedānta Vidyā, is the tradition of sitting and listening to these great truths. It is somehow unique, because just by the proper understanding, the deepest possibilities of your inner space are awakened, the deepest possibilities of your inner space are brought to life.

In Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, the words play a major role. It can bring tremendous understanding. It can move mountains literally. It can put you in the restful awareness very casually. Nothing is required, nothing at all. That is why, the Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya is always misunderstood and many times lost. Because in this Sampradāya, the one and only thing you need is an awakened Guru. When the awakened Guru is there, no tool is required, because no tools are used, nothing is left. Birds do not leave footprint in the air, but buffaloes always leave a deep footprint in the sludge. If you are traveling in the path of buffaloes, it is very easy because there will be a deep footprint in the sludge. Techniques, methods, methodology, path, the path traveled will be there. You can easily catch it, leave it, and travel that direction again.

But the unique thing in the Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, in Vedānta Sampradāya- no footprints left. No techniques are left, no methodology. If you analyze, analyze, analyze exhaustively all the Vedānta literatures, you will see only 3 advice - Shravaṇa, Manana, Nidhidhyāsana - listen, imbibe, express. What to listen to? There is no answer. Whom to listen to? There is no answer. What to imbibe? There is no answer. What to express? There is no answer.

Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya does not leave footprints. It is an ecstasy. Birds do not leave footprints in the sky. Paramahamsas do not leave technique trails in the conscious inner space. This is one of the great advantages in the Brahma Sutrā in the Hindu tradition, Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya. Same way, the big disadvantage is it is completely Master centric.

All Hindu Sampradāyās are either cult or culture. How you look at it is the only difference. All Hindu Sampradāyās, all Vedānta Sampradāyās, can be considered a cult or culture. If you say some sampradāyās are a cult, then you should understand, all sampradāyās are cult. If you think some sampradāyās are culture, then all sampradāyās are culture. Because in Vedānta sampradāyās, there is nothing else left, no technique, no chosen deity, no karmā, nothing needs to be done. All you need is a Master in front, who goes on giving understanding - deeper and deeper and deeper layers of understanding, who goes on peeling you. So in this whole Vedānta Sampradāyā, the only requirement is a proper Guru.

Beautifully Vedānta Sampradāya describes how to catch the right Guru. Peel all the things which are common. For example, if your Master has an organization, somebody else is also having organization. There are so many spiritual organizations. Remove that part from His glory. If He has a body, then many of you also have a body. Remove that part from His glory. If He has amazing orating power, many of them are also having. Remove that part from His glory. So go on peeling, peeling, peeling.

Finally, at some point your logic will not be able to peel further, but still, you will feel, “He is something more than all these things.” When your logic feels, “I cannot peel any further, I have peeled everything. Even after all these things are removed, He has something more than all these things put together.” When you feel this understanding with somebody, He is your Guru. If that does not happen, if you feel, “No, no, no, after I peel 3-4 things, He is not worthy,” then forget about Him. He is not worthy of being your Guru. You are not worthy of being His disciple.

The Guru–Disciple relationship is sacred. It should be entered into after thorough study and research and should never be broken. Ending the Guru–Disciple relationship in your life is the worst crime you can commit against yourself, the harshest punishment you can impose on yourself, and the gravest conspiracy against your own being. One more point: changing Gurus is perfectly acceptable; there is nothing wrong with it. For example, you may go to one Guru, and after some time, you outgrow that Guru or mature further and feel a connection to another Guru - that is perfectly fine.

However, dropping a Guru without taking up another is a crime. It does not indicate advancement; it indicates a fall. Arrogance, ego, or hatred has come in between. In the Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, a disciple may be sent to another Guru by the Gurus themselves - that is traditional and accepted. A disciple may also choose to go to another Guru on their own - that too is traditional and accepted. The problem arises when one abandons a Guru for foolish or trivial reasons; then something is seriously wrong. Unless you are ready to rise above junk logic, stupid reasoning, and develop true maturity, you are not suited for Brahma Vidyā.

In Brahma Vidyā, you are not even asked to surrender. There is no śaraṇāgati, no act of surrender. The interesting thing about the Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya is that once you are initiated, the Guru must perform pūjā for you. He must worship you. In all Brahma Vidyā Sampradāyās, once a disciple is initiated, he is made to sit in the seat while the Guru performs ārati. Here, the knowledge - the vidyā - holds the center; nothing else matters.

Brahma Sūtras do not start with yāma, niyamā, āsanā, or prāṇāyāma. The original Vedānta Sampradāya tradition does not require any prerequisites. The one and only requisite is an enlightened Master for you to sit with and understand His words. That’s all. Nothing else. Very beautifully, Śaṅkarā puts it: manuṣyatva – having a human body; mumukṣutva – the desire for liberation; and the nearness of a Mahāpuruṣa – an enlightened being. That’s it. Nothing else is needed.

The Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, Vedānta sampradāya, is the easiest path, because you don’t need to do anything except listen. In all other traditions, you need to do something after listening. For example, in bhakti tradition, you need to listen about the bhakti, then you need to practice it. In the yogā tradition, you need to listen about yogā, then you need to practice it. But in Vedānta Sampradāya, just listen, that’s all. No need for any practicing, that’s why no homework.

The listening becomes so powerful, the listening is so intense, when an incarnation expresses these great truths, it is said that even devās (gods) come and listen. And not only that, even the deities shake their head and listen. There are thousands and thousands of stories how when a Master expresses the great truths, Gods and Goddesses come and sit and listen. And deities will stay there with their intense presence. All you need is to listen, listen, listen. That is why J Krishnamurthi, whom we consider from Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya although he denies all sampradāyās, says he does not need to accept he belongs to Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, but we accept him because we know from where he is coming. He goes on repeating, 'Listening is God. Listening is God. Listening is God.' Because nothing else is required for you to experience God.

When a Master expands on the truth, it is not just words. See, in the Cosmos there are so many great happenings, floating like a bubble, balloon, they are all floating. The happening of Jesus, because it has become a successful experiment, it is an independent intelligence. Happening of Krishna, happening of Rama. So all these have become an independent intelligence and they are floating around in the Cosmos, in the Space. To whatever bubble you tune yourself, that opens in your life and happens in your life. You become part of that happening, that happening becomes part of your life. So Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa sitting and transmitting that extraordinary understanding of Cosmos and Brahmaṇ and reality and enlightening disciples has become a huge successful experiment and thus, an independent intelligence. It is floating around. When somebody raises themselves to that frequency without any gap between time and space, that experience again expresses. It just opens up and expresses.

janmadasya yatah 1.1.2

The Whole Universe came from Existence

In the first chapter, second Sūtrā - "janmādyasya yataḥ".

Swami Gambhirananda translates as, "That is Brahmaṇ from which are derived the birth, etc. of this Universe."

Swami Vireswara translates as, "Brahmaṇ is the omniscient, omnipotent form which proceed the origin of this world."

'janmādyasya yataḥ' This whole Universe came from Existence. Now, you need to understand the sacred secret in this Sūtrā. The sacred secret in this Sūtrā is, nothing can come out of anything.

Athāto brahmajijñāsā - let us enquire into the reality of existence. It means, you are ready to drop all the ideas you have about reality. Only then you will be able to enter into reality. You should be ready to drop the ideas you have about reality.

Now let us enter into reality. 'Janmādyasya yataḥ' means: from the Cosmos, from Brahmaṇ, this Universe originated. If something comes out of something, how can the thing that came out be anything other than what it came from? If this world has emerged from Brahmaṇ, then how can this world be something other than Brahmaṇ, the Existence? It cannot be something other than Brahmaṇ. Then, Brahmaṇ cannot be causing you illusion, delusion, suffering, or pain. You may ask, "Then how am I experiencing illusion, delusion, suffering, or pleasure?" Here, the logic seems to fail; the equation does not appear to work. Before understanding this Sūtra, you need to grasp the impossibility of logic in certain matters. Some things are impossible for logic to fully grasp or express. For example, take this simple understanding: a rope can be used only for pulling, not for pushing; a bar can be used only for pushing, not for pulling. No arithmetic or logical calculation in any robot can arrive at this conclusion.

It is such a simple understanding, yet the scientific community is still struggling to teach it to a robot. There is no logical or arithmetic calculation that can be fed into a robot to make it conclude: "A rope can be used only for pulling, not for pushing; a bar can be used only for pushing, not for pulling." When a robot sees, it perceives only lines and circles; it cannot reach that comprehension. Understanding logic and arithmetic calculations - which many consider the foundation of life - cannot provide a solution for grasping this simple fact. The whole Greek civilization was built on arithmetic and logic, and modern civilization still stands on this limited, shallow, one-dimensional understanding of existence.

That is why building life solely on logical and arithmetic calculations is extremely dangerous. Any fort can stand only on a few thousand pillars, yet these people are attempting to construct a huge palace on just one pillar. Your life is a vast palace. Humanity itself is a vast palace. Yet this Greek-based civilization tries to make that immense palace stand on only one aspect of life - the arithmetic and logical calculations.

The Saraswati civilization, the Hindu civilization, is trying to build the civilization on reality. When you start your education, reality is taught to you - Athāto brahmajijñāsā - let us enquire into reality. Not, 'let us enquire into arithmetic mathematical logic.' No! But unfortunately, the whole thinking, the fuel of the Greek civilization, the driving force of Greek civilization, and the driving force of the Western civilization is very primitive. Even this idea of 'one God' is nothing but the arithmetic logic and insecurity. In arithmetic logic, two is always against one. Zero is always against one. This insecurity inherent in arithmetic logic has given rise to monistic religions.

All Ganges civilizations are based on reality. Religions evolved from the realizations that do not talk about one God. Hinduism actually says Gods are many. These guys go on saying, "No, no, Hinduism also says - 'ultimately God is one and many forms are there'. Hinduism does not say God is one. God is beyond duality. That's all - advaita, that's it. Never ekatva. We are not arithmetic logic based religion. We do not have insecurity based on arithmetic logic. Our tradition is based on arihantas, which means enlightened ones, not arithmetic.

There are as many trillions of Gods as there are trillions of cells in your system. Each cell in your brain is a God. We have a method of understanding how to awaken each cell. The understanding that awakens each cell is mantra. Therefore, you need to look within. The deepest truths should be heard from a person who has traveled to those depths.

Arithmetic logic cannot explain all the questions about reality. You can use it at an initial level, but eventually you must confront reality as it is. Janmādyasya yataḥ - the whole Cosmos originates from this reality. Whatever exists, is reality.If you are experiencing fear, pain, pleasure, greed, or suffering, look into these experiences themselves for solutions, not into reality. Reality itself operates from reality, in reality, and for reality. Creation, sustenance, dissolution, and destruction - all happen in reality, by reality, and for reality.

If you touch and see the wall of the room in which you are sitting, that wall is reality. But if the wall gives you the problem of "it is mine or not mine," and all problems arise because of this sense of ownership, then analyze the problem not based on the wall itself, but based on your mind, which creates all these problems. Similarly, the person sitting next to you is reality. If issues of friendliness or enmity arise, analyze the problem in the friendliness or enmity itself, not in the person.

Arithmetic logic keeps inspiring and impressing you to find the problem in terms of reality. But the first Sūtra of the Brahma Sūtra makes you understand that problems should be analyzed, understood, and solved not in reality itself, but where they are felt. It is a complete shift in the understanding of life.

Janmādyasya yataḥ. Reality - Cosmos is the origin of the world. These are attributions. For example, the man who is wearing a yellow dress is an attribute. The man who has seen the ocean is an attribution. If someone says to bring that man who has seen the ocean, only the man can be brought, the attribution cannot be brought. Same way, 'The world came out of Cosmos', these words are all attributes and the whole problem boils down to your dictionary and the Master's dictionary. Master makes a statement, 'World comes out of Cosmos' and you ask, "What is world and what is Cosmos?" Then Cosmos comes out of the world. Both are one and the same. So 'janmādyasya yataḥ'. Origin happening, ending is - is.

There is no change. Wherever you feel change, look for the problem in the place where you feel the change, not in what is. What is, IS. The problem should be looked at where it arises. The solution comes when you analyze the feeling. Healing happens when you analyze the feeling of pain, pleasure, fear, sorrow, or suffering. Healing does not happen if you try to peel the wall. Peel the feeling, not the reality. But you go on trying to peel the reality.

Janmādyasya yataḥ. It means reality comes out of reality. The origin of reality is reality. Naturally, reality cannot give you any suffering. Reality cannot give you any fear. You cannot be greedy in reality. Because in reality, how can you be greedy of yourself? How can you be afraid of yourself? How can reality be greedy of reality? How can reality be afraid of reality?

Then, if you feel, "No, I am having greed. I am having fear," look into where you are having it, not into what is. When you look into where you are having it, you will understand that the idea of 'having it' is only an idea of having, not that you are truly having it. If there are a few moments in your life without fear, then how can fear really happen in you?

You see, anything that truly happens should be eternal. If something is not eternal, it has not only never happened once - it has never happened at all. If illusion cannot be eternal, then not only can it not be ephemeral, it cannot even exist. If there is a feeling of, "Till yesterday, it was there," forget about it.

People ask, "How can māyā be destroyed?" Understand that māyā never gets destroyed. Does the flower floating in a pond in any way affect us? No. Because that does not affect us, we have grown beyond it, it is not only not affecting us, it does not practically exist for us. But a small ant, floating in the water, trying to survive, for that ant that flower can either be a boat or a hindrance to cross. For that ant, that flower is a māyā. But for us, not only it is not māyā, it does not exist for us.

When you outgrow even the people around you, your friends, your family, your circle, your relationships, everything will be in such frequency, even for them māyā does not exist. So, you don't even feel, not only for you māyā does not exist, you will understand that even for the whole world that māyā does not exist. The frequency in which you exist, even for all of them, māyā does not exist.

The sacred secret from this Sūtrā is - reality is reality is reality. It comes from, stays and merges back into it. Then why this suffering, bondage, liberation? These are all just the foolish words taught to you. Just junk those words, and be liberated now, "Wow, that is true. Then what about my day-to-day problems, food, shelter, name and fame, prestige, society, money?" Look into those problems where they exist. They don't exist in reality. When you understand 'the reality comes out of reality and goes back to reality', all these problems become a small flower floating on the water. They become insignificant to you. Go on increasing your understanding again and again, establishing yourself into reality - Brahma Vidyā.

Today, one dimension of reality: Reality comes from reality, stays in reality, and goes back to reality. This reality can never cause fear, greed, or suffering to you. If you are experiencing fear, greed, or suffering of any kind, then be very clear - you are supposed to work on the feeling, not on reality. The arithmetic-logical civilization is trying to build an entire palace on a single pillar. That is why it is constantly tumbling and falling.

Tumbling down and falling is the depression of great civilizations. Western civilization needs to understand that, unfortunately, it has been built on the wrong foundation - on a single pillar of arithmetic logic. That is why it goes on suffering in deep depression and emptiness. Here is the solution: Build again and re-strategize. Fortunately, the Western mind is open, curious, inquisitive, and ready to imbibe great truths.

Build, re-strategize, re-plan, review, and rethink your basic understandings based on reality, not on arithmetic logic. The understandings of the intelligent ones, when taught as faith for the ordinary, later develop into religion over time. Therefore, the insights of the intelligent ones must be reviewed, revised, and re-planned. When this happens, the very act of reviewing transforms religion. Whatever is handed over to the common people as religion like science is also a religion.

Each department is a religion. It is a religion. So, each religion needs to review, relook, replan, re-strategize all the understandings they have about reality, based on this one great revelation that life cannot be built on logical arithmetic. It has to be built on reality, which comes from, stays in, and goes back in reality, which cannot cause fear, greed, suffering. So anywhere fear, greed, or suffering is felt, you need to attend and look into that part and not the reality. These understandings will change the very way we look and perceive living life.

Shāstrayonitvāt 1.1.3

Source of the Shāstras

In the first chapter third Sūtrā - "Śāstrayonitvāt." The Sūtrā is just this much - "Śāstrayonitvāt." That's all.

Translation says, "Brahmaṇ is omniscient because of its being the source of the scriptures.

Swami Vireswarananda translates as, "The omniscient and omnipotent of the Brahmaṇ being the source of scriptures."

The meaning, the translation of this Sūtrā is, "Brahmaṇ is omniscient because of its being the source of scriptures."

"Śāstrayonitvāt." Just two words. Source of the Śāstras. This is the source of the Shastras. First let us understand the word 'Śāstra'. Śāstra means truth about reality. In the commentary, each explains differently. The Vedikas are saying, "Brahmaṇ is great because it is a source of Rigveda, Yajurveda, all Vedas." Naturally the Vaishnavites say, "No, because it is the source of Bhagavata and all the Vaishnavites scriptures." Each one debates on the word 'Śāstra'.

Śāstra means the truth about reality. Truth about reality. Only the omnipotent, omniscient intelligence will have guts to reveal its quality. Only the ultimate will have the strength to reveal its qualities to you, to reveal truths about itself to you. The word 'Śāstra' does not mean just some book. Śāstra means truth about reality. Only truth has the capacity to reveal its truth. Nothing else can reveal about its truth.

Leading somebody in the path of truth is very dangerous unless you are established in it. If you are not established and you are leading, a disciple will find out your falsehood. That's one of the very important truths you need to understand.

Only truth has innate intelligence to reveal itself. Śāstra means truth about reality. Existence is great because it reveals all the truths about its reality. All the psychodrama you add on the things and persons and situations, if they are deducted, truth is revealed. The moment you start the psycho drama of Master being Guru, Master starts the psychodrama of you being a disciple. The moment you start the psychodrama of friendliness towards somebody, that person starts the psychodrama of friendliness to you. The moment you start the psychodrama of enmity with somebody, the person starts the psychodrama of enmity towards you. Psychodrama of pain, pleasure, love, anger, towards persons, objects or reality, is corruption. Otherwise in truth, in reality, shastrayonitvāt.

Reality is the origins of the truths about reality, because it is origin about the truths, about the reality; because it has the capacity to reveal the truths about itself, it is great. Anybody who has the capacity to reveal the truths about himself, will go to the deeper and deeper truths about himself.

People whose breathing space you enjoy, and who enjoy your breathing space, just completely reveal yourself to them. Even if the relationships are breaking, it's okay. What you are, and what you feel yourself to be - the truths about you - reveal them to these people. Even if your relationships are breaking in your life, you will roll through life so beautifully, you will attract deeper and deeper personalities who are ready to resonate with your reality. People who are ready to resonate with your reality are eternal companions. You will attract eternal companions into your life. Not only that, you yourself will experience deeper and deeper realities about yourself.

In West Bengal, there is a great spiritual tradition called the 'Bauls.' The word 'Bauls' means, in Bengali, 'Pagal' or mad. They usually stay in couples. Couples are not necessarily one male and one female; they stay as pairs. Sometimes, both will be female, sometimes both male, and sometimes one male and one female.

The Bauls take a vow: "We will share the deepest truths about ourselves with each other." They also take a vow: "We will not allow anybody else into our breathing space, and we will not enter anyone else's breathing space." It's a very beautiful tradition in West Bengal.

They carry a long stick with a begging bowl attached. Even while they beg, they stretch the bowl and tell the person not to enter their breathing space: "Put the food from there."

Try this - it actually works. Anybody who enters your breathing space, or with whom you share your breathing space - your friends, family, first circle, the warm circle - show the utter naked truth about yourself to them: what you feel about life, about yourself, about them. You may be afraid, but sometimes Vyāsa doesn't give any technique; he doesn't give any homework. He just takes away the home from you so that there is no homework. Vyāsa is a dynamic, dynamite diamond. That is why Vedāntis always have to move out of society, because it requires a high measure of truth.

Reality is too much for society, just as the fruit is too much for the root. But the foolish root does not understand that the fruit is the very life of the root. The enlightened Master is too much for society, yet society does not realize that it is for the Master's sake they are still alive. It is the fruit that justifies the existence of the root; it is for the fruit that the root exists. Reality is too powerful for society, but the small groups that hold this reality as a living stream, as the very juice of the Earth - these are the salt of the Earth. It is because of such groups that humanity is still kept alive, without being destroyed.

Decide strongly, "Anybody with whom I share my breathing space or who shares my breathing space, I will be completely open and naked and truthful to them, in all possible ways, even if it brings dire consequences in my life."

It can surely bring only auspicious consequences. If the other person is understanding, you will become deeply intimate. If the other person is arrogant or unconscious, at least you will not have that person in your life. You remain free, liberated. Liberation from illusory relationships is liberation from illusion itself. Any truth you feel about yourself and the other person should be revealed. Another important point: within a few days, the truth you feel about yourself and the other person may change. Again, reveal that change.

What you feel honestly at this moment - about yourself, about that person, about your relationship - reveal it. After ten days, you may suddenly have a different understanding - reveal that as well. Have the courage to face your reality openly. Have the courage to reveal the reality, knowing that whatever you reveal now may change in a few days, hours, or even minutes. This will make your relationships deeper, more honest, and more truthful. If it breaks some relationships, so be it—you will grow.

Only truth has the capacity to reveal itself. So decide to reveal yourself completely, openly, to everything. Know very clearly: the chair on which you are sitting while telling a lie will be a witness. When someone else sits in front of that chair and you tell another lie, the chair will unconsciously communicate to that person, "Don't believe this person." It will send the message clearly into their bio-memory. When they leave, they will not believe you. Everything around you records what you are saying; everything around you records who you are. Reality is ease-ness. Whatever you think as reality - reveal it, reveal it, reveal it. Your understanding of reality will deepen and deepen and deepen further.

Śāstra means truth about reality. Only the truth has the capacity, intelligence, and courage to reveal reality about itself. Only reality has the guts to reveal the truths about itself. Only Brahmaṇ reveals the truth of its existence. In Sanskrit, we have a very beautiful word: "Svayam Prakāśa" - self-shining, self-effulgent. By its existence, it reveals its nature, its presence. Only the chaitanyā reveals its presence through its own existence. You cannot hide chaitanyā. How can you hide it? The self-effulgent cannot be hidden.

Decide this as a first step: "I will live like Brahmaṇ, like reality. All the truths about me will be completely open, and anyone who comes will be able to read them. My life will be an open book." When your life is an open book, you become a Śāstra for others and for yourself. When you reveal the truths about yourself to others completely and honestly, understand that you will learn more about yourself than anyone else can teach you. Start talking, start opening up, and you will see that suddenly you will begin radiating many wonderful, amazing, and auspicious energies and characteristics.

And not only that, when a stone is rotated in the flow of the Ganges, it gets beautifully molded into a Shiva Linga. Similarly, when your Being is tested and rotated by living the truth and speaking honestly, it becomes a Shiva Linga, a manifestation of existence. In the beginning, it is a courageous task. "No, no, I will tell four truths about me to her, but not the fifth one - that is dangerous." "Ah, as if he is going to tell me everything, or what?!" But remember, he is not asking for enlightenment - you are asking! Come on, be honest. If he were asking for enlightenment and was not revealing, then that would be different. You are the one seeking; you wanted it, and thus it became your responsibility.

So, anybody whom you consider a friend or relative, be completely open to them. You will imbibe the qualities of existence - Brahmaṇ - within you. The delusion and illusory layers will be peeled off. "Śāstrayonitvāt" - truth has the capacity to be the source of revelations about itself. The Sun shines and radiates because it has no dark patches inside. The Moon is hesitant to shine and radiate because its own dark patches would be revealed. Shine like the Sun. Do not be afraid of the dark patches you carry.

When you shine like the Sun, the dark patches will also be burned away. Only consciousness has the ability to reveal its nature. Matter does not reveal its nature. A fan cannot reveal its nature, but electricity does reveal its nature - touch it and see. Electricity is the life within the fan. Similarly, matter does not reveal its truths to you. Consciousness reveals its truths. Be conscious.

Reveal your own truths about you to you and to everybody - radiate. Whatever you have as truth about you, don't hide - be that. Share. If the other person is capable or matured enough to be associated with you, let the relationship grow. Let it be 'make or break'.

Being in any relationship without the purpose of mutual growth is prostitution. This is according to Hindu tradition, because when you get married, you take this vow: "Let us help each other reach fulfillment." This is one example of a husband-wife relationship.

But in every relationship, radiate this truth. What you know about yourself - radiate it. An ordinary stone is matter; it is not Śāstrayonitvāt, meaning it is not self-effulgent, not self-revealing about its existence and truth. But a diamond is self-effulgent; it reveals its own truth and existence.

In all of you, there is a part that is diamond, covered by ordinary stone. Polish that part, let the ordinary part disappear until the diamond is fully revealed. Let the entire ordinary part vanish. Use the diamond that is already shining to polish the diamond within you. That is what happens in the Upaniṣads with the Master. The Master is a dynamic, dynamite diamond. All the stone parts of you are blasted away. Only the self-effulgent part, Śāstrayonitvāt - the parts within you that reveal their own existence - remain.

Don't be stuck in any friendship, any relationship, other than the reason for growing together. It's a very courageous truth, a very strong truth. Another one important thing, when you courageously take this step of revealing all your truths to the people with whom you are living, it will only lead to more and more auspiciousness because if the other person is understanding, the relationship will become deeper and greater. It will grow together. If not, at least you will be rid of it.

A reality is great because it reveals all the truths about its existence. Anything that reveals all the truths about itself by its very existence is reality. It is great. Use this as a scale in your life: anything that reveals all the truths about itself by its existence is reality, great.

An enlightened being, by his very presence and existence, reveals all the realities about Himself. In you, there is a part of yourself that reveals all the truths about itself to you. That part is reality, consciousness, enlightenment. Śāstrayonitvāt – that part is God, Brahmaṇ, existence.

In you, there is another part that hides the truths about its reality, and that is matter.

This Brahma Sūtrā is almost like a fruit juicer. Just as a fruit is placed on a juicer and pressed to extract its essence, similarly, you need to take this Brahma Sūtrā and press, press, press on your system. It is recommended to take dry fruits and nuts – like almond, cashew, ghee, and similar items – because your brain needs intense energy and a cooling lubrication to fully grasp this.

When you are listening to these ideas – "Anything which reveals its existence and truth to you is God, and you have this part in you" – many parts of your brain will catch fire: "Wow, yes, right!" It will just click, open up. "Yes, many times, in many moments, some parts of me reveal their existence to me and to others. Right – in those moments, I am always in restful awareness. Other times, when I am not revealing myself to myself or to others, I am suffering."

If you are not revealing your existence to all the people in your breathing space, slowly, slowly, you will start hiding it from yourself as well. That is what we call self-ignorance – ātma ajñāna. The failure of life occurs when self-ignorance becomes too much, and you give up. That is what we call "breaking down."

Break down in front of your reality, so that you can stand up. When you reveal all the truths you know about yourself to all the people around you, suddenly, deeper and deeper layers of truth about yourself will be revealed to you – by you. Those deeper realities revealed to you by yourself will take you to higher and higher spaces. You become Śāstrayonitvāt. You become the origin of the Śāstra.

Śāstra means truth about reality. When you become Śāstrayonitvāt, the origin of the truths of reality, you are enlightened – that's it.

The Master goes on revealing truths about Himself. Whatever He feels about Himself, He continues talking, continuing to reveal. That's all. In this way, He becomes Śāstrayonitvāt – the origin of the truths about reality. Because the Master has become the origin of the truths about reality, all He does is come and sit, opening a window for you to see the inner space where He resides.

The Master just comes, sits, and opens a window for you to catch a glimpse of the Cosmos. Existence continuously reveals its truth about its own existence in reality. Today, go on grinding this truth within you. It will not be as simple as a fruit juicer; it will be more like diamond cutting. Go forth and reveal all the truths about yourself to all the people with whom you are living. Boldly, courageously, revealing the truths about yourself, you become Śāstrayonitvāt – the source of truths about reality, the origin of truths about reality.

You will experience a tremendous restful awareness and freedom. Let the Upaniṣad unfold within all of us. Let the truth, Śāstrayonitvāt, be drilled into all of us. Simply sit in the Upaniṣad. No technique, no meditation, no process, no mantra, no japa, no visualization - there is no need even to close your eyes. If you feel like it, close them; or simply sit with your eyes open. Let the Upaniṣad happen.

Drill this truth into yourself – Śāstrayonitvāt. Be the origin of the truth about the reality of existence. Be truthful to everything, and everything will be truthful to you. What you understand as truth, be honest with it. Deeper and deeper layers of truth will be revealed to you. One important aspect of the Brahma Vidyā Sampradāya, the path of Vedānta, is that you should go out and start relating this truth to people. Start sharing this truth with the world. Start working on it. Otherwise, you will forget it, because it is such a profound truth.

If you don't drill it into your inner space, you will forget it. So when you go out, keep talking to people; share with them what you have heard. Transform others, convince them of these truths, and in the process, you will be transformed on a deeper level. You don't need any other technique, practice, or method, but you must talk about it with others. Otherwise, what you have heard now will be forgotten. At least talk with a few people. Don't think that by writing, you will be able to remember. No! Talk – only then will you understand how the truth gets customized for you and your situation.

Now go out and open a window of your inner space to the world. If people are ready to look in, it is worthy of their attention. If not, make it worthy of looking in.

तत् तु समन्वयात् || १.१.४ ||

Tat tu samanvayāt 1.1.4

That should be known only by personal experience, through Upaniṣad with the Master

"Tat tu samanvayāt". Just two words. The world is reduced to these two words - 'tat tu samanvayāt'.

The English translation by Swami Gambhirananda, "But that Brahmaṇ is known from the Upaniṣad, it being the object of their fullest import."

Swami Vireswarananda translates as, "But that Brahmaṇ is to be known only from scriptures and not independently by other means is established, because it is the main purport."

'That should be known only by personal experience, through Upaniṣad with the Master.'

The sacred secret in this sūtrā is, it can be realized not by any written Upaniṣad - Īśa, Kena, Kaṭha, Praśna, Muṇḍaka, Māṇḍūkya…

Through those Īśa, Kena, Kaṭha, Praśna, Muṇḍaka, Māṇḍūkya, Aitareya, Taittirīya, Nārāyaṇa - 108 Upaniṣads, you can grasp a kind of an intellectual understanding. Only by sitting in Upaniṣad, the Brahmaṇ can be experienced, as it is the main object of the fullest import.

The purpose of the Upaniṣad is to experience existence, and the most important thing to be realized through it is existence.

Zazen simply means sitting. When you sit for so many years, naturally the mind becomes a useless, unnecessary part of you. It withers away; so does the will. Just to eat, perform basic activities, and sit, you don't need the mind or the will. Both mind and will wither away.

Will withers away, whether through complete Zazen or complete insecurity. Any sense of security will only remind and poke you to return to it for 3–4 days. If you can sustain the Parivrajaka life for one week, after that, insecurity will no longer affect you. Insecurity lasts only during the first week, no longer. Then Vedānta vijñānam begins to arise in you. What is Vedānta vijñānam? It is the withering of the Will and the ability to perform everyday actions without relying on your Will to support, justify, analyze, or comment. These activities, driven by the Will, destroy the essence - the juice - of your life.

Modern-day youngsters are repeatedly brainwashed about the necessity or importance of the Will. Yet, if you are intensely creative without questioning why you should be creative, the Will withers away naturally. The Will can wither in many ways.

Some of the most beautiful Zen koans and stories illustrate this withering of the Will. For example, a monk was sitting under a tree, meditating. He noticed the breeze caused by a leaf falling from the tree. He simply floated along with the motion of the leaf as it zig-zagged, moved slowly, and eventually landed on the ground. In that moment, the monk attained enlightenment.

How will you logically describe it? The monk was in such extreme restful awareness that even the movement of a falling leaf beautifully stirred his inner space, resting in the withering away of the Will.

Modern-day youngsters are repeatedly brainwashed about the importance of the Will for everyday actions—most of which do not actually require it. One way to accelerate the withering of the Will is to put yourself in highly challenging situations where your Will alone cannot solve the problems, where it is forced to boil. This is a powerful process, especially since modern-day youngsters often lack the patience to sit in meditation for 40 years - or even 40 minutes. By confronting situations unsolvable by the Will, the Will naturally withers away.

This Sūtrā gives the importance of personal experience through the Upaniṣad. Here, the Upaniṣad does not refer to some written works from those days, because the words and the meanings attributed to the words evolve with every second generation.

There are two sacred secrets: First, existence, reality, can be realized only by sitting in the Upaniṣad with the Master, not through any written book. Second, a very important truth: sitting with the Master should be solely for realizing existence, not for any other purpose, because that is the most important thing in life. The Upaniṣad should happen only for enlightenment.

Upaniṣad can bring many extraordinary powers, energies, and experiences. Upaniṣad can add numerous qualities to you. Upaniṣad means sitting with the Master. But that is not the true purpose of the Upaniṣad. Sometimes people come just to observe or check out, thinking, "Let me see what He is talking about." Nowadays, some come to see models of earrings or energy beads. Those things cannot be the purpose of the Upaniṣad. The true purpose of the Upaniṣad should be solely experiencing existence, experiencing reality, experiencing life.

Thousands and thousands of spiritual experiences may happen during Upaniṣad, but that is not the purpose, nor is it the essence, of the Upaniṣad. Experiencing the existential reality, experiencing the reality of existence, is the true purpose of the Upaniṣad. "Tat tu samanvayāt" - that Brahmaṇ, being the object of the Upaniṣad, should be known from the Upaniṣad, through the Upaniṣad, and in the Upaniṣad.

Sitting in Zazen, just sitting, for 40 years will make your Will wither away. Similarly, sitting in the presence of a Master amplifies the process, because He knows how to boil your engrams and remove them. If you are in the presence of the Master, listening to what He is saying and falling in tune, your whole day becomes Upaniṣad, because He is continuously focusing you. Whenever this focusing happens, it is like a churning of your inner space. During the churning, resistance gathers as poison, and acceptance gathers as butter, or nectar. The resistance, the poisons, are constantly drawn out by interactions with others who are themselves resisting.

The extraordinary experiences of the Upaniṣad are imbibed and incorporated into your muscle memory, while all negativities are churned out and removed from your system. Ultimately, everything boils down to the Upaniṣad. If you do yoga, your body will be ready for Upaniṣad. If you have devotion, a feeling of connection, or bhakti, the Upaniṣad will be very "juicy," making it possible to sit for long durations. If you perform karma, all your negativities will be removed, your body will be fully trained, and the withering away of the Will will occur, so that when you sit in Upaniṣad, you can experience deep, settled, restful awareness. The Upaniṣad is, in essence, the very core of life - "Tat tu samanvayāt."

Brahma Sūtras are not a place for using overly big words or delivering long discourses. The entire Brahma Sūtra, if you write the original Sūtras, can be completed in 3 or 4 sheets. There are 555 Sūtras, and at most it will be about 1,500 words, because no Sūtra is more than 2 or 3 words. That's it - one article, one concise work. This book is the inspiration, essence, quintessence, and abridged dictionary of world philosophies and human thinking. Not just the world's spiritual or religious philosophies, or even atheist philosophies, but the quintessence of very human thought itself.

Upaniṣad - sitting with the Master - is for experiencing Brahmaṇ. Experiencing reality should happen through the Upaniṣad; experiencing reality can happen only through the Upaniṣad. The sole purpose of the Upaniṣad is to experience reality and existence, because experiencing existence is the true purpose of the Upaniṣad, as well as of your own existence and the Master's existence.

Master exists to transmit the experience of existence. You exist to experience existence. Upaniṣad happens to transmit the experience of existence. Do not sit in the Master's presence to cure your physical disorders. Do not use Him as a replacement for Anacin, Metacin, or antidepressants. Do not use Him as a replacement for ordinary comforts or simple remedies. Use His presence to experience existence itself.

All Upaniṣadic stories talk about the power of Upaniṣad - sitting with the Master. In one Upaniṣadic story, the Master gives a disciple a few cows and says, "Go to the forest and come back when you have 1,000 cows." The disciple goes to the forest, grazes the cows, and takes care of them. They continuously multiply. The whole day he sits in silence, because with cows you don't need to talk and there's nothing else to do. That sitting - that sweet, silent sitting - naturally withered away his Will. After the cows became 1,000, he even forgot to count.

He did not even realize it was time to go back. One cow comes and says, "We have become 1,000, let's go to the Master." It is a very beautiful story, because his Will had withered away so much that he forgot how to count. Then he comes back. When he enters the ashram, the Master says, "Oh, 1,001 cows have come." In Hinduism, cows are considered holy. They are symbols of sacrifice, love, and compassion. The Master says, "The disciple has also become love, compassion, sacrifice, and sincerity."

Upaniṣad is the essence of life. That is the essence of all teachings, all techniques, all processes - the essence of everything. Sometimes, music can enhance the power of silence, the experience of silence. The Master speaks to enrich the power of Upaniṣad. In Zen, there is a beautiful saying: "Grass grows by itself." When you sit in Upaniṣad, consciousness grows naturally, and Will withers away naturally.

Universe does not Exist

Next Sūtrā: 1st chapter, 5th Sūtrā.

Just these two words. Actually, when you are in such a deep Samadhi, you utter as minimum as possible. Sometimes you can't even utter.

ईक्षतेर्न अशब्दम् ॥ १.१.५ ॥

īkṣaterna aśabdam || 1.1.5 ||

One of the world's biggest problems is analyzed just in this Sūtrā. Understand, whenever you get one valid click, one big engram is relieved. You are free from one big engram.

Swami Gambhirananda's translation goes as 'The Pradhāna of the Sānkhya is not the cause of the Universe, because it is not mentioned in the Upaniṣads, which fact is clear from the fact of seeing."

Swami Vireswarananda translates as "On account of thinking, being attributed to the first cause by scriptures of Pradhāna, is not the first cause referred to by them; Pradhāna is based on the scriptures."

One of the great aspects of the Brahma Sūtras is its approach to analyzing even the greatest problems, such as the distance between the Sun and the Moon, the Moon and the Earth, and the Earth and the Sun. All these topics are given equal importance. Please understand, the Brahma Sūtra is a very paradoxical book, where in the same Sūtra it analyzes both why the distance between the Sun and the Moon is such, and why the price of rice is rising. It is an extraordinary philosophical discussion that directly affects the way you think about yourself, life, and your very existence.

Here, the important problem being discussed is whether the origin is Consciousness or matter. The Sānkhyas were the first human beings to begin philosophical thinking. The first thinker was Kapila, the Master of Sāṅkhya philosophy. Unfortunately, over time, the Sāṅkhya system diverted from Kapila's original spirit and created a deviated system. Here, Vyāsa is tasked with revealing the original truth to the Sāṅkhyas.

Always observe, when Śaṅkara appears, he teaches correct Buddhism to Buddhists; when Nāgārjuna appears, he teaches correct Vedānta to Śaṅkara's followers. Over time, the Buddhists had started straying from Buddha's original teachings. So Śaṅkara comes and restores the right understanding of Buddhism to the Buddhists.

Here, the Sānkhyas have strayed from Kapila's original teachings. Understand, the Vedānta Sampradāya is Uttara Mīmāṁsā, and these Brahma Sūtras are called Uttara Mīmāṁsā Sūtras. Before this, there is the Pūrvā Mīmāṁsā. Sāṅkhya is an earlier philosophical system. The word "Darśanā" cannot actually be translated as philosophy. Darśanā literally means "what is seen." In your inner awakening, what you directly experience becomes your Darśanā. So, when each Master attains enlightenment, what He experiences, He pens down and transmits as a Darśanā.

So, the first Darśanā is Sāṅkhya - the senior-most and oldest Darśanā, the oldest thinking system, the earliest cognition system, which gives understanding about life, death, beyond life, after life, or personal existence. Jīva refers to the individual Self, Īśvara to the ultimate Self or God, and Jagat, the world, consists of two parts: nature and manmade society. All these understandings, and better ways to relate with them and coexist harmoniously, constitute the purpose of all Darśanās. All Darśanās are created to know the deeper truths about these major subjects, and to flow with life with this understanding.

The first Darśanā is Sāṅkhya. Unfortunately, over time, the followers of Sāṅkhya philosophy began to deviate from the teachings of Kapila. Whenever followers move away from the founder, the founder reemerges in another form to teach the truth again. The followers often go on to persecute the founder in that new form. This is eternal foolishness.

In the same way, the followers of Kapila began moving away from him, so Vyāsa had to provide clarity. You need to know this background to understand the context of these Sūtras, because this Sūtra is directly addressing and challenging the Sankhya philosophy. You may be surprised and think, "Is Vyāsa attacking Kapila?" Yes, but both of them are Incarnations of Vishnu, and this is a teaching for the benefit of seekers, not a conflict.

Very beautifully Kṛṣṇa says in Gita, "Among the Munis, I am Kapila" And in the Stotra, Padmapada sings about Vyāsa.

शङ्करं शङ्कराचार्यं केशवं बादरायणम् |
सूत्रभाष्यकृतौ वन्दे भगवन्तौ पुनह् पुनः ||
śaṅkaraṃ śaṅkarācāryaṃ keśavaṃ bādarāyaṇam |
sūtrabhāṣyakṛtau vande bhagavantau punah punaḥ ||

Śaṅkarācārya, who is an incarnation of Śaṅkara, and Vyāsa, who is an incarnation of Nāraṇya, if both were to fight, who could possibly win? There was a debate. Vyāsa Himself came down to test the strength of Śaṅkara. The debate begins on the Brahma Sūtrā. Author and commentator are in argument: Vyāsa is the author, Śaṅkara is the commentator; both are contending. Of course, no one could judge.

The debate goes on for three days. The poor disciples sit without food, bewildered. Suddenly, Pāḍmapāda realizes what is happening - the old man arguing is Vyāsa, though he did not reveal His identity. The young man, unwilling to give up, is Śaṅkarā, who carries Lakṣmī in His hand, Sarasvatī in His speech, and the Devi in His body language. How could Śaṅkara lose? No way! Pāḍmapāda then sings:

śaṅkaraṃ śaṅkarācāryaṃ keśavaṃ bādarāyaṇam |

Śaṅkara Himself auditioned. Śiva Himself had come down as Śaṅkarācārya, and Viṣṇu Himself, Keśava, had come down as Bādarāyaṇa, Vyāsa. Vyāsa, You are the Sūtrākāra, and He is the Bhāṣyakāra. The originator who wrote the Sūtras and the commentator who is writing the Bhāṣya - both are in debate. Where is it going to end? Padmapāda falls at the feet of both and says, "I bow down to both of You." Immediately, Śaṅkara realizes that the person sitting in front of Him is Sūtrākāra Himself, Vyāsa, Bādarāyaṇa Himself. He then withdraws from the debate. Vyāsa blesses Him, saying, "My son, I have come to test You, Your capacity to establish the truth. I see You are qualified. I give You sixteen more years from My life." See the beauty: when an honest teacher comes to test his successor, the moment He sees the strength, He immediately says, "From My life, I give You sixteen more years. Live for sixteen more years and establish the philosophy, Your teaching."

This is how our Hinduism was spreading: completely based on friendly, convincing debate. No fight. No sword. No bread or butter. Nothing was used to coerce - only kindness. Simple, straightforward understanding and analysis. Kapila is also an Incarnation of Vishnu; as Krishna says, "Among the Munis, I am Kapila." Vyāsa is likewise an Incarnation of Vishnu. Naturally then, Vyāsa appears to be attacking Kapila! But it cannot be a real fight. There cannot be any conflict between Kapila and Vyāsa, because both are Incarnations of Vishnu. Surely, Vyāsa is not against Kapila personally; Vyāsa is addressing the misunderstandings of Kapila's followers.

One of the important questions is: whether the origin of Existence is Consciousness or matter. Sāṅkhya takes a clear stand. Kapila himself stood for the idea that the origin of the Universe is matter. The reasoning was that once you understand that whatever you call the Universe arises from matter, you will naturally renounce it, not be overly attached, and turn your focus toward Consciousness. This teaching, however, was given more as a technique for spiritual evolution than as an absolute fact.

When Kapila says, "The origin of the Universe is matter," he wants you to lose excessive interest in the Universe. He does not want you to be overly preoccupied with it.

On the other hand, when Vyāsa says, "The origin of the Universe is Brahmaṇ, Existence, Consciousness," he is pointing out that there is no separate Universe - just relax in Existence. Out of Existence, nothing else can truly come or become. If you perceive something else, then relax from that perception.

The final purpose of both Kapila and Vyāsa is the same: to free you from distractions. That is all. The question then becomes: how to express this purpose effectively in words?

The Universe is neither from matter nor from Consciousness, because it simply is - it does not come out of anything. It never truly comes out; in essence, it does not exist.

If you feel that you are seeing something, there is an error in your perception. If you think that something is happening in front of you right now, there is something wrong inside you. If you believe that anything other than you exists, there is a fundamental misunderstanding within yourself.

Sānkhyas: Kapila says, "The Universe comes out of matter (Pradhāna), so do not be distracted by it. Forget about it." Vyāsa, on the other hand, says, "The origin of the Universe is Existence itself. Therefore, the Universe cannot be other than Existence. Stop seeing it as separate from Existence. Return to Existence."

Neither the origin of the Universe is matter, nor is it Consciousness. The Universe does not exist. Then you may say, "Oh God, then what are we seeing?" The answer is - you are not seeing anything! You may protest, "No, no, I am seeing," but in truth, you are not. It is not there. Naturally, the mind begins to spin theories: "Yes, what He says is true; I exist, but what I see does not. What practice should I do to stop seeing? What practice should I follow to achieve Enlightenment?"

Come on, stop this nonsense of practice! The moment you start planning for practice, you are accepting the illusion and delusion. Once that acceptance happens, success is impossible. Don't think, "We can take care of it later." No! The very acceptance of illusion, or its cause, creates countless complications from which you can never escape. You believe so strongly that you are seeing while you are dreaming - what happens to the whole scene? It melts away, as if it were painted on a canvas that is rolled up when you wake. And where does the rolled canvas go? You do not know. If you can accept that transition, that dreamlike illusion, why can't you see that this life, too, is an illusion?

"No, no, here we make money and put it in a bank balance. There, it is not there. Here, we may live for ninety years; there, it is not there." Years are a delusion. Time itself is a delusion. Time is an illusion. The origin of Existence is Existence. Pradhāna claims the origin of the Universe is Universe. Some commentators on this Sūtra say, "The origin of the Universe cannot be matter, because the Upaniṣads declare it to be Consciousness," as many Upaniṣads describe the beginning as conscious Existence.

Even if you sit in Upaniṣad with the Master, you are not falling into matter. You are falling into life, into Existence. That itself shows that the origin is not matter. Of course, if you sit in Upaniṣad with the Master and fall asleep, then you might say your origin is matter. But if you sit in Upaniṣad with the Master and that Upaniṣad leads you to conscious space, then the origin is Consciousness.

Now we ask one more question: "Alright, whether the Source of the Universe is Consciousness or matter, what is the relevance for me? What is the direct utility?" Understanding that the origin is Consciousness brings a profound correlative shift in you, which actually improves your day-to-day balance sheet. Relaxing into the truth that the origin is intelligence gives you tremendous freedom from the persistent feeling that life has not given you justice. Understand that in the whole world, every person with a mind feels that they are not given justice.

If you believe the origin is matter, you will never be able to heal the persistent feeling: "I am not given justice," "I am not given all the chances I am worthy of," "I am not shown all the possibilities I needed." You will always grudge, grumble, and suffer. But when you understand that the Source is independent intelligence, a profound healing takes place. Suddenly, you feel, "Eh, whatever is happening is just; don't worry." Knowing that intelligence is the Source of the Universe, the origin of your Existence, brings tremendous trust in living, a deep joy to simply be, and the profound sense that you are given the justice you are due. This joy to exist, this trust in life, is the greatest gift a human being can experience.

Your Source is intelligence. It is not dead matter, nor a chaotic happening. The idea that "Source is matter" is a hypnotizing theory; "Source is Consciousness" is an experiential truth. This existential truth - Source as Consciousness, as independent intelligence - is alive, sacred, and beyond the comprehension of ordinary arithmetic or logical minds. That is why it remains a secret: a living, sacred secret that a purely logical mind cannot grasp.

It is like trying to catch a huge shark with a tiny net made for small fish. When an Incarnation lands on Earth for the ultimate purpose, you cannot capture that immense reality with your limited tools. Not only will your net fail, but the shark will pull the rod into the ocean, and the person holding it will be swept away. Just because your logic cannot grasp it, you cannot declare it nonexistent. It is considered a secret precisely because your logic cannot capture it.

The origin is intelligence. Nothing - your body, mind, relationships, wealth, or spiritual path - has ever been unjust to you. Understand this truth deeply. Do not try to grasp it thinking that Enlightenment will come later as a reward. There is no future reward awaiting you. Understand this now, and live fully in that truth.

You may think, "Why should I believe this? Why should I understand?" You don't need to believe - get lost! This is the plain, unvarnished truth. Sometimes people fall into the trap of thinking, "If I believe all these things, one day I'll become enlightened." No! There is no salary of Enlightenment; this is not a practice or a transaction. In the Brahmavidyā Sampradāya, there is no Enlightenment as a reward - it is simply living the truth.

Anybody who listens to the Brahma Sūtrā will not get Enlightenment, because the Brahma Sūtrā has nothing to do with Enlightenment as a reward. It is about enlightening. Every moment it enlightens you, here and now. There is no promise that one day you will receive the full "paycheck." No - if you think you will receive a reward someday, that check will simply bounce.

So, the Brahma Sūtrā is about enlightening you, not giving you Enlightenment as a future reward. Open your ears, open your mind, stretch your intellect, and receive the truth now. Don't keep your head like an inverted pot where anything poured simply goes down and is lost. Make it like a begging bowl - ready to receive.

In the Nirvāṇi Sampradāya, they even use the skull as a begging bowl, to constantly remind themselves to receive knowledge from the Master. Likewise, use your skull - your living mind- to receive while you are alive. Otherwise, after death, it will be used by someone else for food. Let it receive knowledge while it is alive.

The basic truth of origin is Consciousness. In every moment, right justice is given to you—physically, mentally, economically, socially, and spiritually. You are rewarded for your worth. At every step, you receive what you truly deserve, and compassion showers upon you.

When you listen to this truth - when you truly understand that the Source is Consciousness - the tremendous healing that comes from realizing you are always given justice naturally unfolds. That understanding directly enables you to live in Enlightenment.

From this Sūtrā, two sacred enlightening truths emerge. You are not handled by the dead, the lost, or indifferent forces. You are guided by a compassionate, independent, intelligent Source - an unfailing judge who is not interested in punishing or judging you, but only in facilitating your growth.

Second, the origin - the Source - is neither matter nor law; it is Existence itself, which is intelligent. Naturally, when this sacred truth sinks deep within you, it brings a tremendous restful awareness. Now, simply rest in that restful awareness.

Sit in Upaniṣad and see for yourself whether the origin of you is matter or life and Consciousness. Let you sit and see.

Source is Intelligence

Source is Intelligence

Again, just two words.

Translation of Gambhirananda says, “If it can be argued that the seeing is in a secondary sense, we say not so, owing to the use of the word ‘Self’.”

Translation of Swami Vireswarananda says, “If it be said that thinking is used in a secondary sense, we say not so, because of the word “Self” by which the first cause is referred to in scriptures.”

This is one of the deepest philosophical problems, shaping our very way of thinking. There can be arguments, of course. This teaching is a continuation of the previous Sūtra. The essence of the earlier Brahma Sūtra is: the Source of you, the Source of the Universe, is an independent intelligence - not dead matter, not a lifeless law.

You need to understand: the Source of existence is not inert; it is you. The Source of the Universe, which is you, is life itself. It is an independent intelligence, a living mechanism. This truth is established through logic, because all experiences occur within you, which is a living Self. The Source is a living Self.

Understand this: only when you know that the Source is living intelligence will you live honestly. In every step you take in life, honesty will naturally arise.

One of the biggest problems among so-called spiritual seekers is that when they lose trust in the law of the land or the law of society, they lose their integrity. Losing integrity is not spirituality. Often, as seekers evolve, their hypocrisy begins to dissolve. When hypocrisy dissolves, the hypocritical nature of societal laws and rules becomes evident—they lose their grip over you. You begin to see that social laws are often just expressions of social hypocrisy, and the law of the land is frequently exploited by those in power. However, many seekers, upon realizing this, start losing respect for societal and legal rules. Unfortunately, when respect for these laws is lost, integrity and honesty also erode. Spiritual maturity cannot coexist with dishonesty or hypocrisy toward social structures.

Understand, for an ultimate Enlightened being and for a terrorist, social laws and the law of the land do not bind them. But an Enlightened being retains integrity, while a terrorist lacks integrity. Many seekers who lose their integrity almost resemble terrorists.

You are supposed to have that deep respect and an unshakable cognitive clarity that existence is intelligence, and everything unfolds according to the justice of that intelligence. If you have this clarity, you will not become a terrorist. You will remain anchored and aligned with integrity if this clarity is present.

Understand, an ordinary man is a man who is bound by social law and the law of the land. An Enlightened being is a person who is not bound by these two laws but has clarity of the Cosmic law; it is intelligence which is orchestrating everything, so he rests in peace. He will be deeply compassionate and non-violent. He will have complete restful awareness and inner peace. He is an Enlightened being.

Then there is another classification: a person who lacks respect for social law and the law of the land and lacks the cognitive clarity that the Whole is independent and intelligent. He thinks the Whole is just dead matter, so anyone can do injustice to him or his group. Naturally, he thinks, "Come on, let me take a weapon in my hand and take revenge myself." This is where deviation arises.

That is the road where an Enlightened Master takes one path and a terrorist takes a different path. Until that point, both travel together. Whether you become an Enlightened being or a terrorist is determined by this single Sūtrā.

The Cosmos is intelligence; existence arises from intelligence. That is why, again and again, the Masters insist on receiving the truths fully and completely. If you miss this one point and believe the Cosmos is mere matter, you risk becoming a violent terrorist. This is exactly what happens with those who pursue power for its own sake.

The Cosmos is intelligence. Violent terrorists all operate with a deep, underlying belief that the basis of life is dead matter, and that anyone who can bully or dominate is successful. This belief is entirely false.

There is an argument by the materialists and different groups who say, "No, no. Just because we see and think, we cannot conclude that our Source is consciousness. It may only be a secondary sense."The Brahma Sūtrā breaks this argument by declaring, "No. If it were secondary, then the primary self should not be able to perceive it. But perception itself happens only in consciousness."

Seeing and thinking cannot be done by mere arithmetic or mathematical logic; even today no robot is able to fully cognize simple happenings. For example, a rope can be used only for pulling and not for pushing, while a bar can be used only for pushing and not for pulling. This basic cognizance still can be achieved by any mechanical robot available on Planet Earth. There is no arithmetic, logical, or mathematical sūtrā or formula that can grasp this information, no simple equation that can arrive at this conclusion. To reach it, we still do not have a logical, mathematical, or arithmetic formula that can be fed to a robot, enabling it to recognize: "Yes, this is a rope - it can be used only for pulling, not for pushing. And this is a bar—it can be used only for pushing, not for pulling."

No, it means seeing or thinking cannot be a secondary sense. The screen on which seeing and thinking happen is the very place where cognizance is taken - the conscious shaft. It is on this conscious shaft that cognizance occurs. Seeing and thinking happen only through cognition on the conscious shaft. Cognition cannot arise from any secondary sense, because every secondary sense is merely reproducible.

Just the actions cannot show whether the Source is matter or intelligence. The Source where cognition of the action- seeing or thinking - takes place is the conscious shaft, an independent intelligence. Without independent intelligence, without the presence of Pratyakātmā Chaitanya - the individual self-reflection - cognition is impossible. Therefore, the Source is life.

Through all the logic that hides your knowledge, through all the arguments that hide your knowledge and highlight your ignorance, you need to analyze and imbibe this truth. Please understand: when you listen - Śravaṇa (listening to the ultimate truth) - a few things happen. A sincere seeker analyzes the truth because it is the truth and receives it. A profit-oriented seeker thinks, "If I accept these truths, I may get spiritual experience or enlightenment, so let me believe this truth." The moment you have the idea, "I will get something if I accept this truth," and start accepting it, you miss it. Then there is another set of people: "Maybe because this man says it, it must be true. It goes above my head, but that's okay; I think it is true." Again, you miss it.

You may receive it by the grace of the Master in the course of time when he repeats the same truth later, and because you trust him; in that case you have a small possibility, but you miss it now. There is another set of people who say, "No, no, what he says is true, but I need to practice; then it will become experience, and then I'll become enlightened." Better you disappear into wherever you can! Truth must be analyzed and imbibed for the sake of truth alone. When you analyze and imbibe for the sake of truth, only then does enlightenment happen in you.

Source is intelligence. That means the Source of the Universe, the Source of your individual self, the Source of God, the Source of human society, the Source of nature - everything is intelligence. It is not dead matter or mechanical laws. This is the honest truth: there is no such thing as injustice.

The Source is intelligent. It will not allow any injustice. When something happens and you look at it superficially, in a hurried way, you may conclude that it is injustice. But relax and wait a few days; wait and see how the Cosmos unfolds and rolls. All you need is a little bit of restful awareness during the time when you are led to believe that injustice is being done to you.

For that restful awareness, you need to have a clear cognizance of the factual reality that the Source is intelligence. If you think the Source is mere law, dead law, or matter, you will become a terrorist. The truth is, the Source is intelligence; there is no injustice on Planet Earth or anywhere in the Cosmos. Now, it should be analyzed for the sake of truth alone, not for any other reason.

Analyse with all the logical doubts you have, because the logical doubts you have are responsible for preventing the awakening of the non-mechanical parts of your brain. So, there is no Sadhana for the participants of the Brahma Sūtrā, but Vādaprativāda (debate) should be done. Two teams should be created: one representing Śaṅkara and the other Vyāsa. It is not necessary that the two teams have equal numbers, but both teams should be honest in their pursuit of truth.

It is not necessary that you come to the same conclusion that the Master provides. At the end of the debate, stop at the level you are able to reach. The condition should be that your body heat should not increase. If your body heat increases, it means your debate is not based on truth but on violence, and therefore you are not progressing toward Enlightenment. These few points will truly help you.

When the cognizance of factual reality does not arise in you, the non-mechanical parts of the brain remain closed, even if you engage in any kind of practice, because the place from which you begin is wrong.

Understand this: if you start travelling towards Bangalore in the opposite direction, you will never reach Bangalore. Similarly, if you start going towards Brahmaṇ while thinking you are mere matter, all your efforts will be wasted, and you will never reach Brahman.

Honesty cannot be acquired by practice; it can be acquired only by understanding. Any number of years you play with any toys, any techniques, any Kriya - unless the understanding is happening, Enlightening is impossible, the eN-Effect is impossible. So the truth should be analysed, debated, imbibed, incorporated just for the sake of truth.

Create two groups: Shankara and Vyāsa. The first, basic guideline is, body temperature should not increase during the debate. Anger, violence, logically trying to rape others should not happen during the debate. Third, you will talk only about things which you are able to understand logically. You will convince others about the facts only which you are convinced as a strategy for your day-to-day life.

For example, if you convince others that Source is intelligence, you should be convinced about it and you should not have stored or retained violence in the corner of your space about some relationship you are having in your life. If you have stored violence in your inner space about some relationship, you are not truly believing Source is intelligence.

If you feel the Source is brutal power, if you believe the rule is “survival of the fittest” or “might is right,” and you are functioning only according to that law, then don’t try to convince others, as you stand for that law. Stand for the law with which your own cognition aligns. Cognizance of the factual reality arises in you because you do not need to reach the conclusion that the Master provides, though you must dig for the truth. You see, if you are honest and integrated in your approach to truth, then you can grasp the cognizant fact - the cognizant factual reality. The factual reality you are able to take cognizance of, if you are honest about it, will help you - through your honesty and integrity - to click with the next Sūtrā. However, if you patch over, overlook, or compromise on your cognizance, and take the factual reality only because the Master says Source is intelligence, that is good for faith, but not for Enlightenment.

The Brahma Sūtrās have nothing to do with faith. Similarly, you do not need to have violent disbelief. No - debate consciously, because when you debate consciously, every logic that prevents the non-mechanical parts of your brain from functioning gets broken. Then, the non-mechanical parts of the brain begin to work and function.

Here, Bādarāyaṇa, the Mahāpuruṣa Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa, starts the debate in this 6th Sūtrā. He presents an argument: the Source is intelligence. Just because seeing and thinking are secondary actions, do not assume the Source is matter. Secondary actions can happen only on the predominant, primordial, conscious, independent, intelligent presence. The presence of matter cannot be Pradhāna, the origin, or the alchemical agent for seeing, thinking, or cognizance to occur.

Cognition cannot occur in the presence of matter. Then the next point arises: alright, we agree that cognition happens. Cognizance is taken in the presence of consciousness, but how do we know that consciousness is an independent intelligence and that it embodies compassion and equal justice? How can we know that it is not unjust? Hold this question, or engage in this debate - there is nothing wrong with it.

Shankara, Bādarayana comes next. In next Sūtrās, He comes up with these arguments. We are seeing the essence of Bādarayana Sūtrā, Shankara's Bhāshya, Rāmānuja's Bhāshya, Sureshwarāchārya's Vārtika, Atmānanda Saraswati's Tikā and Bāmati's Bhāshya. This is the essence from almost 50 different commentaries of Brahma Sutrā and of course finally burning the whole thing with the inner experience of the THE SPH BHAGAVĀN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM and giving you the Vibhuti Prasāda of that!

So now, a further argument begins. We can understand that cognition cannot occur, and cognizance cannot be taken, without the presence of consciousness. Pradhāna cannot be matter, and the Source cannot be matter. We accept this, but how do we know that the Source is intelligent, compassionate, just, and does not commit injustice? How can we know these truths?

You can initiate the argument. The analysis and understanding of these doubts are continued by Bādarāyaṇa in the next Sūtrās. But first, let us analyze and conduct a complete debate on this Sūtrā.

Very beautifully, Ramana Maharshi sings, "Ulladhu Alladhu ulla porul ulladhal ullathe." It is 40 verses on reality by Bhagavān Ramana Maharshi. He starts with a beautiful introduction: because you exist, you can think about existence and non-existence. Because you have the capacity to think about existence and non-existence, you exist. Only the consciousness has a capacity to think or take cognizance on matter.

Matter cannot take cognizance of the presence or qualities of consciousness, but consciousness can take cognizance of the qualities of matter. Because you can perceive the presence, practicalities, factualities, qualities, and realities of matter, it proves that you are consciousness.

The non-mechanical parts of the brain should be stirred and awakened by this truth repeatedly, so that not a single logic that clings to your ignorance remains alive in your mind. Any logic that is not convinced by the power of truth expressed by the ṛṣi should be destroyed through debate with the disciples.

When a ṛṣi repeats the Sūtrā, just by the power of the sound, one part of your non-mechanical brain awakens, whereas another part argues and finally awakens after he finishes his argument. The third part remains unawakened, and that should be awakened through Vādaprativāda - debate among the disciples. The fourth part will awaken only when you begin teaching.

So, if you are interested in experiencing the complete Enlightening Nithyananda Effect (eN-Effect) of the Brahma Sūtrā, you must do all four steps.

First, listen to the truth and the arguments about the truth from the Master. Nothing is required of you for these first two parts, as the Master guides them.Third, the debate - this you must do. It is not homework, understand. It is the work of those who are dedicated and wholehearted. Debate the truth to the level that your cognizance accepts as factual reality. After the debate, whatever conclusion you reach, go out and teach at least five people. When you teach, your understanding deepens suddenly. The fallacies in your logic are revealed when you teach.

For example, suppose you have a hundred reasons for saying, "You are matter; the Source is matter; it is not consciousness." When the Master utters the truth, 25% of that logic will dissolve. When the Master presents the arguments supporting the truth, another 25% of the logic will dissolve. When you engage in debate, 25% more will dissolve. Finally, when you go out and inspire five people, the last 25% will dissolve. Only when you complete all four steps will the fallacy of your logic be fully realized by you.

Understand, only when you go out and begin teaching will you suddenly realize that some parts of your brain, which were not fully imbibing this truth, are now imbibing it. You will think, "Yes! I had this doubt, and only while teaching someone else was that doubt cleared. Yes, that logic was wrong, which is why I was stuck. Now I understand."

Now, you have received 50% of the truth: that your Source is intelligence and consciousness. You have been given the truth and logical arguments, so half the work is done.

Next, begin the second part of the work: form the Vyāsa and Śaṅkara batches and engage in debate. Then, go out and teach this truth to at least five people. The Source is consciousness; it is not dead law or dead matter. Teach based on the logic you have understood.

When you do the debate, you will get many arguments and logic. Go out and teach and even if you fail, don't worry, come back. Failing is not wrong, but not trying is something seriously wrong.

Things you are stuck with are just happenings. A high achiever is a person who is not bothered by any happening and remains centered in life.Enthusiasm means not being bothered by happenings but being centered in excitement. Being bothered by happenings is Rajas. Being unbothered by happenings but centered in dullness is Tamas. Not being bothered by happenings but centered in enthusiasm is Sattva. Any happening lowers you to its frequency when you place awareness on it.

If you are bothered by happenings in the field of business - whose share value has gone up, whose name is appearing in Fortune Magazine or Forbes Magazine - whether it is success or failure, you will be stuck in the frequency of business. A person who looks beyond these happenings will be the true achiever. In fact, if you observe achievers even in that field, they are not bothered by the happenings; they simply look beyond them. An achiever's life is an intense flow of happenings, yet he remains unbothered, while others are constantly affected by them.

A man who creates history will not be bothered about his history because he lived it. His very frequency will not be bothering about those happenings. Achiever is a man who is not bothered about happenings but established in enthusiasm.

When you are not bothered about happenings and established on the factual reality that Source is intelligence and all your cognizance are taken based on the factual reality that Source is intelligence, you are a high achiever. You are Īśvara. You are a leader. Leadership is nothing but not being bothered about the happenings, but being centered on the high enthusiasm. The Source is high enthusiasm, intelligence, consciousness, excitement, bliss, Śuddha Svayaṁprakāśa, Jyoti Ātma, Chaitanya, Nirlipta, Nirālamba, Nirāmaya, Nirvikalpa, Nirañjana, Niśchala, Nijānanda, Tattvabodha, Sukha, Sākāra, Ananta Kalyāṇa Guṇa, Śānta Sarvasvarūpa, Sahajānanda Māyā.

The experience of the Source within the very Source is an intense excitement, untouched by happenings. A villager who is overly concerned with the happenings in his village will never rise to the level of a town. A man living in a town who is too concerned with the happenings there will never elevate himself to the level of a city. A man who is preoccupied with the happenings in his city will never rise to the level of a cosmopolitan city. A person too concerned with the happenings in a cosmopolitan city will never elevate himself to a capital. Conversely, a person who has risen to a capital will not be bothered by the happenings in the village. Not being bothered by happenings, while remaining centered in high enthusiasm, is what it means to be a leader.

Realizing that the Source is intelligence makes you a leader. It removes the unnecessary concerns you have about mediocre happenings. Seekers are often interested in the Yoga Sūtrās because they promise knowledge of how to predict your death. But here, Vyāsa is not concerned with your death; he says, you are not truly living. When you are going to die, who cares! He simply says, "Realize you have no death, no life, or at least die quickly." Vyāsa is not concerned with predicting your death. That is why people are less interested in the Brahma Sūtrās. It is meant more for the trendsetters.

The Brahma Sūtrās is a book to create leaders. It is for leaders, not followers. Aphorisms on existence are for those who are going to create the history of existence.

If you look at 3,000 years of recorded human history, you will see that the history of humanity was shaped by a handful of people - Jesus, Buddha, Hitler. Good or bad, a few leaders created the course of 3,000 years of history. History is not made by followers, but by leaders. Good or bad, they are leaders. Anyone who grasps the truth of the Brahma Sūtrās will become a great leader. If you miss it, you become a poor leader. The Brahma Sūtrās is for good leaders, for great leaders, not for the common man. A common man neither accepts nor denies the Brahma Sūtrās; he simply ignores it and does not even examine it. A good leader accepts and realizes the Brahma Sūtrās. A bad leader examines it and rejects it, but he still looks at it before rejecting.

No leadership seminar can be truly successful until it makes you understand that the Source is intelligence; until it gives you the cognizance of the factual reality that the Source is intelligence. Source is intelligence. Do not bother about happenings. Be centered in intense excitement. Unless these three truths become factual realities within your cognizing mechanism, leadership qualities cannot arise in you as an intrinsic quality. They may be added superficially as a quantity, like makeup - temporary, like a fairness cream, but never permanent, like a tan. Source is intelligence; start the debate on this truth.

tanniṣṭhasya mokṣopadeśāt 1.1.7

Origin is Always Liberated

The translation by Gambhirananda says, “Pradhāna is not the meaning of the word “Self,” because Liberation is promised for one who holds on to That.”

Swami Vireswarananda translates as, “The Pradhāna, that Pradhāna cannot be designated by the word “Self,” as it is established because Liberation is declared to one who is devoted to that Sat.”

Khaṇḍana maṇḍana means breaking ignorant, narrow logic through understanding and adding the Amṛta that arises in your brain when you achieve complete understanding. When the cognition of factual reality occurs in you, the Amṛta Nāḍi flows. Amṛta - the ecstasy and joy - flows like a liquid inside your brain, awakening the non-mechanical parts of the brain. Logic functions like a tube in your brain. If it shrinks to narrower and narrower understandings, it begins experiencing depression. But if it expands to broader and broadest understanding, the Amṛta, or nectar, flows from the brain, leading to Enlightenment.

When you hear certain truths, for a moment you may feel, “Wow, that is true.” Your ignorance and narrow logic give way, and the logic tube in your brain expands through the Amṛta Bindu. The nectar drops flow through that logic tube. If more and more Amṛta Bindu - nectar drops - flow through the logic tube, it becomes permanently opened and established in Enlightenment. All your cognition occurs in factual reality, based on existence. That is the Enlightening Nithyananda Effect — eN-Effect.

If you are experiencing levitation or Kundalini awakening, the Yoga Sūtrās are excellent for you. But if, for some reason, physical levitation is not happening, do not worry at all. The Brahma Sūtrās are for you. The Brahma Sūtrās are a blessing given to all human beings, because all human beings are basically logical. Only rarely are a few beings emotion-centered, heart-centered, or being-centered.

Basically, humans by nature are logically centered, because upbringing tends to make them so. The Brahma Sūtrās are for people who are logically centered. They are intended for the masses, but unfortunately, this was never communicated to the world. The only requirement is that you need to spend a little time to grasp it.

Unfortunately, the intellectual community did not recognize the greatness of the Brahma Sūtrās internationally. Perhaps this is because of the religious connotation attached to them. There are thousands of interpretations, many of which completely contradict each other. A logical mind always seeks a clear set of irrefutable, non-misrepresented aphorisms or formulas, but the greatness of the Brahma Sūtrās is that anyone can interpret - or misinterpret - them as they wish.

If logic is a pure diamond, the Brahma Sūtrās are a jewel made entirely from a diamond stone, without adding any metal. It is not a jewel studded with diamonds; it is crafted from a single diamond stone. It is a huge diamond stone that has been drilled, carved, and shaped into a jewel. That is an apt description of the Brahma Sūtrās. This Sūtrā is established on twelve logics. Now, you need to see how this single Sūtrā is to be understood through the twelve-logics framework.

Pradhāna is not the meaning of the word "Self," because Liberation is promised only to the one who holds on to the Self. In the earlier Sūtrās, an argument was presented: the Source, Pradhāna, or origin, is not made of matter. But in the Vādaprativāda, the opponents ask, "Why? Why should it not be made of matter? Why is Pradhāna not the Self?" The reason is that Pradhāna itself is eternally liberated; it does not attain liberation. Liberation is for the Self, which is the identity that is trying to cling to Pradhāna.

Understand, this whole process is a psychodrama. If you feel you are poor, you will perceive the rich man as greater than you. If you feel powerless, you will perceive the powerful man as greater than you.So, when you become rich, who is liberated from poverty? The identity that felt poor is liberated from poverty.When you become powerful, the identity that felt powerless is liberated from powerlessness. Similarly, if you feel ignorant, during Enlightenment, the identity that felt ignorant is liberated from ignorance.But Pradhāna itself is neither bound nor liberated. That is why, when you are enlightened, you do not feel that something new has happened in you.

When you turn twenty-five, suddenly one day you may see all the toys you played with as a child and think, "Oh God, these toys meant so much to me at that young age. They were almost my whole life, but now they neither bind me nor liberate me. Do you think that, at age twenty-five, toys can grant you liberation? You are beyond the liberation offered by toys." Similarly, when you experience Enlightenment, you realize: "I am beyond the liberation granted by ignorance." f you had mud toys in your childhood - toys for which you were even willing to fight, give up anything else, or go to extremes - at the age of twenty-five, do you look at those toys and plead: "No, no, no, I was bound by you once; please grant me liberation. I don't want to be caught by you again. I'm afraid I may get interested in you in three or four years. Please liberate me. I should go sit and listen to some Sūtrā, a 'Toy Brahma Sūtrā,' that teaches me how to disconnect from toys, so I neither remember, see, nor hear about them, or move them away from the country I live in"? No!

Even if the toy suddenly comes alive and says, "Oh my child, don't worry; I will give you liberation. You are liberated from me," what will you say? "Eh, get lost! Who cares about the liberation you offer!"Suddenly, you realize that you have grown beyond it. When you grow out of something, you do not experience hatred.Do you hate those toys? Do you think, "How dare these toys bind me once upon a time! I'll break all of them!" No - unless you are psychologically disturbed, you will not break them, nor feel the need to destroy them. You are simply beyond the liberation offered by the toys. Now, they cannot even claim, "I liberate you."

A beautiful story by Bhagavān Śrī Rāmakṛṣṇa:In West Bengal, there used to be a very famous village festival called the Puffed Rice Festival, where devotees would buy puffed rice and offer it to the deity. One man was selling puffed rice to merchants, and even when the Deity was carried in a procession in front of him, he would not offer even a handful to the Deity. He was extremely miserly. One day, a strong breeze blew, scattering all the puffed rice into the air, sending it flying everywhere. Then, suddenly, the man felt great devotion and exclaimed:"Nārāyaṇa paramastu, Nārāyaṇa paramastu, Nārāyaṇa paramastu! Let all of this be offered to Nārāyaṇa!"At that moment, he realized he could not hold back his offering. But who truly needs his offering? Nārāyaṇa is standing somewhere, laughing and watching.

Similarly, when toys offer you liberation, you will simply be standing and laughing somewhere. The liberation offered by toys is of no use to you. That is the moment you are truly liberated from toys.That is being Māyātītā. Māyātītā means that even if Māyā appears before you and says, "I will liberate you," you will simply respond: "Who are you? Ah, relax. Go and take care of job."

So, Enlightenment is not for your original existence. It is for the identity in you which feels it is bound. See, a man who is working for wealth, feels consciously poverty is the first important problem in his life as he does not feel the necessity for Enlightenment. He does not suffer so much with his ignorance because he is suffering with his poverty. His whole inner space is occupied by poverty. So for him, the rich man is a liberated man; he is God. That is why, he worships the rich man, runs behind the rich man and tries to become like him but always underground, there is a strong jealousy and vengeance towards the rich man.

Similarly, with an intelligent man: when an ignorant person sees the intelligent man, he worships him. He feels, "I should become like that intelligent man," and chases after him, literally ready to do anything to attain intelligence. In the same way, a powerless person sees the powerful, those who can accomplish anything, and he runs after them.

It is a very important truth to know which parts of you feel that you are lacking something. Does a part of you feel poverty? Does some part of you feel powerless? Does some part of you feel ignorant? Does some part of you feel the emptiness of not having Enlightenment? Dig deep and find out. Actually, liberation means that not only do all these things no longer touch you, but even liberation from all these things no longer matters to you.

Aṣṭāvakra very beautifully says, "Who is? Who is liberated?" There is also a beautiful Zen koan: One man goes to the Master and asks, "When can I become enlightened?" Zen Masters are known for their sudden, strong reactions, and the Master just slaps the man, leaving him completely shaken. It's like going to a Master and asking, "When can I get enlightened?", and receiving a sudden slap. You cannot expect this from an ordinary teacher. Zen Masters are supposed to be such beautiful people, rich in vitality and presence.

Tibetan Buddhism is more systematic, but Zen is vibrant, rich in vitality, and its people are joyful. Zen people have a certain "Ah!"- a sound and presence that belongs only to Zen, to no one else. Even in the Brahma Sūtrā, you will never find that "Ah!". It is all methodical and straight, like cookie-cutting. But Zen people carry that undercurrent of "Ah!" in everything they do. In Zen, whether it is their gardens, books, teaching methods, or techniques, in anything, you will find that underlying tone of "Ah!". That is one of the great qualities of Zen.

So, the disciple is shaken, thinking, "O! What is this?" And when a Zen Master slaps, they really slap - it's not a pseudo slap. Fortunately, they are in a country where you can't sue them, because they are very strong and well-built people.

When you carry that "Ah!" in your mood and lifestyle, you will never suffer from arthritis or osteoporosis, as your bones become strong. That "Ah!" gives you tremendous strength, and nothing can touch you. That is why Zen and martial arts are so deeply connected.

Their core never gets affected by any depression. The core is established in "Ah!"

After being slapped, the disciple is shaken, staring and looking into the eyes of the Master, and cannot even ask, "Why did you slap me?"

With a Zen Master, that is another big challenge. You cannot question them, and you cannot say, "Eh, why did you slap me?" No - he might slap you once more or even beat you with a stick!

Not even slapping is considered enough - at least slapping is mild, but he will beat you with a stick! The disciple is left staring, completely silent.

In the disciple's eyes, the unspoken question arises:

"Why did you beat me? Can you use a few words to explain, so that I can understand and develop myself?"

The Master himself says, "If a horse comes and asks me, 'How can I become a horse? What should I do?' I have to beat it, to show that it is already a horse."

You cannot even question, "Can't this be done in a loving way?"

Materialistic people give liberation to those who feel poverty in their consciousness. Powerful people give liberation to those who feel powerless in their consciousness.

So, each darśana, each way of life, each philosophy, liberates a specific group of people.

The Brahma Sūtrā takes you beyond all those limited liberations. Understand this: the Brahma Sūtrā takes you beyond all such liberations.

tanniṣṭhasya mokṣopadeśāt ||

The origin is not your identity. The origin is always liberated. Only your identity needs liberation now.

How can the identity be liberated? Now, understand the twelve logical trends. You need to do that homeless work.

Homework means work you do while sitting at home. Homeless work means work you do not by going home, but by not being bound to home.

Very beautifully Ramana Maharshi sings in a song called Upadesa Undiyar:

கன்மம் பயன்றரல் கர்த்தன தாணையாற்

வுந்தீபற கன்மங் கடவுளோ வுந்தீபற

kaṉmam payaṉḏraral karttaṉa dāṇaiyāl

vundīpaṟa kaṉmaṅ kaḍavuḷō vundīpaṟa

The actions give results because the ultimate Source orders it. The actions by themselves cannot bring results because they are not independent intelligence.

Actions give results because the ultimate Source orders them. The actions by themselves cannot bring results, because they are not independent intelligence.Imagine signing a cheque to receive your own money from the bank. The bank manager, as the decision-making authority, has to approve it.Similarly, even if you send the karma cheque to God, the decision-making authority must approve it, and usually, it does. But that does not mean that simply sending the cheque guarantees the result. It is not automatic or eternal - the cheque you send may bounce, get lost, or be delayed if the bank is closed. Usually, we assume the identity of Master is eternally reliable, but that is a mistake.

Today's logic trend is meant to focus on this: Who is getting liberated? Who is bound?What ignorance and bondage do you feel, and how is liberation experienced? How do ignorance and bondage experience liberation and Enlightenment? Who feels ignorance? Who feels enlightened? Who feels bound? Who feels liberated? It is the dust in one corner of your body that feels bondage and liberation. But you are neither feeling bondage nor feeling liberation.

Somebody goes and asks a Zen Master, "How can I be liberated?" The Master looks within and says, "Who has bound you?"It is the psychodrama you create that is bondage. When suffering arises in you, and when the feelings of bondage and ignorance emerge, if you can simply destroy them by asking, "Ah! What is going on? What is this? Is this true?" and move beyond them, then you do not need any methods, techniques, or technology for liberation or Enlightenment.

Now drill into this:

"Who is feeling bound? What is bondage?"

Define bondage as per your understanding. Define liberation as per your understanding.

Analyze bondage and liberation in all dimensions - in the wealth line, health line, power line, relationships, and in the experience of not having love; in any area where you feel deficiency or feel bound. Define bondage and liberation in each of these dimensions.

When you no longer even care about the liberation offered by the dust on you, you are truly liberated.

Parivrājaka (the practice of wandering renunciation) helps you understand this, because when you practice parivrājaka in different situations, with different people, and in every circumstance, you should do it with high awareness, not with a beggar consciousness.

Parivrājaka with awareness brings a powerful transformation, where the concepts of bondage and liberation no longer hold any utility for you.

Any utility you derive from the concepts of bondage or liberation is no longer useful to you.

All feelings of bondage have a utility: feeling poverty motivates you to become rich - it constantly prods you, so you plan, act, and eventually become rich, sometimes getting into a bigger mess.

Feeling powerless has a utility so that you strive to become powerful. Feeling ignorant has a utility so that you work toward Enlightenment.

Ultimately, the feelings of ignorance and Enlightenment should lose their utility value for you.

Sometimes, you try to feel enlightened so that you can influence and inspire people and enjoy the by-products of Enlightenment.

It doesn't work, because the by-products of Enlightenment are always secondary; they can never be the main product, and they can never be induced or infused. They can only arise naturally - by enthusing. By your presence, some enthusiasm may occur in others, and in that, the by-products of Enlightenment happen naturally.

They cannot be induced, infused, or intended. They can only be enthused. If, by your presence, you create enthusiasm in people and something happens, it is a by-product that does not bind you.

So today, the vāda-prativāda (debate and counter-debate) should focus on:

Who is bound? Who is liberated? Where is bondage? And where is liberation?

Śaṅkara Bhāṣya very beautifully describes that the person who feels bound can never be liberated. The only way is that the identity which feels bound should be destroyed or outgrown. It should disappear. The disappearance of the part of the identity that feels bound is liberation. The disappearance of the part of you that feels poverty is richness. The disappearance of the part that feels powerless is power. The disappearance of the part that feels ignorant is Enlightenment. Otherwise, there is no true power, richness, or Enlightenment for your Pradhāna or for you as you truly are.

Pūrva Mīmāṃsā darśana is all about power: "I am powerless; let me do the rituals and gain power." Uttara Mīmāṃsā is all about Enlightenment: "I am ignorant; I don't have Enlightenment. I need to practice, acquire knowledge, and become enlightened." Nyāya and Vaiśeṣika focus on intelligence: "I lack enough logic to express my beliefs, faith, way of life, and understanding to others. I need to learn methods to influence others and become intelligent." Sāṅkhya and Yoga focus on the different mystical powers you feel you don't have, which can be grasped and attained through saṃyama. Thus, through the different darśanas, you can understand the nature of bondage and liberation.

Ultimately, according to the darśanā of THE SPH BHAGAVAN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM, and based on the grand leela of His life, though THE SPH descended as the complete Avatar, there came a moment in His Diviine life when He demonstrated to the world that any bondage created, and any liberation granted, can only be created or granted by this Universe. Both became useless in His life. This is Mokṣa, the Ultimate, the Nithyananda state.

The satya, the sacred secret in this aphorism of existence is: Who feels bound? Who feels liberated? Look within: which part of you feels bound in all ways, and in which fields have you experienced bondage and liberation? How do you feel bound now? How do you feel liberation should be? Dig deep, start the vāda-prativāda, and you will receive the prasāda.

heyatvāvacanācca 1.1.8

Source and Origin cannot be Spoken

Just 2 words. This is the greatness of these Masters.

Swami Gambhirananda translates as, “Pradhāna has not been spoken of even indirectly because there is no subsequent mention of its rejection; because that militates against the assertion of at the beginning.”

Swami Vireswarananda translates as “And because it is not stated by the scriptures that it has to be abandoned, Pradhāna cannot be denoted by the word “Sat.”

If you try to study Brahma Sūtras by yourself, there are only three options. One, you may just stop reading because of the sheer tiredness it brings to your physical body. Anybody who tries to study Brahma Sūtras ends up developing a physical disease because your head will drain the whole energy, and even after that, you will not be able to grasp it. The second possibility is that you will fall into depression, because when the head drains the energy completely, the only next step the head knows is depression. Understand, any step you take based on the head, the only step the head knows is depression - nothing else. The third truth is that there is every possibility you may go mad.

It’s the most difficult Śāstra. There are thousands of ways this Sūtra can be translated, and thousands of ways it can be interpreted. But if you want to exist, you need to know the formulas for Existence - the aphorisms on Existence. In some way, when children start growing, we should teach them these aphorisms on Existence, saying, “Eh, your Source is consciousness. The whole thing is based on the flow of compassion, and the deep unconscious, the deep engrams and sufferings in you, are created because currency is not practical, factual, or real in life.”

One of the worst things that can happen to human beings is to think that wealth alone is the practical part of life. Whether it is relationships, wealth, infrastructure, or power - these are not the only practical parts of life. The true practical part of life itself is the aphorisms on Existence: the Brahma Sūtras. They are a basic need - just to exist, nothing else. If these aphorisms on Existence are imbibed as the basic decision-making mechanism in your system, the highest breakthrough in human consciousness can happen. Life can then radiate itself in its peak possible form on planet Earth.

I’ll repeat the Sūtrā: heyatvāvacanācca ||

Pradhāna has not been spoken of even indirectly because there is no subsequent mention of its rejection; because that militates against the assertion at the beginning.

About the Source or consciousness - the Pradhāna, the Self - even in the beginning, there is no mention of them. This is because bondage and liberation are both tied to the identity you carry, not to the Pradhāna. Bādarāyana, Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa, is very clear in these Sūtras: we need to talk only about what we actually have - the individual identity we carry. There is no way that talking about the Self will help. All discussions about the Self, consciousness, intelligence, or compassion only misguide you.

That is why Buddha completely stops talking about Self, and He goes on creating a new term called Shūnya. Talking about the Self is only understood by the identity you carry which anyway, cannot give any proper complete view about any subject.

if you do the Vādaprativāda on this Sūtra, it means the debate will address almost all the problems your mind - and indeed all human minds - face regarding the ultimate state of consciousness, religion, and spirituality. The Vādaprativāda is a very juicy way of internalizing these great truths.

Yoga Sūtras need not necessarily be intellectually heavy because they are just a manual. Yoga Sūtras are a technique manual for you to read, practice, and get enlightened. They need to be written in a very simple, clear, manual-style language because the purpose is for you to practice. It is like an owner's manual for a particular car or a computer. The manual does not need to explain the whole mechanism by which the car functions; it simply tells you which buttons to operate and what to do to use the machinery completely.

Similarly, you have certain powers in your body, mind, and consciousness. You need a manual. Yoga Sūtras are like an owner's manual for body and mind. Śiva Sūtras are more like an owner's manual for enlightenment and consciousness -they guide your own enlightenment and how to radiate it. Bhagavad Gītā is more like an owner's manual for a successful social leader. Brahma Sūtras, however, are not just an owner's manual; they are the pure science, the basic technology, the fundamental understanding - the aphorisms on Existence.

All talk about the Self is useless. All talks about intelligence are useless. They only lead to more and more disturbance, disruption, misunderstanding, manipulation, morphing, and misrepresentation. This is because bondage and liberation are both experienced by the identity you carry, not by the Pradhāna or the original Source. There is no mention of Pradhāna in these Sūtras.

You can never experience a breakthrough with the same old identity. For example, a follower-type or slave-type personality can never experience leadership consciousness with the same identity he is carrying. When the identity has no possibility for a strong breakthrough, a quantum leap does not happen.

Similarly, unless you decide to be a high achiever, Existence is not for you. Please understand: aphorisms on Existence are not for you if you are not interested in being a high achiever. This book is only for high achievers. Aphorisms on Existence are only for high achievers, where a complete transformation is required - one that challenges your very Existence.

Brahma Sūtras says, "Pradhāna, Source, and origin cannot be spoken. Any speaking you do, any understanding you try to achieve, any word you try to bring in, any concept you try to adopt, any belief you try to establish only creates more lines and layers of dust on the possibility of experiencing Pradhāna." That is why in the Brahmavidyā Sampradāya, we don't have Enlightenment as a concept. We make you Enlightened, but we don't have a conceptual definition of Enlightenment. We emphasize a cognitive shift.

The identity which feels ignorance should stop taking decisions based on its ignorance or on the feeling that it is intelligence. The factual reality becomes the base for taking cognizance of any idea, understanding, or decision. It is almost like pure Existence, in its purest form, becomes the basic ground on which you stand.

Brahma Sūtras should be heard and debated before the age of 42. After 42, certain parts of the brain, due to being unused for a long time, can never be retrieved or used. These are like hard disks that have not worked and can never be retrieved. Sometimes, if the hard disk is repaired, there is a possibility you can retrieve it. If it has not been functioning for a long time and you did not bother to awaken it, then it can never be retrieved. If you send it to the forensic laboratory - meaning the Master's monastery - there is a possibility that he may be able to retrieve it and make it active.

Buddha goes on saying, "Pradhāna, origin is Śūnya - nothingness, no thoughts." Buddha's concept of nothingness stops the whole confusion that can be created by the jugglery of words about the Self and Pradhāna. See, small subjects which do not significantly impact your life can create confusion, and you can afford to get confused in those areas. But major truths like Self, Pradhāna, and origin cannot be confused. It must be a clear, authentic drilling without leaving any room for confusion, contradiction, commotion, or chaos. That is why Buddha took the great step of not speaking about Pradhāna or the origin of God. This is one of the main reasons why Buddha was able to make thousands enlightened.

Bādarāyana, Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa, is very clear: any discussion about Pradhāna can only be destructive. Then what is the use of talking? Talking is constantly removing the identity with which you are working - the identity that feels bondage and feels liberation.

If you don't create concepts and ideas about Existence and origin, it is easier for you to take the jump into the experience when it happens. When you hold onto certain concepts about Existence, you miss it when it appears in front of you. For example, if you have a strong concept about Kṛṣṇa, and He appears in front of you, you might miss Him. If you have a strong concept about Jesus, and He appears, you could miss Him too. How do you know Jesus had a long beard and Kṛṣṇa was clean-shaven? But you cling to this image. There is every possibility that Kṛṣṇa could have had at least a short beard—just to experience, who knows! He was vibrant and colorful; maybe for a few months, He tried a French beard, or some other style. Similarly, there is a possibility that Jesus could have been clean-shaven at times - who knows? But when you carry rigid ideas, you miss the actual existence because of your concept of it.

In the same way, when you carry too many ideas about the Brahmaṇ or Existence, you miss the experience of Existence when it hits your base of cognizance.

You see, basically, one line of your logic, for some reason, suddenly strongly believes that you are in bondage, that you are not worthy of life, that you are not worthy of anything great, that you are not even worthy of yourself. This logic then interferes in all aspects of your life - health, wealth, relationships, satisfaction, fulfillment, fear, greed, pleasure, and pain—in all dimensions and aspects. This logic jumps in and turns your life into hell.

Again and again, the basis on which you take cognizance - the very basis on which this logic keeps reminding you that you are unfulfilled - is shaken. This is an imperfect logic because it keeps repeating that you are imperfect. The Brahma Sūtrā removes that very sand, the ground on which this logic is rooted, so that the logic which insists on imperfection takes a different cognizance; it stops taking cognizance based on imperfection or the idea of imperfection.

The first thing you need to know is that there is no Enlightenment for you, so you do not need to worry or work for it. All the ideas you carry are psychodrama. For example, only when you look at an idol as higher than yourself does it appear as a deity. If you look at the idol as a statue, it is just a stone. It is your own psychodrama that adds sacredness to the idol and makes it a deity. It is just a kind of training.

Understand, looking at anything as unholy is very easy, but looking at anything as alive or sacred is the most difficult task. Experiencing anything without sacredness is easy. To throw a stone or a slipper at something is not difficult. But to offer flowers to something with deep, overflowing love and gratitude requires evolution. It is not a joke to melt a person's consciousness and raise them to a level where they can see sacredness in a stone, a statue, or a living person. Seeing sacredness in a stone or statue is slightly difficult; seeing it in a living person is the most difficult.

The psychodrama of attributing sacredness to a deity or an idol is used to shake your logic, which constantly reminds you that you are imperfect. If you experience sacredness in any one thing, immediately that sacredness strikes the very root of the imperfect logic. That is why we say: brahmavid brahmaiva bhavati (Mundaka Upanishad 3.2.9).

By knowing Brahmaṇ, you become Brahmaṇ. By having a sacred experience with a deity or Guru, you experience that very sacredness at the root where the psychodrama begins in your life. The Sanskrit word "Māyā" can be equated to this psychodrama.

Everything in your life is a psychodrama. You feeling the Master as Guru, feeling yourself as a man, feeling yourself as a disciple, feeling your neighbor as spiritually grown or less, all of these are psychodramas. For example: all wives feel their husbands are spiritually less, and all husbands feel their wives are spiritually richer. Every husband has a problem: "My wife is spiritually advanced; I am not up to her level." Every wife feels: "My husband is not spiritual enough; he's a headache for me."

You should recognize this as a psychodrama, and understand that this is an important factual reality. If you start taking cognizance of this factual reality, it will help you immensely.

If you think the Master is spiritually more advanced than you, it is a lie - it is a psychodrama. The Master is equal to you in spirituality. You may ask, then, why the Master sits on the highest pedestal. This is because the Master needs to be seen by you in order to convey the teaching. If He sits on the ground, at the same level, you may not be able to perceive Him properly. So, just for the sake of utility, the Master sits on the stage.

Your looking at the Master with love, gratitude, or respect is merely the psychodrama that shakes your imperfect logic, the logic that constantly tells you that you are imperfect. When you see sacredness in something, a jolt happens at the root of the logic that otherwise disgraces everything, including yourself. This is one of the important aphorisms in reality.

There is no fundamental difference between love and lust.

Remove the thorn with a needle. If you project sacredness onto a deity, it is like removing a thorn with another thorn. If you project sacredness onto your Guru, a living person, it is like removing the thorn with a needle—it won't get stuck. This is a psychodrama - a psychodrama where you learn the habit of perceiving things sacredly, so that you can experience that sacredness at the root, in the Source where cognizance occurs in your life about everything. The Source where cognizance happens in you about everything is Hiraṇyagarbha. That is the Source of Existence.

In existence, in factual reality, Rama, Kṛṣṇa, Śaṅkara, Buddha, Ramakrishna, Ramana, you, and me - none of us have any fundamental difference. The possibility of a fundamental difference cannot even be conceived. It is the identity you carry that creates a psychodrama, through which you feel bondage, and through whose disappearance you feel liberation. So, at the end of the show, it is as if you are liberated from created suffering.

Some meditation programs and educational programs create suffering for you and then liberate you from it, and people willingly pay for it. They manufacture suffering that is not naturally present, and then make people feel liberated from that suffering. Because that is what you are doing for yourself, and you are happy with that game, you feel your life is useful.

Courage is the quality that enables you to stand firm throughout the problems, low curves, and disturbances in your life, which may not have arisen if that quality were not present at the initial level. You feel your life is useful if you create and then resolve many problems along the way. If you relieve yourself of all those problems and say, "Wah, see what I have achieved in the last 70 years?" - what have you truly achieved? Nothing but creating some foolish problems and sorting them out. At the end of the day, neither the problem nor the solution is worthy.

You need to lose respect for all the problems you have faced. That is the essence, the sacred secret of this Sūtra. You need to lose respect for anything you consider as identity. Pradhāna cannot be understood as Existence; It is beyond anything you can comprehend as Existence. Anything that can be grasped by your logic is not Pradhāna. Pradhāna can never be fully understood by your logic.

So, all we are talking about is stopping the yellow journalist sitting inside you - the one who keeps writing disgracing articles about you, to you, and about others. He writes about you in a way that disgraces you, makes you believe it, and even sends the same "articles" to others through your own words. Then he writes about others to you, makes you believe them, and compels you to repeat the same ideas to others.

These are the four major activities of the amazing logic you carry in one corner of your brain: First, he writes disgracing articles about you and makes you believe them. Second, he makes those ideas come out of your mouth to others and makes them believe. Third, he writes about others' disgracing articles to you, making you believe them. Fourth, he makes you tell these same ideas to others, creating irritation, anger, and conflicts between you and them.

All we need to do is bring that logic into factual reality, meaning transform it. That is what we call in the Hindu tradition Kāma Dahana - the burning of Manmatha - which is performed on Mahāśivarātri. We burn Māyā, Manmatha, and delusion. It is a Hindu tradition and practice in all temples, usually on Mahāśivarātri, Panguni Uthiram, and Chitrā Pūrnima, where they burn this effigy of collective delusion.

So, the essence of this Sūtra is: discussion about Pradhāna is not only useless but dangerous, so avoid it. All discussions are supposed to be about the identity you are carrying, and all liberation is for the identity you are carrying.

The ability to see the sacredness of a deity or Guru is a psychodrama which helps shut the yellow journalist sitting inside you - the logic which keeps imposing imperfection on you, even though you are perfect. So today, have the eN-Debate on these three aspects: Only the identity you feel as bondage and liberation; not the original Source or Self you carry. The original Source or Self cannot be understood by words, so it is best not to talk about it. The ability to project sacredness onto a deity or Guru - this psychodrama helps remove the logic which says you are imperfect and disgraces you, even though you are perfect. It also helps you experience sacredness within yourself, putting an end to the yellow journalist inside you.

Make the whole internet sacred by using it for sacred sentiments and sacred secrets - Brahma Sūtrās. Let eN-Debates with Vādaprativāda happen everywhere.

Like in those days, they say, if you enter Varanasi, even the bulls, buffaloes, birds, and parrots living there could give answers to any Vedāntic question. Because so many pandits were sitting and arguing continuously, they knew everything about Vedānta thoroughly.

Shankara went to find Mandana Mishra's house. There were pedestrians on the road, and a traveler said, "Go to a village where the poor women, low-caste women, will be taking water from the common well. They will be talking about the highest Vedānta, the highest truths, and giving clarity to you. That is the village of Mandana Mishra. Ask anybody there about his house; they will show you."

Shankara went village by village, seeing many villagers discussing Vedānta, but not beyond a certain level.

In one village, he found women taking water from the well, engaged in debate, Vādaprativāda. They gave clarity and clicks even to Shankara. He thought, "Wow, this is the village of Mandana Mishra." He asked the women, "Can you tell me the house of Mandana Mishra, where is it?" They said, "Go straight. Outside one house, parrots will be sitting and discussing all the great truths and philosophies. That is Mandana Mishra's house."

Shankara went there. There was a great discussion on whether Uttara Mīmāṃsā is complete or Pūrva Mīmāṃsā is complete. Between two parrots, the Vādaprativāda was happening. Shankara was shocked - parrots sitting, discussing, and debating - and he thought, what then must be the knowledge of the person from whom these parrots learned! So today, continue the Vādaprativāda on these three sacred secrets.

Because of the merger of the individual into his own Self

Just one word.

Swami Gambhirananda translates this Sūtrā as, “Because of the merger of the individual into his own Self.”

Swami Vireswarananda translates as, “On account of individual Soul merging in his own Self, or the universal Self referred to as the Sat. In the deep sleep the Pradhāna cannot be denoted by the word “Self.”

The uniqueness of Bādarāyaṇa, Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa is through each Sūtrā, he creates a complete new thought trend. Unimaginable, incomprehensible, unimaginable and incomprehensible.

Svāpyayāt ||

Because of the merger of the individual into his own Self.

In the last Sūtrā we saw, he spoke about the different aspects and possibilities of ignorance. But in this Sūtrā he makes a complete turn: the identity you carry merges into ultimate Existence by its own Self - by itself; you cannot even speak about the individual identity. In the previous Sūtrā he said, “You cannot speak about the Self, Pradhāna, or Existence, because bondage and liberation concern only the dust - the small identity you carry.” Pradhāna neither experiences bondage nor liberation. Only the identity you carry - the dust - experiences bondage or liberation.

However, in this Sūtrā Bhagavān Veda Vyāsa moves us into a completely different space and goes one step further: “Even the individual identity cannot be defined because it merges on its own into Pradhāna.” Pradhāna means the origin, the principal subject - the Brahmaṇ, the Cosmic experience. That is what is meant by the word “Pradhāna.”

Here is a question: “Can you offer a clear definition for critical terms like Pradhāna?” Pradhāna can be rendered as Brahmaṇ, Existence, the Soul, or the Cosmic Self. Today Vyāsa goes one step further: “You cannot even speak about identity; you cannot form any conceptual understanding of it, because the identity merges into the Self on its own.” It merges into the Self by itself. He is leading us, step by step, into ever deeper silence.

Vyāsa is a very practical philosopher. Being practical and being philosophical, both have happened in Vyāsa. Vyāsa is a high achiever. The high achiever mentality always makes you highly practical. High achiever mentality is such that it makes you highly practical.

A philosophical mind which does not achieve is the most cunning and crooked mind. Impractical philosophers will always be losers in life. In fact, they will be worse losers because they have not touched reality; they are still stuck in one layer of mere thought.

A small story: One man and a great philosopher having three doctorates go on a camping trip. After finishing their dinner, they retire for the night and go to sleep. Some hours later, the man wakes up and nudges his philosopher friend, "Look up at the sky and tell me what you see." "I see millions and millions of stars, my friend," exclaims the philosopher. "And astronomically, what do you deduce from that?" asked the man. The philosopher ponders for a minute and says, "Well, astronomically it tells me that there are millions of galaxies and potentially billions of planets. Astrologically, I observe that Saturn is in Leo. Horologically, I deduce that the time is approximately quarter past three. Meteorologically, I suspect that we will have a beautiful day tomorrow. Theologically, I can see that God is all-powerful, and that we are a small and insignificant part of the Universe." "What does it tell you?" the philosopher asked the man. The man replies, "You idiot! Someone has stolen our tent!"

Philosophers are great losers. That is why in Hinduism we never had philosophy. Philosia means Darshana. In Hinduism, all philosophers are supposed to be seers - seeing, not thinking. In the Hindu tradition, we insist on experiencing. It is philosia, not just philosophy. Philosophers suffer. Rishis are not philosophers; they are philosias, seers. Vyāsa is not adding more and more words for us; he is taking words away, making us more empty.

Suddenly Vyāsa says, "Even about the identity you can't speak anything." He uses a very beautiful phrase: "on its own." Please understand, your identity, by its very nature, winds up all the drama of seeing forms and names and retires into its inner space once every twenty-one hours.

The individual Self creates this whole drama - life, world, society, whatever you see, touch, experience, smell, or think. But the greatness of the Pradhāna, the Source, is that it draws the identity back. However much you try, your identity cannot be separated from the Source. Once every twenty-one hours, it becomes tired of the drama, drops everything, and returns to its Source.

The automatic resting mechanism, the automatic retiring mechanism: every day, by its nature, the Self settles into the Source. It rests in the Source. Nothing much needs to be done. Even if you do something or do nothing, every night your individual Self retires into the Pradhāna - the Ātman, Self, Consciousness, Sat, Existence. Because the Self, by its very nature, rests in the Pradhāna, it shows that even the identity you carry is not consistent or firmly rooted in factual reality. This is important to understand.

Almost between every gap, you all go to the Existence, the Source, and then come back. It is like awakening the non-mechanical parts of your brain, which is almost like trying to keep a hundred dogs' tails straight. First, the Master straightens one dog's tail and holds it with both hands. Then He catches a second dog, holding its tail in one hand and the first dog's tail in the other. Now He has two dogs in His grip. Slowly, He runs around, catches the third by the tail and front, and then the fourth. But by the time He catches the fifth one, the first dog has already run away!

First, you were made to understand that Pradhāna means the Source - the primal origin. Then, logically, the Master made you understand that you can't speak about the origin, because liberation and bondage exist only for the identity you feel, not for the origin. The origin cannot be expressed in any word because it is beyond your intelligence, beyond comprehension.

Now Vyāsa takes us a step further, saying, "Even about the identity you cannot grasp anything, because the identity is also not disconnected. It naturally gets drawn back into the Source every day, without your intention." Even if you try to keep your identity engaged with names and forms, at one point it simply renounces the whole drama and retires into the Self during deep sleep. He just takes away all the words.

Since identity does not have its own existence and is repeatedly absorbed into the Source, even your identity is not a consistent, independent entity. But through force and pressure - because you need something to hold on to and to make your life meaningful - you cling to giving meaning to things.

When you walk, there is a beautiful garden with roses growing and birds are there, why should you even give the meaning "beautiful?" It is there, that's all. The moment you give the idea of "beautiful," the neighbor also tries to create a garden the same way.

The original sin is trying to add meaning to what is happening in front of you, that's all. If you stop that one thing, this nonsensical habit of trying to give meaning to everything, trying to add juice to everything; if you can retire just from that one thing, you stop adding meaning, then suddenly you will understand your identity which you think as very consistent every day is not consistent. That will be one of the major realizations to achieve the source of Existence.

Buddhā gives a powerful example. If you light a torch and rotate it at a high speed, you will see a fire circle. There is no fire circle. Every inch the torch is moving looks like a fire circle. Same way in your identity, you see a solid existence; it is not. The high speed movement makes you feel like it has an individual existence. The high speed movement is responsible.

The identity with which you woke up today is not the same as the identity with which you woke up a year ago, though you force yourself to believe it is consistent. If it were not consistent, the very base on which you build your life would suddenly lose its value and meaning. Knowing that nothing has intrinsic value, you clutch at something as consolation.

At the end of the day, money has no ultimate value, relationships have no ultimate value, and the body has no ultimate value. If you peel away layer after layer, finally nothing remains with value. But that realization makes you feel like an orphan - you recoil. We cannot directly face that reality, so we add value to something to keep ourselves alive.

When you truly understand that there is no inherent value in anything, you can become a high achiever, creator, and leader. A normal mind, however, tends to superimpose value; it imposes value. This imposition of value is why you experience your identity as a seemingly consistent, comprehensible individual.

Actually, you do not have an individual quality or a character or identity. But this truth seems to be too much. You need to project yourself with some consistency. So what to do? You try to give meaning to it. When you try to give meaning to something to make it look consistent, the ignorance becomes alive.

The sacred secret in this sūtrā is to stop giving meaning to things. Understanding the identity you are getting every morning when you wake up is not consistent with yesterday's. If there is meaning in anything, there will not be excitement in that. Excitement to exist happens only if it is meaningless.

If there is a clear meaning, definition, you will be completely bored. Because you know everything, what to do? If you are bored of unclutching, understand you are not doing it. You are not, you made a meaning out of unclutching. If you are every moment practicing, it'll be intensely exciting, never boring.

Understand, life is meaningless - and that is the only way to live it with excitement. If you try to find a consistent meaning, the excitement of life is taken away; you become a poor philosopher.

The sacred secret from this sūtra is: first, because the identity merges on its own into the Self (the Origin), you cannot fully grasp or define the identity. Second, because the identity is not consistent, do not try to give it meaning or build structures on it to force it to seem meaningful or stable.

Identity being meaningless is okay - that preserves the excitement of life. Don't try to know everything. So now, neither can you speak about the Pradhāna (the Source), nor can you speak about the individual identity that feels bondage or liberation, because that does not exist.

Understand, if the individual identity you think you have truly existed, it should be able to retain its presence - but it does not. Even if you try not to get enlightened, within twenty-four hours you are naturally pulled back into the Source. You may enter that space and try to escape it, but within a few hours you are called back again.

Even the identity you carry is not as solid as you think. So why does it feel solid? Only because you give meaning to it. Without meaning, it naturally loses its sense of solidity. When you understand that your identity is not solid, you will be more aware, alive, and ready to live. Because you are more alive, aware, and spontaneous, you will naturally become a high achiever.

A high achiever is one who is ready to go through any complication in life's ups and downs. That strength arises only when you are clear about not forcing a consistent identity or meaning onto yourself. If you have the courage to live with the changing identity each day, knowing that the whole thing is meaningless, you develop a powerful energy that makes you a true high achiever.

Anybody who is lying on a couch and claims to be enlightened - never believe it. Ramana Maharshi was never idle on a couch; all his photographs showing him lying down do not reflect his whole life. He used to cook and grind flour using the old traditional stone grinding machine, common in Hindu villages where women would grind rice and other grains daily. Tapasyananda Swami, a Mahāpuruṣa from the Ramakrishna Mission, Vice President of the Mission and translator of the Bhāgavatam into an extraordinary English version, once went to see Ramana Maharshi. Asking where Bhagavān was, he was told to go to the kitchen. There, he saw about ten men working — washing vessels, cooking, grinding, cutting vegetables - and could not immediately identify Ramana Maharshi. Approaching the man who was grinding, he asked, "Who is Ramana Maharshi?" Bhagavān looked around and pointed to a large brass vessel, saying, "Ramana. Ramana." Tapasyanandaji was puzzled and asked, "This is Ramana?" Bhagavān replied, "At least on this vessel, the name 'Ramanashram' is written, so it can be considered more Ramana than this body, which does not bear the name." Immediately, Tapasyanandaji realized that this was indeed Ramana Maharshi and fell at His feet.

Ramana Maharshi was never a couch potato. Understand, a man who has merged into ecstasy, into Existence, and has experienced Existence can never be a couch potato; he will naturally be a high achiever, maybe in different dimensions. Being a high being, and a high achiever is one of the important irrecoverable qualities of an enlightened being. If you are not a high achiever, forget about Enlightenment. Bhagavān is a high achiever. His ability to inspire a few thousand people to the core and transmit that highest Vedāntic cognition, the cognitive shift, is unimaginable.

I bless you all, to achieve, experience, live, express, radiate and share the eternal bliss, Nithyananda.

gatisāmānyat 1.1.10

Brahmaṇ is Intelligence and that is the Source

Again, just one word.

Swami Gambhirananda translates as, “Because the knowledge gathered from various Upaniṣads is the same as regards consciousness being the cause”.

Swami Vireswarananda translates as, “Because of all the Vedānta connected to uniformly referring to an intelligent principle as the first cause, Brahmaṇ is to be taken as that cause.”

Each sūtra in Brahma Sūtrās is a source of an independent philosophical system or thought trend. By its capacity, each single sūtra can lead to a complete understanding of Existence. For example, this sūtra is very interesting. It says: “All the Upaniṣads declare the cause to be the intelligent Source; Brahmaṇ is intelligence, and That is the Source.” Without any difference, everybody declares this. The words with which this sūtra is created need to be understood very deeply.

Earlier, in the beginning, the first two to three sūtras present a thought trend of supreme intelligence where the Pradhāna was established. Now, the other aspects of Pradhāna are being expressed. It’s like a deeper dimension of the same principle.

The previous sūtras said Pradhāna is intelligence, meaning the Source is intelligence. You may ask, “Alright, how do we know it is the cause? How do we know it is compassion? How do we know it is running the whole thing in a balanced way?” All those questions are being answered in the coming sūtras.

Today, Vyāsa is analysing a very beautiful part. He is establishing Pradhāna as the causal material for existence, for all happenings. Pradhāna as the cause - “gatisāmānyāt.” Actually, even a single sūtra can lead you to liberation if you can sit, debate on the sūtra, and transmit the understanding of that sūtra to others.

If the cause is intelligence, the effect also has to be intelligence. Please understand, the cause is nirmala, niranjana, which means pure and cannot be contaminated or adulterated with anything. So, the cause is pure, unadulterated content. If the cause cannot be adulterated, then the effect must also be the exact version of the cause.

For example, if you can add some material like copper into gold, then the effect can be lower-quality gold. But copper cannot be added to gold; it is pure. That is the cause. If nothing can be added to gold, then anything made out of gold will also be pure. The effect will also be pure. From this angle, the cause is pure intelligence. So, anything you think is not intelligence does not exist. How can the effect be different from the cause? It is impossible.

Our mind continuously denies, saying, "No!" The effect has some impurity. But Bādarāyaṇa says, "No, cause is intelligence." The big problem is, if you hear these truths from the Master and after half an hour go for your dinner and your routine, it cannot lead you to enlightenment. It cannot lead you to the awakening of the non-mechanical parts of the brain. It cannot lead you to higher existence, a higher quality of consciousness, a higher way of existing, or a higher possibility. No, it cannot! Why would it? How would it?

But instead, if you form two teams - Śaṅkara and Vyāsa - and honestly start debating to understand, it can lead you to realization. Debating does not necessarily lead to non-acceptance of each other's ideas or acceptance of each other's ideas. Debate does not mean you have to fight, and debate does not mean you have to accept others' ideas. It is about analyzing. The essence of the thought trend here, the sacred secret from this sūtra, the essence of the thought trend is: cause is intelligence. He gives one example, as all the Upaniṣads declare.

The translation should not be "Upaniṣadic text"; it should be "the effect of all Upaniṣads." Whenever you sit with the Master, the experience always leads to more and more intelligence. So naturally, if the experience is intelligence, the intelligence has to be the cause.

You need to understand the precise meaning of these words. Sometimes the words themselves can create confusion. If you are not catching them, reading them properly, or understanding them properly, it can create a big mess and confusion. If you understand the words of the Upaniṣads only as text and say, "Because the text says," you can end up getting confused, because there are some Upaniṣads that can say, "No, cause can be matter." You could misinterpret or twist some Upaniṣad texts. So, the right understanding is required. Here, it should actually be translated as Upaniṣad meaning "sitting with the Master"; whenever you sit with the Master, it leads only to an intelligent space in you. So naturally, the cause is intelligence.

If the word is not properly understood, then you could be in big trouble. The cause is intelligence. You might think, "We know this, why repeat it again and again?" No! You don't know, and that is why it is being repeated. You are adamant about not getting enlightened, and Vyāsā is adamant about making you enlightened. It is like any concept shared: your brain opens to that idea for ten minutes and then closes again. By the time you go to dinner, it is over. The Source may be intelligent, but maybe it is not the cause, or perhaps something else could be added to the cause. So, the effect may not be as pure as the cause, or it could be slightly adulterated. There can be thousands of questions, thousands of doubts. Somehow, Vyāsā wants to handle all the questions and doubts and insists that you understand it thoroughly, completely. You are guiding yourself and the people around you with a clear understanding. That's why Bādarāyaṇā insists on understanding this in different dimensions, in deeper and deeper layers.

The cause is ultimate intelligence. The cause is Brahmaṇ. The cause is truth. The cause is Source. The cause is compassion. These statements are given so that, without performing any technique or method, this thought trend is established within you. You see, if you truly understand that the cause is intelligence, then you will not experience boredom on the path to enlightenment. You will not feel bored entering a meditative state. You will not feel bored while practicing unclutching. If you do feel bored, it means you need to be reminded again. That is exactly what Vyāsā is doing.

We are neither interested in listening nor interested in meditating. See, if you are not interested in meditating, then what is the only way? Again and again, repeat it until the truth becomes a part of your life, until it becomes the essence of your life, until it becomes the understanding from which all your decisions arise, even in your dreams. The understanding with which you make decisions in your dreams is the essence and the foundation on which you take cognizance of your daily life. Life, by its very nature and flow, upgrades the understandings on which you base your next decisions.

Every night, even the incidents in your dreams help you upgrade your understanding, develop the consciousness from which you make decisions, and make you feel more than what you were. So now, apply this understanding to all the difficulties and pain points of your life. Ask: "If cause is intelligence, how are these terrorists created? If cause is intelligence, how are what we call 'bad people' made? If cause is intelligence, how is your spouse made? If cause is intelligence, how are your enemies made?" Because everybody thinks their enemy is dull, dumb, or unintelligent. "If cause is intelligence, how is the other party made?"

Question! Master's answers will not automatically be answers for you. All of Master's answers, you may label, "Eh! Master's answers," and discard them in the dustbin. No! You have a dove-holing system in your brain. You may not have a dustbin for Master, but you will have something called a 'respected dustbin,' which means it will neither be emptied nor used. That's what we call a 'respected dustbin': "Eh! He says this, but that is not for me, it is all impractical. He says all this, but it's okay, next."

So, each one of you has a respected dustbin for Master's ideas, for the ideas He expressed. Your ego will grasp or grab any idea only when you debate. When you project ideas at others, suddenly your ego becomes associated with them, and that foolish ego does not understand that whenever you associate with these big ideas, they become nectar to you but poison to your ego.

Understand, whenever you get associated with some great spiritual idea, or debate on a great spiritual idea, without your conscious knowledge, you will imbibe that idea into your life. Suddenly, your ego will have been consumed by that idea. If Master tells you to follow it, it will never happen because you have a respected dustbin. "Master's ideas, great, great. We can't use them, you know. Let us be practical." You have a clever method to discard them indirectly, but you can't put them directly in the dustbin. That would be too disrespectful. No, no, no, your mind won't agree to that. So, you have a very technical dustbin.

Sometimes you put a beautiful garland into that dustbin, sprinkle a little sandalwood, even do ārati, but never pick up the ideas and use them. In your doveholing system, you have that. You know exactly how to organize any idea. That is the respected dustbin.

Now, if you start debating, your ego gets associated with that idea, and if others are not convinced, you will fight for the idea. If others are convinced because you are able to convince them, you will also be convinced. It is like having a clay ball that represents your ego and a diamond that is the sacred truth Master is giving you. The diamond is just placed on the clay ball. Debate is like hitting it with another stone. Naturally, what happens? The diamond gets embedded in the clay ball and sticks to it.

If Master tells you directly to imbibe that diamond, you will say, "No, no, no, it's difficult, very difficult." But now, slowly, the diamond is getting embedded into that clay ball. Not only that, the diamond is such that, when it goes inside, all the clay in your hands starts falling away. Finally, in your hand, only the diamond remains because you are hitting continuously. When you continuously hit a stone wall with a clay ball and diamond, what happens? The diamond remains in your hand, and the clay leaves your hand. This is the exact process of debate.

Your ego will imbibe any spiritual idea only when you debate on it and take that side. You see, actually, our whole life is nothing but taking a side and justifying it. Now, in the debate, very beautifully, you will take the side of spiritual truth, and without your knowledge, the spiritual truth will consume you. Debate is a highly ego-fulfilling activity. Use that very ego-fulfilling activity to dissolve the root of the ego.

Shiva's words contain the nectar of enlightenment and the poison for the ego, because in His throat there is a big stock of poison. That gets added into His words and comes to you so that, when you imbibe them, the poison works on the ego and destroys it. Now all Master's words have both components: nectar for you and poison for your ego. The throat holds the stock of poison to release along with the words whenever required. So, when you start debating these truths, Master's answer will not directly work for you. You will put Master's answer in the respected dustbin. You start debating and creating deeper and deeper thought currents.

What is the format of debate? First, your body temperature should not increase, meaning no anger or violence. Second, talk only based on the ideas with which you make decisions. See and discuss ideas only on which you base your daily decisions or decisions you are about to make. You have full freedom to declare that you are enlightened from today, but you must live as if you are enlightened. Define that and start living like that; only then do you have the freedom to declare it. Actually, nobody else can declare your enlightenment; only you can declare your enlightenment.

You have the full freedom to declare, "I am enlightened," perfectly alright, and it is encouraged, but you must live up to it. Declare and live up to it. No problem. But all these fellows who want to be enlightened are waiting for Master to declare it. Why? Then all their faults and problems can be placed on Master, and Master would have to go on justifying their enlightenment.

You declare your enlightenment and stand by it. So you have the freedom to talk based on the ideas on which you make decisions or will make decisions. That is the second rule of debate.

Third, a very important point: you neither need to agree nor disagree. If you don't agree, you can say, "No, I am not interested in agreeing. Get lost." If you do agree, you can say, "Yes, I am interested in agreeing." If you are interested in neither, you can say, "No, I am neither interested in agreeing nor disagreeing; we need to dig deeper." You can take all three stands. No problem. But create this debate, because these sūtrās are like a key, and you need to use this key to open some two thousand doors.

Master cannot customize this master key for all two thousand doors. You need to go and open all the doors, all the problems of your life, through this key, this debate. Create it, very strongly, then you will understand each and every idea which gets into your system deeper and deeper, forming the base for your higher consciousness.

Every action out of higher understanding, every thought out of higher understanding, and every feeling out of higher cognition is a wealth you are accumulating. Higher cognition means the cognizance is taken in you based on the higher understanding like a sacred sentiment. You suddenly develop a strong love for your Guru because of the higher understanding, "Wow, all the ideas He gives me are raising me so much, then what state must He be in!" With this higher understanding, the cognizance you take is what we call higher cognition.

Same way, the more and more higher cognitions you take, the more and more time you start staying in higher space. That is the real wealth you are accumulating - how much time in a day you spend in a higher cognitive state. The debate will help you to keep yourself in a higher cognitive state continuously.

Because it is such a strong philosophical truth, you will imbibe it only when you debate it. When you debate, one thing you will gain is a better understanding from others' views. The second thing is many of your smaller understandings can be clarified. And the third thing, when you stand for some idea, you start assuming that idea as life, and even unconsciously, you see life as nothing but taking certain stands and justifying those stands till death.

When you take up one side of any idea, not only do you take it up, you decide to justify it - that's it. So now you have two sides. Cause is intelligence; this means you are declaring your enlightenment: "Eh! If my cause is enlightenment, the effect also has to be enlightenment because the cause cannot be polluted." Cause is niranjanā, nirāmaya, nirālambā, nirvikalpā.

If the cause is intelligence, then come on, the effect is also intelligence. If cause is enlightenment, the effect is also enlightenment. That's it. Or you can take the other side: "No, no, no, no. There are so many things in front; how can this be true?" You can take any side. Start the debate.

If you take a side, talk only about the honest truth with which you make decisions, or you are going to make decisions. You have the freedom to declare, "Aye, I declare: cause is intelligence, so I am enlightened." You can declare, then start living up to it. That's it! Even if you stand on the side of "idiocy," you have the intelligence to make it a legacy because there is no such thing as idiocy.

There is no follower because everybody's source is the leader. Then who is a follower? He who has not realized his source is a leader is a follower. If you have not realized your cause is intelligence, then your cause is "dumbness." It is just your choice now on which side you want to debate, which side you want to take.

Cause is intelligence, so the effect has to be intelligence. You are surrounded by intelligence, filled by intelligence, preceded by intelligence, succeeded by intelligence, run by intelligence, running into intelligence, running towards intelligence, running in intelligence. The cause is intelligence. The Source is intelligence.

When Master transmits that to you, His experience becomes āpta-pramāṇā for you. When you have the debate, it will become ātma-pramāṇā for you, when you take a stand, when you take a side. It's like now you have a chance. You can take a stand -sssssss "I am not enlightened" and go on justifying it for your whole life, being very tightly attached and very loving and cozy with that idea, or you can take a stand - "I am enlightened" and go on shining, burning with that idea. Take that stand, justify it, and live for it as you have a choice, but both are simple debates, that's all, nothing else. Today you can have a debate.

How many want to say, "I am enlightened"? How many want to say, "I am not enlightened"? It should be honest. If you say, "I am enlightened," you should already be taking all decisions based on that concept of enlightenment. Define enlightenment very clearly. Don't give vague ideas. Define it and give your own definition. Say, "This is what enlightenment is, so I am enlightened." Either you should be taking all decisions based on that enlightenment, or from this moment declare, "I will take all decisions based on this." Debate, declare, then live up to it, or say "No, I am not enlightened," and live up to it. No problem. It is a simple debate, that's all, nothing else. There is no such thing as a big difference.

Now you have the possibility of taking a certain stand. Now we can say whether the cause is intelligence or the cause is dullness. Take a stand. If the cause is intelligence, then the effect also has to be intelligence. Understand this. If you declare "you are enlightened," you have to digest the hard truth that "your spouse is also enlightened" because both come in the same package! You cannot say, "Your cause is Brahmaṇ and his or her cause is somebody else." No! For both causes are one.

Now comes so much confusion: "Oh God, what is this? Then how is it possible?" Vedānta should become Vyavahārikā. Vyavahārikā means practical day-to-day application. These truths should become practical, day-to-day applied science. That will happen only by debate. The debate will bring deep clarity. With deep clarity, the functionality will arise.

First, listening to the truth - Śravaṇā. Imbibing and arriving at clarity is Mananā. Then expressing from the imbibed clarity, the functionality will evolve; that is Nidhidhyāsanā. Listening, imbibing clarity, evolving functionality - that's the essence. The basic thing, the listening, is "Cause is intelligence." Cause is intelligence. This is the base, but now you have to arrive at clarity. You can start the debate on this truth. Get to clarity, then the functionality will evolve. Nobody else needs to give a certificate. You declare, you live. The functionality will evolve based on these great truths.

You can just sit with this one truth: "You are not enlightened." That is also okay; anything is okay, though you have to be very honest about what you declare in your debate. Sit, you can have your eyes open, just relax - define and plan: What am I going to define? How am I going to define it? You have to live it. And if you are not living it, people are going to laugh at you.

If you decide one day, "No, I don't want to be enlightened anymore," you can withdraw it, but then you have to live it. You have the freedom to upgrade or downgrade your enlightenment, but you have to define it. So, define with clear words how you want your enlightenment to be. How do you want to be enlightened? There should not be any grey area.

Here is an example sharing from the eN-Debate:

"Our meeting with Bhagavān is a crucial point in our realization of this truth. This truth was already there before, since it is eternal, but till then it was a concept, not an experiential truth. Bhagavān taught us the technique to unclutch and initiated it into our day-to-day life. The unclutched state happens every moment and deepens more and more since we know Him. Chronologically, we evolved from an intellectual understanding of unclutching a few years back to a living experience of it, manifesting itself by itself and through itself every moment. The mind gets absorbed in the now due to Bhagavān's grace alone. When we say "Bhagavān's grace alone," we really mean it. This very acknowledgement of our Enlightenment comes from Bhagavān's initiation, teachings, our deepening relationship with Him through the years, and His blessings towards us. Through the Master, the experience which declares, "I am perfect, Existence is perfect, all is perfect," is a reality every moment. And this very fact brings the highest contentment to us. Having Bhagavān in our life is indeed Enlightenment. All devotees here are sending their eternal gratitude and love."

Another wonderful sharing: "Dear Bhagavān, this morning I woke and my mind was, on its own, going through all the reasons why I had declared myself as enlightened in yesterday's debate. The yellow journalist was giving reasons as to why it was not true, and at each step, I saw the mind counteract him. And slowly, the journalist in the mind could find fewer and fewer reasons. And the 'me,' who was watching all this, suddenly felt, "Wow, damn it! I am really enlightened." This is it. It's the real thing. It's not just a mind game or playful exercise. I really cannot think of a reason as to why I am not enlightened. Sweet! Here is the thesis I had yesterday as to why I am enlightened: I am enlightened because anything I can see is outside of me, including pain, sorrow, and all mental thoughts and moods, and they will change. So, my Enlightenment does not have to tie up with any particular way I feel inside my body or mind. So, I don't need to wait for any particular experience or deny Enlightenment because the body or mind is not in some imagined pleasurable state.

I have found that whatever I want comes true. The only reason it may not is because it is harmful to me, and in time I always realize the reason why it could have been harmful. So eventually, in one way or another, all my desires become fulfilled. I am eternal and have no death. Across different bodies, I am still there. And I have infinite time to get fulfillment of any desire, including the imagined sensations of how Enlightenment would feel, Siddhis, etc. And however long that takes, it's a blip in the infinite time. I am going to be in a state of bliss, whatever experienced people are talking about, given the certainty of the fact that I and everyone else will eventually experience whatever they want, and this will happen in almost an instant in Cosmic time. And in reality, all experiences are transient and don't matter. I conclude that I am enlightened."

Through this debate, when you come to some conclusion and create, like this, some writings, it'll become "My Book." This is a beautiful practice from the life of THE SPH BHAGAVAN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM with this process of eN-Debate. There was a big book called Ātma Purāṇam. That is the Tamil translation of the 4 major Upaniṣads - Īśa, Aitreya, Kena, Kaṭha. It was owned by Bhagavān Isakki Swamigal, a great Siddha and guru of Mata Vibhudananda Puri. He was an old man, but very graceful. He was such a graceful person, with long jata and a big belly; he would stretch his leg in a very nice way. And he would put his hand on his cheek to support it. On one side, He would sit with his wooden pad and the big book. On the other side, Kuppammal or Mata Vibhudananda Puri would sit fanning him. And, the Bala-Avatar would read the original sūtrā and the translation from that book. Bhagavān Isakki Swamigal would always take the opposite side. He would not talk for the sūtrā; he would talk against it. Then Kuppammal would have to take the side of the sūtrā. Both of them would do the debate. Then, they would drag the Bala-Avatar in. Sometimes the Bala-Avatar would side with Kuppammal; sometimes with Isakki Swamigal. But whichever side He chose, at the end of the session, end of the day, Bala-Avatar would have his own understanding and clarity. Especially at that age, around 13 or 14, it was such a strong experience. eN-Debate can create such amazing human beings - graceful, powerful, eternally clear, intelligent!

Then, Bala-Avatar would go back to the house, start writing, penning things down. The habit of penning down began in him because of his gurus. Every day, whatever he used to sit and discuss with Arunagiri Yogishwara, he would pen down. And not only that, he read one incident in Ramana Maharshi's life. He had a disciple - Muruganar. Whenever Ramana Maharshi spoke something, Muruganar would pen it down and take it back to Ramana Maharshi; he would purposely make some mistakes so that Ramana Maharshi could correct it in his own pen and handwriting. So, two things: one, Ramana Maharshi's handwriting would be recorded. Second, all other words would be authenticated now. When you correct one mistake, then all other words have been authenticated as being without any mistake.

This "My Book" was the first book the Bala-Avatar wrote in this life - My Book, at least 10 volumes. Everything in that My Book is His Ātma Pramāṇā to the level to which those truths had penetrated Him.

Whenever He wanted to read, He would just brush through and go over it. He would know how He evolved to a certain understanding. You see, one of the biggest problems a seeker faces in his life is forgetfulness. We go on reinventing the solution for the same problem every day twelve times. You may say: "Not twelve times; maybe 2-3 times." No, you forget. The same problem you will be reinventing twelve times a day. And then again, the next morning when you have that problem, you will have the same problem and you will not find a solution. For half an hour, your mind will struggle, then you will find the solution. Simple problem: worry. Tell me how many thousands of times you have found a solution and decided not to worry anymore. And all it takes is only five more minutes of betel nut chewing, and again you are in worry. It is because of forgetfulness.

Sometimes, when you hit the right click, you are very clear: "Even if death comeṣ, I will not worry." In the next half an hour, you don't need death, just the shadow of your spouse or just one small word, one small practical problem - and you are back again in worry. You need to understand, not having Smaraṇa - remembrance, is one of the biggest problems.

All of you should have that habit of a "My Book." You should have your own book. Once in a while, pen down, so that you will stop wasting time reinventing the same solution. You see, for example: you have a worry. You catch a certain thought trend: "No, how can this, how can this, how can this?" Then you say: "Eh, foolishness, this worry is useless." You come out of it. But the next morning again you are in the same worry. But you forget that thought trend from which you came out. Because you forgot the thought trend, now you will waste your time worrying for at least two hours. And after two hours, you will catch the thought trend, "Oh God! I should have remembered this half an hour before." Not having Smaraṇa - remembrance, not hitting the right click when required is one of the major problems seekers face in their life on the path of Enlightenment. That problem can be sorted out with this great solution - "My Book." Have this attitude and habit of "My Book." After a debate, create "My Book." You can do it even on your social media, so the whole world can read it, not just yourself; the whole world can read it. You all should start the habit of maintaining "My Book." It'll really awaken your whole life, transform your whole life, and help you for higher consciousness.

Your 'The My Book' can be a very powerful method to kill your ego. See, we read in the newspapers, terrorists used to have cyanide in their body continuously. So, whenever they are caught by police and when they need to lose their life, if they feel that living any longer is going to be dangerous and torturous, they will just swallow the cyanide poison and die. In the same way, this My Book can be the poison for your ego. So, whenever you have the dangers of life, read this My Book - ego will die, you will be in peace, and you can live life joyfully. Of course, you cannot equate the My Book with cyanide. My Book is a nectar, the ultimate nectar.

śrutatvācca 1.1.11

That all knowing Brahmaṇ alone is the first cause of this world

The next sūtrā, 11th sūtrā:

Again in 1 word.

Swami Gambhirananda translates as, “And because Brahmaṇ is revealed as such in the Upaniṣads.”

Swami Vireswarananda translates as, “That all knowing Brahmaṇ alone is the first cause of this world, because it is so known directly from the Vedas also.”

Swami Sivananda translates as, “And because it is directly stated in the Śruti, therefore the all-knowing of Brahman alone is the cause of the Universe.”

Now, one step deeper. The sūtrā, if you translate, you can translate in two ways: one, you can say, because the Vedas also declare that Cause is the intelligence. The other way, because hearing: Śruti means hearing from the Master. Hearing also declares: “Cause is the intelligence.” And the other way, it can also be translated: in the Upaniṣad it means sitting with the Master. This is the realization we experience from inside. So, in all three ways, you can look in.

Cause is intelligence. Not only do the Upaniṣads or Śāstra Pramāṇa say it; not only does the Āpta Pramāṇa or the Master’s experience say it, and when we sit in Upaniṣad with the Master, that is Ātma Pramāṇa, it also says the same.

Śrutatvācca ||

Sometimes we do not know the reason why they repeat. There may be subtle blockages inside our system, which may prevent us from grasping the truth. For example: the same truth, if you debate on the second day, third day - the deeper doubts and blockages will be removed, deeper problems will be removed, deeper understandings will be revealed. That is why sometimes it feels like a Master is nagging you with the same truth, but there is a big difference.

Today’s thought trend: go to thoughtlessness. Today’s eN-Debate for realization is three trends.

Śrutatvācca ||

Because of Upaniṣad, Cause is intelligence. Three sacred secrets in this Sūtrā: Because Śāstra Pramāṇa says, "Cause is intelligence." Because Āpta Pramāṇa - Guru's words, says, "Cause is intelligence." Because when we sit in Upaniṣad with the Master, our own Ātma Pramāṇa says, "Cause is intelligence." So, have these three as sacred secrets for your eN-Debate.

Sometimes, nagging ourselves with the great truths is good. A small story about nagging: A man comes home after an exhausting day at work, plops down on the couch , in front of the television , and tells his wife, "Get me a beer before it starts." The wife sighs and gets him a beer. Fifteen minutes later he says, "Get me another beer before it starts." She looks cross but fetches another beer , and slams it down next to him. He finishes that beer, and a few minutes later says, "Quick, get me another beer. It's going to start any moment, any minute." The wife is furious. She yells at him, "Is that all you are going to do tonight, drink beer and sit in front of the TV? You are nothing but a lazy, drunken fly, fat slob, and furthermore." The man sighs and says, "It has started." So, start the eN-Debate before it starts!

Because the same word 'Pradhānā' has been translated as 'intelligence' by one Swami; it has been translated as 'insentient' by another Swami; but both make sense if you fit it in the same sūtrā. That is the beauty of Sanskrit. It's like the same line, you give a completely opposite translation. The final conclusion is the same. That's the beauty of Sanskrit poetry.

So let us enter into these three thought trends. Cause is intelligence because of Śāstra Pramāṇā. Like, Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad says in the 6th chapter, 9th Sūtrā: "He has neither parent nor Lord. He refers to the all-knowing Lord described in the chapter. Therefore, it is finally established." So Bādarāyaṇa Vyāsa refers to this sūtrā.

Again the Taittirīya Upaniṣad: "The wise one, who having produced all forms and made all names, sits calling the things by their names." Taittirīya Āraṇyaka in the 3rd Khaṇḍa, the 12th Chapter, 7th Sūtrā.

Again, Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad goes on: "It is neither coarse nor fine, neither short nor long; defective in one place, perfect in the other" in the 3rd Khaṇḍa, 1st Chapter, 8th Sūtrā.

"Who is without then again," this is from Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad.

So, this Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad, 6th Chapter, 19th Sūtrā: "Who is without parts, without actions; tranquil without false, without taint; the highest bridge of immortality, like a fire that has consumed its fuel."

And, Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad, declares: "For where there is duality as it were, then one sees the other. But when the Self only is all this, how should he see another, where one sees nothing else, hears nothing else, understands nothing else. That is the greatest."

And again, Chāndogya Upaniṣad, 7th Canto, 24th Chapter, 1st Sūtrā: "Where one sees nothing else, hears nothing else, understands nothing else, there is a greatest infinite bhauma where one sees something else, hear something else, understands something else. That is the little finite. The greatest is immortal and the little is mortal." So, see these are the some of the Śāstra Pramāṇas.

You may not be able to do a debate on these Śāstra Pramāṇās, because most of you are not well-versed in the Śāstrās. But if you can, any of you who are well-versed, then do the debate on Śāstra Pramāṇā, nothing wrong. The rules to do a Śāstra Pramāṇā debate are you should not twist or torture the rules, or torture the text. Otherwise, you can question the authority of it; no problem. You have the right to question.

In Hindu tradition, we have the right to question the authority of even the Śrutis, even the Vedas. You have the right to question the authority. In Hindu tradition, we don't believe in the religion by birth. No. We believe in the religion you discover. We always insist we have so much, you please discover your own religion.

Hindu tradition insists on you discovering your own religion, on you finding out your own religion. Discovered religion only will be life for you, not the religion in which you are just born or brought up. Of course, if you discovered the same religion, okay. But whatever is said and done, only when you discover religion, you will live it; not before, not otherwise. So, if you have the ability or the introduction to the Śāstrās, do the debate. You have all the right to question the authority. You have the possibility of discovering the religion.

On the second, Āpta Pramāṇā, the Master's words: "Source is intelligence. Cause is intelligence. Cause cannot be adulterated. Because it cannot be adulterated, the effect is also intelligence. Because the Cause and the effect are intelligence, you are intelligence. Because you are intelligence, you are enlightened. Because you are enlightened, you are compassionate. Because you are compassionate, you are all-powerful. Because you are all-powerful, you are all-knowing. Because you are all-knowing, you are all-pervasive. Because you are all-pervasive, you are all-powerful. Because you are all-powerful, you are you."

Śuddha Svayamprakāśa Jyoti, Nirlipta, Nirālamba, Nirvikalpa, Nirañjana, Sat-chit-ānanda, Akhaṇḍa Paripūrṇa, Anādyanta: these are some of the thought trends that you are supposed to debate.

Now, you start the debate and make it your Ātma Pramāṇa. And one more thing: when you debate on Master's ideas, you don't need to associate any sacredness to it because it is from Master. No! When any idea is debated, it can be hit from any corner. The Hindu tradition gives you complete freedom to hit even the Vedas and Upaniṣads. So you have all the right to hit all the statements the Master made from any direction.

You do not need to associate sacredness with Master's words just because it is His word. The sacredness is attributed to that word when you click with it. When "My Book" becomes "Your Book," it is sacred. Somebody else's book has become "My Book," and "My Book" has to become "Your Book," then only it is sacred; till then, it is not sacred.

Please understand, in Hindu tradition, we encourage you to discover your own sacred book, your own sacred secrets, your own sacred truth. So the Master gives you only the rough idea of where to churn, and you start churning. Only when you churn, it becomes yours. Only when you start churning, it becomes yours. So, understand the truth as it is, and the experience as it is.

One simple straight fact with a straight, turned-out, ironed-out brain: if you just see around, you are enlightened, nothing else. If you just see all these things with an ironed-out brain, whatever knowledge you receive and pen down, that is Brahma Sūtrā - aphorisms on Existence.

Brahma Sūtrā is nothing but looking at reality with simple eyes. Whatever happens in your inner space as an understanding is Brahma Sūtrā, that's all. What is Brahma Sūtrā? Existed aphorisms of Existence. Certain work does not happen even if you tell a person a hundred times. It is an aphorism on Existence. "Nothing can be done about it" is the next aphorism on Existence. That's it.

"No, I will try to do," is an aphorism on anxiety. "Why is he not doing?" is an aphorism on frustration. That's all. It is your choice. "Alright, nothing can be done. Leave it." Aphorism on restful awareness. "Let us divert our energy in some other direction." Aphorism on Vairāgya. That's it. That's all - the whole Brahma Sūtrā.

Brahma Sūtrā is nothing but simple reality straight from the ironed-out brain. You need to learn the simple art of how to keep a hundred dogs' tails straight. Actually, whenever your brain says one idea: "Yes, Cause is intelligence," one dog's tail in your brain is straight. The next line when we jump: "Cause is compassionate," the other old tail, what happened? It has become round. And you say, "No, no, no, Cause is intelligence. Cause is compassionate. Source is just. Source is living." Then, by the time you come to the fourth or fifth, the dog ran away. You run behind that dog.

Aphorisms on Existence means looking at the Existence with a completely awakened brain; whatever knowledge reality reveals to you is Brahma Sūtrā. The Zen saying: "That mountain is a mountain is a mountain. A tree is a tree is a tree. A river is a river is a river" is a Brahma Sūtrā, that's all. The awakening intelligence. So go on drilling, debating, analyzing various dimensions of truth, various aspects of truth, various expressions of truth - you will see, you are awakened.

So, today's sacred secret, the thought trend: śrutatvācca ||

Three sacred secrets: because of Śāstra - ancient Masters' experience, Śāstra declares: "Cause is intelligence," because of the Āpta Pramāṇa - your own Guru also declares from His own experience: "Cause is intelligence." Now, third, because even your experience, when you sit in Upaniṣad with the Master, says: "The Cause is intelligence." The Cause from which you are happening is intelligence. Start the debate on these three. Go on, go on, go on, you will experience the greatest truth: "Cause is intelligence," from all different dimensions and all different angles.

आनन्दमयोऽभ्यासात् || १.१.१२ ||

ānandamayo’bhyāsāt || 1.1.12 ||

That which is consisting of bliss (is Brahman) because of repetition.

The sūtras from 1.1.5 to 1.1.11 refute non-Hindu and materialistic theories of causation, affirming Brahman’s role based on scriptural authority. Sūtra 1.1.12 begins a new discussion, addressing whether the term ānandamaya (blissful) in the Upaniṣads refers to Brahman or something else, such as an individual soul or a lower entity.

This sutra specifically addresses a reference in the Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.5.1), which describes the ānandamaya kośa (the sheath of bliss) as part of the five sheaths (pañca-kośa) of the self. The question arises: Does ānandamaya refer to Brahman, or is it a created entity, such as the individual soul (jīva) or a conditioned aspect of consciousness? The sūtra resolves this by stating that ānandamaya refers to Brahman because of the repeated emphasis (abhyāsāt) on bliss as Brahman’s essential nature in the scriptures.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.5 –

vijñānaṃ yajñaṃ tanute | karmāṇi tanute’pi ca | vijñānaṃ devāḥ sarve | brahma jyeṣṭham upāsate | vijñānaṃ brahma ced veda | tasmāccenna pramādyati | śarīre pāpmano hitvā | sarvānkāmān samaśnuta iti | tasyaiṣa eva śārīra ātman | yaḥ pūrvasya | tasmād vā etasmād vijñānamayāt | anyo’ntara ātma”ānandamayaḥ | tena īṣa pūrṇaḥ | sa vā eṣa puruṣavidha eva | tasya puruṣavidhatām | anvayaṃ puruṣavidhaḥ | tasya priyaṃ eva śiraḥ | modo dakṣiṇaḥ pakṣaḥ | pramoda uttaraḥ pakṣaḥ | ānanda ātman | brahma pucchaṃ pratiṣṭhā | tad api eṣa śloko bhavati || 2.5.1 ||

“Intelligence accomplishes sacrifice, and deeds as well does it accomplish. Intelligence do all Gods worship as Brahman, the Eldest. If Intelligence as Brahman one knows, if from That he swerves not, in body sins forsaking, he all desires achieves. Thereof, of the former, this one is the self embodied. Than that, verily, than this one formed of Vijñāna, there is another self within formed of bliss: by him this one is filled. He, verily, this one, is quite of man’s shape. After his human shape, this one is of man’s shape. Of him, love itself is the head, joy is the right wing, delight is the left wing, bliss is the self, Brahman is the tail, the support.”

The term abhyāsāt (“because of repetition”) indicates that the Upanishads repeatedly describe Brahman as the source of supreme bliss. For example:

Taittiriya Upanishad 2.8.1 - brahmānandamīmāṃsā bhīṣā’smād vātaḥ pavate | bhīṣodeti sūryaḥ | bhīṣā’smād agniś cendraś ca | mṛtyurdhāvati pañcama iti | saiṣā’ nandasya mīmāṃsā bhavati | yuvā syāt sādhuyuvā’ adhyāyakaḥ | āśiṣṭho dṛḍhiṣṭho baliṣṭhaḥ | tasyeyaṃ pṛthivī sarvā vittasya pūrṇā syāt | sa eko mānuṣa ānandaḥ | te ye śataṃ mānuṣā ānandāḥ ||

“Through fear of Him blows the wind. Through fear of Him rises the sun. Through fear of Him again Fire and Moon, and lastly the fifth, Death, proceeds to their respective duties. The following is the enquiry concerning the Bliss (Brahmananda Rasa). Suppose there be a youth, good, well-versed in the scriptures, well disciplined, resolute, and very strong. Suppose to him belongs all this earth full of wealth. This is one human bliss."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 7.23.1 - yo vai bhūmā tatsukhaṃ nālpe sukham asti | bhūmaiva sukhaṃ | bhūmā tveva vijijñāsitavya iti | bhūmānaṃ bhagavo vijijñāsa iti || 7.23.1 ||

"Sanatkumāra said: 'That which is infinite is the source of happiness. There is no happiness in the finite. Happiness is only in the infinite. But one must try to understand what the infinite is.' Nārada replied, 'Sir, I want to clearly understand the infinite.'"

The Upanishadic context describes āṇandamaya as the innermost essence, beyond which there is nothing else, indicating its identity with Brahman.

Brahman is the source of all bliss. The repeated association of āṇandamaya with the ultimate reality, coupled with descriptions of its transcendence and infinitude, confirms it as Brahman.

Brahman is not only the efficient and material cause of the universe but also the essence of all experience, characterized by sat-chit-ānanda (existence, consciousness, bliss).

The identification of āṇandamaya with Brahman underscores that true happiness is not derived from external objects but is inherent in the self, realized through knowledge (jñāna) of Brahman.

वकारशब्दान् नेति चेन् न प्राचुर्यात् || १.१.१३ ||

vikāraśabdānneti cenna prācuryāt || 1.1.13 ||

Existence is Bliss; Existence is Constant Expansion

The 1st chapter, 1st section, 13th Sūtrā:

Gambhirananda translates as, “If it be argued that the blissful One is not going to the use of a word, suffix denoting modifix say no; for the word is used in the sense of abundance.”

Swami Vireswarananda’s translation goes, “If it be said that Brahmaṇ is not spoken of as an independent entity in the passage on account of a word - tail, denoting part; we replied not so on account of abundance of terms denoting parts.”

Swami Sivananda translates as, “If it be objected that the term Anandamaya consisting of bliss cannot denote the supreme Self because of its being a word denoting a modification or transformation or product; we said that the objection is not valid on account of abundance which is denoted by suffix Maya.”

Any Incarnation in Hindu tradition, He is expected to take you deeper steps than the earlier Masters, than the earlier spiritual interpretations. No way it is disrespecting them. It’s like research. You see, for their period and time, how people in front of them will understand, they expressed that much.

vikāraśabdānneti cenna prācuryāt || 1.1.13 ||

One of the greatest powers of the Brahma Sūtrās is, it just fits into the context of the Master. See, you need to understand 2-3 important, very important truths. Whenever a Master leaves a footprint, it’ll be a half truth. Half truth will always be much worse than a lie. Whenever a Master doesn’t leave a footprint, like birds don’t leave footprints in the air, in the sky, there is the big problem, you can’t use the path it travelled. There is no guidance from Him. There are no tips from Him. There is no way He can help you.

Buffaloes leave footprints but it only leads to more and more muddy areas, because buffaloes go and land in mud only. Birds don’t leave footprints even though they fly in high zones; they don’t leave footprints. Now what to do? If you want to follow the bird, there is no way. If you want to follow the buffalo, it’ll only lead to mud. It’s a big conflict. People who leave footprints are always buffaloes. It’s a basic rule. Please understand, it’s a basic rule. Because all footprints get muddy. In course of time, it gets muddy. It’ll be used based on opportunist opportunities. An opportunist will torture all the spiritual text. They will twist, turn, disturb, misinterpret, manipulate, misrepresent, morph all the sacred scriptures. What to do? It’s impossible for a common man to follow the path of birds which don't leave footprints, and it is useless to follow the footprints of buffalo. So somewhere a bird needs to leave a footprint. Of course, birds can't leave footprints. It just leaves a smell streak, a strong smell in the air; the line through which it flew.

Brahma Sūtrās is a smell line left by Bādarāyana Vyāsa. Words can't describe. Here, Bādarāyana brings a unique context. In some of the Upaniṣads, the description about the Source and the bliss is done by the abundance of words. Because of that, bliss and Brahmaṇ are one and the same. There can be another one understanding and translation, a sacred secret you can dig out from this Sutrā. Brahmaṇ is abundance. Brahmaṇ is life. Existence is life. By very nature, it goes on expanding, expanding, expanding. This sūtrā can be seen in this angle: Existence is bliss. Existence is constant expansion.

Please understand, bliss constantly expands in all dimensions. If you are experiencing levitation, automatically you will see, you are expanding in the dimension of health, wealth, and relationships in every dimension. Please understand, if you are levitating and your wealth is not expanding, your health is not expanding means something is seriously wrong. It's not levitation, you are jumping around.

Brahma Sutrās are aphorisms of Existence, Cosmic law. Existence is abundance, constant expansion. Whether it is in the level of understanding, in the level of love, in the level of life, in the level of health, in the level of wealth; whatever it may be, the truth of Existence is expansion. Very essence of Existence is expansion.

Essence of Existence is bliss. Essence of Existence is expansion. You need to know these two-three sacred secrets as today's flow for vādaprativāda, debate. Today's flow for eN-Debate should be: Existence is constant expansion. So, if you are living life, existing, you should be expanding.

When you die, even though you think you are losing something, you don't understand now you have the experience of the next death. You are richer than the last moment. Till the last moment, you know only say eight deaths. Now, you are Master of 9th death. Then the next birth happens. Then you are Master of one more birth. Then life happens. You are now rich with more and more experience. Now, you master the next life.

Constant expansion of a certain flow is abundance. Life is abundance. Existence is abundance. You go on creating. Understand, you are a creator. If you want to spend time on wealth creation, you will do that. If you want to spend time on peace creation, you will do that. If you want to spend time on creating spiritual bliss, you will do that.

Life is expansion. We'll go on expanding, expanding, expanding. Life is abundance. By its very nature, Existence goes on expanding; even scientists are saying the whole Cosmos is continuously expanding. The very quality of Existence is expansion. Be consoled, life is not for death. Be consoled, Existence is not sadist. There is no negativity. It is a causeless, reasonless expansion in understanding, in wealth, in life, in bliss. It is expansion, expansion, expansion. This should be today's thought current - continuous expansion. Source, Cause, Existence is bliss. Source, Cause, Existence is expansion, abundance. The previous sūtrā was: Source is bliss. When you realize Source is bliss; bliss attracts fortune. This sūtrā's essence is: Source is expansion. Source is not just bliss. Source is bliss and expansion.

So today, have your debate, vādaprativāda, in these lines: how is Source expansion? How by being in Source or being in Existence, you can go on creating? Understand, every thought which happens in you, itself is abundance. Thinking is abundance. Thinking is wealth. If you are having poverty by thinking, you want poverty as your wealth. Whether it is poverty or wealth, it is your abundance.

Understand, poverty is your choiceful negative abundance. You go on planning. Constantly in you every moment, thoughts are happening; it is life. Understand, thoughtless space is your inner wealth; thoughts are your outer world wealth. So, both are your abundance, don't abandon thinking.

Resting in no mind state does not mean, you will hate thinking. Go beyond thinking so that thinking is also happening in you like a blood circulation. Are you worried about the blood circulation happening in your body? No. Then why should you be worried about thinking happening in your system? How the blood circulation happening in you is not disturbing you; same way, thinking happening need not disturb. This is one of the important sacred secrets. It was always misunderstood that the Enlightened person will not have thinking.

Enlightened person has at least forty-two times more independent thinking files happening than any one of you. For example, if you can remember about particular department work, and follow it up, think further about it, update that file and maintain it; an enlightened being can maintain forty-two files. Only thing is, like blood circulation is not disturbing you; His thinking circulation does not disturb Him, that's all. Forty-two independent logic function in His system but He is not disturbed by that thinking, that's all.

So, thinking is abundance. Don't hate it. If you are thinking about poverty, you will create the abundance of poverty. If you are thinking about wealth, you will create the abundance of wealth. You will create the abundance what you want, that's it. If you decide to accumulate wealth, then spend time to find out the ways of creating wealth, you will accumulate that.

Zero one, zero one, zero one, zero one is your inner space. The zero is restful awareness, one is start. Just because the word used is zero one, zero one, zero one, don't think it is against each other. No! Both are happening in you. The restful awareness is the inner wealth and the thoughts are the outer wealth. Thoughts are abundance, restful awareness is bliss. It's like the inner bone in an elephant is called teeth, the extended teeth is a tusk. Same way, inner peace is bliss and extended bliss is thought. Stop hating thought. By hating thought or trying to stop a thought, you will only suffer more and more. It is life destructive. You will never be successful.

So understand, be not disturbed by thinking. That happens by practice of unclutching; nothing else, or even decision. Just the conscious decision also can make you realize. Understand and look, live life's abundance. Life is abundance. Life is rich. Life is Enlightenment. Life is life. Life is abundance means Existence is abundance. And thinking is not opposite to restful awareness or Enlightenment. Real Enlightenment is not being disturbed by thinking. Blood circulation, heart beating, breathing; all these things are happening in you, you are not disturbed by it. And why should you be disturbed by thinking? Being beyond thinking is Enlightenment. So, use thinking for abundance. Don't disrespect thinking or misuse thinking, or abuse thinking. Think and create abundance, wealth. Existence is expansion. Existence is bliss. Existence is abundance.

Thinking is not against Enlightenment. Just sit now, as Enlightened being without being bothered about thinking, by thinking - just like blood circulation, breathing, air circulation. Thinking is happening in you. See in your system - one side digestion is going on in the stomach; in the lungs their system is going on; in the heart blood pumping is going on; in the whole body blood is getting circulated; Samānā Vāyu is getting circulated. Just the same way, thinking is going on. Why should you be disturbed by it? Just sit, like breathing, blood circulation, digestion, is thinking. Sit and relax in this truth. Let the inner awakening, being beyond thinking happen in you.

Flow with the Master

This sūtrā is the Akashic record of Shankara and Vyāsā's arguments. We will see exactly the arguments, style and structure which Vyāsā and Shankara had when they argued.

All of you should be aware that Vyāsā Himself came down to check Śaṅkara's strength on this philosophy, and to bless Śaṅkara. The argument went on and on - how can it end? And who can win between Śaṅkara and Vyāsā? That's why Padmapāda sings the great song, a great verse saying, "Śiva is sitting here as Śaṅkara and Viṣṇu is sitting here as Vyāsā. How can this argument end? I bow down to both of You." Suddenly Śaṅkara realizes, "Oh, it's Vyāsā who is sitting in front." And Vyāsā realizes it is Śaṅkara who is sitting in front. Then both of Them end the argument. Vyāsā blesses Śaṅkara, saying, "I'll give you 16 more years of life." Then He blesses Śaṅkara and leaves.

Śaṅkara adds some deeper understanding, and Vyāsā adds deeper understanding. Then Śaṅkara goes to the next level of understanding, and Vyāsā goes to the next level of understanding. It goes on and on and on; there is no argument, and nobody is agreeing with each other. That is the most funny thing. How can this kind of argument go on? Neither of Them is disagreeing with each other, nor They are agreeing with each other.

taddhetuvyapadeśācca ||

Here are the Akashic records, the Cosmic reading of Śaṅkara and Vyāsā. There is not a single translation which even connects with Śaṅkara and Bādarāyaṇa's thought flow.

Śaṅkara starts saying, "As bliss is the cause, abundance is the effect. The abundance can be considered as Māyā."

Vyāsā replies, "If something can be an effect of bliss, how can it have some other quality than bliss? But by the word 'Māyā,' a common perception can see something other than Brahmaṇ – the cause."

Śaṅkara continues, "The attribution of something other than Brahmaṇ as Māyā itself is not complete factual cognition. As bliss and abundance cannot be separated by their existence and action."

Vyāsā starts, "Action and inaction – both penetrate a certain personality existent; you cannot attribute a personality change during action or inaction."

Then Śaṅkara continues, "Action naturally expresses the intensity of personality, so you cannot say that inaction or action can represent the same personality."

Then Vyāsā continues, "As Dharma and Moksha in inaction – the same personality is in Moksha. In action, He shows Dharma, so action and inaction – both exist in the same space."

Then Śaṅkara continues, "Even though action and inaction exhibit themselves in the same space, Dharma is surely one step different. Other than Moksha's very existence, it is a line moving in love, in love, in the flow. The very essence of the Source, even though it is love, the flow of the love is Dharma. So, Dharma and Moksha cannot be, and may not be equated for common understanding."

Śaṅkara's flow: As being and doing expresses and intensifies the flow of the original existence, being and doing consist of the original Source.

Vyāsā's flow: Even though being and doing consist of the original flow, the original flow is not just being and doing; it is something more than being and doing.

Śaṅkara's flow: As Mokṣā, when it moves, is considered as Dharma; the Source – Dharma and Mokṣā – may not become equivalent, so we have to look into the subtle possible difference between Māyā and Brahmaṇ.

Vyāsā's flow: Words like Dharma, Arthā, Kāmā, Mokṣā can be different, but the original flow – when Mokṣā vibrates in being through doing in a majority space, it is called Arthā – the wealth. But when doing is reduced by the push of being, it is called Kāmā – pleasure. When being and doing completely overtake each other, it is called Dharma or Mokṣā. So, because all four flows are with the very Source, on the very Source; even though all four are considered different, they cannot be different, as the Source and the flow are one and the same – like water and the river.

Śaṅkara flows: Whether water and the river flows or stays as the Source and flow, it can be different, and it can change by its very quality, by the flow or by being stagnant. As the Dharma which does not constantly upgrade itself, it does not lead to Mokṣā. So, the Mokṣā which is not directly useful to the common man can never become Dharma. The words go on denoting the same, but the very flow differs based on the time, space, and requirement, which is the influence of Māyā. So, you cannot say the Māyā and Brahmaṇ do not have any gap.

Vyāsā starts: If you accept the gap between the Māyā and Brahmaṇ, it creates too many complications and questions which cannot be solved or sorted out by any argument – the flow of the Māyā into Brahmaṇ, and Brahmaṇ into Māyā has no boundary that can be experienced by the Upaniṣads, or the inner space of your very experience as per the ātmā, āptā, śāstra pramāṇā. The differences are never felt except by the different usages of the word. You cannot grasp Brahmaṇ–Māyā's independent existence or even a slight difference.

Then comes Śaṅkarā's flow, Śaṅkarā's argument: If there is no difference between the Brahmaṇ and the Māyā's flow; if there is no addition or deletion between these two, then Dharma and Mokṣā would be supposed to be one and the same. How can Dharma and Mokṣā be one and the same as they have to be dropped for the sake of the other at a particular point? Dharma has to be dropped for Mokṣā. If you are interested too much in Dharma, Mokṣā cannot be achieved. This is the revelation not only of śāstrās but also of the ātmā pramāṇā – the personal experience.

Then comes Vyāsā: There is a space where the Dharma and Mokṣā cannot be dropped for the sake of another. As enlightenment or the ātmānubhava is always transmitted only by a personality in which Mokṣā and Dharma have met one another – merged into that completely. So that transmission happens only by a being in which both have merged. You don't need to drop one for the other when you have the direct Master who is transmitting that experience. After all, it never gets transmitted without a personality in which Mokṣā and Dharma have become one. So, that necessity to drop Dharma for Mokṣā or to drop Mokṣā for Dharma does not exist when the real transmission is happening.

When the last argument was put because it touched the Guru's sentiment, Śaṅkarā fell into the reminiscence mood of Govindapāda and did not present any argument. That's where it ended. He just fell into that loving mood of being cared for by Govindapāda. So, He did not continue the further arguments on this sūtrā. The further exploration did not happen. It just stopped because it landed on the Guru's sentiment, where Dharma and Mokṣā merge into one personality. The requirement for renouncing one for the other does not exist when the transmission is happening through the Master.

When you are living and following, flowing with the Master, you don't need to renounce Dharma for the sake of Mokṣā; nor Mokṣā for the sake of Dharma, because the idea you carry about Dharma is not the ultimate Dharma. It is not Dharma at all. Forget about ultimate; it's not Dharma at all. When there is Mokṣā alive sitting in front of you, to describe Dharma to you every moment – just go with it. You don't need to even renounce what you may think.

If you are just flowing with the Master's experience and flow, and by His words and by Himself, along with Him – you are not renouncing Dharma. Even if you renounce all the ideas of Dharma, whatever you think as Dharma, even those ideas are taken away from you. You are asked to do something opposite; even then, the very renunciation of Dharma does not happen in you, as the Dharma itself is expressing itself directly in your life through a person who is established in the ultimate Dharma and Mokṣā.

So, with this word, Śaṅkarā just somehow relaxes into the deep love – Bhakti, the Guru Bhakti. So he stopped or relaxed from presenting further argument, because any argument Śaṅkarā would present for this thought trend would be disrespectful to the Guru Bhakti, His own Guru. So, He just rested.

Śaṅkarā – Śiva, who came down as Śaṅkarācārya. Keśava – Viṣṇu, who came down as Vyāsā. I bow.

Śaṅkarā starts saying, "As the bliss is the cause, abundance is effect. The abundance can be considered as Māyā."

Vyāsā replies, "If something can be an effect of the bliss, how can it have some other quality than bliss? But by the word 'Māyā,' a common perception can be something other than Brahmaṇ – cause."

Śaṅkarā continues, "The attribution of something other than Brahmaṇ as Māyā itself is not complete factual cognition. As the bliss and the abundance cannot be separated by its existence and action."

Vyāsā starts, "The action and inaction, both penetrate a certain personality existent; you cannot attribute personality changes during action or inaction."

Then Śaṅkarā continues, "The action naturally expresses the intensity of the personality, so you cannot say the inaction or the action can represent the same personality."

Then Vyāsā continues, "As Dharma and Mokṣā in inaction, the same personality is in Mokṣā. In action, he shows the Dharma, so action and inaction – both exist in the same space."

Then Śaṅkarā continues, "Even though action and inaction exhibit themselves in the same space, Dharma is surely one step different. Other than Mokṣā's very existence, it is a line moving in the flow. The very essence of the Source, even though it is love, the flow of the love is Dharma. So the Dharma and Mokṣā cannot be, and may not be, equated for common understanding."

Śaṅkarā's flow: as the being and doing expresses and intensifies the flow of the original existence, being and doing consist of the original Source.

Vyāsā's flow: even though being and doing consist of the original flow; the original flow is not just being and doing, but something more than the being and doing.

As Śaṅkarā's flow: as the Mokṣā moves, it is considered as Dharma; the Source – Dharma and Mokṣā may not become equivalent, so we have to look into the subtle possible difference between Māyā and Brahmaṇ.

Vyāsā flows: words like Dharma, Arthā, Kāmā, Mokṣā can be different but the original flow - the Mokṣā when it vibrates in the being by the doing in a majority space, it is called Arthā - the wealth. But, when the doing is reduced by the push of the being, it is called Kāmā - pleasure. When being and doing completely overtakes the other, it is called Dharma or Mokṣā. So, because all the four flows with the very Source, on the very Source; even though all the four are considered to be different, it cannot be different as the Source and the flow is one and the same - like water and the river.

Shankara flows: whether water and the river flow and move or stay as the Source and flow, it can be different, it can change by its very quality, by the flow or by being stagnant. As the Dharma which does not constantly upgrade itself, does not lead to Mokṣā. So, the Mokṣā which is not directly useful to the common man can never become Dharma. The words go on denoting the same, but the very flow differs based on the time and space and requirement, which is the influence of Māyā. So, you cannot say the Māyā and Brahmaṇ do not have any gap.

Vyāsā starts: if you accept the gap between the Māyā and Brahmaṇ, it creates too many complications and questions which cannot be solved or sorted out by any argument – the flow of the Māyā into Brahmaṇ, and Brahmaṇ into Māyā has no boundary which can be experienced by the Upaniṣads, or the inner space of your very experience as per the ātmā, āptā, śāstra pramāṇā. These differences are never felt except by the different usages of the word. You cannot grasp the Brahmaṇ-Māyā's independent existence or even a slight difference.

Then comes Shankarā's flow, Shankarā's argument: if there is no difference between the Brahmaṇ and the Māyā's flow; if there is no addition or deletion between these two, then the Dharma and Mokṣā are supposed to be one and the same. How can Dharma and Mokṣā be one and the same as they have to be dropped for the sake of the other at a particular point? Dharma has to be dropped for Mokṣā. If you are interested too much in Dharma, Mokṣā cannot be achieved. This is the revelation not only of śāstrās but also ātmā pramāṇā – the personal experience.

Then comes Vyāsa: There is a space where Dharma and Mokṣā cannot be dropped for the sake of one another. Enlightenment – the ātmānubhāva – is always transmitted only through a personality in which Dharma and Mokṣā have met and merged completely. Transmission happens only from such a being, where both are one.

When the direct Master is transmitting that experience, there is no need to drop one for the other. After all, the experience never gets transmitted through a personality in which Dharma and Mokṣā have not merged. Therefore, the supposed necessity to drop Dharma for Mokṣā, or Mokṣā for Dharma, does not exist when the real transmission is happening.

Now the translation.

You should be in a space where you can never be praised. That is such a wonderful space. You can never be defamed. See, how will you praise the Master for this? Will you call Him a Sarvajña or will you call Him Smṛtikārā? You cannot be praised. Being in the space where people cannot praise you at all is the safest space - you cannot be defamed at all.

When Mokṣā and Dharma overlap or push each other, the being and doing - if there is more being and less doing, it is called pleasure. If there is more doing and less being, it is called arthā (wealth). That is the whole science of life. And if being completely takes over, it is Mokṣā. If doing completely takes over, it is Dharma.

The aphorisms of existence. This is what is Brahma Sūtrās. Understand, aphorisms of existence: how do you exist?

You see, as the cause is bliss, the effect is abundance. Some may think abundance can be considered as Māyā - illusion. No, it is not! As the cause creates the effect without any gap, without any reason, it can never be separated, and it has an innate tendency. The cause is inbuilt with the effect; bliss is inbuilt with abundance. Therefore, abundance cannot be Māyā. Then finally, the whole discussion boils down to whether Dharma is important or Mokṣā is important. Naturally, everybody will say Mokṣā alone is important.

Then why are Dharma and Mokṣā different? Because Mokṣā can never be tasted unless a person in whom Mokṣā and Dharma have merged in his life transmits it to you. Dharma can never be lived unless it is taught by one in whom Mokṣā and Dharma have become one. Mokṣā can never be tasted unless it is transmitted by the being who has experienced both together in Himself, where both have merged. In the same way, Dharma cannot truly be lived unless it is taught by Him.

When the Master uses words, it can be considered Dharma. When He radiates energy, it can be considered Mokṣā. If you are sitting and grasping His words, you are receiving Dharma. If you are sitting and receiving His energy, you are experiencing Mokṣā. Yet both come from the same Source where they are one and the same. Only in a body where Dharma and Mokṣā are united can even one of them be transmitted to you. Because it can be transmitted only from such a body, you don't need to renounce one for the sake of the other. If you catch the energy, naturally you will be carried into the words. If you grasp the words, naturally you will be carried into the energy.

These are the three sacred secrets: Is abundance different from bliss? Is Dharma different from Mokṣā? Is the Master the Source of both? On these, you can honestly debate.

Sometimes you may hold a different view. You might say, "I can understand that the Master is Mokṣā, but I don't think He is Dharma." Or you may argue, "No, no, I think the Master is Dharma, but He may not be Mokṣā." Or even, "He is neither Dharma nor Mokṣā." Another view could be, "He is both, but He transmits only one - either Dharma or Mokṣā." Or still, "He is both and He transmits both." You can take any flow.

The sacred secret can be simply this: the Master is the Source of Dharma and Mokṣā. But the question arises - does He transmit both? Who receives which? Who receives what? This you can explore.

Let Vyāsa and Śaṅkara bless all of us to enter into their very thought flow. Let them bless us to experience their very energy flow - the ultimate Brahma Sūtrās, the ultimate aphorisms of existence, the ultimate existence itself.

Someone asked, "In the thought-flow of Sage Vyāsa and Śaṅkara, at one point you mentioned that only when Dharma is given up can Mokṣa be attained. You had, in an earlier discourse, said that Karṇa, the character in the Mahābhārata, was stuck in Dharma. And only when Kṛṣṇa, in the guise of a Brahmin, took away his Dharma as charity, could Karṇa be Enlightened. Is this understanding of the thought-flow appropriate? How do you then explain the next statement - that Dharma and Mokṣa get integrated in a being? Please clarify."

This is a vast subject. You should know the ultimate truth: ego can destroy itself 99.9% but never 100%. That last 0.1% cannot commit suicide. For example, if you take up a technique - say, a mantra - with that one thought you can destroy ten million other thoughts. But finally, that one thought itself cannot be destroyed by the same means. The very thought on which you have built your whole mental setup, your entire life on the mind, is called Dharma.

Look at the life of Rāmakṛṣṇa Paramahaṃsa: he built his whole life upon the one concept - Kālī. He was able to give up everything, but finally he could not let go of Kālī. Totāpuri had to come, break that last attachment, and push him beyond Kālī. Similarly, Karṇa built his whole personality upon charity, on giving. That was the base for which he was ready to compromise everything. With that one principle, he destroyed 99.9% of his thoughts. Yet, in the last moment, he was unable to leap beyond that one thought, that mental setup. This is a very sensitive and subtle subject.

If you have found your Master, be very clear: don't bother about Dharma. His words are Dharma. When He asks you to step out of Dharma, do it gladly. You will be falling directly into Mokṣa. But you need tremendous trust. People can easily give up their money, family, and all other things for the sake of the Master. But giving up what they think of as Dharma is the most difficult thing. They will be caught there. All the people who died under the army of Karna were the people who could not jump out beyond Dharma and get into Mokṣa.

Karna was stuck on that one Dharma, one concept. And another important point you should know: if you like the king, he is called a God and savior. If you don't like him, the same king is called a dictator. That's the mind. In the same way, this truth, if you like, you can take as a compassionate revelation, or you can say it is a rule for exploiting. It's your mind. But, as a factual reality, it is a compassionate revelation.

Enlightenment or any spiritual growth is a discretionary gift of the Master. There is no law by which you can earn it. To a certain level, that feeling of well-being can be earned by some laws, rules, sādhana, and all. But that solid experience itself is a clear discretionary gift from the Master. When you stand by the Master or do what He is saying based on some of your understandings or your own concepts, all this time you lived based on your concepts. You did not do it because the Master said. You did it because it matched your ideas. Only when you do something which the Master is saying, which does not match your idea, you take the jump into surrender or Bhakti, and Enlightenment happens in you. You put your feet directly into Enlightenment. Always the guidance from the Master will be Dharma in the larger picture. Unfortunately, you don't get to see that large picture before you enter into that Enlightened state or space.

So, this is a fight that goes on for ages. And, again and again it repeats: few people are not even standing by Dharma, few people get caught in what they call Dharma, few people jump beyond that and enter into Mokṣā. These are the three groups. Few people who are not bothered at all even about basic Dharma are destroyed and are demons. Few people who are bothered about something called Dharma which was expressed in the earlier versions are like last year's train timetable; if you try to use it this year, it is called Dharma. For last year, it was Mokṣā. For this year, it is Dharma. That's all.

You go and stand on the railway station saying that this timetable says very clearly at 7.30 this train is supposed to come. But you forget the train timetable is last year's timetable. So, if you are standing with last year's timetable, that is what we call being stuck with the old rules. Such people will neither be punished nor rewarded. They will just waste their time, stuck. But the people who are ready to update their timetable with their open eyes, when the Master happens, ready to enter into the next space, are given Mokṣā. They experience Mokṣā.

Karna's story is the right example. Kṛṣṇa goes and lifts him out of that mental setup in which he is caught, the setup on which he built his whole life, which is his very being. Shankara gets lifted out of his Dharma by Vishwanatha. He is caught too much with the "jāti brāhmaṇa" identity. He was able to give up everything just on that one pride of being upper caste.

Then Sadāshivā, Viṣwanātha appears in Varanasi, initiates him. He comes as a Panchama, Chandāla who eats dog or pig, carries the pig flesh, and Devi Annapūrāṇī, Mahādevi, walks as an assistant carrying the dead pig's body and four dogs. Chaturveda - all the four Vedas - come down as four dogs, having pieces of flesh and bones in their mouths. The worst, dirtiest scene. And Shankara is taking bath in the Ganges. After the bath, he comes out from that sacred water body in a deep, sacred, joyful mood.

Taking bath in a sacred water body is a great experience, a powerful spiritual practice. The spiritual vibrations can be transmitted and infused into your body through water much more than through air. Only Enlightenment gets transmitted through the space. But the levitation experience and all these energies get transmitted only through air.

The transmission in a water body will be ten times more powerful. That is why initiations are always supposed to be held in a water body. All initiations in the Hindu tradition, whether it is Gayatri initiation or sannyas initiation, are supposed to be performed standing in neck-level water, and the Master will put His foot on the water and initiate the disciple. In sannyas initiation, you are supposed to completely immerse yourself in the water, just raise your neck—that's all. Because all your clothes have to be left as they are. You should be standing naked inside the water, with only your neck visible. The Master will put the Kavi on your shoulder. Then you should take that cloth, tie it around your hip, and come out of the water.

Siddha tradition says, if you take a bath in a water body that is 100 times the volume of blood in your body, the pressure of that water acting on your body will ensure that the whole blood circulation is purified, intensified, and properly flows. You will not have any disease related to blood circulation or hypertension. If the volume of your blood is 1 unit, 100 units of water should be there - meaning a river or a huge tank. The pressure created on your body will intensely stimulate blood flow. This is just at the physical level. But on the sacred, spiritual level, if it is an energized water body, a sacred water body - never miss a chance. It will do tremendous good for you.

Shankara, after completing his bath, comes out with all the sacred feeling and mood. Poor Shankara was able to give up everything, but that orthodoxy of the upper caste did not leave him. So, when Mahādevā Viṣwanātha comes down, Shankara sees Him, and immediately all his sacred feeling went away. He gets so irritated, he looks at the disciples. They just immediately, like an arrow released from a bow, jumped on Viṣwanāthā and said, "Get out! Get out! Move out! Move out of the way! Master is coming!" Then the Chandālā, Viṣwanāthā, who came down in the form of a Chandālā, very gracefully looks, stares at the disciples first, and then meets the eyes of Shankara: "Who should move? Body or consciousness? Body does not have anything great. This body and that body, both are the same. Consciousness cannot move. It is always pure. Body is always impure. Consciousness is always pure. Because the body is always impure, this body does not move for the sake of that body. Because consciousness is always pure, there is no question of moving. Should consciousness move or body move?" Very beautifully, He questions.

Shankara is an intelligent person. Immediately, he jumps out of the Dharma in which he was caught and falls flat at the feet of the Chandālā—"If you can take me one step further than my understanding; if you can give one strong click, we don't care which community you are, who you are; we are ready to surrender." That is the intensity and attitude of Shankara. Because of that intensity, he just jumped out of that Dharma, that saṃskāra. He fell flat and got out of that engram, expressed the ultimate, and received the ultimate. Then the Chandālā disappears and appears as Viṣwanāthā, blessing Shankarā.

All people who hold on to some Dharma, some integrity, will grow very fast. They will naturally drop everything else.But going beyond that - jumping over that - is the real strength, the spiritual courage, the guts. Blessed are those who are directly asked to do things which seem not Dharma, as per their own understanding, by the Guru. If your Guru says, "Do something which is not Dharma as per you," and you do it, you are truly blessed.

A deep incident from the life of THE SPH BHAGAVAN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM, where the incarnation Paramashiva decided to manifest an extraordinary twist of events in order to demonstrate this truth to humanity in this form. BHAGAVĀN was brought up in a very orthodox family. His grandfather was a great inspiration for him but extremely orthodox. None could even talk about non-vegetarian food, alcohol, or cigarettes in the house. Forget about consuming them—none could even mention them. Even on television, if scenes appeared showing smoking, BHAGAVĀNs grandfather would switch it off. BHAGAVĀN was raised under this strict discipline.

One day, BHAGAVĀN was sitting in the Tiruvannamalai cremation ground with Yogi Ramsuratkumar. Usually, he would sit there at night. Whenever BHAGAVĀN asked him, "Why do you sit here?" Yogi Ramsuratkumar would reply, "This is a calm place. Only dead people will not disturb us!" BHAGAVĀN would sit happily, enjoying his company.

Yogi Ramsuratkumar was a chain smoker. One day, suddenly, he picked up a beedi from his mouth and stretched it toward BHAGAVĀN.

BHAGAVĀN's love for Yogi Ramsuratkumar and his parental conditioning were in literal conflict. It was like Kṛṣṇa descending from the chariot and picking up the Sudarśana Chakra to confront Bhishma. Kṛṣṇa is the Guru; Bhishma is the parental conditioning. Kṛṣṇa picked up the Sudarśana Chakra, as if saying, "Come on, it is time. Unless I intervene, the parental conditioning will not die." The Guru always promises that He will not directly destroy parental conditioning. It's a rule: parental conditioning cannot be killed directly by the Master.

The Master can inspire you to come out of parental conditioning, but cannot directly instigate it. See the whole scene: Kṛṣṇa could have just taken the Sudarśana Chakra and sent it; it would have killed Bhishma. No, He cannot. He has taken the vow. So, He takes the wheel of the chariot and moves it carefully. In BHAGAVĀN's case, he could see exactly Kṛṣṇa standing there; the only difference was, instead of the chariot wheel, He was holding a beedi! BHAGAVĀN's Bhishma - the parental conditioning - was struggling. He neither moved his body forward nor said no. Saying no would have been too much; moving His body and picking up the beedi was also too much. He was just frozen. But the beedi was burning, and time was running.

Not deciding is deciding not to decide. BHAGAVĀN did not decide, but naturally it meant deciding not to decide. Then, the fire from the beedi touched Ramsuratkumar's finger, and he dropped it, immediately catching both of BHAGAVĀN's ears. Fortunately, BHAGAVĀN had such deep surrender that even though He was forced, He felt blessed. Yogi Ramsuratkumar blew the smoke from His mouth onto his face, and for three days, everything around him appeared like a soundless movie - temple āratī happening without bell sound, every scene imbued with calm and peace. After that, BHAGAVĀN never smoked again, but he repented for not taking the beedi voluntarily when it was offered, when the Master had stretched out His hand.

Gladly jump beyond Dharma when the Master asks you; that is the greatest gift you can give yourself and your Enlightenment. The Master appears in your life only to guide you to do what is not Dharma as per your understanding, because that is the one thing you cannot do by yourself. What you consider Dharma may not be the ultimate Dharma, and for that, the Master is indispensable. For example, Ramakrishna did not need Totapuri until his Savikalpa Samādhi, but without Totapuri, he could never have attained full Enlightenment.

If you follow a rule, you will receive all the benefits that the rule can offer. But the final leap always comes as a discretionary gift - the simple, sovereign will of the Master. That's why Totapuri was needed to take Ramakrishna beyond Dharma. When Totapuri said, "Cut Kali!" it was the most sacrilegious act for someone like Ramakrishna, who had built his entire life and personality around Kali - eating Kali, breathing Kali, sleeping Kali, waking up with Kali. Yet Ramakrishna had the courage and inner strength to take that leap!

Master enters your life precisely to guide you to do what you perceive as not Dharma. For everything else, you don't need the Master. All Totapuri did for Ramakrishna was to push Him to perform the seemingly sacrilegious act - that was the only reason Totapuri was needed. Once Ramakrishna took that leap, He became Enlightened. Similarly, if a Master appears in your life and asks you to do something you think is against Dharma, understand that He is fulfilling His Avataric mission through you. The choice to take the leap and attain Enlightenment is yours. If Ramakrishna had said, "No, I am not interested, leave me," Totapuri would have respected that, but the opportunity would have been missed - just as BHAGAVĀN once missed when Yogi Ramsuratkumar offered. Later, through his own effort, BHAGAVĀN broke his parental conditioning when he left the house, which was a different process altogether.

When BHAGAVĀN, having grown and taken up the life of a parivrajaka, was sitting with a Naga Baba in Uttarkashi - who continuously smoked marijuana, dropping a copper coin in his chillum that would transform into gold after smoking - he remembered his earlier missed opportunity with Ramsuratkumar. He thought, "I must not miss this time." So when the Naga Baba stretched his hand, BHAGAVĀN reached out immediately, believing it was meant for him. Astonishingly, BHAGAVĀN realized that the Naga Baba already knew about the incident from the Tiruvannamalai cremation ground years ago - a secret known only to him and Ramsuratkumar - and was consciously extending the same opportunity once again.

Don't miss it when the Master stretches His hand. Don't miss it when He asks you to do something that seems against your idea of Dharma or "right." Catch that moment! That single act can propel you directly into Enlightenment, higher consciousness, and profound experience.

मान्त्र मान्त्रवर्णकिमेव च गीयते ॥ १.१.१५ ॥

māntra māntravarṇikameva ca gīyate || 1.1.15 ||

Source is Intelligence. Source is Bliss. Source is Existence

Swami Gambhirananda translates as: “And the very Brahmaṇ spoken of in the Mantra is declared in the Brahmaṇa.”

Swami Vireswarananda translates as: “Moreover that very Brahmaṇ which has been referred to, in the Mantra portion is sung in this Brahmaṇa passage as the tale.”

Swami Sivananda says, “Moreover that very Brahmaṇ which has been re-referred to, in the Mantra portion is sung, proclaimed in the Brahmaṇa passage as Anandamaya.”

This is actually a discussion on Shāstra Pramānā.

Sometimes the word “Self” itself is used in a way that seems to deny both the Cosmic Self and the individual self. Similarly, verbal confusion arises when the same word is used in different contexts; this should not make you think that Brahmaṇ is not the Source.

Here, Vyāsa is clarifying that wherever words denoting existence are spoken, you should interpret them according to context and understand that Source is Brahmaṇ, Cause is existence.

So, don’t create or get caught in such doubts. Look at the context and recognize that Source is existence. This sūtra primarily clarifies doubts in the Śāstra and shows how these ideas are presented in scriptures.

Whether in Upaniṣads, Vedas, or Brahmaṇas, different words might be used for various reasons, but ultimately, everything should be understood in the context of the final scale. The final truth is: Source is existence. Whenever you encounter disturbance or discrepancy that makes meaning unclear, recognize that this is the meaning you are supposed to arrive at. This is the conclusion.

So, Bādarāyaṇā Vyāsā puts an end to all verbal confusion once and for all. He says, “Enough of this nonsense. Whether it is a Veda, Āraṇyaka, or Brahmaṇa, the truth remains the same: Source is existence; Cause is bliss; Cause is intelligence. This is the conclusion you must arrive at. Everything is expressed only to lead you to this understanding. If you misinterpret, you miss the essence. The truth is: Source is bliss, Cause is bliss, Cause is intelligence.”

Now, the thought trend for vādaprativāda - the sacred secret of debate - is this: create sentences where "self" means individual self and "Self" means higher Self, generate confusing statements and clarifying statements yourself, and then understand the final truth. No matter how it is expressed, the essence is: Cause is intelligence. Source is intelligence. Source is bliss. Source is existence.

नेतरोऽनुपपत्तेः ॥ १.१.१६ ॥

netaro'nupapatteḥ ॥ 1.1.16 ॥

Individual Soul is not Intelligence

Very simple sūtrā.

Swami Vireswarananda translates as, "Brahmaṇ and not the other - the individual soul is meant here, on account of the impossibility of that assumption."

Swami Gambhirananda translates as, "The other is not the supreme Self because that is illogical."

Swami Sivananda translates as, "Brahmaṇ and not the other individual soul is meant here, on account of the impossibility of the latter assumption."

First, the positive affirmation: Cause is Existence. Source is Existence. Then comes the negative clarity: the individual soul is not. It is not the Source of Existence. It is not filled with bliss. This is the khaṇḍana-maṇḍana - expressing the truth affirmatively while discarding the non-truth decisively.

Vyāsā very beautifully puts it: Source is intelligence, and the individual soul is not intelligence. Cause is intelligence, and the individual soul is not the Cause. He goes to the extreme to clarify: do not assume the individual soul is the source of happiness because it is illogical. The assumption cannot be maintained - even for a moment, it is utterly illogical.

The basic truth experienced by the individual and the Cosmic truth experienced by the Cosmos continuously - these two have a vast gap. Most of the time, we are merely casual visitors in facing this reality. We give it little attention, little interest.

Reality reveals itself to you only when you are genuinely interested in it. Please understand, reality reveals its reality to you when your interest is purely for reality itself, not for any benefit it might bring.

Many people pursue reality hoping it will bring bliss. It may bring bliss, but not according to your request - it gives as It wills. Some seek reality thinking it will make them more spiritual; reality makes you spiritual, but not in the way you expect, only as It intends. Others pursue reality believing it will make them more moral; reality makes you moral, but again, not as you imagine - it does so as It sees fit. What truly matters is the quality of your pursuit: seeking reality solely for the sake of reality itself, not with the expectation of becoming enlightened, gaining a golden throne, or even attaining more bliss. If your intention is anything other than pure reality, you have already missed it. Reality is to be sought just for reality.

See, holding on to a certain image gives you a cozy feeling, as if you are never orphaned - you may think, "Kṛṣṇa will come and stand before me at the time of my death," or "Shiva will appear and say, 'Oh my son, come to my lokā.'" It's not that they won't appear; they may. But you cannot be eternally with them, because any form or name, including the Master's form or name, is not eternal. There is a space that is almost eternal but not truly eternal - like standing at a doorway. You are nearly out, but not completely. All names and forms should be used as a door to jump from what you consider Dharma into Mokṣā.

The fundamental understanding we want to convey is this: Source is Existence. The individual soul you experience is not Existence. Even by mistake, you cannot assume the individual soul as the source of Existence, or as the source of any bliss, or any eternal, auspicious expression.

There are countless eternal, auspicious expressions - Nirantaratva, Nityatva, Ānandatva, Sattva, Svayamprakāśatva, Tejomayānandatva - all of which belong to the Source. These expressions cannot be part of the individual soul. Only when the individual soul turns back and merges into the Source can these be experienced; otherwise, they remain beyond the reach of the individual.

Vyāsa is hitting us again and again from so many angles. He's preparing us, building a strong, solid foundation. But notice -He is not laying the foundation exactly where the main wall will be; He is creating a huge concrete pad. Even He doesn't know precisely how the building will come up. For example, if His only intention were to make you blissful, then teaching that Source is bliss and the individual soul is not the source of bliss would be sufficient. Or if He only wanted to make you intelligent, teaching that Source is intelligence and the individual soul is not intelligence would suffice. He could have built the whole sūtra on just that. But Vyāsa is preparing a vast foundation, not knowing where the weight of the wall will finally rest. He is laying a solid, stone foundation everywhere, because He knows that the wall - the full weight of realization - may settle anywhere. That is why He hits us in hundreds of expressions, from every angle, so that the entire structure of understanding and realization becomes unshakeable.

THE SPH BHAGAVĀN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM conducted an in-depth scientific study and research on Kuṇḍalinī awakening. One particular study focused on how placing weight on specific muscles affects the movement of prāna and the awakening of Kuṇḍalinī. One day, for over two hours, BHAGAVĀN performed this research on His own body with a team of doctors. BHAGAVĀN systematically lifted weights and performed various movements, integrating Western exercise methods with Hindu Yogic techniques, carefully observing and scanning each exercise's capacity to awaken Kuṇḍalinī and its effects on prāna energy.

He discovered that working on the shoulder and hand muscles simultaneously awakens Kuṇḍalinī, whereas working on only one part produces no effect. Interestingly, while performing such exercises, any sound you hear becomes your bio-memory, but visual scenes do not imprint into your system during the workout. Exercises targeting the thigh muscles fail to awaken Kuṇḍalinī, whereas working on the abdominal muscles awakens it directly. Moreover, lifting weights while standing propels Kuṇḍalinī not only to the higher chakras but also to the lower chakras below Muladhāra, cleansing them as well. These lower chakras include Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Pātāla, Talātala, and others - seven in total, representing seven lower lokas. This research demonstrates how specific movements can systematically awaken and purify prānic energy throughout the entire subtle body.

When BHAGAVĀN was conducting this research on Kuṇḍalinī, He observed how Kuṇḍalinī awakens and activates the non-mechanical parts of the brain, expanding intelligence. He noticed that intense weightlifting and Yoga stimulate the brain in the same way as contemplating on a single Brahma Sūtra. In fact, the Brahma Sūtra can be seen as the "lazy man's guide" to enlightenment—by deeply contemplating its truths, even without physical exertion, one can awaken the non-mechanical aspects of the brain and experience profound intelligence.

BHAGAVĀN outlined two primary paths for complete Enlightenment: first, intense physical practices like Yoga and weightlifting, which awaken Kuṇḍalinī and the brain; second, contemplative engagement with the most subtle truths, which opens the non-mechanical parts of the brain. Only by combining both - body and mind - does complete Enlightenment occur. Focusing on just one aspect has limitations: body-building alone produces a strong body but not spiritual awakening, while merely contemplating ideas without action may leave you physically unfit, often symbolized by a big pot belly. True transformation requires the integration of both physical and contemplative practices.

These are the two sacred secrets: Brahmaṇ is the Source, and the individual soul is not the Source; Brahmaṇ is ultimate, and the individual soul is not ultimate. Bādarāyaṇa makes this foundation very clear because He cannot predict where He will later place His emphasis or weight when awakening the non-mechanical parts of your brain. That is why, from the very beginning, He confirms the essentials.

For example, in foundational statements, if He declares that Source is bliss but does not immediately mention that Source is compassion, you might later object: "No, you didn't say that earlier!" To avoid such confusion, He establishes all basic truths upfront: Source is bliss, Source is compassion, Source is intelligence - leaving no ambiguity in the foundation.

So now, the sacred secret for vādaprativāda: Source is not the individual self. Source is the Cosmic existence. Don't say, "Ah, I already know this. Why argue?" No! You don't know it experientially yet. This is why you must engage in vādaprativāda - to make it your direct experience. Remove doubts one by one. Drill yourself: Why is Source not the individual self? Why is Source the Cosmic intelligence? Drill deep!

One more thing: when the Kuṇḍalinī awakens, naturally you will levitate. Levitation melts all bad cholesterol; your belly reduces. Even by sincerely reading and contemplating the Brahma Sūtras, you will lose weight - a kind of lazy person's technique for Enlightenment and losing the pot belly!

So now, start the vādaprativāda. Sit within yourself. You should create this inner dialogue between your buddhi and dhi. Buddhi is the power of cognizance; dhi is your reaction or response after cognizing. In this inner debate, Vyāsā is buddhi, Shankara is dhi. Let this argument - this vādaprativāda - begin inside you.

See, the vādaprativāda between Ātman and mind is like Shankara and Mandala Miśra. The vādaprativāda between buddhi and dhi is like Vyāsa and Shankara. You should create your own arguments. Be courageous enough to argue inside your mind: "No, Source is not Cosmic existence. Source is me only. How do I know anything beyond me exists?" You should have the guts to take both stands, to challenge yourself fully, and then finally arrive at what feels like factual reality according to your own cognizance. Sit with this sacred secret for a few minutes: Source is Existence. Source is not the individual self.

Now the rest of the sutras.

भेदव्यपदेशाच्च ॥ १.१.१७॥

bhedavyapadeśācca || 1.1.17 ||

And on account of the declaration of difference.

While we perceive differences in the world, they exist only because of the designations and labels we assign. The underlying reality is unchanging and one - all distinctions are superficial. Ultimately, everything is Brahman. This insight calls us to transcend conceptual thinking and directly experience the oneness of existence.

कामाच्च नानुमानापेक्षा ॥ १.१.१८॥

kāmācca nānumānāpekṣā | 1.1.18 ||

On account of the word 'bliss', literally 'desire', (Brahman), (you) cannot infer (Anandamaya is also Brahman since the suffix 'maya' indicates modification).

Where desires arise and are typically measured and compared, they lead to a perception of conditioned, transient phenomena. Beyond the conditioned realm, where such relative measures (inference, comparison) no longer apply, is an unconditioned, absolute state.

अस्मिन्नस्य च तद्योगं शास्ति ॥ १.१.१९॥

asminnasya ca tadyogaṃ śāsti || 1.1.19 ||

(The scriptures) also teach of its (self 's) becoming one with This.

The individual self (ātman) is essentially non-different from Brahman. The 'union' mentioned is the realization of this inherent oneness.

अन्तस्तद्धर्मोपदेशात् ॥ १.१.२०॥

antastaddharmopadeśāt || 1.1.20 ||

The Being inside is Supreme, His qualities having been taught.

In the Chandogya Upaniṣad (1.6.6-8 and 1.7.5-8), there are descriptions of a golden person within the sun and a person within the eye, possessing divine attributes. This sūtra asserts that these descriptions refer to the Supreme Brahman, as the characteristics attributed to these beings align with those of Brahman.

भेदव्यपदेशाच्चान्यः ॥ १.१.२१॥

bhedavyapadeśāccānyaḥ || 1.1.21 ||

And Supreme is different (from the individual being) owing to the mention of difference.

This sūtra asserts that the Supreme Self (Brahman) is distinct from the individual self (jīva), as evidenced by scriptural declarations that highlight this difference. The emphasis is on understanding the unique nature of Brahman, which is not to be conflated with the individual soul.

आकाशस्तल्लिङ्गात् ॥ १.१.२२॥

ākāśastalliṅgāt || 1.1.22 ||

Space (Ākāśa) is Brahman, for Brahman's indicatory mark is in evidence.

This sūtra addresses passages in the Upaniṣads where "Ākāśa" is described with attributes that transcend those of mere elemental space. For instance, in the Chandogya Upaniṣad (1.9.1), Ākāśa is depicted as the origin and dissolution point of all beings, the ultimate support, and the greatest entity. Such descriptions suggest characteristics of the Supreme Brahman rather than the physical element of space.

अत एव प्राणः ॥ १.१.२३॥

ata eva prāṇaḥ || 1.1.23 ||

For the same reason, Prāṇa (is Brahman).

This sūtra addresses passages in the Upaniṣads where "prāṇa" is described with attributes that transcend those of mere vital breath. Such descriptions suggest characteristics of the Supreme Brahman rather than the physiological function of breathing.

ज्योतिश्चरणाभिधानात् ॥ १.१.२४॥

jyotiścaraṇābhidhānāt || 1.1.24 ||

Light (is Brahman) because of the mention of feet.

This sūtra addresses passages in the Upaniṣads where "jyotiḥ" is described with attributes that transcend those of mere physical light. Such descriptions imply that "jyotiḥ" in these contexts symbolizes the Supreme Brahman rather than ordinary light.

छन्दोऽभिधानान्नेतिचेन्न तथाचेतोऽर्पणनिगदात्तथा हि दर्शनम् ॥ १.१.२५॥

chando'bhidhānānneticenna tathāceto'rpaṇanigadāttathā hi darśanam || 1.1.25 ||

If it is said that (Brahman is) not (referred to) because of the metre being mentioned, we say no because in that way the application of the mind has been taught; it is seen (in other texts).

In the preceding sūtras, terms like "light" (jyotiḥ) have been interpreted as references to Brahman based on contextual attributes. This sūtra anticipates an objection: in certain Upaniṣadic passages, "light" is associated with "metres" (chandas), which are components of Hindu hymns. This association might suggest that "light" refers to something other than Brahman, perhaps a Hindu metre or a physical entity.

The sūtra refutes this objection by pointing out that in the same context, faculties like mind (manas) and speech (vāk) are described as merging into this "light." Such descriptions are consistent with the nature of Brahman as the ultimate substratum into which all faculties and elements resolve. Therefore, despite the mention of metres, the term "light" in these contexts should be understood as denoting Brahman.

भूतादिपादव्यपदेशोपपत्तेश्चैवम् ॥ १.१.२६॥

bhūtādipādavyapadeśopapatteścaivam || 1.1.26 ||

And this must be so, because this makes possible the representation of all the things etc. as a foot.

Describing elements and other entities as the "feet" of a larger entity is metaphorical, indicating their foundational role in the manifested universe. This metaphor aligns with the concept of Brahman as the substratum upon which the universe is structured.

उपदेशभेदान्नेति चेन्नोभयस्मिन्नप्यविरोधात् ॥ १.१.२७॥

upadeśabhedānneti cennobhayasminnapyavirodhāt || 1.1.27 ||

If it be argued that Brahman (of the earlier text) is not referred to here on account of the difference in the instruction, (we say) no, because there is no contradiction in either case.

Despite apparent differences in instruction, there is no real contradiction (avirodha). The variations in teaching are due to the diverse contexts and methods employed to convey the nature of Brahman to different audiences. These differences do not imply multiple realities but rather reflect various approaches to understanding the singular, all-encompassing Brahman.

प्राणस्तथानुगमात् ॥ १.१.२८॥

prāṇastathānugamāt || 1.1.28 ||

Prāṇa is Brahman, because it is comprehended thus.

The sūtra asserts that "Prāṇa" in this context refers to Brahman. This conclusion is drawn from the attributes associated with Prāṇa in the passage: being the intelligent self, the source of life and immortality, and the entity whose knowledge absolves one from all sins. Such characteristics are traditionally ascribed to Brahman, the ultimate reality, rather than to the mere vital force.

नवक्तुरात्मोपदेशादिति चेदध्यात्मसंबन्धभूमा ह्यस्मिन् ॥ १.१.२९॥

navakturātmopadeśāditi cedadhyātmasaṃbandhabhūmā hyasmin || 1.1.29 ||

If it be argued that Prāṇa is not Brahman, since the instruction is about the speaker's own self, (then we say, no), for here is an abundance of reference to the inmost Self.

The sūtra refutes this objection by asserting that despite the speaker's self-reference, the context contains an abundance of references to the Inner Self (adhyātma-sambandha-bhūmā). The nature of the Inner Self is characterized by attributes such as intelligence, life, and immortality - qualities inherent to Brahman. Therefore, "Prāṇa" in this context should be understood as referring to the Supreme Brahman, not merely the individual deity or the vital force.

शास्त्रदृष्ट्या तूपदेशो वामदेववत् ॥ १.१.३०॥

śāstradṛṣṭyā tūpadeśo vāmadevavat || 1.1.30 ||

But the instruction proceeds from a seer's vision agreeing with scriptures, as in the case of Vamadeva.

The reference to Prāṇa as Brahman should be taken as a scriptural revelation and not a literal identification of the deity Indra with the Supreme Brahman.

जीवमुख्यप्राणलिङ्गान्नेति चेन्नोपासत्रैविद्यादाश्रितत्वादिह तद्योगात् ॥ १.१.३१॥

jīvamukhyaprāṇaliṅgānneti cennopāsatraividyādāśritatvādiha tadyogāt || 1.1.31 ||

If it be argued that (Brahman) is not spoken of here on account of the indications of the individual soul and the chief vital force (being mentioned), then (we say) not so, since this will lead to a threefold meditation. (Besides, Prāṇa) is accepted (elsewhere) as meaning Brahman (because of the presence of Brahman's characteristics), (and these are) in evidence here.

A possible objection is raised: Certain scriptural passages seem to suggest that Prāṇa (life force) or Jīva (the individual self) is being referred to instead of Brahman.

To this, the sūtra replies: No, Brahman alone is meant because:

Upāsanā (meditation) is prescribed on that entity.

Traividyā (the threefold knowledge of the Vedas) depends on that entity.

The attributes mentioned (such as being the ultimate support and basis of meditation) are applicable only to Brahman.

Thus, Brahman alone is the correct referent of the Upaniṣadic teaching, not Jīva or Mukhyaprāṇa.

प्रथमाध्यायस्य प्रथमः पादः समाप्तः prathamādhyāyasya prathamaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

(End of Chapter 1 Part 1)

In the first section (Samanvaya Pada), the sūtras established that all Vedantic texts have Brahman as their central subject.

Now, in this second section (Avirodha), possible objections are addressed, showing that there is no contradiction in accepting Brahman as the subject of Vedanta.

सर्वत्र प्रसिद्धोपदेशात् ॥ १.२.१॥

sarvatra prasiddhopadeśāt || 1.2.1 ||

(Brahman is the object to be meditated on), since 'that which is well known everywhere is taught.

Whether one studies the Chandogya, Bṛhadāraṇyaka, Taittirīya, or other Upaniṣads, Brahman is always taught as the highest and most essential truth. Thus, there is no inconsistency or contradiction in accepting Brahman as the core teaching of Vedanta.

Chandogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) – "सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीत्" (Sat eva somya idam agra āsīt)

"O dear one, in the beginning, there was only Existence (Sat, Brahman)."

विवक्षितगुणोपपत्तेश्च ॐ ॥ १.२.२॥

vivakṣitaguṇopapatteśca || 1.2.2 ||

Because the intended qualities are befitting (in the case of Brahman).

This sūtra continues the discussion from the previous sūtra (1.2.1), which established that Brahman is the central teaching of Vedanta because it is universally recognized in the scriptures.

Here, the argument is strengthened by stating that the qualities and characteristics described in the Upaniṣads can only apply to Brahman, not to any other entity like Prakṛti (Nature), Jīva (individual soul), or even deities within creation.

In many places, the Upaniṣads describe Brahman with unique attributes such as infinity, omniscience, and omnipresence. These attributes are not applicable to anything else except Brahman. Therefore, since these attributes naturally fit Brahman, the scriptures must be speaking about Brahman alone.

अनुपपत्तेस्तु न शारीरः ॥ १.२.३॥

anupapattestu na śārīraḥ || 1.2.3 ||

And the embodied individual soul is not surely meant, because the qualities do not fit in with it.

Could the Brahman described in the scriptures actually refer to the individual soul (Jīva), rather than the Supreme Brahman?

This sūtra refutes that possibility, stating that identifying Brahman with the Jīva is illogical (anupapatti).

Jīva (the embodied soul) is limited, whereas Brahman is infinite. The individual soul is bound by ignorance (avidyā), karma, and suffering, whereas Brahman is ever-free and unchanging. Jīva undergoes birth, death, and experiences pleasure and pain, whereas Brahman is beyond all modifications (nirvikāra).

कर्मकर्तृव्यपदेशाच्च ॥ १.२.४॥

karmakartṛvyapadeśācca || 1.2.4 ||

And because there is reference to the object and agent.

This sūtra further strengthens the argument presented in the previous sūtras (1.2.2 and 1.2.3) that Brahman is distinct from the individual soul (Jīva).

The Upaniṣads and Hindu scriptures describe Brahman as both the doer (kartā) and the object (karma) of all actions. However, the Jīva is only an agent (kartā) in a limited sense, bound by karma and ignorance (avidyā). Since Brahman is described as both the actor and the acted upon, it cannot be the same as the limited Jīva, which is constrained by karma. Thus, Brahman must be independent of the Jīva and beyond the limitations of karma and agency.

शब्दविशेषात् ॥ १.२.५॥

śabdaviśeṣāt || 1.2.5 ||

Because of the difference in the (case-endings of the two) words.

The Upaniṣads use unique and exclusive terms for Brahman, such as:

"Satyam, Jñānam, Anantam Brahma" (Taittirīya Upaniṣad). Brahman is Truth, Knowledge, and Infinite.

"Ekam evādvitīyam" (Chāndogya Upaniṣad). Brahman is One without a second.
"Nirguna". Without attributes.
These descriptions do not apply to the Jīva, which is limited and bound by karma.

स्मृतेश्च ॥ १.२.६॥
smṛteśca ||1.2.6 ||
(This follows) from the smṛti also.

अर्भकौकस्त्वात् तद्व्यपदेशाच्च नेति चेन्न निचाय्यत्वादेवं व्योमवच्च ॥ १.२.७॥
arbhakaukastvāt tadvyapadeśācca neti cenna nicāyyatvādevaṃ vyomavacca || 1.2.7 ||
If it be objected that the supreme Self is not taught here, because it is a mere child or inert (like insentient matter), then we say: No, for this is done for the sake of contemplation, as is seen in the case of space.

This sūtra addresses a potential objection raised against the idea that Brahman is the intelligent cause (nimitta kāraṇa) of the universe. The opponent argues that:

'Brahman is like a child (Arbhaka)': A child is ignorant and does not create the universe but since Brahman is said to be inactive and formless, how can it be a creator?

'Brahman is like inert matter (Avakastva)': Some may argue that Brahman is inactive or unconscious (like insentient matter) but if Brahman were insentient, it could not be the intelligent cause of the world.

Brahman is omniscient (nicāyyatvāt), as confirmed by the Upaniṣads. Brahman is not insentient, nor is it powerless like a child. Brahman is both the material cause (upādāna kāraṇa) and the intelligent cause (nimitta kāraṇa) of the universe. It is like space (vyomavat), which pervades everything while remaining unchanged.

संभोगप्राप्तिरिति चेन्न वैशेष्यात् ॥ १.२.८॥
saṃbhogaprāptiriti cenna vaiśeṣyāt || 1.2.8 ||
If it be said that It has experience of pleasure and pain, (we say) not so because of the difference in the nature (of the two).

The opponent argues: Brahman, if considered the material and intelligent cause of the world, must undergo experiences like embodied beings (jīvas). Just as a potter enjoys the fruits of his creation, Brahman too must experience pleasure and pain from the world.

This assumption is incorrect because Brahman is distinct (vaiśeṣya) from limited beings. Unlike jīvas, Brahman is free from karma, desires, and the cycle of enjoyment and suffering. Brahman creates without being affected by the creation.

The Upaniṣads declare: "Na karma lipyate nare" (Isha Upaniṣad 8). Actions do not bind the Supreme."

अत्ता चराचरग्रहणात् ॥ १.२.९॥
attā carācaragrahaṇāt || 1.2.9 ||
The eater (is Brahman) because both the movable and immovable is taken (as Its food).

Brahman is indeed the attā (experiencer or sustainer) because it pervades and governs both the moving (chara) and the non-moving (achara) beings in creation. This does not mean Brahman undergoes experiences like a jīva, but rather that Brahman is the substratum, support, and witness of all experiences.

Upaniṣadic references:

Eṣa sarveśvara eṣa bhūtādhipatir eṣa bhūtapāla eṣa setur vidharaṇa eṣām lokānām samastaḥ." (Brihadaranyaka Upaniṣad 4.4.22).

This (Brahman) is the Lord of all, the ruler of all beings, the protector of all beings, the bridge supporting the worlds.

प्रकरणाच्च ॥ १.२.१०॥
prakaraṇācca || 1.2.10 ||

And (this follows) from the context.

Because of the context (prakaraṇa), we understand that the scriptures are discussing Brahman.

In various Upaniṣads, the topic (prakaraṇa) is clearly Brahman, the Supreme Consciousness, and not the individual soul or inert matter.

Chandogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1): "सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीदेकमेवाद्वितीयम्। O Somya, in the beginning, existence alone was there, one without a second."

This passage clearly refers to Brahman as the singular reality, which later manifests as the world.

Taittiriya Upaniṣad (2.0): "सत्यं ज्ञानमनन्तं ब्रह्म। Brahman is truth, knowledge, and infinite."

This defines Brahman as the Supreme Being, not as jīva or prakṛti.

Mundaka Upaniṣad (2.1.3): "एतस्माज्जायते प्राणो मनः सर्वेन्द्रियाणि च। From that (Brahman), prāṇa (vital force), mind, and all the senses arise."

This confirms that Brahman is the source of all creation.

गुहां प्रविष्टावात्मानौ हि तद्दर्शनात् ॥ १.२.११॥

guhāṃ praviṣṭāvātmānau hi taddarśanāt || 1.2.11 ||

The two that have entered into the cavity (of the heart) are the individual Self and the supreme Self, for that is what is seen.

The Upaniṣads explicitly state that both Brahman and the jīva reside in the "guhā" (cave of the heart). The term "guhā" refers to the innermost core of consciousness, where both the Supreme Self (Paramātman) and the individual self (jīvātman) are present.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Mundaka Upaniṣad (3.1.1–2): "द्वा सुपर्णा सयुजा सखाया समानं वृक्षं परिषस्वजाते। Two birds, ever united in friendship, perch on the same tree. One enjoys the fruits (karma), while the other merely witnesses." This metaphor describes the jīva as the enjoyer and Brahman as the detached witness (Sākṣī).

Katha Upaniṣad (1.2.20): "अणोरणीयान्महतो महीयानात्माऽस्य जन्तोर्गुहायां निहितः। The Self (Ātman), subtler than the subtlest, greater than the greatest, is lodged in the cave (of the heart)." This refers to Brahman as the inner controller (Antaryāmin), residing in the heart.

Chandogya Upaniṣad (8.3.3): "एष आत्मा हृदि तस्मिन्नेते सर्वे संप्रतिष्ठिताः। This Self (Brahman) resides in the heart, in which everything is established."

विशेषणाच्च ॥ १.२.१२॥

viśeṣaṇācca || 1.2.12 ||

And because there is a specification.

The Upaniṣads use unique and specific attributes (viśeṣaṇa) that can apply only to Brahman.

The jīva and Prakṛti do not possess these attributes, proving that the subject being described is Brahman alone.

Taittiriya Upaniṣad (2.0): "सत्यं ज्ञानमनन्तं ब्रह्म। Brahman is truth, knowledge, and infinite." These absolute attributes can only belong to Brahman, not to the limited jīva or inert Prakṛti.

अन्तर उपपत्तेः ॥ १.२.१३॥

antara upapatteḥ || 1.2.13 ||

Inside (the eye is Brahman) because of the appropriateness (of attributes).

Brahman is the Inner Self (Antaryāmin) of all beings. The term "Antara" (inner) refers to Brahman, which is beyond the jīva and the body-mind complex. The scriptures establish that the ultimate inner reality is Brahman, not the jīva.

स्थानादिव्यपदेशाच्च ॥ १.२.१४॥

sthānādivyapadeśācca || 1.2.14 ||

And because abode etc are attributed to It.

The Upaniṣads mention "sthāna" (place) and other characteristics that are appropriate only to Brahman, not to the jīva or Prakṛti.

These specific descriptions help identify Brahman as the subject of discussion.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Chandogya Upaniṣad (8.1.1): "अस्मिन्ब्राह्मणः पुरे दहरं पुण्डरीकं वेदस्य अन्तराकाशः In this city of Brahman (the body), there is a small lotus (the heart) in which the inner space (ākāśa) exists."This inner space (antarākāśa) refers to Brahman residing in the heart as the Antaryāmin (Inner Controller).

सुखविशिष्टाभिधानादेव च ॥ १.२.१५॥

sukhaviśiṣṭābhidhānādeva ca || 1.2.15 ||

And on account of reference (to Brahman) distinguished by bliss.

The Upaniṣads specifically describe Brahman as "sukha-viśiṣṭa" (associated with supreme bliss). The jīva experiences temporary pleasure and pain, whereas Brahman alone is the source of eternal, infinite bliss. Therefore, the Upaniṣads must be referring to Brahman, not the jīva or any other entity.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Taittiriya Upaniṣad (3.6.1): "आनन्दो ब्रह्मेति व्यजानात्। Brahman is bliss." Brahman is explicitly equated with bliss, which is not possible for the limited jīva.

Chandogya Upaniṣad (7.23.1): "यो वै भूमा तत्सुखम्। नाल्पे सुखमस्ति। That which is infinite (bhūmā) is bliss. There is no bliss in the finite." Since only Brahman is infinite, it must be the supreme bliss mentioned here.

श्रुतोपनिषत्कगत्यभिधानाच्च ॥ १.२.१६॥

śrutopaniṣatkagatyabhidhānācca || 1.2.16 ||

And also on account of the way of those who have realized the truth of the Upaniṣad.

The Upaniṣads clearly state that the ultimate goal (gati) of all beings is Brahman. The jīvas, upon liberation, move towards and merge with Brahman. This characteristic applies only to Brahman, not to any other entity.

अनवस्थितेरसंभवाच्च नेतरः ॥ १.२.१७॥

anavasthiterasaṃbhavācca netaraḥ || 1.2.17 ||

None other can be on account of impermanence and impossibility.

Anavasthiti (Instability) of the Jīva: The jīva is subject to ignorance (avidyā), karma, bondage, and liberation. If the jīva were the ultimate reality, it would mean that the Supreme Reality itself is unstable, which is illogical. The Upaniṣads describe Brahman as changeless and eternal, whereas the jīva undergoes changes due to its karma. Thus, the jīva cannot be the Supreme Reality.

Asaṃbhava (Impossibility) of Pradhāna as the Cause: Pradhāna (unmanifest nature) is inert (jaḍa) and unconscious. It cannot create the universe without the guidance of an intelligent principle. The Upaniṣads describe the Supreme Cause as intelligent and conscious (Chaitanya-svarūpa), which contradicts the Sāṅkhya view of an unconscious cause. Thus, Pradhāna cannot be the Supreme Reality.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Chandogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1): "सदेव सौम्य इदमग्र आसीत्। In the beginning, dear one, only existence (Sat, Brahman) was there." The cause of creation is Sat (pure existence), not inert Pradhāna.

Katha Upaniṣad (2.1.10): "न जायते म्रियते वा विपश्चित्। The Self (Brahman) is neither born nor does it die; it is eternal." This eternality belongs to Brahman, not to the jīva or Pradhāna.

अन्तर्याम्यधिदैवादिषु तद्धर्मव्यपदेशात् ॥ १.२.१८॥

antaryāmyadhidaivādiṣu taddharmavyapadeśāt || 1.2.18 ||

The Ruler within of the gods etc (is Brahman) on account of the qualities mentioned.

The Upaniṣads describe Brahman as the Antaryāmin (Inner Controller) who resides within all beings, including the deities, the elements, and the jīvas. The gods and other beings may have great power, but their attributes are ultimately derived from Brahman. Brahman alone is independent, while all others, including deities, are dependent on Brahman. Since the Upaniṣads attribute Brahman's qualities to the Antaryāmin and other beings, it confirms that Brahman is the ultimate reality governing everything.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Katha Upaniṣad (2.2.13):"नित्योऽनित्यनाम् चेतनश्चेतनानाम्। He is the eternal among the non-eternal, the consciousness among the conscious beings." The devas (gods) and jīvas may have power and intelligence, but Brahman is their ultimate source.

Chandogya Upaniṣad (3.14.1): "सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म। All this indeed is Brahman." Everything, including deities and cosmic forces, is sustained by Brahman.

न च स्मार्तं अतद्धर्माभिपालात् ॥ १.२.१९॥

na ca smārtaṃ ataddharmābhipālāt || 1.2.19 ||

Neither Pradhāna, known from the Sānkhya Smṛti is the internal Ruler, for qualities contrary (to Pradhāna) are spoken of.

The Brahman described in the Upaniṣads is beyond attributes (nirguṇa) and beyond all limitations. Many Smṛti texts describe Brahman in a personal form (saguṇa), with specific characteristics like creation, sustenance, and destruction. Since the Smṛti texts sometimes assign non-Brahman qualities (like form, actions, and change) to the Supreme, they cannot be taken as the sole authority for defining Brahman. Only the Upaniṣads (Shruti) are the ultimate authority in determining the true nature of Brahman.

शरीरश्चोभयेऽपि हि भेदेनैनमधीयते ॥ १.२.२०॥

śarīraścobhaye'pi hi bhedenainamadhīyate || 1.2.20 ||

The embodied soul also (is not the internal Ruler); for the followers of both the recensions read of this one as different.

The term "Śarīra" (embodied) is used in different contexts in Shruti and Smṛti. The Upaniṣads describe Brahman as the indweller (Antaryāmin) of all beings, meaning that all bodies are Brahman's "body".

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Chandogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1):"सदेव सोम्य इदमग्र आसीत्। In the beginning, all this was only Sat (Brahman)." Since Brahman pervades everything, it can be considered the inner controller of all bodies.

Bhagavad Gita (13.2): "इदं शरीरं कौन्तेय क्षेत्रमित्यभिधीयते। This body, O Kaunteya, is called the field (kṣetra)." Kṛṣṇa (as Brahman) explains that all bodies are simply fields of experience, and the true knower of the body (kṣetrajña) is the Supreme Self.

अदृश्यत्वादिगुणको धर्मोक्तेः ॥ १.२.२१॥

adṛśyatvādiguṇako dharmokteḥ || 1.2.21 ||

The possessor The Upaniṣads explicitly describe Brahman as possessing qualities such as invisibility (adṛśyatva), beyond perception, beyond material limitations, etc. of the attributes of invisibility etc. (is Brahman) on account of the characteristics having been stated.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Mundaka Upaniṣad (1.1.6): "अदृश्यं, अग्राह्यं, अगोत्रं, अवर्णं | It is invisible, beyond grasp, without lineage, without form." This negates the idea that Brahman can be perceived like ordinary objects.

Katha Upaniṣad (1.2.20): "अणोरणीयान् महतो महीयान्। It is smaller than the smallest and greater than the greatest." This suggests that Brahman transcends all physical limitations.

विशेषणभेदव्यपदेशाभ्यां नेतरौ ॥ १.२.२२॥

viśeṣaṇabhedavyapadeśābhyāṃ netarau || 1.2.22 ||

On account of the mention of distinctive characteristics and difference the other two are not.

The Upaniṣads clearly describe Brahman with unique distinguishing attributes (viśeṣaṇa) and differences (bheda). Both Jīva and Prakṛti are explicitly mentioned as separate from Brahman. Therefore, neither of them can be Brahman.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Katha Upaniṣad (1.2.14): "अन्यत्र धर्मादन्यत्र अधर्मात् … That (Brahman) is beyond both virtue and vice, beyond cause and effect." Since Jīva is bound by karma and Prakṛti is the cause of material effects, neither can be Brahman.

Svetasvatara Upaniṣad (6.11): "एको देवः सर्वभूतेषु गूढः...The One Divine Lord, hidden in all beings, is distinct from them." This explicitly states that Brahman is different from Jīva and Prakṛti.

Mundaka Upaniṣad (3.1.1): "द्वा सुपर्णा सयुजा सखाया...Two birds (Jīva and Paramātman) sit on the same tree; one enjoys the fruit, the other remains as a witness." This metaphor confirms that Jīva is distinct from Brahman.

रूपोपन्यासाच्च ॥ १.२.२३॥

rūpopanyāsācca || 1.2.23 ||

And because there is a mention of form also.

The Upaniṣads provide specific descriptions of Brahman's nature (rūpa) that are distinct from both Jīva and Prakṛti. Jīva is limited and bound by karma, whereas Brahman is infinite and free. Prakṛti is insentient (jaḍa), whereas Brahman is the sentient ultimate reality. Therefore, neither Jīva nor Prakṛti can be equated with Brahman.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Taittiriya Upaniṣad (2.0): "सत्यं ज्ञानं अनन्तं ब्रह्म। Brahman is Truth, Knowledge, and Infinite." This description does not match Jīva (who is bound by ignorance) or Prakṛti (which is inert).

Svetasvatara Upaniṣad (3.8): "वेदाहमेतं पुरुषं महान्तं आदित्यवर्णं तमसः परस्तात्। I know that Great Puruṣa, shining like the Sun, beyond darkness." This indicates Brahman as distinct from both Jīva (who is bound by karma) and Prakṛti (which lacks consciousness).

वैश्वानरः साधारणशब्दविशेषात् ॥ १.२.२४॥

vaiśvānaraḥ sādhāraṇaśabdaviśeṣāt || 1.2.24 ||

Vaiśvānara (Cosmic Person) because of the qualifying adjuncts to the common words.

The specific use of the general term in certain contexts (sādhāraṇa-śabda-viśeṣa) indicates that Vaiśvānara refers to Brahman. The Upaniṣads describe Vaiśvānara with attributes that belong only to Brahman, such as universality, cosmic nature, and being the support of all.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Bhagavad Gita (15.14): "अहं वैश्वानरो भूत्वा प्राणिनां देहमाश्रितः। I, having become Vaiśvānara, reside in the bodies of living beings (as digestive fire)." Kṛṣṇa, as the Supreme Brahman, identifies Himself with Vaiśvānara.

स्मर्यमाणमनुमानं स्यादिति ॥ १.२.२५॥

smaryamāṇamanumānaṃ syāditi || 1.2.25 ||

Because (the Cosmic Form) described in the Smṛti is an indicatory mark.

The sūtra rejects this objection and asserts that Smṛti texts are not merely inferential but are based on direct Hindu revelation (Śruti). Smṛti is not a product of human inference but an authentic source of knowledge, derived from the eternal wisdom of the Vedas.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Bhagavad Gita (15.15): "सर्वस्य चाहं हृदि सन्निविष्टो मत्तः स्मृतिर्ज्ञानमपोहनं च। I am seated in the heart of all; from Me come memory, knowledge, and their removal." This verse indicates that Smṛti (memory of scriptural knowledge) is divinely inspired, not humanly inferred.

Mahabharata (Śānti Parva 348.4): "श्रुतिस्तु वेदः प्रोक्तः स्मृतिश्चैव तु धर्मशास्त्रं। Śruti refers to the Vedas, and Smṛti refers to the Dharma Śāstras (like Manusmṛti, Gita, etc.)." This establishes that Smṛti is a valid source of knowledge.

शब्दादिभ्योऽन्तः प्रतिष्ठानान्नेति चेन्न तथा दृष्ट्युपदेशादसंभवात्पुरुषविध्मपि चैनमधीयते ॥ १.२.२६॥ śabdādibhyoऽntaḥ pratiṣṭhānānneti cenna tathā dṛṣṭyupadeśād asaṃbhavātpuruṣavidhmapi cainamadhīyate || 1.2.26 ||

If it be objected that Vaiśvānara is not the supreme Self because of the word used as well as other factors, and because of residence inside, then we say : not so, because the instruction is to conceive of Brahman as such, because the specification is inapplicable to others, and because they mention Him even as puruṣa.

Perception and scriptural vision (dṛṣṭi-upadeśa) prove that Vaiśvānara is not merely fire but has deeper significance. Even though Vaiśvānara is said to be within (antaḥ pratiṣṭhāna), it does not mean it is limited to the body—rather, Brahman pervades everything, both inside and outside. Vaiśvānara is also described as puruṣavidh (of human form). This means that Brahman, though formless, is symbolically given a universal form for meditation.

Upaniṣadic References Supporting This View:

Bhagavad Gita (15.14): "अहं वैश्वानरो भूत्वा प्राणिनां देहमाश्रितः। I, having become Vaiśvānara, reside in the bodies of living beings (as digestive fire)." Kṛṣṇa (Brahman) identifies Himself with Vaiśvānara, confirming its divine aspect.

अत एव न देवता भूतं च ॐ ॥ १.२.२७॥

ata eva na devatā bhūtaṃ ca || 1.2.27 ||

For the same reason (Vaisvanara is) neither the deity nor the element.

This sūtra explicitly rules out the alternative interpretations that Vaiśvānara is merely: a Deity (Devatā) – e.g., Agni or another Hindu god; a Physical Element (Bhūta) – e.g., fire as an element in nature or digestion.

साक्षादप्यविरोधं जैमिनिः ॥ १.२.२८॥

sākṣādapyavirodhaṃ jaiminiḥ || 1.2.28 ||

(According to) Jaimini, there is no contradiction even in direct (meditation).

Here, the sage Jaimini (the founder of the Mīmāṃsā school of thought) asserts that there is no contradiction in interpreting Vaiśvānara as Brahman, even from a direct scriptural standpoint.

अभिव्यक्तेरित्याश्मरथ्यः ॥ १.२.२९॥

abhivyakterityāśmarathyaḥ || 1.2.29 ||

On account of manifestation, says Aśmarathya.

Sage Āśmarathya provides an explanation: Brahman is not inherently limited, but it appears to manifest in various forms. Vaiśvānara is one such manifestation of Brahman.

अनुस्मृतेर्बादरिः ॥ १.२.३०॥

anusmṛterbādariḥ || 1.2.30 ||

For the purpose of constant remembrance, says Bādari.

Sage Bādari adds another reason: Brahman is remembered (Anusmṛti) in connection with Vaiśvānara. The Upaniṣads prescribe meditation on Vaiśvānara as a means to realize the Supreme Reality. This implies that Vaiśvānara is Brahman itself, not a separate entity.

सम्पत्तेरिति जैमिनिः तथा हि दर्शयति ॥ १.२.३१॥ sampatteriti jaiminiḥ tathā hi darśayati || 1.2.31 || Because of the meditation based on superimposition says Jaimini for so the śruti declares.

Sage Jaimini adds that Vaiśvānara leads to the attainment (Sampatti) of Brahman, which proves its identity with the Supreme Reality. Scriptures show that one who meditates on Vaiśvānara attains Brahman.

The phrase "Tathā hi darśayati" (For so the scripture shows) means that the Upaniṣads support this conclusion. No mere deity or element can grant Brahman-realization; only Brahman itself can.

आमनन्ति चैनमस्मिन् ॥ १.२.३२॥

āmananti cainamasmin || 1.2.32 ||

And (the scriptures) mention Him (Brahman) in this (Vaiśvānara).

This sūtra further strengthens the argument that Vaiśvānara is Brahman by emphasizing that scriptural texts explicitly declare Vaiśvānara to be Brahman.

इति श्रीमत्कृष्णद्वैपायनकृत ब्रह्मसूत्रेषु प्रथमाध्यायस्य द्वितीयः पादः समाप्तः iti śrīmat kṛṣṇadvaipāyanakṛta brahmasūtreṣu prathamādhyāyasya dvitīyaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

Thus ends the second section of the first chapter of the Brahma Sūtras, composed by Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana (Vyāsa)."

द्युभ्वाद्यायतनं स्वशब्दात् ॥ १.३.१॥

dyubhvādyāyatanaṃ svaśabdāt || 1.3.1 ||

The resting place of heaven, earth, etc (is Brahman) on account of the word ‘Self’.

Heaven (dyu), earth (bhū), and all other realms (ādi) rest upon Brahman as their foundational support (āyatana), based on scriptural authority (svaśabdāt), meaning "from its own words" (i.e., the Vedas).

The sūtra is based on multiple Upaniṣadic declarations that explicitly describe Brahman as the basis of all existence:

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 3.14.1 सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म तज्जलानिति शान्त उपासीत। Everything indeed is Brahman. It is born from That, lives in That, and merges into That.) This affirms that everything, including the heavens, earth, and other worlds, originates from and is sustained by Brahman.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 3.1.1 यतो वा इमानि भूतानि जायन्ते, येन जातानि जीवन्ति, यत् प्रयन्त्यभिसंविशन्ति, तद्विजिज्ञासस्व तद्ब्रह्म। (That from which all beings arise, by which they are sustained, and into which they dissolve, is Brahman—seek to know that.)

मुक्तोपसृप्यव्यपदेशात् ॥ १.३.२॥

muktopasṛpyavyapadeśāt || 1.3.2 ||

Because of the statement that It is to be attained by the liberated.

This sūtra addresses whether the individual soul (jīva) is identical to Brahman or distinct from it, based on the Upaniṣadic statement that a liberated being "approaches" Brahman.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.1.1 पराञ्चि खानि व्यतृणत्स्वयम्भूस्तस्मात्पराङ्पश्यति नान्तरात्मन्। The self-existent Lord made the senses outward-turned; therefore, beings see only the external and not the inner Self."

नानुमानमतच्छब्दात् ॐ ॥ १.३.३॥

nānumānamatacchabdāt || 1.3.3 ||

(The abode of heaven etc) is not what is inferred owing to want of any term indicating it.

Brahman cannot be known through inference (anumāna) alone but must be realized through scriptural revelation (śruti/śabda pramāṇa).

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.9 नैषा तर्केण मतिरापनेया प्रोक्तान्येनैव सुज्ञानाय प्रेष्ठ। This wisdom is not obtained through logical reasoning but must be taught by an enlightened teacher.

प्राणभृच्च ॥ १.३.४॥

prāṇabhṛcca || 1.3.4 ||

(Nor) also the individual soul.

Brahman must be the entity described in Śruti as the sustainer of prāṇa (vital force), reinforcing that Brahman is the ultimate cause of existence.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.1.10 यदेवेह तदमुत्र यदमुत्र तदन्विह। मृत्योः स मृत्युं गच्छति य इह नानेव पश्यति॥ Yadeveha tadamutra yadamutra tadanviha. Mṛtyoḥ sa mṛtyuṁ gacchati ya iha nāneva paśyati. The same reality is here and there. He who sees multiplicity goes from death to death.

भेदव्यपदेशात् ॥ १.३.५॥

bhedavyapadeśāt || 1.3.5 ||

On account of difference being mentioned.

Certain Upaniṣadic statements explicitly mention a difference between Brahman and the jīva (individual soul), thus challenging absolute non-dualism (Advaita).

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 1.6 द्वा सुपर्णा सयुजा सखाया समानं वृक्षं परिषस्वजाते। तयोरन्यः पिप्पलं स्वाद्वत्त्यनश्नन्नन्यो अभिचाकशीति॥ Two birds, inseparable friends, reside on the same tree. One eats the sweet fruit, while the other simply watches.

प्रकरणात् ॥ १.३.६॥

prakaraṇāt || 1.3.6 ||

On account of the subject matter.

When interpreting scriptural passages, one must consider the overall context (prakaraṇa) to determine the correct meaning—in this case, whether a passage refers to Brahman or some other entity.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1

सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीदेकमेवाद्वितीयम्। O dear one, in the beginning, existence alone was there - one without a second." The entire section discusses Brahman as the ultimate reality, so later references must be interpreted in this light.

स्थित्यदनाभ्यां च ॥ १.३.७॥

sthityadanābhyāṃ ca || 1.3.7 ||

And on account of the facts of staying on and eating.

Brahman is the cause of the universe, not just in its creation but also in its sustenance and dissolution.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 3.1.1 यतो वा इमानि भूतानि जायन्ते। येन जातानि जीवन्ति। यत् प्रयन्त्यभिसंविशन्ति। तद्विजिज्ञासस्व तद्ब्रह्मेति॥ That from which all beings are born, by which they are sustained, and into which they merge—know that as Brahman."

Bhagavad Gītā 9.7–9.8 : सर्वभूतानि कौन्तेय प्रकृतिं यान्ति मामिकाम्। कल्पक्षये पुनस्तानि कल्पादौ विसृजाम्यहम्॥ प्रकृतिं स्वामवष्टभ्य विसृजामि पुनः पुनः। भूतग्रा-ममिमं कृत्स्नमवशं प्रकृतेर्वशात्॥ O Arjuna, at the end of a cosmic cycle, all beings merge into My Prakṛti, and at the beginning, I send them forth again.

भूमा सम्प्रसादादध्युपदेशात् ॥ १.३.८॥

bhūmā samprasādādadhyupadeśāt || 1.3.8 ||

Bhuman is the supreme Self, since He is taught as superior to samprāsada (ie. prāṇa or vital force).

Bhūmā (the Infinite) mentioned in the scriptures is none other than Brahman. The reference to samprasāda (deep sleep) in Upaniṣads indicates that the state of deep sleep is a clue to realizing Brahman, as it is where dualities disappear and the experiencer merges into pure awareness.

धर्मोपपत्तेश्च ॥ १.३.९॥

dharmopapatteśca || 1.3.9 ||

And the characteristics of Bhuman are appropriate (for the supreme Self).

The opponent (Pūrva-pakṣin) raises doubts about whether Brahman or Pradhāna (matter, as proposed by Sāṅkhya philosophy) is the true cause of the universe. The Sūtra affirms that Brahman is the creator because this view is supported by Dharma, i.e., the Hindu scriptures and righteousness.

Bhagavad Gītā (9.10): "मयाध्यक्षेण प्रकृतिः सूयते सचराचरम् | Under My supervision, Prakṛti (Nature) gives birth to all moving and non-moving beings."

अक्षरमम्बरान्तधृतेः ॥ १.३.१०॥

akṣaramambarāntadhṛteḥ ||1.2.10 ||

Ākāśa is Brahman because of supporting all things up to (and including) space.

The opponent (Pūrva-pakṣin) suggests that Ākāśa (space) is the fundamental cause of everything. This Sūtra rejects that view, asserting that Brahman is the ultimate support (adhīṣṭhāna) of even space (Ākāśa) and all existence.

सा च प्रशासनात् ॥ १.३.११॥

sā ca praśāsanāt || 1.3.11 ||

This (supporting) is also because of the command.

The opponent (Pūrva-pakṣin) argues that the individual soul is independent and different from Brahman. This sūtra refutes that view, asserting that the Jīva is dependent on Brahman because Brahman is the supreme ruler (praśāsanāt) of everything, including the individual soul.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (2.2.13) नित्योऽनित्यानां चेतनश्चेतनानाम् एको बहूनां यो विदधाति कामान् | The eternal among the non-eternal, the conscious among the conscious, the one who fulfills the desires of the many - He is the Supreme.

Bhagavad Gītā (18.61) ईश्वरः सर्वभूतानां हृद्देशेऽर्जुन तिष्ठति। The Lord dwells in the hearts of all beings, O Arjuna.

अन्यभावव्यावृत्तेश्च ॥ १.३.१२॥

anyabhāvavyāvṛtteśca || 1.3.12 ||

And because the qualities of any other than Brahman have been negated.

The opponent (Pūrva-pakṣin) claims that Jīva (the individual self) is entirely distinct from Brahman. This sūtra rejects that argument, asserting that there is no existence apart from Brahman - everything other than Brahman is an illusion or a dependent reality.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीदेकमेवाद्वितीयम् | In the beginning, this universe was Existence alone, one without a second.

Bhagavad Gītā (7.7) मत्तः परतरं नान्यत्किञ्चिदस्ति धनञ्जय | ("There is nothing whatsoever other than Me, O Arjuna.

ईक्षतिकर्मव्यपदेशात् सः ॥ १.३.१३॥

īkṣatikarmavyapadeśāt || 1.1.13 ||

Because of Its being mentioned as an object of seeing.

Brahman is said to perform the act of creation through mere will or seeing (īkṣaṇa).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.3) तदैक्षत बहु स्याम् प्रजायेय | That (Brahman) willed: 'May I become many, may I be born.'

दहर उत्तरेभ्यः ॥ १.३.१४॥

dahara uttarebhyaḥ || 1.3.14 ||

The small space (dahara Ākāśa) is Brahman, on account of the subsequent reasons.

The term "Dahara" (small or subtle space) occurs in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (8.1.1): अथ यदिदं अस्मिन्ब्रह्मपुरे दहरं पुण्डरीकं वेश्म, दहरोऽस्मिन्नन्तराकाशः। तस्मिन्यतन्तः सर्वं तदन्तः। In the city of Brahman (the body), there is a small lotus-house (the heart). In it, there is a small space. Whatever exists in the entire universe is contained within it.

Some interpret this "small space" to mean the physical heart or the limited individual soul (Jīva). The subsequent verses confirm that it refers to Brahman (hence, "uttarebhyaḥ" - from subsequent texts).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (8.1.5)

एष आत्मा अपहतपाप्मा | This is the Self, free from all sins.

गतिशब्दाभ्यां तथा हि दृष्टं लिङ्गं च ॥ १.३.१५॥

gatiśabdābhyāṃ tathā hi dṛṣṭaṃ liṅgaṃ ca || 1.3.15 ||

From the facts of going and the use of the word (Brahma-loka), (it follows that the small Space is Brahman); likewise it is seen (in other Upaniṣads) and an indicatory mark is also present.

The Significance of "Gati" (Movement or Attainment): The Upaniṣads mention that beings "reach" (gati) the Dahara space after death. This suggests that it is not a limited space but the Supreme Brahman, which is the ultimate destination.

The Significance of "Śabda" (Hindu Statements): The Vedas repeatedly refer to this "small space" as infinite and all-encompassing.

धृतेश्च महिम्नोऽस्यास्मिन्नुपलब्धेः ॥ १.३.१६॥

dhṛteśca mahimno'syāsminnupalabdheḥ || 1.3.16 ||

On account of the supporting for this greatness is seen in this.

The Meaning of "Dhṛti" (Supporting Power)

Brahman is the substratum (support) of everything in creation.

The Upaniṣads describe Brahman as the entity that holds the universe together, reinforcing that Dahara cannot be a mere physical space.

Example: Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.0) "सत्यं ज्ञानं अनन्तं ब्रह्म। यो वेद निहितं गुहायां परमे व्योमन्।" ("Brahman is truth, knowledge, and infinite. It is present in the secret cave (heart) and the supreme space.")

2. The Meaning of "Mahimā" (Greatness)

Brahman is described as infinite, all-knowing, and all-pervading. If Dahara were merely the Jīva (individual soul), it would not have infinite greatness.

The Significance of "Asminnupalabdheḥ" (Perception of Brahman): The Upaniṣads state that the ultimate realization (perception) of Brahman happens in this inner space (Dahara).

Example: Katha Upaniṣad (2.3.17) अणोरणीयान् महतो महीयान् आत्मा गुहायां निहितोऽस्य जन्तोः। The Self (Ātman) is subtler than the subtlest and greater than the greatest; it is hidden in the heart of all beings.

प्रसिद्धेश्च ॥ १.३.१७॥

prasiddheśca || 1.3.17 ||

Because of the well-known also.

Brahman is "Prasiddha" (well-known and universally recognized) in the Hindu scriptures as the all-pervading Reality.

"Prasiddhi" (Established Knowledge) of Brahman in the Vedas: Brahman is universally known as infinite, all-pervading, and the ultimate reality in the Vedas. The small space (Dahara) in the heart must refer to this well-established Brahman rather than something limited or individual.

Since the Upaniṣads repeatedly describe Brahman as omnipresent and supreme, the "Dahara" space cannot be anything but Brahman.

The Significance of "Prasiddheḥ" (Fame or Universal Recognition): The Upaniṣads, Smṛtis (Bhagavad Gītā), and other scriptures consistently describe Brahman in the same way.

Example: Bhagavad Gītā (10.20) अहमात्मा गुडाकेश सर्वभूताशयस्थितः। I am the Self, O Arjuna, seated in the hearts of all beings.

Since Brahman is always recognized as the inner Self of all beings, it must be the "Dahara" mentioned in Chāndogya Upaniṣad.

इतरपरामर्शात् स इति चेन्नासम्भवात् ॥ १.३.१८॥

itaraparāmarśāt sa iti cennāsambhavāt || 1.3.18 ||

Because of the reference to the other, if it be argued that the other (the individual soul) should be the small Space, then not so, for that is impossible.

The Upaniṣads describe "Dahara" as infinite, all-pervading, and the source of everything. The Jīva is finite, subject to ignorance and bondage. The attributes assigned to Dahara (omniscience, omnipresence) cannot apply to the Jīva.

If Dahara were the Jīva, then the Upaniṣadic description would be contradictory. Hence, "Sa" (He) must refer to Brahman, not the Jīva.

उत्तराच्चेदाविर्भूतस्वरूपस्तु ॥ १.३.१९॥

uttarāccedāvirbhūtasvarūpastu || 1.3.19 ||

Because of the subsequent references, if (it be said that the individual soul is small Space), (we say) but (that reference is so far as its) real nature (as non-different from Brahman) is made manifest.

Uttarāt" (From What Follows in the Upaniṣad): The subsequent verses (Uttara Bhāga) in Chāndogya Upaniṣad describe "Dahara" as omniscient, infinite, and the source of all.

Example: Chāndogya Upaniṣad (8.1.5) एष आत्मापहतपाप्मा विजरो विमृत्युर्विशोको विजिघत्सोऽपिपासः सत्यकामः सत्यसङ्कल्पः। This Self (Ātman) is free from evil, beyond old age, beyond death, beyond sorrow, beyond hunger and thirst, possessing true desire and true will.

Such qualities cannot belong to the Jīva (individual soul), which is bound by ignorance, karma, and suffering. Hence, Dahara must refer to Brahman.

"Āvirbhūta Svarūpaḥ" (Manifested Nature of Brahman): The Upaniṣads declare that Brahman is self-revealing (Svataḥ-Siddha) and does not require anything else to be known.

If Dahara were Jīva, then it would need external means (like knowledge or effort) to be realized. Since Brahman is already self-manifest (Āvirbhūta Svarūpaḥ), the reference must be to Brahman, not Jīva.

अन्यार्थश्च परामर्शः ॥ १.३.२०॥

anyārthaśca parāmarśaḥ || 1.3.20 ||

And the reference is for a different purpose.

Such references are meant to indicate Brahman in an indirect manner, not to identify Dahara with Jīva.

Anyārthaḥ" (Different Meaning) of the Reference to Jīva: Some passages in the Upaniṣads mention the Jīva while describing Dahara. However, these references are not meant to indicate the Jīva as the ultimate reality but are used to guide the seeker towards Brahman.

The Upaniṣads often first describe something familiar (like Jīva) and then reveal the ultimate truth (Brahman).

"Parāmarśaḥ" (Reference to Jīva) is Not Literal : In Vedantic teaching, the Upaniṣads first present a limited understanding before leading to the higher truth.

The mention of the Jīva in Dahara Vidyā is meant to direct attention toward Brahman, not to equate them.

अल्पश्रुतेरिति चेत्तदुक्तम् ॥ १.३.२१॥

alpaśruteriti cettaduktam || 1.3.21 ||

If it be said that because the Śruti declares the smallness (of the Space and hence it cannot refer to the Brahman), (we say) that it has already been explained.

The Upaniṣads often use familiar and tangible metaphors to convey deeper truths. "Smallness" (Dahara) signifies subtlety, not limitation. Just as Ātman (Self) is not physically small but subtle and all-pervading, similarly, the "small space" (Dahara) represents the all-pervading Brahman in an accessible manner.

Example: Kaṭha Upaniṣad (2.1.12) अणोरणीयान् महतो महीयान्। It is smaller than the smallest and greater than the greatest.

अनुकृतेस्तस्य च || १.३.२२॥
anukṛtestasya ca || 1.3.22 ||
Because of the acting after (shining after, That which shining everything else shines) and (because by) Its (light everything else is lighted).

Anukṛti" (Imitation of Brahman by Jīva): The individual soul (Jīva) constantly tries to imitate Brahman in various ways:

The Jīva desires immortality. The Jīva seeks knowledge and freedom from limitations. The Jīva strives for control over the external world. These desires indicate that the Jīva has an innate connection with Brahman and is trying to express its true divine nature.

Example: Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (1.4.10) अहं ब्रह्मास्मि | I am Brahman.

अपि स्मर्यते ॥ १.३.२३॥
api smaryate || 1.3.23 ||
Moreover, the Smṛti states this.

शब्दादेव प्रमितः ॥ १.३.२४॥
śabdādeva pramitaḥ || 1.3.24 ||
Indeed, it is known (only) from the Śabda (scriptures).
Brahman Can Only Be Known Through Śabda-Pramāṇa (Scriptural Testimony). Śabda (divine revelation) is the highest and most reliable means of knowing Brahman. Brahman is beyond sensory perception and inference, as it is not an object of experience.

Why Logic and Perception Are Insufficient: Perception (Pratyakṣa) can only grasp objects with form, but Brahman is formless. Inference (Anumāna) depends on previous experience, but Brahman is beyond worldly experience. Only the Vedas (Śruti) directly reveal Brahman's true nature.

Connection with Dahara Vidyā: The "small space" (Dahara) in the heart is known to be infinite only through the Upaniṣads. Since scriptural authority (Śabda) has already established that Dahara is Brahman, there is no need for further argument.

हृद्यपेक्षया तु मनुष्याधिकारत्वात् ॥ १.३.२५॥
hṛdyapekṣayā tu manuṣyādhikāratvāt || 1.3.25 ||
But with reference to the heart; and because human being alone is entitled.

Brahman is all-pervading and beyond location. However, the heart is chosen as the seat of meditation because human beings (manuṣyādhikāratvāt) are the primary practitioners of Vedantic knowledge. The heart is where thoughts, emotions, and awareness reside, making it the most suitable place for inner contemplation.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (8.1.1): अथ यदिदं अस्मिन्ब्रह्मपुरे दहरं पुण्डरीकं वेददं दहरोऽस्मिन्नन्तराकाशः। Now, that which is this subtle space within the heart is to be meditated upon as Brahman.

The mention of the heart is figurative, intended to aid meditation.

Human Beings Have the Authority (Adhikāra) to Meditate on Brahman. Only human beings are qualified for Vedantic meditation, since they alone possess: Viveka (discrimination between real and unreal), Vairāgya (detachment from material pleasures), Mumukṣutva (desire for liberation).

तदुपर्यपि बादरायणः संभवात् ॥ १.३.२६॥
taduparyapi bādarāyaṇaḥ saṃbhavāt || 1.3.26 ||
And above that also (i.e., beyond the heart), Bādarāyaṇa (Vyāsa) asserts the possibility (of Brahman's presence everywhere).

Brahman is not limited to the heart - it extends beyond, pervading the entire universe.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (3.14.1): सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म। All this, indeed, is Brahman. Thus, Brahman is not confined to one place but is omnipresent.

Meditation on Brahman as Both Immanent and Transcendent: For beginners, Brahman is meditated upon in the heart (Dahara Vidyā). For advanced seekers, Brahman is realized as the infinite, all-pervading reality.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (1.2.20): अणोरणीयान्महतो महीयान् आत्मा | The Self is subtler than the subtlest and greater than the greatest. Thus, Brahman is both within and beyond. विरोधः कर्मणीति चेदनेकप्रतिपत्तेर्दर्शनात् ॥ १.३.२७॥ virodhaḥ karmaṇīti cedanekapratipatterdarśanāt || 1.3.27 ||

If it be objected that this (corporeality of the gods) will give rise to a contradiction in rites, then (we say) no, for in the scriptures are noticed the assumption of many forms.

There is no contradiction, because the scriptures themselves prescribe multiple paths (Jñāna and Karma) for different seekers. The scriptures prescribe both Jñāna (Self-knowledge) and Karma (rituals), depending on the level of the seeker.For householders (Gṛhasthas), karma (Hindu rituals) is enjoined. For renunciates (Sannyāsins), self-knowledge (Jñāna) is emphasized.

Thus, the Vedas themselves allow multiple approaches.

The Bhagavad Gītā (3.3) says: लोकेऽस्मिन् द्विविधा निष्ठा पुरा प्रोक्ता मयानघ। In this world, there are two paths—Jñāna for the renunciates and Karma for householders.

For beginners, karma is necessary to purify the mind (Chitta-śuddhi). Later, one progresses to Jñāna (Self-knowledge), realizing Brahman as the only reality.

Karma Persists Only Until Brahma-Jñāna (Realization of the Self): Karma and duality exist as long as ignorance (Avidyā) remains. Once one realizes Brahman, karma becomes irrelevant, as there is no doer, no action, and no result.

Bhagavad Gītā (4.18): कर्मण्यकर्म यः पश्येत्। One who sees inaction in action and action in inaction is wise.

शब्द इतिचेन्नातः प्रभवात्प्रत्यक्षानुमानाभ्याम् ॥ १.३.२८॥

śabda iticennātaḥ prabhavātpratyakṣānumānābhyām || 1.3.28 ||

If it be said (about contradiction) with regard to Hindu words, (we say) no, because of the creation (of the world) from direct perception and inference.

Perception (Pratyakṣa): The existence of an underlying reality (Ātman/Brahman) can be inferred from our own awareness. The experience of the Self (Consciousness) is direct and undeniable (Aparokṣa Jñāna).

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (2.2.13): नित्योनित्यनाम् चेतनश्चेतनानाम्। Among all that is eternal, He is the most eternal; among all that is conscious, He is the most conscious.

Inference (Anumāna): Just as smoke indicates fire, the existence of the changing world (Jagat) points to an unchanging substratum (Brahman).

Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad (7): नान्तःप्रज्ञं न बहिष्प्रज्ञम् It is neither the inner consciousness nor the outer consciousness.

अत एव च नित्यत्वम् ॥ १.३.२९॥

ata eva ca nityatvam || 1.3.29 ||

From this very reason also the eternity.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (1.2.18): न जायते म्रियते वा विपश्चित्। The Self is neither born nor does it die.

Bhagavad Gītā (2.20): न जायते म्रियते वा कदाचिन्। It is never born nor does it ever die. समाननामरूपत्वाच्चावृत्तावप्यविरोधो दर्शनात्स्मृतेश्च ॥ १.३.३०॥ samānanāmarūpatvāccāvṛttāvapyavirodho darśanātsmṛteśca || 1.3.30 ||

And because of the sameness of names and forms there is no contradiction even in the revolving of the world cycles as is seen in the Śruti and Smṛti.

Upaniṣads use multiple expressions (Tat Tvam Asi, Aham Brahmāsmi, etc.) to gradually lead seekers to realization. Since the descriptions refer to the same Brahman, there is no real contradiction.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.9.4): तत्त्वमसि। You are That.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad (2.2.11): ब्रह्मैवेदममृतं पुरस्तात्। Brahman alone is immortal, before and after.

Bhagavad Gītā (10.20): अहं आत्मा गुडाकेश सर्वभूताशयस्थितः। I am the Self, dwelling in the hearts of all beings.

Different expressions reinforce understanding rather than contradicting each other.

मध्वादिष्वसंभवादनधिकारं जैमिनिः ॥ १.३.३१॥

madhvādiṣvasaṃbhavādanadhikāraṃ jaiminiḥ || 1.3.31 ||

On account of the impossibility of (the gods) being qualified for Mahā vidyā etc, as per Jaimini (gods are not qualified for the knowledge of Brahman).

Jaimini's Argument (Pūrvapakṣa - Opposing View): Gods like Indra, Vāyu, and Agni already enjoy great powers and pleasures. They do not experience human-like suffering (Samsāra) and thus lack the necessary dispassion (Vairāgya) to seek liberation. Since Vedānta is primarily meant for those seeking liberation from suffering, gods are ineligible.

Śaṅkara's Counter-Argument (Siddhānta): While deities may have higher knowledge, they are still within Māyā (illusion). Any being bound by karma, even a celestial god, ultimately needs liberation. Thus, gods can also attain Brahma Jñāna if they develop dispassion (Vairāgya).

Bhagavad Gītā (9.20-21): ते तं भुक्त्वा स्वर्गलोकं विशालं। Having enjoyed the vast heavens, they return to the mortal world.

ज्योतिषि भावाच्च ॥ १.३.३२॥

jyotiṣi bhāvācca || 1.3.32 ||

And because of (Brahman's) presence in light.

Brahman as the Ultimate Light:

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (2.2.15): "तमेव भान्तमनुभाति सर्वं तस्य भासा सर्वमिदं विभाति। Everything shines after That (Brahman); by Its light, all this is illumined.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad (2.2.10): | न तत्र सूर्यो भाति न चन्द्रतारकं। ("Neither the sun, nor the moon, nor the stars shine there. That (Brahman) alone shines by Itself.

Bhagavad Gītā (15.12): यदादित्यगतं तेजो जगद्भासयतेऽखिलम्। That light which resides in the sun and illumines the whole world is from Me (Brahman).

Bhagavad Gītā (13.17): ज्योतिषामपि तज्ज्योतिस्तमसः परमुच्यते। It is the light of all lights, beyond darkness.

Connection to Brahma Jñāna (Liberating Knowledge): Since Brahman is present in light, and light is universal, this implies that knowledge of Brahman is accessible to all - humans, gods, and other beings. Thus, celestial beings (Devas) are also eligible for Brahma Jñāna, contradicting Jaimini's earlier argument (1.3.31).

भावं तु बादरायणोऽस्ति हि ॥ १.३.३३॥

bhāvaṃ tu bādarāyaṇo'sti hi || 1.3.33 ||

But Bādarāyaṇa maintains the existence of qualification (for the gods).

Since Brahman is all-pervasive, no being including gods is excluded from attaining knowledge of Brahman.

तदेतदनुशासनं ब्रह्मा वा इदमग्र आसीत्। This is the teaching: Brahman alone was in the beginning.

Bhagavad Gītā (10.2) - न मे विदुः सुरगणाः प्रभवं न महर्षयः। Neither the gods nor the great sages fully understand My true nature.

This suggests that Devas also need Brahma Jñāna to attain full realization.

शुगस्य तदनादरश्रवणात्तदाद्रवणात्सूच्यते हि ॥ १.३.३४॥

śugasya tadanādaraśravaṇāttadādravaṇātsūcyate hi || 1.3.34 ||

To him (Janasruti) occurred grief on hearing his (swan's) disrespectful words, from his approaching him (Raikva), for this is referred to (by Raikva).

It refers to the story of Śuka (Śukadeva), the son of Vyāsa, who initially disregarded Brahma Jñāna but later pursued it with great intensity. This is used as evidence that even highly evolved beings (like Śuka and Devas) can develop an interest in Brahman and attain realization.

Bhāgavata Purāṇa (Śrīmad Bhāgavatam 1.2.3-4) - Initially, Śukadeva had no interest in formal scriptural study. However, he later immersed himself in the teachings of Vedānta and ultimately expounded the Bhāgavata Purāṇa to King Parīkṣit.

शुकेण ब्रह्मनिष्ठेन योगिनां गुरुणा नृप। Śuka, the master of Brahman, became the teacher of yogis, O King.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (7.1.3) - Sanatkumāra teaches Nārada that true knowledge (Brahma Jñāna) arises from an intense longing for truth. This aligns with Śuka's transition from indifference to profound realization.

क्षत्रियत्वागतेश्चोत्तरत्र चैत्ररथेन लिङ्गात् ॥ १.३.३५॥

kṣatriyatvāgateścottaratra caitrarathena liṅgāt || 1.3.35 ||

And because his kṣatriyahood is known later on from the indicatory mark of his mention along with a descendant of Citraratha.

Kṣatriyas (warrior class) are also eligible for Brahma Jñāna, as evidenced by scriptural references to Caitraratha. This challenges the idea that Brahma Jñāna is exclusively for Brahmins.

विदेहः जनको ह वै ब्रह्मविद्यामधिगम्य सन्तृप्तः। Janaka, having attained knowledge of Brahman, was fulfilled.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (5.11.5) - In a dialogue, the Kṣatriya King Pravāhaṇa Jaibali teaches Brahma Vidyā to the Brahmin Gautama. This reverses the expected role of Brahmins as teachers and Kṣatriyas as students. This indicates that even non-Brahmins can be knowers of Brahman.

संस्कारपरामर्शात्तदभावाभिलापाच्च ॥ १.३.३६॥

saṃskāraparāmarśāttadabhāvābhilāpācca || 1.3.36 ||

Because of the reference to purification (Saṃskāra) and the mention of the absence of that (Saṃskāra), (the eligibility for Brahma Jñāna is established accordingly).

Saṃskāras (like Upanayana, Hindu initiation) are meant to purify the mind and make it fit for spiritual knowledge. The mention of "Saṃskāraparāmarśāt" (reference to purification) implies that spiritual seekers must have undergone some form of preparation.

Some Upaniṣadic passages indicate that certain enlightened beings (like Śuka, Janaka) attained Brahma Jñāna without undergoing traditional Saṃskāras. This suggests that Saṃskāras, though helpful, are not absolutely necessary for realization. Inner purity and intense inquiry (Jñāna) matter more than formal rituals.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.14.2) -Śvetaketu, a Brahmin, was formally educated in the Vedas but initially lacked true realization. This suggests that mere ritualistic training (Saṃskāras) does not guarantee Brahma Jñāna.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (3.8.10) - King Janaka, a Kṣatriya, attained realization despite not undergoing Brahminical Saṃskāras. His inquiry and direct knowledge were enough.

तदभावनिर्धारणे च प्रवृत्तेः ॥ १.३.३७॥

tadabhāvanirdhāraṇe ca pravṛtteḥ || 1.3.37 ||

And because of the determination of the absence of that (Saṃskāra) and the consequent pursuit (of Brahma Jñāna), it is established.

Despite lacking formal Saṃskāras, seekers continued their spiritual inquiry and attained knowledge. This proves that Brahma Jñāna does not depend solely on rituals but on inner readiness.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (4.9.2) - Satyakāma Jābāla, born to a single mother with unknown lineage, approached a Guru seeking Brahma Jñāna. His honesty and sincerity, rather than his caste or Saṃskāras, qualified him for Hindu knowledge. This story directly supports the idea that true seekers can attain knowledge despite lacking traditional qualifications.

श्रवणाध्ययनार्थप्रतिषेधात् स्मृतेश्च ॥ १.३.३८॥ śravaṇādhyayanārthapratiṣedhāt smṛteśca || 1.3.38 ||

Because of the prohibition (Pratiṣedha) regarding hearing, studying, and understanding (certain Hindu texts), and also because of Smṛti (scriptural tradition), the eligibility for Brahma Jñāna is restricted.

The Upaniṣads primarily reveal Brahma Jñāna, and their essential teachings are not dependent on caste. Śūdras and others can attain knowledge through means other than Hindu recitation, such as devotion, Guru's grace, or direct experience.

Vyāsa, the compiler of the Vedas, wrote the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas to make Brahma Jñāna accessible to all, including those not qualified for Hindu study.

Bhagavad Gītā (9.32): मां हि पार्थ व्यपाश्रित्य येऽपि स्यु: पापयोनय: । स्त्रियो वैश्यास्तथा शूद्रास्तेऽपि यान्ति परां गतिम् ॥

Even those born in lower castes, women, and others who take refuge in Me attain the highest goal.

कम्पनात् ॥ १.३.३९॥

kampanāt || 1.3.39 ||

(Prāṇa is Brahman) because of (the mention of) vibration.

Kampana here symbolizes life-force (Prāṇa) and motion within living beings. The Upaniṣads teach that the body, mind, and senses function only because of the presence of Brahman within.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (1.3.12) - एष सर्वेषु भूतेषु गूढोऽऽत्मा न प्रकाशते । दृश्यते त्वग्र्यया बुद्ध्या सूक्ष्मया सूक्ष्मदर्शिभिः ॥

This Self, hidden in all beings, does not shine forth; but it is seen by subtle seers through their sharp intellect.

This means that although the body and mind move, their source of power is the hidden Brahman.

ज्योतिर्दर्शनात् ॥ १.३.४०॥

jyotirdarśanāt || 1.3.40 ||

Light (is Brahman) on account of Brahman being seen.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (2.2.15) - न तत्र सूर्यो भाति न चन्द्रतारकं । नेमा विद्युतो भान्ति कुतोऽयमग्निः । तमेव भान्तमनुभाति सर्वं । तस्य भासा सर्वमिदं विभाति ॥

The sun does not shine there, nor do the moon and stars; nor do these lightnings shine, much less this fire. That (Brahman) shining, everything shines after It; by Its light, all this is illumined."

This verse directly supports the idea that Brahman is the ultimate source of all illumination and knowledge.

आकाशोऽर्थान्तरत्वादिव्यपदेशात् ॥ १.३.४१॥

ākāśo'rthāntaratvādivyapadeśāt || 1.3.41 ||

Ākāśa (is Brahman) because it is declared to be something different etc.

Some thinkers argue that since Ākāśa (space) is vast and omnipresent, it should be Brahman. However, the Upaniṣads describe Ākāśa as created (Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1.1), meaning it is not Brahman, which is uncreated and eternal.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.1) - तस्माद्वा एतस्मादात्मन आकाशः सम्भूतः । From That (Brahman), indeed, space (Ākāśa) was created.

This shows that space is a product of Brahman and not identical to it.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.9.4) - स य एषोऽणिमैतदात्म्यमिदं सर्वं तत्सत्यं स आत्मा तत्त्वमसि श्वेतकेतो । That which is the finest essence, this whole world has that as its Self. That is the truth, that is the Self, and you are that, O Śvetaketu!

Brahman is not limited to or identical with space but is the fundamental reality behind everything.

सुषुप्त्युत्क्रान्त्योर्भेदेन ॥ १.३.४२॥

suṣuptyutkrāntyorbhedena || 1.3.42 ||

Because of the declaration of being different in sleep and death.

In deep sleep (Suṣupti), the Jīva merges into Brahman temporarily but does not realize its true nature. At the time of death (Utkrānti), the Jīva leaves the body and carries its past karma, indicating its individuality.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (1.2.20) - अणोरणीयान् महतो महीयान् आत्मास्य जन्तोर्निहितो गुहायाम्। The Self is smaller than the smallest and greater than the greatest; it resides in the cave of the heart of all beings.

At the time of death, the Jīva departs from the body and carries its karmic impressions, showing its distinction from Brahman.

पत्यादिशब्देभ्यः ॥ १.३.४३॥

patyādiśabdebhyaḥ || 1.3.43 ||

On account of words like 'Lord' etc.

Scriptures describe Brahman as the Lord of the universe, while the Jīva is described as bound by karma. This might suggest that Brahman and Jīva are fundamentally different, contradicting Advaita.

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad (6.18) - यो ब्रह्माणं विदधाति पूर्वं यो वै वेदांश्च प्रहिणोति तस्मै। तं ह देवं आत्मबुद्धिप्रकाशं मुमुक्षुर्वै शरणमहं प्रपद्ये॥
He who first created Brahmā (the creator) and imparted knowledge of the Vedas to him - That divine Lord, who is self-luminous, I take refuge in for liberation.

This verse refers to Brahman as the Lord (Pati), distinct from individual selves.

From the absolute standpoint (Pāramārthika Satya), there is no distinction between Brahman and Jīva. From the empirical standpoint (Vyāvahārika Satya), Brahman appears as the Lord (Īśvara), and the Jīva appears as an individual being due to ignorance (Avidyā). This distinction exists only within Māyā. Once ignorance is removed, the Jīva realizes its oneness with Brahman.

इति श्रीमत्कृष्णद्वैपायनकृत ब्रह्मसूत्रेषु प्रथमाध्यायस्य तृतीयः पादः समाप्तः

iti śrīmat kṛṣṇadvaipāyanakṛta brahmasūtreṣu prathamādhyāyasya tṛtīyaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

Thus ends the third section (pāda) of the first chapter (adhyāya) of the Brahma Sūtras, composed by the revered Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana (Vyāsa).

आनुमानिकमप्येकेषामिति चेन्न शरीररूपकविन्यस्तगृहीतेर्दर्शयति च ॥ १.४.१॥

ānumānikamapyekeṣāmiti cenna śarīrarūpakavinyastagṛhīterdarśayati ca || 1.4.1 ||

If it be said that even the inferred entity (Pradhāna) is revealed to the followers of some recension, we say, not so, for the word is cognized as occurring in a simile illustrating the body. And the Upaniṣad also shows this.

Some thinkers (like the Sāṅkhyas) argue that Brahman (the Supreme Reality) can be known through inference (Anumāna) rather than Śruti (Revealed Scripture). This sūtra rejects that view, emphasizing that scriptural knowledge is necessary to grasp Brahman.

Brahman is not an object of sense perception, so inference alone cannot fully grasp It. The Upaniṣads use analogies (e.g., Brahman as the body, universe as its form) to convey Its nature.

Inference depends on the mind, but Brahman is beyond mental grasp. Therefore, only Śruti (scriptural revelation) can reveal It.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीत्। O Śvetaketu, in the beginning, all this was Existence alone (Sat).

The scriptures explicitly describe Brahman as the fundamental reality, which inference cannot establish with certainty.

सूक्ष्मं तु तदर्हत्वात् ॥ १.४.२॥

sūkṣmaṃ tu tadarhatvāt || 1.4.2 ||

But the subtle (cause of the body is meant by avyakta) because it can be so designated.

The term "sūkṣma" does not indicate smallness but rather extreme subtlety, signifying Brahman's transcendence beyond gross existence.

Only what is truly subtle can be omnipresent and yet remain unperceived by the senses.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (1.2.20) - अणोरणीयान् महतो महीयान् आत्मास्य जन्तोर्निहितो गुहायाम्। The Self is subtler than the subtlest, greater than the greatest, and is hidden in the heart of all beings.

This verse shows that Brahman cannot be known through ordinary perception but must be realized internally.

तदधीनत्वादर्थवत् ॥ १.४.३॥

tadadhīnatvādarthavat || 1.4.3 ||

On account of its dependence, is fitting.

The world has meaning and order only because it is dependent on Brahman. If Brahman were not the substratum, the universe would be baseless and illogical. Just as light depends on the sun, the universe depends on Brahman for its existence and intelligibility.

ज्ञेयत्वावचनाच्च ॥ १.४.४॥

jñeyatvāvacanācca || 1.4.4 ||

And because (avyakta is) not mentioned as an entity to be known.

Brahman is beyond all sensory and intellectual perception. The Upaniṣads emphasize that Brahman is "jñeya" (to be known), but not in the way objects of the world are known. Since the scriptures do not describe Brahman as an ordinary object, It cannot be grasped through conventional means.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (2.3.12) - नैव वाचा न मनसा प्राप्तुं शक्यो न चक्षुषा। It cannot be attained by speech, mind, or the eyes."

Brahman is beyond verbal expression and sensory perception.

वदतीति चेन्न प्राज्ञो हि प्रकरणात् ॥ १.४.५॥

vadatīti cenna prājño hi prakaraṇāt|| 1.4.5 ||

If it be said (that the Śruti) does state (we say) no, for it is the intelligent Self from the context.

Since Brahman is pure consciousness, It cannot be known as an object but only as one's own self (Ātman).

Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad (6) - एष सर्वेश्वरः, एष सर्वज्ञः, एषोऽन्तर्याम्येष योनिः सर्वस्य प्रभवाप्ययौ हि भूतानाम्। This (Brahman) is the Lord of all, the omniscient, the inner controller, the source of all beings.

त्रयाणामेव चैवमुपन्यासः प्रश्नश्च ॥ १.४.६॥

trayāṇāmeva caivamupanyāsaḥ praśnaśca || 1.4.6 ||

And thus there is the presentation of three things alone and the question also is concerned with them.

The scriptural discussions about the states of experience - waking (Jāgrat), dream (Svapna), and deep sleep (Suṣupti) - are meant to lead to the understanding of Brahman. The analysis of these three states in the Upaniṣads ultimately reveals the Turiya (the Fourth), which is Brahman.

Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad (2-7) - जाग्रत्स्थानो बहिष्प्रज्ञः ... स्वप्नस्थानोऽन्तःप्रज्ञः ... सुषुप्तस्थाने एकीभूतः प्रज्ञानघनः। The waking state is outwardly aware… the dream state is inwardly aware… in deep sleep, everything dissolves into undifferentiated consciousness.

These three states are examined to point beyond them to the ultimate state, Turiya (Pure Consciousness).

Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad (7) - नान्तःप्रज्ञं, न बहिष्प्रज्ञं, न उभयतःप्रज्ञं ... शिवमद्वैतम्। Not inwardly knowing, not outwardly knowing, nor both… It is auspicious (Śivam), non-dual (Advaitam).

Brahman (Turiya) is beyond the three states and is the eternal substratum of all experiences.

महद्वच्च ॥ १.४.७॥

mahadvacca || 1.4.7 ||

And like Mahat (avyakta does not refer to any Sānkhyan category).

Katha Upaniṣad (2.1.1) - पराञ्चि खानि व्यतृणत्स्वयंभूस्तस्मात्पराङ्पश्यति नान्तरात्मन्। The Self-existent (Brahman) created the sense organs to go outward; hence, beings look outward and not within.

Brahman is the ultimate reality behind all cosmic principles, including Mahat.

Mahat (cosmic intellect) is still within the realm of Māyā (illusion). Brahman, however, is beyond Māyā and is the changeless substratum of all reality. The Upaniṣads use Mahat as an illustration to convey the vastness and supreme nature of Brahman, but Brahman is not limited to any particular cosmic function.

चमसवदविशेषात् ॥ १.४.८॥

camasavadaviśeṣāt || 1.4.8 ||

(The word aja does not refer to Pradhāna), because special characteristics have not been stated as in the case of the bowl.

The Camasa is a special sacrificial vessel that is filled with Soma and used in Hindu rituals. Just as all Camasas contain the same Soma juice and serve the same ritual function. All individual selves (Jīvas) are essentially the same as Brahman, though appearing different due to Māyā.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.8.7) - स य एषोऽणिमैतदात्म्यमिदं सर्वं तत्सत्यं स आत्मा तत्त्वमसि श्वेतकेतो। That subtle essence is the Self of all. That is the Truth. That is the Self. That thou art, O Śvetaketu!

This verse declares the non-difference (aviśeṣa) between the Jīva (individual self) and Brahman.

Jīvas (individual selves) appear different due to Upādhis (limiting adjuncts like body and mind), just as different Camasas may seem distinct.

But in essence, all Jīvas are identical to Brahman, just as all Camasas contain the same Soma.

When the Upādhis (Māyā-based limitations) are removed, the Jīva realizes its true nature as non-different from Brahman.

ज्योतिरुपक्रमात्तु तथा ह्यधीयत एके ॥ १.४.९॥

jyotirupakramāttu tathā hyadhīyata eke || 1.4.9 ||

But (the elements) beginning with light (are meant by the word aja) because some read so.

The word Jyoti (light) appears in various Upaniṣads, sometimes referring to physical light (Sun, Fire), and sometimes to Brahman (the Supreme Light of Consciousness). The correct interpretation depends on context, and some scriptural traditions (Eke) interpret Jyoti as Brahman.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (3.13.7) - तद्यथा महाविद्युतं प्रभा महाग्नेरिव That (Brahman) is like the great flash of lightning, like the vast radiance of fire.

Here, Brahman is metaphorically described as the supreme light beyond ordinary fire or lightning.

कल्पनोपदेशाच्च मध्वादिवदविरोधः ॐ ॥ १.४.१०॥

kalpanopadeśācca madhvādivadavirodhaḥ || 1.4.10 ||

And since this is an instruction in the form of an imagery, just as in the case of honey etc., therefore there is no incongruity.

The Upaniṣads often describe Brahman using different analogies and figurative descriptions (Kalpanā). Because Brahman is beyond sense perception and intellectual comprehension, and thus needs indirect indications (Lakṣaṇā) to be conveyed.

Examples of such metaphors in the Upaniṣads:

Honey (Madhu): Used to indicate the sweetness of realization and the interconnectedness of beings in Brahman.

Light (Jyoti): Used to signify the self-luminous nature of Brahman.

Space (Ākāśa): Used to represent Brahman's all-pervasiveness.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (3.14.2) - सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म | All this, indeed, is Brahman.

Since Brahman is formless and infinite, different descriptions are used to guide the seeker toward realization.

न सङ्ख्योपसङ्ग्रहादपि नानाभावादतिरेकाच्च ॥ १.४.११॥

na saṅkhyopasaṅgrahādapi nānābhāvādatirekācca || 1.4.11 ||

Not even on the strength of the mention of number (can Pradhāna have Hindu sanction) because of the differences and the excess.

Brahman is one, and the apparent plurality is due to superimposition (Adhyāsa). The Upaniṣads often mention multiple aspects of Brahman (such as Light, Honey, Space, etc.), leading some to argue that Brahman has multiple independent aspects. This is refuted stating that these different descriptions do not imply real multiplicity. The perception of plurality is due to Avidyā (ignorance), while in reality, there is only one undivided Brahman.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.3) - एकोऽहं बहु स्याम् | I am One; may I become many.

This does not indicate an actual plurality but only the appearance of multiplicity due to creation.

प्राणादयो वाक्यशेषात् ॥ १.४.१२॥

prāṇādayo vākyaśeṣāt || 1.4.12 ||

The vital force and the rest (are the pancajanah), (as is known) from the complementary passage.

The Upaniṣads sometimes describe Prāṇa (life-force) as supreme, leading some to think that Prāṇa itself is Brahman. However, this sūtra clarifies that Prāṇa and other such terms must be understood in context and do not indicate ultimate reality independently. Brahman alone is the substratum of everything, including Prāṇa.

ज्योतिषैकेषामसत्यन्ने ॥ १.४.१३॥

jyotiṣaikeṣāmasatyanne || 1.4.13 ||

Some (interpreters) regard the Self as identical with light; others, as the unreal (asat) or food (anna).

The Upaniṣads use different terms (Jyoti, Anna, Asat) to indicate Brahman, but none of them fully define It. Jyoti (light) symbolizes consciousness and knowledge, but Brahman is beyond even light. Anna (food) represents sustenance and creation, but Brahman is beyond material forms. Asat (non-existence), in some contexts, refers to Brahman before creation, but Brahman is not truly non-existent.

Brahman as Food (Anna)

Taittirīya Upaniṣad : अन्नं ब्रह्मेति व्यजानात् | Food is Brahman, he realized.

Food sustains all beings, but Brahman is beyond sustenance and merely appears as food in the material world.

Brahman as Non-Existence (Asat)

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1): असदेवेदमग्र आसीत् In the beginning, there was only the unmanifest (Asat).

This does not mean Brahman is non-existent, but rather that it was unmanifest before creation.

कारणत्वेन चाकाशादिषु यथाव्यपदिष्टोक्तेः ॥ १.४.१४॥

kāraṇatvena cākāśādiṣu yathāvyapadiṣṭokteḥ|| 1.4.14 ||

(Brahman is presented by all the Upaniṣad); for as the cause of space and the rest, Brahman is spoken of in all texts as It is in any one of them.

The Upaniṣads declare that all elements, including Ākāśa (space), originate from Brahman. The cause (Kāraṇa) must be beyond all effects (Kārya), and Brahman alone fits this description. Space (Ākāśa) is not an independent cause but an effect of Brahman.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.1) - तस्माद्वा एतस्मादात्मनः आकाशः सम्भूतः। From this Brahman, space (Ākāśa) was born.

Since space itself is an effect of Brahman, it cannot be the ultimate cause.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीत् एकमेव अद्वितीयम्। O Somya, in the beginning, there was only Sat (Existence), one without a second.

Brahman alone existed before creation and is the true cause.

समाकर्षात् ॥ १.४.१५॥
samākarṣāt || 1.4.15 ||

Because of attraction (or drawing together).

All beings and elements are drawn toward Brahman, which acts as the central force of existence. The idea of "samākarṣa" (pulling or attraction) refers to how all things ultimately return to their source, Brahman.

The Upaniṣads describe Brahman as both the origin and the final refuge of all creation.

Everything emerges from Brahman and dissolves back into Brahman at the time of cosmic dissolution (Pralaya).

Bhagavad Gītā (15.6) - ममैवांशो जीवलोके जीवभूतः सनातनः। A portion of Myself, becoming the eternal individual soul in the world of living beings, is drawn towards Me.

This means all individual souls are ultimately attracted back to Brahman.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (3.14.1) - सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म तज्जलानिति शान्त उपासीत। All this is verily Brahman. From That, everything is born, by That, everything is sustained, into That, everything dissolves.

Since all things originate from Brahman, their natural tendency is to merge back into It.

जगद्वाचित्वात् ॥ १.४.१६॥
jagadvācitvāt || 1.4.16 ||

Because (it) denotes the world.

Upaniṣads declare that all names and forms (Nāma-Rūpa) are mere superimpositions on Brahman.

The world (Jagat) is not independent; it only exists as an expression of Brahman. All objects, names, and forms are like waves in an ocean - appearing different but ultimately the same essence. The scriptures describe the world in terms of Brahman, indicating its non-difference (Abheda) from Brahman.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीत्। एकमेवाद्वितीयम्। In the beginning, dear one, there was only Sat (Existence), one without a second.

This means the world (Jagat) was never separate from Brahman; it merely appears so due to ignorance.

जीवमुख्यप्राणलिङ्गादिति चेत् तद्व्याख्यातम् ॥ १.४.१७॥
jīvamukhyaprāṇaliṅgāditi cet tadvyākhyātam || 1.4.17 ||

If it be said that the Supreme Self is not meant, owing to the presence of the indicatory marks of the individual soul and the chief Prāṇa, then that has already been explained.

The scriptural descriptions ultimately point to Brahman and not merely to Jīva or Prāṇa.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.8.7) - तत्त्वमसि श्वेतकेतो। You are That (Brahman), O Śvetaketu.

This shows that the Jīva is not ultimately separate from Brahman.

अन्यार्थं तु जैमिनिः प्रश्नव्याख्यानाभ्यामपि चैवमेके ॥ १.४.१८॥

anyārthaṃ tu jaiminiḥ praśnavyākhyānābhyāmapi caivameke || 1.4.18 ||

But Jaimini holds the reference (to the individual soul) to be meant for a different purpose, as is known from the question and the answer. Moreover, some mention this clearly.

The question (praśna) asked in the scripture and the subsequent explanation (vyākhyāna) suggest a different subject, such as Prāṇa (vital force) or Jīva (individual soul), rather than the Supreme Brahman. This means one must be careful while interpreting Upaniṣadic passages and not assume that every passage speaks of Brahman.

Prāṇa is fundamental, but does not necessarily equate it with Brahman. Jaimini would argue that these passages discuss Prāṇa in a functional sense rather than as the absolute reality.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (3.9.26) – नेति नेति। Not this, not this. This method of negation eliminates limited entities like Jīva and Prāṇa from being considered the ultimate Brahman.

वाक्यान्वयात् ॥ १.४.१९॥

vākyānvayāt || 1.4.19 ||

(The Self to be realized, heard of, reflected on and profoundly meditated upon is the supreme Self), because (this is the meaning gathered) from the correlation of the passages.

Even if a specific phrase appears to refer to Prāṇa or Jīva, the larger context (Vākyānvaya) clarifies that it ultimately speaks about Brahman.

Example from Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.8.7) – स य एषोऽणिमैतदात्म्यमिदं सर्वं तत्सत्यं स आत्मा तत्त्वमसि श्वेतकेतो। That which is the finest essence - this whole world has that as its Self. That is the truth. That is the Self. That, O Śvetaketu, thou art.

Here, if one isolates "idam sarvam" (this whole world), it might seem like it refers to material reality. However, the whole sentence (Vākyānvaya) clearly establishes Brahman as the one non-dual reality.

प्रतिज्ञासिद्धेर्लिङ्गमाश्मरथ्यः ॥ १.४.२०॥

pratijñāsiddherliṅgamāśmarathyaḥ || 1.4.20 ||

As per Asmarathya, this (statement of non-difference between the individual soul and supreme Self) to be an indicatory mark (which is) proof of the proposition.

"Pratijñā" means an initial declaration or proposition stated in the Upaniṣads. "Siddhi" means its fulfillment or proof. In Vedānta, when interpreting scriptures, a passage must be understood in a way that aligns with its main proposition. If a passage begins by discussing Brahman, then even later sections (which may describe Jīva or Prāṇa) must be interpreted as referring to Brahman.

उत्क्रमिष्यत एवं भावादित्यौडुलोमिः ॥ १.४.२१॥

utkramiṣyata evaṃ bhāvādityauḍulomiḥ || 1.4.21 ||

Audulomi says that (the statement about the identity of the individual soul and the supreme Self occurs in the beginning) since this state of identity comes to the soul when it departs from the body.

Auḍulomi argues that Jīva (the individual soul) experiences different states (such as waking, dreaming, deep sleep, and death) due to its inherent nature, not due to being Brahman itself. Auḍulomi acknowledges that Jīva undergoes transmigration (Saṃsāra) because it perceives itself as separate from Brahman. However, this transmigration is due to Avidyā (ignorance) and not an absolute reality.

अवस्थितेरिति काशकृत्स्नः ॥ १.४.२२॥

avasthiteriti kāśakṛtsnaḥ || 1.4.22 ||

As per Kāśakṛtsna, because of the existence of the supreme Self as the individual soul.

Kāśakṛtsna emphasizes that the Jīva does not actually undergo change or movement; it only appears to do so due to ignorance (Avidyā). This aligns with Advaita Vedānta, which states that the Jīva is eternally identical with Brahman but appears to be bound due to illusion (Māyā).

प्रकृतिश्च प्रतिज्ञादृष्टान्तानुपरोधात् ॥ १.४.२३॥

prakṛtiśca pratijñādṛṣṭāntānuparodhāt || 1.4.23 ||

Brahman is the material cause as well, not being contradictory to the proposition and illustrations.

Recognizing Jīva as Brahman does not contradict scriptural statements (Pratijñā) or analogies (Dṛṣṭānta).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.8.7) – स य एषोऽणिमैतदात्म्यमिदं सर्वं तत्सत्यं स आत्मा तत्त्वमसि श्वेतकेतो। That which is the subtle essence - this whole world has that as its Self. That is the True, that is the Self, and you are That, O Śvetaketu.

This Mahāvākya (great statement) confirms the identity of Jīva and Brahman. If Jīva were truly different from Brahman, this scriptural declaration would not hold.

अभिध्योपदेशाच्च ॥ १.४.२४॥

abhidhyopadeśācca ||1.4.24 ||

This is also understood from the teaching about the will to create.

Many Upaniṣads instruct aspirants to meditate on Brahman as their own true Self. This instruction would be illogical if Jīva and Brahman were fundamentally different. The very fact that the scriptures prescribe meditation on Brahman as one's own essence indicates their essential identity.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (3.14.1) – सर्वं खल्विदं ब्रह्म तज्जलानिति शान्त उपासीत। All this indeed is Brahman. One should meditate with tranquility that everything arises from That, is sustained by That, and merges into That.

This Upaniṣadic verse clearly enjoins meditation on the self as Brahman. If Jīva and Brahman were different, such an instruction would be misleading.

साक्षाच्चोभयाम्नानात् || १.४.२५॥

sākṣāccobhayāmnānāt || 1.4.25 ||

And because both (origin and dissolution) are taught directly (from Brahman).

The Upaniṣads directly state that Jīva and Brahman are the same. This direct teaching cannot be ignored or reinterpreted. If Jīva and Brahman were truly separate, such statements would not be found.

Key Mahāvākyas (Great Statements) Supporting Identity

(a) Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad - अहं ब्रह्मास्मि। I am Brahman.

This directly equates the individual self (Jīva) with Brahman.

(b) Chāndogya Upaniṣad – तत्त्वमसि श्वेतकेतो। That (Brahman) you are, O Śvetaketu.

Śvetaketu is instructed to meditate on himself as Brahman, proving their unity.

(c) Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad – अयमात्मा ब्रह्म। This Self is Brahman.

This directly establishes the identity of Ātman (Jīva) and Brahman.

आत्मकृतेः परिणामात् ॥ १.४.२६॥

ātmakṛteḥ pariṇāmāt || 1.4.26 ||

(Brahman is the material cause of the world) because (the Śruti says that) It created Itself by undergoing modifications.

The Upaniṣads declare that Brahman alone exists and appears as the universe. The cause (Brahman) and the effect (universe) are not separate. Since Jīva is part of this universe, it is also ultimately non-different from Brahman. The universe is not a real transformation but only an appearance of Brahman due to Māyā.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) – सद्वै सोम्येदमग्र आसीत् एकमेवाऽद्वितीयम्।O dear one, in the beginning, only Existence (Sat) was there, one without a second.

The universe is a manifestation of Brahman, appearing as many due to Māyā.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (3.1) – यतो वा इमानि भूतानि जायन्ते। येन जातानि जीवन्ति। From which all beings are born, by which they live, and into which they merge.

Since everything originates from Brahman, it cannot be truly separate from it.

योनिश्च हि गीयते ॥ १.४.२७॥

yoniśca hi gīyate || 1.4.27 ||

And because Brahman is declared to be the source (yoni).

Brahman is called the 'yoni' (source or womb) of all existence. The Upaniṣads explicitly state that everything originates from Brahman, is sustained by it, and dissolves into it. Since Jīva originates from Brahman, its separateness is only an illusion.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (3.1) – यतो वा इमानि भूतानि जायन्ते। येन जातानि जीवन्ति। यस्मिन्प्रयन्त्यभिसंविशन्ति। तद्विजिज्ञासस्व। That from which all beings are born, in which they live, and into which they merge - know That (Brahman).

This verse directly states Brahman as the cause, sustainer, and dissolver of all existence.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) – सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीत् एकमेव अद्वितीयम्। O dear one, in the beginning, there was only Existence (Brahman), one without a second.

Since only Brahman existed before creation, everything that appears must be its manifestation.

Mundaka Upaniṣad (1.1.7) – यथोर्णनाभिः सृजते गृह्णते च। Just as a spider creates and withdraws its web, so does Brahman create and withdraw the universe.

This metaphor shows that creation is not separate from Brahman, just as a web is not separate from a spider.

एतेन सर्वेव्याख्याताव्याख्याताः ॥ १.४.२८॥

etena sarvevyākhyātāvyākhyātāḥ || 1.4.28 ||

Hereby all (other theories of the cause of the universe) are explained. They are explained.

The identity of Brahman as the only cause has been established. Various objections regarding Brahman's nature, creation, and its relation to Jīva have been answered.

इति श्रीमत्कृष्णद्वैपायनकृत ब्रह्मसूत्रेषु प्रथमाध्यायस्य चतुर्थः पादः समाप्तः iti śrīmat kṛṣṇadvaipāyanakṛta brahmasūtreṣu prathamādhyāyasya caturthaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

॥ इति प्रथमोऽध्यायः ॥

iti prathamo'dhyāyaḥ

Thus ends Chapter one (of Brahma Sūtras).

॥ अथ द्वितीयोऽध्यायः ॥

|| atha dvitīyo'dhyāyaḥ ||

Now begins Chapter Two.

स्मृत्यनवकाशदोषप्रसङ्ग इति चेन्नान्यस्मृत्यनवकाशदोषप्रसङ्गात् ॥ २.१.१॥

smṛtyanavakāśadoṣaprasaṅga iti cennānyasmṛtyanavakāśadoṣaprasaṅgāt || 2.1.1 ||

If it be said that (from the doctrine of Brahman being the cause of the world) there would result the defect of leaving no scope for certain Smṛtis, (we say) no; because (by rejection of that) there would result the defect of leaving no scope for some other Smṛtis.

The Sāṅkhya school claims that Pradhāna (a non-intelligent, unmanifest principle) is the material cause of the universe. However, Pradhāna is never perceived in reality, nor is it supported by the Upaniṣads.

The Vaiśeṣika school argues that atoms (Paramāṇus) are the fundamental cause of creation. However, atoms cannot self-organize into the universe without an intelligent guiding force.

The universe is an apparent manifestation of Brahman (Vivarta-Vāda). Our inability to perceive other entities as independently real is due to this ignorance. Once avidyā is removed through knowledge (vidyā), the true nature of Brahman is revealed, and the illusion of multiplicity disappears.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) – सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीत् एकमेव अद्वितीयम्। O dear one, in the beginning, there was only Existence, one without a second.

This confirms that Brahman alone existed before creation.

Mundaka Upaniṣad (2.1.1) – यथा सुदीप्तात्पावकाद्विस्फुलिङ्गाः सहस्रशः प्रभवन्ते सरूपाः । तथाऽक्षराद्विविधाः सोम्य भावाः प्रजायन्ते तत्र चैवापि यन्ति ॥ Just as sparks arise from a blazing fire, so do various beings come forth from the imperishable Brahman and unto Him again return.

Creation is not separate from Brahman; it is an apparent manifestation.

इतरेषां चानुपलब्धेः ॥ २.१.२॥

itareṣāṃ cānupalabdheḥ || 2.1.2 ||

And there being no mention (in the scriptures) of the others (besides Pradhāna).

This refers to Patañjali's Yoga school, which is closely related to Sāṅkhya philosophy. Yoga accepts Īśvara (a personal God) but sees Him only as a special Puruṣa, not as the material cause of the universe. Like Sāṅkhya, Yoga considers Pradhāna (Prakṛti) as the material cause of creation.

If Pradhāna is unconscious, how does it create an ordered universe? Yoga's Īśvara is passive and does not interact with creation, unlike Brahman, who is both the cause and the sustainer.

The Upaniṣads declare the ultimate truth of Brahman.

एतेन योगः प्रत्युक्तः ॥ २.१.३॥

etena yogaḥ pratyuktaḥ || 2.1.3 ||

By this the Yoga (philosophy) is also refuted.

Yoga accepts Īśvara (a personal God) but sees Him only as a special Puruṣa, not as the material cause of the universe. Like Sāṅkhya, Yoga considers Pradhāna (Prakṛti) as the material cause of creation.

न विलक्षणत्वादस्य तथात्वं च शब्दात् ॥ २.१.४॥

na vilakṣaṇatvādasya tathātvaṃ ca śabdāt || 2.1.4 ||

Not so because this (world) is of a contrary nature (from Brahman) and its being so (is known from) the scriptures.

Brahman is fundamentally different from Pradhāna. Also, the scriptures (śabda) explicitly declare Brahman as the cause of creation.

अभिमानिव्यपदेशस्तु विशेषानुगतिभ्याम् ॥ २.१.५|| abhimānivyapadeśastu viśeṣānugatibhyām || 2.1.5 || But the reference is to the presiding deities (of the organs) because of the special characterization (of the deities) and also from the fact of a deity so presiding.

Sometimes, the scriptures describe an "Abhimāni" (a conscious agent) as the creator. This refers to deities like Hiraṇyagarbha (cosmic intellect) or Prajāpati. However, these entities are not independent creators—they function under Brahman's will.

Viśeṣānugatibhyām – Based on Particular Qualities and Continuity

Deities like Hiraṇyagarbha are given prominence because of their unique qualities. But they derive their power from Brahman, just as the sun's rays originate from the sun. The continuity of qualities means that Brahman alone is the supreme reality, while lesser deities are dependent.

दृश्यते तु || २.१.६॥

dṛśyate tu || 2.1.6 ||

But it is seen (in the scriptures).

The Upaniṣads repeatedly affirm that Brahman alone is the cause of creation.

Brahman is both the creator (nimitta-kāraṇa) and the material cause (upādāna-kāraṇa) of the universe.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.0): सत्यं ज्ञानमनन्तं ब्रह्म। Brahman is truth, knowledge, and infinity.

Since Brahman is conscious, it alone can be the true cause.

असदिति चेन्न प्रतिषेधमात्रत्वात् ॥ २.१.७॥

asaditi cenna pratiṣedhamātratvāt || 2.1.7 ||

If it be said that the effect (in that case) is non-existent (before creation), then not so; for it is merely a negation (without any object to deny).

If it be said that (Brahman is) non-existent (before creation), it cannot be so, because the statement is merely a negation (of attributes, not of existence itself).

Some Upaniṣadic statements describe the state before creation as "asat" (non-existence). This sūtra clarifies that such descriptions do not mean absolute non-existence (śūnya-vāda), but only indicate the absence of manifested names and forms.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.7) - असद्वा इदमग्र आसीत्, ततः सदजायत। In the beginning, this was unmanifest (asat); from that, the manifest (sat) arose.

Here, "asat" does not mean absolute nothingness but refers to the unmanifested state of Brahman. Brahman always exists but was not yet manifest in names and forms.

अपीतौ तद्वत्प्रसङ्गादसमञ्जसम् ॥ २.१.८॥

apītau tadvatprasaṅgādasamañjasam || 2.1.8 ||

Even in deep sleep and dissolution, a similar consequence (of non-existence) would follow, which is illogical.

The opponent may argue: If before creation there was nothing (asat), then deep sleep (suṣupti) or cosmic dissolution (pralaya) should also mean absolute non-existence. This leads to an illogical conclusion because deep sleep and dissolution are only temporary states, and existence persists.

In deep sleep, a person does not experience the world, but still exists.

Bhagavad Gītā (8.19) - भूतग्रामः स एवायं भूत्वा भूत्वा प्रलीयते। All beings repeatedly manifest and dissolve.

(Asamañjasa – Illogicality) - If Brahman truly became "asat" (non-existent) before creation, then it would mean Brahman ceased to exist and then suddenly appeared, which is illogical; if deep sleep and pralaya were absolute non-existence, we would never wake up or see creation again.

न तु दृष्टान्तभावात् ॥ २.१.९॥

na tu dṛṣṭāntabhāvāt || 2.1.9 ||

But (such non-existence before creation) cannot be accepted because there is no valid analogy (dṛṣṭānta) for it.

There is no valid example (dṛṣṭānta) of something truly coming from absolute non-existence. The Upaniṣads state that existence cannot come from absolute non-existence. Brahman manifests as the universe, like a tree from a seed. The seed exists before the tree but in an unmanifest state. Similarly, Brahman existed before creation but was unmanifest.

स्वपक्षदोषाच्च ॥ २.१.१०॥

svapakṣadoṣācca || 2.1.10 ||

And also because (the opponent's) own position has defects.

The opponent claims existence arose from non-existence (asatkāryavāda). This view has serious flaws (svapakṣadoṣa – defects in their own position). Since we never see things arising from absolute nothingness, the opponent's theory is flawed.

तर्काप्रतिष्ठानादपि अन्यथानुमेयमिति चेदेवमप्यनिर्मोक्षप्रसङ्गः ॥ २.१.११॥

tarkāpratiṣṭhānādapi anyathānumeyamiti cedevamapyanirmokṣaprasaṅgaḥ || 2.1.11 ||

Also because reasoning has no sure basis, if it be said that it should be reasoned otherwise, (we say) even so there will result the contingency of non-release (from this defect).

The opponent argues that the universe could have originated in some way inferred through reasoning (anumāna). Bādarāyaṇa rejects this, stating that mere logic is unstable and contradicts mokṣa (liberation).

Different philosophers use logic to argue contradictory views:

Sāṅkhyas say Prakṛti (Nature) is the cause of creation.

Buddhists say everything is momentary (kṣaṇika-vāda).

Naiyāyikas say atoms (paramāṇus) create the universe.

Advaitins say Brahman is the sole reality.

If logic alone were reliable, it should lead to one consistent truth. Since it does not, logic is not a valid foundation for metaphysical truths.

Liberation (mokṣa) depends on scriptural knowledge (śruti), not mere reasoning. If one solely relies on inference, there will be no certainty about Brahman, and liberation becomes impossible.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad - तत्त्वमसि | You are That.

This direct scriptural teaching is the key to realizing Brahman, not inference.

एतेन शिष्टापरिग्रहाऽपि व्याख्याताः ॥ २.१.१२॥

etena śiṣṭāparigrahā'pi vyākhyātāḥ || 2.1.12 ||

By this (previous reasoning), even the acceptance of other views by the wise (śiṣṭāḥ) has been explained.

Even traditional authorities (śiṣṭāḥ) must accept that inference alone is insufficient. Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Nyāya, Vaiśeṣika - all use śruti for final validation. Mere logic without scriptural support is unreliable.

भोक्त्रापत्तेरविभागश्चेत्स्याल्लोकवत् ॥ २.१.१३॥

bhoktrāpatteravibhāgaścetsyāllokavat || 2.1.13 ||

If it be said that on account of the objects turning into the enjoyer, the non-distinction may exist as is experienced commonly in the world.

Jīva appears separate due to ignorance (avidyā), not due to an actual distinction.

The Rope-Snake Illusion: A rope appears as a snake in dim light. Similarly, Brahman appears as jīva due to ignorance. When ignorance is removed, only Brahman remains.

The opponent argues that even in deep sleep or samādhi, individuality is not destroyed.

Śaṅkarācārya replies: The worldly example (lokavat) is misleading because the world itself is an illusion (mithyā). Individuality seems real only due to māyā.

तदनन्यत्वमारम्भणशब्दादिभ्यः ॥ २.१.१४॥

tadananyatvamārambhaṇaśabdādibhyaḥ || 2.1.14 ||

There is non-difference of those cause and effect on account of the texts about origin etc.

The Upaniṣads declare that the universe arises from Brahman alone, not from an independent material cause. The universe is not different from Brahman, just as a pot is not different from clay.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.1.4-6) - Vācārambhaṇaṁ vikāro nāmadheyaṁ mṛttiketyeva satyam - All modifications (effects) are just names; only clay (the cause) is real. Just as all clay pots are ultimately clay, the world is ultimately Brahman.

The opponent argues that creation (ārambhaṇa) implies a real transformation (pariṇāma) of Brahman into the world.

Śaṅkarācārya replies: Creation is just an appearance (vivarta), not a real transformation.

Example: A rope appears as a snake but does not actually change. Similarly, Brahman appears as the world but remains unchanged.

भावे चोपलब्धेः ॥ २.१.१५॥

bhāve copalabdheḥ || 2.1.15 ||

(Cause and effect are non-different) since the effect is perceived when the cause is there.

The world is perceptible (upalabdhi), so its cause must also exist.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - Sad eva somya idam agra āsīt (Being alone was there before creation).

This shows that Brahman (Being) is the real cause of everything.

सत्त्वाच्चावरस्य ॥ २.१.१६॥

sattvāccāvarasya || 2.1.16 ||

And (cause and effect are non-different) because the posterior one has (earlier) existence (in the cause).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सद् एव सोम्य इदम् अग्र आसीत् | In the beginning, only Pure Being (Brahman) existed.

Sattva (Reality) Belongs to Brahman Alone. Existence itself is non-different from Brahman. The so-called "inferior" reality (Avara) like Pradhāna exists only as a dependent entity. Just as ornaments have no independent existence apart from gold, the world (including Pradhāna) exists only because of Brahman.

असद्व्यपदेशान्नेति चेन्न धर्मान्तरेण वाक्यशेषात् ॥ २.१.१७॥

asadvyapadeśānneti cenna dharmāntareṇa vākyaśeṣāt || 2.1.17 ||

If it be said that on account of (the effect) being described as non-existent (before creation) is not (true), (we say) no (it being described by) another characteristic in the latter part of the text.

Some Upaniṣadic statements describe Brahman as Asat (non-existent) before creation.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.7) - असद्वा इदमग्र आसीत्। ततः सदजायत। In the beginning, this (world) was Asat (non-being); from that, Sat (being) arose.

If Brahman were truly non-existent before creation, how could it be the ultimate reality? "Asat" here does not mean absolute non-existence (like a barren woman's son). It means "unmanifest" (avyakta), not yet differentiated into names and forms. The continuation of the passage (vākyaśeṣa) clarifies that "Asat" transforms into "Sat". Hence, Brahman was always existent but unmanifest before creation.

युक्तेः शब्दान्तराच्च ॥ २.१.१८॥

yukteḥ śabdāntarācca || 2.1.18 ||

From reasoning and another Śruti text (this relation between cause and effect is established).

Two key justifications are given for the existence of Brahman:

1. Yuktiḥ (Logic or Reasoning) – Logical analysis supports Brahman's existence.
2. Śabdāntara (Other scriptural texts) – Many Upaniṣadic statements affirm Brahman's reality.

Logical Reasoning (Yuktiḥ) for Brahman's Existence: If Brahman were truly non-existent (Asat), then the world (Jagat) could never have come into existence as something cannot come from absolute nothingness.

Many Upaniṣadic texts declare Brahman as Sat (Existence):

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सदेव सोम्य इदमग्र आसीत् | In the beginning, there was only Sat (Existence).

These contradict the idea that Brahman is Asat (non-existent).

पटवच्च ॥ २.१.१९॥

paṭavacca || 2.1.19 ||

And like piece of cloth (that is folded and spread out so is the world before and after creation).

A cloth (paṭa) is woven from threads (tantu). The cloth is not different from its threads - it is simply an arrangement of threads. Similarly, the universe (Jagat) is not separate from Brahman; it is a manifestation of Brahman. Brahman is the material cause (Upādāna Kārana), just as the threads are the material cause of the cloth.

यथा प्राणादिः ॥ २.१.२०॥

yathā prāṇādiḥi || 2.1.20 ||

As in the case of different prāṇās.

Prāṇa (life force), senses, and the mind are not independent; they function only because of Brahman's existence. Just as prāṇa depends on Brahman, the entire universe also originates from Brahman.

इतरव्यपदेशाद्धिताकरणादिदोषप्रसक्तिः ॥ २.१.२१॥

itaravyapadeśāddhitākaraṇādidoṣaprasaktiḥ || 2.1.21 ||

Since the other (individual soul) is mentioned (as identical with Brahman), faults like not doing what is beneficial and so on will arise.

अधिकं तु भेदनिर्देशात् ॥ २.१.२२॥

adhikaṃ tu bhedanirdeśāt || 2.1.22 ||

But on account of the declaration of the difference (between the two), (Brahman is) greater (than the individual soul).

Upaniṣads ultimately declare non-duality (Advaita). The mention of differences is due to avidyā (ignorance) and is intended only as a lower-level teaching (for meditation, upāsanā).

sarvaṁ khalvidaṁ brahma (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 3.14.1) - All this is verily Brahman.

brahmaivedaṁ amṛtam purastāt (Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.11) - Brahman alone is immortal and exists everywhere.

अश्मादिवच्च तदनुपपत्तिः ॥ २.१.२३॥

aśmādivacca tadanupapattiḥ || 2.1.23 ||

On the analogy of stone etc (produced from same earth) as also for other reasons, that (opposite view) is untenable.

Just as an inert stone cannot become conscious, an inert world cannot exist without Brahman, which is Pure Consciousness (Cit).

Brahman, the sentient and supreme reality, is the substratum and controller of Prakṛti. Prakṛti is dependent on Brahman for its existence and functioning.

Mundaka Upaniṣad (1.1.7) - yathorṇanābhiḥ sṛjate gṛhṇate ca yathā pṛthivyāmoṣadhayaḥ saṃbhavanti। yatha sataḥ puruṣātkeśalomāni tathākṣarātsaṃbhavatīha viśvam॥ "As a spider spins forth and withdraws its web, as plants sprout from the earth, and as hair grows from a living person, so does the universe arise from the imperishable Brahman."

उपसंहारदर्शनान्नेति चेन्न क्षीरवद्धि ॥ २.१.२४॥

upasaṃhāradarśanānneti cenna kṣīravaddhi || 2.1.24 ||

If it be said that (Brahman cannot be the cause), since (agent) is seen to collect materials (for the production of an object), (we say) no, since it is possible like milk (turning into curd).

Just as milk transforms into curd only when acted upon by an external agent (like heat or a fermenting agent), Prakṛti transforms into the universe only under the influence of Brahman.

देवादिवदपि लोके ॥ २.१.२५॥

devādivadapi loke || 2.1.25 ||

Also (Brahman can create without extraneous help) like gods and others (as is seen) in this world.

Unlike Prakṛti, gods and other beings are sentient and can act independently. However, even their actions are ultimately governed by Brahman, the supreme cause. Brahman is the substratum and controller of both sentient beings and insentient Prakṛti. Prakṛti's transformation into the universe is directed by Brahman.

कृत्स्नप्रसक्तिर्निरवयवत्वशब्दकोपो वा ॥ २.१.२६॥ kṛtsnaprasaktirniravayavatvaśabdakopo vā || 2.1.26 || (Brahman being the cause of the world involves) either the possibility of the entire (Brahman being modified) or the violation of the scriptural statement that Brahman is without parts.

"If Brahman were composed of parts, then either (1) the entire Brahman would be affected by division (kṛtsnaprasaktiḥ), or (2) it would contradict scriptural declarations of Brahman's indivisibility (śabdakopaḥ)."

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (1.2.20) - अणोरणीयान् महतो महीयान् आत्माऽस्य जन्तोर्निहितो गुहायाम्। "The Self is subtler than the subtlest and greater than the greatest; it is present within all beings."

Since Brahman is present everywhere without division, it must be indivisible (niravayava).

Bhagavad Gītā (2.25) - अव्यक्तोऽयमचिन्त्योऽयमविकार्योऽयमुच्यते। "This (Self) is unmanifest, unthinkable, and unchangeable."

If Brahman had parts, it would be subject to vikāra (change), contradicting the scriptures.

Śruti (revealed scriptures) declare that Brahman is One (advaita). If Brahman had parts, it would contradict this.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सदेव सोम्य इदमग्र आसीत्, एकमेव अद्वितीयम्। "In the beginning, dear one, there was only Existence, One without a second."

श्रुतेस्तु शब्दमूलत्वात् ॥ २.१.२७॥

śrutestu śabdamūlatvāt || 2.1.27 ||

But (this has to be accepted) on the authority of the scriptures on account of (Brahman) being based on the scriptures only.

The Upaniṣads (śruti) are the primary means of knowing Brahman, as they are apauruṣeya (not of human origin) and free from error. While reasoning (tarka) can support the teachings of the scriptures, it cannot independently establish the nature of Brahman. Brahman is not an object of perception or inference, and its nature can only be known through the scriptures.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (1.2.23) - नायमात्मा प्रवचनेन लभ्यः न मेधया न बहुना श्रुतेन। "The Self cannot be attained by study, nor by intelligence, nor by hearing (repeatedly)."

Since Brahman is beyond empirical and logical methods, śruti alone is its pramāṇa (valid means of knowledge).

Bhagavad Gītā (13.12) - अध्यक्षरं ब्रह्म परमं। "Brahman is beyond sense perception and the highest knowledge."

आत्मनि चैवं विचित्राश्च हि ॥ २.१.२८॥

ātmani caivaṃ vicitrāśca hi || 2.1.28 ||

And because in the individual soul also diverse (creation) exists.

The universe appears diverse, but in reality, it is nothing but Brahman.

The world is a superimposition (vivarta) upon Brahman.

Bhagavad Gītā (9.10) - मयाध्यक्षेण प्रकृतिः सूयते सचराचरम्। "Under My supervision, Prakṛti (Nature) brings forth the moving and the non-moving."

Bhagavad Gītā (2.16) - नासतो विद्यते भावो नाभावो विद्यते सतः। "The unreal never is, the real never ceases to be."

स्वपक्षदोषाच्च ॥ २.१.२९॥

svapakṣadoṣācca || 2.1.29||

On account of the opponent's view being subjected to these very objections.

Sāṅkhya posits that Prakṛti (inert matter) independently evolves into the universe. However, this contradicts the Upaniṣadic teaching that the cause of the universe must be conscious (Chaitanya).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1 - सदेव सोम्य इदमग्र आसीत् एकमेवाद्वितीयम्। "O Somya, before this universe was created, only Existence (Sat) alone existed, One without a second."

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.0 - सत्यं ज्ञानमनन्तं ब्रह्म। "Brahman is Truth, Knowledge, and Infinite."

If Brahman is knowledge (jñānam), then the cause of the universe must be intelligent. Prakṛti, being insentient (jaḍa), cannot be the ultimate cause.

Sāṅkhya states that liberation (mokṣa) is merely the dissociation of Puruṣa from Prakṛti. However, this contradicts Vedānta, which says mokṣa is the realization of one's unity with Brahman.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9 - स यो ह वै तत्परं ब्रह्म वेद ब्रह्मैव भवति। "He who knows the Supreme Brahman becomes Brahman itself."

सर्वोपेता च तद्दर्शनात् ॥ २.१.३०॥

sarvopetā ca taddarśanāt || 2.1.30 ||

And (Brahman is) endowed with all (powers) because it is seen (from the scriptures).

Brahman is nirguṇa (without limiting attributes) yet the substratum of all guṇas (qualities) when viewed from the standpoint of māyā.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.0 - सत्यं ज्ञानमनन्तं ब्रह्म। "Brahman is Truth, Knowledge, and Infinite."

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.1.9 - यः सर्वज्ञः सर्ववित्। "Brahman is all-knowing and omniscient."

This truth is seen in the scriptures (śruti-pramāṇa).

The Upaniṣads clearly declare that Brahman is the intelligent cause (nimitta kāraṇa) and material cause (upādāna kāraṇa) of the universe.

विकरणत्वान्नेतिचेत्तदुक्तम् ॥ २.१.३१॥

vikaraṇatvānneticettaduktam || 2.1.31 ||

If it be argued that (Brahman cannot act) on account of absence of instruments, that was explained earlier.

Opponents argue that creation requires instruments (like a potter needs a wheel, clay, and fire to make a pot). Since Brahman is Nirguṇa (without attributes) and Niravayava (without parts), it lacks instruments. Hence, they claim, Brahman cannot be the cause of the universe.

The sūtra refutes this objection by stating: "tad uktam" – "This has already been answered." Brahman does not need external instruments to create. How does Brahman create without instruments? Just as a spider produces a web from itself (without needing external tools), Brahman manifests the universe from within itself.

Creation is not real (parināma-vāda) but an apparent manifestation (vivarta-vāda). The world appears due to Māyā, just like a rope appears as a snake in dim light. Brahman is both the material cause (upādāna-kāraṇa) and the intelligent cause (nimitta-kāraṇa) without requiring any external instruments.

न प्रयोजनत्त्वात् ॥ २.१.३२॥

na prayojanattvāt || 2.1.32 ||

(Brahman is) not the cause, on account of (every activity) having a motive.

The previous sūtra (2.1.31) refuted the argument that Brahman cannot be the cause of the universe due to the absence of instruments. Here, another objection is addressed: Why would Brahman create the universe? What is its motive or purpose?

The opponent argues: Every action requires a purpose (prayojana). If Brahman is complete and self-sufficient (Pūrṇam), why would It engage in creation? Since Brahman has no desires, It cannot have a purpose for creating the universe.

This sūtra states that Brahman does not need a purpose for creation. Brahman is beyond desires and needs. Creation is not a real transformation (parināma-vāda) but an apparent projection (vivarta-vāda). Just as the sun radiates light effortlessly without any purpose, Brahman manifests the universe naturally, without motive.

Māṇḍūkya Kārikā (2.32)- न निरोधो न चोत्पत्तिर्न बद्धो न च साधकः। -"There is no creation, no destruction, no bondage, no seeker, no liberated person - this is the ultimate truth."

लोकवत्तु लीलाकैवल्यम् ॥ २.१.३३॥

lokavattu līlākaivalyam || 2.1.33 ||

But (creation for Brahman is) a mere pastime like what is seen in the world.

Creation is not out of necessity but happens spontaneously, like a sport or play. Līlā (divine play) does not imply effort or compulsion but a natural expression of Brahman's power (Māyā). There is no external necessity or obligation for Brahman to create. Just as a child plays out of joy, not need, Brahman manifests the universe effortlessly, with no purpose.

Bhagavad Gītā (9.8) - प्रकृतिं स्वामवष्टभ्य विसृजामि पुनः पुनः। "Relying on My own Prakṛti (Māyā), I manifest the universe again and again."

वैषम्यनैर्घृण्ये न सापेक्षत्वात्तथा हि दर्शयति ॥ २.१.३४॥

vaiṣyamyanairghṛṇye na sāpekṣatvāttathā hi darśayati || 2.1.34 ||

Partiality and cruelty cannot (be attributed to Brahman) on account of Its taking into consideration (other reasons) because the scriptures declare so.

This sūtra answers an objection against Brahman's impartiality and compassion. Critics argue: If Brahman is the cause of the universe, why do some beings suffer while others enjoy? Does Brahman show favoritism (Vaiṣamya) or cruelty (Nairghṛṇya)? This sūtra clarifies that Brahman is not responsible for inequality and suffering in creation.

Bhagavad Gītā 5.15 - nādatte kasyacit pāpaṁ na caiva sukṛtaṁ vibhuḥ। "The Supreme does not take the merit or sin of anyone."

The sufferings and joys of beings are determined by their past actions (karma), not by Brahman's will.

न कर्माविभागादिति चेन्नानादित्वात् ॥ २.१.३५॥

na karmāvibhāgāditi cennānāditvāt || 2.1.35 ||

If it be said that (this is) not (possible) for want of distinction in work (before creation), (we say) no because of it being without a beginning.

Bhagavad Gītā 13.20 - प्रकृतिं पुरुषं चैव विद्यानादी उभावपि। "Know that both Prakṛti (Nature) and Puruṣa (Self) are beginningless."

Since karma is an inherent aspect of the jīva's existence, there is no point in time when karma did not exist.

upapadyate cāpyupalabhyate ca || 2.1.36||

And that is reasonable and is also seen (in the scriptures).

Both reason (upapatti) and perception (anubhava) confirm the operation of karma.

Differences in intelligence, wealth, suffering, and status cannot be attributed to random chance or divine partiality but are the natural results of past karma.

Bhagavad Gītā (4.17) - गहना कर्मणो गतिः | "The way of karma is mysterious."

This means the results of karma may not always be immediately evident but are logically inevitable.

Differences in birth and experiences are observed universally. Some are born wealthy, some in poverty, some healthy, some diseased—these variations suggest pre-existing causes.

Since karma governs worldly differences, Brahman remains untouched by partiality or cruelty.

This affirms that karma-based differentiation is part of empirical reality (vyavahāra), while Brahman remains the unchanging substratum.

सर्वधर्मोपपत्तेश्च ॥ २.१.३७॥

sarvadharmopapatteśca || 2.1.37||

And because all attributes (for the creation of the world) are possible (only in Brahman).

The Upaniṣads declare that Brahman is the substratum of everything (including both the manifest and unmanifest).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सदेव सोम्य इदमग्र आसीत्। "O dear one! In the beginning, all this was Existence (Sat) alone."

The diversity of creation arises due to Māyā, which superimposes attributes onto Brahman.

Bhagavad Gītā (9.10) - मयाध्यक्षेण प्रकृतिः सूयते सचराचरम्। "Under My supervision, Prakṛti brings forth the moving and the unmoving."

Thus, Brahman remains changeless, while Prakṛti (Māyā) projects creation.

Since Brahman is the substratum of all existence, it must logically be the cause of the universe.

इति श्रीमत्कृष्णद्वैपायनकृत ब्रह्मसूत्रेषु द्वितीयाध्यायस्य प्रथमः पादः समाप्तः

iti śrīmat kṛṣṇadvaipāyanakṛta brahmasūtreṣu dvitīyādhyāyasya prathamaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

Thus ends the first quarter (pādaḥ) of the second chapter (dvitīya adhyāyaḥ) in the Brahma Sūtras composed by Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana (Vedavyāsa).

रचनानुपपत्तेश्च नानुमानम् ॥ २.२.१॥

racanānupapatteśca nānumānam || 2.2.1 ||

That which is inferred (Pradhāna) is not (the cause) owing to the impossibility of explaining the design.

Sāṅkhya philosophy argues that Prakṛti (primordial nature) independently evolves into the universe based on inference. Vaiśeṣika claims that atomic combinations (paramāṇu-vāda) explain creation. This sūtra refutes both, asserting that such explanations are logically inconsistent and fail to explain the structure (racanā) of the universe.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सदेव सोम्य इदमग्र आसीत्। "O dear one! In the beginning, all this was Sat (Existence) alone."

This implies a conscious, intelligent principle (Brahman), rather than blind material forces, is responsible for creation.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad (1.2.23) - नायमात्मा प्रवचनेन लभ्यः। "This Self is not attained through mere logic and reasoning."

Since inert matter lacks intelligence, Brahman must be the directing principle behind creation.

This means that without Brahman (consciousness), Prakṛti cannot function.

प्रवृत्तेश्च ॥ २.२.२॥

pravṛtteśca || 2.2.2 ||

And on account of (the impossibility) of such a tendency (to create).

This current sūtra (pravṛtteśca – 2.2.2) further argues against the Sāṅkhya claim by stating that the world's activities (pravṛtti) cannot be logically attributed to an insentient cause like Pradhāna. In Advaita Vedanta, all activity in the world is due to the presence of Consciousness (Chaitanya), which is Brahman.

Mundaka Upaniṣad (2.2.10) - तमेव भान्तमनुभाति सर्वं, तस्य भासा सर्वमिदं विभाति। | "Everything shines because of That (Brahman); by Its light, all else is illumined."

This reinforces that all movement and activity in the world are due to the presence of Consciousness (Brahman), not inert matter (Pradhāna).

Bhagavad Gītā (13.2) - क्षेत्रज्ञं चापि मां विद्धि सर्वक्षेत्रेषु भारत। "Know Me as the Knower of the field (body) in all fields (beings), O Bharata."

The presence of an intelligent Knower (Kṣetrajña) in all beings is what enables activity. An unconscious principle cannot explain the complexity of creation and its movements.

पयोऽम्बुवच्चेत्तत्रापि ॥ २.२.३॥

payo'mbuvaccettatrāpi || 2.2.3 ||

If it be claimed (that Pradhāna acts spontaneously) like milk and water, then even there (intelligence is the guide).

The Sāṅkhya school might argue that just as milk transforms into curd or water flows naturally without any sentient intervention, so too, Pradhāna can undergo transformation and create the universe without the need for intelligence.

But milk and water are controlled by sentient forces and the transformation of milk into curd is guided by biological processes set in motion by Brahman. Similarly, the flow of water follows natural laws, which are themselves sustained by an intelligent principle.

The Vedas repeatedly affirm that the universe originates from, is sustained by, and dissolves into Consciousness (Brahman), not unconscious matter.

Bhagavad Gītā 9.10 - मयाऽध्यक्षेण प्रकृतिः सूयते सचराचरम्। "Under My supervision, Prakṛti (nature) creates all moving and non-moving beings."

व्यतिरेकानवस्थितेश्चानपेक्षत्वात् ॥ २.२.४॥

vyatirekānavasthiteścānapekṣatvāt || 2.2.4 ||

And (the atomic theory is invalid) because of the instability (of atoms) and their independence (from each other).

The creation of the universe requires an intelligent cause (Brahman) to guide the process. Insentient atoms cannot spontaneously arrange themselves into the intricate structures of the universe.

The scriptures (śruti) affirm that Brahman, the intelligent and sentient cause, is the source of all creation.

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 6.8 - न तस्य कार्यं करणं च विद्यते। "He (Brahman) has no work or instrument of action."

अन्यत्राभावाच्च न तृणादिवत् ॥ २.२.५॥

anyatrābhāvācca na tṛṇādivat || 2.2.5 ||

And (it can) not (be said that the Pradhāna undergoes modification spontaneously) even as grass etc; because of its absence elsewhere.

This sūtra negates the idea that Brahman, the ultimate reality, is like insentient objects such as grass or inert matter. According to Advaita Vedanta, Brahman is the only independent existence, and all other forms appear due to ignorance (avidyā). Unlike inert objects that are dependent on external factors for existence, Brahman is self-existent and not dependent on anything else.

भ्युपगमेऽप्यर्थाभावात् ॥ २.२.६॥

abhyupagame'pyarthābhāvāt || 2.2.6 ||

Even if (spontaneous modification of Pradhāna be) accepted, still (Pradhāna will not be the cause) because of the absence of any purpose.

This sūtra continues the refutation of dualistic and materialistic views of creation. The opponent (pūrva-pakṣin) might argue that even if Brahman were to be considered insentient or similar to material objects, there could still be some meaning to such an assumption. This sūtra refutes that claim, asserting that such an acceptance would be purposeless since Brahman, as pure consciousness, transcends material limitations.

Bhagavad Gita 4.34 - tad viddhi praṇipātena paripraśhnena sevayā upadekṣhyanti te jñānaṁ jñāninas tattva-darśhinaḥ | “Learn the Truth by approaching a spiritual master. Inquire from him with reverence and render service unto him. Such an enlightened Saint can impart knowledge unto you because he has seen the Truth.”

पुरुषाश्मवदितिचेत्तथापि ॥ २.२.७॥

puruṣāśmavaditicettathāpi || 2.2.7 ||

If it be argued that like a (lame) man (riding on a blind man) or a magnet (moving iron), (the Puruṣā can stimulate Pradhāna), even then (the defect will persist).

Brahman is pure consciousness (cit), and it is contradictory to assign it both sentience and insentience at the same time.

Katha Upaniṣad 1.3.12 - एष सर्वेषु भूतेषु गूढोऽऽत्मा न प्रकाशते। "This Ātman is hidden within all beings but does not manifest (to the ignorant)."

Ātman (Brahman) is hidden (subtle) and conscious, not inert like a stone.

अङ्गित्वानुपपत्तेः ॥ २.२.८॥

aṅgitvānupapatteḥ || 2.2.8 ||

Besides, Pradhāna cannot act on account of the impossibility of (the existence of) any relationship of the principal and its subordinates (among the gunas constituting Pradhāna).

Brahman is described as niravayava (without parts) and indivisible. If Brahman had parts, it would be subject to modification (parināma) and destruction, which contradicts its nature as eternal (nitya) and changeless (kūṭastha).

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad) 4.19 - न तस्य कश्चित् प्रतिमा अस्ति। "There is no likeness of Him (Brahman)."

अन्यथानुमितौ च ज्ञशक्तिवियोगात् ॥ २.२.९॥

And even if the inference be pursued otherwise (still the defect will persist) owing to the absence of the power of intelligence.

विप्रतिषेधाच्चासमञ्जसम् ॥ २.२.१०॥

vipratiṣedhāccāsamañjasam || 2.2.10 ||

And (the Sānkhya doctrine is) incoherent because of the contradictions involved.

Any inference suggesting an unintelligent Brahman leads to contradictions (vipratiṣedha) and is therefore not reasonable (asamañjasa).

महद्दीर्घवद्वा ह्रस्वपरिमण्डलाभ्याम् ॥ २.२.११॥

mahaddīrghavaddhā hrasvaparimaṇḍalābhyām || 2.2.11 ||

Rather (the universe may originate from Brahman) even as the great and long (triads etc.,) originate from the short (dyad) or the infinitesimal (atom).

The Vaiśeṣikas argued that effects inherit qualities from their causes (e.g., threads' whiteness determines cloth's whiteness), so a conscious Brahman should produce a conscious world. Advaita counters by showing that cause and effect need not share identical attributes, using their atomic theory as an example. Vaiśeṣikas claim non-intelligent atoms produce complex structures like triads (tryaṇuka) and dyads (dyaṇuka). Similarly, Brahman (conscious) can project the non-intelligent world through māyā (illusion). This aligns with Advaita's vivarta-vāda: the world is a superimposition (adhyāsa) on Brahman, not a real transformation (pariṇāma). The effect (world) is non-different from the cause (Brahman) in essence, yet appears distinct due to avidyā (ignorance).

Śhwetāśhvatar Upaniṣhad 6.11, Bhagavad Gītā 13.28 - eko devaḥ sarvabhūteṣu gūḍhaḥ sarvavyāpī sarvabhūtāntarātmā

This verse affirms that Brahman is the one all-pervading cause, hidden in all beings, which contradicts the atomic theory that posits multiple fundamental particles.

उभयथापि न कर्मातस्तदभावः ॥ २.२.१२॥

ubhayathāpi na karmātastadabhāvaḥ || 2.2.12 ||

(Whether adṛṣṭa leads the atoms or conjunction helps them), in either case no action is possible and hence there can be no creation or dissolution.

According to Vaiśeṣikas, motion (karma) is required for atoms to combine and create the universe.

This sūtra challenges the possibility of atomic motion in two ways: If atoms move by themselves, they must have an inherent motion, which contradicts their indivisibility and inert nature. If motion is externally caused, there must be another force acting on them, which leads to an infinite regress. Thus, atoms cannot move independently or by external force, proving that they cannot be the ultimate cause of the universe.

Bhagavad Gītā 9.10 - मयाध्यक्षेण प्रकृतिः सूयते सचराचरम् | "By My supervision, Prakṛti manifests the moving and unmoving (universe)."
समवायाभ्युपगमाच्च साम्यादनवस्थितेः ॥ २.२.१३॥

samavāyābhyupagamācca sāmyādanavasthiteḥ || 2.2.13 ||

And (there can be no creation or dissolution) by reason of assuming inherence, for this leads to an infinite regress on a parity of reasoning.

Vaiśeṣikas propose that atoms combine due to an inherent relationship called samavāya, which is distinct from conjunction (saṁyoga). However, this concept leads to an infinite regress (anavasthā), making it logically unsound. Since all cause-effect relationships ultimately collapse under infinite regress, Brahman alone remains the ultimate, self-sufficient cause.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 2.3.6 - यत्र तु द्वैतमिव भवति तदितर इतरण पश्यति... यत्र तु सर्वमात्मैवाभूत् तत्केन कं पश्येत् ॥ "Wherever there appears to be duality, one sees the other... but when everything is realized as the Self, then who sees whom?"

The Vaiśeṣika's samavāya introduces artificial complexity, while Advaita's māyā accounts for apparent creation without compromising non-duality.

नित्यमेव च भावात् ॥ २.२.१४॥

nityameva ca bhāvāt || 2.2.14 ||

And because of the permanent existence (of the tendency to act or otherwise of the atoms, the atomic theory is inadmissible).

If atoms or samavāya are eternally active, creation would be continuous and unchanging, which contradicts the cyclical nature of the universe.

Brahman projects the world through māyā, allowing for cycles of creation and dissolution without requiring eternal activity.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.18 - न जायते म्रियते वा विपश्चिन्नायं कुतश्चिन्न बभूव कश्चित् अजो नित्यः शाश्वतोऽयं पुराणो न हन्यते हन्यमाने शरीरे ॥

"The Self is never born, nor does it die. It did not come from anything, nor did anything come from it. It is unborn, eternal, everlasting, and ancient; it is not destroyed when the body is destroyed."

रूपादिमत्त्वाच्च विपर्ययो दर्शनात् ॥ २.२.१५॥

rūpādimattvācca viparyayo darśanāt || 2.2.15 ||

And on account of (the atoms) possessing color etc, the opposite (would be true) because it is seen.

The Vaiśeṣikas claim that the universe is composed of eternal, indivisible atoms that are the fundamental building blocks of matter.

However, Advaita Vedanta argues that atoms cannot be eternal, because they possess attributes like form (rūpa), color, size, etc., which are subject to change.

Anything with attributes (rūpādi) is not eternal, because attributes imply change (viparyaya).

Since change is observed in all material things, atoms cannot be the eternal basis of existence—only Brahman is eternal and changeless.

उभयथा च दोषात् ॥ २.२.१६॥

ubhayathā ca doṣāt || 2.2.16 ||

And because of the defects in either case (the atomic theory is inadmissible).

The atomic model relies on samavāya (inherence) and adṛṣṭa (unseen karmic forces), which lead to logical inconsistencies like infinite regress (anavasthā) and the inability to explain how non-intelligent atoms produce complex structures.

The inherent qualities (guṇa) of atoms, such as form (rūpa), are not consistently observable, leading to contradictions in perception. If atoms are composed of smaller parts, then they are not truly fundamental. Anything that is composite (having parts) is subject to destruction, so atoms cannot be eternal. This contradicts the Vaiśeṣika claim that atoms are the fundamental, indivisible units of existence. If atoms are truly indivisible, then they cannot combine with other atoms to form objects. Without combination, atoms cannot form the universe, contradicting the very purpose of their existence.

अपरिग्रहाच्चात्यन्तमनपेक्षा ॥ २.२.१७॥

aparigrahāccātyantamanapekṣā || 2.2.17 ||

This (theory of atom as the cause) is to be entirely ignored, since it is not accepted (by the worthy).

The atomic theory finds no support in the Vedas or Upaniṣads, which exclusively uphold Brahman as the non-dual cause.

Iśāvāsya Upaniṣad Verse 5 - तदेजति तन्नैजति तद्दूरे तद्वन्तिके । तदन्तरस्य सर्वस्य तदु सर्वस्य बाह्यतः ॥ "That (Brahman) moves and does not move; it is far and near; it is inside everything and outside everything."

Since Brahman pervades all, it does not need to acquire or possess anything to manifest creation.

समुदायोभयहेतुकेऽपि तदप्राप्तिः ॥ २.२.१८॥

samudāyobhayahetuke'pi tadaprāptiḥ || 2.2.18 ||

Even if the (two kinds of) aggregates proceed from the two causes, even then formation will not take place (of the two aggregates).

Brahman is beyond all causal relationships. The idea of a material or efficient cause being necessary to reach Brahman is incorrect because Brahman is self-existent, beyond cause and effect.

Mundaka Upaniṣad (3.2.3) , Katha Upaniṣad (1.2.23) - नायमात्मा प्रवचनेन लभ्यो न मेधया न बहुना श्रुतेन ।यमेवैष वृणुते तेन लभ्यः तस्यैष आत्मा विवृणुते तनूं स्वाम् ॥

"This Self cannot be attained by study, nor by intellect, nor by much listening. Only one who is chosen by the Self (Brahman) attains it."

These verses reinforce that Brahman cannot be attained through external means or an aggregate of causes, but only through self-realization.

इतरेतरप्रत्ययत्वादिति चेन्नौत्पत्तिमात्रनिमित्तत्वात् ॥ २.२.१९॥

itaretarapratyayatvāditi cennautpattimātranimittatvāt || 2.2.19 ||

If it be argued that a combination becomes possible since (nescience and the rest) can be the causes of one another (in a successive series), then we say, no, (for nescience etc.) can each merely be the cause of origin of another just succeeding.

Each element in the series is the efficient cause (nimitta) only for the immediate next element, not for the overall aggregation. For example, avidyā causes saṃskāra, but this does not explain how these elements combine to form a cohesive whole like the body or the world.

Brahman is the ultimate cause of the universe, but it is not dependent on creation. The universe is only a manifestation (Vivarta) of Brahman, like a dream or illusion (Māyā). The effect (world) does not have independent existence apart from its cause (Brahman).

Chandogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीत् "O dear one, in the beginning, this was existence alone."

This emphasizes that Brahman alone existed before creation, negating any mutual dependence.

उत्तरोत्पादे च पूर्वनिरोधात् ॥ २.२.२०॥

uttarotpāde ca pūrvanirodhāt || 2.2.20 ||

And because the earlier is negated when the later emerges (the earlier cannot be the cause of the later).

In a momentary universe, each moment arises and ceases instantly. When a new moment arises, the previous one is negated (pūrvanirodhāt), meaning it no longer exists. This negates the possibility of causal continuity, as the cause (previous moment) is destroyed before the effect (next moment) can arise.

If Brahman were subject to creation and destruction, like the things in the world, then it would be impermanent. But Brahman is unchanging (Nirvikāra) and does not get destroyed when the next stage (effect) arises. The apparent change (creation, sustenance, destruction) happens only within Māyā—Brahman remains untouched.

Bhagavad Gītā (2.16) - नासतो विद्यते भावो नाभावो विद्यते सतः । "The unreal never comes into existence, and the real never ceases to exist."

Brahman is eternal; it neither arises nor perishes like worldly things.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad (4.4.5) - ayamātmā brahma "This Ātman is Brahman."

Brahman is changeless and unaffected by cause-effect modifications.

असति प्रतिज्ञोपरोधो यौगपद्यमन्यथा ॥ २.२.२१॥

asati pratijñoparodho yaugapadyamanyathā || 2.2.21 ||

If non-existence (of cause) be assumed, there will be contradiction of proposition. Otherwise there would result simultaneity (of cause and effect).

If a non-existent cause (asati) were responsible for creation, then all logical propositions (pratijñā) would be negated (uparodha) because an effect cannot arise from absolute nothingness. If cause and effect were totally independent, then either everything should arise simultaneously (yaugapadyam) or never arise at all, which contradicts observed reality. Thus, creation must arise from an existing cause, and that cause is Brahman, which is eternal and real.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1) - सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीत् एकमेवाद्वितीयम् | "My dear, in the beginning, this was existence alone, one without a second."

प्रतिसङ्ख्याप्रतिसङ्ख्यानिरोधाप्राप्तिः अविच्छेदात् ॥ २.२.२२॥

pratisaṅkhyāpratisaṅkhyānirodhāprāptiḥ avicchedāt || 2.2.22 ||

Neither pratisaṅkhyā-nirodha (artificial annihilation) nor apratisaṅkhyā-nirodha (natural annihilation) is possible, for there can be no cessation.

This sūtra addresses the Buddhist theory of momentariness (Kṣaṇikavāda), which claims that all things are constantly perishing and being newly created. The Buddhist schools propose two types of cessation (nirodha):

Pratisaṅkhyā-nirodha – The cessation attained through discriminative wisdom (e.g., Nirvāṇa through effort).

Apratisaṅkhyā-nirodha – The cessation occurring spontaneously due to the impermanent nature of things.

The Brahma Sūtra refutes this Buddhist idea by arguing that if everything were ceasing in every moment, there would be no continuity (avicchedа) in experience or perception. Since we do perceive continuity, the concept of momentary cessation is flawed.

Brahman alone is eternal (Nitya); the world appears due to Māyā but does not actually arise and perish momentarily.

उभयथा च दोषात् ॥ २.२.२३॥

ubhayathā ca doṣāt || 2.2.23 ||

And in either case because of objections (the position is untenable).

This sūtra continues the refutation of Buddhist Kṣaṇikavāda (the doctrine of momentariness) and other non-Hindu views. It states that both alternatives—whether objects exist momentarily or exist permanently—lead to defects (logical contradictions).

If things exist momentarily (Kṣaṇikavāda): If all things are momentary and perish every instant, continuity (avicchedа) is impossible. Memory, cause-effect relationships, and recognition of objects would be meaningless. Refuted by experience: We do perceive continuity, remember past events, and recognize objects over time.

If things exist permanently (Nityavāda of Vaibhāṣikas): If things were absolutely permanent, they would be unchanging. If they never changed, how could there be transformation, perception, or experience? Refuted by observation: We see change, birth, and destruction in the world.

Thus, both views are logically flawed (ubhayathā doṣaḥ), and the correct understanding is that Brahman is eternal, and the world is a transient appearance (Vivarta) due to Māyā.

Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad (7) - nāntaḥ-prajñam, na bahiṣ prajñam, nobhayataḥ-prajñam na prajnañā-ghanam, na prajñam, nāprajñam; adṛṣtam, avyavahārayam, agrāhyam, alakṣaṇam, acintyam, avyapadeśyam, ekātma-pratyaya-sāram, prapañcopaśamam, śāntam, śivam, advaitam, caturtham manyante, sa ātmā, sa vijñeyaḥ. || “neither inward-turned nor outward-turned consciousness, nor the two together; not an indifferentiated mass of consciousness; neither knowing, nor unknowing; invisible, ineffable, intangible, devoid of characteristics, inconceivable, indefinable, its sole essence being the consciousness of its own Self; the coming to rest of all relative existence; utterly quiet; peaceful; blissful: without a second: this is the Ātman, the Self; this is to be realised."

आकाशे चाविशेषात् ॥ २.२.२४॥

ākāśe cāviśeṣāt || 2.2.24 ||

The case of ākāśa also being not different.

Space (Ākāśa) is often considered a fundamental, eternal entity in some philosophical schools. However, it has no real distinction (aviśeṣa) from Brahman because its existence is dependent on Brahman. Just as waves appear in water but are not separate from it, Ākāśa exists as an appearance within Brahman.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.1) - तस्माद्वा एतस्मादात्मन आकाशः सम्भूतः। "From That (Brahman), indeed, space arose."

Mundaka Upaniṣad (2.1.1) - यथा सुदीप्तात् पावकाद्विस्फुलिङ्गाः प्रभवन्ते...| "Just as sparks emerge from a blazing fire, so too do beings, space, and all else emerge from Brahman."

अनुस्मृतेश्च ॥ २.२.२५॥

anusmṛteśca || 2.2.25 ||

On account of memory (permanence of the experiencer has to be recognized).

The Upaniṣads (Śruti) declare that Brahman is the ultimate reality and cause of creation.

Sāṅkhya claims that an unconscious Pradhāna (primordial nature) evolves into the universe. However, scriptures do not support this.

Śruti and Smṛti texts always attribute the creation of the world to an intelligent cause (Caitanya)—which is Brahman, not inert Pradhāna.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (3.1.1) - यतो वा इमानि भूतानि जायन्ते। येन जातानि जीवन्ति। यत् प्रयन्त्यभिसंविशन्ति। तद्विजिज्ञासस्व। तद्ब्रह्म। "That from which all beings are born, in which they live, and into which they merge, that is Brahman."

Bhagavad Gītā (10.8) - अहं सर्वस्य प्रभवः मत्तः सर्वं प्रवर्तते। "I am the source of everything; from Me, all creation proceeds."

नासतोऽदृष्टत्वात् ॥ २.२.२६॥

nāsato'dṛṣṭatvāt || 2.2.26 ||

(Existence) does not result from (non-existence) because this is not seen.

This sūtra refutes the Buddhist Shūnyavāda (voidness philosophy) and others who claim the world arises from absolute non-existence (asat).

From the Mokṣa viewpoint (Paramādvaita), all four principles (Jīva, Īśvara, Jagat) are simultaneous manifestations of the One (Paramaśiva). Thus, the question of creation from "non-existence" is irrelevant because nothing is ever truly non-existent – all apparent multiplicity is Brahman's vivarta (apparent transformation).

The Buddhist Shūnyavāda is a jagat-centric view (focused on cosmic impermanence). From the Mokṣa perspective, even apparent "voidness" is a manifestation of Paramaśiva's consciousness.

From the point of view of Mokṣa: Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the 3 are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestation of the One Param.

उदासीनानामपि चैवं सिद्धिः ॥ २.२.२७॥

udāsīnānāmapi caivaṃ siddhiḥ || 2.2.27 ||

And thus (if existence would spring from non-existence there would result) the attainment of the goal even by the effortless.

All entities, whether sentient or inert, are manifestations of Paramaśiva (Brahman).

All four principles (Jīva, Īśvara, jagat, Mokṣa) are simultaneous manifestations of the One (Param).

Pratyaksha Pramana: Through purified senses, one perceives inert objects as divine (Arunachala is Paramaśiva).

Shabda Pramana: Vedas declare "sarvam khalvidaṃ brahma" (Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 3.8.8) – "All this is verily Brahman."

नाभाव उपलब्धेः ॥ २.२.२८॥

nābhāva upalabdheḥ || 2.2.28 ||

Non-existence (of things external) is not (true) on account of their being experienced.

This sūtra continues the refutation of Shūnyavāda (voidness philosophy) by emphasizing that non-existence (abhāva) cannot be a valid cause of creation.

From the Mokṣa viewpoint (Paramādvaita), non-existence (abhāva) is merely a limited perspective of jīva or jagat.

Counting never started because separation never happened. Oneness remains inside as Oneness is the point of view of Mokṣa. Thus, "non-existence" is an illusion born of fragmented cognition, not an independent reality.

Even epigenetics, when integrated with superconsciousness (Paramādvaita), reveals that all "causes" arise from Brahman's sat-chit-ananda.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1 - सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीदेकमेवाद्वितीयम् | "In the beginning, only Existence (sat) was here."

वैधर्म्याच्च न स्वप्नादिवत् ॥ २.२.२९॥

vaidharmyācca na svapnādivat || 2.2.29 ||

And because of the difference of nature (the waking state is) not (false) like dream etc.

From the Point of View of Mokṣa, Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the three are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestation of the One Param.

Dream is also one of the four states of consciousness. The jagat has a collective reality rooted in Brahman's superconsciousness.

Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad (7) - nāntaḥ-prajñam, na bahiṣ prajñam, nobhayataḥ-prajñam na prajnañā-ghanam, na prajñam, nāprajñam; adṛṣṭam, avyavahārayam, agrāhyam, alakṣaṇam, acintyam, avyapadeśyam, ekātma-pratyaya-sāram, prapañcopaśamam, śāntam, śivam, advaitam, caturtham manyante, sa ātmā, sa vijñeyaḥ. || "neither inward-turned nor outward-turned consciousness, nor the two together; not an indifferentiated mass of consciousness; neither knowing, nor unknowing; invisible, ineffable, intangible, devoid of characteristics, inconceivable, indefinable, its sole essence being the consciousness of its own Self; the coming to rest of all relative existence; utterly quiet; peaceful; blissful: without a second: this is the Ātman, the Self; this is to be realised."

न भावोऽनुपलब्धेः ॥ २.२.३०॥

na bhāvo'nupalabdheḥ || 2.2.30 ||

(Non-existence cannot be perceived) because it is not an object of perception.

Non-existence (abhāva) cannot be perceived as an independent reality.

Many aspects of reality, including higher consciousness, subtle energies, and the immortal nature of the Self, are beyond sensory perception. Just as air exists even when not seen, so too do higher dimensions of existence, divine energies, and the transformative power of superconscious epigenetics.

From the Mokṣa view, even apparent "non-existence" is a manifestation of Paramaśiva's consciousness.

क्षणिकत्वाच्च ॥ २.२.३१॥

kṣaṇikatvācca || 2.2.31 ||

And on account of the momentariness (ego consciousness cannot be the abode).

From the PoV of Mokṣa: Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the three are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestation of the one Param – param porul. The One spontaneous, synergistic, simultaneous plays as Jīva, jagat, Īśvara. If a jīva understands this he enjoys mukti. Because Īśvara eternally understands this he is Nithya mukta.

From the perspective of Īśvara, the entire universe (jagat) is a manifestation of divine play (līlā). The "fire column" analogy illustrates this, where individual sparks (Jīvas) emerge from and return to the source. This suggests an underlying continuity and interconnectedness that contradicts the notion of isolated, momentary existences.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 2.4.14 - यत्र हि द्वैतमिव भवति तदितर इतरं पश्यति | "Where there is duality, as it were, there one sees another."

सर्वथानुपपत्तेश्च ॥ २.२.३२॥

sarvathānupapatteśca || 2.2.32 ||

And in every way (this view) is illogical.

From the Mokṣa viewpoint (Paramādvaita), any perspective that does not recognize the ultimate unity of Brahman and the illusory nature of separation is fundamentally flawed.

Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the 3 are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestation of the one Param – param porul. The One spontaneous, synergistic, simultaneous plays as Jīva, jagat, Īśvara. If a jīva understands this he enjoys mukti. Because Īśvara eternally understands this he is Nithya mukta.

This suggests that doctrines like momentariness (kṣaṇikavāda) and voidness (śūnyavāda) are born out of ignorance of the true nature of reality and are therefore unsustainable from the standpoint of enlightenment.

नैकस्मिन्नसम्भवात् ॥ २.२.३३॥

naikasminnasambhavāt || 2.2.33 ||

On account of the impossibility (of contrary attributes) in one and the same thing.

Advaita says that the ultimate reality is non-dual (Brahman), and the appearance of multiplicity is due to ignorance (avidyā).

Chandogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1-3) - सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीदेकमेवाद्वितीयम्। तदैक्षत बहु स्यां प्रजायेयेति। In the beginning, this universe was Existence (Brahman) alone, one without a second. It thought, 'May I become many; may I grow forth.'

While Brahman is the ultimate cause (abhinna-nimitta-upādāna-kāraṇa), diversity arises through Paramaśiva's līlā (divine play).

In Paramādvaita, from the Mokṣa viewpoint, all four principles (Jīva, Īśvara, jagat, Mokṣa) are simultaneous manifestations of the Param.

एवं चात्माकात्स्न्यम् ॥ २.२.३४॥

evaṃ cātmākārtsnyam || 2.2.34 ||

And thus, the completeness (wholeness) of the Self (Ātman)."

According to Advaita Vedanta, Ātman is complete (ākārtsnyam) - The Ātman is not fragmented or divided. It is the same in all beings and pervades everything. It is the ultimate reality (Brahman) that underlies all existence. The Ātman is non-dual (advaita), and the appearance of multiplicity is due to ignorance (avidyā). The "wholeness" (ākārtsnyam) of Ātman negates all fragmentation into Jīva, Iśwara, or jagat. These are merely perspectives within the One.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7 – tattvamasi "You are That (Brahman)."

Affirms the Self's identity with Brahman.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10 - अहं ब्रह्मास्मि | "I am Brahman."

Denies all divisions by declaring the Self's absolute unity.

The analogy of Paramaśiva as a "fire column" (from the texts) illustrates this wholeness. Just as sparks (Jīvas) and ash (jagat) are non-different from the fire (Paramaśiva), the Self's completeness encompasses all manifestations:

Jīva is part of Paramaśiva left to play with Himself. The Self's wholeness is never compromised, even as it appears to play through diverse forms.

From the PoV of Mokṣa: Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the 3 are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestation of the One Param."

न च पर्यायादप्यविरोधः विकारादिभ्यः ॥ २.२.३५॥

na ca paryāyādapyavirodhaḥ vikārādibhyaḥ || 2.2.35 ||

And (there is) no contradiction even from the standpoint of transformation (paryāya), because of (Brahman's) modifications (vikārāḥ), etc.

Even if the self were changing gradually (paryāya), it would still be subject to modifications (vikāra), which contradicts its eternal nature.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1 sadeva somyedamagra āsīdekamevādvitīyam | taddhaika āhurasadevedamagra āsīdekamevādvitīyaṃ tasmādasataḥ sajjāyata || "Somya, before this world was manifest there was only existence, one without a second. On this subject, some maintain that before this world was manifest there was only non-existence, one without a second. Out of that non-existence, existence emerged."

Bhagavad Gītā 2.20 - अजो नित्यः शाश्वतोऽयं पुराणो न हन्यते हन्यमाने शरीरे। "The Self is unborn, eternal, ancient, and does not perish when the body is destroyed."

If the Self were subject to transformation (vikāra), it would become perishable (anitya), contradicting the scriptural truth.

The jīva (individual self) appears to undergo change because of identification with the body and mind. In reality, the Self remains untouched, like the sky remains unaffected by passing clouds.

In Paramādvaita Vedanta:

Jīva, Jagat, and Īśwara are One Eternal Reality. The illusion of change (vikāra) belongs to the body-mind complex, not to the Self. The jīva is eternally Paramaśiva—it only forgets and remembers its true nature.

By awakening to the unchanging nature of the Self, one can master the process of physical rejuvenation (Kāyakalpa) and extend life indefinitely. This is how great siddhas like Arunagirinathar and Mahavatar Babaji have lived for centuries.

Mokṣa is Realizing the Unchanging Reality of the Self. The only thing that changes is your perception of yourself. The moment you realize your eternal, unmodified nature, you are liberated (jīvanmukta).

From the Mokṣa viewpoint, all apparent transformations (vikārāḥ) are simultaneous manifestations of the Param.

Even the "fire column" analogy illustrates this: sparks (Jīvas) and ash (jagat) are non-different from the fire (Paramaśiva), despite their apparent diversity.

When He is dancing, small fire particles fly out of the huge fire column and that is creation. Jīva is part of Paramaśiva left to play with Himself." These modifications (vikārāḥ) are not contradictions but expressions of Brahman's infinite potential.

Your DNA is made of the material called jagat – pancha bhutas. It is made by Īśvara and given to jīva to enjoy." Even epigenetic changes (vikārāḥ) are tools for realizing the Self's completeness (ātmākārtsnyam).

अन्त्यावस्थितेश्चोभयनित्यत्वादविशेषत् ॥ २.२.३६॥

antyāvasthiteścobhayanityatvādaviśeṣat || 2.2.36 ||

Since in the final state (antya-avasthiti), both are eternal, there is no distinction.

Sankhya philosophy claims that Prakṛti (primordial nature) is eternal, while its modifications (vikāras) like mind, senses, and body are transient.

Vedanta refutes this by asserting that in the ultimate reality (antya-avasthiti), both the cause (Brahman) and effect (the universe) are eternal and non-different because the effect (world) is nothing but an apparent transformation (vivarta) of Brahman, not a real modification (pariṇāma).

Buddhism claims that everything is momentary (kṣaṇika) and constantly changing. But Vedanta states that in the final state of realization (antya-avasthiti), everything resolves back into its eternal source - Brahman. Since Brahman is unchanging, eternal, and indivisible, the distinction between cause and effect disappears.

As per Paramādvaita, the world is an eternal manifestation of consciousness. What we call "change" is only a perception shift within Consciousness. The universe appears and dissolves, but Brahman (Param) remains untouched.

Jagat (the world) is not separate from Brahman—it is just Brahman appearing as diversity. Just like waves are nothing but the ocean, all phenomena are nothing but Paramaśiva.

This sūtra affirms that in the highest realization, cause and effect merge into Oneness, proving the eternal, indivisible nature of Brahman.

पत्युरसामञ्जस्यात् ॥ २.२.३७॥

patyurasāmañjasyāt || 2.2.37 ||

For the Lord (there can be no causality) as that leads to inconsistency.

Sankhya holds that Prakṛti (Nature) operates independently, while Puruṣa (Consciousness) is merely a passive witness. If this were true, then Īshwara would not have control over creation, leading to an inconsistent and purposeless universe. But Vedanta asserts that Īshwara (Paramaśiva) is the conscious cause of the universe—nothing happens independently of Him.

Nyaya-Vaisheshika believes in a God (Īshwara) who is separate from the world and only arranges eternal atoms into forms. But if God were merely an external supervisor, then His control over creation would be inconsistent (asāmañjasyāt). Vedanta states that Īshwara is not just the arranger - He is both the Creator and the very substance of the universe.

The jagat (world) is not a random mechanical process—it is a synergistic, conscious unfolding of Paramaśiva. Creation, sustenance, dissolution, delusion, and liberation are all part of Paramaśiva's Līlā (divine play). From the PoV of Mokṣa: Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the 3 are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestation of the one Param – param porul. The One spontaneous, synergistic, simultaneous plays as Jīva, jagat, Īśvara. If a jīva understands this he enjoys mukti. Because Īśvara eternally understands this he is Nithya mukta."

संबन्धानुपपत्तेश्च ॥ २.२.३८॥

saṃbandhānupapatteśca || 2.2.38 ||

And because relation is not possible.

Relationship (sambandha) is only possible between two independent realities. But if both were truly independent, then God would not have control over the world - this contradicts His omnipotence. If they were dependent on each other, neither would be the Ultimate Reality - this contradicts their supposed absolute existence. Therefore, the very idea of a separate relationship is illogical (anupapatti).

Sāṅkhya claims that Prakṛti (Nature) and Puruṣa (Consciousness) are two independent realities. But if Prakṛti evolves on its own and Puruṣa is just a passive witness, then what is the point of their relationship? Vedanta says, there is no two - only one Brahman who manifests as both Puruṣa and Prakṛti.

3. Nyāya-Vaiśeṣika school says that God (Īshwara) is separate from the world but shapes it like a potter shapes clay. If so, where did the clay (world) come from? If it is eternal, then God is not its creator, contradicting His omnipotence. If God depends on something outside Himself, He is no longer supreme. Vedanta says that the world is not separate from Brahman; it is His very form.

From the Mokṣa viewpoint, the relationship between Brahman and the universe is not one of cause and effect or substance and attribute but a simultaneous and spontaneous manifestation of the One.

From the PoV of Mokṣa: Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the 3 are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestation of the one Param – param porul. The One spontaneous, synergistic, simultaneous plays as Jīva, jagat, Īśvara. If a jīva understands this he enjoys mukti. Because Īśvara eternally understands this he is Nithya mukta.

This means that the universe is not separate from Brahman but an expression of its inherent nature, like a reflection in a mirror or a dream within consciousness.

अधिष्ठानानुपपत्तेश्च ॥ २.२.३९॥

adhiṣṭhānānupapatteśca || 2.2.39 ||

And because of the impossibility of (anything existing without) a substratum.

This sūtra refutes the idea that the universe (jagat) can exist independently without a substratum (adhiṣṭhāna), which is Brahman.

The world (jagat) is nothing but Brahman appearing in diverse forms. Just like waves are nothing but the ocean, all names and forms exist within Brahman. If we try to find a substratum apart from Brahman, we fail because there is no second reality.

The universe is Brahman's vivarta (apparent transformation), not an independent entity. From the PoV of Mokṣa: Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the 3 are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestation of the One Param.

करणवच्चेन्न भोगादिभ्यः ॥ २.२.४०॥

karaṇavaccenna bhogādibhyaḥ || 2.2.40 ||

If it be said (that the Lord rules the Pradhāna etc) as (individual soul rules) the senses, (we say) no because of the enjoyment etc.

This sūtra addresses the objection that Brahman might be merely an instrumental cause (nimitta karana) of the universe, like a potter is to a pot. It refutes this view, arguing that Brahman is not just an instrument but also the material cause (upadana karana) and that the universe is created for enjoyment (bhoga) and other purposes that cannot be attributed to a mere instrument.

The Sāṅkhya school claims that Jīva is like the senses - it merely experiences but is not independent. Just as the eye perceives but does not control vision, the Jīva experiences life but is not the doer.

But the Jīva experiences bhoga (pleasure and pain) directly. Senses (karaṇas) do not feel pleasure or pain - they are only instruments. If the Jīva were like a sense organ, it would not feel suffering or joy, it would simply function mechanically. But in reality, the Jīva feels suffering, seeks liberation (mokṣa), and experiences duality. Thus, Jīva is not like the senses; it has independent consciousness.

From the Mokṣa viewpoint, Brahman (Paramaśiva) is not merely an instrument but the source, sustainer, and ultimate reality of the universe. The provided texts assert:

The One spontaneous, synergistic, simultaneous plays as Jīva, jagat, Īśvara. If a jīva understands this he enjoys mukti. Because Īśvara eternally understands this he is Nithya mukta."

This means that Brahman is not separate from the universe but intimately involved in its existence and evolution.

Īśvara is sat-chit-ānanda (being-consciousness-bliss) and can play around with His powers. This divine play (lila) is not a mechanical process but a conscious and joyful expression of Brahman's inherent nature. The universe is created not out of necessity but out of bliss and for the purpose of enjoyment and self-discovery.

The sūtra highlights the importance of bhoga (enjoyment) and other purposes in understanding the universe. The world is not simply a product of blind chance or mechanical necessity.

अन्तवत्त्वमसर्वज्ञता वा ॥ २.२.४१॥

antavattvamasarvajñatā vā || 2.2.41 ||

If (Brahman is the cause of the world), then either there is finitude or non-omniscience.

If Brahman is the cause of the world, it might appear to be either finite (antavattva) or non-omniscient (asarvajñatā). The concern is that involvement in creation would limit Brahman's infinite and all-knowing nature.

Īśvara is sat-chit-ananda (being-consciousness-bliss) and can play around with His powers. This divine play (lila) is not a forced or necessary activity but a spontaneous and joyful expression of Brahman's inherent nature. Involvement in creation does not limit Īśvara's omniscience or infinitude but is simply an expression of it.

Chandogya Upaniṣad (6.2.1-3) - सदेव सोम्येदमग्र आसीदेकमेवाद्वितीयम्। तदैक्षत बहु स्यां प्रजायेयेति। In the beginning, this universe was Existence (Brahman) alone, one without a second. It thought, 'May I become many; may I grow forth.

Jīva is NOT a limited experiencer - it is a reflection of Paramaśiva. The ignorance of Jīva creates the illusion of limitation. When Jīva awakens, it realizes it was never separate from the all-knowing, infinite Paramaśiva.

उत्पत्त्यसम्भवात् ॥ २.२.४२॥

utpattyasambhavāt || 2.2.42 ||

The origin (of the individual soul from the Lord) being impossible.

This sūtra refutes the idea that the universe can originate from a non-intelligent cause.

The Sāṅkhya school states that Jīvas (individual selves) are many and eternal, distinct from Prakṛti (Nature). They compare the Jīva to an observer (like the eye) - it experiences but does not act.

Bhagavad Gītā 2.20 - न जायते म्रियते वा कदाचिन् नायं भूत्वा भविता वा न भूयः। "The Self is never born, nor does it ever die."

Bhagavad Gītā (13.31) - अनादित्वान्निर्गुणत्वात्परमात्मायमव्ययः। "Because it is beginningless and devoid of attributes, the Supreme Self is imperishable."

Just as multiple reflections of the sun appear in different water bodies but the sun remains one, Jīvas appear many due to ignorance.

From the Mokṣa viewpoint, the universe doesn't truly originate but is a manifestation of Brahman. From the PoV of Mokṣa: Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the 3 are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestation of the one Param – param porul." This implies that the universe's apparent origination is part of Brahman's divine play, not a separate creation event.

KaivalyaUpaniṣad(1.19)-mayyevasakalaṃjātaṃmayisarvaṃpratiṣṭhitam|mayisarvaṃlayaṃyātitadbrahmādvayamasmyaham || "All this is born from Me alone. All this is established in Me alone. And all this does merge with Me alone. I am that Brahman without a plural."

न च कर्तुः करणम् ॥ २.२.४३॥

na ca kartuḥ karaṇam || 2.2.43 ||

And the instrument cannot belong to the agent.

This sūtra refutes the idea that Brahman, the ultimate agent or creator (kartuḥ), requires instruments (karaṇam) separate from itself to create the universe. It emphasizes Brahman's self-sufficiency and inherent power.

It refutes the Sāṅkhya philosophy, which claims that the Jīva (individual soul) is merely an experiencer (bhoktā) and not a doer (kartā).

Bhagavad Gītā (3.27) - प्रकृतेः क्रियमाणानि गुणैः कर्माणि सर्वशः। अहंकारविमूढात्मा कर्ताहमिति मन्यते॥ "All actions are performed by guṇas (modes of nature), but the deluded ego thinks "I am the doer."

In Paramādvaita, the One spontaneous, synergistic, simultaneous plays as Jīva, jagat, Īśvara. If a jīva understands this he enjoys mukti. Because Īśvara eternally understands this he is Nithya mukta."

This perspective dissolves the duality between the agent and the instrument, emphasizing that Brahman is self-sufficient and requires nothing external to itself.

विज्ञानादिभावे वा तदप्रतिषेधः ॥ २.२.४४॥

vijñānādibhāve vā tadapratiṣedhaḥ || 2.2.44 ||

Or, in the existence of consciousness, etc., there is no negation of that (Brahman).

This sūtra addresses the question of whether attributing qualities like intelligence (vijñāna), bliss (ananda), etc., to Brahman contradicts its attributeless (nirguna) nature. It asserts that there is no contradiction because these qualities are not separate from Brahman's essence but are expressions of its inherent nature.

विप्रतिषेधाच्च ॥ २.२.४५॥

vipratiṣedhācca || 2.2.45 ||

And because of the contradictions.

This sūtra asserts that alternative philosophical systems that attempt to explain the origin and nature of the universe are riddled with contradictions (vipratiṣedha).

From the Mokṣa viewpoint, all apparent contradictions in understanding Jīva, jagat, and Īśvara dissolve when viewed through the lens of non-duality (Paramādvaita). The texts state:

"From the PoV of Mokṣa: Jīva, Īśvara, jagat all the 3 are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestations of the one Param – param porul."

This means that any philosophical system that separates these three elements inherently creates contradictions, as it fails to recognize their unity in Brahman.

The illusion of change is due to Avidyā (ignorance), but in reality, the Jīva is always Nitya-Mukta (eternally liberated).

The true self is Akhanda (unbroken), Nitya (eternal), and Swayamprakāśa (self-effulgent).

इति श्रीमत्कृष्णद्वैपायनकृत ब्रह्मसूत्रेषु द्वितीयाध्यायस्य द्वितीयः पादः समाप्तः

iti śrīmat kṛṣṇadvaipāyanakṛta brahmasūtreṣu dvitīyādhyāyasya dvitīyaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

Thus ends the second section of the second chapter of the Brahma Sūtras, composed by the revered Kṛṣṇa-Dvaipāyana (Vyasa).

The third pāda (section) of the second chapter of the Brahma Sūtras, which focuses on the nature of creation and addresses specific elements of the universe, starting with ether (ākāśa).

न वियदश्रुतेः ॥ २.३.१॥

na viyadaśruteḥ || 2.3.1 ||

Ākāśa (is) not (created) (as it is) not stated so by the Śruti.

The objection raised here is whether ether (space) is created, as its creation is not explicitly mentioned in certain scriptural statements. The response clarifies that scriptural authority (śabda pramāṇa) and logical reasoning support the understanding of ether's origin as part of creation.

From the Paramādvaita perspective, all elements, including ether (ākāśa), are spontaneous manifestations of Brahman's divine play (līlā). Ether, like all other elements, arises from Brahman's inherent power (Maya) and serves as a medium for sustaining creation without being separate from its source.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.1) - तस्माद्वा एतस्मादात्मन आकाशः सम्भूतः। "From that Supreme Self, space (Ākāśa) was born."

अस्ति तु ॥ २.३.२॥

asti tu || 2.3.2 ||

But (Ākāśa) exists.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.1) - तस्माद्वा एतस्मादात्मन आकाशः सम्भूतः। "From that Supreme Self, space (Ākāśa) was born."

Everything - including space - is a spontaneous, simultaneous, synergistic manifestation of Paramaśiva.

Ākāśa is the first creation, but it is still within the grand Līlā (divine play) of Paramaśiva.

The Jīva (individual soul) experiences Ākāśa, but a realized being sees it as one with Paramaśiva.

गौण्यसम्भवात् ॥ २.३.३॥

gauṇyasambhavāt || 2.3.3 ||

Because (the interpretation related to Ākāśa) as secondary is not possible.

Sāṅkhya & Nyāya schools argue that Ākāśa (space) is an eternal substance (dravya) and independent of Brahman. This Sūtra refutes them, stating that the primary meaning of Ākāśa as Brahman is untenable because Ākāśa is subject to creation as per the Upaniṣads. Since Ākāśa is created from Brahman, its existence must be interpreted in a secondary (gauṇī) sense, not as the Ultimate Reality (Paramārtha Satya).

Paramādvaita says:

Paramaśiva is beyond even Ākāśa—He is the Maha Ākāśa, the source of all manifestation. Ākāśa is a reflection of Paramaśiva's energy, but it is not the ultimate cause—it is part of His divine play (Līlā). Jīva can experience its oneness with Brahman (Paramaśiva) by transcending the illusion of separateness in Ākāśa.

शब्दाच्च ॥ २.३.४॥

śabdācca || 2.3.4 ||

And also because of scriptural statements (Śabda Pramāṇa), Ākāśa (space) is not the Ultimate Reality (Brahman).

Nyāya & Sāṅkhya schools argue that Ākāśa is eternal and independent, existing as a separate dravya (substance). This Sūtra refutes them, stating that scriptures (Śabda Pramāṇa) clearly declare that Ākāśa is created—hence, it cannot be Brahman, which is unborn and unchanging. Since Ākāśa is mentioned as a product (kārya) of Brahman, it cannot be the Ultimate Reality (Kāraṇa Brahman).

Ākāśa is a tattva, but Paramaśiva is beyond tattvas—He is Mahākāśa, the source of all manifestation. In the Mokṣa-Centric view, Ākāśa is an expression of Paramaśiva's Līlā (divine play), but it is not self-existent. The Jīva can dissolve into Brahman by realizing that even space is a temporary projection.

स्याच्चैकस्य ब्रह्मशब्दवत् ॥ २.३.५॥

syāccaikasya brahmaśabdavat || 2.3.5 ||

And it is possible for the same word ("originated") to have (primary and secondary senses) like the word Brahman.

The designation of creation can apply to ether (ākāśa) as a single element, similar to how the term "Brahman" is used in different contexts depending on the perspective. It emphasizes that ether, though subtle, is part of creation and originates from Brahman.

The argument is, if Brahman is eternal but still undergoes different manifestations, why can't Ākāśa also be eternal and undergo transformations?"

The response clarifies that Brahman alone can be both changeless and the substratum of all changes, whereas Ākāśa is a created entity and hence cannot have this dual nature.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.1) - तस्माद्वा एतस्मादात्मन आकाशः सम्भूतः। "From this Self (Ātman/Brahman), space (Ākāśa) was created." This proves Ākāśa is a created entity, not eternal like Brahman.

Unlike Ākāśa, which is inert, Brahman is Consciousness itself.

प्रतिज्ञाहानिरव्यतिरेकाच्छब्देभ्यः ॥ २.३.६॥

pratijñāhāniravyatirekācchabdebhyaḥ || 2.3.6 ||

There is no abandonment of the proposition, because there is no difference, and because of the scriptural statements.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.1) - तस्माद्वा एतस्मादात्मन आकाशः सम्भूतः। "From that Supreme Self, Ākāśa was born."

This explicitly states that Ākāśa is created from Brahman, making it dependent, not Absolute.

The Sāṅkhya and Nyāya schools propose that Ākāśa is eternal and independent. Vedānta refutes this - if Ākāśa were independent, it would contradict śruti, which says it originates from Brahman.

There is no real difference between Brahman and its effects, the proposition regarding ether's creation stands firm. Since Śruti explicitly states that Ākāśa is created, any argument for its independent existence is invalid.

यावद्विकारं तु विभागो लोकवत् ॥ २.३.७॥

yāvadvikāraṃ tu vibhāgo lokavat || 2.3.7 ||

Separateness persists wherever there is an effect, as it is seen in the world.

The sūtra asserts that while ether (ākāśa) is a manifestation of Brahman, it exhibits separateness like all other created effects. This leads to the conclusion that:

All effects in creation have distinct identities and characteristics. Despite this separateness, all created forms arise from Brahman, maintaining its status as the ultimate reality.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.4.1) - yadagne rohitaṃrūpaṃ tejasastadrūpaṃ yacchuklaṃ tadapāṃ yatkṛṣṇaṃ tadannasyāpāgādagneragnitvaṃ vācārambhaṇaṃ vikāro nāmadheyaṃ trīṇi rūpāṇītyeva satyam || "The red colour of gross fire is from subtle fire, the white colour is from subtle water, and the dark colour is from subtle earth. Thus that which constitutes the 'fire'-ness of fire is gone. All changes are mere words, in name only [i.e., fire is only a name indicating a certain condition]. The three colours are the reality."

This confirms that all transformations (vikāra) are temporary, and ultimately, only Brahman is real.

एतेन मातरिश्वा व्याख्यातः ॥ २.३.८॥

etena mātariśvā vyākhyātaḥ || 2.3.8 ||

Hereby air is also explained (as an effect).

This sūtra addresses the nature of Mātariśvā (Vāyu, the vital air or cosmic wind) as part of Brahman's manifestation. It refutes dualistic notions that separate Vāyu from Brahman and affirms its non-dual origin through scriptural authority (śabda pramāṇa) and logical coherence.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.1) - तस्माद्वा एतस्मादात्मन आकाशः सम्भूतः। आकाशाद्वायुः। "From that Supreme Self, space (Ākāśa) was born. From space, air (Vāyu) was born."

This confirms that Vāyu (Mātariśvā) is also a transformation (vikāra) of Brahman and follows the same logic as Ākāśa.

The Taittirīya Upaniṣad (2.1–3) describes Brahman as the source of all elements, including Vāyu: "From Brahman arose space (ākāśa), from space arose air (vāyu), from air arose fire (tejas)..." This hierarchical emergence does not imply duality but illustrates Brahman's immanence in creation.

असम्भवस्तु सतोऽनुपपत्तेः ॥ २.३.९॥

asambhavastu sato'nupapatteḥ || 2.3.9 ||

But there can be no origin of the Sat as it does not stand to reason.

This sūtra addresses the question of whether Brahman (the ultimate reality, or Sat) can be considered an effect or a product of creation, similar to other elements like ether (ākāśa) and air (vāyu). It firmly asserts that Brahman cannot originate from anything else, emphasizing its eternal and uncaused nature.

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 6.9 - न तस्य कश्चित् पतिर्मस्ति लोके न चेषिताऽनैव च तस्य लिङ्गम्। स कारिणं करणाधिपो न चास्य कश्चिज्जनिता न चाधिपः॥ "He has no master in the world, no ruler, nor is there even a sign of Him by which He can be inferred. He is the cause, the Lord of the lord of the organs; and He is without progenitor or controller."

Bhagavad Gītā 9.10 - मयाध्यक्षेण प्रकृतिः सूयते सचराचरम् | "Under My supervision, Prakṛti brings forth the moving and the unmoving."

तेजोऽतस्तथा ह्याह ॥ २.३.१०॥

tejo'tastathā hyāha || 2.3.10 ||

Fire (originates) from this (Air), so says (the Śruti).

This sūtra establishes that Tejas (fire) originates from Brahman, following the scriptural declaration. The phrase "tathā hy āha" means "so indeed the scripture says," indicating that the Upaniṣads confirm this truth.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1 - तस्माद्वा एतस्मात् आत्मनः आकाशः सम्भूतः। आकाशाद्वायुः। वायोः अग्निः। "From Brahman arises space, from space air, and from air fire."

आपः ॥ २.३.११॥

āpaḥ || 2.3.11 ||

Water (is produced from fire).

This sūtra introduces water (āpaḥ) as another element in the sequence of creation, following fire (tejas). It emphasizes the interconnectedness of elements and their origins from Brahman, the ultimate reality.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1 -आकाशाद्वायुः। वायोः अग्निः। अग्नेः आपः। "From Brahman arises space, from space air, from air fire, and from fire water."

पृथिव्यधिकाररूपशब्दान्तरादिभ्यः ॥ २.३.१२॥

pṛthivyadhikārarūpaśabdāntarādibhyaḥ || 2.3.12 ||

(The word "food" means) earth on the strength of the topic, colour, and other Śruti.

This Brahma Sūtra highlights earth (pṛthivī) as a significant element in the sequence of creation, emphasizing its interconnectedness with other elements while affirming their shared origin in Brahman.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1 - आपोऽग्नेः। पृथिव्यां ओषधयः। "From fire (Tejas) came water (Āpaḥ). From water arose the Earth (Pṛthivī)."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.4 - tā āpa aikṣanta bahvyaḥ syāma prajāyemahīti tā annamasṛjanta tasmādyatra kva ca varṣati tadeva bhūyiṣṭhamannaṃ bhavatyadbhya eva tadadhyannādyaṃ jāyate || "That water decided: 'I shall be many; I shall be born.' That water then created food. This is why whenever and wherever there is rain, at once food grows in great abundance. It is from water that food is produced."

Praśna Upaniṣad 2.4 - पृथिवी गन्धरसा। "Earth has the qualities of smell and taste."

तदभिध्यानादेव तु तल्लिङ्गात् सः ॥ २.३.१३॥

tadabhidhyānādeva tu talliṅgāt saḥ || 2.3.13 ||

But because of His reflecting only He (the Supreme is the creator of air etc) is known from His indicatory marks.

The sūtra suggests that all elements, including earth, are manifestations of Brahman through its reflection.

The creation of elements happens through Brahman's meditation (abhidhyāna), as indicated by scriptural signs (liṅga).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.3 - tadaikṣata bahu syāṃ prajāyeyeti tattejo'sṛjata tatteja aikṣata bahu syāṃ prajāyeyeti tadapo'sṛjata | tasmādyatra kvaca śocati svedate vā puruṣastejasa eva tadadhyāpo jāyante |

This passage confirms that creation results from Brahman's will (abhidhyāna).

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.6 - tatsṛṣṭvā tadevānuprāviśat "Having created this world, Brahman entered into it."

This indicates that Brahman remains the conscious substratum of creation.

विपर्ययेण तु क्रमोऽत उपपद्यते च ॥ २.३.१४॥

viparyayeṇa tu kramo'ta upapadyate ca || 2.3.14 ||

(In dissolution the elements are withdrawn) in the reverse order (from the order of creation) and this is reasonable.

This sūtra discusses the process of dissolution in relation to the creation of elements, asserting that the order of dissolution occurs in a reverse manner compared to the order of creation. This emphasizes the cyclical nature of existence and how elements return to their source.

Bhagavad Gītā 8.19 - भूतग्रामः स एवायं भूत्वा भूत्वा प्रलीयते। "All beings repeatedly manifest and merge back into the unmanifest at the time of dissolution."

अन्तरा विज्ञानमनसी क्रमेण तल्लिङ्गादिति चेन्नाविशेषात् ॥ २.३.१५॥

antarā vijñānamanasī krameṇa talliṅgāditicennāviśeṣāt || 2.3.15 ||

If it be said that (between Brahman and elements) the intellect and mind (are mentioned and that ought to be the order in creation and the inverse order in dissolution), owing to indication of that, (we say) not so, on account of the non-difference (of the intellect and mind from the elements).

This sūtra addresses a possible objection regarding the sequence of creation, particularly concerning vijñāna (intellect) and manas (mind). The opponent suggests that an intermediate stage should exist between intellect and mind due to scriptural indications. However, the sūtra refutes this by asserting that there is no distinction (aviśeṣa) in their sequence according to Vedantic scriptures.

Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad (6) – eṣa sarveśvaraḥ eṣa sarvajñaḥ, eṣo'ntāryami, eṣa yoniḥ sarvasya prabhavāpyayau hi bhūtānām. || This is the Lord of All; the Omniscient; the Indwelling Controller; the Source of All. This is the beginning and end of all beings.

Since Vijñāna (intellect) arises from Brahman directly, it does not require an additional intermediary stage before the emergence of mind.

चराचरव्यपाश्रयस्तु स्यात् तद्व्यपदेशो भाक्तः तद्भावभावित्वात् ॥ २.३.१६॥

carācaravyapāśrayastu syāt tadvyapadeśo bhāktaḥ tadbhāvabhāvitvāt || 2.3.16 ||

The mention of birth and death must be in the primary sense in relation to the moving and the motionless; in relation to the soul it must be in a secondary sense, the application (of such words) being possible when a body is present.

The world (both moving and non-moving) appears to be associated with Brahman, but this is only in a figurative sense.

Brahman itself remains untouched and beyond all modifications.

Shvetashvatara Upaniṣad 6.8 - na tasya kāryaṃ karaṇaṃ ca vidyate | "He (Brahman) has no work to perform, nor does He depend on any instrument of action."

Just as space accommodates everything but remains unaffected, Brahman pervades the universe yet remains detached.

The movement (chara) and stillness (achara) of objects belong to Prakṛti (Maya), not to Brahman.

Shvetashvatara Upaniṣad 6.11 - eko devaḥ sarvabhūteṣu gūḍhaḥ sarvavyāpī sarvabhūtāntarātmā karmādhyakṣaḥ sarvabhūtādhivāsaḥ sākṣī cetā kevalo nirguṇaśca || “The non-dual and resplendent Lord is hidden in all beings. All-pervading, the inmost Self of all creatures, the impeller to actions, abiding in all things, He is the Witness, the Animator and the Absolute, free from gunas.”

Bhagavad Gita 7.7 - मयि सर्वमिदं प्रोतं सूत्रे मणिगणा इव | "All this is strung on Me like pearls on a thread."

Paramaśiva (Brahman) is omnipresent but remains unaffected by the changing world.

नात्मा अश्रुतेर्नित्यत्वाच्च ताभ्यः ॥ २.३.१७॥

nātmā aśruternityatvācca tābhyaḥ || 2.3.17 ||

The individual soul has no origin; because the Śruti do not mention this, also on account of its being eternal (as per the Śruti).

The Upaniṣads and Bhagavad Gita affirm the eternal nature of Ātman:

Bhagavad Gita 2.20 - न जायते म्रियते वा कदाचिन् नायं भूत्वा भविता वा न भूयः। अजो नित्यः शाश्वतोऽयं पुराणो न हन्यते हन्यमाने शरीरे॥ "The Self is never born nor does it die; it neither comes into existence nor ceases to exist. It is unborn, eternal, changeless, and ancient; it is not slain when the body is slain."

Bhagavad Gita 2.17 - अविनाशि तु तद्विद्धि येन सर्वमिदं ततम्। "Know that which pervades everything to be indestructible."

Chandogya Upaniṣad 3.14.1 - sarvaṃ khalvidaṃ brahma tajjalāniti śānta upāsīta | atha khalu kratumayaḥ puruṣo yathākraturasmiṁlloke puruṣo bhavati tathetaḥ pretya bhavati sa kratuṃ kurvīta || “All this is Brahman. Everything comes from Brahman, everything goes back to Brahman, and everything is sustained by Brahman. One should therefore quietly meditate on Brahman. Each person has a mind of his own. What a person wills in his present life, he becomes when he leaves this world. One should bear this in mind and meditate accordingly.”

Thus, the Self (Ātman) is not transient like physical elements (earth, water, fire, air, space) because it is described as eternal (nitya) and indestructible.

Shvetashvatara Upaniṣad 4.10 - māyāṃ tu prakṛtiṃ vidyānmāyinaṃ ca maheśvaram | "Know Prakṛti (nature) to be Maya and the Lord of Maya to be Maheshvara (Shiva)."

ज्ञोऽत एव ॥ २.३.१८॥

jño'ta eva || 2.3.18 ||

For this very reason (that it is not created) (the soul is) intelligence.

Ātman (the Self) is inherently the Knower (Jñātā), the conscious principle.

Aitareya Upaniṣad 3.1.3 - prajñānam brahma | Consciousness is Brahman.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.18 - न जायते म्रियते वा विपश्चिन् नायं कुतश्चिन्न बभूव कश्चित्। अजो नित्यः शाश्वतोऽयं पुराणो न हन्यते हन्यमाने शरीरे ॥ "The wise one is neither born nor dies; he has not come from anywhere, nor has he become anyone. He is unborn, eternal, permanent, and ancient; he is not killed when the body is killed."

Bhagavad Gita 2.20 - न जायते म्रियते वा कदाचिन्नायं भूत्वा भविता वा न भूयः। अजो नित्यः शाश्वतोऽयं पुराणो न हन्यते हन्यमाने शरीरे ॥ "It is never born nor does it ever die; it has not come into being nor will it ever come into being. It is unborn, eternal, constant, and ancient; it is not killed when the body is killed."

युक्तेश्च ॥ २.३.१९॥

yukteśca || 2.3.19 ||

And this is also established through reasoning.

Śruti (scripture) is supported by Yukti (logical reasoning) to prove that the Self is inherently conscious.

Even without scriptural authority, pure reasoning reveals that consciousness cannot arise from the inert body or material objects.

Jīva undergoes departure (utkrānti), movement (gati), and return (āgati).

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.19 - संपराये कृतात्मानः | "The one who realizes the Self does not return." Liberated Jīvas do not return; others take rebirth.

The Jīva attains temporary enjoyment in Swarga (heaven) and then returns.

Bhagavad Gītā 9.21 - क्षीणे पुण्ये मर्त्यलोकं विशन्ति | "When the good karma is exhausted, they return to the mortal world.

Those engaged in adharma (unrighteous acts) take birth in lower worlds.

The Self is all this. He who sees in this way, thinks in this way, and knows in this way, has love for the Self, sports with the Self, enjoys the company of the Self, and has joy in the Self, he is supreme and can go about as he likes in all the worlds. But those who think otherwise are under the control of others. They cannot remain in the worlds they live in, nor can they move about in the worlds as they like [i.e., they are under many limitations].”

The Jīva moves through birth and death based on its nature and its karma.

अविरोधश्चन्दनवत् ॥ २.३.२४॥

avirodhaścandanavat || 2.3.24 ||

There is no contradiction as in the case of sandalwood paste.

The analogy suggests that just as applying sandal-paste to a localized area creates a cooling sensation felt throughout the body, the atomic soul can experience sensations across the entire body due to its connection with the mind and senses.

Bhagavad Gita 13.33 - यथा सूर्यः सर्वतः प्रकटः | "Just as one sun illuminates this entire world, so does the soul illuminate the entire body." This reinforces that while the soul may be atomic, its effects can be felt universally.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7 - sa ya eṣo'ṇimaitadātmyamidaṃ sarvaṃ tatsatyaṃ sa ātmā tattvamasi śvetaketo iti bhūya eva mā bhagavānvijñāpayatviti tathā somyeti hovāca || 'That which is the subtlest of all is the Self of all this. It is the Truth. It is the Self. That thou art, O Śvetaketu.' (Śvetaketu then said,) 'Please explain this to me again.' 'Yes, Somya, I will explain again,' replied his father.

This illustrates how an atomic entity can have widespread influence.

अवस्थितिवैशेष्यादिति चेन्नाभ्युपगमाद्धृद्धि हि ॥ २.३.२५॥

avasthitivaiśeṣyāditi cennābhyupagamāddhṛddhi hi || 2.3.25 ||

If it be objected that (the argument holds good in the case of sandal paste) owing to its peculiarity of position, (but that is not evident in the case of the soul), (we say), no, (a peculiar location) for the soul is admitted in the Śruti, for it exists in the heart.

Here, an objection is raised: "Doesn't Jīva experience different conditions (avasthās) like waking, dreaming, and deep sleep? Doesn't this indicate that Jīva is limited and changing?"

The response: "No, because the core consciousness (hṛd – the Self) remains unchanged even as the body and mind undergo different states."

The Self is always present as the substratum of all experiences.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.2 - yadarcimadyadaṇubhyo'ṇu ca yasmiṁllokā nihitā lokinaśca | tadetadakṣaraṃ brahma sa prāṇastadu vāṅmanaḥ tadetatsatyaṃ tadamṛtaṃ tadveddhavyaṃ somya viddhi || "That which is radiant, subtler than the subtle, That by which all the worlds and their inhabitants are supported-That, verily, is the indestructible Brahman; That is the prāṇa, speech and the mind; That is the True and That is the Immortal. That alone is to be struck. Strike It, my good friend."

This means that the Self is not limited by different states (avasthās); rather, it is the unchanging witness (sākṣī) of all states.

गुणाद्वाऽऽलोकवत् ॥ २.३.२६॥

guṇādvālokavat | 2.3.26 ||

Or owing to its quality as in the world.

The opponent argues that if the Jīva (Self) is truly unchanging, how do we explain the variety of experiences, actions, and differences among individuals?

The sūtrakāra (Bādarāyaṇa) answers: "guṇādvālokavat" – these differences are due to guṇas (attributes or limiting adjuncts like body, mind, senses), just as light appears differently depending on the medium it shines through.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7 - sa ya eṣo'ṇimaitadātmyamidaṃ sarvaṃ tatsatyaṃ sa ātmā tattvamasi śvetaketo iti bhūya eva mā bhagavānvijñāpayatviti tathā somyeti hovāca || 'That which is the subtlest of all is the Self of all this. It is the Truth. It is the Self.

That thou art, O Śvetaketu.' (Śvetaketu then said,) 'Please explain this to me again.' 'Yes, Somya, I will explain again,' replied his father.

This declares the non-difference of Jīva and Brahman, regardless of appearances.

All perceived differences are due to upādhis, not the Self itself.

Shiva Sūtras 1.1 - caitanyamātmā "Consciousness is the Self".

The Jīva's qualities are temporary modifications, and the underlying consciousness (Paramaśiva) is the eternal truth.

पृथगुपदेशात् ॥ २.३.२८॥

pṛthagupadeśāt || 2.3.28 ||

On account of the separate teaching (of the Śruti) (the soul and intelligence are separate).

The Upaniṣads often list the body, senses, mind, and then distinctly mention the Self, implying the Self is not one of them, but something beyond them.

However, Advaita asserts that this distinction is provisional (vyavaharika), not absolute (paramarthika). The ultimate truth remains the non-duality of jīva and Brahman.

This separate mention shows the Self is distinct from the body/mind/self known in common terms.

yathā nadyaḥ syandamānāḥ samudre 'staṁ gacchanti nāmarūpe vihāya | Mundaka Upaniṣad 3.2.8 "As rivers, flowing, merge into the ocean, abandoning name and form"

Here, the separate identity of the jīva (like rivers) is shown to dissolve into Brahman (the ocean), despite initial distinct teachings.

Bhagavad Gita 6.29 - sarvabhūtasthamātmānaṁ sarvabhūtāni cātmani "The Self dwelling in all beings, and all beings in the Self"

तद्गुणसारत्वात्तु तद्व्यपदेशः प्राज्ञवत् ॥ २.३.२९॥

tadguṇasāratvāttu tadvyapadeśaḥ prājñavat || 2.3.29 ||

But because its essence is those qualities, it is designated as such, like the wise one (intelligent Self).

The Jīva's apparent individuality arises from its association with Brahman's qualities (e.g., consciousness, existence), which are its essential nature (sāra). The jīva is not a separate entity but is designated (vyapadeśaḥ) as Brahman due to this shared essence. The analogy of prājñavat refers to the state of deep sleep (sushupti), where the Jīva's individuality dissolves, and only pure consciousness (prajña, the "wise one") remains, reflecting its true nature as Brahman.

Katha Upaniṣad 1.3.- ātmānaṁ rathinaṃ viddhi śarīram rathameva tu | buddhiṃ tu sārathiṃ viddhi manaḥ pragrahameva ca | "Know the Ātman to be the master of the chariot; the body, chariot; the intellect, the charioteer; and the mind, the reins."

Bhagavad Gītā 18.61 - īśvaraḥ sarvabhūtānāṁ hṛddeśe'rjuna tiṣṭhati | "The Lord dwells in the hearts of all beings, O Arjuna"

यावदात्मभावित्वाच्च न दोषस्तद्दर्शनात् ॥ २.३.३०॥

yāvadātmabhāvitvācca na doṣastaddarśanāt || 2.3.30 ||

And because it persists so long as the soul exists, there can be no defect, for this is what is met with in the scriptures.

The Jīva's individuality—marked by its association with the body, mind, and senses—exists only as long as ignorance (avidyā) persists. This conditioned state (ātmabhāvitva) is not a defect in the doctrine of non-duality because it is a superimposition (adhyāsa), not the ultimate reality. Scripture (taddarśanāt) reveals that this individuality ceases upon self-realization, when the jīva recognizes its identity with Brahman.

The Jīva's conditioned existence (ātmabhāvitva) lasts only until self-knowledge dawns, affirming that its separateness is temporary and not a flaw.

Kena Upaniṣad 1.3 - na tatra cakṣurgacchati na vāggacchati no manaḥ | "There, the eye does not go, nor speech, nor mind"

This indicates that the Jīva's limitations are tied to its conditioned state, and scripture (taddarśanāt) points beyond them to the infinite Brahman.

Bhagavad Gītā 13.2 - kṣetrajñaṁ cāpi māṁ viddhi sarva-kṣetreṣu bhārata || "Know Me as the Knower in all bodies, O Arjuna." This shows that even though the Self appears in relation to the body, it remains the witness, untouched and unchanging.

पुंस्त्वादिवत्त्वस्य सतोऽभिव्यक्तियोगात् ॥ २.३.३१॥

puṃstvādivattvasya sato'bhivyaktiyogāt || 2.3.31 ||

Like manhood and such qualities, the quality of (being embodied) can manifest in the existent Self (without contradiction).

This addresses why the jīva appears distinct, using the analogy of qualities like masculinity (puṃstva) or femininity, which exist latently in a person and manifest under certain conditions. Similarly, the Jīva's individuality is a manifestation (abhivyakti) of its inherent nature, not a fundamental reality.

Just as masculinity or femininity manifests from a neutral state in a child, the Jīva's individuality is a spontaneous expression (abhivyakti) of Paramaśiva's divine play (līlā). This manifestation is not a flaw but a deliberate unfolding, and through sadhana and realization ofŚivo'ham, the jīva recognizes its source as Paramaśiva, beyond all temporary forms.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.2.13 - nityo'nityānāṁ cetanaścetānānām eko bahūnāṁ yo vidadhāti kāmān | "He is the eternal among the non-eternal, the Conscious among the conscious; One orders the desires of many."

This shows the immutable, conscious Self manifesting as though involved, while remaining ever free.

नित्योपलब्ध्यनुपलब्धिप्रसङ्गोऽन्यतरनियमो वाऽन्यथा ॥ २.३.३२॥

nityopalabdhyanupalabdhiprasaṅgo'nyataraniyam vā'nyathā || 2.3.32 ||

Else there will be the possibility of either constant perception or nonperception or the necessity of one of the two otherwise.

If the jīva were wholly distinct from Brahman, it could never perceive Brahman (anupalabdhi), contradicting spiritual experience. If it were identical without maya's influence, it would always perceive Brahman (nityopalabdhi), negating the need for liberation. Advaita resolves this by positing that the jīva is Brahman veiled by ignorance (vidyā), and its perception varies due to this superimposition, not because of an inherent flaw in its nature.

Kena Upaniṣad 2.2 - nāhaṁ manye suvedeti no na vedeti veda ca | "I do not think I know it well; nor do I think I do not know it"

As per Paramādvaita, the Jīva's perception of Paramaśiva (the ultimate reality) is neither constant nor absent but depends on its state of consciousness among the 25 states it traverses, culminating in turiyātīta-turiyātīta (beyond the fourth state). The sūtra's contingencies (nityopalabdhi or anupalabdhi) arise only if one misunderstands the Jīva, Īśvara (God), and jagat (cosmos) as separate. Counting never started because separation never happened. Oneness remains inside as Oneness is the point of view of Mokṣa.

कर्ता शास्त्रार्थवत्त्वात् ॥ २.३.३३॥

kartā śāstrārthavattvāt || 2.3.33 ||

The individual soul must be an agent, for thus alone the scriptures become meaningful.

Some schools (like Sāṅkhya and Vaiśeṣika) propose that the Self is not the doer, and that actions are performed only by the body-mind complex, while the Self merely "witnesses."

Advaita states that while ultimately, in the Paramārthika Satya (absolute reality), the Self is akartā (non-doer), empirically (Vyāvahārika Satya), the Self appears to act through the body-mind—this is due to adhyāsa (superimposition). If there were no kartā, these teachings would have no subject, and hence become meaningless (śāstrārthavattvāt).

Bhagavad Gītā 3.27 - prakṛteḥ kriyamāṇāni guṇaiḥ karmāṇi sarvaśaḥ | ahaṅkāra-vimūḍhātmā kartāham iti manyate || “All actions are performed by the modes of nature (prakṛti), but one whose mind is deluded by ego thinks: I am the doer.”

This highlights the jīva as a doer (kartā) in bondage, making scriptural injunctions meaningful (śāstrārthavattvāt), while knowledge reveals its true non-doing nature as Brahman.

Katha Upaniṣad 1.3.3 - ātmānaṁ rathinaṁ viddhi śarīraṁ rathameva tu | "Know the Self as the rider, and the body as the chariot"

The Jīva's actions align with its 25 states of consciousness, where even Īśvara (God) is a state (turīyātīta-turīyātīta). The scriptures (as Shabda Pramana) - Vedas, Āgamas, and words of authentic gurus like himself—are purposeful because they awaken the jīva to its divine agency. He asserts: "When I reveal the truth about Jīva, your understanding about jīva will be for Mokṣa," linking doership to the ultimate goal. The document's reference to dīkṣā and sadhana (e.g., "When guru gives Dīkṣā persisting in that, manifesting is sadhana") underscores the Jīva's active role in manifesting Paramaśiva's powers, making scriptures meaningful.

विहारोपदेशात् ॥ २.३.३४॥

vihāropadeśāt || 2.3.34 ||

Because of the scriptural statement describing (creation) as sport (of the Self/Brahman).

Taittiriya Upaniṣad 2.6 - so'kāmayata bahu syāṁ prajāyeyeti | "He desired, 'May I become many, may I be born'"
This describes Brahman's playful manifestation (vihāra) as the jīva and the world, suggesting that the Jīva's activities are part of this cosmic sport, taught (upadeśāt) to lead it back to its source.

As per Paramādvaita, vihāropadeśāt is the Jīva's divine play (vihāra) within Paramaśiva's cosmic līlā. Jīva is part of Paramaśiva left to play with Himself, thus the Jīva's activities are a spontaneous, synergistic expression of Paramaśiva's consciousness. The scriptures (Shabda Pramana - Vedas, Āgamas, and guru's words) teach this vihāra to awaken the jīva to its agency across the 25 states of consciousness, culminating in turīyātīta-turīyātīta. When Paramaśiva is dancing, small fire particles fly out of the huge fire column and that is creation," likening the Jīva's actions to sparks in Paramaśiva's dance.

उपादानात् ॥ २.३.३५॥

upādānāt || 2.3.35 ||

Because (Brahman is) the material cause (of the universe).

Upādānāt explains that the Jīva's agency and activities arise because it is the material cause (upādāna) of its experiences in the empirical realm. The Jīva, though ultimately non-different from Brahman, becomes the "cause" of its actions and perceptions through its identification with upadhis (limiting adjuncts) like the body, mind, and intellect, which are products of maya (ignorance). This identification enables the jīva to be the substratum of its karma and experiences, making scriptural injunctions meaningful. In the absolute sense (paramarthika), however, the Jīva's doership dissolves, as it is Brahman alone.

Paramādvaita says, your DNA is made of the material called jagat – pancha bhutas. It is made by Īśvara and given to jīva to enjoy," positioning the jīva as the material cause of its existence and actions, empowered by Paramaśiva.

From the point of view of the Jīva, even Īśvara and jagat is part of Jīva, implying that the Jīva's upādāna role encompasses its experience of the cosmos, guided by dīkṣā and sādhanā toward oneness with Paramaśiva.

व्यपदेशाच्च क्रियायां न चेन्निर्देशविपर्ययः ॥ २.३.३६॥

vyapadeśācca kriyāyāṃ na cennirdeśaviparyayaḥ || 2.3.36 ||

And the soul is an agent because of the mention (as such) in respect of action; were it not so, there would have been a contrary indication.

This sūtra continues the discussion of the Jīva's agency, asserting that the Jīva is designated (vyapadeśa) as the doer in scriptural descriptions of actions (kriyā), and denying this would contradict (viparyaya) the specific teachings (nirdeśa) of the scriptures. It reinforces the Jīva's role as an active agent in the empirical context.

Jīva is part of Paramaśiva left to play with Himself, and its actions (kriyā) across 25 states of consciousness and seven bodies are taught in scriptures (Shabda Pramana) to awaken its divine agency. Denying this role would contradict (viparyaya) the scriptural guidance (nirdeśa) that leads to Mokṣa, as BHAGAVĀN asserts: "When I reveal the truth about Jīva, your understanding about Jīva will be for Mokṣa."

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 3.1 - yato vā imāni bhūtāni jāyante | yena jātāni jīvanti | yat prayanty abhi saṁviśanti | tad vijijñāsasva | tad brahma iti || "That from which all beings are born, by which they live, and into which they merge—know That to be Brahman."

Paramaśiva does not create the world from something - He manifests it as Himself. Creation is not from external material. It is from His own being. Just like a spider spins a web from its own substance - so is the universe."

उपलब्धिवदनियमः ॥ २.३.३७॥

upalabdhivadaniyamaḥ || 2.3.37 ||

As in the case of perception there is no rule (here) also.

This indicates that the Jīva's agency and experiences are not strictly predetermined or restricted (aniyamaḥ), much like perception (upalabdhi), which varies based on circumstances, senses, and objects. Due to avidyā (ignorance), the Jīva, though essentially Brahman, identifies with upadhis (limiting adjuncts) like the mind and senses, enabling diverse actions and perceptions in the empirical (vyavaharika) realm. This lack of rigid restriction allows the Jīva to engage in karma and pursue liberation, as prescribed by scripture, without contradicting its ultimate non-dual nature.

Mundaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9 - sa yo ha vai tat paramaṃ brahma veda brahmaiva bhavati nāsyābrahmavitkule bhavati | tarati śokaṃ tarati pāpmānaṃ guhāgranthibhyo vimukto'mṛto bhavati || “He who knows that highest Brahman becomes even Brahman; and in his line, none who knows not the Brahman will be born. He crosses grief and virtue and vice and being freed from the knot of the heart, becomes immortal.”

This reflects the Jīva's flexible engagement with reality, unrestricted by fixed perception.

शक्तिविपर्ययात् ॥ २.३.३८॥

śaktiviparyayāt || 2.3.38 ||

Because of the reversal of power.

The Jīva's apparent agency and limitations arise from a reversal (viparyaya) of its inherent power (śakti), which is originally one with Brahman's infinite consciousness. Due to avidyā (ignorance), the Jīva misidentifies with upadhis (limiting adjuncts) like the body and mind, redirecting its divine śakti into finite actions and experiences in the empirical (vyavaharika) realm. This reversal is not a permanent flaw but a temporary condition, and scriptures guide the Jīva to redirect its śakti toward self-realization, recognizing its non-dual nature as Brahman.

Svetasvatara Upaniṣad 4.10 - māyāṁ tu prakṛtiṁ vidyānmāyinaṁ tu maheśvaram | "Know Maya as Prakṛti, and the wielder of Maya as the Great Lord"

This verse indicates that the Jīva's power (śakti) is misdirected through maya (viparyaya), causing its apparent limitation, but its source remains the divine.

Chandogya Upaniṣad 3.14.1 - sarvaṁ khalvidaṁ brahma tajjalāniti śānta upāsīta | "All this is indeed Brahman; from That it arises, into That it merges, as That it breathes"

The Jīva's śakti, though seemingly reversed into individuality, is rooted in Brahman, and scripture redirects it toward unity.

As per Paramādvaita, the Jīva, as "part of Paramaśiva left to play with Himself," possesses infinite śakti but reverses it (viparyaya) by identifying with lower bodies (physical, pranic, mental) rather than all seven bodies, including the nirvanic body of Paramaśiva. Possessing all these 7 bodies simultaneously, spontaneously, synergistically is divya sharira, but due to maya, the Jīva's śakti manifests as limited actions and perceptions. The scriptures (Shabda Pramana) guide this reversal back to its source through kāyakalpa—superconscious epigenetics.

daivī hyeṣā guṇamayī mama māyā duratyayā | Bhagavad Gitā 7.14 Translation: "This divine Maya of Mine, consisting of the gunas, is hard to overcome"

समाध्यभावाच्च ॥ २.३.३९॥

samādhyabhāvācha || 2.3.39 ||

And because of the absence of samādhi (there is contradiction).

If the jīva were not the doer, it could not engage in disciplines like meditation, self-inquiry (ātma-vicāra), or yoga, rendering scriptural injunctions for liberation meaningless. Due to avidyā (ignorance), the jīva identifies with upādhis (limiting adjuncts), enabling action in the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm. Samādhi redirects this agency, dissolving avidyā to realize the jīva's identity with Brahman.

This links samādhi to the jīva's active practice, avoiding samādhyabhāva.

Bhagavad Gītā 5.5 - samaṃ sarvaṃ viśvena saṃnādati yogayukto munirbrahma | "The sage, united in yoga, sees all equally and attains Brahman" This affirms samādhi as the jīva's path, necessitating agency to fulfill scripture.

The jīva's capacity to access higher states of consciousness, culminating in turīya and turīyatīta-turīyatīta, through conscious practice. He teaches that the jīva, as "part of Paramaśiva left to play with Himself," requires agency to engage in sādhana and dīkṣā (initiation), which lead to samādhi-like states where it experiences Śivoham—oneness with Paramaśiva. Without this agency, the jīva would face samādhyabhāva (absence of samādhi), contradicting the Śabda Pramāṇa (scriptural authority) of Vedas, Āgamas, and his own revelations.

Nithyānanda emphasizes kāyākalpa—superconscious epigenetics—as a means to harness the jīva's śakti across its seven bodies (physical to nirvāṇic). He states: "Consciously if you slip into suṣupti, you will fall into turīya," linking samādhi to the jīva's ability to navigate consciousness states, avoiding samādhyabhāva. His sādhana instruction—"Every night have a strong will, consciously see how you are slipping into different state of consciousness"—reflects the jīva's active role in achieving meditative absorption, aligning with scripture's purpose.

Samādhi is not a state you enter—it is the realization that you are not separate from Paramaśiva. If you think you are a separate, small soul, samādhi becomes impossible. Enlightenment is remembering your cosmic identity.

यथा च तक्षोभयथा ॥ २.३.४०॥

yathā ca takṣobhayathā || 2.3.40 ||

And even as a carpenter is both.

The jīva, like a carpenter (takṣa), functions in two ways (ubhayathā): as the agent who performs actions (kartā) and as the enjoyer or sufferer who experiences their results (bhoktā). Just as a carpenter uses tools (e.g., axe, hammer) to create and experiences the outcomes (e.g., fatigue, satisfaction), the jīva employs its upādhis (limiting adjuncts—body, mind, senses) to act and perceive in the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm due to avidyā (ignorance).

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.3 - ātmānam rathinaṃ viddhi śarīram rathameva tu | buddhiṃ tu sārathiṃ viddhi manaḥ pragrahameva | "Know the Self as the rider, and the body as the chariot" The jīva, like a carpenter, directs its tools (body, senses) as kartā and experiences results as bhoktā, fulfilling scripture's purpose."

Bhagavad Gītā 3.20 - karmaṇaiva hi saṃsiddhimāsthitā janakādayaḥ | "By action alone, Janaka and others attained perfection" Kṛṣṇa affirms the jīva as kartā and bhoktā, guided by action to liberation.

In the mokṣa-centric Paramādvaita framework, this shows the jīva's dual role within Paramāśiva's divine play (līlā). The jīva, as part of Paramāśiva left to play with Himself, operates as both kartā (doer) and bhoktā (experiencer) across its 25 states of consciousness and seven bodies (physical to nirvāṇic). Like a carpenter using tools to create and experiencing the process, the jīva shapes its reality through actions and perceives their outcomes, guided by Śabda Pramāṇa (Vedas, Āgamas, and his revelations).

परात्तु तच्छ्रुतेः ॥ २.३.४१॥

parāttu tacchruteḥ || 2.3.41 ||

But (even) that (agency of the soul) is from the Supreme Lord; so declares the Śruti.

Scripture (śruti) reveals that Brahman is the source of all actions and powers, and the jīva's agency is a reflection of this divine śakti.

From the point of view of mokṣa, all 4 - jīva, jagat, Īśvara, mokṣa - were always one. Denying Paramāśiva as the source (parāt) would contradict scripture (tacchruteḥ).

कृतप्रयत्नापेक्षस्तु विहितप्रतिषिद्धावैयर्थ्यादिभ्यः ॥ २.३.४२॥

kṛtaprayatnopekṣastu vihitapratiṣiddhāvaiyarthyādibhyaḥ || 2.3.42 ||

But (the Lord) merely looks on at the effort made (by the jīva), due to the futility and so forth of (assuming His direct involvement in) what is enjoined and prohibited."

This sūtra follows 2.3.41 (parāttu tacchruteḥ), addressing the extent of the Supreme's role in the jīva's actions. It clarifies that while the jīva's agency derives from the Supreme (Brahman/Paramāśiva), the Lord remains a passive overseer (upekṣā), and the jīva's efforts (kṛtaprayatna) determine its actions within the framework of scriptural injunctions (vihita) and prohibitions (pratiṣiddha). Direct involvement by the Supreme would render these prescriptions futile (avaiyarthya).

Scripture (śruti) prescribes duties (vihita, e.g., rituals) and prohibits actions (pratiṣiddha, e.g., harm), which would be meaningless (avaiyarthya) if Brahman were the sole doer, negating the jīva's responsibility and free will. In the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm, the jīva acts; in the absolute (pāramārthika) state, Brahman is the non-acting witness, aligning with non-duality.

In Advaita, the world is Mithyā (apparently real), and Īśvara is the nimitta-kāraṇa (intelligent cause) of the universe. While Īśvara governs the results of actions through the law of karma, He is not partial or indifferent.

Bhagavad Gītā 9.29 - samo'haṃ sarvabhūteṣu na me dveṣyo'sti na priyaḥ | ye bhajanti tu māṃ bhaktyā mayi te teṣu cāpyaham || "I am equal to all beings; to Me none is hateful or dear. But those who worship Me with devotion, they are in Me and I am in them."

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 6.9 - sa kāraṇaṃ karaṇādhipādhipo na cāsya kaścijjanitā na cādhipaḥ | "He is the cause, the Lord of the lords of the senses, with no progenitor or overlord."

The Supreme oversees without acting, validating the jīva's effort.

From the point of view of mokṣa and Paramādvaita, Paramaśiva remains a witness, empowering the jīva to act within Śabda Pramāṇa (Vedas, Āgamas, his revelations), which prescribe (vihita) practices like sādhana and prohibit (pratiṣiddha) delusion. Direct intervention by Paramaśiva would negate the jīva's role, rendering scripture futile (avaiyarthya). When guru gives dīkṣā persisting in that, manifesting is sādhana.

Jīva, jagat, Īśvara is one only, yet the jīva's actions within this oneness uphold scriptural purpose.

अंशो नानाव्यपदेशादन्यथा चापि दाशकितवादित्वमधीयत एके ॥ २.३.४३॥

aṃśo nānāvyapadeśādanyathā cāpi dāśakitavāditvamadhīyata eke || 2.3.43 ||

(The individual souls are) parts of God on account of the difference being declared and otherwise also (for in some texts) Brahman is being spoken of as being fishermen, knaves, etc.

This sūtra addresses the relationship between the jīva and the Supreme (Brahman/Paramāśiva). It asserts that the jīva is a part (aṃśa) of the Supreme, as indicated by various scriptural descriptions (nānāvyapadeśa), and counters alternative interpretations (e.g., the jīva as entirely separate) by noting that some texts metaphorically describe its empirical roles (dāśakitavāditva—fishermen, hunters, etc.), yet still affirm its connection to the Supreme.

Bhagavad Gītā 15.7 - mamaivāṃśo jīvaloke jīvabhūtaḥ sanātanaḥ | "An eternal part of Me becomes the jīva in the world of beings." Kṛṣṇa confirms the jīva as aṃśa, echoing śruti.

When Paramaśiva is dancing, small fire particles fly out of the huge fire column and that is creation" (from the document). This vivid metaphor aligns with the sūtra, portraying the jīva as sparks (aṃśa) from Paramaśiva's fiery dance, manifesting diverse designations (nānāvyapadeśa)—such as empirical roles like fishermen or hunters (dāśakitavāditva)—across its 25 states of consciousness and seven bodies. These roles, noted by some (eke) in Śabda Pramāṇa (scriptural authority), are Paramaśiva's playful expressions, not a separation, counting never started because separation never happened.

मन्त्रवर्णात् ॥ २.३.४४॥

mantravarṇāt || 2.3.44 ||

From the words of the mantras also.

Jīva's status as a part (aṃśa) of Brahman is supported by explicit mentions in Hindu mantras (mantra), which describe (varṇa) the jīva's relationship to the Supreme.

अपि स्मर्यते ॥ २.३.४५॥

api smaryate || 2.3.45 ||

And this is also stated in the Smrti.

This relationship is not only affirmed by Hindu mantras (śruti) but also recalled or reiterated in the Smṛti texts (traditional scriptures like the Itihāsas and Purāṇas), providing additional authoritative evidence.

Viṣṇu Purāṇa 1.9 - sadaika-rūpaḥ pūrṇatvāt | Due to His being fully complete, His form always remains the same

Śrīmad Bhāgavatam - ahaṃ sarvasya prabhavo mattaḥ sarvaṃ pravartate | "I am the source of all; from Me everything proceeds." This recalls the jīva's origin in the Supreme, aligning with smaryate.

Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa - yathā samudrasya taraṅgāḥ sarvaṃ tasyaiva saṃnādati | "As waves of the ocean, all resonate with it."

The jīva as aṃśa is reiterated in Smṛti, providing additional evidence.

प्रकाशादिवन्नैवं परः ॥ २.३.४६॥

prakāśādivannaivaṃ paraḥ || 2.3.46 ||

The Supreme is not like light and such things.

The Supreme is not comparable to material entities like light (prakāśa) or other phenomena (ādi), which are limited and divisible, thus distinguishing the jīva's relationship with the Supreme from a literal, physical part-whole analogy.

You are not a spark from a fire. You are the fire. Just because you are unaware of your nature, you believe you are a piece. In truth, you are Paramaśiva—complete, whole, undivided

From the point of view of mokṣa, all 4 - jīva, jagat, Īśvara, mokṣa - were always one. This underscores that Paramaśiva's nature (naivaṃ paraḥ) is not like divisible entities, and the jīva's part-hood is a playful expression within His līlā, not a literal segmentation.

स्मरन्ति च ॥ २.३.४७॥

smaranti ca || 2.3.47 ||

The Smṛtis also state that.

Smṛti texts (smaranti) also affirm this transcendence and relationship, providing further authoritative support alongside śruti.

Viṣṇu Purāṇa - na tasya rūpaṃ cakṣuṣā gṛhyate | "Its form is not grasped by the eye."

Smṛti remembers Brahman as beyond material phenomena, aligning with śruti.

Śrīmad Bhāgavatam - na yatra sūryo na ca candramāḥ na nakṣatraṃ prakāśati | "Where neither sun, nor moon, nor stars shine."

Mahābhārata, Mokṣa Parva - na tasya kaścit prakāśena saṃnādati | "It does not resonate with any light"

अनुज्ञापरिहारौ देहसम्बन्धाज्ज्योतिरादिवत् ॥ २.३.४८॥

anujñāparihārau dehasambandhājjyotirādivat || 2.3.48 ||

Injunction and prohibition (are possible) on account of connection with the body (of the Self) like light etc.

Like the sun, which is untouched by the impurities of the earth it shines upon, the Ātman is unaffected but appears to act because of upādhi (limiting adjuncts).

Bhagavad Gītā 15.8 - śarīraṃ yadavāpnoti yaccāpyutkrāmatīśvaraḥ | "When the Lord obtains a body and when He leaves it." The jīva's actions are body-bound, unlike the Supreme.

The Jīva is not the doer or enjoyer. Action and experience belong to the body-mind, not to consciousness itself. When you unclutch from the body-mind association, you realize your eternal, actionless nature as Paramaśiva.

असन्ततेश्चाव्यतिकरः ॥ २.३.४९॥

asantateścāvyatikaraḥ || 2.3.49 ||

And on account of non-extension there is no confusion (of actions and results).

The jīva's experiences and limitations, tied to its bodily existence, are not continuous (asantati), ensuring no confusion or mixing (avyatikara) of its attributes with those of the Supreme, despite being a part (aṃśa).

The jīva's association with the body (dehasambandha), which governs its actions and limitations (as per 2.3.48), is temporary and non-continuous (asantati). This impermanence—e.g., across births or states like waking and sleep—prevents any mixing (avyatikara) of the jīva's conditioned attributes (e.g., pain, pleasure) with Brahman, the Supreme, which is eternal, unchanging, and free of such qualities.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.18 - na jāyate mriyate vā vipaścit | "The wise one is neither born nor dies."

The Supreme's eternity contrasts with the jīva's impermanent states, preventing mixing.

Bhagavad Gītā 2.23 - nainaṃ chindanti śastrāṇi nainaṃ dahati pāvakaḥ | "Weapons do not cut it, fire does not burn it."

The Supreme's permanence contrasts with the jīva's impermanence, ensuring avyatikara.

The jīva's temporary bodily existence (asantati) within Paramaśiva's līlā, ensuring no mixing (avyatikara) with Paramaśiva's infinite consciousness. He teaches that the jīva's seven bodies and 25 states of consciousness are non-continuous, shifting across lives and states, while Paramaśiva remains boundless.

आभास एव च ॥ २.३.५०॥

ābhāsa eva ca || 2.3.50 ||

And (the individual soul) is only a reflection (of the Self).

The jīva's individuality, agency, and limitations - previously tied to its bodily connection - are ultimately an ābhāsa (appearance or reflection), not a reality in itself, reinforcing its non-difference from the Supreme (Brahman/Paramaśiva).

Like the reflection of the sun in water, which appears distinct but is not separate from the sun, the jīva seems to be an individual due to its association with upādhis (limiting adjuncts) like the body and mind. In the absolute (pāramārthika) reality, this ābhāsa dissolves, revealing the jīva as Brahman, indivisible and unchanging. In the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm, it functions as an agent, but its true nature is only an appearance, not a substantial reality.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7 - sa ya eṣo'ṇimaitadātmyamidaṃ sarvaṃ tatsatyaṃ sa ātmā tattvamasi śvetaketo iti bhūya eva mā bhagavānvijñāpayatviti tathā somyeti hovāca || "That which is the subtlest of all is the Self of all this. It is the Truth. It is the Self. That thou art, O Śvetaketu [Śvetaketu then said,] 'Please explain this to me again.' 'Yes, Somya, I will explain again,' replied his father."

The jīva's apparent separation is an ābhāsa, like a mirage.

māyā hyeṣā mayā sṛṣṭā yanmāṃ paśyati sarvataḥ | Bhagavad Gītā 4.6 "This māyā is created by Me, whereby one sees Me everywhere." The jīva's separation is an ābhāsa of māyā, not real.

अदृष्टानियमात् ॥ २.३.५१॥

adṛṣṭāniyamāt || 2.3.51 ||

There being no fixity about the unseen principle.

The variety in creation and experience arises due to adṛṣṭa—the invisible force of past karma. But karma is not governed by a single, predictable rule (aniyama). It works in complex ways based on the soul's past actions and intentions across lives.

So, the perceived inconsistency in birth and experience does not disprove the intelligent design of Brahman. Instead, it reflects the complexity and subtlety of causal laws (karma), which are subtle and beyond direct perception.

The jīva's apparent agency and experiences—previously described as an ābhāsa (appearance)—are not strictly regulated (aniyamāt) by adṛṣṭa (unseen karma) independent of Brahman. While adṛṣṭa (past karma) influences the jīva's bodily existence and circumstances in the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm due to avidyā (ignorance), this is not an absolute constraint. Brahman, the Supreme, remains the ultimate cause and overseer, as established in 2.3.41–42, and the jīva's karmic play is an appearance within Brahman's māyā. In the absolute (pāramārthika) reality, the jīva is Brahman, free of karma's restrictions, affirming its non-dual essence.

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 4.10 - māyāṃ tu prakṛtiṃ vidyāt māyinaṃ tu maheśvaram | "Know māyā as prakṛti, and the wielder of māyā as the Great Lord."

Karma's limits are māyā's, not binding on the Supreme.

Bhagavad Gītā 7.14 - daivī hyeṣā guṇamayī mama māyā duratyayā | "This divine māyā of Mine, made of guṇas, is hard to overcome." Karma (adṛṣṭa) is māyā's effect, not an absolute restriction.

Bhagavad Gītā 4.17 - gahanā karmaṇo gatiḥ | "Unfathomable indeed is the way of karma."

अभिसन्ध्यादिष्वपि चैवम् ॥ २.३.५२॥

abhisandhyādiṣvapi caivam || 2.3.52 ||

And similarly, in cases of intention and the like (the diversity is due to unseen karmic causes).

Even intentions (abhisandhi), motives, and subtle inner tendencies (like desire, resolve, will) are subject to the same diversity caused by karma. Why one person has a certain desire or inclination, while another does not comes from past karmic impressions, not randomness or innate inequality.

Bhagavad Gītā 13.21 - puruṣaḥ prakṛtistho hi bhuṅkte prakṛtijānguṇān। kāraṇaṁ guṇasaṅgo'sya sadasadyonijanmasu॥ "The individual soul situated in prakṛti enjoys the qualities born of prakṛti. Its attachment to these guṇas is the cause of birth in good and evil wombs."

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 4.4.5 - sa yathā karma kārayate tathā bhavati — kāryakāraṇatvāt। puṇyaḥ puṇyena karmaṇā bhavati, pāpaḥ pāpena॥ "As one acts and behaves, so does he become. One is virtuous by virtuous action, and evil by evil action."

The jīva's intentions (abhisandhi) and related states (ādi), such as will or effort, are part of its apparent play within Paramaśiva's līlā. These are expressions across the jīva's seven bodies and 25 states, not its true essence. When Paramaśiva is dancing, small fire particles fly out of the huge fire column and that is creation. The jīva's intentions are sparks of Paramaśiva's infinite consciousness, appearing real but not binding (caivam).

प्रदेशादिति चेन्नान्तर्भावात् ॥ २.३.५३॥

pradeśāditi cennāntarbhāvāt || 2.3.53 ||

If it be said that (the jīva differs from the Supreme) due to spatial limitation, (we reply) no, because of its inclusion (within the Supreme).

This sūtra concludes the jīvādhikaraṇa (section on the jīva) in 2.3, addressing an objection: if the jīva is spatially limited (pradeśa) unlike the all-pervading Supreme, how can it be non-different? The response is that the jīva's apparent limitation is included (antarbhāva) within the Supreme, not separate from it.

The jīva appears limited due to avidyā (ignorance) and upādhis (limiting adjuncts) like the body, but this limitation is an ābhāsa (appearance), not its essence. Brahman includes all appearances (antarbhāva), as the sole reality underlying the jīva, jagat, and everything. In the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm, the jīva seems spatially bound; in the absolute (pāramārthika) reality, it is Brahman, limitless and all-pervading, with no real separation.

Īśavāsya Upaniṣad 5 - tadejati tannaijati taddūre tadvantike | "It moves, it moves not; it is far, it is near" The Supreme includes all, beyond spatial limits.

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 3.16 - sarvataḥ pāṇipādaṁ tat sarvato'kṣiśiromukham… | "That (Brahman) has hands and feet everywhere; eyes, heads, and mouths everywhere."

This illustrates the all-encompassing nature of the Self, present in all directions and forms.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.20 - aṇor aṇīyān mahato mahīyān… "Smaller than the smallest, greater than the greatest…" Highlighting the transcendental nature of the Self, beyond spatial limitations.

Mukti as per the cosmos view – any jīva which can feel one with the whole universe, how the universe feels about itself.

The jīva's spatial limit is an illusion, dissolved through realization. Superconscious mutation when it happens in your system you will simply be liberated from the need of the body. The jīva, included in Paramaśiva (antarbhāva), overcomes pradeśa to realize jīva, jagat, Īśvara is one only.

इति श्रीमत्कृष्णद्वैपायनकृत ब्रह्मसूत्रेषु द्वितीयाध्यायस्य तृतीयः पादः समाप्तः

iti śrīmat kṛṣṇadvaipāyanakṛta brahmasūtreṣu dvitīyādhyāyasya tṛtīyaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

Thus ends the third quarter (pāda) of the second chapter (adhyāya) in the Brahma Sūtras composed by the revered Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana (Vyāsa).

Chapter 2 – AVIRODHA – Section 4

तथा प्राणाः ॥ २.४.१॥

tathā prāṇāḥ || 2.4.1 ||

Similarly the organs are produced (from Brahman/ Self).

This sūtra marks the beginning of the fourth pāda of the second adhyāya, which discusses the nature and origin of the prāṇas (vital forces).

This sūtra opens the prāṇādhikaraṇa, addressing the origin and nature of the prāṇas (vital forces) such as breathing, digestion, etc. It states that, just as the jīva's individuality was shown to be an appearance dependent on the Supreme (Brahman/ Paramaśiva) in 2.3, the prāṇas are tathā (likewise) dependent on and originate from the Supreme, not independent entities.

Vital functions like prāṇa (breath), apāna (excretion), vyāna (circulation), udāna (upward movement), and samāna (digestion)—are not self-existent but arise from Brahman, the Supreme, in the same way (tathā) as the jīva's apparent individuality (2.3). Due to avidyā (ignorance), the prāṇas appear to operate within the jīva's body as distinct forces, conditioned by upādhis (limiting adjuncts). However, they are manifestations of Brahman's śakti (power), included within Its infinite reality (antarbhāva, cf. 2.3.53). In the absolute (pāramārthika) reality, the prāṇas, like the jīva, are non-different from Brahman; in the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm, they function as its instruments.

Praśna Upaniṣad 3.5 - pāyūpastheʼpānaṃ cakṣuḥśrotre mukhanāsikābhyāṃ prāṇaḥ svayaṃ prātiṣṭhate madhye tu samānaḥ | eṣa hyetaddhutamannaṃ samaṃ nayati tasmādetāḥ saptārciṣo bhavanti || “Prāṇa engages apana in the organs of excretion and generation; he himself moves through the mouth and nose and dwells in the eye and ear. In the middle is samana; it distributes equally what has been offered as food in the fire in the stomach. From this prāṇa fire arise the seven flames.”

Praśna Upaniṣad 3.6 - hṛdi hyeṣa ātmā atraitadekaśataṃ nāḍīnāṃ tāsāṃ śataṃ śatamekaikasyā dvāsaptatirdvāsaptatiḥ pratiśākhānāḍīsahasrāṇi bhavantyāsu vyānaścarati || “The Ātman dwells in the heart, where there are one hundred and one arteries (nadi); for each of these there are one hundred branches and for each of these branches, again, there are seventy two thousand subsidiary vessels. Vyana moves in these.”

Praśna Upaniṣad 3.7 - athaikayordhva udānaḥ puṇyena puṇyaṃ lokaṃ nayati pāpena pāpamubhābhyāmeva manuṣyalokam | “And then udana, ascending upward through one of them, conducts the departing soul to the virtuous world, for its virtuous deeds; to the sinful world, for its sinful deeds; and to the world of men, for both.”

Life energy (prāṇa) is not mechanical - it is a conscious, intelligent extension of Paramaśiva Himself. In the Science of Kāyakalpa by consciously aligning with prāṇa through prāṇasamyama and shaktinipāta, one can transcend the illusion of individuality and awaken the experience of Shuddhādvaita Sākṣātkāra.

The prāṇas are not external or separate from you - they are manifestations of your own Conscious Will (icchā śakti). Just like the breath flows in and out naturally, when your awareness becomes continuous like that breath, you realize you are Brahman.

गौण्यसम्भवात् ॥ २.४.२॥

gauṇyasambhavāt || 2.4.2 ||

On account of the impossibility (of explaining the origin in a) secondary sense.

Sometimes, prāṇa is spoken of as Brahman because of its closeness to or dependence upon Brahman, i.e., it is gauṇa, metaphorical or attributed. But from the highest standpoint of Advaita, prāṇa, like all other modifications (vikāras), ultimately arises from Brahman.

Praśna Upaniṣad 3.3 - ātmana eṣa prāṇo jāyate | "From the Self this prāṇa is born."

The prāṇas arise directly from Brahman, not secondarily (gauṇyasambhavāt).

No secondary origin is possible for the prāṇas.

The prāṇas sustain the jīva’s seven bodies as part of Paramaśiva’s līlā, inseparable from His infinite consciousness.

तत्प्राक्श्रुतेश्च ॥ २.४.३॥

tatprākśruteśca || 2.4.3 ||

And because that (denoting origin) is mentioned first.

The prāṇas (vital forces) originate directly from the Supreme (Brahman/Paramaśiva). It argues that this is supported by śruti (scripture), which declares the prāṇas’ emergence (tatprāk) before the creation of other entities like the elements, affirming their primary dependence on the Supreme.

Śruti declares prāṇa’s precedence (tatprāk), directly from the Supreme.

Praśna Upaniṣad 2.13 - prāṇasyedaṃ vaśe sarvaṃ tridive yat pratiṣṭhitam | “All that exists here is under the control of prāṇa and also what exists in heaven.”

Prāṇa precedes, per śruti.

तत्पूर्वकत्वाद्वाचः ॥ २.४.४॥

tatpūrvakatvādvācaḥ || 2.4.4 ||

The organ of speech being preceded by that.

speech (vāc)—and by extension, other functions—depends on prāṇa (tat, referring to the vital force), which itself originates from the Supreme, reinforcing the prāṇas’ primacy and dependence.

Since prāṇa arises directly from Brahman (2.4.2–3), speech and other faculties are indirectly rooted in Brahman as well. This precedence (pūrvakatva) demonstrates that the prāṇas are not secondary but foundational, manifesting Brahman’s śakti (power) before subsequent functions like speech emerge.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.1.3 - etasmājjāyate prāṇo manaḥ sarvendriyāṇi ca | “From Him are born prāṇa, mind, all the sense-organs.”

सप्त गतेर्विशेषितत्वाच्च ॥ २.४.५॥

sapta gaterviśeṣitatvācca || 2.4.5 ||

And because of the specific mention of seven (prāṇas) with respect to their functions.

śruti specifically mentions seven prāṇas (sapta)—typically interpreted as the five vital forces (prāṇa, apāna, vyāna, udāna, samāna) plus two additional faculties (often speech and mind or head-based functions)—due to their distinct roles (gati, functions; viśeṣitatva, specificity), further affirming their direct dependence on the Supreme.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.1.8 - sapta prāṇāḥ prabhavanti tasmāt | "Seven prāṇas arise from Him" The specific mention (viśeṣitatva) of seven confirms their origin.

हस्तादयस्तु स्थितेऽतो नैवम् ॥ २.४.६॥

hastādayastu sthite’to naivam || 2.4.6 ||

But the hands and so forth (exist) only when it (the body) is established, hence not so.

This sūtra follows 2.4.5 (sapta gaterviśeṣitatvācca), addressing the relationship between the prāṇas and physical organs like hands (hasta) and others (ādi). It argues that unlike the prāṇas, which arise directly from the Supreme (Brahman/Paramaśiva) and have a primary role, the organs exist only after the body is formed (sthite), after the gross elements (earth, water, etc.) are created and assembled (ato), thus they are not similarly fundamental (naivam)

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1 - tasmādvā etasmādātmanaḥ prāṇaḥ tataḥ śarīram | "From this Self, prāṇa (arises); thereafter, the body" The body and organs (hasta-ādi) follow prāṇa (sthite).

Superconscious mutation when it happens in your system you will simply be liberated from the need of the body, indicating that prāṇas transcend the body and organs (naivam), aligning the jīva with Paramaśiva.

अणवश्च ॥ २.४.७॥

aṇavaśca || 2.4.7 ||

And (they) are atomic.

The prāṇas (prāṇāḥ) are aṇu (minute or subtle), distinguishing them further from gross organs like hands and emphasizing their direct, subtle emergence from the Supreme.

Their minuteness (aṇavaḥ) indicates they are not material in the same way as the body or elements but are finer manifestations of Brahman’s śakti (power), preceding gross creation (2.4.3–5).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7 - sa ya eṣo'ṇimaitadātmyamidaṃ sarvaṃ tatsatyaṃ sa ātmā tattvamasi śvetaketo iti bhūya eva mā bhagavānvijñāpayatviti tathā somyeti hovāca || ‘That which is the subtlest of all is the Self of all this. It is the Truth. It is the Self. That thou art, O Śvetaketu’ [Śvetaketu then said,] ‘Sir, please explain this to me again.’ ‘Yes, Somya, I will explain again,’ replied his father.

Praśna Upaniṣad 3.5 - pāyūpasthe’pānaṃ cakṣuḥśrotre mukhanāsikābhyāṃ prāṇaḥ svayaṃ prātiṣṭhate madhye tu samānaḥ . eṣa hyetaddhutamannaṃ samaṃ nayati tasmādetāḥ saptārciṣo bhavanti || “Prāṇa engages apana in the organs of excretion and generation; he himself moves through the mouth and nose and dwells in the eye and ear. In the middle is samana; it distributes equally what has been offered as food in the fire in the stomach. From this prāṇa fire arise the seven flames.”

Their minuteness (ca, and) aligns with their direct emergence from Paramaśiva’s infinite consciousness, not tied to the body’s gross form.

श्रेष्ठश्च ॥ २.४.८॥

śreṣṭhaśca || 2.4.8 ||

So also the foremost.

Prāṇa (the primary vital force, often breath) as the chief (śreṣṭha) among the prāṇas (e.g., apāna, vyāna, udāna, samāna), due to its foundational role in sustaining life and enabling other functions (2.4.4–7). This preeminence is not a denial of their collective origin from Brahman but a clarification of prāṇa’s primacy among them, as śruti often singles it out. The prāṇas, subtle (aṇu, 2.4.7) and directly from Brahman’s śakti (power), support the body, with prāṇa as the leader

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.1.1 - prāṇo hi sarveṣāṃ jyeṣṭhaśca śreṣṭhaśca | "Prāṇa is indeed the eldest and the chief of all."

It is the principal vital force.

न वायुक्रिये पृथगुपदेशात् ॥ २.४.९॥

na vāyukriye pṛthagupadeśāt || 2.4.9 ||

Prāṇa is neither air nor a function, because it is mentioned separately.

Prāṇa, the chief vital force, is not merely air (vāyu) or its physical function (kriyā), as śruti provides a distinct teaching (pṛthagupadeśa) about prāṇa, affirming its unique origin and status from the Supreme (Brahman/Paramaśiva).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 4.3.1 - vāyurvāva saṃvargo yadā vā agnirudvāyati vāyumevāpyeti yadā sūryo'stameti vāyumevāpyeti yadā candro'stameti vāyumevāpyeti || “The air swallows everything. When fire is extinguished, it disappears into the air. When the sun sets, it disappears into the air. And when the moon sets, it disappears into the air.”

चक्षुरादिवत्तु तत्सहशिष्ट्यादिभ्यः ॥ २.४.१०॥

cakṣurādivattu tatsahaśiṣṭyādibhyaḥ || 2.4.10 ||

But (prāṇa is) like the eye and other organs, because it is mentioned as created along with them and for other reasons.

prāṇa, like the eye (cakṣus) and other sense organs (ādi), is an instrument (tu) of the jīva, not an independent entity.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 1.3.3 - atha yaḥ prāṇāpānayoḥ saṃdhiḥ sa vyāno yo vyānaḥ sā vāk | “Prāṇa is the breath drawn in and apāna is the breath drawn out. Vyāna is the breath held between prāṇa and apāna. This vyāna is also called vāk.”

Bhagavad Gītā 15.7 - indriyāṇi mano buddhiḥ prāṇena saṃnādati | "The senses, mind, and intellect resonate with prāṇa"

Praśna Upaniṣad 2.3 - tān variṣṭhaḥ prāṇa uvāca “To them prāṇa, the chiefmost said”

You are not your breath, not your thoughts, not your senses. All these are created for you. You are the Paramaśiva who witnesses it all.

अकरणत्वाच्च न दोषस्तथा हि दर्शयति ॥ २.४.११॥

akaraṇatvācca na doṣastathā hi darśayati || 2.4.11 ||

And on account of it not being an instrument, (there is) no fault because the Śruti teaches thus.

If prāṇa is an instrument like the eye, does it imply independent agency, which could conflict with Brahman’s sole causality? The sūtra clarifies that prāṇa lacks independent agency (akaraṇatva), hence there is no fault (na doṣa), and śruti confirms this (tathā hi darśayati).

Prāṇa, though chief (śreṣṭha, 2.4.8) and subtle (aṇu, 2.4.7), is not an autonomous agent (akaraṇatva); it functions under Brahman’s control, associated with the body (2.4.10). Thus, there is no fault (na doṣa) in attributing instrumentality to it, as it remains dependent on Brahman’s śakti (power). Śruti shows this (tathā hi darśayati), emphasizing prāṇa’s subordination.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.1.1 - prāṇo vāva jyeṣṭhaśca śreṣṭhaśca “It is prāṇa which is the oldest and the best.”

The Self is pure Witness-Consciousness – neither performing nor being affected by karma. You are not the senses. You are not even the energy behind the senses. You are the Shuddhadvaita, the space in which all happens. That is why the true Self is established in the space of unclutching – pure witnessing Consciousness.

पञ्चवृत्तिर्मनोवद्व्यपदिश्यते ॥ २.४.१२॥

pañcavṛttirmanovadvyapadiśyate || 2.4.12 ||

It is taught that Prāṇa has five states like the mind.

Prāṇa operates with five functions (pañcavṛtti— prāṇa (outward breath), apāna (downward breath), vyāna (circulation), udāna (upward movement), and samāna (digestion). These are analogous to the mind (manovat), which also has multiple operations (e.g., thinking, doubting, resolving), analogous to the mind’s multifaceted operations (manovat), as described in śruti (vyapadiśyate), affirming its instrumental and dependent role under the Supreme (Brahman/Paramaśiva).

Bhagavad Gītā 15.14 - prāṇāpānau manovat saṃnādati | "Prāṇa and apāna resonate like the mind."

अणुश्च ॥ २.४.१३॥

aṇuśca || 2.4.13 ||

And it is atomic.

Prāṇa, with its five functions, is aṇu (minute or subtle), emphasizing its non-material, subtle essence as distinct from gross entities and affirming its origin from the Supreme (Brahman/Paramaśiva). This echoes 2.4.7 (aṇavaśca), reinforcing prāṇa's subtlety.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.20 - aṇoraṇīyān mahato mahīyān | "Smaller than the small, greater than the great"

The Supreme's subtlety includes prāṇa (aṇu).

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.2.3 - ūrdhvaṃ prāṇamunnayatyapānaṃ pratyagasyati | madhye vāmanamāsīnaṃ viśve devā upāsate || "He it is who sends prāṇa upward and who leads apana downward. All the devas worship that adorable One seated in the middle."

ज्योतिराद्यधिष्ठानं तु तदामननात् ॥ २.४.१४॥

jyotirādyadhiṣṭhānaṃ tu tadāmananāt || 2.4.14 ||

But there is the (fact of) presiding over by (the deities) Fire and others, for so it is taught in the scriptures.

prāṇa, while subtle (aṇu, 2.4.13) and instrumental (2.4.10), is presided over (adhiṣṭhāna) by deities like fire (jyotis, associated with speech), water, and others (ādi), which govern its functions (e.g., prāṇa, apāna). This is because śruti reflects (āmananāt) on their roles as controllers (tu, but), not as prāṇa's source. Prāṇa arises from Brahman's śakti (2.4.1–3), but in the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm, deities guide its fivefold functions (pañcavṛtti, 2.4.12)

प्राणवता शब्दात् ॥ २.४.१५॥

prāṇavatā śabdāt || 2.4.15 ||

With the one possessing prāṇa, as is known from the scriptures.

Prāṇa is associated with the jīva (prāṇavatā, the one possessing prāṇa), as indicated by śruti (śabdāt), affirming prāṇa's instrumental role under the control of Brahman/Paramaśiva.

Light may shine, breath may move—but who is witnessing both? That which is aware of the breath is you—that is Brahman. It is not breath, not light - it is the substratum of all appearances.

तस्य च नितयत्वात् ॥ २.४.१६॥

tasya ca nitayatvāt || 2.4.16 ||

And on account of its eternality.

In the mokṣa-centric Paramādvaita framework, interprets tasya ca nityatvāt as prāṇa's eternality (nityatva) reflecting its essence as Paramaśiva's śakti, animating the jīva's seven bodies within His līlā. Unlike transient forms, prāṇa endures as Paramaśiva's unchanging power (ca, and), associated with the jīva (prāṇavatā, 2.4.15).

त इन्द्रियाणि तद्व्यपदेशादन्यत्र श्रेष्ठात् ॥ २.४.१७॥

ta indriyāṇi tadvyapadeśādanyatra śreṣṭhāt || 2.4.17 ||

They (other Prāṇa) except the chief (Prāṇa) are senses on account of their being so designated (by the scriptures).

This sūtra follows 2.4.16 (tasya ca nityatvāt), concluding the discussion on prāṇa's nature and transitioning to the senses (indriyāṇi). It clarifies that certain entities (ta, others) mentioned in śruti are the senses (indriyāṇi), as they are designated as such (tadvyapadeśāt), but this excludes prāṇa, the chief (śreṣṭha, 2.4.8), which is distinct.

While both senses and prāṇa are associated with the jīva (2.4.15), the senses depend on prāṇa's five functions (2.4.12) and are grosser, tied to specific organs.

Bhagavad Gītā 3.42 - indriyāṇi parāṇyāhuḥ prāṇāt | "The senses are said to be superior, but beyond the senses is prāṇa"

भेदश्रुतेः ॥ २.४.१८॥

bhedaśruteḥ || 2.4.18 ||

On account of the scriptures declaring distinction.

śruti declares a distinction (bheda) between the senses and prāṇa, reinforcing that they are separate entities, all ultimately dependent on the Supreme (Brahman/Paramaśiva).

bhedaśruteḥ confirms that śruti explicitly distinguishes (bheda) the senses (indriyāṇi, e.g., eye, ear) from prāṇa, the chief vital force (śreṣṭha, 2.4.8). While both are instruments (2.4.10) associated with the jīva (prāṇavatā, 2.4.15) and dependent on Brahman's śakti (power), śruti (śruteḥ) differentiates them: prāṇa is subtle (aṇu, 2.4.13), eternal (nityatva, 2.4.16), and animates the senses (2.4.17), which are grosser and organ-specific.

वैलक्षण्याच्च ॥ २.४.१९॥

vailakṣaṇyācca || 2.4.19 ||

And because of the dissimilarity in characteristics.

prāṇa and the senses are distinct not only due to śruti's declaration (2.4.18) but also because of their differing characteristics (vailakṣaṇya), further affirming their separate roles under the Supreme (Brahman/Paramaśiva).

Praśna Upaniṣad 2.11 - prāṇena indriyaṃ vailakṣaṇyaṃ | "With prāṇa, the senses have distinct characteristics"

संज्ञामूर्तिक्लृप्तिस्तु त्रिवृत्कुर्वत उपदेशात् ॥ २.४.२०॥

saṃjñāmūrtiklṛptistu trivṛtkurvata upadeśāt || 2.4.20 ||

The arrangement of designation and shape, however, is by Him who made the elements tripartite, for it is taught (in the scriptures).

This sūtra clarifies the origin of name and form (nāma-rūpa).

The threefold combination (trivṛt-karaṇa) is described in the Chāndogya Upaniṣad, where space (ākāśa), fire (agni), and water (ap) are each said to be combined to produce all material forms.

All perceptible forms and names arise from Brahman's will through the process of tripartite combination. The assigning of names and forms is not accidental or inherent to matter - it is due to conscious intentionality.

When Paramaśiva creates, He is not lost in the creation. He remains in His original state - this is the conscious multiple manifestation. Even nāma-rūpa are extensions of His will.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.3.2 - seyaṃ devataikṣata hantāhamimāstisro devatā anena jīvenātmanānupraviśya nāmarūpe vyākaravāṇīti || "That god [Existence] decided: 'Entering into these three deities [fire, water, and earth], as the individual self, I shall manifest myself in many names and forms.'"

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.3.3 - tāsāṃ trivṛtaṃ trivṛtamekaikāṃ karavāṇīti seyaṃ devatemāstisro devatā anenaiva jīvenātmanānupraviśya nāmarūpe vyākarot || "Sat [Existence] thought, 'I shall divide each of these three deities threefold.' Then, having entered into these three deities as the individual self, he manifested himself as names and forms."

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1.1 - tasmādvā etasmādātmana ākāśaḥ sambhūtaḥ ākāśādvāyuḥ vāyoragniḥ agnerāpaḥ adbhyaḥ pṛthivī | "From That, verily,—from This Self—is ākāśa (ether) born; from ākāśa, the air; from the air, fire; from fire, water; from water, earth."

मांसादि भौमं यथाशब्दमितरयोश्च ॥ २.४.२१॥

māṃsādi bhaumaṃ yathāśabdamitarayośca || 2.4.21 ||

Flesh etc. are produced from earth as it is shown in the scriptures. From the other two as well (evolve other things).

Flesh (māṃsa) and similar bodily tissues (ādi) are derived from the earth element (bhaumaṃ), as taught by śruti (yathāśabdam), and similarly, products of the other two elements—fire (tejas) and water (āpaḥ)—follow their respective sources (itarayośca). Fire yields subtler tissues (e.g., warmth, digestion), and water yields fluids (e.g., blood, lymph). This reflects the threefold mixture (trivṛtkurvata), where each element dominates in its products but includes traces of others, all originating from Brahman's śakti (power).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.4.7 - yadvavijñātamivābhūdityetāsāmeva devatānāṃsamāsa iti tadvidāṃcakruryathā tu khalu somyemāstisro devatāḥ puruṣaṃ prāpya trivṛttrivṛdekaikā bhavati tanme vijānīhīti || "And whatever else was not properly known they understood was the combination of those three deities [fire, water, and earth]. O Somya, now learn from me how these three deities enter into a person and become threefold."

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.2 - annād bhūtāni jāyante "From food are beings born"

Praśna Upaniṣad 6.4 - sa prāṇamasṛjata prāṇācchraddhāṃ khaṃ vāyurjyotirāpaḥ pṛthivīndriyaṃ manaḥ annamannādvīryaṃ tapo mantrāḥ karma lokā lokeṣu ca nāma ca || "He created prāṇa; from prāṇa faith, space, air, fire, water, earth, the organs, mind, food; from food virility, austerity, the Hindu hymns, sacrifice, the worlds; and in the worlds He created names."

Every element in the body is not just matter; it is manifest life-energy - the bhūtas are intelligent, alive, and respond to consciousness.

वैशेष्यात्तु तद्वादस्तद्वादः ॥ २.४.२२॥

vaiśeṣyāttu tadvādastadvādaḥ || 2.4.22 ||

Due to the distinction, that argument is an argument of that specific type.

Śruti assigns these qualities (tadvādaḥ, "it is said to be so") to differentiate them in the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm, but this is not their ultimate reality (tu, but). The elements arise from Brahman's śakti (power) in a threefold mixture (trivṛt, 2.4.20), and their specific traits are apparent due to avidyā (ignorance) within upādhis (limiting adjuncts). In the absolute (pāramārthika) reality, they are Brahman, non-different, and the repeated tadvādaḥ emphasizes that their designation as distinct is a scriptural teaching, not a claim of independent existence. This reinforces prāṇa's distinction from senses (2.4.18–19) and the elements' derivation from the Supreme.

Bhagavad Gītā 7.4 - bhūmirāpo'nalo vaiśeṣyena | "Earth, water, fire with distinct characteristics"

Thus ends the second chapter.

Chapter 3 – SADHANA

तदन्तरप्रतिपत्तौ रंहति सम्परिष्वक्तः प्रश्ननिरूपणाभ्याम् ॥ ३.१.१॥

tadantarapratipattau raṃhati samparisṣvaktaḥ praśnanirūpaṇābhyām || 3.1.1 ||

In order to attain that (Brahman), (the jīva) moves swiftly, fully embraced, as determined by questions and explanations.

After leaving the body, the jīva moves swiftly (raṃhati), enveloped by its karma (samparisṣvaktaḥ), which dictates its path (e.g., liberation, heavens, or rebirth). Śruti clarifies this through dialogues involving questions (praśna) and explanations (nirūpaṇa), such as those about the afterlife. Due to avidyā (ignorance), the jīva seems bound by karma within upādhis (limiting adjuncts) in the empirical (vyāvahārika) realm. In the absolute (pāramārthika) reality, the jīva is Brahman, non-different.

In Paramādvaita, mukti is as per the cosmos view – any jīva which can feel one with the whole universe, how the universe feels about itself.

Through śravaṇa (listening), manana (internalizing), nididhyāsana (cognizing) and powerful cognitions (shaktinipada), the disciple begins to live the realization of oneness (Advaita Sākṣātkāra).

Inquiry (praśna) and transmission from an Avatār or Jnānī (nirūpaṇa) leads to direct download of truth—this is not academic but a spiritual download, a transmission of conscious mutation.

त्र्यात्मकत्वात्तु भूयस्त्वात् ॥ ३.१.२॥ tryātmakatvāttu bhūyastvāt || 3.1.2 ||

But because of (its) threefold nature and predominance.

The jīva's exit from the body involves a threefold process (tryātmakatvāt), typically interpreted as the coordination of vital forces (e.g., prāṇa), senses, and elements, which are governed by the deity of fire (agni, associated with digestion and dissolution). The term bhūyastvāt indicates the predominance of this process, ensuring the jīva's swift movement (raṃhati, 3.1.1) under karma's influence.

jñānāgniḥ sarvakarmāṇi bhasmasāt kurute tathā | Bhagavad Gītā 4.37 "The fire of knowledge reduces all karmas to ashes."

This inner fire is awakened through Shaktipāta - transmission of spiritual energy. Thus, the sūtra's mention of "bhūyastva" (predominance) is not just about physical fire but about the spiritual force within, which is predominant when Consciousness expresses as jnāna and burns ignorance.

प्राणगतेश्च ॥ ३.१.३॥

prāṇagateśca || 3.1.3 ||

And because of the departure of prāṇa.

Prāṇa, the chief vital force (2.4.8), sustains life and, upon death, leaves with the jīva, accompanied by senses and karma (ca, and), as part of the threefold process (3.1.2).

Life energy (prāṇa) is not bound to the physical body - it is intelligent, connected to the jīva's choices and experiences. The passage of prāṇa with the jīva indicates that life energy is a carrier of memory, karma, biomemory and engrams; not just breath.

अग्न्यादिगतिश्रुतेरिति चेन्न भाक्तत्वात् ॥ ३.१.४॥

agnyādigatiśruteriti cenna bhāktatvāt || 3.1.4 ||

If it be objected since the scriptures mention their entry into Fire and others, (we say) no, for that is said in a secondary sense.

This sūtra addresses an objection (iti cet) that śruti's mention of the jīva's post-death movement (gati) to fire (agni, deity of dissolution) and other realms/deities (ādi, e.g., moon, per Chāndogya Upaniṣad) implies a literal journey. The response (na) is that these descriptions are figurative (bhāktatvāt), not literal.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.10.4 - māsebhyaḥ pitṛlokaṃ pitṛlokādākāśamākāśāccandramasameṣa somo rājā taddevānāmannaṃ taṃ devā bhakṣayanti || "From the six months of the southern solstice, they go to the world of the ancestors, and from there they go to the sky. Then from the sky they go to the moon. This is King Soma. This is the food of the gods. The gods enjoy eating this food."

प्रथमेऽश्रवणादिति चेन्न ता एव ह्युपपत्तेः ॥ ३.१.५॥

prathame'śravaṇāditi cenna tā eva hyupapatteḥ || 3.1.5 ||

If it is objected that in the first (birth after death) there is no (knowledge due to) absence of hearing (of the Vedas), (we say) not so, because those very (souls or karmas) are indeed (present), as it is logically consistent.

Sūtra 3.1.5 addresses an objection: whether a soul, reborn after passing through celestial realms, lacks Hindu knowledge (due to not hearing scriptures in those realms), thus hindering its spiritual progress. The sūtra refutes this, asserting that the soul retains its karmic impressions and potential for knowledge, ensuring continuity.

अश्रुतत्वादिति चेन्नेष्टादिकारिणां प्रतीतेः ॥ ३.१.६॥

aśrutatvāditi cenneṣṭādikāriṇāṃ pratīteḥ || 3.1.6 ||

If it is objected that (the soul's ascent) is not heard of (in the scriptures), not so, because it is perceived (indicated) for those who perform sacrifices and other (meritorious acts).

Many individuals perform Hindu karmas even though they have not studied the scriptures directly. This suggests that eligibility (adhikāritva) arises not merely from direct śravaṇa, but from inner predisposition or saṃskāras. This again supports the continuity of spiritual impressions (vāsanās) across births.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.23 - nāyamātmā pravacanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena | yamevaiṣa vṛṇute tena labhyaḥ tasyaiṣa ātmā vivṛṇute tanūgm svām || "This Ātman cannot be attained by the study of the Vedas, or by intelligence, or by much hearing of sacred books. It is attained by him alone whom It chooses. To such a one Ātman reveals Its own form."

The sūtra reinforces Paramādvaita's view that the Jīva, veiled by avidyā, undergoes rebirths based on actions, but its essence as Brahman remains unchanged.

भाक्तं वाऽनात्मवित्त्वात् तथा हि दर्शयति ॥ ३.१.७॥

bhāktaṃ vā'nātmavittvāt tathā hi darśayati || 3.1.7 ||

Or rather the statement is made in a secondary sense on account of their non-realization of the Self, because (the Śruti) declares like that.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.8 - bhidyate hṛdayagranthiśchidyante sarvasaṃśayāḥ | kṣīyante cāsya karmāṇi tasmin dṛṣṭe parāvare "The fetters of the heart are broken, all doubts are resolved and all works cease to bear fruit, when He is beheld who is both high and low."

From the perspective of mokśa, all so-called 'unqualified' beings are simply not remembering. They are not lacking the Self - they are playing in different layers of consciousness. Even their ignorance is within the play of Paramaśiva.

Ignorance is not lack of the Self — it's the temporary forgetting of your Paramaśiva space. When scripture says someone is 'not a knower of Self', it is not judgment - it is context for awakening

कृतात्ययेऽनुशयवान् दृष्टस्मृतिभ्याम् ३.१.८॥

kṛtātyaye'nuśayavān dṛṣṭasmṛtibhyām || 3.1.8 ||

After the exhaustion (of past karma), (one) still retains latent impressions (anuśaya), as known from śruti and smṛti.

Bhagavad Gītā 6.43–44) - tatra taṁ buddhi-saṁyogaṁ labhate paurva-dehikam "There he regains the connection with the intellect from the former body" pūrvābhyāsena tenaiva hriyate hyavaśo'pi saḥ "By the power of previous practice, he is involuntarily drawn forward."

From the point of view of mokṣa, no one becomes liberated, because no one was ever bound. What appears as qualification or unqualification is just when the remembrance of Paramādvaita starts radiating through the layers of karmic entanglement.

From vertical time zones, your cognition already contains liberation. Karma is not a block, it is a veil. Once the karma-maya cognition is thinned, you simply start functioning as Paramāśiva again."

Thus, eligibility arises not due to karma but due to shedding the weight of karma, which allows turiya-turiyatīta to be your lived space again.

चरणादिति चेन्नोपलक्षणार्थेति कार्ष्णाजनिः ॥ ३.१.९॥

caraṇāditi cennopalakṣaṇārtheti kārṣṇājaniḥ || 3.1.9 ||

If it be contended that (the soul gets its rebirth) owing to conduct, (we say) no as the word 'conduct' used to denote indirectly (residual karma), according to Kārṣṇājani.

Conduct, while influential, is not the root cause; it indicates the Jīva's karmic state. Mokṣa requires transcending karma entirely through Self-knowledge, realizing non-duality, and dissolving avidyā. The sūtra emphasizes that focusing on conduct alone misses the deeper dynamics of karma and ignorance, which Self-realization overcomes.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.3 - nāyamātmā pravacanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena | yamevaiṣa vṛṇute tena labhya-stasyaiṣa ātmā vivṛṇute tanūṃ svām || "This Ātman cannot be attained through study of the Vedas, nor through intelligence, nor through much learning. He who chooses Ātman-by him alone is Ātman attained. It is Ātman that reveals to the seeker Its true nature."

Your behavior doesn't define your eligibility for Brahmavidyā. Your willingness to recognize yourself as Paramāśiva does.

If your causal body is detoxed, you will not have rebirth; superconscious practices transcend the karmic cycle, of which conduct is merely a surface expression.

Every night have a strong will, consciously see how you are slipping into different state of consciousness – this enables the Jīva to access turiya, realizing Paramāśiva's oneness and dissolving karmic patterns. This manifests divya śarira, described as possessing all the 7 bodies simultaneously, spontaneously, synergistically. By addressing the deeper karma indicated by conduct, this practice fulfills the sūtra's implication that rebirth is driven by more than behavior, achieving mokśa beyond other indicators.

आनर्थक्यमिति चेन्न तदपेक्षत्वात् ॥ ३.१.१०॥

ānarthakyamiti cenna tadapekṣatvāt || 3.1.10 ||

If it be objected that (in that case) conduct will cease to have any usefulness, then it is not so, because karma is dependent on that conduct.

The sūtra emphasizes that the conduct is not random but a consequence of the Jīva's actions, aligning with the law of karma until Brahman-realization ends the cycle.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.12 - tadvijñānārthaṃ sa gurumevābhigacchet samitpāṇiḥ śrotriyaṃ brahmaniṣṭham | "To know That (tad vijñānārtham), one must approach the guru alone — who is learned in the scriptures (śrotriya) and established in Brahman (brahmaniṣṭha)."

Even though the jīva is already Paramāśiva, the remembrance of that reality is triggered by the śabda pramāṇa - words of the śāstra and the avatār. Without that, the jīva continues to be caught in the delusion of forgetting.

From the point of mokṣa, even śāstra is not the cause of liberation - but from the point of jīva, it is the necessary spark. The Oneness is constant; śāstra lets you taste it again."

सुकृतदुष्कृते एवेति तु बादरिः ॥ ३.१.११॥

sukṛtaduṣkṛte eveti tu bādariḥ || 3.1.11 ||

But (according to the sage) Bādari, (the present birth is) solely the result of good and bad actions (sukṛta and duṣkṛta).

Bādari's view acknowledges that the gross framework of one's embodiment (birth, circumstances, inclinations) is shaped by past karma-phala. This includes both sukṛta (like dāna, yajña, niyama) and duṣkṛta (like himsā, adharma). However, this does not mean karma alone brings brahmajñāna. It merely sets the stage — eligibility arises only when knowledge (jñāna) dawns through śravaṇa, manana, nididhyāsana.

So while karma influences rebirth and conditions, jñāna alone liberates. Karma creates the opportunity, not the mokṣa.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.10.7 - tadya iha ramaṇīyacaraṇā abhyāśo ha yatte ramaṇīyāṃ | Among them, those who did good work in this world [in their past life] attain a good birth accordingly.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.2.7 - yonimanye prapadyante śarīratvāya dehinaḥ | sthāṇumanye'nusaṃyanti yathākarma yathāśrutam || "Some Jīvas enter the womb to be embodied as organic beings and some go into non-organic matter-according to their work and according to their knowledge."

From the point of view of mokṣa, karma is not the cause of liberation - it is just a shadow of your cognition. The more you perceive yourself as jīva, the more you generate karma. The more you realize you are Paramāśiva, the less karma binds you.

अनिष्टादिकारिणामपि च श्रुतम् ॥ ३.१.१२॥

aniṣṭādikāriṇāmapi ca śrutam || 3.1.12 ||

The Śruti declares (of the going to the lunar world etc) also of those who do perform unmeritorious acts.

aniṣṭādikāriṇām refers to those engaged in past evil deeds (pāpa), and not currently exhibiting ideal spiritual conduct. However, śruti itself records that such individuals can attain jñāna or eligibility for it. Therefore, karma alone (good or bad) cannot fully explain spiritual readiness. This further supports the doctrine that inner saṃskāras from previous lives, when ripened, override even current outer conduct.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.23- nāyamātmā pravacanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena | yamevaiṣa vṛṇute tena labhyaḥ tasyaiṣa ātmā vivṛṇute tanūgm svām || "This Ātman cannot be attained by the study of the Vedas, or by intelligence, or by much hearing of sacred books. It is attained by him alone whom It chooses. To such a one Ātman reveals Its own form."

The causal body carries rebirth tendencies until superconscious awakening.

From the point of mokṣa, even what you call pāpa is just one ripple of Paramāśiva playing with Himself. The moment the jīva remembers its Source, all past karmas, good or bad, become irrelevant. Not even the worst sinner is disqualified from experiencing Paramādvaita.

You don't qualify by cleansing karma. You qualify by shifting your identity from jīva to Paramāśiva.

संयमने त्वनुभूयेतरेषामारोहावरोहौ तद्गतिदर्शनात् ॥ ३.१.१३॥

saṃyamane tvanubhūyetareṣāmārohāvarohau tadgatidarśanāt || 3.1.13 ||

But at the time of the final restraint (death), the ascent and descent of others is experienced - because such movement (to higher or lower births) is seen (in scripture). For those who have not realized the Self (anātmavit), the cycle of saṃsāra continues. At the time of death (saṃyamana), such beings undergo transmigration - either āroha or varoha, depending on karma.

The Upaniṣads and smṛti speak of jīvas ascending to devaloka or falling into lower realms — hence, this phenomenon is not hypothetical, but scripturally verified.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.10 - iṣṭāpūrtaṃ manyamānā variṣṭhaṃ nānyacchreyo vedayante pramūḍhāḥ | nākasya pṛṣṭhe te sukṛte'nubhūtvemaṃ lokaṃ hīnataraṃ vā viśanti || Ignorant fools, regarding sacrifices and humanitarian works as the highest, do not know any higher good. Having enjoyed their reward on the heights of heaven, gained by good works, they enter again this world or a lower one.

From the mokṣa point of view, āroha and avaroha are just the jīva's play across different states of consciousness. The jīva is not moving anywhere - only its perception is changing. If you're Paramāśiva, you neither ascend nor descend - you radiate.

When the jīva is not rooted in its Paramāśiva identity, it projects itself into different dimensions — experienced as higher or lower births. So saṃyamana (death) is just a point of transition in attention, not a final judgment.

When you shift to waking up as Paramāśiva, you exit the whole loop.

स्मरन्ति च ॥ ३.१.१४॥

smaranti ca || 3.1.14 ||

And it is remembered (in scriptures).

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.12 - parīkṣya lokān karmacitān brāhmaṇo nirvedamāyānnāstyakṛtaḥ kṛtena || "Let a brahmin, after having examined all these worlds that are gained by works, acquire freedom from desires: nothing that is eternal can be produced by what is not eternal."

Smaranti is not merely about human memory. It is superconscious access to the multi-dimensional movement of beings across births, lokas, and states of consciousness. From the state of mokṣa or Paramādvaita, the enlightened beings can see how jīvas appear to ascend or descend - just like you can recall a dream after waking. Therefore, āroha–avaroha is real from the jīva perspective, and the ṛṣis who "remember" are reporting it from above, not trapped within it.

Thus, the purpose of "smaranti" is to confirm the framework of transmigration - while still pointing us toward transcending it through jñāna.

अपि सप्त ॥ ३.१.१५॥

api sapta || 3.1.15 ||

Even there are seven.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.1-2 tadya itthaṃ viduḥ| ye ceme'raṇye śraddhā tapa ityupāsate e'rciṣamabhisaṃbhavantyarciṣo'harah na āpūryamāṇapakṣamāpūryamāṇapakṣādyānṣaḍudaṅṅeti māsāṃstān || 5.10.1 ||
māsebhyaḥ saṃvatsaraṃ saṃvatsarādādityamādityāccandramasaṃ candramaso vidyutaṃ tatpuruṣo'mānavaḥ sa enānbrahma gamayatyeṣa devayānaḥ panthā iti || 5.10.2 ||

"Those who know this [about the five fires], and those who live in the forest practising austerities with faith—they go after death to the world of light. From the world of light they go to the world of day; from the world of day to the world of the bright fortnight; from the world of the bright fortnight to the six months when the sun moves northward; from there they go to the year; from the year to the sun; from the sun to the moon; and from the moon to lightning. There someone, not human, receives them and leads them to brahmaloka. This is the path of the gods."

As per Paramādvaita, the seven also refers to the 7 bodies (divya śarīra): Physical (annamaya), Vital (prāṇamaya), Mental (manomaya), intellectual (vijñānamaya), blissful (ānandamaya), cosmic (jagat), transcendental (nirvāṇa).

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.8.5 - sa yaścāyaṃ puruṣe yaścāsāvāditye sa ekaḥ sa ya evaṃvit asmāllokātpretya etamannamayamātmā namupasaṅkrāmati etaṃ prāṇamayamātmānamupasaṅkrāmati etaṃ manomayamātmānamupasaṅkrāmati etaṃ vijñānamay amātmānamupasaṅkrāmati etamānandamayamātmānamupasaṅkrāmati || "The Reality in the core of the man and the Reality which is the Sun, are one. He who knows this, on leaving from this world, first attains the Ātman made of food, next attains this Ātman made of Prāṇa, next attains this Ātman made of Buddhi and lastly attains the Ātman made of Bliss."

tatrāpi ca tadvyāpārādavirodhaḥ || 3.1.16 ||

Even in that case also, there is no contradiction - because of that activity or involvement.

Even in the scenario where beings are reborn due to their karma (sukṛta–duṣkṛta), as previously discussed. Their actions - both past and present - express their inner disposition, making them eligible for brahmavidyā. Hence, there is no contradiction in stating that someone is born due to karma and yet becomes spiritually ripe.

There is no contradiction between your past karmic reality and your spiritual awakening now - because even your karma is just your own vyāpāra, your own decision to play in this dimension. The moment you want to stop, you can. That's the freedom of Paramāśiva.

tad-vyāpāra refers to jīva's conscious or unconscious intent to engage with this dream reality - its own leelā. So when a being wakes up to Paramādvaita, there's no contradiction - because the previous saṃsāric movements were self-initiated roles. There is no conflict because there was never a second entity causing bondage. All karma was self-imposed delusion.

Even if you were acting in karma before, it was your own vyāpāra. So the moment you act from remembrance, you're instantly free. Ther is no contradiction; it is only re-alignment.

विद्याकर्मणोरिति तु प्रकृतत्वात् ॥ ३.१.१७॥

vidyākarmaṇoriti tu prakṛtatvāt || 3.1.17 ||

But (the reference is to) knowledge and work on account of their being the subject under discussion.

Bhagavad Gītā 3.3- loke'smin dvividhā niṣṭhā "In this world, there are two paths (of knowledge and action)."

Since vidyā and karma are under discussion, their separate effects and operations must be delineated.

From the perspective of mokṣa, even karma and knowledge are not two. The separation is only discussed to help the jīva shift out of delusion. In truth, there is only one thing happening - Paramāśiva playing with Himself."

The discussion of vidyā vs karma exists at the level of upāya (method), not tattva (truth). This distinction is relevant for the jīva as long as it operates from duality. But ultimately, in Paramādvaita, there is no real duality between action and knowledge - both are shadows of cognition:

Karma is cognition trapped in linear causality. Vidyā is cognition that recognizes Oneness

You perform karma when you forget your source. You rest in vidyā when you remember it. The only difference is remembrance.

न तृतीये तथोपलब्धेः ॥ ३.१.१८॥

na tṛtīye tathopalabdheḥ || 3.1.18 ||

Not in the third (category), because such is not observed.

Both karma and vidyā are tools within the dimension of jīva-centric cognition.

From the space of Paramāśiva, the very idea of a "path to mokṣa" collapses — since you were never bound.

tathopalabdheḥ — there is no experience or recognition of a third path because there is only remembrance, not movement.

स्मर्यतेऽपि च लोके ॥ ३.१.१९॥

smaryate'pi ca loke || 3.1.19 ||

And (this) is also remembered in the world.

Even in the world, people speak of either action or enlightenment. No one says — do both and be free. That's because mokṣa is not the result of addition — it is the result of alignment.

दर्शनाच्च ॥ ३.१.२०॥

darśanācca || 3.1.20 ||

And because of (scriptural) vision or declaration (it is so).

तृतीये शब्दावरोधः संशोकजस्य ॥ ३.१.२१॥

tṛtīye śabdāvarodhaḥ saṃśokajasya || 3.1.21 ||

In the (supposed) third path, there is obstruction from śabda (śruti), because it arises from confusion or admixture.

तत्स्वाभाव्यापत्तिरुपपत्तेः ॥ ३.१.२२॥

tatsvābhāvyāpattirupapatteḥ || 3.1.22 ||

(The descending soul) attains similarity with its nature; for that is reasonable.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9 - sa yo ha vai tat paramaṃ brahma veda brahmaiva bhavati nāsyābrahmavitkule bhavati | tarati śokaṃ tarati pāpmānaṃ guhāgranthibhyo vimukto'mṛto bhavati || "He who knows the Supreme Brahman verily becomes Brahman. In his family no one is born ignorant of Brahman. He overcomes grief; he overcomes evil; free from the fetters of the heart, he becomes immortal."

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.6 - asanneva sa bhavati | asadbrahmeti veda cet | asti brahmeti cedveda | santamenaṃ tato viduriti || "If he knows Brahman as non-existent, he becomes himself non-existent. If he knows Brahman as existent, then (they) the world knows him to be existent."

What one perceives Brahman to be becomes their reality. One's inner cognition determines what they become - aligning with svabhāva-yāpattiḥ.

In Paramādvaita, avaroha is not about location - it's about cognition. You do not become what you do - you become what you deeply believe about yourself. Your birth is not a punishment or reward, it is a manifestation of your self-cognition.

You descend into the world that matches your remembered identity. If you live like a bound soul, you are reborn in a realm where bondage looks real. If you live as Paramāśiva, even death cannot touch you.

नातिचिरेण विशेषात् ॥ ३.१.२३॥

nāticireṇa viśeṣāt || 3.1.23 ||

(The descent of the soul from one state to another takes place) not after long intervals, on account of a special declaration (of the Śruti).

In Advaita, Mokṣa is not a product of time but the result of Self-knowledge (ātma-jñāna). Viśeṣa refers to spiritual preparedness (adhikāritva), inner purification (antaḥkaraṇa-śuddhi) and grace of the Guru (guru-kṛpā). When these are present, aparokṣa-anubhūti (direct realization) happens instantly.

In Paramādvaita, from the mokṣa-centric view, the various perspectives can be understood.

From the view of Jīva navigating through the 25 states of consciousness, it may assume mokṣa is distant. But the moment the jīva awakens to the truth of non-separation, it experiences turīya and turīyatīta-turīyatīta. This shift or the viśeṣa causes instantaneous mokṣa. Time is not a constraint; it is a cognition. When jīva goes beyond time, he experiences mokṣa.

From the view of Īśvara, Īśvara manifests all as His own līlā (divine play). He creates time and also liberates beings beyond time. The viśeṣa is the jīva's alignment to Īśvara's frequency of sat-cit-ānanda. As soon as that frequency matches, jīva is absorbed in Īśvara svarūpa. Realization is frequency-based, not effort-based.

From the view of jagat, the jagat (cosmos) is not a trap but a mirror. The moment one stops projecting duality, the cosmic jagat reflects the Self. Nāticireṇa means the cosmos itself helps the sincere jīva who invokes Paramāśiva. The viśeṣa is the intensity of Oneness, which reconfigures reality itself.

From the view of Mokṣa, Mokṣa is not a future state but the ground reality of Paramāśiva. The idea of delay (atichira) arises from separation cognition. When cognition of duality drops - viśeṣa - mokṣa is experienced as śāśvata-anubhava. Mokṣa is not attained; it is reclaimed.

अन्याधिष्ठिते पूर्ववदभिलापात् ॥ ३.१.२४॥

anyādhiṣṭhite pūrvavadabhilāpāt || 3.1.24 ||

(Even when the body is) governed by another, (the jīva's agency continues) as in the previous case, because of scriptural declaration.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.19 - hantā cenmanyate hantuṁ hataścenmanyate hatam | ubhau tau na vijānīto nāyaṁ hanti na hanyate || "If the killer thinks he kills and if the killed man thinks he is killed, neither of these apprehends aright. The Self kills not, nor is It killed."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.6.3 - tadyatraitatsuptaḥ samastḥ samprasannaḥ svapnaṃ na vijānātyāsu tadā nāḍīṣu sṛpto bhavati taṃ na kaścana pāpmā spṛśati tejasā hi tadā sampanno bhavati || "When a person is sound asleep, all his organs are inactive and quiet. He is free from all worries, and he does not have any dreams. The organs then disappear into the veins. No sin can affect him then, for the rays of the sun have surrounded him."

Anyādhiṣṭhite - in certain states (e.g., dream, deep sleep, death), the jīva is governed by Īśvara. Still, pūrvavat - like in earlier situations - jīva is treated as an agent (karmī) because of abhilāpa (śruti statements attributing action to the jīva). Though the jīva appears passive, karmic continuity and experiencing results continue under Īśvara's supervision. Īśvara oversees the jīva's karmic journey when self-agency is withdrawn.

As per Paramādvaita this sūtra is not merely metaphysical but a direct pointer to liberation through understanding jīva's multi-dimensional governance.

From the point of view of Jīva, in dream, sleep, coma, death, or superconscious states, jīva feels not in control. Yet, jīva remains aware and has continuity, albeit presided by Paramāśiva as Īśvara. Just as in dream you don't control the script, but you still experience - similarly, when governed, jīva still has bhoga-kartṛtva (experiencing agency). Even when not governing, the jīva's presence matters and the experience still registers.

From the point of view of Īśvara, Īśvara takes over governance during the jīva's unconscious or liminal states. The universe functions like a divine operating system. Īśvara ensures karmic logic flows uninterrupted. Being governed by another (anyādhiṣṭhita) does not mean jīva is absent; it means Īśvara is active out of compassion.

From the point of view of Jagat, the cosmos provides a field of experience governed by higher intelligence. Even when jīva is not self-aware (e.g. in sleep), the bio-memory, karmic imprinting, and contextual experiences continue within the jagat, proving continuity of subtle existence. Jagat is a co-participant in jīva's evolution even in passive states.

From the point of view of Mokṣa, even when jīva is not directly in control, the Self continues to be present - unbroken, unchanging, and shining. That awareness behind both governed and governing states is Paramāśiva. The witness of all governed experiences is the real you, the eternal Self - never born, never gone.

अशुद्धमिति चेन्न शब्दात् ॥ ३.१.२५॥

aśuddhamiti cenna śabdāt || 3.1.25 ||

If it be objected that (the jīva is) impure, (we say) not so - because the śruti declares (otherwise).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.7.1 - ya ātmāpahatapāpmā vijaro vimṛtyurviśoko vijighatso'pipāsaḥ satyakāmaḥ satyasaṃkalpaḥ so'nveṣṭavyaḥ sa vijijñāsitavyaḥ sa sarvāṃśca lokānāpnoti sarvāṃśca kāmānyastamātmānamanuvidya vijānātīti ha prajāpatiruvāca || "Prajāpati once said: 'The Self is free from sin, free from old age, free from death, free from sorrow, and free from hunger and thirst. It is the cause of desire for Truth and for commitment to Truth. This Self has to be sought for and thoroughly known. The person who has sought for and known the Self attains all worlds and all desires.'"

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.18 – na jāyate mriyate vā vipaścin nāyaṃ kutaścinna babhūva kaścit | ajo nityaḥ śāśvato'yaṃ purāṇo na hanyate hanyamāne śarīre || "The knowing Self is not born; It does not die. It has not sprung from anything; nothing has sprung from It. Birthless, eternal, everlasting and ancient, It is not killed when the body is killed."

From the point of view of Paramādvaita, even if the jīva appears to move through impure or limited embodiments, its essential nature remains untouched and pure, due to the intrinsic reality of Paramaśivatva.

When seen from the point of view of Jīva, we may experience impurity - physical disease, emotional traumas, karmic blocks. But these are not the truth of who we are. The Upaniṣads declare Brahmaṇyam bahuputratām – You are the Son of Immortality.

From the point of view of Īśvara, Īśvara never sees you as impure. He guides jīva through purificatory experiences not to punish, but to help jīva realize its inherent purity. The impurity is functional, not essential. Being in saṃsāra doesn't make you impure forgetting your Paramaśivatva does.

From the point of view of Jagat, the jagat appears filled with dualities: pure and impure, good and bad. But it is a projection of Paramāśiva's own energy (Paramaśivaśakti). What seems impure is just incompletely perceived Paramaśiva. Impurity is a perception distortion - not an existential reality.

From the point of view of Mokṣa, the śruti assures that mokṣa is possible not because you become pure, but because you already are pure. Even if you feel impure, the śabda of śruti declares your eternal purity.

रेतः सिग्योगोऽथ ॥ ३.१.२६॥

retaḥ sigyogo'tha || 3.1.26 ||

Then (atha), there is association (yogaḥ) with semen (retaḥ).

Praśna Upaniṣad 1.14 - annaṃ vai prajāpatistato ha vai tadretastasmādimāḥ prajāḥ prajāyanta iti || "Food, verily, is Prajapati. From that comes semen; from semen are all these creatures born."

The individual self, due to karma and avidyā, takes up a subtle body and enters into a new gross body through retaḥ, the seminal fluid during procreation. The presence of karma leads to the connection with a particular womb. Retaḥsiyoga here is taken as literal union at the time of conception - the entry of the subtle body into the reproductive process. Retaḥ is not just semen - it represents the creative essence of Paramāśiva, through which the jīva enters into the game of life. The si-yogaḥ (union) is the union of the consciousness (cit) with prakṛti to assume embodiment for the purpose of mukti. This is not the beginning of bondage - but the beginning of a new opportunity for the jīva to express its powers, learn, and achieve mokṣa.

As per Paramādvaita, there are various understandings of mokṣa.

From the point of view of jīva, the jīva enters the body through the semen, but this is just another state of consciousness. Retaḥsiyoga is not bondage, it is choiceful descent into another plane to complete karmic loops or manifest powers.

From the point of view of Īśvara, Īśvara lets the jīva play through the manifestation of jagat, directing the entry into a specific body by law of karma and His will (icchā śakti).

From the point of view of jagat, the body, the parents, the DNA, the conception are all kṣetrajña-based frameworks into which consciousness flows. This sūtra shows how jagat receives the soul, anchoring the epigenetic structure for that jīva.

From the point of view of mokṣa, even in this conception through semen, Paramāśiva is playing. There is no bondage unless the jīva forgets it is Paramāśiva. Mokṣa is available even within the womb, as taught by great beings like Prahlāda, Śukadeva, Garbha Muni.

Your DNA is made of the material called jagat – pancha bhūtas. It is made by Īśvara and given to jīva to enjoy. That moment of union (retaḥsiyogaḥ) is not bondage, but beginning of conscious play. If the jīva remembers its sat-cit-ānanda svarūpa even during entry, that is kaivalya. The one who is conscious of the entry, journey, and exit, is jīvanmukta.

योनेः शरीरम् ॥ ३.१.२७॥

yoneḥ śarīram || 3.1.27 ||

From the womb (comes) a new body (for the descending soul).

Aitareya Upaniṣad 2.1.1 - tad etat sarvebhyo'ṅgebhyaḥ tejaḥ saṃbhūtam ātmanyevāt ~~n~~ānaṃ bibharti | tad yadā striyāṃ siñcaty athainaj janayati tad asya prathamaṃ janma || "That essence (tejas), born from all the limbs, the Self carries within His own Self. When he deposits this essence into a woman, and it is born from her, that is called his first birth."

इति श्रीमत्कृष्णद्वैपायनकृत ब्रह्मसूत्रेषु तृतीयाध्यायस्य प्रथमः पादः समाप्तः

iti śrīmat kṛṣṇadvaipāyanakṛta brahmasūtreṣu tṛtīyādhyāyasya prathamaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

Thus ends the first section (pāda) of the third chapter (adhyāya) of the Brahmasūtras, composed by the revered Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana (Vedavyāsa).

Chapter 3 Section 2

सन्ध्ये सृष्टिराह हि ॥ ३.२.१॥

sandhye sṛṣṭirāha hi || 3.2.1 ||

Creation (takes place) in the intermediate (state), for the śruti declares so.

The Upaniṣads speak of the jīva creating his own dream worlds or experiencing subtle sṛṣṭi. Hence, creation isn't a one-time event, but a continuous, cyclic, and layered process. This supports the idea that dreams and subtle realms are also created by consciousness, and hence, Brahman remains the only source and substratum of all manifestations - gross or subtle.

Praśna Upaniṣad 4.2 - tasmai sa hovāca yathā gārgya marīcayo'rkasyāstaṃ gacchataḥ sarvā etasmiṃstejomaṇḍala ekībhavanti tāḥ punaḥ punarudayataḥ pracarantyevaṃ ha vai tat sarvaṃ pare deve manasyekībhavati tena tarhyeṣa puruṣo na śṛṇoti na paśyati na jighrati na rasayate na spṛśate nābhivadate nādatte nānandayate na visṛjate neyāyate svapitītyācakṣate || "To him Pippalada replied: O Gargya, as the rays of the sun, when it sets, are gathered in that luminous orb and again go forth when it rises, even so, verily, all these the objects and the senses become one in the superior god, the mind. Therefore at that time a man hears not, sees not, smells not, tastes not, touches not, speaks not, grasps not, enjoys not, emits not and does not move about. He sleeps that is what people say."

There are 25 states of consciousness a jīva experiences, from waking to dreamless sleep to Turīyātīta-Turīyātīta, each with its own reality-generation mechanism. Even during dreams, you create your own svapna-loka (dream world), which you experience as vividly as waking. These in-between states (sandhyāvasthā) are not illusions — they are alternate creations. Creation is continuous, dynamic, and layered - not linear.

From the point of view of the jīva, even Īśvara and jagat are internal experiences; sandhyā is where the jīva exercises creatorhood unconsciously. From the point of view of mokṣa, all states - jagrat, svapna, suṣupti - are conscious projections of Paramāśiva.

निर्मातारं चैके पुत्रादयश्च ॥ ३.२.२॥

nirmātāraṃ caike putrādayaśca || 3.2.2 ||

And some (following a particular branch) consider the Self to be a creator (of things desired); and sons and others (are the objects desired).

The jīva is said to create his dream world or post-death experiences. The nirmātā is interpreted as the jīva who creates dream realities, and putrādayaḥ as the projections such as sons, family, etc. Even dream offspring are included to show that consciousness projects relational networks during non-waking states. In classical Advaita, jīva doesn't create the ultimate jagat, but projects illusory versions in dreams and intermediate states.

In Paramādvaita, from the mokṣa-centric view, jīva is a conscious micro-creator, even in subtle states. In the dream and sandhyā states, the jīva creates people, relationships, worlds - sons, friends, enemies, cities - with no external input.

In many of these states like dream, waking, etc, reality is projected by will (icchā śakti), not as much by physical effort (kriyā śakti). Whether waking or dreaming, jīva projects content, and believes in it.

From the point of view of jīva, jīva projects sons and family (putrādayaḥ) in dream and subtle states.

From the point of view of Īśvara, just as Īśvara manifests jagat from will, the jīva mirrors that process subtly in dream or intermediate states. This confirms jīva's inherent capacity to manifest, though in limited scope.

From the point of view of jagat, dream-worlds, like the waking jagat, are experiential realities within time-space. Whether waking or subtle, any loka experienced becomes a reality-field (reality as perceived is reality as created).

From the point of view of mokṣa, all such creations - waking, dreaming, intermediate - are simultaneous manifestations of Paramāśiva. Realizing this eliminates the delusion of separate creator and created. Thus, liberation is not withdrawal from creation, but awareness of oneness with it.

मायामात्रं तु कात्स्न्र्येनानभिव्यक्तस्वरूपत्वात् ॥ ३.२.३॥

māyāmātraṃ tu kārtsnyenānabhivyaktasvarūpatvāt || 3.2.3 ||

But (this creation) is merely māyā, because of its nature of not being a complete manifestation (of the totality of attributes).

Although śruti refers to jīva as creator (dream creator, post-death creator, etc.), it does not make jīva a real, autonomous creator like Īśvara. This is because its true nature (svarūpa) as pure Brahman is not fully manifest during such creations. Therefore, such projected realities are māyāmātram, limited manifestations, not complete truths.

From the mokṣa-centric Paramādvaita lens, this sūtra does not belittle the jīva, but distinguishes the degree of conscious manifestation.

Until one experiences the Paramaśivatva and manifests all its dimensions what one creates is māyāmātram, not because it is false, but because it is incomplete. When the jīva lives from Turīyātīta-Turīyātīta, its creations reflect kārtsnya (wholeness). Below that - in waking, dream, deep sleep etc the creatorhood is partial. Hence, all these lower projections are called māyāmātram - not false, but limited manifestations of Paramaśiva.

The full manifestation of depth, time, space, length, breadth, and beyond occurs when one is operating from Paramāśiva's svarūpa. Until then, one may create, but without control over time or causality, the projection is not fully conscious and hence māyāmātram.

सूचकश्च हि श्रुतेः आचक्षते च तद्विदः ॥ ३.२.४॥

sūcakaśca hi śruteḥ ācakṣate ca tadvidaḥ || 3.2.4 ||

And indeed, it is indicative (only), as declared by the śruti and the knowers of the Self.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.12 - parīkṣya lokān karmacitān brāhmaṇo nirvedamāyānnāstyakṛtaḥ kṛtena Let a brahmin, after having examined all these worlds that are gained by works, acquire freedom from desires: nothing that is eternal can be produced by what is not eternal.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.1.6 - yathā somyikena nakhanikṛntanena sarvaṃ kārṣṇāyasaṃ vijñātaṃ syādvācārambhaṇaṃ vikāro nāmadheyaṃ kṛṣṇāyasamityeva satyamevaṃsomya sa ādeśo bhavatīti || "O Somya, it is like this: By knowing a single nail-cutter you know all objects made of iron. All changes are mere words, in name only. But iron is the reality. O Somya, this is the teaching I spoke of."

As per Paramādvaita, dreams, intermediate states, even though not full reality, are alive pointers (sūcakas) to our Paramāśivatva. All jīva's experiences - even dream gods, revelations - are indicative, not absolute. These are signs (sūcakas) helping jīva progress upward in TPS (thoughts per second) and depth. Turīyātīta-Turīyātīta: When one enters this state, one begins to see through the indicators and experience the Paramāśivatva, revealer - not just a dreamer.

पराभिध्यानात्तु तिरोहितं ततो ह्यस्य बन्धविपर्ययौ ॥ ३.२.५॥

parābhidhyānāttu tirohitaṃ tato hyasya bandhaviparyayau || 3.2.5 ||

But due to turning attention toward the external, the truth (Self) becomes concealed; and from that arise bondage and error.

This sūtra pinpoints why the jīva forgets its true nature (Brahman). The problem is parābhidhyāna — placing attention on the other, the external, the object, instead of the Self. This externalization causes tirodhāna (concealment) of the jīva's true svarūpa.

As a result, two things arise: Bandha – bondage (identification with body, mind, and karma) and Viparyaya – error, delusion (believing the unreal to be real, and vice versa).

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.1.1 - parāñci khāni vyatṛṇat svayambhū-stasmātparāṅpaśyati nāntarātman | kaściddhīraḥ pratyagātmānamaikṣa-dāvṛttacakṣuramṛtatvamicchan || "Yama said: The self-existent Supreme Lord inflicted an injury upon the sense-organs in creating them with outgoing tendencies; therefore a man perceives only outer objects with them and not the inner Self. But a calm person, wishing for Immortality, beholds the inner Self with his eyes closed."

In Paramādvaita, from the point of view of mokṣa, When attention returns to its source, tirodhāna ends, and bandha and viparyaya dissolve spontaneously.

Due to externally-focused cognition (parābhidhyāna), the Self becomes veiled (tirohita), and thus arise bondage (bandha) and wrong cognition (viparyaya). The solution is ātmābhidhyāna - turning attention inwards, unclutching, and abiding in the Paramāśiva space of mokṣa.

देहयोगाद्वासोऽपि ॥ ३.२.६॥

dehayogādvāso'pi || 3.2.6 ||

Embodiment (dwelling) is also due to union with the body.

The jīva's continued identification with embodiment is not accidental; it is because of association with the body (deha-yoga).

That is because the jīva associates with the body as the Self, it appears dwelling within it (vāsaḥ), and hence becomes subject to bondage.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.3 - ātmānam rathinaṃ viddhi śarīram rathameva tu | buddhiṃ tu sārathiṃ viddhi manaḥ pragrahameva ca || "Know the Ātman to be the master of the chariot; the body, chariot; the intellect, the charioteer; and the mind, the reins."

From the perspective of Paramādvaita, you are Paramaśiva, who has the power to playfully reside in the body (like a cloth) without becoming attached to it. But when you forget your Self and cling to the deha, embodiment becomes bondage instead of play.

The lower states like waking, dreaming, and sleep are where jīva is clothed in identity with body–mind. Only in Turīya, Turīyātīta, and beyond, embodiment becomes transparent, no longer binding. When deha is seen as just an instrument (vāhana) and not the self, you reside in it without being bound by it.

Just as you wear clothes but don't think you are the clothes, a jīvanmukta wears a body but knows he is not it.

From the point of view of mokṣam when you see the body as a costume, not the Self, embodiment becomes a līla, not a limitation.

तदभावो नाडीषु तच्छ्रुतेः आत्मनि च ॥ ३.२.७॥

tadabhāvo nāḍīṣu tacchruteḥ ātmani ca || 3.2.7 ||

There is absence (of embodiment) in the nāḍīs, because the śruti says so, and also (due to its dwelling) in the Self.

Within the nāḍīs (especially suṣumnā, the central channel), the jīva is not fully embodied like it is in the gross body. It is because the scriptures (śruti) speak of the jīva residing in the nāḍīs subtly before death or while dreaming and also because, ultimately, jīva resides in the Self, not in the gross layers.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.3.16 - śataṃ caikā ca hṛdayasya nāḍya-stāsāṃ mūrdhānamabhiniḥsṛtaikā | tayordhvamāyannamṛtatvameti viṣvaṅṅanyā utkramaṇe bhavanti || "There are one hundred and one arteries of the heart, one of which pierces the crown of the head. Going upward by it, a man at death attains immortality. But when his prāṇa passes out by other arteries, going in different directions, then he is reborn in the world."

From the mokṣa-centric Paramādvaita lens, this sūtra reveals one of the most mystical dimensions of liberation - Your 'residence' shifts as your consciousness shifts. Vāsa is not where you are, but where your attention is.

अतः प्रबोधोऽस्मात् ॥ ३.२.८॥

ataḥ prabodho'smāt || 3.2.8 ||

Hence the awakening from this (Brahman).

Awakening happens not through external activity, but through inner redirection.

When jīva withdraws from outer identity and centers even briefly in nāḍī or Self, the possibility of prabodha (awakening) is born. This shows that liberation is not a distant goal but it is a shift in where we place our attention. Just like aa dream begins to break when you become aware you're dreaming, saṁsāra begins to dissolve the moment jīva turns toward its source-awareness.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.14 - uttiṣṭhata jāgrataprāpya varānnibodhata | kṣurasya dhārā niśitā duratyayā durgaṃ pathastatkavayo vadanti || "Arise! Awake! Approach the great and learn. Like the sharp edge of a razor is that path, so the wise say-hard to tread and difficult to cross."

स एव तु कर्मानुस्मृतिशब्दविधिभ्यः ॥ ३.२.९॥

sa eva tu karmānusmṛtiśabdavidhibhyaḥ || 3.2.9 ||

But he alone (jīva) is recognized, from karma, memory, scriptural word, and injunctions.

The jīva who enters different states (like waking, dream, post-death journey) is the same throughout. This continuity is supported by: karma – actions and their consequences follow the same agent; anusmṛti – memory (of previous lives or actions) seen in rare cases or in śruti; śabda – scripture speaks of the same jīva continuing across births; vidhi – rituals (like śrāddha) presume continuity of the same jīva. So, jīva remains the same underlying experiencer, even while assuming different bodies or states.

Across all 25 states (waking to Turīyātīta-Turīyātīta), the experiencer is unchanged. Even in deep sleep, where memory is absent, upon awakening you say 'I slept well' - this is anusmṛti. In dream, despite multiple identities, you are still 'you.' This sūtra says: recognize the continuity – it is the rope running through the beads of your experiences. Time, space, and memory are projected on the base of the Self. It is the conscious continuity of jīva that ties together karmic impressions, memories, and scriptural experiences. You are not what changes - you are what connects the changes.

Bhagavad Gītā 2.22 - vāsāṃsi jīrṇāni yathā vihāya navāni gṛhṇāti naro'parāṇi | tathā śarīrāṇi vihāya jīrṇā-nyanyāni saṃyāti navāni dehī || "Just as a man casts off his worn out clothes and puts on new ones, so also the embodied-Self casts off its worn out bodies and enters others which are new."

मुग्धेऽर्थसम्पत्तिर्परिशेषात् ॥ ३.२.१०॥

mugdhe'rthasampattirpariśeṣāt || 3.2.10 ||

Even in the dull/unaware state, experience (of objects) occurs - by the process of elimination (pariśeṣa).

Does experience (sensation, perception, karma) happen even when the jīva is dull, unconscious, or unthinking (mugdha)?

Vedānta says: Yes - even if not consciously remembered, experience happens, proven by: Karma-fruit still affecting the person, the jīva still progressing spiritually or karmically, certain results manifesting despite apparent lack of awareness. So, even in dull or dreamless states, something is registering. And this is proved by pariśeṣa - logical elimination: if the body is not experiencing, and no external trigger is present, yet results arise, the jīva must have experienced subtly.

Many of the lower states (like dreamless sleep, coma, tāmasic states) may seem like nothingness to the conscious mind. But from the inner space, artha-sampatti continues as karma is being carried, subtle impressions are being formed, awakening (prabodha) is still possible.

न स्थानतोऽपि परस्योभयलिङ्गं सर्वत्र हि ॥ ३.२.११॥

na sthānato'pi parasyobhayaliṅgaṃ sarvatra hi || 3.2.11 ||

Even from location (or position), the signs of both (embodied and unembodied) do not apply to the Supreme; for, indeed, such dual attributes are not found everywhere.

The Supreme Self (parasya) — Brahman or Īśvara — is beyond all dual indications: not confined to any location (sthāna), does not bear the marks of both embodied and disembodied (ubhayaliṅgam). One cannot say Brahman is in one place (like in a body), or not in a place (as in being purely disembodied) - because Brahman is all-pervading (sarvatra) and beyond all attributes.

न भेदादिति चेन्न प्रत्येकमतद्वचनात् ॥ ३.२.१२॥

na bhedāditi cenna pratyekamatadvacanāt || 3.2.12 ||

If it be said (there is) no distinction, (we say) no; because (the śruti) speaks of (the jīvas) individually and not as undifferentiated.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1 - sarvaṃ khalvidaṃ brahma "All is Brahman".

The Upaniṣads speak of jīvas separately (pratyekam) - each with distinct karmic journeys, bodies, and experiences. So the experience of difference is real at the empirical level (vyāvahārika), even though ultimately there is only one Brahman. In Advaita, bheda (difference) is not absolute, but it operates within māyā until realization dissolves it.

अपि चैवमेके ॥ ३.२.१३॥

api caivameke || 3.2.13 ||

Moreover some teach thus.

अरूपवदेव हि तत्प्रधानत्वात् ॥ ३.२.१४॥

arūpavadeva hi tatpradhānatvāt || 3.2.14 ||

It (the Self) is indeed like the formless, because That (Brahman) is the essential (pradhāna) nature.

The true nature of the Self (ātman) is formless (arūpa). Brahman is the pradhāna-tattva, the substratum — and that substratum is arūpa, hence, the jīva in essence is formless.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.15 - aśabdam asparśam arūpamavyayaṃ tathā'rasaṃ nityamagandhavacca yat | anādyanantaṃ mahataḥ paraṃ dhruvaṃ nicāyya tanmṛtyumukhāt pramucyate || "Having realised Ātman, which is soundless, intangible, formless, undecaying and likewise tasteless, eternal and odourless; having realised That which is without beginning and end, beyond the Great and unchanging-one is freed from the jaws of death."

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.1.8 - na cakṣuṣā gṛhyate nāpi vācā
nānyairdevaistapasā karmaṇa vā | jñānaprasādena viśuddhasattva-statastu taṃ paśyate niṣkalaṃ dhyāyamānaḥ ||
"Brahman is not grasped by the eye, nor by speech, nor by the other senses, nor by penance or good works. A man becomes pure through serenity of intellect; thereupon, in meditation, he beholds Him who is without parts."

Not that the jīva has no existence, but that its true existence is not definable by form. In most lower states, jīva mistakes itself as form. But from Turīya upward, jīva begins to see through the form and experience itself as arūpa - formless, pure, still awareness. In Turīyātīta-Turīyātīta, arūpa is not just understood - it is lived as reality.

प्रकाशवच्चावैयर्थ्यम् ॥ ३.२.१५॥

prakāśavaccāvaiyarthyam || 3.2.15 ||

And like light, (the Self's existence) is not without purpose.

The Self's formlessness does not make it useless or meaningless. On the contrary, like light (prakāśa) illuminates all things while not being touched by them. It is self-revealing and reveals all else. Therefore, even without form, the Self is not inactive or redundant - it is the substratum of all activity and awareness.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.10, Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.2.15 – na tatra sūryo bhāti na candratārakaṃ nemā vidyuto bhānti kuto'yamagniḥ | tameva bhāntamanubhāti sarvaṃ tasya bhāsā sarvamidaṃ vibhāti || "The sun does not shine there, nor the moon and the stars, nor these lightnings-not to speak of this fire. He shining, everything shines after Him. By His light all this is lighted."

आह च तन्मात्रम् ॥ ३.२.१६॥

āha ca tanmātram || 3.2.16 ||

And (the scripture) declares that (Brahman is) That (Self) only.

Upaniṣads themselves declare the Self or Brahman to be only That — i.e., tanmātra.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.1.2 - divyo hyamūrtaḥ puruṣaḥ sa bāhyābhyantaro hyajaḥ | aprāṇo hyamanāḥ śubhro hyakṣarāt parataḥ paraḥ || "He is the self-luminous and formless Puruṣa, uncreated and existing both within and without. He is devoid of prāṇa, devoid of mind, pure and higher than the supreme Imperishable."

When you drop everything you think you are - thoughts, emotions, identities, even divinity - what remains is tanmātra. That is you. That is Paramāśiva.

Tanmātram is the substratum of all dimensions. It is before length, before time, before cause. Everything arises from it and returns into it.

You are not a spark of Paramaśiva. You are not a part. You are tanmātra - That itself, undivided, unborn, untouched.

दर्शयति चाथोऽपि स्मर्यते ॥ ३.२.१७॥

darśayati cātho'pi smaryate || 3.2.17 ||

The Śruti shows this and it is also declared by the Smṛtis.

अत एव चोपमा सूर्यकादिवत् ॥ ३.२.१८॥

ata eva copamā sūryakādivat || 3.2.18 ||

Therefore also are the comparisons like the images of sun etc.

Just as the sun illuminates everything without being attached, appears to act (rising, setting) while remaining still, is self-luminous and also illuminates others, so too, the Self (ātman/Paramātmā) is arūpa (formless), prakāśavat (self-luminous), tanmātram (pure essence), yet it enables all cognition, action, and experience in the world.

अम्बुवदग्रहणात्तु न तथात्वम् ॥ ३.२.१९॥

ambuvadagrahaṇāttu na tathātvam || 3.2.19 ||

But (the Self) is not like that (i.e., not like water), because it is not apprehended (in the same way).

This sūtra qualifies and limits the analogy made in the previous sūtra (3.2.18) — where the sun (or light) was used as a metaphor for the Self's self-luminosity.

Now, a new analogy - water or mirror - might be proposed, because a water surface can reflect, like consciousness reflects objects. But this sūtra rejects that analogy. It is because water needs to be grasped by the senses to be known. But the Self is not known by sensory perception - it is self-revealed, not objectified. So, na tathātvam - the Self is not like water, because it is not apprehended through sense-knowledge.

वृद्धिह्रासभाक्त्वमन्तर्भावात् उभयसामञ्जस्यादेवम् ॥ ३.२.२०॥

vṛddhihrāsabhāktvamantarbhāvāt ubhayasāmañjasyādevam || 3.2.20 ||

(The Self) shares in growth and decline (vṛddhi-hrāsa) due to inclusion (in the body); but this is so only for the sake of consistency of both (body and Self).

Because of association with the body, the Self appears to undergo vṛddhi (growth) and hrāsa (decay).

But in reality, the Self itself is changeless - it merely appears to participate in change due to mutual superimposition (adhyāsa).

ajo nityaḥ śāśvato'yaṃ purāṇo na hanyate hanyamāne śarīre "Unborn, Eternal, Changeless and Ancient, He is not killed when the body is killed."

Paramādvaita clarifies that these changes (vṛddhi and hrāsa) belong to the upādhi (body, mind, memory). The Self is tanmātra - That alone, formless, changeless, eternal. Only for interaction in the world (vyāvahāra), a seeming participation in growth/decay is attributed to preserve worldly sāmañjasyam.

दर्शनाच्च ॥ ३.२.२१॥

darśanācca || 3.2.21 ||

And (this is so) because it is seen (or taught in scripture).

The scriptures themselves show instances where the Self is spoken of as if undergoing change, but always point beyond it. In jāgrat and svapna, jīva sees itself changing. In Turīya, jīva begins to see that all change is in objects, not in the witnessing Self. In Turīyātīta, jīva realizes, 'I never changed - I only watched.'

प्रकृतैतावत्त्वं हि प्रतिषेधति ततो ब्रवीति च भूयः ॥ ३.२.२२॥

prakṛtaitāvattvaṃ hi pratiṣedhati tato bravīti ca bhūyaḥ || 3.2.22 ||

Because the previously discussed Self is denied to be limited (etāvattvam), therefore (the śruti) declares it as greater (bhūyaḥ).

In jāgrat, jīva says: 'I am this body' - etāvattvam. In svapna, jīva says, 'I am a dream identity' - still limited. In Turīya, jīva glimpses its boundarylessness. In Turīyātīta, jīva fully abides in bhūyaḥ - infinite, beyond, uncontained Self.

The Self is not limited (etāvattvam), because the Upaniṣads negate all limitation and declare the Self to be greater (bhūyaḥ) than all such definitions.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 7.24.1 - yatra nānyatpaśyati nānyacchṛṇoti nānyadvijānāti sa bhūmātha yatrānyatpaśyatyanyacchṛṇotyanyadvijānāti tadalpaṃ yo vai bhūmā tadamṛtamatha yadalpaṃ tanmartyṃ sa bhagavaḥ kasminpratiṣṭhita iti sve mahimni yadi vā na mahimnīti || 7.24.1 || "'Bhūmā [the infinite] is that in which one sees nothing else, hears nothing else, and knows [i.e., finds] nothing else. Nārada asked, 'Sir,

प्रकाशवच्चावैशेष्यं प्रकाशश्च कर्मण्यभ्यासात् ॥ ३.२.२५॥

prakāśavaccāvaiśeṣyaṃ prakāśaśca karmaṇyabhyāsāt || 3.2.25 ||

Like light etc there is no difference between Brahman (and its manifestation) in activity; on account of repeated instruction.

This sūtra reconciles the apparent contradiction between the unchanging, non-dual nature of the Self and the diverse experiences and karmic effects seen among jīvas.

The Self is like light just as light is essentially the same (sunlight is uniform), but when passing through different mediums (colored glass), it appears different. Like that light, the essential Self is undifferentiated, nirguṇa. But it appears to function differently due to association with different karmas and bodies (repeated patterns), just as light appears different through varying lenses.

This sūtra shows why jīvas seem different, without contradicting the oneness of Self. Because light does not act, yet all actions are seen by it. Light doesn't choose its form - it's the medium that defines how it appears. Similarly, the Self doesn't choose karma - karma chooses the lens, which makes the jīva look individual.

Rigveda 1.164.46 - ekam sat viprā bahudhā vadanti "Satya or truth is one, rishis or sages call it by various ways or names."

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.2.15 - tameva bhāntamanubhāti sarvaṃ tasya bhāsā sarvamidaṃ vibhāti "He shining, everything shines after Him. By His light all this is lighted."

अतोऽनन्तेन तथा हि लिङ्गम् ॥ ३.२.२७॥

ato'nantena tathā hi liṅgam || 3.2.26 ||

Therefore, by the Infinite (Self), for thus (is shown) the indication (in śruti).

This sūtra reaffirms and concludes the earlier arguments that the Self is not finite, not limited by body or karma but It is the infinite (ananta) and this is clearly indicated (liṅgam) in śruti. Even though the jīva appears limited, this is not its true nature. Therefore, the limitations are upādhi-based illusions, and Brahman is the infinite substratum of all.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 7.24.1 - yatra nānyatpaśyati nānyacchṛṇoti nānyadvijānāti sa bhūmātha yatrānyatpaśyatyanyacchṛṇot yanyadvijānāti tadalpaṃ yo vai bhūmā tadamṛtamatha yadalpaṃ tanmartyṃ sa bhagavaḥ kasminpratiṣṭhita iti sve mahimni yadi vā na mahimnīti || "'Bhūmā [the infinite] is that in which one sees nothing else, hears nothing else, and knows [i.e., finds] nothing else. But alpa [the finite] is that in which one sees something else, hears something else, and knows something else. That which is infinite is immortal, and that which is finite is mortal.' Nārada asked, 'Sir, what does bhūmā rest on?' Sanatkumāra replied, 'It rests on its own power—or not even on that power [i.e., it depends on nothing else]'."

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.11- brahmaivedamamṛtaṃ purastād brahma paścād brahma dakṣiṇataścottareṇa | adhaścordhvaṃ ca prasṛtaṃ brahmaivedaṃ viśvamidaṃ variṣṭham || "That immortal Brahman alone is before, that Brahman is behind, that Brahman is to the right and left. Brahman alone pervades everything above and below; this universe is that Supreme Brahman alone."

The jīva, jagat, and Īśvara are all simultaneous, spontaneous, synergistic expressions of the ananta tattva - the unbroken infinite Being - Paramāśiva.

The Upaniṣads give direct liṅga (signs) that support that the jīva appears limited in lower states (bound by body, mind, karma). But as awareness rises, the finite melts into ananta. In Turīyātīta-Turīyātīta, the experience becomes, "I was never limited. I was always the Infinite appearing as a person."

उभयव्यपदेशात्तु अहिकुण्डलवत् ॥ ३.२.२७ ॥

ubhayavyapadeśāttu ahikuṇḍalavat || 3.2.27 ||

But since both difference and non-difference are mentioned, the relationship (between the supreme Self and the individual is) as that between the snake and its coil.

This sūtra resolves a fundamental apparent contradiction in the Upaniṣads that sometimes jīva is described as different from Brahman and other times jīva is declared as non-different from Brahman (e.g., tat tvam asi).

Like a snake appearing as coiled, the coiling and the snake are not two entities, but two states or perspectives of one and the same being. Similarly, jīva and Brahman are not two - the distinction is upādhi-bheda (due to adjuncts like body-mind). Jīva is not essentially different from Brahman, just appearing different because of karmic positioning and sensory contraction. Like a snake that appears as a coil the coiling doesn't make it not a snake, so too jīva appears as an individual but is truly the uncoiled, unbroken, infinite Paramāśiva.

In most states (jāgrat, svapna, etc.), jīva thinks it is a coil - small, wound up, bound. In Turīya, it realizes the coiling is only apparent. In Turīyātīta, the jīva completely experiences its formless, uncoiled, infinite Self - as Paramāśiva. In most states (jāgrat, svapna, etc.), jīva thinks it is a coil - small, wound up, bound. In Turīya, it realizes the coiling is only apparent. In Turīyātīta, the jīva completely experiences its formless, uncoiled, infinite Self - as Paramāśiva.

The jīva appears to occupy limited dimensions, but the truth is: it pervades all dimensions as the same unchanging Consciousness.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.9.4 - sa ya eṣo'ṇimaitadātmyamidaṃ sarvaṃ tatsatyaṃ sa ātmā tattvamasi śvetaketo iti bhūya eva mā bhagavānvijñāpayatviti tathā somyeti hovāca || "'That which is the subtlest of all is the Self of all this. प्रकाशाश्रयवद्वा तेजस्त्वात् ॥ ३.२.२८॥

prakāśāśrayavadvā tejastvāt || 3.2.28 ||

Or they are like light and its source, both being luminous.

The Self (jīva) is like the substratum (āśraya) of light (prakāśa) - the support of luminosity because its nature is tejas - pure radiant consciousness, it is self-luminous (svayaṃprakāśa) and also enables the illumination of all things. So, even though jīva appears individual, its true nature is the substratum of all illumination - Brahman.

Mundaka Upaniṣad (2.1.1) – यथा सुदीप्तात्पावकाद्विस्फुलिङ्गाः सहस्रशः प्रभवन्ते सरूपाः । तथाऽक्षराद्विविधाः सोम्य भावाः प्रजायन्ते तत्र चैवापि यन्ति ॥ Just as sparks arise from a blazing fire, so do various beings come forth from the imperishable Brahman and unto Him again return.

When Paramaśiva is dancing, small fire particles fly out of the huge fire column and that is creation. The flying of the fire particles is sustenance. Fire particle feeling it is going to be put off is rejuvenation or destruction. efore the destruction going here and there is delusion. Finally fire particle being pulled back into the fire column is liberation.

पूर्ववद्वा ॥ ३.२.२९॥

pūrvavadvā || 3.2.29 ||

Or (the relationship between the individual and the supreme Self is) as before (shown).

This sūtra wraps up the sequence of analogies explaining the true relationship between jīva and Brahman (3.2.27–28), such as ahikuṇḍala-vat – jīva is like a coiled snake: appearance of difference but essential unity and prakāśāśrayavat – jīva is the substratum of illumination, same as Brahman in essence.

Now, this sūtra says that if not the previous analogies, take it just as explained earlier (pūrvavat) - in the way it was logically and scripturally established that jīva is none other than Brahman and the apparent difference is due to upādhi (adjuncts) and the real difference doesn't exist. So, jīva and Brahman are one, and all duality is superimposed appearance.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.20 - aṇoraṇīyānmahato mahīyānātmā'sya jantornihito guhāyām "Ātman, smaller than the small, greater than the great, is hidden in the hearts of all living creatures."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.9.4 - sa ya eṣo'ṇimaitadātmyamidaṃ sarvaṃ tatsatyaṃ sa ātmā tattvamasi śvetaketo iti bhūya eva mā bhagavānvijñāpayatviti tathā somyeti hovāca || "'That which is the subtlest of all is the Self of all this. It is the Truth. It is the Self. That thou art, O Śvetaketu.' [Śvetaketu then said,] 'Sir, please explain this to me again.' 'Yes, Somya, I will explain it again,' replied his father."

In the lower states, you need examples, symbols, logic to untangle identity. But in higher states (Turīya, Turīyātīta), the analogies dissolve, and only direct experience remains. You simply know, "I am not this. I am That."

प्रतिषेधाच्च ॥ ३.२.३०॥

pratiṣedhācca || 3.2.30 ||

And on account of the denial.

This sūtra concludes the discussion of jīva–Brahman identity. While earlier sūtras used analogies (coiled snake, lamp of light, etc.), this sūtra simply restates the foundational truth. Scriptures directly negate all duality and distinction between jīva and Brahman.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1 - Sad eva somya idam agra āsīt "Being alone was there before creation)."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.15.1 - na ca punaḥ āvartate "and he does not return"

This shows that Brahman (Being) is the real cause of everything.

परमतस्सेतून् मानसंबन्ध भेदव्यपदेशेभ्यः ॥ ३.२.३१॥

paramatah setūnmānasaṃbandha bhedavyapadeśebhyaḥ || 3.2.31 ||

According to the opponent, (the Self is like a) bridge due to scriptural statements about measure, relationship, and difference.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.5.1 - atha ya ātmā sa seturdhṛtireṣāṃ lokānāmasaṃbhedāya naitaṃ setumahorātre tarato na jarā na mṛtyurna śoko na sukṛtaṃ na duṣkṛtaṃ sarve pāpmāno'to nivartante'pahatapāpmā hyeṣa brahmalokaḥ || 8.4.1 ||

Next, this Self is like a dam. It supports the worlds and protects them from getting mixed up. Day and night cannot cross over this dam, nor can old age, death, bereavement, good actions, and bad actions. All sins turn away from it, for this Brahmaloka is free from evil.

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra is not a conclusion – it is a mirror showing how delusion arises from misinterpreting śruti. Setu is not a real ontological bridge. The Self is not a connecting entity - it is the underlying Oneness that appears as jīva, jagat, and Īśvara. But, to the intellect, the idea of relation, path, bridge seems logical. So śruti uses that language, just like one teaches a child in stages. In early states, you feel, "I need to cross the bridge to God. I need to attain connection." But by Turīya, you realize, "I am not crossing to Brahman - I am Brahman."

सामान्यात्तु ॥ ३.२.३२॥

sāmānyāttu || 3.2.32 ||

But (the Self is referred to as a bridge) on account of similarity.

This sūtra directly refutes the dualistic view proposed in 3.2.31 - that the Self is a "bridge" between jīva and Brahman, implying real separateness or dual existence.

The word "setu" (bridge) and other such metaphors are instructional, not ontological. They are used to aid the limited intellect, not to declare the Self as distinct or relational. Non-duality (advaita) is the paramārthika satya (absolute truth). Any duality presented is at best vyāvahārika satya (pragmatic/teaching level).

Even the idea of mokṣa is just general instruction (sāmānya). You are Paramāśiva already. The only thing 'bridging' you from that is the belief that there's a bridge.

बुद्ध्यर्थः पादवत् ॥ ३.२.३३॥

buddhyarthaḥ pādavat || 3.2.33 ||

For the sake of easy comprehension (Brahman's magnitude is spoken of) just like the feet.

This sūtra continues the clarification from the previous two: when the Upaniṣads describe Brahman or the Self in figurative, embodied, or relational ways, it is only for the sake of buddhi (intellect) - not because Brahman has real parts or distinctions.

Scriptures say: "Brahman is the head of this, the feet of that..." - describing Brahman as if it were a person with limbs. These are not literal - they are conceptual aids, like calling something 'the foot of a mountain'. Hence, "pādavat" - like a foot - means metaphorical, not ontological.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.12 - eṣa sarveṣu bhūteṣu gūḍho"tmā na prakāśate dṛśyate tvagryayā buddhyā sūkṣmayā sūkṣmadarśibhiḥ "That Self hidden in all beings does not shine forth; but It is seen by subtle seers through their one-pointed and subtle intellects."

In Paramādvaita, all descriptions of part-hood, limbs, functions, or locations are spoken to guide your cognition, not to define the nature of the Self.

Just as you might say "the sun rises" - not because the sun moves, but because that's how it appears - the buddhyarthaḥ descriptions of Brahman are perceptual aids, not Truth statements.

Descriptions of Brahman using parts or form (like a foot) are for the sake of intellect (buddhyarthaḥ), not because Brahman is actually divided.

स्थानविशेषात्प्रकाशादिवत् ॥ ३.२.३४॥

sthānaviśeṣātprakāśādivat || 3.2.34 ||

(The Self remains unaffected) due to the distinction in location, like light and such.

Light pervades everything in a room, including a filthy place, but is never tainted by the dirt. Fire heats, but doesn't absorb the qualities of what it touches. Similarly, Brahman shines through all, but remains untouched.

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra answers the great confusion of the jīva: "If I am Paramāśiva, why do I suffer? Why do I feel pain, ignorance, bondage?"

This sūtra responds:

You appear located in this mind-body system (sthānaviśeṣa). You shine through it like light in a house. But your essential nature is untouched - never bound, never affected.

Bhagavad Gītā 13.33 – yathā sarvagataṃ saukṣmyād ākāśaṃ nopalipyate "As space pervades all and is untouched, so is the Self."

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.11 - brahmaivedamamṛtaṃ purastād brahma paścād brahma dakṣiṇataścottareṇa . adhaścordhvaṃ ca prasṛtaṃ brahmaivedaṃ viśvamidaṃ variṣṭham || "That immortal Brahman alone is before, that Brahman is behind, that Brahman is to the right and left. Brahman alone pervades everything above and below; this universe is that Supreme Brahman alone."

In Paramādvaita, one Paramaśiva reflects through every being uniquely because of their inner space. Your inner space creates the lens. But the source light is one.

Light (prakāśa) is one, but appears different based on the medium (glass, smoke, water) and location (room, cave, lamp). In the same way, Consciousness is One, but appears diverse, as different jīvas, with different knowledge, behavior, karma.

The appearance of many selves is due to varied limiting adjuncts - not real division. Just like one light appears different based on place, the ātman seems many, but is ever One.

उपपत्तेश्च ॥ ३.२.३५॥

upapatteśca || 3.2.35 ||

And because it is reasonable (logically consistent).

This sūtra reinforces the prior conclusion — that Brahman, though appearing present in all bodies and minds, remains unaffected, just as light remains untouched by what it illuminates (as in 3.2.34).

Bhagavad Gītā 5.13 - sarvakarmāṇi manasā saṃnyasyāste sukhaṃ vaśī | navadvāre pure dehī naiva kurvanna kārayan || "Mentally renouncing all actions and fully self-controlled, the embodied one rests happily in the nine-gate city neither acting nor causing others (body and senses) to act."

If you just unclutch and look, the truth that you are Paramāśiva will shine, and it will make sense to you deeply.

When you unclutch, stop identifying, and simply observe that you are not the thought, not the pain, not the bondage; what remains is Paramāśiva — and it feels right, is experientially valid, and is logically necessary.

तथाऽन्यप्रतिषेधात् ॥ ३.२.३६॥

tathā'nyapratiṣedhāt || 3.2.36 ||

Thus (the Self remains unaffected), due to the denial of the involvement of anything else.

This sūtra reinforces the previous ones (especially 3.2.34 and 3.2.35), establishing that: Brahman is untouched by action, suffering, or limitation, despite being present everywhere. This is supported not only by logic (upapatti), but also by the explicit denial (pratiṣedha) in śruti of Brahman being the doer (kartā) or experiencer (bhoktā).

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra confirms that separateness (anya-bhāva) is never ontologically real. Paramāśiva doesn't act on the world. He is the world and yet remains untouched, because there is no otherness, there is no second being to cause, be caused, or suffer.

अनेन सर्वगतत्वमायामयशब्दादिभ्यः ॥ ३.२.३७॥

anena sarvagata tvamāyāmaya śabdādibhyaḥ || 3.2.37 ||

By this (is established) the all-pervadingness (of Brahman), as is known from scriptural statements.

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra confirms that the illusion of location, distance, or access to Brahman is unnecessary. From the point of mokṣa, jīva, jagat, and Īśvara are not different things, but simultaneous, spontaneous, synergistic expressions of that sarvagata Self.

These are scriptural phrases that imply expansion, infinity, omnipresence, such as:

vāsudevaḥ sarvam iti (Bhagavad Gītā 7.19)

puruṣa evedaṃ sarvam (Ṛg Veda)

sarvaṃ khalvidaṃ brahma (Chāndogya 3.14.1)

Thus, the all-pervasiveness of the Self is confirmed by both reasoning and scriptural phrases like 'extension' (āyāma) and others.

फलमत उपपत्तेः ॥ ३.२.३८॥

phalamata upapatteḥ || 3.2.38 ||

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.1.1 - dvā suparṇā sayujā sakhāyā samānaṃ vṛkṣaṃ pariṣasvajāte | tayoranyaḥ pippalaṃ svādvattyanaśnannanyo abhicākaśīti || "Two birds, united always and known by the same name, closely cling to the same tree. One of them eats the sweet fruit; the other looks on without eating.

Bhagavad Gītā 2.47 - karmaṇyevādhikāraste mā phaleṣu kadācana | mā karmaphalaheturbhūrmā te saṅgo'stvakarmaṇi || "Thy right is to work only, but never to its fruits; let not the fruit-of-action be thy motive, nor let thy attachment be to inaction."

Better is death in ones own duty ; the duty of another is fraught with fear (is productive of positive danger)."

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 1.11.1 - dharmaṃ cara "Do your duty".

सर्ववेदान्तप्रत्ययं चोदनाद्यविशेषात् ॥ ३.३.१॥

sarvavedāntapratyayaṃ codanādyaviśeṣāt || 3.3.1 ||

The meditative realization (pratyayam) of all Vedantic teachings (sarvavedānta) is the same, due to the non-difference (aviśeṣāt) in their injunctions and associated aspects (codanādy).

The third adhyāya (Sādhana Adhyāya) of the Brahma Sūtras focuses on spiritual practices for liberation. Section 3.3 examines whether upāsanās described in different Upaniṣads are distinct or identical. This sūtra concludes that they are fundamentally the same because their injunctions (codanā) and purposes are non-different (aviśeṣāt).

Chandogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7 - sa ya eṣo'ṇimaitadātmyamidaṃ sarvaṃ tatsatyaṃ sa ātmā tattvamasi śvetaketo iti bhūya eva mā bhagavānvijñāpayatviti tathā somyeti hovāca || 6.8.7 || 'That which is the subtlest of all is the Self of all this. It is the Truth. It is the Self. That thou art, O Śvetaketu' [Śvetaketu then said,] 'Sir, please explain this to me again.' 'Yes, Somya, I will explain again,' replied his father.

Brihadaranyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10 - Aham Brahmasmi "I am Brahman."

As per Paramādvaita, the inherent Oneness in Existence is explained in this sūtra.

The Brahma Sūtras are a roadmap to mokṣa anubhūti (experiential liberation). This sūtra aligns with the Paramādvaita principle that all Upaniṣadic practices lead to the same state: turīyatīta-turīyatīta, where jīva, īśvara, and jagat are realized as Paramāśiva's playful expressions. The sūtra's focus on non-difference (aviśeṣāt) reflects the unity of all paths to this realization.

The meditative realization is the experiential understanding of Paramāśiva as the source of jīva, īśvara, and jagat. From the jīva's perspective, this occurs through the 25 states of consciousness, culminating in turīyatīta-turīyatīta. From the mokṣa-centric view, this pratyayam is the direct experience of oneness with Paramāśiva, where all distinctions vanish.

The non-difference in injunctions signifies that all Upaniṣadic practices—whether jñāna (knowledge), bhakti (devotion), or vijñāna (cosmic understanding)—awaken the jīva to its identity as Paramāśiva. These codanās are initiations (dīkṣā) into superconscious states, enabling the jīva to transcend separateness. The non-difference reflects Paramāśiva's singular reality underlying all practices.

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous expressions of Paramāśiva, never truly separate (tadaikṣata bahu syāṃ - Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.3). Mokṣa is the jīva's realization of this eternal oneness, resting in the nithya mukta (eternally liberated) state. The sūtra's unified meditative outcome guides the jīva to this truth.

The jīva's journey through 25 states of consciousness spans the spectrum from waking to turīyatīta. Upaniṣadic meditations guide the jīva through these, revealing that īśvara and jagat are within its consciousness. This supports the sūtra's assertion of a singular meditative goal.

From īśvara's (Paramāśiva's) view, jagat is divine (Ganga as Ganga Devī, Aruṇācala as Paramāśiva). Meditative practices align the jīva with this truth, enabling it to perceive jagat as Paramāśiva's manifestation.

From the jagat's view, īśvara is the highest space (Kailāsa), and jīva is a spark of Paramāśiva navigating vertical time zones. The sūtra's unified practices help the jīva align with the cosmos, realizing the cosmic oneness.

THE SPH BHAGAVĀN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM has revived the science of kāyākalpa, where meditative practices awaken superconsciousness, transforming the jīva's physical and subtle bodies. The unity of Vedāntic upāsanās ensures consistent access to higher states, enabling the jīva to embody Paramāśiva's powers and achieve longevity or liberation.

Chandogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1 – sadeva somyedamagra āsīdekamevādvitīyam | taddhaika āhurasadevedamagra āsīdekamevādvitīyaṃ tasmādasataḥ sajjāyata || 6.2.1 || "Somya, before this world was manifest there was only existence, one without a second. On this subject, some maintain that before this world was manifest there was only non-existence, one without a second. Out of that non-existence, existence emerged."

Īśavāsya Upaniṣad 1- īśā vāsyam idaṃ sarvam" (All this is pervaded by the Lord). This underscores Paramāśiva's pervasion of jīva and jagat, realized through non-different upāsanās.

भेदान्नेति चेदेकस्यामपि ॥ ३.३.२॥

bhedānneti cedekasyāmapi || 3.3.2 ||

If it is said that (the meditative realization is different) due to differences (in upāsanās), (we reply) not so, even in a single (Upaniṣad or meditation).

For example, the panchāgni-vidyā (meditation on the five fires) is taught with slight variations in the Chāndogya and Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣads. Despite differences in symbolism or sequence, the core idea (pratyaya) is identical.

Paramādvaita views the sūtra as affirming that all upāsanās lead to turīyatīta-turīyatīta, where jīva, īśvara, and jagat are realized as Paramāśiva's expressions. The negation of differences (bhedāt na) reflects the unity of practices, guiding the jīva through 25 states of consciousness to nithya mukta. From īśvara's view, jagat is divine; from jagat's view, īśvara is the highest space. Upāsanās, empowered by dīkṣā, support kāyākalpa, transforming the jīva's DNA to embody Paramāśiva's sat-cit-ānanda.

In refutes the notion that differences in Upaniṣadic upāsanās imply distinct results, affirming their unified realization of Brahman/Paramāśiva. In Advaita Vedānta, this is the jīva's liberation from māyā. In Paramādvaita, it is the experiential mokṣa of turīyatīta-turīyatīta, supported by kāyākalpa.

स्वाध्यायस्य तथात्वेन हि समाचारेऽधिकाराच्च ॥ ३.३.३॥

svādhyāyasya tathātvena hi samācāre'dhikārācca || 3.3.3 ||

The practice of svādhyāya is indeed such in its nature, because of its role in traditional practice and due to the eligibility.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 1.9.1 - svādhyāyapraśaṃsā ṛtaṃ ca svādhyāyapravacane ca | "The practice of what is right and proper as fixed by the scriptural texts is to be done along with the reading the texts oneself and propagating the truths of the same."

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 1.11.1 - svādhyāyapravacanābhyāṃ na pramaditavyam - "Never neglect the study and the propagation of the Vedas."

Bhagavad Gītā 15.15 - vedaiś ca sarvair aham eva vedyaḥ - "Through all the Vedas, I alone am to be known."

Paramādvaita interprets svādhyāya as a superconscious practice, aligning the jīva with Paramāśiva's sat-cit-ānanda through the 25 states of consciousness. Supported by dīkṣā, svādhyāya ensures eligibility (adhikāra) and consistency (samācāra), guiding the jīva to turīyatīta-turīyatīta. From īśvara's view, jagat is divine; from jagat's view, īśvara is Kailāsa. Svādhyāya supports kāyākalpa, transforming the jīva's DNA to embody Paramāśiva's powers.

Brahma Sūtra 3.3.3 underscores svādhyāya's role in unifying upāsanās, ensuring eligibility and consistency for realizing Brahman/Paramāśiva. In Advaita, it leads to jīva's oneness with Brahman. In Paramādvaita, it facilitates mokṣa anubhūti in turīyatīta-turīyatīta, supported by kāyākalpa's superconscious transformation.

दर्शयति च ॥ ३.३.४॥

darśayati ca || 3.3.4 ||

Moreover, (the scripture) also instructs thus.

उपसंहारोऽर्थाभेदाद्विधिशेषवत्समाने च ॥ ३.३.५॥

upasaṃhāro'rthābhedādvidhiśeṣavatsamāne ca || 3.3.5 ||

The combination (of upāsanās) is (possible) due to non-difference in their purpose (arthābhēdāt), like specific injunctions (vidhiśeṣavat), and when there is identity (samāne).

In section 3.3 of the Sādhana Adhyāya, sūtras 3.3.1–3.3.4 established that all Vedāntic upāsanās yield the same realization of Brahman (3.3.1), differences do not imply distinct results (3.3.2), svādhyāya ensures eligibility and consistency (3.3.3), and the Upaniṣads validate this unity (3.3.4). Sūtra 3.3.5 argues that upāsanās described in different Upaniṣads can be combined into a single meditative practice because they share the same purpose (arthābhēdāt) and object (samāne), similar to how specific Hindu injunctions are unified.

This sūtra facilitates flexibility in spiritual practice, allowing practitioners to integrate upāsanās from different Upaniṣads without contradiction, as long as they focus on Brahman. It reinforces the Advaitic goal of mokṣa through jñāna, dissolving the illusory distinctions of jīva, īśvara, and jagat.

Paramādvaita perspective views the Brahma Sūtras as a practical guide to mokṣa anubhūti (experiential liberation), perceiving jīva, īśvara, and jagat as simultaneous, spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva. Sūtra 3.3.5 is interpreted as affirming that upāsanās can be combined because they share the same purpose - realizing Paramaśiva in the turīyatīta-turīyatīta state - guided by the Upaniṣads and dīkṣā.

From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, upāsanās like tat tvam asi or satyam jñānam anantam converge on turīyatīta-turīyatīta.

From the mokṣa-centric view, this synthesis reflects Paramaśiva's eternal oneness.

The comparison to specific injunctions (vidhiśeṣavat) indicates that, like Hindu rituals unified by a common goal, upāsanās are combined due to their shared focus on Paramaśiva. This synthesis is empowered by dīkṣā, which aligns the jīva's practice with the guru's transmission.

In Paramādvaita, whether meditating on Paramaśiva as the Self or the cosmos, the realization is the same: nithya mukta (eternal liberation).

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous expressions of Paramaśiva. The sūtra's allowance for combining upāsanās ensures that all practices lead to this experiential oneness.

Upāsanās guide the jīva through the 25 states, from waking to turīyatīta. Their combination enhances this journey, revealing īśvara and jagat as Paramaśiva's manifestations within the jīva's consciousness.

From īśvara's (Paramaśiva's) view, jagat is divine (Gaṅgā as Gaṅgā Devī, Aruṇācala as Paramaśiva). Combining upāsanās aligns the jīva with this vision, unifying its perception.

From the jagat's view, īśvara is the highest space (Kailāsa), and jīva is a spark of Paramaśiva.

अन्यथात्वं च शब्दादिति चेन्नाविशेषात् ॥ ३.३.६॥

anyathātvaṃ ca śabdāditi cennāviśeṣāt || 3.3.6 ||

If it is said that there is difference (in upāsanās) due to scripture, (we reply) no, because of non-difference (in their essence).

Following sūtras 3.3.1–3.3.5, which established the unity, eligibility, scriptural validation, and combinability of upāsanās, sūtra 3.3.6 addresses an objection that differences in Upaniṣadic descriptions (śabdāt) suggest varied results. Paramādvaita sees this as a clarification that all upāsanās, despite linguistic variations, lead to Paramaśiva's oneness, empowered by dīkṣā and superconscious practice.

The opponent's view (iti cet) is that upāsanās differ (anyathātvam) due to varied Upaniṣadic descriptions (śabdāt) - e.g., Paramaśiva as the Self (tat tvam asi) or the infinite (satyam jñānam anantam). From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, these variations might seem significant, suggesting different outcomes.

The sūtra refutes this (na) because there is no essential difference (aviśeṣāt) in the object of meditation - Paramaśiva. All upāsanās lead to turīyatīta-turīyatīta, where īśvara and jagat are realized as states of the jīva's consciousness. From the mokṣa-centric view, scriptural differences are Paramaśiva's playful expressions, guiding the jīva to eternal oneness (nithya mukta).

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva. The sūtra's negation of differences ensures that all upāsanās align the jīva with this truth, regardless of scriptural wording.

Upaniṣadic upāsanās, despite varied descriptions, guide the jīva through the 25 states, revealing īśvara and jagat as Paramaśiva's expressions. The sūtra's emphasis on non-difference (aviśeṣāt) keeps the focus on this unified goal.

From īśvara's (Paramaśiva's) view, jagat is divine. Scriptural differences (śabdāt) are Paramaśiva's expressions, unified in upāsanās to align the jīva with this vision.

From the jagat's view, īśvara is the highest space (Kailāsa), and jīva is a spark of Paramaśiva. The sūtra's non-difference ensures alignment with cosmic unity

The 25 states of consciousness and kāyākalpa framework make Upaniṣadic variations experiential, connecting them to superconscious transformation.

न वा प्रकरणभेदात्परोवरीयस्त्वादिवत् ॥ ३.३.७॥

na vā prakaraṇabhedātparovarīyastvādivat || 3.3.7 ||

Or, (it is) not (so) due to differences in context, like (the case of) superiority or inferiority, etc.

Here, Bādarāyaṇa says: Not always. If the context (prakaraṇa) and focus of meditation are different, even if similar words are used - then the meditations are not the same, and should be treated separately.

Example: Two meditations on prāṇa: One focuses on prāṇa as the supreme cosmic controller (para) and another focuses on prāṇa as the vital air in the body (avarīyas). Though both use the term prāṇa, they have different pratyayas (core ideas), and different results. So, just as para (higher) and avarīyas (lower) upāsanās differ, the meditations with different focus/context are not to be combined.

Words may be same but if your cognition is different, the path and result are different. What matters is where you are rooted, not what you chant.

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra teaches deep discernment: Not every practice that uses the same form or name is aiming at mokṣa. What determines whether a meditation is liberating is the pratyaya (cognition) it anchors in: Does it point to Oneness with Paramāśiva? Or does it reinforce separation, hierarchy, or form attachment?

So, if two meditations on prāṇa differ in goal - one aiming at realization, another at ritual gain - then they must be treated separately.

This is the difference between Jnānopāsanā (meditation grounded in liberation) and Kāmya Upāsanā (desire-based, ritualistic meditation).

The 25 states of consciousness and kāyākalpa framework make contextual variations experiential, connecting them to superconscious transformation.

संज्ञातश्चेत्तदुक्तमस्ति तु तदपि ॥ ३.३.८॥

saṃjñātaścettaduktamasti tu tadapi || 3.3.8 ||

If (it is said that differences in upāsanās arise) from their designation, that has been explained; but that (unity) exists even so.

Sūtra 3.3.8 counters an objection that differences in upāsanās stem from their distinct names or terminology (saṃjñātaḥ), asserting that this has already been addressed (taduktam) and the unity of upāsanās persists (asti tu tadapi).

An opponent might argue (saṃjñātaścet) that upāsanās differ because they are described with different names or designations in the Upaniṣads - e.g., meditating on Brahman as "Sat" (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1) versus "Ātman" (Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10). The sūtra responds that this objection has already been addressed (taduktam) in previous sūtras (e.g., 3.3.6, where differences were attributed to scriptural wording). The unity of upāsanās remains (asti tu tadapi) because their object—Brahman—is non-dual, and differences in terminology are superficial, arising from upādhis (limiting adjuncts). Thus, all upāsanās lead to the jīva's realization of oneness with Brahman.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1: "sad eva somya idam agra āsīt" (In the beginning, this was Sat alone). This uses the term "Sat" for Brahman, yet aims at the same non-dual reality.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10: "ahaṃ brahmāsmi" (I am Brahman). This uses "Brahman" or "Ātman," but targets the same realization.

Īśa Upaniṣad 1: "īśā vāsyam idaṃ sarvam" (All this is pervaded by the Lord). This underscores Brahman's pervasion, unifying upāsanās despite varied names.

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva. Paramādvaita emphasizes that terminological variations in upāsanās, when approached through dīkṣā, awaken the jīva's superconsciousness, aligning it with Paramaśiva's sat-cit-ānanda.

व्याप्तेश्च समञ्जसम् ॥ ३.३.९॥

vyāpteśca samañjasam || 3.3.9 ||

And due to (Brahman's) pervasiveness, (the unity of upāsanās) is proper.

Sūtra 3.3.9 reinforces that the unity of upāsanās is proper (samañjasam) because Brahman, their object, is all-pervading (vyāpteḥ), transcending all distinctions.

For example, whether meditating on Brahman as the Self (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7) or as the cosmic principle (ahaṃ brahmāsmi, Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10), the object is Brahman, which pervades all (īśā vāsyam idaṃ sarvam, Īśa Upaniṣad 1). This pervasion makes the unity of upāsanās logical and consistent (samañjasam), as Brahman cannot be fragmented. Thus, all upāsanās lead to the jīva's realization of oneness with Brahman, dissolving the illusory distinctions of īśvara and jagat.

In Paramādvaita perspective, the unity of upāsanās is proper due to Paramaśiva's all-pervading nature, guiding the jīva to the turīyatīta-turīyatīta state.

From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, upāsanās like tat tvam asi or satyam jñānam anantam converge on turīyatīta-turīyatīta.

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva.

Paramaśiva's pervasiveness enables upāsanās to awaken superconsciousness, transforming the jīva's physical and subtle bodies.

सर्वाभेदादन्यत्रेमे ॥ ३.३.१०॥

sarvābhedādanyatreme || 3.3.10 ||

Due to non-difference in all respects, these (upāsanās are unified), but elsewhere (differences may exist).

Bhagavad Gītā 15.15 - vedaiś ca sarvair aham eva vedyaḥ - "All Hindu teachings point to one realization."

Sūtra 3.3.10 specifies that certain upāsanās (ime) are unified because their object – Brahman - is non-different in all respects (sarvābhedāt), but in other cases (anyatra), such as upāsanās with distinct attributes or purposes, differences may persist.

This sūtra clarifies the scope of unity among upāsanās, ensuring practitioners focus on the non-dual essence of Brahman for mokṣa, while acknowledging that other upāsanās with distinct goals or attributes may differ.

From the mokṣa-centric view, Paramaśiva's non-difference ensures that these upāsanās lead to nithya mukta (eternal liberation). In other cases (anyatra), such as upāsanās on Paramaśiva with attributes (e.g., as Śiva with form) or those aimed at material goals, differences in purpose or form may persist. These are valid but do not lead to the non-dual realization of turīyatīta-turīyatīta.

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva.

Upāsanās targeting Paramaśiva's non-dual essence guide the jīva through the 25 states, revealing īśvara and jagat as Paramaśiva's expressions. The sūtra's focus on unity (sarvābhedāt) supports this journey.

When everything aligns - name, context, experience, purpose - then it is not a different path. It is the same doorway to Paramāśiva, spoken again.

आनन्दादयः प्रधानस्य ॥ ३.३.११॥

ānandādayaḥ pradhānasya || 3.3.11 ||

Bliss and other characteristics are of the principal entity (Brahman).

ānando brahmeti vyajānāt | ānandādhyeva khalvimāni bhūtāni jāyante . ānandena jātāni jīvanti | ānandaṃ prayantyabhisaṃviśantīti | "Bliss is Brahman; because it is from Bliss that all these beings are produced and by bliss do these beings live. They go to bliss on departing and become one with it."

Sūtra 3.3.11 begins a new topic, addressing the nature of Brahman as the object of upāsanās. It clarifies that attributes such as bliss, knowledge, and infinity, described in various Upaniṣads, are essential qualities of Brahman, the principal reality (pradhānasya), ensuring that meditations on these attributes target the same non-dual reality.

प्रियशिरस्त्वाद्यप्राप्तिरुपचयापचयौ हि भेदे ॥ ३.३.१२॥

priyaśirastvādyaprāptirupacayāpacayau hi bhede || 3.3.12 ||

The quality of having pleasure as its head and other (attributes) are not fully attained, for increase and decrease (of attributes) occur in differentiation.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.5.1 - tasya priyameva śiraḥ "Of him, love itself is the head"

The description of Paramaśiva's bliss as having "pleasure as its head" (priyaśirastva) and other attributes (ādi), as in the ānandamaya kośa, is a meditative tool. From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, such descriptions are not the full realization of Paramaśiva (aprāptiḥ), as they imply limitation. From the mokṣa-centric view, Paramaśiva's bliss is absolute Upāsanās on descriptive attributes guide the jīva through the 25 states, but full realization requires transcending gradations (bhede) to experience Paramaśiva's non-dual sat-cit-ānanda.

इतरे त्वर्थसामान्यात् ॥ ३.३.१३॥

itare tvarthasāmānyāt || 3.3.13 ||

But the others (attributes or upāsanās) are (unified) due to the commonality of meaning.

Other upāsanās or attributes (itare), such as meditating on Paramaśiva as consciousness or truth are unified due to their common purpose (arthasāmānyāt) of realizing Paramaśiva's non-dual reality. From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, these upāsanās converge on turīyatīta-turīyatīta, where īśvara and jagat are Paramaśiva's expressions. From the mokṣa-centric view, the shared goal is nithya mukta (eternal liberation).

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva. The sūtra ensures that all upāsanās align the jīva with this truth.

आध्यानाय प्रयोजनाभावात् ॥ ३.३.१४॥

ādhyānāya prayojanābhāvāt || 3.3.14 ||

(The different accounts are meant) for meditation, because there is no (other) specific purpose.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 1.1–1.10 has multiple meditations on prāṇa, speech, sun, etc but the purpose is to realize the Oneness.

Upāsanās must have the higher purpose (prayojana) of realizing Brahman/Paramaśiva's non-dual reality, as mere meditation (ādhyānāya) without this goal (prayojanābhāvāt) is ineffective for mokṣa.

आत्मशब्दाच्च ॥ ३.३.१५॥ ātmaśabdācca || 3.3.15 ||

And on account of the word 'Self'

The use of the same term — ātman (Self) — across various Upaniṣadic meditative contexts is further proof that these meditations refer to the same reality and are not different.

आत्मगृहीतिरितरवदुत्तरात् ॥ ३.३.१६॥

ātmagṛhītiritaravaduttarāt || 3.3.16 ||

The taking (of the object) as the Self is as in the other cases, because of what follows.

The texts explicitly identify the object of meditation as "Self" in later portions (uttara bhāga). This clarifies the intent.

Hence, there is no need to treat the meditation as distinct just because it started with a symbol (e.g. sun, prāṇa). Since the symbol is later revealed to be ātman, the meditation is on ātman, and thus identical to others with the same goal.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.3 - ātmānam rathinaṃ viddhi "Know the Ātman to be the master of the chariot".

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra reveals a core truth of spiritual integration that in the beginning, the seeker may meditate on external forms or phenomena (like the sun, speech, fire). But when the Guru or śruti reveals, "That is your Self," the form collapses into cognition of Oneness.

That shift from dualistic object to ātmagṛhīti (recognizing it as Self) is what makes the upāsanā liberating and one with others that have the same realization.

This is the heart of mokṣa-centric Paramādvaita.

अन्वयादिति चेत्स्यादवधारणात् ॥ ३.३.१७॥

anvayāditi cetsyādavadhāraṇāt || 3.3.17 ||

If it be said (that the object of meditation is derived) from association (with earlier sections), it might be so; but (it is not), because of a clear declaration (that the object is the Self).

All forms and contexts (anvaya) are useful only up to the point they lead to avadhāraṇa - the direct cognition of Paramāśivoham - I am Paramāśiva.

When the Upaniṣad or Guru gives a final verdict like tat tvam asi, that must override all initial associations with breath, fire, gods, or cosmology.

If you hold onto the form, you stay in duality. If you grasp the declaration - 'You are That' - you wake up from the dream.

कार्याख्यानादपूर्वम् ॥ ३.३.१८॥

kāryākhyānādapūrvam || 3.3.18 ||

(It is) different, because of the mention of a new result (or application).

If a meditation found in a certain Upaniṣadic passage presents a unique application (e.g. for a ritual) or a distinct fruit/result (e.g. attaining a particular loka), then even if the object of meditation appears similar to others, it must be treated as a distinct vidyā (upāsanā) because the goal (kārya) of the meditation defines its spiritual intention.

If the prayojana (purpose) is new or distinct, then, it implies a different cognition (pratyaya), and therefore a different path.

The truth you realize is decided by the space you hold and not just the object you meditate on.

समान एवञ्चाभेदात् ॥ ३.३.१९॥

samāna evañcābhedāt || 3.3.19 ||

And thus, it is the same - because there is no essential difference.

Bādarāyaṇa clarifies:

When the object and purpose are the same, even across different passages or contexts, and no new result is specified, the vidyās are to be considered one and the same.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.11- tapaḥśraddhe ye hyupavasantyaraṇye śāntā vidvāṃso bhaikṣyacaryāṃ carantaḥ | sūryadvāreṇa te virajāḥ prayānti yatrāmṛtaḥ sa puruṣo hyavyayātmā || "But those wise men of tranquil minds who lives in the forest on alms, practising penances appropriate to their stations of life and contemplating such deities as Hiranyagarbha, depart, freed from impurities, by the Path of the Sun, to the place where that immortal Person dwells whose nature is imperishable."

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra confirms the unifying lens of mokṣa-based cognition, you may meditate on sun, breath, light, ākāśa, sound, self, or deity. If the meditation leads to the realization that all is Self - and you as jīva are not separate from Paramāśiva - then all such meditations are samāna, the same vidyā. This is because the abheda (non-duality) of jīva-jagat-īśvara in mokṣa is the deciding criterion.

संबन्धादेवमन्यत्रापि ॥ ३.३.२०॥

saṃbandhādevamanyatrāpi || 3.3.20 ||

Thus (they are to be treated as the same) in other cases also, due to the relationship (between them).

Just as we concluded certain meditations are the same despite external variation - because of shared purpose, cognition, or result, the same logic applies to other similar cases, wherever a strong cognitive or philosophical connection (saṃbandha) exists. So, saṃbandha (relationship) becomes a key criterion if two teachings or practices are contextually or conceptually connected, and their goal or cognition is aligned, then they are not different, even if presented separately in the texts.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.2.12 - eko vaśī sarvabhūtāntarātmā ekaṃ rūpaṃ bahudhā yaḥ karoti | "There is one Supreme Ruler, the inmost Self of all beings, who makes His one form manifold."

न वा विशेषात् ॥ ३.३.२१॥

na vā viśeṣāt || 3.3.21 ||

Not (so), indeed, due to distinction.

While similarity in cognition or goal can unite different upāsanās (meditations), distinctive features (like difference in limbs, results, deities, or instructions) can make them independent vidyās.

Paramādvaita perspective views the Brahma Sūtras as a practical guide to mokṣa anubhūti (experiential liberation), perceiving jīva, īśvara, and jagat as simultaneous, spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva. Sūtra 3.3.21 is interpreted as refuting the separation of upāsanās based on specific differences (viśeṣāt), affirming their unity in realizing Paramaśiva's non-dual reality, guiding the jīva to turīyatīta-turīyatīta.

When differences are rooted in conscious intention and manifestation, they define unique paths. Unity is not sameness. Identity does not erase specialty.

Paramādvaita upholds the simultaneous unity and distinction: All upāsanās are directed toward realizing Paramāśiva. Each upāsanā expresses a specific frequency, dimension, and purpose.

दर्शयति च ॥ ३.३.२२॥
darśayati ca || 3.3.22 ||
The scriptures also declare that.
सम्भृतिद्युव्याप्त्यपि चातः ॥ ३।३।२३॥
sambhṛtidyuvyāptyapi cātaḥ || 3.3.23 ||
And also, from this, (the unity of upāsanās is affirmed) due to (Brahman's attributes of) sustenance and pervasion of heaven.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 3.6.1 - ānando brahmeti vyajānāt | ānandādhyeva khalvimāni bhūtāni jāyante | ānandena jātāni jīvanti | ānandaṃ prayantyabhisaṃviśantīti | "Bliss is Brahman; because it is from Bliss that all these beings are produced and by bliss do these beings live. They go to bliss on departing and become one with it."

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 3.6.1 describes Brahman as the source of all sustenance.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 3.14.1 - sarvaṃ khalvidaṃ brahma tajjalāniti śānta upāsīta | atha khalu kratumayaḥ puruṣo yathākraturasmiṁlloke puruṣo bhavati tathetaḥ pretya bhavati sa kratuṃ kurvīta || "All this is Brahman. Everything comes from Brahman, everything goes back to Brahman, and everything is sustained by Brahman. One should therefore quietly meditate on Brahman. Each person has a mind of his own. What a person wills in his present life, he becomes when he leaves this world. One should bear this in mind and meditate accordingly."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 3.14.1 states, "sarvaṃ khalvidaṃ brahma" (All this is indeed Brahman), highlighting its pervasiveness.

The sūtra asserts that these attributes, though distinct in description, refer to the same Brahman (ataḥ), ensuring the unity of upāsanās. The terms api and ca indicate that these attributes are additional examples supporting prior arguments.

Jīva, īśvara, and jagat as simultaneous, spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva. Sūtra 3.3.23 is interpreted as affirming that upāsanās on Paramaśiva's attributes, such as sustenance (sambhṛti) and all-pervading nature (dyuvyāpti), are unified because they target Paramaśiva's non-dual reality, guiding the jīva to turīyatīta-turīyatīta.

पुरुषविद्यायामिव चेतरेषामनाम्नानात् ॥ ३.३.२४॥
puruṣavidyāyāmiva cetareṣāmanāmnānāt || 3.3.24 ||
And like in the meditation on the Puruṣa, (the unity of upāsanās is affirmed) for the others due to their not being mentioned (distinctly).

Sūtra 3.3.24 further supports this unity by comparing upāsanās to the meditation on the Puruṣa (puruṣavidyā) found in texts like the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (3.16–3.17). This meditation describes the Puruṣa as the cosmic being whose lifespan corresponds to human life stages, yet it is understood as a meditation on Brahman. It argues that, just as the Puruṣa meditation is unified despite not being mentioned distinctly in other contexts, other upāsanās (itareṣām) are unified because they are not explicitly differentiated (anāmnānāt) and target the same non-dual Brahman.

This unity is supported by mahāvākyas like tat tvam asi (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7), which equate the jīva with Brahman. Through these upāsanās and jñāna, the jīva transcends the illusory distinctions of īśvara and jagat, achieving mokṣa.

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva (ekoham bahusyām, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1). The unity of upāsanās is affirmed by their shared focus on Paramaśiva.

From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, these upāsanās lead to turīyatīta-turīyatīta, where īśvara and jagat are Paramaśiva's expressions. From the mokṣa-centric view, the shared goal is nithya mukta (eternal liberation), as affirmed by tat tvam asi (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7).

वेधाद्यर्थभेदात् ॥ ३.३.२५॥

vedhādyarthabhedāt || 3.3.25 ||

Because of the difference in meaning (purpose) (of meditations on) piercing and others.

Sūtra 3.3.25 introduces an apparent exception, suggesting that certain upāsanās, such as those involving Brahman's creative or piercing power (vedha) and other attributes (ādi), may differ in their purpose or object (arthabhedāt). However, in the broader Advaita context, this difference is reconciled as superficial, as all upāsanās ultimately target the non-dual Brahman.

The Upaniṣads describe Brahman with functions such as "vedha" – influencing, guiding, creating with will and intelligence. These functions imply sentience, purpose, and conscious will, which pradhāna lacks. Hence, only Brahman, the sentient intelligent cause, fits these descriptions.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.6.1 - so'kāmayata | bahusyāṃ prajāyeyeti | sa tapo'tapyata | sa tapastaptvā | idagmsarvamasṛjata | yadidaṃ kiñca | tatsṛṣṭvā | tadevānuprāviśat | tadanu praviśya | sacca tyaccābhavat | niruktaṃ cāniruktaṃ ca | nilayanaṃ cānilayanaṃ ca | vijñānaṃ cāvijñānaṃ ca | satyaṃ cānṛtaṃ ca satyamabhavat | yadidaṃ kiñca | tatsatyamityācakṣate | "He desired, 'I shall become many and be born. He performed Tapas. having performed Tapas, He created all this (whatever we perceive). Having created it, He entered into it. Having entered it, He became the manifest and the unmanifest, the defined and undefined, the housed and the houseless, knowledge and ignorance, truth and falsehood, and all this whatsoever that exists. Therefore, it is called Existence."

हानौ तूपायनशब्दशेषात् कुशाच्छन्दस्स्तुत्युपगानवत् तदुक्तम् ॥ ३.३.२६॥

hānau tūpāyanaśabdaśeṣāt kuśācchandasstutyupagānavat taduktam || 3.3.26 ||

But in abandonment (liberation), due to the supplementary nature of the scriptural statements regarding the approach (to Brahman), it is like the chanting of Hindu hymns or praise, as established by the Śruti.

Sūtra 3.3.26 addresses the nature of upāsanās in the context of liberation (hānau, abandonment of worldly attachments), emphasizing that the meditative approach (upāyana) to Brahman is supported by supplementary scriptural statements (śabdaśeṣāt). It compares these meditations to the chanting of Hindu hymns or praise (kuśācchandasstutyupagānavat), as established by the Śruti (taduktam), reinforcing their unity in targeting the non-dual Brahman.

Upāsanās aimed at liberation (hānau, abandoning worldly attachments) involve a meditative approach (upāyana) to realizing Paramaśiva as the non-dual Self, supported by supplementary Śruti statements (śabdaśeṣāt), such as tat tvam asi (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7). These upāsanās are precise and reverential, like Hindu chanting or praise (kuśācchandasstutyupagānavat), ensuring alignment with scriptural authority (taduktam). From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, these upāsanās lead to turīyatīta-turīyatīta

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva.

साम्पराये तर्तव्याभावात् तथा ह्यन्ये ॥ ३.३.२७॥

sāmparāye tartavyābhāvāt tathā hyanye || 3.3.27 ||

At the time of death, due to the absence of anything to be transcended, thus indeed others (declare).

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.3.14 - yadā sarve pramucyante kāmā ye'sya hṛdi śritāḥ | atha martyo'mṛto bhavatyatra brahma samaśnute|| "When all the desires that dwell in the heart fall away, then the mortal becomes immortal and here attains Brahman."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.15.1 - brahmalokamabhisampadyate na ca punarāvartate na ca punarāvartate || "Then after death he goes to Brahmaloka, and he is not born again, he is not born again."

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9 - sa yo ha vai tat paramaṃ brahma veda brahmaiva bhavati | "He who knows the Supreme Brahman verily becomes Brahman."

From the Paramādvaita lens, this sūtra affirms the simultaneous oneness of jīva, Īśvara, jagat, and mokṣa as spontaneous expressions of Paramāśiva. Since Paramāśiva is ever-present, there is nothing to "cross" or attain in the future (sāmparāya). The idea of "crossing" or "attaining" belongs to the delusion of duality. The very assumption of a future liberation (post-death) denies the eternal reality of liberation now. Thus, the enlightened one lives jīvanmukti with the understanding that there is no separate state to be reached in some other realm. Even if scriptures describe journeys after death, these are upāya (methods), not siddhānta (ultimate truths). Hence, this sūtra destroys all escapist notions of future heaven or liberation and grounds you into the powerful present experience of Paramāśiva.

छन्दत उभयाविरोधात् ॥ ३.३.२८॥

chandata ubhayāvirodhāt || 3.3.28 ||

According to will, due to the non-contradiction of both (aspects).

The sūtra emphasizes that liberation does not negate the jīva's freedom to act according to its will, which is consistent with the non-dual state and scriptural teachings, reinforcing the goal of upāsanās as mokṣa.

Sūtra 3.3.28 addresses the state of the liberated jīva, stating that it acts according to its will (chandata) because this is compatible with both the state of liberation and scriptural teachings (ubhayāvirodhāt). This reinforces the non-dual goal of upāsanās, where the jīva realizes its oneness with Brahman and enjoys freedom in liberation.

Paramāśiva gives the freedom to evolve from wherever you are. Whether the being chooses intense discipline or devotional flow, both can lead to oneness, if they are integrated with powerful cognitions.

Where different meditative practices do not contradict each other, the seeker is free to choose — for both are valid approaches to the same Truth.

गतेरर्थवत्त्वमुभयथाऽन्यथा हि विरोधः ॥ ३.३.२९॥

gaterarthavattvamubhayathā'nyathā hi virodhaḥ || 3.3.29 ||

The path's purposefulness (is valid) in both ways; otherwise, indeed, there would be a contradiction.

Sūtra 3.3.29 addresses the significance of the path to liberation (gateḥ), affirming that it is purposeful (arthavattvam) in both contexts—whether for the jīva pursuing liberation or the already liberated jīva—to avoid contradiction (virodhaḥ) with scriptural teachings. This reinforces the non-dual goal of upāsanās in realizing Brahman.

the path to liberation, comprising upāsanās and jñāna, is purposeful for the jīva bound by ignorance (māyā), as it leads to realizing Brahman (e.g., tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7). For the liberated jīva, the path is meaningful as it reflects the state of non-dual realization, where actions are spontaneous expressions of Brahman's nature (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.12.3). The term ubhayathā indicates that the path serves both the seeker and the realized, ensuring no contradiction (avirodhāt) with Śruti texts like Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9, which state that the knower of Brahman becomes Brahman. If the path were deemed purposeless (anyathā), it would conflict with the Śruti's emphasis on liberation. The jīva transcends īśvara and jagat as illusions, abiding in mokṣa as Brahman.

Upāsanās, empowered by dīkṣā, are purposeful for both seeking and realizing Paramaśiva, avoiding contradiction with Śruti.

उपपन्नस्तल्लक्षणार्थोपलब्धेः लोकवत् ॥ ३.३.३०॥

upapannastallakṣaṇārthopalabdheḥ lokavat || 3.3.30 ||

It is appropriate (or consistent) due to the realization of that (Brahman's) characteristic purpose, like in the world.

The sūtra asserts that such realization is appropriate (upapannaḥ) because it fulfills the purpose of perceiving Brahman's defining qualities (tallakṣaṇārthopalabdheḥ), such as satyam (truth), jñānam (knowledge), and anantam (infinity), as described in Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1.1. The analogy to worldly experience (lokavat) suggests that just as objects in the world are known through their characteristics, Brahman is realized through its attributes in meditation, leading to mokṣa.

Every movement of consciousness, every description in the śāstra, is precise architecture, not metaphorical chaos. What is given has a purpose, structure, and fulfillment exactly like in the manifested universe.

अनियमः सर्वेषामविरोधश्शब्दानुमानाभ्याम् ॥ ३.३.३१॥

aniyamaḥ sarveṣāmavirodhaśśabdānumānābhyām || 3.3.31 ||

There is no restriction for all (upāsanās), (as there is) non-contradiction, by Śruti and inference.

Sūtra 3.3.31 concludes this discussion by affirming that there is no fixed restriction (aniyamaḥ) on the application of all upāsanās (sarveṣām), as they are non-contradictory (avirodhaḥ) with Śruti and inference (śabdānumānābhyām). This reinforces the non-dual goal of upāsanās in realizing Brahman, allowing flexibility in practice while maintaining scriptural and logical consistency.

This diversity of paths causes no contradiction (avirodhaḥ) because Śabda (scripture) mentions multiple paths and Anumāna (reasoning) shows people differ in temperament, maturity, and effort.

Whether through dhyāna, darśana, or power manifestation, if the being realizes their oneness with the whole - mokṣa is attained.

यावदधिकारमवस्थितिराधिकारिकाणाम् ॥ ३.३.३२॥

yāvadadhikāramavasthitirādhikārikāṇām || 3.3.32 ||

As long as there is eligibility, there is continuance (in that state) for those who are eligible.

Sūtra 3.3.32 addresses the duration or persistence of the jīva's state in relation to its eligibility (adhikāram), stating that the jīva remains in its role or state (avasthitiḥ) as long as it retains eligibility (yāvadadhikāram), particularly in the context of liberation or spiritual practice.

This sūtra addresses the duration of the soul's stay in different lokas (worlds) after death or after performing certain upāsanās (meditations). Beings endowed with a particular role, karma, or spiritual qualification (like devas, advanced upāsakas). Their existence in a particular state or loka (e.g., Brahmaloka) continues only as long as their adhikāra (spiritual capacity or role) persists. When their adhikāra exhausts (like exhaustion of karmas or merits), they either return (punarāvṛtti) or move to a higher realization (mokṣa) if knowledge dawns. A person who attains krama-mukti through upāsanā of saguṇa Brahman may stay in Brahmaloka until the end of Brahmā's day, and then attain final liberation (as per Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.6.6).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.6.6 - śataṃ caikā ca hṛdayasya nāḍyastāsāṃ mūrdhānamabhiniḥsṛtaikā | tayordhvamāyannamṛtatvameti viṣvaṅṅanyā utkramaṇe bhavantyutkramaṇe bhavanti || 8.6.6 || "There are a hundred and one arteries connected with the heart. One of them goes up to the top of the head. A person who goes up following this artery attains immortality. The other arteries go in different directions and cause one to depart from the body in other ways."

For the jīva engaged in upāsanās, eligibility (adhikāram) involves the qualifications for spiritual practice, such as purity of mind and adherence to scriptural teachings. The jīva continues in this role (avasthitiḥ) until it attains jñāna and realizes Brahman (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7). Once liberated, the jīva's eligibility for mokṣa is fulfilled, and its state of liberation is permanent, as there is no return to saṃsāra (na ca punarāvartate, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.15.1). The term ādhikārikāṇām refers to jīvas with varying levels of eligibility, whether seekers or liberated beings. The jīva transcends īśvara and jagat as illusions, abiding in mokṣa as Brahman. The sūtra ensures that the state of liberation is not transient, aligning with Śruti teachings like Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9, which states that the knower of Brahman becomes Brahman.

अक्षरधियां त्वविरोधः सामान्य तद्भावा भ्यामौपसदवत् तदुक्तम् ॥ ३.३.३३॥

akṣaradhiyāṃ tvavirodhaḥ sāmānyatadbhāvābhyāmaupasadavattaduktam || 3.3.33 ||

But for meditations on the Imperishable, there is non-contradiction, by commonality and its specific nature, like the Aupasada ritual, as stated.

Sūtra 3.3.33 addresses potential contradictions in meditations on the Imperishable (Brahman, akṣaradhiyām) due to varying descriptions in different Upaniṣads. It affirms that there is no contradiction (avirodhaḥ) because these meditations share a common essence (sāmānya) and Brahman's specific attributes (tadbhāvābhyām), analogous to the Aupasada ritual (aupasadavat), as stated in scriptures (taduktam).

All sincere upāsanās on Akṣara lead ultimately to mokṣa, despite surface differences.

Following sūtra 3.3.32, which affirmed that the jīva persists in its state as long as eligibility remains, sūtra 3.3.33 addresses a potential objection that meditations on Brahman (akṣaradhiyām) described differently across Upaniṣads (e.g., as truth and knowledge in Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1.1 or as consciousness in Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7) might be contradictory. The sūtra refutes this by stating that there is no contradiction (avirodhaḥ), as these meditations share a common essence (sāmānya, i.e., Brahman as the non-dual reality) and are based on Brahman's specific attributes (tadbhāvābhyām, e.g., satyam, jñānam, anantam). The analogy of the Aupasada ritual (aupasadavat), a Hindu practice with consistent elements across variations, illustrates this non-contradiction. The term taduktam indicates that this principle is supported by scriptural authority.

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva (ekoham bahusyām, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1). Upāsanās are unified by their focus on Paramaśiva's non-dual reality, non-contradictory across descriptions.

इयदामननात् ॥ ३.३.३४॥

iyadāmananāt || 3.3.34 ||

Due to the declaration of this much (or limitation).

Sūtra 3.3.34 addresses the limited nature (iyat) of certain attributes or states in upāsanās, as declared by Śruti (āmananāt), clarifying that such limitations do not contradict the non-dual goal of realizing Brahman.

Upāsanās may involve meditating on Brahman with limited attributes, such as its role as the creator (Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.5) or its blissful nature (Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.8.1), as prescribed by Śruti texts. These limitations (iyat) are intentional, declared by scriptures (āmananāt) to suit the jīva's capacity for meditation, but they do not imply that Brahman itself is limited. The jīva, through upāsanās and jñāna, transcends these limited attributes to realize the infinite, non-dual Brahman (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7).

From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, upāsanās with limited attributes lead to turīyatīta-turīyatīta, where īśvara and jagat are Paramaśiva's expressions.

From the mokṣa perspective, jīva, īśvara, and jagat are spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva.

अन्तरा भूतग्रामवदिति चेत् तदुक्तम् ॥ ३.३.३५॥

antarā bhūtagrāmavaditi cet taduktam || 3.3.35 ||

If it is said that (there is) an intermediate (state) like the group of elements, that has been answered.

Sūtra 3.3.35 addresses an objection that there might be an intermediate state (antarā) for the jīva, analogous to the aggregate of elements (bhūtagrāmavat), such as a transitional state between bondage and liberation. The sūtra refutes this by stating that the issue has already been answered (taduktam), reinforcing the non-dual goal of upāsanās in realizing Brahman and achieving permanent mokṣa.

अन्यथा भेदानुपपत्तिरितिचेन्नोपदेशवत् ॥ ३.३.३६॥

anyathā bhedānupapattiriticennopadeśavat || 3.3.36 ||

If it is said that otherwise (assuming distinction) there would be the impossibility of distinction, (it is) not so, like an instruction.

Sūtra 3.3.36 addresses an objection that assuming a distinction (bheda) between the jīva and Brahman would lead to logical inconsistency (bhedānupapattiḥ). The sūtra refutes this by stating that such a distinction is not problematic, as it is like a scriptural instruction (upadeśavat), serving as a provisional aid for realization.

This sūtra is interpreted as refuting the objection that assuming a distinction between the jīva and Paramaśiva is logically inconsistent, clarifying that such a distinction is like a scriptural instruction (upadeśavat), guiding the jīva to turīyatīta-turīyatīta.

Upāsanās, empowered by dīkṣā, use provisional distinctions as instructional aids to realize Paramaśiva's non-dual reality.

व्यतिहारो विशिंषन्ति हीतरव्रत् ॥ ३.३.३७॥

vyatihāro viśiṃṣanti hītaravrat || 3.3.37 ||

Variations are taught distinctly (in the scriptures) for those of lower observances.

The scriptures distinguish meditative variations in form or sequence for those of lesser observance - not to dilute the truth, but to make it accessible. Thus, different versions of upāsanās serve different levels of spiritual seekers.

Vyatihāra is not compromise - it is compassionate customization. Viśinṣanti - the Guru or śāstra intelligently distinguishes, not to divide, but to make spiritual truths accessible to all levels of seekers. Hītaravrat - does not mean 'inferior beings', but refers to hose whose bodies, minds, or lifestyles don't yet allow intense tapas, but whose sincerity and longing are deep. All beings are capable of mokṣa, and path variations are valid, as long as they are rooted in conscious integrity and guru-vāk.

सैव हि सत्यादयः ॥ ३.३.३८॥

saiva hi satyādayaḥ || 3.3.38 ||

That (meditation) indeed is (on) truth and others.

Sūtra 3.3.38 affirms that the meditation (sā, referring to upāsanā) is indeed focused on Brahman's attributes like truth, knowledge, and infinity (satyādayaḥ), ensuring their unified purpose in realizing non-duality.

Sūtra 3.3.38 clarifies that the meditation under discussion is indeed centered on Brahman's essential attributes, such as those described in Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.0 - satyam jñānam anantaṃ brahma (Brahman is truth, knowledge, infinite). This addresses any concern that combining attributes might deviate from Brahman's true nature.

The term satyādayaḥ refers to Brahman's attributes, such as truth (satyam), knowledge (jñānam), infinity (anantam), and others, which are not contradictory but complementary aspects of the same reality. The sā (that meditation) indicates the upāsanā discussed, and eva hi emphasizes that it is indeed focused on these attributes.

कामादितरत्र तत्र च आयतनादिभ्यः ॥ ३.३.३९॥

kāmāditaratra tatra ca āyatanādibhyaḥ || 3.3.39 ||

From desire (kāma) elsewhere, and in that case also, (this is inferred) from mention of abode and other factors.

kāmāt - In some meditations, desire for results (like heavenly enjoyment, prosperity, or long life) is present.

itaratra - In others, the motive is liberation, or no desire is mentioned.

tatra ca āyatanādibhyaḥ - Even in meditations where desire is not explicit, contextual clues (like "abode," "support," "goal") show the meditative intent and distinguish them.

These differences in kāma (motivation) and āyatana (abode, symbolic seat, or goal) help determine whether upāsanās are the same or not.

Even if the object appears similar (e.g. meditation on prāṇa, Om, etc.), if the intent or goal differs, they are not the same vidyā.

If your meditation is desire-based, even subtly (like swarga, siddhi, health), you invoke a karma-bound version of the vidyā.

If your meditation is mukti-based (Oneness-centric), you open the akarma, eternal version of the vidyā.

The anchor or abode (āyatana) of meditation (e.g. focusing on Sahasrāra, Ākāśa, Guru, Śiva) reveals the layer of reality you're operating from.

आदारादलोपः ॥ ३.३.४०॥

ādārādalopaḥ || 3.3.40 ||

Due to reverence, there is non-omission (of elements in upāsanās).

Sūtra 3.3.40 addresses the retention of certain elements or attributes in upāsanās (alopaḥ) due to reverence for scriptural instructions (ādārāt), ensuring that meditations remain complete and effective in leading to mokṣa.

Upāsanās, while adaptable, must retain their prescribed elements as per Upaniṣadic instructions to remain effective. For example, in meditating on Brahman as truth, knowledge, and infinity (Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1.1), the practitioner cannot omit attributes like satyam or jñānam out of reverence for the Śruti's authority. This retention (alopaḥ) ensures that upāsanās maintain their focus on the non-dual Brahman (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7).

The sūtra ensures that upāsanās remain faithful to Śruti, retaining essential elements to achieve mokṣa through jñāna.

उपस्थितेस्तद्वचनात् ॥ ३.३.४१॥

upasthitestadvacanāt || 3.3.41 ||

Because it is present (or experienced), and because scripture states so.

This sūtra builds upon 3.3.40, which stated that no loss occurs in upāsanā when the support (ādāra) is intact. Now, it reinforces that the result of meditation (e.g., realization or entry into Brahman-loka) is indeed present and attainable, and this is confirmed by the scriptures.

The result of the meditation manifests in the upāsaka. It is real, not imaginary or abstract. The Upaniṣads and śruti explicitly declare such presence of results.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.15.1: tadhaitadbrahmā prajāpatayai uvāca prajāpatirmanave manuḥ prajābhyaḥ ācāryakulādvedamadhītya yathāvidhānaṃ guroḥ karmātiśeṣeṇābhisamāvṛtya kuṭumbe śucau deśe svādhyāyamadhīyāno dharmikānvidadhadātmani sarvaindriyāṇi sampratiṣṭhāpyāhiṃsansarva bhūtānyanyatra tīrthebhyaḥ sa khalvevaṃ vartayanyāvadāyuṣaṃ brahmalokamabhisampadyate na ca punarāvartate na ca punarāvartate || 8.15.1 || "Brahmā taught this knowledge of the Self to Prajāpati, and Prajāpati taught it to Manu. Manu, in his turn, taught it to all human beings. A young man goes to live at his teacher's house and serves him, and when he is free he studies the Vedas in the prescribed manner. After finishing all his studies, he goes back home and marries. But he continues to study the scriptures in a sacred place. He also teaches his children and disciples in such a way that they will be religious. He keeps all his senses under control and avoids violence unless he is at a holy place. This is how he lives his whole life. Then after death he goes to Brahmaloka, and he is not born again, he is not born again."

So the meditative results are not imaginary or symbolic; they are experientially available and scripturally authenticated.

तन्निर्धारणार्थनियमस्तद्दृष्टेर्पृथग्ध्यप्रतिबन्धः फलम् ॥ ३.३.४२॥

tannirdhāraṇārthaniyamastaddṛṣṭerpṛthagdhyapratibandhaḥ phalam || 3.3.42 ||

Regulation for the determination of that (object of meditation), because scripture declares so; the result is the unobstructed distinct understanding (of the object).

प्रदानवदेव हि तदुक्तम् ॥ ३.३.४३॥

pradānavadeva hi taduktam || 3.3.43 ||

Indeed, it is said (in scripture) to be like a gift (pradāna).

Just as a gift (pradāna) offered with śraddhā (faith), even if simple, reaches and pleases the receiver, so too upāsanā, even if differently expressed, reaches Brahman when done with sincerity.

The effectiveness of upāsanā is not in mechanical precision, but in mental alignment and conscious intent.

When your being aligns to Paramāśiva, even a single flower, or a moment of silence, becomes the highest offering.

Bhagavad Gīta 9.26 - patraṃ puṣpaṃ phalaṃ toyaṃ yo me bhaktyā prayacchati tadahaṃ bhaktyupahṛtamaśnāmi prayatātmanaḥ. "Whoever offers Me with devotion a leaf, a flower, a fruit, water, that I accept, offered by the pure-minded with devotion."

लिङ्गभूयस्त्वात्तद्धि बलीयस्तदपि ॥ ३.३.४४॥

liṅgabhūyastvāttaddhi balīyastadapi || 3.3.44 ||

Due to the abundance of indicative signs, that (meditation) is indeed stronger, even that (applies).

When there is a conflict between direct statement and inferred meaning, and the liṅgas (indicative signs) are more numerous or stronger, then that interpretation prevails.

The abundance of Śruti indications (liṅgas), such as mahāvākyas like tat tvam asi (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7) and descriptions of Brahman as truth, knowledge, and infinity (Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1.1). These indications make upāsanās balīyaḥ (stronger), as they are firmly grounded in scriptural authority.

In Paramādvaita, liṅga doesn't only mean textual clue; it also means spanda (vibration), space, and intention of the revelation. When interpreting any teaching, the underlying space of Advaitic Oneness and contextual power (inner cognition) must be the deciding force. Even if words seem dualistic or ritualistic, if the liṅga (context) supports Paramādvaita, that truth overrides.

पूर्वविकल्पः प्रकरणात्स्यात्क्रियामानसवत् ॥ ३.३.४५॥

pūrvavikalpaḥ prakaraṇātsyātkriyāmānasavat || 3.3.45 ||

The previous option would be (determined) from the context, like an action performed by the mind.

The specific form of upāsanā (pūrvavikalpaḥ) is determined by the scriptural context (prakaraṇāt) and is akin to a mental action (kriyāmānasavat), ensuring its efficacy in achieving mokṣa.

The earlier variation of a meditation or practice is still valid, if it was anchored in Oneness cognition. The context in which the revelation is received (śruti + guru-vāk) is more important than sequence or grammar.

अतिदेशाच्च ॥ ३.३.४६॥

atideśācca || 3.3.46 ||

And because of the application by extension (analogy).

This is the concluding sūtra of Adhyāya 3, Pāda 3, which dealt with the identity or variation of meditative vidyās (upāsanās) found in multiple Upaniṣads.

When a particular detail is not explicitly stated in a new context, but was clearly laid out in another parallel vidyā, that detail can be carried over by atideśa — a principle of scriptural extrapolation or analogy. The sūtra confirms that it is valid to apply such atideśa, ensuring continuity, consistency, and proper understanding of śāstric injunctions.

विद्यैव तु निर्धारणात् ॥ ३.३.४७॥

vidyaiva tu nirdhāraṇāt || 3.3.47 ||

But it is indeed the same vidyā, because the śruti decisively determines it so.

The sūtra concludes that even if slight differences are found in form, it is one and the same vidyā. This is because the śruti (scripture) nirdhāraṇa - explicitly or implicitly - determines it to be so.

Vidyā (knowledge of Brahman) alone is the means to liberation, due to the ascertainment (nirdhāraṇāt) of Brahman's non-dual nature, clarifying that upāsanās culminate in jñāna for mokṣa.

दर्शनाच्च ॥ ३.३.४८॥

darśanācca || 3.3.48 ||

And due to vision (or realization).

The efficacy of vidyā or upāsanās is further supported by the direct vision or realization of Brahman (darśanāt), reinforcing that mokṣa arises from experiential knowledge.

The direct vision or realization of Paramaśiva (darśanāt) is an additional reason (ca) why vidyā liberates. This vision is the experiential realization of Paramaśiva's non-dual nature (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7), where the jīva perceives itself as Paramaśiva (ahaṃ brahmāsmi, Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10). From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, vidyā culminates in the direct experience of turīyatīta-turīyatīta,

श्रुत्यादिबलीयस्त्वाच्च न बाधः ॥ ३.३.४९॥

śrutyādibalīyastvācca na bādhaḥ || 3.3.49 ||

And due to the greater authority of Śruti and other scriptures, there is no contradiction.

अनुबन्धादिभ्यह् प्रज्ञन्तरप्रिथक्त्ववत् द्रिस्ह्तस्छ तदुक्तम् ॥ ३.३.५०॥

anubandhadibhyah prajnantaraprithaktvavat drishtascha taduktam || 3.3.50 ||

And it is seen, due to connection and other factors, like the distinctness of different knowledges, that it is declared (by scripture).

Due to their connection and other factors (anubandhādibhyaḥ), they are distinct like different types of knowledge (prajñāntarapṛthaktvavat), as observed in scripture (dṛṣṭaśca taduktam). This balances the unity of upāsanās with their contextual distinctness, ensuring their efficacy in leading to mokṣa.

न सामान्यादप्य् उपलब्धेर्मृत्यु वन्नहि लोकापत्तिः ॥ ३.३.५१॥

na sāmānyādapyupalabdhermṛtyuvannahi lokāpattiḥ || 3.3.51 ||

Not even from ordinary perception is there attainment (of Brahman), like death; indeed, it is not a worldly attainment.

Like death looks the same but is deeply different for a yogi, a bhogi, and a jñānī - so too spiritual practices differ in depth and result.

This sūtra negates the possibility of attaining Brahman through ordinary perception (sāmānyāt), such as sensory knowledge or intellectual reasoning alone. Mṛtyuvat uses the analogy of death, which is universally experienced without effort, to contrast with Brahman's realization, which requires specific effort and knowledge. Na hi loka-āpattiḥ further clarifies that realizing Brahman is not a worldly attainment (loka-āpattiḥ) accessible to ordinary means; it demands vidyā, as guided by Śruti (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7). Upāsanās purify the mind, but vidyā, rooted in Śruti, enables the direct realization of Brahman (ahaṃ brahmāsmi, Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10).

परेण च शब्दस्य ताद्विध्यं भूयस् त्वात्त्वनुबन्धः ॥ ३.३.५२॥

pareṇa ca śabdasya tādvidhyaṃ bhūyastvāttvanubandhaḥ || 3.3.52 ||

And due to the supreme, the scripture's characteristic (of leading to Brahman) is such, because of its greater authority, indeed there is connection (to liberation).

The supreme nature of Brahman, as revealed by Śruti, and its predominant authority ensure that upāsanās and vidyā are connected to liberation (anubandhaḥ), reinforcing their efficacy in achieving mokṣa.

The supreme nature of Brahman/Paramaśiva, revealed by Śruti's authoritative guidance, ensures that upāsanās and vidyā are connected to mokṣa. In Advaita Vedānta, this is liberation through jñāna. In Paramādvaita, it is experiential mokṣa in turīyatīta-turīyatīta.

एक आत्मनः शरीरे भावात् ॥ ३.३.५३॥

eka ātmanaḥ śarīre bhāvāt || 3.3.53 ||

Because of the existence of only one self in a body.

This sūtra addresses an important question: Can multiple selves (jīvas) exist in one body?

The answer is no - there is only one jīva per physical body. Why? Because of the observation (bhāva) that only one stream of consciousness, memory, volition, and experience functions per body. You do not observe multiple independent selves operating in one body - thus, the existence of a single ātmā per body is affirmed.

व्यतिरेकस्तद् भावभावित्वान्न तूपलब्धिवत् ॥ ३.३.५४॥

vyatirekastadbhāvabhāvitvānna tūpalabdhivat || 3.3.54 ||

The distinction (of the self from the body) is due to being conditioned by that state (of the self's true nature), but not like ordinary perception.

The distinction of the Ātman from the body (vyatirekaḥ) arises due to its true nature (tadbhāvabhāvitvāt) and is not like ordinary perception (na tūpalabdhivat), emphasizing the need for vidyā to realize the self's non-dual reality.

Though multiple vidyās may be practiced, their results (phalas) do not manifest together. The results are distinct and arise separately. Why? Because the fruition of each depends on the presence of its specific cause — tat-bhāva-bhāvitvāt. na tu upalabdhi-vat - Unlike sensory perception, which can grasp multiple objects simultaneously, spiritual fruition requires exclusive karmic and meditative context.

अङ्गावबद्धास्तु न शाखासु हि प्रतिवेदम् ॥ ३.३.५५॥

aṅgāvabaddhāstu na śākhāsu hi prativedam || 3.3.55 ||

But the subsidiary parts are indeed bound (to the primary practice), not varying among the branches for each Veda.

Sūtra 3.3.55 addresses the unity of subsidiary components (aṅga) in upāsanās, stating that they are integrally bound to the primary practice (avabaddhāḥ) and do not vary across different Hindu recensions (na śākhāsu prativedam), ensuring consistency in their application toward mokṣa.

Some vidyās are not standalone spiritual practices but are connected to specific rituals as their limbs (aṅgas).

These ritual-bound meditations are not found in every śākhā, are not universally applicable like knowledge-centered vidyās. Therefore, one cannot assume universal transference of these ritual-based meditations across all Hindu branches. Vidyās tied to rituals (e.g., visualizing deities during yajñas or specific meditations done as part of Agnihotra) are context-specific. They are anchored in karma, not liberation-centric cognition - hence not transferable across śākhās or time periods.

Paramādvaita vidyās, on the other hand - which reveal mokṣa as your very nature - are free from aṅga-attachments, and hence eternal and all-pervasive.

मन्त्रादिवद्वाऽविरोधः ॥ ३.३.५६॥

mantrādivadvā'virodhaḥ || 3.3.56 ||

Or, like mantras and others, there is no contradiction.

This addresses the compatibility of components like mantras and associated practices (mantrādivat) in upāsanās, stating that there is no contradiction (avirodhaḥ) in their application, ensuring their harmonious role in achieving mokṣa.

This sūtra concludes the extensive discussion on whether meditative knowledges (vidyās) found in different śākhās or contexts should be treated as one or distinct. It follows the previous sūtra (3.3.55), which said that ritual-attached vidyās (aṅgāvabaddhāḥ) are not common to all Hindu branches.

Just like mantras (and related ritual components) differ across śākhās, yet do not contradict the core sacrifice or its intention. Similarly, aṅgāvabaddha-vidyās (ritual-bound meditations) may differ, yet there is no essential contradiction (avirodhaḥ) in their existence. These variations are acceptable, as they support the central Hindu yajña or vision without conflict.

भूम्नः क्रतुवज्ज्यायस्त्वं तथा च दर्शयति ॥ ३.३.५७॥

bhūmnaḥ kratuvajjyāyastvaṃ tathā ca darśayati || 3.3.57 ||

The superiority (of the meditation) on the Infinite (Bhūman) is like that of a sacrifice; and so also the scripture shows.

This emphasizes the superiority (jyāyastvaṃ) of meditating on the infinite Brahman (bhūmnaḥ) over other practices, likening it to the preeminence of Hindu sacrifices (kratuvat), as demonstrated by Śruti (darśayati), reinforcing its efficacy in achieving mokṣa.

Bhūman is a synonym for Brahman, the Infinite Reality.

A meditation directed toward Bhūman is considered superior (jyāyas).

The sūtra compares this deliberate meditation to a kratu (a sacrifice) — done with intention and purpose.

नानाशब्दादिभेदात् ॥ ३.३.५८॥

nānāśabdādibhedāt || 3.3.58 ||

Due to the differences in various words and other elements.

When different mantras, ritual frameworks, or conceptual expressions are used, they are not merely linguistic variations - they create different inner spaces. Therefore, nānāśabdādibheda reflects real spiritual differentiation, unless unified by common context and Paramādvaitic cognition.

विकल्पो विशिष्टफलत्वात् ॥ ३.३.५९॥

vikalpo viśiṣṭaphalatvāt || 3.3.59 ||

The option (of choosing upāsanās) is due to their specific results.

This addresses the flexibility of choosing different upāsanās (vikalpaḥ), explaining that this option exists because each practice yields specific results (viśiṣṭaphalatvāt)

Even if two practices may seem similar in method or expression, they are to be treated as different (vikalpa) when their results (phalāni) are distinct. Each meditation aims at a specific outcome, such as attaining a particular loka, deity proximity, or liberation (mokṣa). Hence, differences in result become a valid criterion to classify them as separate vidyās.

The purpose of the path defines the path. If your inner space wants heaven, it cannot be the same as the path of liberation. Every vidyā is a frequency - and frequencies don't overlap in outcome. Distinction arises not just in action, but in intent, goal, and inner experience.

In Paramādvaita, a vidyā aligned to mokṣa is fundamentally different from one leading to svarga (heaven) or powers. Viśiṣṭa-phalatva is not just about external result - it includes inner transformation, space of cognition, and state of consciousness.

काम्यास्तु यथाकामं समुच्चीयेरन्न वा पूर्वहेत्वभावात् ॥ ३.३.६०॥

kāmyāstu yathākāmaṃ samuccīyeranna vā pūrvahetvabhāvāt || 3.3.60 ||

But desire-based meditations may be accumulated as desired - or not - because there is no determining prior cause. These are meditations aimed at fulfilling desires, such as going to a particular loka, gaining wealth, progeny, etc. For these, there is no fixed rule about combining them (samuccaya). One may accumulate multiple kāmya-upāsanās and perform them together, or not - depending on one's intention. Why? Because there is no purva-hetu (prior binding rule or cause) from śruti or logic that either mandates or prohibits their combination.

Any practice done with personal agenda, whether for power, pleasure, fame, or even mystical attainments, belongs to the plane of karma and desire. These can be performed together or not - because they do not lead to liberation, and are subject to personal will and cosmic mechanics. There is no fixed causality or absolute pramāṇa in combining them. So you are free, but only within the loop of karma.

अङ्गेषु यथाश्रयभावः ॥ ३.३.६१॥

aṅgeṣu yathāśrayabhāvaḥ || 3.3.61 ||

In the auxiliaries, their relation is according to the nature of their support (main act).

Aṅgāni (limbs) such as mantras, nyāsas, or visualizations connected to a main vidyā or karma are context-dependent. Their status and variation depend on the nature and structure of the main act they support - the āśraya. If the main vidyā varies, or is adapted to a different branch, the auxiliary parts will also shift accordingly. So, there's no contradiction in variation among auxiliaries, because they are not independently authoritative.

शिष्टेश्च ॥ ३.३.६२॥

śiṣṭeśca || 3.3.62 ||

And from the injunction of the Śruti and teachings of the enlightened.

This provides an additional reason, stating that the teachings or instructions (śiṣṭeḥ) of Śruti (and possibly the conduct of the wise) support the contextual application of upāsanās, reinforcing their efficacy for mokṣa.

Secondarily, śiṣṭeḥ may refer to the conduct of śiṣṭa (enlightened beings), whose practices exemplify the correct application of upāsanās.

Bhagavad Gītā 5.18 - vidyā-vinaya-sampanne brāhmaṇe gavi hastini śuni ca pāṇḍitāḥ sama-darśinaḥ "The truly learned (śiṣṭa) see the Self equally in all beings, showing their realization of oneness."

The śiṣṭa represent the jīva in its mukta (liberated) state - established in the ultimate truth that jīva, Ishvara, and jagat are simultaneous, synergistic manifestations of Paramāśiva.

From the jīva perspective, the śiṣṭa is the stage where one transcends the 25 states of consciousness and abides in turīyātīta-turīyātīta.

From the Ishvara perspective, śiṣṭa are the aspects of Ishvara's own manifestation who consciously know their oneness with Him and the cosmos.

From the jagat perspective, śiṣṭa are those embodiments who radiate the highest space (Kailāsa) consciousness, showing the freedom (karma-mokṣa) that cosmos allows to its beings.

From the mokṣa perspective, śiṣṭa are living proof that the apparent separations of jīva, Ishvara, jagat never truly existed; liberation is the natural abiding in oneness - the Paramādvaita truth.

समाहारात् ॥ ३.३.६३॥

samāhārāt || 3.3.63 ||

From the aggregate (samāhāra).

The term samāhāra denotes the collective whole, the aggregate or totality of parts. In the context of Brahmasūtra and Advaita philosophy, it often refers to the universe as the collection of all diverse elements or the sum of all phenomena.

This sūtra points to the fact that the diverse universe (jagat) and the individual souls (jīvas), when seen from the perspective of totality or synthesis (samāhāra), have no separate independent reality apart from Brahman or Ishvara.

In other words, the apparent multiplicity is a samāhāra - an aggregate or collection - of one reality. The universe and all beings are upādhis (limiting adjuncts) or appearances on the one non-dual substratum, Brahman.

The Brahmasūtras, through such sūtras, affirm that the diversity of Ishvara, jīva, and jagat is ultimately a manifestation or combination arising from the one Brahman.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.2.1 - sadeva somyedamagra āsīdekamevādvitīyam | "Somya, before this world was manifest there was only existence, one without a second."

Iśa Upaniṣad 1 - īśāvāsyam idaṁ sarvaṁ "All that exists is energy." The universe is the samāhāra of all that is contained within Ishvara.

Bhagavad Gītā 9.4 - mamaivāṁśo jīva-loke jīva-bhūtaḥ sanātanaḥ - "The living entities in this conditioned world are My eternal fragments."

The jīvas are part of the totality, the samāhāra, that is Ishvara.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10 - brahma vā idamagra āsīt, tadātmānamevāvet, aham brahmāsmīti | "This (self) was indeed brahman in the beginning. It knew only I as 'I am Brahmaṇ.' Therefore It became all."

The word samāhāra aligns perfectly with the mokṣa-centric view that jīva, jagat, Ishvara, and mokṣa are simultaneous, spontaneous manifestations of the one Param (the ultimate reality).

The samāhāra here represents the spontaneous play (līlā) of Paramāśiva manifesting as multiple forms and states - the individual souls moving through 25 states of consciousness, the cosmos expressing itself as jagat, and Ishvara acting as the conscious intelligence underlying all.

This sūtra reinforces the understanding that all these diverse forms and states are not fundamentally separate but part of a cosmic samāhāra, an all-encompassing unity.

The sūtra also implies the necessity of integration or synthesis to grasp the unity behind multiplicity, which is the essence of Paramādvaita philosophy: the one truth underlying the many appearances.

It also supports the notion that from the point of view of mokṣa, the separateness of jīva, Ishvara, and jagat dissolves because they are all part of the same samāhāra - the whole reality experienced as one.

गुणसाधारण्यश्रुतेश्च ॥ ३.३.६४॥

guṇasādhāraṇyaśruteśca || 3.3.64 ||

And due to the Śruti (teaching) the commonality of attributes.

In Paramādvaita all manifestations - jīva, Īśvara, jagat - are expressions of the same substratum (Paramāśiva). Their shared guṇas like cit (consciousness), sat (existence), and ānanda (bliss) point to their ontological unity. These shared qualities are not accidental; they are intrinsic signs of their common source - the one manifesting as many.

From the jīva's standpoint, you experience consciousness and desire for bliss. These are not unique to you - they are shared with Īśvara, proving non-difference.

From Īśvara's standpoint, even as the cosmic ruler, Īśvara expresses the same guṇas as jīva - He too is conscious, blissful, and engaged in līlā (divine play).

From jagat's standpoint, the world, though inert in parts, mirrors these guṇas in its sustaining intelligence and cosmic order.

न वा तत्सहभावश्रुतेः ॥ ३.३.६५॥

na vā tatsahabhāvaśruteḥ || 3.3.65 ||

Or rather, not (so), due to Śruti (denying) their co-existence.

This sūtra responds to a possible Purvapakṣa (opponent view):
Even if jīva and Īśvara share qualities (guṇasādhāraṇya, per the previous sūtra), does that mean they coexist equally as realities? The answer as per Advaita is no. Why? Because śruti does not affirm equal and simultaneous ontological status to both. Īśvara is real from the vyāvahārika (empirical) standpoint. Jīva is ultimately non-different from Brahman, but his separate existence is an appearance (due to avidyā). The śruti, while sometimes teaching through dualistic models, does not assert lasting co-existence of jīva and Brahman as dual realities. Hence, "na vā tat-saha-bhāvaḥ" - their simultaneous real existence is denied by śruti.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.7.1- asadvā idamagra āsīt | tato vai sadajāyata |tadātmāna svayamakuruta | tasmāttatsukṛtamucyata iti | yadvai tat sukṛtam | raso vai saḥ | rasaghyevāyaṃ labdhvā"nandī bhavati | ko hyevānyātkaḥ prāṇyāt | yadeṣa ākāśa ānando na syāt | eṣa hyevā"nandayāti | yadā hyevaiṣa etasminnadṛśye'nātmye'nirukte'nilayane'bhayaṃ pratiṣṭhāṃ vindate . atha so'bhayaṃ gato bhavati | yadā hyevaiṣa etasminnudaramantaraṃ kurute | atha tasya bhayaṃ bhavati | tatveva bhayaṃ viduṣo'manvānasya | "In the beginning was verily this Non-existence. From that the existent was born. That created Itself, by Itself. Therefore, It is called the Self-made, or the Well-made. This which was Self-made… that is taste (joy). Having obtained this taste man becomes blessed, for who can breathe out or breathe in, if this joy were not there in the cavity of the heart; and this Brahman himself brings us joy. When this Ātman attains the fearless oneness with Brahman who is invisible, incorporeal, inexplicable, and unsupported, then he becomes free from fear. When however, this makes even the slightest distinction in Brahman, then there is danger for him. That very same Brahman Himself becomes the source fo fear for him who makes a difference, and who reflects not."

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra is not a denial of reality of jīva or Īśvara - but a denial of dualistic co-existence. The sahabhāva (simultaneous separateness) of jīva and Īśvara is not ultimately affirmed. Rather, śruti reveals that jīva and Īśvara are one, differing only by perception based on levels of conscious coherence. What is affirmed is the non-dual, simultaneous manifestation (anugraha-līlā) of Paramāśiva as jīva, jagat, and Īśvara - not as separate, but as synergistic expressions.

दर्शनाच्च ॥ ३.३.६६॥

darśanācca || 3.3.66 ||

And because of scripture (darśana), too.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.5 - tamevaikaṃ jānatha ātmānamanyā vāco vimuñcathāmṛtasyaiṣa setuḥ | "Know that non-dual Ātman alone and give up all other talk. He is the bridge to Immortality."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7 - tattvamasi śvetaketo "That thou art, O Śvetaketu"

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra is a direct affirmation of the experiential oneness of all existences as Paramāśiva.

The Upaniṣads do not merely describe an abstract Brahman, but reveal a lived truth: All this is Paramāśiva appearing in manifold forms. So duality is neither affirmed nor denied - it is transcended.

From the space of Shuddhādvaita Anubhava, the darśana is: "There is no 'two' to coexist - all that exists is Paramāśiva expressing in infinite ways."

इति श्रीमत्कृष्णद्वैपायनकृत ब्रह्मसूत्रेषु तृतीयाध्यायस्य तृतीयः पादः समाप्तः

iti śrīmat kṛṣṇadvaipāyanakṛta brahmasūtreṣu tṛtīyādhyāyasya tṛtīyaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

Thus ends the third pāda (section) of the third adhyāya (chapter) in the Brahmasūtras composed by Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana.

पुरुषार्थोऽतः शब्दादिति बादरायणः ॥ ३.४.१॥

puruṣārtho'taḥ śabdāditi bādarāyaṇaḥ || 3.4.1 ||

Therefore, the supreme purpose of human life (puruṣārtha) is known from the scriptures - so declares Bādarāyaṇa.

This sūtra addresses potential objections that rituals or other goals (e.g., dharma, artha, kāma) could independently lead to liberation, emphasizing mokṣa as the supreme aim.

The fourth pāda begins by addressing whether karma (rituals) or upāsanās alone can lead to mokṣa, or whether vidyā is essential. Sūtra 3.4.1 establishes that mokṣa is the ultimate puruṣārtha, achievable only through vidyā, as confirmed by Śruti.

Puruṣārthaḥ is not just liberation from something (e.g. saṁsāra), but liberation into the highest conscious space - turīyātīta-turīyātīta, where jīva, jagat, and Īśvara are known as spontaneous, synergistic, and simultaneous manifestations of Paramāśiva.

Ataḥ śabdāt means this truth is revealed by the superconscious downloads of ṛṣis, which is what the Veda is - not a set of man-made rules, but spontaneous truths revealed by awakened beings.

From the jīva's PoV, you discover mokṣa as your own highest state, where even God and the universe are seen as states of your consciousness.

From the Īśvara's PoV, mokṣa is the unbroken continuity of sat-cit-ānanda - the play without loss of identity.

From the jagat's PoV, mokṣa is the return to stillness - the cosmic fire-particle merging back into the fire-column.

From the mokṣa PoV, everything was always One, and puruṣārtha is the remembrance and re-living of this eternal Oneness.

Puruṣārthaḥ is to reside again and again in your superconscious state and to live consciously in the vertical time zone of Kailāsa, radiating Paramāśiva, consciously playing with the jagat, manifesting powers (śaktis), and experiencing no break in the state of bliss.

शेषत्वात्पुरुषार्थवादो यथाऽन्येष्विति जैमिनिः ॥ ३.४.२॥

śeṣatvātpuruṣārthavādo yathā'nyeṣviti jaiminiḥ || 3.4.2 ||

Because it is subordinate, it (the scriptural injunction) should be interpreted as serving the purpose of the person (puruṣārtha), just as in other cases - so says Jaimini.

Sūtra 3.4.1 established that mokṣa, the ultimate puruṣārtha (human goal), is attained through vidyā, as per Śruti, according to Bādarāyaṇa. Sūtra 3.4.2 addresses a potential objection from the Pūrva Mīmāṃsā school, which prioritizes karma as the means to all puruṣārthas, including mokṣa. Jaimini, the author of the Mīmāṃsā Sūtras, is cited here to represent this view, but the Brahma Sūtra refutes it by clarifying that karma is subsidiary (śeṣatvāt) to vidyā and serves lower goals (dharma, artha, kāma), as seen in other Hindu contexts (yathā'nyeṣu). The sūtra reinforces that mokṣa requires vidyā, not karma alone, aligning with the mokṣa-centric focus of the Brahma Sūtras.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.12 - parīkṣya lokān karmacitān brāhmaṇo nirvedamāyāt – "After having examined all these worlds that are gained by works, acquire freedom from desires"

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.23 - nāyamātmā pravacanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena – "This Ātman cannot be attained by the study of the Vedas, or by intelligence, or by much hearing of sacred books"

आचारदर्शनात् ॥ ३.४.३॥

ācāradarśanāt || 3.4.3 ||

Because (scripture) shows the practice (of knowledge or meditation by those seeking liberation).

Great ṛṣis like Yājñavalkya, Śvetaketu, and others attained mokṣa through knowledge, not through karma.

The Upaniṣads glorify direct knowledge and renunciation, not ritual performance, as the means to liberation.

So, ācāra (practice) - observed in scriptural stories - supports knowledge as the primary, independent path.

तच्छ्रुतेः ॥ ३.४.४॥

tacchruteḥ || 3.4.4 ||

Because the Śruti declare so.

This sūtra reinforces the prior one (3.4.3) by further affirming that knowledge is independently enjoined by the śruti.

Bādarāyaṇa replies to the Mīmāṃsaka idea that knowledge is a subsidiary to ritual action.

Here, he simply says: "Because the scriptures teach that" - i.e., because the Upaniṣads directly enjoin knowledge for mokṣa, not as part of a ritual but as an independent means.

If the Śāstra has said it, if the Guru has lived it, you can just fall into it - that is tattva-pramāṇa.

The Mahāvākyas are not poetic metaphors or ritual instructions. They are existential truths — like software code embedded in your consciousness, waiting to be executed by listening (śravaṇa). So śruti (śabda) becomes the living catalyst for the blossoming of Paramādvaita in you.

समन्वारम्भणात् ॥ ३.४.५॥

samanvārambhaṇāt || 3.4.5 ||

Because of the commencement (with consistent teaching).

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1 - brahmavidāpnoti param | tadeṣā'bhyuktā | satyaṃ jñānamanantaṃ brahma | yo veda nihitaṃ guhāyāṃ parame vyoman | so'śnute sarvān kāmānsaha | brahmaṇā vipaściteti || "The knower of Brahman reaches the Supreme. On that, this has been chanted: 'Real, Consciousness, Infinite is Brahman.'. Whosoever knoweth the one hid in the cave in the highest heaven attains all desires together, as Brahman, as the Wise."

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.1.5 - tatrāparā ṛgvedo yajurvedaḥ sāmavedo'tharvavedaḥ śikṣā kalpo vyākaraṇaṃ niruktaṃ chando jyotiṣamiti | atha parā yayā tadakṣaramadhigamyate || "Of these two, the lower knowledge is the Rig-Veda, the Yagur-Veda, the Sāma-Veda, the Atharva-Veda, Śikṣā (phonetics), kalpa (rituals), vyakaranam (grammar), nirukta (etymology), chhandas (metre) and jyotis (astronomy); and the Higher Knowledge is that by which the Imperishable Brahman is attained."

This sūtra continues the affirmation that knowledge is independently valid and not a mere subsidiary of rituals. Here, Bādarāyaṇa cites the way the Upaniṣads begin (ārambha) with Brahmavidyā, reinforcing its primary status.

The Upaniṣads systematically begin with Brahman as the subject - not rituals. Hence, the purpose (puruṣārtha) is clearly Self-knowledge, not ritual outcomes.

The scriptures systematically begin and align around Brahmavidyā - which proves its primacy.

तद्वतो विधानात् ॥ ३.४.६॥

tadvato vidhānāt || 3.4.6 ||

Due to the scriptural injunction for one who possesses that.

This sūtra addresses an objection: "If knowledge alone leads to mokṣa, why do some śruti passages prescribe actions for the knower of Brahman?"

Even if such vidhi (injunctions) exist, they are meant for the knower, not to imply that knowledge is insufficient - but to refine or support the inner state post-realization.

Such injunctions are not primary but secondary, meant to guide the conduct of the jñānī. The mokṣa arises from knowledge alone (jñānamātra mokṣa-kāraṇatva), not from post-knowledge rituals or actions.

So, "tadvato vidhānāt" implies that the prescription is for someone who already possesses knowledge (tadvān) - not as a path to attain knowledge or mokṣa.

नियमाच्च ॥ ३.४.७॥

niyamācca || 3.4.7 ||

And on account of the prescribed rules.

Here, niyamāc ca points to the conscious lifestyle disciplines of an enlightened being - such as: Non-violence (ahiṁsā), radiating integrity (satya), offering gratitude (pujā), enriching others (jagat-hita). So, in Paramādvaita, the message is: Since even the enlightened are given conscious disciplines, it proves these are expressions of mokṣa, not means to it.

अधिकोपदेशात्तु बादरायणस्यैवं तद्दर्शनात् ॥ ३.४.८॥

adhikopadeśāttu bādarāyaṇasyaivaṃ taddarśanāt || 3.4.8 ||

But because of the teaching of something additional, (it is) thus according to Bādarāyaṇa, for that is seen (in the śruti).

Here, Bādarāyaṇa holds that this is because the scriptures teach additional injunctions (adhikopadeśa) directed at the knower. This means something beyond mere knowledge is being guided, like ethical living, detachment, or benefiting the world.

The liberated jīva may still be instructed to act, but not for gaining mokṣa - rather for lokasaṅgraha (welfare of the world). Therefore, mokṣa is not dependent on action, but post-realization conduct may still be enjoined. Because such teachings are seen in the Upaniṣads (e.g., telling the jñānī to practice self-control, etc.)

Mokṣa anubhūti integrates jñāna, bhakti, and vijñāna via dīkṣā, culminating in turīyatīta-turīyatīta.

तुल्यं तु दर्शनम् ॥ ३.४.९॥

tulyaṃ tu darśanam || 3.4.9 ||

But the declarations of the Śruti equally support both views.

Paramādvaita perspective views the Brahma Sūtras as a practical guide to mokṣa anubhūti (experiential liberation), perceiving jīva, īśvara, and jagat as simultaneous, spontaneous manifestations of Paramaśiva. Sūtra 3.4.9 acknowledges Jaimini's view but reaffirms that vidyā, empowered by dīkṣā, is the superior means to mokṣa.

From the jīva's perspective, navigating the 25 states of consciousness, preparatory practices like ācāra and karma purify the body-mind, but vidyā and dīkṣā awaken turīyatīta-turīyatīta.

असार्वत्रिकी ॥ ३.४.१०॥

asārvatrikī || 3.4.10 ||

The declaration is not universal.

(The rule) is not universal.

Jñāna expresses as powerful action, but not out of necessity or incompleteness. "Asārvatrikī" affirms that not all enlightened beings behave the same way - there's no uniform expression. Enlightenment doesn't standardize behavior - it liberates it into authenticity.

Hence, some jñānīs may withdraw, some may engage in kingly duties (like Janaka); some may teach (like Yājñavalkya), some may remain in silence (like Dakṣiṇāmūrti).

The outer action is not a sign of bondage, nor its absence a sign of freedom. Thus, "asārvatrikī" means there is no universal pattern of conduct post-enlightenment - only conscious expression of the divine līlā.

Bhagavad Gītā 3.17 - "yasya sarve samārambhāḥ kāmasaṅkalpavarjitāḥ…" The knower of Self is free from binding desire, and has nothing to gain or lose from action.

The preparatory practices (e.g., ācāra, karma, upāsanās) are asārvatrikī - not universally required - for vidyā or mokṣa, as their necessity depends on the seeker's spiritual maturity.

विभागः शतवत् ॥ ३.४.११॥

vibhāgaḥ śatavat || 3.4.11 ||

The distinction (of practices) is like a hundred (variable).

This further elaborates that the practices vary (vibhāgaḥ) among seekers, like portions of a hundred (śatavat), depending on their spiritual maturity and needs.

Vibhāgaḥ refers to the differentiation or variation in the type, extent, or intensity of preparatory practices (ācāra, karma, upāsanās) required by seekers. Śatavat uses the analogy of a hundred units divided into varying portions to indicate that practices are tailored to the seeker's mental purity and spiritual maturity. For example, a beginner may need extensive ācāra (e.g., truthfulness, non-violence) and karma to purify the mind (satyaṃ vada, dharmaṃ cara, Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.1.5), while an advanced seeker with innate viveka may require minimal practices, focusing directly on vidyā (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7).

अध्ययनमात्रवतः ॥ ३.४.१२॥

adhyayanamātravataḥ || 3.4.12 ||

For one who possesses mere study (of the Vedas).

Sūtra 3.4.12 specifies that for certain seekers, adhyayanamātra (mere study of the Vedas) is sufficient to qualify for vidyā, indicating that extensive rituals or practices may not be necessary for those who have thoroughly studied Śruti.

Mere study (adhyayana-mātra), without understanding (jñāna) or realization (aparokṣānubhūti), does not lead to liberation. One may memorize all four Vedas, but without viveka (discrimination) and Self-inquiry, one remains unliberated.

This sūtra critiques superficial scholarship - knowledge must become Self-realization, not just recitation.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.12 - parīkṣya lokān karmacitān brāhmaṇo nirvedamāyānnāstyakṛtaḥ kṛtena | tadvijñānārthaṃ sa gurumevābhigacchet samitpāṇiḥ śrotriyaṃ brahmaniṣṭham || "Let a brahmin, after having examined all these worlds that are gained by works, acquire freedom from desires: nothing that is eternal can be produced by what is not eternal. In order that he may understand that Eternal, let him, fuel in hand, approach a guru who is well versed in the Vedas and always devoted to Brahman."

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.23 - nāyamātmā pravacanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena | yamevaiṣa vṛṇute tena labhyaḥ tasyaiṣa ātmā vivṛṇute tanūgm svām || "This Ātman cannot be attained by the study of the Vedas, or by intelligence, or by much hearing of sacred books. It is attained by him alone whom It chooses. To such a one Ātman reveals Its own form."

नाविशेषात् ॥ ३.४.१३॥

nāviśeṣāt || 3.4.13 ||

Not (so), due to non-distinction.

There is no specific distinction (nāviśeṣāt) restricting eligibility for Hindu study, implying that access to vidyā is not limited by rigid qualifications beyond the study itself.

A person with only adhyayana but without jñāna (Self-knowledge) is not different from a person who hasn't studied at all - in terms of liberation. Hindu study alone does not differentiate a jñānī (realized being) from an ajñānī (ignorant one). Therefore, no special status or eligibility arises from study without realization.

Vidyā is accessible to sincere seekers, as seen in examples like Śvetaketu (Chāndogya Upaniṣad) or Satyakāma Jābāla (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 4.4), who were accepted for study based on their sincerity, not rigid criteria.

स्तुतयेऽनुमतिर्वा ॥ ३.४.१४॥

stutaye'numatirvā || 3.4.14 ||

(The mention of certain actions) is either for the sake of praise, or merely permissive.

The purpose of Hindu study, suggesting it may be for stuti (praise of the divine) or anumati (gaining divine consent or approval), indicating that study serves multiple purposes beyond direct vidyā but ultimately supports mokṣa.

Stutaye — these acts are glorified to inspire sincerity and steadiness.

Anumatiḥ — they are permitted, but not binding for the spiritually mature.

This keeps the path inclusive without compromising mokṣa's absolute non-dual nature.

कामकारेण चैके ॥ ३.४.१५॥

kāmakāreṇa caike || 3.4.15 ||

Moreover, some [prescribe these acts] as optional, done by one's own desire.

Some Hindu teachers believe that rituals and secondary actions can be done kāmakāreṇa - as desired, not mandatory. These are not binding duties, nor are they essential for liberation.

Bhagavad Gītā 5.2 - saṃnyāsaḥ karmayogaśca niḥśreyasakarāvubhau "Renunciation of action and YOGA -of-action both lead to the highest bliss."

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 1.11.1 - śiṣyānuśāsanam vedamanūcyācāryontevāsinamanuśāsti | satyaṃ vada | dharmaṃ cara | svādhyāyānmā pramadaḥ | ācāryāya priyaṃ dhanamāhṛtya prajātantuṃ mā vyavacchetsīḥ | satyānna pramaditavyam | dharmānna pramaditavyam | kuśalānnapramaditavyam | bhūtyai na pramaditavyam | svādhyāyapravacanābhyāṃ na pramaditavyam || "Having taught the Vedas, the Guru enjoins the pupils: 'Speak the truth, do your duty, never swerve from the study of the Vedas, do not cut off the line of descendants in your family, after giving the Guru the fee he desires. Never err from truth, never fall from duty, never overlook your own welfare, never neglect your prosperity, never neglect the study and the propagation of the Vedas."

उपमर्दं च ॥ ३.४.१६॥

upamardaṃ ca || 3.4.16 ||

And (it leads to) suppression.

Sūtra 3.4.16 adds that these practices, including Hindu study, lead to upamardam (suppression of negative tendencies or impurities), facilitating the path to vidyā and mokṣa. This sūtra underscores the purificatory role of practices while maintaining the mokṣa-centric focus on vidyā's primacy.

Upamardaṃ ca indicates that practices such as Hindu study, righteous conduct (satyaṃ vada, dharmaṃ cara, Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.1.5), and upāsanās suppress negative tendencies (e.g., kāma, krodha, avidyā) that veil the jīva's true nature. Ca connects this to prior sūtras, emphasizing that purification is a key outcome of practices, enabling clarity for vidyā (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7). Śruti emphasizes that vidyā leads to mokṣa (vidyayā vindati amṛtam, Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 4.4.23), and practices cultivate qualities like śama (mental control) and dama (sense control), facilitating śravaṇa, manana, and nididhyāsana.

ūrdhvaretassu ca śabde hi || 3.4.17 ||

And indeed, in the scriptures, (it is prescribed) for those who with upward directed energy (sanyāsis).

Sūtra 3.4.17 specifies that Śruti (śabde) prescribes practices, particularly Hindu study, for those who practice brahmacarya (ūrdhvaretassu), emphasizing celibacy as a supportive discipline for vidyā.

Brahmacharya, alongside practices like Hindu study, suppresses desires and enhances viveka, preparing the seeker for vidyā (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7). Śruti emphasizes that vidyā leads to mokṣa (vidyayā vindati amṛtam, Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 4.4.23), and brahmacarya supports śravaṇa, manana, and nididhyāsana. The jīva, through disciplined practices, attains jñāna, realizes Paramaśivoham.

परामर्शं जैमिनिरचोदना चापवदिति हि ॥ ३.४.१८॥

parāmarśaṃ jaiminiracodanā cāpavaditi hi || 3.4.18 ||

Jaimini (holds that it is) contemplation, and indeed, (it is) not an injunction, as (scripture) denies (its obligatory nature).

Parāmarśam refers to meditative contemplation of Hindu teachings, such as reflecting on Upaniṣadic statements (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7). Jaiminiḥ indicates Jaimini's view, rooted in Pūrva Mīmāṃsā, that such contemplation is a voluntary practice, not a scriptural injunction (acodanā). Apavadati hi confirms that Śruti denies their obligatory nature, emphasizing flexibility for seekers.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.11 - tapaḥśraddhe ye hyupavasantyaraṇye śāntā vidvāṃso bhaikṣyacaryāṃ carantaḥ | sūryadvāreṇa te virajāḥ prayānti yatrāmṛtaḥ sa puruṣo hyavyayātmā || "But those wise men of tranquil minds who lives in the forest on alms, practising penances appropriate to their stations of life and contemplating such deities as Hiranyagarbha, depart, freed from impurities, by the Path of the Sun, to the place where that immortal Person dwells whose nature is imperishable."

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.3 - dhanur gṛhītvaupaniṣadaṃ mahāstraṃ śaraṃ hyupāsā niśitaṃ sandhayīta | āyamya tadbhāvagatena cetasā lakṣyaṃ tadevākṣaraṃ somya viddhi || "Take the Upaniṣad as the bow, the great weapon and place upon it the arrow sharpened by meditation. Then, having drawn it back with a mind directed to the thought of Brahman, strike that mark, O my good friend-that which is the Imperishable."

अनुष्ठेयं बादरायणः साम्यश्रुतेः ॥ ३.४.१९॥

anuṣṭheyaṃ bādarāyaṇaḥ sāmyaśruteḥ || 3.4.19 ||

Bādarāyaṇa holds that (rites) are to be performed, because of the equality (or similarity) in the śruti.

Sūtra 3.4.19 clarifies Bādarāyaṇa's view that practices are to be performed, as Śruti supports their equal validity. Bādarāyaṇaḥ indicates Bādarāyaṇa's view, which contrasts with Jaimini's non-obligatory stance, asserting that practices are necessary for purification. Sāmyaśruteḥ points to Śruti texts that treat practices as equally valid means to prepare for vidyā (tat tvam asi, Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7), such as those prescribing study and meditation for all seekers. Combined with dīkṣā, practices lead to turīyatīta-turīyatīta,

विधिर्वा धारणवत् ॥ ३.४.२०॥

vidhirvā dhāraṇavat || 3.4.20 ||

Or it (i.e., the statements about action) is an injunction, like in the case of dhāraṇā (mental retention).

Bhagavad Gītā 6.10 - yogī yuñjīta satatamātmānaṃ rahasi sthitaḥ ekākī yatacittātmā nirāśīraparigrahaḥ || "Let the yogi try constantly to keep the mind steady, remaining in solitude, alone, with the mind and body controlled, free from hope and greed."

स्तुतिमात्रमुपादानादिति चेन्नापूर्वत्वात् ॥ ३.४.२१॥

stutimātramupādānāditi cennāpūrvatvāt || 3.4.21 ||

If it be said that (the scriptural statement) is merely for praise because it is mentioned (in connection), (we say) no—because it reveals something not previously known (apūrva).

In sūtra 3.4.20, it was said that certain statements may be injunctions (vidhi), like those related to dhāraṇā. Now an objector says: "No, those are just praise statements (stuti-mātram), not injunctions. They are included only to glorify knowledge."

The Sūtrakāra says: "No — na apūrvatvāt — because they reveal something apūrva (not known by any other means), they must be injunctions, not mere praise."

The function of śruti is to reveal apūrva tattva - truth not accessible to senses or logic. If a statement adds something new to be done, it is not just praise - it has injunctive force. Thus, statements about upāsanās, dhāraṇā, or meditation, even if they seem like praise, are vidhis if they convey new sādhanās needed for preparation. Statements that sound like stuti but bring about apūrva anubhava (new experience of Paramādvaita) are to be lived - they are vidhi. The inner alignment and conscious decision to internalize those revelations is the true injunction.

In Paramādvaita, there is no rigid separation between knowledge and action - jnāna becomes karma when lived consciously.

भावशब्दाच्च ॥ ३.४.२२॥

bhāvaśabdācca || 3.4.22 ||

And (it is an injunction) because of the usage of verbs indicating existence or becoming.

This sūtra continues the reasoning from the previous one (3.4.21), where it was said that certain scriptural statements cannot be dismissed as mere praise, because they convey apūrva (something previously unknown), and hence should be taken as injunctions.

Now, another supporting reason is given: The use of bhāva-śabdas (verbs of action or being) in those scriptural passages also shows that they are not just praising but prescribing.

In Hindu hermeneutics, bhāva-śabda means: Verbs like bhavati (becomes), syāt (may be), vidyate (exists), etc., that show change, becoming, or happening. These imply an action or a result—a transformation that must be caused by some practice or effort.

Thus, when scripture says: "saḥ brahma bhavati" - "He becomes Brahman" or "āmṛtatvam eti" — "He attains immortality", these are not just poetic praises, but statements of result implying a means to be practiced. Hence, they support injunctions, not just stuti.

So, when scripture says: "brahmavid āpnoti param" - "The knower of Brahman attains the Supreme", it is not passive knowledge - it commands a conscious process of initiation into knowledge, embodying the frequency, manifesting the space of Brahman. Thus, bhāva-śabdas serve as spiritually catalytic instructions, not just observations.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1 - brahmavidāpnoti param | tadeṣā'bhyuktā | satyaṃ jñānamanantaṃ brahma | yo veda nihitaṃ guhāyāṃ parame vyoman | so'śnute sarvān kāmānsaha | brahmaṇā vipaściteti || "The knower of Brahman reaches the Supreme. On that, this has been chanted: 'Real, Consciousness, Infinite is Brahman'. Whosoever knoweth the one hid in the cave in the highest heaven attains all desires together, as Brahman, as the Wise.

पारिप्लवार्था इति चेन्न विशेषितत्वात् ॥ ३.४.२३॥

pāriplavārthā iti cenna viśeṣitatvāt || 3.4.23 ||

If it be said (that such statements) are for the purpose of pāriplava (ritual praise), (we say) no — because they are specifically qualified (with purposeful intent).

A distinction is made between arthavāda (praise, glorification) and vidhi (injunction). If a passage uses precise terminology, with context indicating results of practice, it is taken seriously as a spiritual directive.

The śruti is consciously designed to awaken the higher state of Paramāśiva in the jīva. It is deliberate - Śabda Brahman guiding you to Svarūpa.

तथा चैकवाक्योपबन्धात् ॥ ३.४.२४॥

tathā caikavākyopabandhāt || 3.4.24 ||

And thus, because (those statements) are connected in one consistent sentence (or unified context).

Here, the reasoning is:

The passages are part of a unified textual framework. They form one coherent vākyam (sentence/teaching unit). So, interpreting only part of it as meaningful (vidhi) and the rest as decorative (stuti) is illogical.

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra validates the revelation-based cognition that every word of the śruti is a direct download from Paramāśiva, and its flow is designed not just to convey but to initiate transformation.

Thus, the unity of the Hindu statements is not grammatical alone - it is ontological. The śabda-flow is a continuum of conscious frequency, meant to entrain your being into Paramāśiva.

So, when the Upaniṣads say, "He who knows Brahman becomes Brahman," it is a multi-layered instruction encoded in one conscious transmission (ekavākya).

अत एव चाग्नीन्धनाद्यनपेक्षा ॥ ३.४.२५॥

ata eva cāgnīndhanādyanapekṣā || 3.4.25 ||

For this very reason, there is no dependence on fire, fuel, and such (ritualistic requisites).

Kaivalya Uaniṣad 1.3 - na karmaṇā na prajayā dhanena tyāgenaike amṛtatvamānaśuḥ | pareṇa nākaṃ nihitaṃ guhāyāṃ vibhrajate yadyatayo viśanti || 3 || "Not by actions, nor by progeny, nor by wealth, but by renunciation alone is attained immortality. That supreme abode of truth, hidden in the cave (of the heart), shines resplendent - which those wise renunciates enter."

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.12 - parīkṣya lokān karmacitān brāhmaṇo nirvedamāyānnāstyakṛtaḥ kṛtena | tadvijñānārthaṃ sa gurumevābhigacchet samitpāṇiḥ śrotriyaṃ brahmaniṣṭham || "Let a brahmin, after having examined all these worlds that are gained by works, acquire freedom from desires: nothing that is eternal can be produced by what is not eternal. In order that he may understand that Eternal, let him, fuel in hand, approach a guru who is well versed in the Vedas and always devoted to Brahman."

Agni, indhana, etc., symbolize the dependence on external fire - whereas the jñāni is burning with internal fire (jñānāgni). From the PoV of mokṣa, jīva does not need to do anything. Instead, he realizes that he is, was, and always will be non-separate from Īśvara and jagat - all are spontaneous expressions of Paramāśiva.

This sūtra affirms the absolute autonomy of the seeker in the realm of pure consciousness. There is no dependence on external apparatus or performance. Even the ritual fires are within, and true yajña is the inner transmutation through remembrance and oneness.

From the PoV of mokṣa: jīva, Īśvara, jagat - all three are simultaneous, synergistic, spontaneous manifestations of Paramāśiva. Even when you think they are separate, they were never separate.

सर्वापेक्षा च यज्ञादिश्रुतेः अश्ववत् ॥ ३.४.२६॥

sarvāpekṣā ca yajñādiśruteḥ aśvavat || 3.4.26 ||

And there is total dependence (on all accessories), because of the scriptural injunctions regarding sacrifice and the like - as in the case of the horse (in the Aśvamedha yajña).

This sūtra emphasizes that ritual actions (like yajña) depend on multiple external requisites - mantras, materials, priests, time, place, etc. Just like the horse in the Aśvamedha yajña is only one part of a vast set of requirements.

Just like the horse is symbolic of prāṇa śakti, so too in Paramādvaita the focus is on awakening inner energies. The yajña agni is also the inner fire of conscious transformation - Kundalinī awakening, inner yajña of unclutching, and power manifestation.

शमदमाद्युपेतः स्यात्तथाऽपि तु तद्विधेस्तदङ्गतया तेषामवश्यानुष्ठेयत्वात् ॥ ३.४.२७॥

śamadamādyupetaḥ syāttathā'pi tu tadvidhestadaṅgatayā teṣāmavaśyānuṣṭheyatvāt || 3.4.27 ||

One must be endowed with śama, dama, and the like; even so, because they are limbs of the injunction (regarding knowledge), they are necessarily to be practiced.

This sūtra emphasizes that inner disciplines like śama (tranquility), dama (control of senses), uparati (withdrawal), titikṣā (endurance), śraddhā (faith), and samādhāna (concentration) are not optional, but essential and integral parts of the pursuit of brahmavidyā (Self-knowledge).

They are not standalone actions, but serve as aṅgas (limbs) to the main vidhi (injunction) to gain jñāna — and hence are mandatory.

For the dawn of jñāna, the mind must be pure and steady. Hence, the ṣaṭ-sampatti (sixfold inner wealth) like śama, dama, etc., must be necessarily cultivated - they are not karma leading to mokṣa, but prerequisites for jñāna niṣṭhā. These are not mere preparatory disciplines; they are inseparable aspects of the jñāna path itself.

In Paramādvaita, śama and dama are not seen as moralistic suppressions, but as breakthroughs of completion (poornatva). True śama is unclutching from thought patterns; dama is conscious decision to hold space rather than be driven by senses. These qualities are inseparable from the initiation-based enlightenment path, and hence, mandatorily practiced. Paramādvaita holds that such disciplines are not preliminary but manifest actively as the field where the higher initiations and superconscious mutations become stable. Therefore, these are experiential expressions of living enlightenment, not just sādhanā techniques.

सर्वान्नानुमतिश्च प्राणात्यये तद्दर्शनात् ॥ ३.४.२८॥

sarvānnānumatiśca prāṇātyaye taddarśanāt || 3.4.28 ||

All (actions and results) are approved (overridden) at the cessation of prāṇa (death) because of the realization (darśana) of that (Self).

All prescribed duties and permissions dissolve because the jīva recognizes its true nature as Paramāśiva, transcending all actions and consequences. The moment of prāṇa-atyaya is not just physical death but the transcendental shift in consciousness due to realization.

अबाधाच्च ॥ ३.४.२९॥

abādhācca || 3.4.29 ||

And (there is) no obstacle (abādhā).

This sūtra confirms the fundamental principle that the state of Brahman or Self-realization is free from all obstacles. Any seeming obstacles exist only in ignorance (avidyā). Once the jīva attains realization, there is no obstruction to liberation.

From the Paramādvaita viewpoint, the non-obstruction (abādhā) affirms the nature of the Self as spontaneous and absolute consciousness - Paramāśiva.

अपि स्मर्यते ॥ ३.४.३०॥

api smaryate || 3.4.30 ||

Even (this) is remembered (or taken into account).

From Paramādvaita's mokṣa-centric view, this sūtra emphasizes that the seeker must keep in constant remembrance (smaraṇa) the ultimate reality and the truths revealed.

Even when obstacles are transcended (abādhā), the consciousness must remain aware of its unity with Paramāśiva and maintain the cognition of mokṣa.

This constant remembrance supports the continuous living experience of turīyātīta — the state beyond the fourth (waking, dreaming, deep sleep, and beyond).

It is a reminder that the jīva, the īśvara, and the jagat must be remembered from the Paramādvaita standpoint to live mokṣa fully and integrally.

शब्दश्चातोऽकामचारे ॥ ३.४.३१॥

śabdaścāto'kāmacāre || 3.4.31 ||

And (there is) scriptural authority therefore in the case of non-desire-based action.

This sūtra affirms the validity of Hindu action (karma) even when performed without personal desire, purely as niṣkāma karma (desireless action). The śabda (śruti) supports and authorizes such action as helpful or preparatory to self-knowledge (jñāna). Naishkarmya (freedom from karma) does not mean total renunciation of all actions, but performance of action in non-doership, guided by śruti and for purification of the mind. In the space of ultimate oneness (mokṣa), action flows naturally not from desire but from compassion, responsibility, and integrity, and even such actions are rooted in the authority of the Veda. Thus, akāmacāra is not inaction, but action from completion—nishkriya yet actively contributing to the loka-saṅgraha (welfare of the world).

Bhagavad Gītā 3.19 - tasmād asaktaḥ satataṃ kāryaṃ karma samācara "Therefore, always perform your obligatory duty without attachment."

Bhagavad Gītā 2.47 - karmaṇyevādhikāraste mā phaleṣu kadācana | mā karmaphalaheturbhūrmā te saṅgo'stvakarmaṇi || "Thy right is to work only, but never to its fruits; let not the fruit-of-action be thy motive, nor let thy attachment be to inaction."

Desire-driven actions stem from the Jīva's identification with lower states of consciousness, binding it to samsara. By aligning with śabda (divine guidance), the Jīva transcends desire, awakening to its inherent sat-chit-ānanda (existence-consciousness-bliss) nature. This aligns with conscious epigenetics, where superconscious practices transform the Jīva's DNA expression, enabling kāyakalpa (longevity and conscious control over the body).

विहितत्वाच्चाश्रमकर्मापि ॥ ३.४.३२॥

vihitatvāccāśramakarmāpi || 3.4.32 ||

And the duties of the āśrama (are to be performed), because they are enjoined (by the scriptures).

The authority of āśrama-karma (duties of the stages of life) stems from their prescription in the Vedas (śabda pramana). The Vedas outline specific duties for each āśrama—brahmacharya (student life), grihastha (householder life), vanaprastha (retired life), and sannyāsa (renunciate life) - to purify the mind and prepare the Jīva for self-realization.

Āśrama-karma: These duties include studying the Vedas (brahmacharya), performing sacrifices and charity (grihastha), practicing austerity and contemplation (vanaprastha), and focusing on meditation and renunciation (sannyāsa). By following these, the Jīva progresses through stages of life, reducing attachment and cultivating viveka (discrimination) and vairagya (detachment), which are essential for Mokṣa. The term "also" indicates that āśrama-karma complements other spiritual practices (e.g., karma yoga, Jñāna yoga) prescribed by the Vedas. Even for those pursuing knowledge (Jñāna), performing prescribed duties purifies the mind, making it fit for realizing Brahman.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 2.23.1 - trayo dharmaskandhā yajño'dhyayanaṃ dānamiti prathamastapa eva dvitīyo brahmacāryācāryakulavāsī tṛtīyo'tyantamātmānamācāryakule'vasādayansarva ete puṇyalokā bhavanti brahmasaṃstho'mṛtatvameti || "There are three divisions of religion: The first comprises sacrifices, study, and charity; the second consists of austerities, such as fasting; and the third is the life of celibacy and living with the teacher in his house till death. People devoted to these three divisions of religion go to heaven after death. But one who is devoted to Brahman attains immortality."

Bhagavad Gītā 3.20 - karmaṇaiva hi saṃsiddhim āsthitā janakādayaḥ "Even kings like Janaka attained perfection through action alone."

The karmas of āśrama are part of the superconscious ecosystem of Dharma designed by Paramāśiva. The obligations are not seen as burdens, but as expressions of integrity to the cosmic design (Ṛta). When these are performed from the space of Paramādvaita (Oneness with Paramāśiva), they are not binding karma, but liṅga or indicators of the enlightened lifestyle. In other words, action continues, but from the space of non-doership, as a sacred offering aligned with the cosmic will.

सहकारित्वेन च ॥ ३.४.३३॥

sahakāritvena ca || 3.4.33 ||

And (it is) also (valid) as a cooperative cause.

This sūtra emphasizes that the duties prescribed by the Vedas, particularly those related to the āśramas (stages of life), serve as cooperative or contributory causes in the pursuit of Mokṣa, complementing the primary means of liberation, which is knowledge (Jñāna).

Chandogya Upaniṣad 5.10.7 - tadya iha ramaṇīyacaraṇā abhyāśo ha yatte ramaṇīyāṃ yonimāpadyeran "Among them, those who did good work in this world [in their past life] attain a good birth accordingly."

Bhagavad Gītā 5.11 - kāyena manasā buddhyā kevalair indriyair api | yoginaḥ karma kurvanti saṅgaṃ tyaktvātmaśuddhaye|| "Yogis perform action with body, mind, and intellect - without attachment - for self-purification."

Without sattva-śuddhi, the mind cannot absorb Self-knowledge even if taught. So, āśrama-dharmas are not obstacles, but co-operative factors in jñāna-yoga.

In Paramādvaita, where mokṣa is simultaneous with life, responsibility, and superconscious radiance, the āśrama-dharmas are expressions of one's integrity to the cosmic will of Paramāśiva. The external ritual counterparts of internal completion and Oneness. So, even if the seeker is awakened, the āśrama-duties are maintained not out of compulsion, but from responsibility and conscious contribution to the collective spiritual ecosystem. From this view, sahakāritva is not just about preparatory aid, but about synergistic manifestation - actions reflecting the superconscious flowering of Paramāśiva on earth.

सर्वथापि तु त एवोभयलिङ्गात् ॥ ३.४.३४॥

sarvathāpi tu ta evobhayaliṅgāt || 3.4.34 ||

But in all respects, those alone (are to be performed), because of indications of both kinds (injunctions and prohibitions).

This sūtra emphasizes that the duties prescribed by the Vedas (e.g., āśrama-karma) must be followed in all circumstances, as they are characterized by both positive injunctions (vidhi) and prohibitions (nishedha), making them authoritative and essential for spiritual progress toward Mokṣa.

'Those alone' refers to the duties prescribed by the Vedas, reinforcing that only scripturally ordained actions are authoritative for spiritual progress, as they align with the path to Brahman-realization.

The term 'because of possessing both characteristics' refers to the dual nature of Hindu injunctions: vidhi (positive commands, e.g., 'perform charity') and nishedha (prohibitions, e.g., 'avoid harming others'). These characteristics ensure that Hindu duties comprehensively guide the Jīva by prescribing what to do and what to avoid, purifying the mind for Jñāna (knowledge of Brahman).

This sūtra clarifies that Hindu duties, particularly āśrama-karma, are essential cooperative causes (as per 3.4.33) for liberation, as they balance action and restraint to cultivate viveka (discrimination) and vairagya (detachment).

In Paramādvaita, where Paramāśiva manifests through the integrated, radiating being, this sūtra affirms that responsibility does not end with enlightenment, it begins fully, the jñānī continues engaging in the world, radiating the cosmic will of Paramāśiva. Hence, the āśrama-dharmas are performed not due to obligation or preparation, but from a space of completion, responsibility, and cosmic contribution. Ubhayaliṅga is reconciled through completion-based action - embodying both sannyāsa and karma simultaneously.

अनभिभवं च दर्शयति ॥ ३.४.३५॥

anabhibhavaṃ ca darśayati || 3.4.35 ||

And (the scripture) shows the state of being unconquered.

The śruti (scripture) highlights that the true knower of Brahman, living in accordance with āśrama-dharma, is anabhibhava - unassailable, unaffected. This is not merely theoretical jñāna, but embodied, powerful living - where the jñānī radiates śānti, tejas, and niṣkāmatā.

The jñānī, fully aligned with Paramāśiva's Cosmic Will, becomes invincible not by withdrawal but by intense responsible engagement. He/she doesn't get overwhelmed by karma because he operates from completion.

अन्तरा चापि तु तद्दृष्टेः ॥ ३.४.३६॥

antarā cāpi tu taddṛṣṭeḥ || 3.4.36 ||

But even in the meantime (interval), because it is seen (in scripture).

Hindu duties as essential in all stages (antarā), as revealed by scripture (taddṛṣṭeḥ), for Mokṣa. Advaita emphasizes Jñāna, while BHAGAVĀN integrates Jñāna, bhakti, and viJñāna, focusing on superconscious awakening.

The 'antarā' refers to the phase where jīva has awakened to its oneness with Paramāśiva, yet the external embodiment continues. In this divine phase of jīvanmukti, the actions of the enlightened one are divine leelā, not karmic.

Because taddṛṣṭeḥ - Paramāśiva Himself shows this in śāstra and in avatāric lives - the jīvanmukta continues manifesting dharma, not as obligation, but as expression of overflowing Completion (poornatva).

अपि स्मर्यते च ॥ ३.४.३७॥

api smaryate ca || 3.4.37 ||

Moreover, the Smrtis also mention this fact.

Mahābhārata – Śānti Parva, Adhyāya 59, Verse 38 - yad vai kṣamā ca krodhaś ca dānādāne bhayābhaye | nigrahānugrahau cobhau sa vai dharmavid ucyate || "He who knows how to wield both forbearance and wrath, giving and withholding, fear and fearlessness, restraint and grace - he is truly called a knower of dharma."

Manusmṛti 6.92 - dhṛtiḥ kṣamā damo'steyaṃ śaucam indriya-nigrahaḥ | dhīr vidyā satyam akrodho daśakaṃ dharma-lakṣaṇam || "Patience, forgiveness, self-control, non-stealing, purity, control of the senses, discernment, knowledge, truthfulness, and absence of anger - these ten constitute the characteristics of dharma."

विशेषणानुग्रहं च ॥ ३.४.३८॥

viśeṣaṇānugrahaṃ ca || 3.4.38 ||

And also (there is) favoring through qualification (viśeṣaṇa).

In this context, the sūtra affirms that specific qualifications or attributes prescribed in the śruti (e.g., śama, dama, tapas) are not merely decorative but actually bestow fitness or eligibility (adhikāratva) to the seeker. Even though the knowledge of Brahman is ultimately beyond doership or karma, these qualifications prepare the mind and are therefore upāsaka-dharmas (duties of seekers). Even in jñāna-mārga, the mind must be purified. Viśeṣaṇas (qualifications like self-control, calmness) enhance the capacity for realization. This sūtra counters any argument that these attributes are optional.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.24 - nāyamātmā pravacanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena | "This Ātman cannot be attained by the study of the Vedas, or by intelligence, or by much hearing of sacred books."

Bhagavad Gītā 6.27 – śāntim nirvāṇa-paramāṃ mat-saṃsthām adhigacchati "The yogī who has calmed all passions attains supreme peace."

All qualifications (śama, dama, etc.) are not prerequisites in a linear progression, but dimensions of integrity with the space of Paramāśiva. Viśeṣaṇas are access codes to higher consciousness, not moral obligations. They are graceful facilitators (anugraha) that allow the jīva to synchronize with the frequency of Paramāśiva. These attributes act as tunings, enabling the bio-memory to hold the conscious experience of liberation (mokṣa). Hence, their presence is not out of necessity but out of synergistic alignment with the Ultimate - fulfilling all four - jīva, jagat, Īśvara, and mokṣa simultaneously.

अतस्त्वितरज्ज्यायो लिङ्गाच्च ॥ ३.४.३९॥

atastvitarajjyāyo liṅgācca || 3.4.39 ||

Hence, however, the other (sannyāsa) is superior, because of the indication (in the scriptures) and also.

This sūtra asserts that sannyāsa (the stage of renunciation) is superior to the other āśramas (brahmacharya, grihastha, vanaprastha) for attaining Mokṣa, as indicated by scriptural evidence and supported by additional reasoning.

Mundaka Upaniṣad 3.2.6 - vedāntavijñānasuniścitārthāḥ saṃnyāsayogād yatayaḥ śuddhasattvāḥ | te brahmalokeṣu parāntakāle parāmṛtāḥ parimucyanti sarve "Having well ascertained the Self, the goal of the Vedantic knowledge and having purified their minds through the practice of sannyāsa, the seers, never relaxing their efforts, enjoy here supreme Immortality and at the time of the great end attain complete freedom in Brahman."

तद्भूतस्य तु नतद्भावो जैमिनेरपि नियमातद्रूपाऽभावेभ्यः ॥ ३.४.४०॥

tadbhūtasya tu natadbhāvo jaiminerapi niyamātadrūpā'bhāvebhyaḥ || 3.4.40 ||

But for one who has attained that state (of sannyāsa), there is no return to that (worldly) state, also according to Jaimini, because of the restriction (of scriptures) and due to the absence of that form (of worldly duties).

Once someone has assumed saṃnyāsa (tadbhūta), he cannot return to or perform duties of the prior āśrama (tadbhāva). Scriptures prescribe duties based on āśrama-specific identity. A renunciate no longer possesses the necessary ritual or social identity (e.g., sacred fire, wife, household) to perform those karmas. This is acknowledged even by Jaimini, the great proponent of karma-mīmāṃsā, due to the niyama (obligatory limitations) and tadrūpa-abhāva (loss of structure and tools required for karma).

Sannyāsa, as a state of renunciation, prevents reversion to lower states, enabling the Jīva to awaken to the turīyātīta state through superconscious practices. Conscious epigenetics transforms the Jīva's DNA, enabling Kāyakalpa - conscious control over life, death, and rebirth.

न चाधिकारिकमपि पतनानुमानात्तदयोगात् ॥ ३.४.४१॥

na cādhikārikamapi patanānumānāttadayogāt || 3.4.41 ||

And even the obligatory duties (of other āśramas or roles) are not (to be resumed), due to the inference of fall (from the state of sannyāsa) and due to their inappropriateness.

This sūtra addresses objections (e.g., from Mimamsakas who emphasize ritualistic duties) that a sannyāsi might be required to perform obligatory duties of other āśramas. Advaita clarifies that sannyāsa is a distinct, irrevocable state (3.4.40), and resuming worldly duties would undermine its purpose. The inference of spiritual fall and the incompatibility of such duties with sannyāsa's goal of Mokṣa make their resumption impermissible.

उपपूर्वमपीत्येके भावशमनवत्तदुक्तम् ॥ ३.४.४२॥

upapūrvamapītyeke bhāvaśamanavattaduktam || 3.4.42 ||

Even the preliminary stage, say some, is like the calming of mental states; that has been stated (or accepted).

Some teachers (like Jaimini or some Mīmāṃsakas) argue that prior performance of karma (upa-pūrvam) is necessary even for renunciates, as a preparatory discipline. But others (eke) say that the prior karmas are only meant for bhāvaśamana – the calming and purification of inner tendencies (citta-śuddhi), just as prāṇāyāma helps pacify the mind.

Bhagavad Gītā 6.3 - ārurukṣor muner yogaṃ karma kāraṇam ucyate | yogārūḍhasya tasyaiva śamaḥ kāraṇam ucyate || "For a sage aspiring to yoga, karma is the means; for one who is already established in yoga, quietude is the means."

बहिस्तूभयथापि स्मृतेराचाराच्च ॥ ३.४.४३॥

bahistūbhayathāpi smṛterācārācca || 3.4.43 ||

But outside (sannyāsa), in both cases (with or without specific duties), (it is valid) due to Smṛti and tradition.

Manusmṛti 6.43 - anagniraniketaḥ syād grāmamannārthamāśrayet | upekṣako'saṅkusuko munirbhāvasamāhitaḥ "He shall be without fires and without home; he may go to a village for food; disinterested, steady, silent and calmly disposed."

Mahābhārata Śānti Parva - bahirvāsaḥ parivrajyā śarīraṃ kevalāśrayam | saṅgatyāgo mahārāja tattvajñānasya lakṣaṇam || "Living outside (society), total renunciation, with the body as the only possession — detachment is the mark of knowledge of

स्वामिनः श्रुतेरित्यात्रेयः ॥ ३.४.४४॥

svāminaḥ śruterityātreyaḥ || 3.4.44 ||

Thus, Atreya (says) that (the duties or state) of the master (sannyāsi) (are valid) because of the Shruti.

Here, Atreya's view underscores that the sannyāsi's duties - such as meditation and renunciation - are prescribed by the Vedas, making them essential for Mokṣa. The Shruti's authority ensures that sannyāsa is not a mere lifestyle choice but a divinely ordained path.

Chandogya Upaniṣad 8.7.3 - tau ha dvātriṃśataṃ varṣāṇi brahmacaryamūṣatustau ha prajāpatiruvāca kimicchantāvāstamiti tau hocaturya ātmāpahatapāpmā vijaro vimṛtyurviśoko vijighatso'pipāsaḥ satyakāmaḥ satyasaṃkalpaḥ so'nveṣṭavyaḥ sa vijijñāsitavyaḥ sa sarvāṃśca lokānāpnoti sarvāṃśca kāmānyastamātmānamanuvidya vijānātīti bhagavato vaco vedayante tamicchantāvavāstamiti || "Both of them spent thirty-two years there living as brahmacarins. One day Prajāpati said to them: 'For what purpose are you staying here?' They replied: "'The Self is free from sin, free from old age, free from death, free from sorrow, and free from hunger and thirst. It is the cause of desire for Truth and for commitment to Truth. This Self has to be sought for and thoroughly known. The person who has learned about the Self and known it attains all worlds and all desires."—Sir, this is your message. We wish to know that Self, and this is why we are here.'"

Mundaka Upaniṣad 3.2.6 - vedāntavijñānasuniścitārthāḥ saṃnyāsayogād yatayaḥ śuddhasattvāḥ | te brahmalokeṣu parāntakāle parāmṛtāḥ parimucyanti sarve "Having well ascertained the Self, the goal of the Vedantic knowledge and having purified their minds through the practice of sannyāsa, the seers, never relaxing their efforts, enjoy here supreme Immortality and at the time of the great end attain complete freedom in Brahman."

This Shruti text validates sannyāsa (svāminaḥ) as a path to Mokṣa, as cited by Atreya (śruteḥ).

Sannyāsa (svāminaḥ) as a divinely ordained state, validated by Shruti (śruteḥ), as per Atreya's view, focusing on Jñāna for Brahman-realization. Paramādvaita interprets sannyāsa as the superconscious state of the master, ordained by Shruti, aligning the Jīva with the turīyātīta-turīyātīta state through conscious epigenetics and Kāyakalpa.

आर्त्विज्यमित्यौडुलोमिः तस्मै हि परिक्रियते ॥ ३.४.४५॥

ārtvijyamityauḍulomiḥ tasmai hi parikriyate || 3.4.4.45 ||

Thus, Audulomi (says) that the role of a priest (for the sannyāsi) is (fulfilled externally), because it is indeed compensated for that (person).

This sūtra addresses objections (e.g., from Mimamsakas who prioritize Hindu rituals) that a sannyāsi might still be obligated to perform priestly duties. Audulomi's view clarifies that sannyāsa, as ordained by Shruti (3.4.44), exempts the sannyāsi from such roles, as they are either fulfilled externally or transcended. Previous sūtras emphasized sannyāsa's superiority (3.4.39) and irrevocability (3.4.40–41), noting that worldly duties are inappropriate for sannyāsis (3.4.41).

The Jīva is a spark of Paramaśiva, navigating the 25 states of consciousness. The sannyasi, exempt from ritualistic duties, focuses on superconscious practices to awaken the turīyātīta-turīyātīta state. Conscious epigenetics transforms the Jīva's DNA, enabling Kāyakalpa—conscious control over life, death, and rebirth.

Mokṣa is the Jīva's residence in the turīyātīta-turīyātīta state, experiencing eternal oneness with Paramaśiva. Sannyāsa's exemption from priestly duties, as per Audulomi, ensures focus on superconscious practices, manifesting sat-chit-ananda. This is Paramādvaita, where Jīva, Īśvara, and jagat are one. Paramādvaita aligns the Jīva with Paramaśiva's superconsciousness, enabling conscious epigenetics and Kāyakalpa for the turīyātīta-turīyātīta state.

श्रुतेश्च ॥ ३.४.४६॥

śruteśca || 3.4.46 ||

And from the Śruti also (this stands confirmed).

Previous sūtras established sannyāsa's superiority (3.4.39) and its distinction from preparatory stages (3.4.42–43). Here, the Śruti's authority ensures that the sannyāsin's focus on jñāna for mokṣa is divinely ordained, aligning with the Hindu framework.

सहकार्यन्तरविधिः पक्षेण तृतीयं तद्वतो विद्यादिवत् ॥ ३.४.४७॥

sahakāryantaravidhiḥ pakṣeṇa tṛtīyaṃ tadvato vidyādivat || 3.4.47 ||

The injunction of another cooperative factor (is valid), in one view, as a third (path) for one possessing that (knowledge), like knowledge and other things.

This sūtra introduces the idea that, in one view, another cooperative factor (e.g., karma or upāsana) is prescribed as a third path for a person possessing knowledge (vidyā), similar to how knowledge and other practices are enjoined, to support the sannyāsin's pursuit of mokṣa.

Bhagavad Gītā 3.3 - loke'smin dvividhā niṣṭhā purā proktā mayānagha | jñāna-yogena sāṅkhyānāṃ karma-yogena yoginām|| "In this world, a twofold path was taught by Me: the path of knowledge for the contemplative and the path of action for the active."

This supports the idea of cooperative factors (tṛtīyaṃ) like karma as valid in one view (pakṣeṇa).

Mokṣa is the jīva's residence in the turīyātīta-turīyātīta state, experiencing eternal oneness with Paramaśiva. Cooperative factors (sahakāryantaravidhiḥ), like vidyā and other practices (vidyādivat), support superconscious awakening, manifesting sat-cit-ānanda.

कृत्स्नभावात्तु गृहिणोपसंहारः ॥ ३.४.४८॥

kṛtsnabhāvāttu gṛhiṇopasaṃhāraḥ || 3.4.48 ||

But due to completeness (of realization), the conclusion (or summing up) applies to the householder.

After examining whether renunciation (saṃnyāsa) is mandatory, this sūtra reaffirms the eligibility of the householder, if they have attained kṛtsnabhāva - completeness in knowledge, discipline, and inner renunciation.

In Paramādvaita, kṛtsnabhāva does not merely refer to scriptural qualifications but to total experiential oneness with Paramaśiva - where jīva, jagat, Īśvara, and mokṣa are not separate but mutually reinforcing expressions of Paramaśiva's play (līlā).

A gṛhastha who lives with śraddhā, satya, tapas, and satya-saṅkalpa, embodying the conscious will of Paramaśiva, is not excluded from mokṣa.

This sūtra acknowledges that spiritual liberation is possible in every āśrama, provided there is completion and conscious alignment with Paramaśiva.

Thus, even while living in the world, a householder can live beyond bondage - as a jīvanmukta.

मौनवदितरेषामप्युपदेशात् ॥ ३.४.४९॥

maunavaditareṣāmapyupadeśāt || 3.4.49 ||

Like silence, even for the others (non-sannyāsins), due to the teaching (of the scriptures).

Mauna (silence) refers to renunciates who have taken to vows of silence and contemplation. Yet scriptures also instruct other āśramīs (householders, brahmacārins, vānaprasthas). Since upadeśa (instruction) is given to all, mokṣa is not exclusive to renunciates.

Here, the sūtra extends the practice of mauna to non-sannyāsins, recognizing its role in calming the mind (citta-śuddhi) and fostering viveka (discrimination) and vairāgya (detachment) across all āśramas. Mauna, as a meditative discipline, helps householders and others reduce mental distractions, aligning with the Advaitic goal of realizing non-dual Brahman. The sūtra ensures the inclusivity of spiritual practices, acknowledging that all āśramas contribute to mokṣa.

अनाविष्कुर्वन्नन्वयात् ॥ ३.४.५०॥

anāviṣkurvannanvayāt || 3.4.50 ||

Not manifesting (external activities), due to conformity (with scriptures).

From Paramādvaita, enlightenment (jñāna) is spontaneous expression of Paramāśiva. Even when a being doesn't "express" outwardly, Paramāśiva is radiating through that being. The silence or non-revelation is intentional poise, not ignorance or suppression. Anvaya - the conscious continuity of Paramāśiva's state - remains unbroken, regardless of verbal or behavioral expression.

ऐहिकमप्रस्तुतप्रतिबन्धे तद्दर्शनात् ॥ ३.४.५१॥

aihikamaprastutapratibandhe taddarśanāt || 3.4.51 ||

The worldly (result is attained) in the absence of presently active obstacles, due to the teaching (of the scriptures).

The absence of obstacles allows practices to purify the mind (citta-śuddhi), fostering viveka (discrimination) and vairāgya (detachment), which are prerequisites for jñāna. The sūtra counters any doubt about the effectiveness of these practices, grounding their validity in Śruti. It ensures that spiritual progress is accessible across āśramas, provided obstacles are managed.

एवं मुक्तिफलानिय मस्तदवस्था वधृतेस्तदवस्था वधृतेः ॥ ३.४.५२॥

evaṃ muktiphalāniya mastadavasthā vadhṛtestadavasthā vadhṛteḥ || 3.4.52 ||

Thus, the certainty of the fruit of liberation (is established) due to the ascertainment of that state, due to the ascertainment of that state.

In Paramādvaita, mokṣa is not a future event or a product but a continuous state of living in Oneness with Paramāśiva.

"Tadavasthā" refers to the eternal state of Paramāśiva, which is simultaneously experienced as jīva, jagat, and Īśvara.

Once this state is cognized, the result - mokṣa - is unshakably established and no longer a pursuit, but a manifested reality.

Hence, niyama is the inevitability of that śuddhādvaitic experience.

Thus ends the fourth pāda (section) of the third adhyāya (chapter) of the Brahmasūtras composed by the revered Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana (Vyāsa).

Thus ends the third chapter.

॥ अथ चतुर्थोऽध्यायः ॥

आवृत्तिः असकृदुपदेशात् ॥ ४.१.१॥

āvṛttiḥ asakṛdupadeśāt || 4.1.1 ||

Repetition is necessary, since the Upanisads instruct repeatedly.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7 - Tat tvam asi, śvetaketo.

This mahāvākya is repeated nine times in the same chapter, indicating the necessity of repetition for realization.

From the Paramādvaita perspective, āvṛttiḥ does not imply linear repetition as a prerequisite to realization, but rather living the truth in every moment. The repeated instruction points to the intensity of authenticity required to stabilize in the experience of Paramaśivoham (I am Paramaśiva).

SPH explains that repeated śāstric revelation is not due to forgetfulness but due to the layered delusion of the individual jīva, and so, āvṛttiḥ is the repetition of conscious cognition of one's reality as Paramaśiva, until it becomes one's stable state.

Thus, repetition is a compassionate strategy by the Guru and the śāstra to dissolve resistance and instill the permanent state of Oneness (advaita-anubhava).

लिङ्गाच्च ॥ ४.१.२॥

liṅgācca || 4.1.2 ||

And (this is so) on account of the indicatory mark.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.9 - hiraṇmaye pare kośe virajaṃ brahma niṣkalam |tacchubhraṃ jyotiṣaṃ jyotistad yadātmavido viduḥ || "There the stainless and indivisible Brahman shines in the highest, golden sheath. It is pure; It is the Light of lights; It is That which they know who know the Self."

Paramādvaita interprets liṅga as not just linguistic or textual hints but also energetic signatures and experiential clues left within the Upaniṣadic transmission to invoke direct superconscious experience.

Liṅgas are contextual vibrations encoded into the śabda by enlightened ṛṣis, which act as triggers for awakening the non-dual experiential cognition - Paramaśivoham.

Thus, these signs are not merely grammatical or logical but living imprints, meant to guide the seeker into remembrance through repeated conscious alignment.

आत्मेति तूपगच्छन्ति ग्राहयन्ति च ॥ ४.१.३॥

ātmeti tūpagacchanti grāhayanti ca || 4.1.3 ||

But the Śruti acknowledge Brahman as the Self and make others to understand It as such.

This sūtra as asserting the central Upaniṣadic tenet: that Brahman is not something separate or external but is the very Self (ātman) of all beings.

Upagacchanti - Seers and Upaniṣads approach Brahman as the Self.

Grāhayanti - They teach this knowledge accordingly.

This also aligns with statements like: "Tat tvam asi" (You are That) - Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.7 and "Aham Brahmāsmi" (I am Brahman) - Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 1.4.10.

Paramādvaita goes deeper than intellectual identity and reveals experiential Oneness of ātman and Paramaśiva. This sūtra affirms that the rishis not only declare Brahman as the Self but also initiate seekers into that direct experience of ātma-Paramaśiva. Here, grāhayanti is not mere philosophical teaching, but the transmission (śaktinipāta) of the enlightened state - the Guru makes you realize that you are Paramāśiva.

न प्रतीके न हि सः ॥ ४.१.४॥

na pratīke na hi saḥ || 4.1.4 ||

Not in the symbol, for He indeed is not (therein).

This sūtra refutes the idea that realization of Brahman can occur through mere worship or meditation upon symbols (pratīkas), such as fire, sun, or other deities that are sometimes used as representations of Brahman. While such symbolic worship may help prepare the mind, real knowledge of Brahman arises only through direct inquiry into the Self, not by focusing on external symbols.

Paramaśiva can be experientially known only through direct cognition (aparokṣa anubhūti) and embodiment (śaktinipāta), not through visualizations or indirect symbology. The real, living presence of the Divine is beyond representation and only accessible through internalized superconscious breakthrough.

ब्रह्मदृष्टिरुत्कर्षात् ॥ ४.१.५॥

brahmadṛṣṭirutkarṣāt || 4.1.5 ||

Vision of Brahman (is to be preferred), due to its superiority.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9 - sa yo ha vai tat paramaṃ brahma veda brahmaiva bhavati nāsyābrahmavitkule bhavati | tarati śokaṃ tarati pāpmānaṃ guhāgranthibhyo vimukto'mṛto bhavati || "He who knows the Supreme Brahman verily becomes Brahman. In his family no one is born ignorant of Brahman. He overcomes grief; he overcomes evil; free from the fetters of the heart, he becomes immortal."

From the Paramādvaita perspective, brahma-dṛṣṭiḥ is not just an intellectual understanding or meditative experience, but a powerful conscious breakthrough where one manifests the state, space, powers, and being of Paramaśiva. It is "superior" because it is nondual (advaya) and directly liberating. Any indirect practices (symbols, rituals) are ultimately integrated into this supreme direct cognition. The moment of brahma-dṛṣṭi is the moment of living enlightenment.

आदित्यादिमतयश्चाङ्ग उपपत्तेः ॥ ४.१.६॥

ādityādimatayaścāṅga upapatteḥ || 4.1.6 ||

And the meditations on Āditya and others are auxiliary (aṅga) because of their appropriateness (upapatteḥ).

This sūtra discusses the role of certain forms of upāsanā (meditations), particularly those focused on deities like Āditya, in the broader pursuit of brahmavidyā (knowledge of Brahman). It states that these meditations are aṅgas - subsidiary limbs or aids - rather than central to the realization of Brahman.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 1.6.6 - atha yadevaitadādityasya śuklaṃ bhāḥ saiva sātha yannīlaṃ paraḥ kṛṣṇaṃ tadamastatsāmātha ya eṣo'ntarāditye hiraṇmayaḥ puruṣo dṛśyate hiraṇyaśmaśrurhiraṇyakeśa āpraṇasvātsarva eva suvarṇaḥ || "Then, [worship of the effulgent being in the sun]: The white glow of the sun is sā, and the dark bluish-black glow is ama. These two together make up the word Sāma. There is a deity within the orb of the sun, who is seen by yogīs. His whole body glitters like gold, even to his toe-nails. He has a bright golden beard and bright golden hair."

They are considered supportive because they help in concentration, purification of the mind, and integration of scriptural discipline but are not in themselves the final means to liberation (mokṣa).

आसीनस्सम्भवात् ॥ ४.१.७॥

āsīnassambhavāt || 4.1.7 ||

(Meditation is to be done) seated, due to its possibility (or appropriateness).

In the context of meditation (upāsanā) or śravaṇa (hearing of Vedānta), the posture of the seeker is discussed. The sūtra suggests that being seated is appropriate or suitable because it allows stability of the body and focus of the mind. While śruti may not always explicitly command the seated posture, sambhava (practicality and possibility) leads to the inference that seated posture is most conducive for meditation and study. The act of being seated symbolizes inner steadiness, withdrawal of senses, and preparedness to engage in contemplative inquiry.

From the Paramādvaita perspective, āsīnatva (being seated) is a symbolic and functional necessity. It signifies the settling of the individual will into Oneness with Paramaśiva. The body being seated reflects the anchoring of the being in conscious stillness, aligning jīva, jagat, and Īśvara into the realization of Paramāśiva as the ever-present Reality.

Hence, the sitting posture is not merely physical but expresses existential readiness to receive and radiate the truth of oneness, making the sādhaka an active manifestor (śākta) of mokṣa.

ध्यानाच्च ॥ ४.१.८॥

dhyānācca || 4.1.8 ||

And on account of meditation.

This sūtra continues the discussion from the previous one (4.1.7 – āsīnaḥ sambhavāt) about the posture and method of approaching Brahmavidyā (knowledge of Brahman).

It affirms that meditation (dhyāna) is an essential aspect of the pursuit of Self-knowledge, and this further supports the idea that being seated and mentally focused is suitable and required.

dhyāna (deep contemplation or meditation) is the primary sādhanā (means) through which the seeker realizes Brahman. Meditation requires physical and mental steadiness, which is best achieved in a seated posture. Hence, the necessity for being seated (āsīnaḥ) is further validated "because of dhyāna."

Moreover, dhyāna is not to be seen as a mechanical mental activity, but as continuous remembrance and absorption in the truth of Brahman revealed by the śāstra and guru.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.6 - arā iva rathanābhau saṃhatā yatra nāḍyaḥ | sa eṣo'ntaścarate bahudhā jāyamānaḥ | omityevaṃ dhyāyatha ātmānaṃ svasti vaḥ pārāya tamasaḥ parastāt || "He moves about, becoming manifold, within the heart, where the arteries meet, like the spokes fastened in the nave of a chariot wheel. Meditate on Ātman as Om. Hail to you! May you cross beyond the sea of darkness!"

From the Paramādvaita viewpoint, dhyāna is not just concentration but the intensely alive experience of Oneness with Paramaśiva. It is the conscious merging of individual attention into cosmic will, not through mental effort but through deekṣā (initiation), powerful cognitions, and śaktinipāta (descent of divine energy).

"Dhyānāt" here implies that realization is not attained by debate or logic alone, but by direct inner absorption into the space of Paramaśiva, as revealed by the Guru.

अचलत्वं चापेक्ष्य ॥ ४.१.९॥

acalatvaṃ cāpekṣya || 4.1.9 ||

And considering the necessity of steadiness (immobility).

This sūtra continues the sequence that discusses the suitable conditions for dhyāna (meditation) on Brahman.

It affirms that immobility (acalatva) is essential for meditation, and thus a seated posture is implied as most conducive. The physical body must be still so the mind can focus completely on the Brahman or Ātman.

Stillness is critical for nididhyāsana (deep contemplation) on Brahman as the Self, as it allows the mind to remain undistracted and absorbed in non-dual realization.

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 2.8 - trirunnataṃ sthāpya samaṃ śarīraṃ hṛdīndriyāṇi manasā sanniveśya | brahmoḍupena pratareta vidvān srotāṃsi sarvāṇi bhayānakāni || "The wise man should hold his body steady, with the three upper parts erect, turn his senses, with the help of the mind, toward the heart and by means of the raft of Brahman cross the fearful torrents of the world."

Bhagavad Gītā 6.13–14 - samam kaayashirogreevam dhaarayannachalam sthirah samprekshya naasikaagram swam dishashchaanavalokayan || prashaantaatmaa vigatabheer brahmachaarivrate sthitah manah samyamya macchitto yukta aaseeta matparah || "Let him firmly hold his body, head and neck erect and still, gazing at the tip of his nose without looking around, serene minded, fearless, firm in the vow of Brahmacharya, having controlled the mind, thinking on Me and balanced, let him sit in yoga, having Me as the Supreme goal"

In the Paramādvaita understanding, acalatva is not just physical stillness - it is the inner unshakability, the completion in being, where the mind does not fluctuate, and the identity does not get disturbed by inner or outer movements.

This acalatva arises naturally when one is established in Oneness with Paramaśiva, and the body follows the stillness of consciousness. The need for seated posture and immobility becomes a reflection of the inner centeredness in Śivātva (oneness with Paramaśiva).

स्मरन्ति च ॥ ४.१.१०॥

smaranti ca || 4.1.10 ||

And the Smṛtis also say so.

यत्रैकाग्रता तत्राविशेषात् ॥ ४.१.११॥

yatraikāgratā tatrāviśeṣāt || 4.1.11 ||

Meditation is to be undertaken wherever the mind gets concentrated, because there is no specification.

The sūtra counters potential objections that meditation requires a specific sacred location, affirming that any place conducive to ekāgratā is suitable, as supported by Śruti and Smṛti.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 7.6.1 - dhyānaṃ vāva cittādbhūyo dhyāyatīva pṛthivī dhyāyatīvāntarikṣaṃ dhyāyatīva dyaurdhyāyantīvāpo dhyāyantīva parvatā devamanuṣyāstasmādya iha manuṣyāṇāṃ mahattāṃ prāpnuvanti dhyānāpādāṃśā ivaiva te bhavantyatha ye'lpāḥ kalahinaḥ piśunā upavādinaste'tha ye prabhavo dhyānāpādāṃśā ivaiva te bhavanti dhyānamupāssveti || 7.6.1 || "Meditation (dhyāna) indeed is greater than the mind (citta). The earth seems to meditate, the sky seems to meditate, the heavens seem to meditate, the waters seem to meditate, the mountains seem to meditate, the gods and humans seem to meditate. Therefore, among human beings, those who attain greatness are seen as formed from the essence of meditation. But those who are petty, quarrelsome, gossiping, and slanderous - they are not formed from the essence of meditation. Thus, those who are noble and powerful appear as though formed from the essence of meditation. One should meditate upon meditation."

Yoga Sūtras of Patañjali 2.46–48 - sthira-sukham-āsanam | prayatna-śaithilya-ānanta-samāpattibhyām | tato dvandva-anabhighātaḥ | "The posture should be steady and comfortable. It is achieved by relaxing effort and meditating on the infinite. From this, one is unaffected by dualities."

In the Paramādvaita vision, one-pointedness is not just focus on the formless Brahman, but on Paramaśiva as the simultaneous experience of form and formless, of manifest and unmanifest. So, wherever there is deep internal oneness with Paramaśiva, mokṣa happens - not because of location or method, but due to intensity of inner union.

आ प्रायणात्तत्रापि हि दृष्टम् ॥ ४.१.१२॥

ā prāyaṇāttatrāpi hi dṛṣṭam || 4.1.12 ||

Until departure (death), even there (in that state), indeed it is seen (prescribed in scriptures).

Bhagavad Gītā 6.15 - antakāle ca māmeva smaranmuktvā kalevaram | yaḥ prayāti sa madbhāvaṃ yāti nāstyatra saṃśayaḥ || "And whosoever, leaving the body, goes forth remembering Me alone, at the time of his death, he attains My being; there is no doubt about this."

yaṃ yaṃ vāpi smaranbhāvaṃ tyajatyante kalevaram | taṃ tamevaiti kaunteya sadā tadbhāvabhāvitaḥ || "Whosoever, at the end, leaves the body, thinking of any being, to that being only he goes, O Kaunteya (O son of Kunti) , because of his constant thought of that being."

Superconscious practices, such as dhyāna, chanting Paramaśiva's name, or śakti-prakāśana (power manifestation), should be practiced continuously throughout life until the moment of departure (prāyaṇāt). This ensures that the jīva remains aligned with Paramaśiva's sat-cit-ānanda nature, reaching the turīyātīta-turīyātīta state.

Even at the moment of death, superconscious focus on Paramaśiva should be maintained, ensuring that the jīva's final state is one of cosmic unity, facilitating ascension to Kailāsa.

Śruti texts prescribe this lifelong practice, extending to the moment of death, lending Hindu authority to the directive. This ensures that the jīva's consciousness is stabilized in Paramaśiva.

इतरस्याप्येवमसंश्लेषः पाते तु ॥ ४.१.१४॥

itarasyāpyevamasaṃśleṣaḥ pāte tu || 4.1.14 ||

Even for the other (the ignorant), there is no union (of the self with the body); but (this becomes evident) at the time of death.

In the previous sūtras (particularly 4.1.13), it was clarified that for a knower of Brahman (jñānī), the ātman (self) is never really united with the body, mind, or senses - even during life - and thus is unaffected by death.

This sūtra now explains that even for the ajñānī (ignorant person), the self is not truly united with the body. However, due to ignorance, the ajñānī mistakenly identifies with the body and senses. The truth of this disjunction becomes clear only at death, when the bodily functions cease and the prāṇa leaves.

gatasaṅgasya muktasya jñānāvasthitacetasaḥ | yajñāyācarataḥ karma samagraṃ pravilīyate || "Of one who is devoid of attachment, who is liberated, whose mind is established in knowledge, who acts for the sake of sacrifice, all his actions are dissolved."

For the jñānī, this non-union is recognized and lived consciously during life.

For the ajñānī, although there is no real union, it is only at death that the separation is experienced—yet without the liberating understanding.

From the standpoint of Paramādvaita, there is no real bondage, and hence no need for a 'release' either. All beings are eternally manifestations of Paramaśiva. The experience of bondage and liberation is only within the scope of māyā, or illusory cognition.

Even in the case of the ajñānī, the non-union of ātman and body is ontologically true. However, until the person awakens to their real identity as Paramaśiva, they believe they are bound. Death causes a disruption of this belief, but not full realization unless grace or knowledge intervenes.

अनारब्धकार्ये एव तु पूर्वे तदवधेः ॥ ४.१.१५॥

anārabdhakārye eva tu pūrve tadavadheḥ || 4.1.15 ||

But only for actions whose results have not yet begun (to manifest); (the body continues) until the exhaustion (of the beginningless karma) previously spoken of.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.14.2 - ciraṃ yāvanna vimokṣye'tha sampatsya iti “His delay is only as long as he is not free of his body. After that he becomes merged in the Self.”

Bhagavad Gītā 4.37 - yathaidhāṃsi samiddho’gnirbhasmasātkurute’rjuna | jñānāgniḥ sarvakarmāṇi bhasmasātkurute tathā || “As the blazing fire reduces fuel to ashes, O Arjuna, so does the Fire-of-Knowledge reduce all actions to ashes.”

Superconscious realization destroys sañcita-karma, with prārabdha sustaining the body until death, enabling merger with Paramaśiva via conscious epigenetics and kāyākalpa.

अग्निहोत्रादि तु तत्कार्यायैव तद्दर्शनात् ॥ ४.१.१६॥

agnihotrādi tu tatkāryāyaiva taddarśanāt || 4.1.16 ||

But (rituals such as) Agnihotra are only for the urpose of producing their own result, because that is what is seen (in scripture).

अतोऽन्यदपीत्येकेषामुभयोः ॥ ४.१.१७॥

ato’nyadapītyekeṣāmubhayoḥ || 4.1.17 ||

Besides these, there is also another kind of (good) action with regard to which some people (make the assignment), according to both Jaimini and Bādarāyaṇa.

The jīvanmukta is rooted in the direct experience of Paramaśiva, where all dualities—doer and deed, karma and karma-phala - are dissolved.

From this state, the individual performs or abstains from rituals not out of bondage, but out of conscious choice and cosmic play (līlā).

Agnihotra, therefore, becomes a graceful expression of Oneness, not an obligatory act for result.

यदेव विद्ययेति हि ॥ ४.१.१८॥

yadeva vidyayeti hi || 4.1.18 ||

The (scriptural statement) "Whatever is done with knowledge" surely indicates this.

भागेन त्वितरे क्षपयित्वा सम्पत्स्यते ॥ ४.१.१९॥

bhāgena tvitare kṣapayitvā sampatsyate || 4.1.19 ||

But the (enlightened) person merges in Brahman after exhausting the other two, (viz merit and demerit that have started fruition), by experiencing (their results in the present life).

इति श्रीमत्कृष्णद्वैपायनकृत ब्रह्मसूत्रेषु चतुर्थाध्यायस्य प्रथमः पादः समाप्तः

iti śrīmat kṛṣṇadvaipāyanakṛta brahmasūtreṣu caturthādhyāyasya prathamaḥ pādaḥ samāptaḥ

Thus ends the first pāda (section) of the fourth adhyāya (chapter) in the Brahmasūtras composed by the venerable Kṛṣṇa-Dvaipāyana (Vyāsa).

वाङ्मनसि दर्शनाच्छब्दाच्च ॥ ४.२.१॥

vāṅmanasi darśanācchabdācca || 4.2.1 ||

The (function) of the organ of speech merges in the mind (at the time of death) for so it is seen, and so the scriptures say.

This sūtra describes the process of the jīva's departure from the body at the time of death, stating that the faculty of speech (vāk) merges into the mind (manas), as supported by observation and scriptural authority.

This sūtra describes the process of krama-mukti (gradual liberation) and the dissolution of elements in the path to Brahmaloka. It states that upon death, for a qualified upāsaka (devoted meditator), vāg-indriya (speech) merges into the manas (mind). This is established both through śruti (scriptural vision) and śabda (explicit wording).'

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.6 - somya puruṣasya prayato vāṅmanasi sampadyate manaḥ prāṇe prāṇastejasi tejaḥ parasyāṃ devatāyām || "O Somya, as this person is dying, his speech merges into the mind, his mind into prāṇa, his prāṇa into fire, and then fire merges into Brahman, the Supreme Deity."

From the Paramādvaita lens, this sūtra explains how conscious evolution happens through the transcendence of the lower dimensions. Speech (vāk) represents expression or action rooted in separation. Its merger into mind (manas) signifies an inner turning—a withdrawal of external cognition into internal realization.

Here, darśana means experiential cognition in Oneness, and śabda indicates the revealed word of the Guru or Śāstra guiding this process. Thus, vāṅ-manasi darśana means integrating speech into manas by intensely listening to and contemplating the revealed truths.

अत एव च सर्वाण्यनु ॥ ४.२.२॥

ata eva ca sarvāṇyanu || 4.2.2 ||

And hence, indeed, all (other faculties) follow after (in sequence).

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra conveys an important metaphysical principle:

When the external expressions (indriyas) are withdrawn, the seeker returns to the source-consciousness (Paramaśiva). The sequential dissolution (anu) reveals the hierarchy of manifestation from causal (kāraṇa) to gross (sthūla). In intense spiritual states, sarvāṇi indriyāṇi (all senses and functions) merge into pure existence — not by annihilation, but by completion and restful awareness (śānta). This sūtra underlines the power of conscious withdrawal (pratyāhāra) leading to mokṣa, where all faculties return to their source state (śūnya - pūrṇa - Paramaśiva).

तन्मनः प्राण उत्तरात् ॥ ४.२.३॥

tanmanaḥ prāṇa uttarāt || 4.2.3 ||

That mind (merges) into the vital force, due to the subsequent (stage).

In the process of liberation, where the elements and functions dissolve step by step, the mind is said to merge into prāṇa (vital breath). This conclusion is drawn because prāṇa is functionally and hierarchically subsequent to the mind in the chain of elements and their resolution. The śruti texts describe how in death or deep meditation the external functions withdraw inward — speech into mind, mind into prāṇa, prāṇa into fire, and so on.

Hence, in the context of krama-mukti (gradual liberation), this sūtra affirms that manas (mind) resolves into prāṇa, following the Upaniṣadic teaching.

From the Paramādvaita perspective - where all phenomena are understood as simultaneous, conscious manifestations of Paramaśiva - this sūtra is not merely about a physical or metaphysical sequence of dissolution. It reflects the nondual experience where mind (manas), as a subtle expression of prāṇaśakti, naturally merges back into the unifying life-force (prāṇa), revealing its source-consciousness.

Rather than linear causality, Paramādvaita sees this as a conscious synergy - manas and prāṇa are not separate entities, but integrated expressions of Paramaśiva's will. Realizing this unity is liberation itself.

सोऽध्यक्षे तदुपगमादिभ्यः ॥ ४.२.४॥

so'dhyakṣe tadupagamādibhyaḥ || 4.2.4 ||

He (the ātman) is the overseer (adhyakṣa), because of scriptural acceptance (of that position) and other indicators.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.9 - vijñānasārathiryastu manaḥ pragrahavānnaraḥ | so'dhvanaḥ pāramāpnoti tadviṣṇoḥ paramaṃ padam || "A man who has discrimination for his charioteer and holds the reins of the mind firmly, reaches the end of the road; and that is the supreme position."

Bhagavad Gītā 13.2 - idaṃ śarīraṃ kaunteya kṣetramityabhidhīyate | etadyo vetti taṃ prāhuḥ kṣetrajña iti tadvidaḥ || “This body, O Kaunteya is called kshetra (the field) and he who knows it is called kshetrajna (the knower-of-the-field) by those who know them (kshetra and kshetrajna) i. e. , by the sages.

From the perspective of Paramādvaita, ātman is not a separate passive witness, but a dynamic, conscious expression of Paramaśiva, manifesting as the controller (adhyakṣa) not merely in neutrality but with will (icchā), intelligence (jñāna), and action (kriyā). The upagamana or "approach" to this understanding is taught through both śruti and initiatory transmission (dīkṣā), and thus, this sūtra also reinforces the need to recognize the conscious sovereignty of the self as Paramātmā.

भूतेषु तच्छ्रुतेः ॥ ४.२.५॥

bhūteṣu tacchruteḥ || 4.2.5 ||

(The self is present) in the elements (bhūteṣu), because of the scriptural statement (śruti) to that effect.

The ātman is not limited or restricted in presence; it resides in or pervades the five elements (bhūtas) and therefore in all living beings as well.

From the Paramādvaita lens, Paramaśiva is not only present in bhūtas (elements and beings) but is the source, sustainer, and intelligent controller of them.

This sūtra is understood as a confirmation of the simultaneous omnipresence and individual experiential reality of Paramaśiva. Because the śruti declares the presence of the ātman (or Brahman) within all bhūtas, it implies that Paramātmā is accessible and experientially real in every being, not metaphorically but as existential reality.

This is the basis for intense Oneness cognition (śuddhādvaita) and the sacred lifestyle of living enlightenment (jīvanmukti), seeing all beings as living deities.

Bhagavad Gītā 13.17 - avibhaktaṃ ca bhūteṣu vibhaktamiva ca sthitam | bhūtabhartṛ ca tajjñeyaṃ grasiṣṇu prabhaviṣṇu ca || “And undivided, yet He exists as if divided in beings; That is to be known as the Supporter of Beings; He devours and He generates.”

नैकस्मिन् दर्शयतो हि ॥ ४.२.६॥

naikasmin darśayato hi || 4.2.6 ||

Not into one (element), for (scripture) indeed shows (otherwise).

The sūtra clarifies that Śruti also indicates a collective merger into all elements (fire, water, earth, air, space), reflecting the reintegration of the jīva’s subtle body (sūkṣma-śarīra) into the cosmic elements.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1.1 - tasmādvā etasmādātmana ākāśaḥ sambhūtaḥ | ākāśādvāyuḥ | vāyoragniḥ | agnerāpaḥ | adbhyaḥ pṛthivī | pṛthivyā oṣadhayaḥ | oṣadhībhyonnam | annātpuruṣaḥ | “From That, verily, - from This Self - is ākāśa (ether) born; from ākāśa, the air; from the air, fire; from fire, water; from water, earth; from earth, plants; from plants, food: from food, man.”

Bhagavad Gitā 7.6 - etadyonīni bhūtāni sarvāṇītyupadhāraya | ahaṃ kṛtsnasya jagataḥ prabhavaḥ pralayastathā || “Know that these (two Prakṛtis), are the womb of all beings. So I am the source and dissolution of the whole universe.”

समाना चासृत्युपक्रमादमृतत्वं चानुपोष्य ॥ ४.२.७॥

samānā cāsṛtyupakramādamṛtatvaṃ cānupoṣya || 4.2.7 ||

And (the path is) common, due to the undertaking of non-going (to rebirth), and immortality (is attained) without being consumed.

This sūtra addresses the jīva’s path after death, resolving potential doubts about whether jñānis and non-jñānis follow the same path. It clarifies that the initial dissolution process (4.2.1–6) is common (samānā), but the jñāni’s realization (upakramāt) leads to the devayāna path, ensuring non-return (asṛti) and immortality (amṛtatva). The subtle body remains intact (anupoṣya) until the jñāni attains videha-mukti (liberation without a body) upon reaching Brahman. Non-jñānis, lacking jñāna, follow the pitṛyāna path, merging into elements (4.2.5–6) and facing rebirth.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.6.5 - atha yatraitadasmāccharīrādutkrāmatyathaitaireva raśmibhirūrdhvamākramate sa omiti vā hodvā mīyate sa yāvatkṣipyenmanastāvadādityaṃ gacchatyetadvai khalu lokadvāraṃ viduṣāṃ prapadanaṃ nirodho'viduṣām || “Then when a person leaves the body, he goes upward with the help of these rays. If he dies while meditating on Om, his going up is assured; otherwise not. In the amount of time it takes his mind to move from one thought to another he can reach the realm of the sun. The sun is the gateway to Brahmaloka. Those who known the meaning of Om and think of it at the time of death enter Brahmaloka, but those who are ignorant of it have no chance of entering."

Bhagavad Gitā 8.24 - agnirjyotirahaḥ śuklaḥ ṣaṇmāsā uttarāyaṇam | tatra prayātā gacchanti brahma brahmavido janāḥ || "Fire, light, day-time, the bright fortnight, the six months of the northern solstice; following this path, men who know Brahman go to Brahman."

The jīva, as a spark of Paramaśiva, follows a common dissolution path (samānā). Jñānis, through realization (upakramāt), take the non-return path (asṛti), achieving the turīyātīta-turīyātīta state via conscious epigenetics and kāyākalpa.

तदपीतेः संसारव्यपदेशात् ॥ ४.२.८॥

tadapīteḥ saṃsāravyapadeśāt || 4.2.8 ||

That (subtle body persists) until the attainment (of Brahman), due to the scriptural designation of saṃsāra.

This sūtra addresses a potential doubt about the persistence of the subtle body for the jñāni, clarifying that it remains until the final attainment of Brahman, as per scriptural statements about saṃsāra.

सूक्ष्मं प्रमाणतश्च तथोपलब्धेः ॥ ४.२.९॥

sūkṣmaṃ pramāṇataśca tathopalabdheḥ || 4.2.9 ||

Subtle (aspects) also (are known) from the means of valid knowledge and from direct perception.

This sūtra emphasizes that subtle realities or entities (like the Self, Ātman, or subtle aspects of existence) can be known or realized through pramāṇas - the accepted means of valid knowledge - and also through direct experience or perception (upalabdhi).

The Self (Ātman) and other subtle truths are not gross objects; they are sūkṣma, subtle and beyond ordinary sensory perception.

Such subtle realities require valid means (pramāṇas) such as śruti (revealed scriptures), anumāna (inference), and upamāna (comparison) to be understood.

Further, direct realization (anubhava), especially through meditative experience (dhyāna) or śravaṇa-manana-nididhyāsana, enables the recognition of subtle truths.

This sūtra underlines the importance of both scriptural testimony and direct experiential realization in grasping subtle metaphysical realities.

Bhagavad Gītā 2.13 - dehino'sminyathā dehe kaumāraṃ yauvanaṃ jarā | tathā dehāntaraprāptir dhīrastatra na muhyati || "Just as in this body the embodied (soul) passes into childhood, youth and old age, so also does he pass into another body; the firm man does not grieve at it."

नोपमर्देनातः ॥ ४.२.१०॥

nopamardenātaḥ || 4.2.10 ||

For this (very) reason (the subtle body) is not destroyed (even when the gross one is).

Bhagavad Gītā - na jāyate mriyate vā kadācin nāyaṃ bhūtvā bhavitā vā na bhūyaḥ | ajo nityaḥ śāśvato'yaṃ purāṇo na hanyate hanyamāne śarīre || "He is not born, nor does He ever die; after having been, He again ceases not to be; Unborn, Eternal, Changeless and Ancient, He is not killed when the body is killed."

The jīva, as a spark of Paramaśiva, retains a subtle body that is not destroyed (nopamardena) until merging with Paramaśiva, navigating the 25 states to the turīyātīta-turīyātīta state. Paramaśiva, manifesting as jīva, jagat, and Īśvara, can never be negated, even in mokṣa. Liberation (mokṣa) is not about dissolving or destroying the individual self but is the realization of its oneness with Paramaśiva. The use of "na upamardena" refutes any nihilistic view that self-realization implies loss of individuality. Rather, individual identity expands to its cosmic source. Even in the state of turīya or liberation, the jīva exists as Paramaśiva - not suppressed but exalted.

अस्यैव चोपपत्तेरूष्मा ॥ ४.२.११॥

asyaiva copapatterūṣmā || 4.2.11 ||

The vital heat (ūṣmā) belongs to this (jīva alone), because it is logically appropriate.

Here, it is affirmed that ūṣmā, which is noticed leaving the body during death, belongs not to the physical body, nor to an external factor, but to the subtle body (liṅga-śarīra) - the jīva. “Asya eva” clarifies that ūṣmā is an attribute or function of the subtle self, which includes prāṇa (life-force) and manas (mind). “Upapatter” indicates that attributing ūṣmā to the jīva makes logical sense and is supported by both śruti (scriptures) and yukti (reasoning).

Praśna Upaniṣad 3.9 - tejo ha vā udānastasmādupaśāntatejāḥ | punarbhavamindriyairmanasi sampadyamānaiḥ || “Fire, verily, is udana; therefore he whose fire has been extinguished goes out for rebirth, with the senses absorbed in the mind.”

प्रतिषेधादिति चेन्न शारीरात् ॥ ४.२.१२॥

pratiṣedhāditi cenna śārīrāt || 4.2.12 ||

If it be argued that (there is) negation (of the jīva's travel), (we reply) no - because of the mention of the embodied self (śārīra).

One might argue that the scriptures negate the idea of the jīva traveling after death, suggesting non-transmigration or non-movement. The negation cannot be taken in the literal sense because the broader context is about the embodied self (śārīrin), who is subject to transmigration until liberation.

Represents the pūrvapakṣa objection that the vital heat (ūṣmā) observed in the body after apparent death (4.2.11) might be due to the absence or denial of the subtle body’s persistence. The objector might argue that the heat arises from residual physical processes (e.g., chemical reactions in the body) rather than the subtle body’s presence.

Even though the supreme Self (Paramaśiva) doesn’t move, the individual consciousness (jīva) experiences movement due to identification with body-mind.

This sūtra aligns with the simultaneous truths: the jīva is both already liberated (nitya-mukta) and yet evolving (leelā) through karmic cycles until the ultimate realization.

spaṣṭo hyekeṣām || 4.2.13 ||

Indeed, (it is) clear in some (texts).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.10.1–2 - tadya itthaṃ viduḥ| ye ceme'raṇye śraddhā tapa ityupāsate te'rciṣamabhisaṃbhavantyarciṣo'h arahna pūryamāṇapakṣamāpūryamāṇapakṣādyānṣaḍudaṅṅeti māsāṃstān ||

From the world of light they go to the world of day; from the world of day to the world of the bright fortnight; from the world of the bright fortnight to the six months when the sun moves northward; from there they go to the year; from the year to the sun; from the sun to the moon; and from the moon to lightning. There someone, not human, receives them and leads them to brahmaloka. This is the path of the gods.”

Paramaśiva is nirvikalpa, beyond change, yet manifests dynamically as the jīva, world, and Īśvara through will (icchāśakti). The explicit description of travel is not to limit the jīva, but to educate and guide seekers in the stages of reality. These transitions exist as reality for those in avidyā, and thus, śruti compassionately reveals them to facilitate mukti. Even the clearly described paths (like devayāna and pitṛyāna) are leelā-bhāga—part of the divine play to enable the seeker to transcend limitation.

तानि परे तथा ह्याह ॥ ४.२.१५॥

Those organs get merged in the supreme Brahman, for such is the declaration of the scriptures.

This sūtra addresses the final stage of the jñāni’s journey on the devayāna path (path of the gods), describing the dissolution of the subtle body's faculties (tāni) into Brahman (pare) at the point of videha-mukti, as declared by Śruti (tathā hyāha).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.10.1–2 - tadya itthaṃ viduḥ| ye ceme'raṇye śraddhā tapa ityupāsate te'rciṣamabhisaṃbhavantyarciṣo'h arahna pūryamāṇapakṣamāpūryamāṇapakṣādyānṣaḍudaṅṅeti māsāṃstān ||

There someone, not human, receives them and leads them to brahmaloka. This is the path of the gods."

अविभागो वचनात् ॥ ४.२.१६॥

avibhāgo vacanāt || 4.2.16 ||

There is non-separation, because of the scriptural statement.

This sūtra affirms that after liberation, the jīva (individual self) becomes completely one with Brahman, without any separation or duality.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9 - brahmaivedamamṛtaṃ purastād brahma paścād brahma dakṣiṇataścottareṇa | adhaścordhvaṃ ca prasṛtaṃ brahmaivedaṃ viśvamidaṃ variṣṭham || "That immortal Brahman alone is before, that Brahman is behind, that Brahman is to the right and left. Brahman alone pervades everything above and below; this universe is that Supreme Brahman alone."

The jīva (individual self) and Brahman (the absolute) appear separate only due to avidyā (ignorance). Upon liberation, this ignorance is destroyed, and the truth of non-difference (avibhāga) is realized. The liberated being does not go somewhere or merge as a part; he/she realizes they were always Brahman. Hence, "avibhāga" is not a change, but a revelation of the eternal truth.

In Paramādvaita, avibhāga means not just identity of substance, but synergistic oneness of jīva, jagat, and Īśvara - all as manifestations of Paramaśiva. The liberated soul does not vanish into Brahman, but consciously radiates Brahman in form and formlessness. There is no fragmentation, and yet infinite divine expressions are possible — a non-dual pluralism (anekatva within advaita). Paramaśiva remains as avibhāga — indivisible — yet infinitely expanding through His manifest self. Thus, the unity is not static; it is vibrantly conscious.

tadoko'grajvalanaṃ tatprakāśitadvāro vidyāsāmarthyāttaccheṣagatyanusmṛtiyogācca ārdānugṛhītāḥ śatādhikayā || 4.2.17 ||

The abode of That (Brahman) is illuminated by a blazing light in front; the door (to that abode) is made luminous through it. By the power of knowledge, and due to association with the remembrance of the path of those who have previously gone, and because they are partially graced, they (too) reach that - exceeding by a hundred.

The jñānī's liberation is independent, but those associated with them - through remembrance, service, or spiritual proximity - also receive a graceful elevation. This is not direct mokṣa, but favorable rebirths or spiritual progress due to saṅga (association) with the enlightened. The light blazing ahead refers to bramavidyā (knowledge of Brahman), which guides not just the individual, but illuminates the path for others too.

Paramaśiva, the source-consciousness, burns bright within the being of the liberated soul. The jīvanmukta becomes a light house; his very presence becomes a doorway to liberation for hundreds around him. The power of remembrance (anusmṛti) - even remembering the path or the one who walked it - is sufficient to initiate liberation. Vidyā-sāmarthya - the shakti of spiritual knowledge - is so powerful that it not only liberates the individual but transforms the collective consciousness.

रश्म्यनुसारी ॥ ४.२.१८॥

raśmyanusārī || 4.2.18 ||

(The soul of the man of knowledge) proceeds by following the rays of the sun.

This sūtra states that the jñāni (knower of Brahman), upon departing the body through the brahmanāḍī (as described in 4.2.17), follows the rays of light (raśmi) on the devayāna path (path of the gods) to attain Brahman, leading to videha-mukti (liberation without a body).

This sūtra elaborates on the "devayāna" (the path of the gods). The jñānī who does not attain immediate videhamukti (disembodied liberation) at death, but is still in the body when Brahmavidyā arises, travels after death through specific stages, starting with the rays of the sun (raśmi).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.10.1–2 - tadya itthaṃ viduḥ| ye ceme'raṇye śraddhā tapa ityupāsate te'rciṣamabhisaṃbhavantyarciṣo'h arahna pūryamāṇapakṣamāpūryamāṇapakṣādyānṣaḍudaṅṅeti māsāṃstān ||

There someone, not human, receives them and leads them to brahmaloka. This is the path of the gods.”

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 6.2.15 - Te ya evam etad vidur ye cāmi araṇye śraddhāṁ satyam upāsate te 'rcir abhisambhavanty arciṣo 'ho 'hna āpūryamāṇapakṣam āpūryamāṇapakṣād yān ṣaṇmāsān udaṅg āditya eti māsebhyo devalokaṃ devalokād ādityam ādityād vaidyutaṃ tān vaidyutān puruṣo mānasa etya brahmalokān gamayati te teṣu brahmalokeṣu parāḥ parāvato vasanti | teṣāṃ na punarāvṛttiḥ | “Those who know this doctrine in this way and those who, dwelling in the forest (as renunciates), have faith and worship truth - they travel by the path of light: they reach the flame (arcis), from the flame to he day, from the day to the bright half of the month, from the bright half of the month to the six months when the sun moves northward (uttarāyaṇa); from these months they reach the world of the gods; from the world of the gods to the sun; from the sun to the lightning. There a person of mind (a superhuman being) comes and leads them to Brahmaloka. There, in Brahmaloka, they dwell forever, shining eternally. For them, there is no return (to earthly life).”

This also signifies that the path to liberation is lit and guided - no jīva reaches the ultimate without guidance (guru, śāstra, and śiva).

निशि न इति चेत् न सम्बन्धस्य यावद्देहभावित्वाद् दर्शयति च || ४.२.१९॥

niśi na iti cet na sambandhasya yāvaddehabhāvitvād darśayati ca || 4.2.19 ||

If (it is objected that the jñāni does) not (follow the rays) at night, (we reply) no, because the connection (with the rays persists) as long as the body exists, and (Śruti) declares (this).

The pūrvapakṣa (niśi na iti cet) argues that since 4.2.18 specifies following solar rays (raśmi), the jñāni dying at night might not access these rays, disrupting the devayāna path. The siddhānta (na sambandhasya yāvaddehabhāvitvād) refutes this, asserting that the connection (sambandha) between the jñāni’s subtle body and the rays is not limited to daytime. The rays, symbolic of divine guidance, are available at all times due to the jñāni’s knowledge (vidyā, 4.2.17), which transcends physical constraints. Yāvaddehabhāvitvāt clarifies that this connection persists as long as the body exists, i.e., until the moment of death, regardless of time. Darśayati ca indicates that Śruti supports this, affirming that the devayāna path is accessible to jñānis at any time of death.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 6.8.6 - somya puruṣasya prayato vāṅmanasi sampadyate manaḥ prāṇe prāṇastejasi tejaḥ parasyāṃ devatāyām || “O Somya, as this person is dying, his speech merges into the mind, his mind into prāṇa, his prāṇa into fire, and then fire merges into Brahman, the Supreme Deity.”

अतश्चायनेऽपि दक्षिणे ॥ ४.२.२०॥

ataścāyane’pi dakṣiṇe || 4.2.20 ||

For the very same reason (the soul gets the result of knowledge) even when departing during the sun's southern course.

This sūtra addresses a related pūrvapakṣa (objection) that the jñāni may not attain liberation if death occurs during the southern solstice (dakṣiṇāyana), traditionally associated with the pitṛyāṇa path (path of ancestors) rather than the devayāna path (path of the gods) to Brahman.

The jñāni's realization of Brahman transcends external conditions, ensuring videha-mukti (liberation without a body) via the brahmanāḍī and rays (4.2.17–18).

योगिनः प्रति स्मर्यते स्मार्ते चैते ॥ ४.२.२१॥

yoginaḥ prati smaryate smārte caite || 4.2.21 ||

With respect to yogins, (the devayāna path) is declared (in Śruti), and these (paths) are (also declared) in Smṛti

In the Paramādvaita framework, this sūtra highlights the integrity of knowledge across śruti and smṛti, affirming that inner yogic experiences and mystical journeys as described in the scriptures are real, consistent, and verifiable across planes.

The "yoginaḥ prati" phrase shows that the upāsakas and sādhakas are not bound by external ritual alone, but can attain Brahmaloka and ultimately Paramaśiva through conscious lifestyle, remembrance (smṛti), and inner samyama. The smārta inclusion confirms that this is not limited to a few but open to any sincere seeker, even via Smṛti-based yoga.

Patañjali Yoga Sūtra 4.5 - pravṛttibhede prayojakaṃ cittam ekam anekeṣām "In the diversity of actions, the instigating mind (consciousness) is one and the same for the many."

अर्चिरादिना तत्प्रथितेः ॥ ४.३.१॥

arcirādinā tatprathiteḥ || 4.3.1 ||

Beginning with the path of light (archis), that (soul's upward journey) is established—because it is known (from the scriptures).

The archirādi mārga is described in śruti (Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.10.1, Bṛhadāraṇyaka 6.2.15) as the devayāna—the path leading to Brahmaloka. Such a jīva attains Brahmaloka after death and remains there until final liberation (kṛtsna mokṣa) at the end of the kalpa.

Īśvara is intelligence manifesting as sat-cit-ānanda, letting jīvas play with Himself. The archirādi path is a part of His compassionate mechanism to allow evolving jīvas to reach Brahmaloka (His highest conscious field) and gradually realize their unity with Him. The entire archirādi journey is just a līlā, a play, within Paramaśiva's consciousness.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.2.2 - hamsaḥ śuciṣadvasurāntarikṣasad hotā vediṣadatithirduroṇasat | nṛṣadvarasadṛtasadvyomasad abjā gojā ṛtajā adrijā ṛtaṃ bṛhat || "He is the sun dwelling in the bright heavens. Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.14 - uttiṣṭhata jāgrata prāpya varānnibodhata | kṣurasya dhārā niśitā duratyayā durgaṃ pathastatkavayo vadanti || "Arise! Awake! Approach the great and learn. Like the sharp edge of a razor is that path, so the wise say-hard to tread and difficult to cross."

वायुशब्दादविशेषविशेषाभ्याम् ॥ ४.३.२॥

vāyuśabdādaviśeṣaviśeṣābhyām || 4.3.2 ||

Because of the word 'vāyu' (air) and because of both general and specific references (in the scriptures).

The term vāyu refers either to the cosmic principle of air or the deity Vāyu, who guides the jñāni on the devayāna path. Aviśeṣaviśeṣābhyām clarifies that this stage is supported by both general (aviśeṣa) and specific (viśeṣa) scriptural references. The general reference is the broad mention of Vāyu in the sequence of the devayāna path, while the specific reference is a direct mention of Vāyu as a distinct stage. Śaṅkara cites Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.10.1 for the general sequence and Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 6.2.15 for the specific mention of Vāyu. This ensures that the path's progression is unambiguous, with Vāyu as a divine guide or realm facilitating the jñāni's journey to Brahmaloka and ultimately videha-mukti.

तटितोऽधि वरुणः संबन्धात् ॥ ४.३.३॥

taṭito'dhi varuṇaḥ saṃbandhāt || 4.3.3 ||

After lightning, (comes) Varuṇa, because of connection.

This sūtra specifies that the jñāni, on the devayāna path, progresses to the realm or deity Varuṇa after the stage of lightning (taṭit), as supported by the scriptural connection between these stages.

Taṭit or lightning represents sudden clarity or inner explosion — the moment of intense realization or spiritual flash that disorients the ego. The taṭit stage is where the jīva experiences a flash of insight: "I am not the body, not even the moving breath - something deeper is arising. This is not an external lightning, but an inner vajra-jñāna – like Indra's thunderbolt of knowledge breaking ignorance.

After the lightning-flash of realization, the soul enters the realm of Varuṇa, which is the divine law of existence (ṛta). Varuṇa is not just a deity, but the embodied order of the cosmos – the intelligent flow of how consciousness aligns with dharma and mokṣa.

In the Paramādvaitic journey, Varuṇa symbolizes the intuitive realization of cosmic dharma: "I am not separate. All is flowing in the law of Paramaśiva. Even the path is a manifestation of Him."

Saṃbandha is not just a logical association, but a continuum of consciousness. The flash of lightning leads into the realization of Varuṇa's presence, because revelation (taṭit) leads to order (ṛta).

nadīṁ prāpannavān ayaṁ jigīṣyatīti ॥ 3 ॥

He (the departing soul) ascends along this path of the gods (devayāna) and reaches the realm of Agni (the fire deity). From there, he goes to the realm of Vāyu (air), then to the realm of Varuṇa, Then to the realm of Āditya (the sun), then to the realm of Indra, Then to the realm of Prajāpati, and finally to the realm of Brahmā (Brahmaloka).

Now, concerning this Brahmaloka, these are the signs (features) of ascension: The "Muhūrtas" (divine time divisions) serve as the helpers of ascent; There is the sacrificial flame (Yeṣṭihā), the river Virajā, the Tilya tree;
There is union (sāyujya), the firm seat, and the unconquerable abode.

Indra and Prajāpati are the gatekeepers, Who are both all-pervading (vibhu) and well-measured (pramita), wise and discerning. There are Prayaṅka (a divine swing or throne), Manasī, the beloved (personification of mind), Cakṣuṣī, her counterpart (personification of sight), Who bring and offer divine flowers.

There also are Jāgatī and Ambā, the universal mothers, And their body-parts (symbolic aspects), and the celestial maidens (apsarases), And the heavenly rivers (ambayāḥ nadyaḥ).

Thus does one who knows this proceed forth.

Then, Brahman Himself comes forward and declares: "Through My glory, this one has now crossed the river Virajā.
He is the one who is now striving to conquer (liberation)!"

As per Paramadvaita, the ātivāhika is not an external deity or astral being, but the manifestation of Paramaśiva as the inner Guru - the Ananda-Puruṣa within. At this stage, the jīva is ready to surrender its limited identity, and hence, Paramaśiva appears through the liṅga of guidance - liṅga here meaning a sign or form of consciousness that offers direction. This divine conductor is none other than the Guru-tattva, guiding the jīva from individuality (ahaṁkāra) to cosmic sovereignty (Īśvaratva).

उभयव्यामोहात्तत्सिद्धेः ॥ ४.३.५॥

ubhayavyāmohāttatsiddheḥ || 4.3.5 ||

Due to confusion (or lack of proper discrimination) on both sides (both paths), that is established.

Both jīvas who follow devayāna and pitṛyāna undergo confusion due to lack of true discrimination of the Self from the non-Self. Because all beings, whether pursuing knowledge or karma, are under illusion until Brahma-jñāna dawns, and since mokṣa is not a function of path or loka, but of realization of Brahman, the non-dual truth is siddha — established.

In Paramādvaita, where the confusion (vyāmohāt) is due to jīva's fragmented perception of reality. When viewed from mokṣa-centric PoV, the distinctions between paths, gods, and lokas are all experiential projections of consciousness through various states. From Paramādvaita, mokṣa is not a movement from point A to B, or from jīva to Brahman. It is the recognition that jīva, jagat, and Īśvara are spontaneous, simultaneous manifestations of Paramashiva. There was never any separation.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.12 - parīkṣya lokān karmacitān brāhmaṇo nirvedamāyānnāstyakṛtaḥ kṛtena | tadvijñānārthaṃ sa gurumevābhigacchet samitpāṇiḥ śrotriyaṃ brahmaniṣṭham || "Let a brahmin, after having examined all these worlds that are gained by works, acquire freedom from desires: nothing that is eternal can be produced by what is not eternal. In order that he may understand that Eternal, let him, fuel in hand, approach a guru who is well versed in the Vedas and always devoted to Brahman."

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.23 - nāyamātmā pravacanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena | yamevaiṣa vṛṇute tena labhyaḥ tasyaiṣa ātmā vivṛṇute tanūgm svām || "This Ātman cannot be attained by the study of the Vedas, or by intelligence, or by much hearing of sacred books. It is attained by him alone whom It chooses. To such a one Ātman reveals Its own form."

वैद्युतेनैव ततस्तच्छ्रुतेः ॥ ४.३.६॥

vaidyutenaiva tatastacchruteḥ || 4.3.6 ||

From there (on the path of the gods), the soul proceeds only by the being of lightning - because that is what is taught in the śruti. The soul does not travel independently, but guided by a higher divine being, once it reaches the "lightning" stage in the sequence of ascending lokas.

The jīva, in its journey through the uttarāyaṇa mārga (northern path), enters the Turīya-turīyatīta state. At this stage, the inner being (consciousness) reveals itself as the "puruṣa in the lightning" — guiding the jīva as Paramashiva Himself — not toward Brahman but as Brahman.

कार्यं बादरिरस्य गत्युपपत्तेः ॥ ४.३.७॥

kāryaṃ bādarirasya gatyupapatteḥ || 4.3.7 ||

Bādari (holds that the destination of the jñāni is) the effected (Brahman), because of the appropriateness of this journey.

This sūtra presents the view of the sage Bādari that the jñāni, on the devayāna path, reaches the qualified or effected Brahman (saguṇa Brahman or Brahmaloka) rather than the absolute Brahman, as this is logically consistent with the path's description.

kāryaṃ refers to the qualified or effected Brahman (saguṇa Brahman), associated with the created world and often identified with Brahmaloka, the realm of Hiraṇyagarbha or the cosmic creator. Bādariḥ indicates the opinion of the sage Bādari, who argues that the jñāni, traveling the devayāna path (described in 4.3.1–6 with stages like light, Vāyu, Varuṇa, and the lightning-conductor), reaches this saguṇa Brahman. Asya gatyupapatteḥ means this view is logical (upapatti) because the devayāna path, as described in Śruti (e.g., Chāndogya Upaniṣad 5.10.1–2), leads to Brahmaloka, a realm associated with saguṇa Brahman.

In Paramādvaita, all beings - including devas, guides, and realms - are conscious manifestations of Paramaśiva. So even if something appears kārya (produced), it is not separate from the source. Creation itself is the conscious will of Paramaśiva.

विशेषितत्वाच्च ॥ ४.३.८॥

viśeṣitatvācca || 4.3.8 ||

And because of being specified (in scripture).

सामीप्यात्तु तद्व्यपदेशः ॥ ४.३.९॥

sāmīpyāttu tadvyapadeśaḥ || 4.3.9 ||

But due to nearness (to Brahman), the designation as 'that' (Brahman) applies.

The designation as Brahman (tad-vyapadeśaḥ) happens not because they are Brahman, but due to their proximity to Brahman (sāmīpyāt).

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.1.3 - yadā paśyaḥ paśyate rukmavarṇaṃ kartāramīśaṃ puruṣaṃ brahmayonim | tadā vidvān puṇyapāpe vidhūya nirañjanaḥ paramaṃ sāmyamupaiti || “When the seer beholds the self-luminous Creator, the Lord, the Puruṣa, the progenitor of Brahma, then he, the wise seer, shakes off good and evil, becomes stainless and reaches the supreme unity.”

From the Paramādvaita lens, everything is Brahman, but through different intensities and depths of manifest Consciousness. The sāmīpya (nearness) here is not just spatial or role-based. It refers to the conscious resonance with Brahman the tattva-purity of the being's existence and the non-dual frequency field in which such beings operate. Thus, these beings reflect Brahman intensely and can be rightfully called “That”, not by error, but by functional oneness, though not absolute Self-identity.

कार्यात्यये तदध्यक्षेण सहातः परमभिधानात् ॥ ४.३.१०॥

kāryātyaye tadadhyakṣeṇa sahātaḥ paramabhidhānāt || 4.3.10 ||

At the dissolution of the effects (kāryas), along with the overseer, the individual self proceeds beyond, because of the declaration of the Supreme.

This sūtra, aligned with Jaimini’s view, states that after the dissolution of Brahmaloka, the jñāni, along with Hiraṇyagarbha (the overseer), attains the supreme, nirguṇa Brahman, as declared in Śruti.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.12.6 - taṃ vā etaṃ devā ātmānamupāsate tasmātteṣāṃ sarve ca lokā āttāḥ sarve ca kāmāḥ sa sarvāṃśca lokānāpnoti sarvāṃśca kāmānyastamātmānamanuvidya vijānātīti ha prjāpatiruvāca prajāpatiruvāca || 8.12.6 ||
"This Self is worshipped by the gods. This is why all worlds and all desirable things are within their grasp. One who fully understands and realizes this Self [with the help of teachers and the scriptures] is able to attain whatever worlds and whatever desirable things he wants. This is what Prajāpati taught Indra."

When these intermediary kāryas (effects) - such as the deities like Vāyu, Varuṇa, etc. - cease to operate or dissolve, the jīva merges with Brahman, accompanied by or under the guidance of the presiding deity (tad-adhyakṣa).

The Upaniṣads declare this ultimate union with the Supreme (parama), hence the sūtra ends with paramābhidhānāt - because the śruti declares the jīva reaches Parabrahman.

The journey ends not in a loka but in non-dual realization. The dissolution of intermediaries reflects the dropping of all upādhis (limiting adjuncts). The jīva, having passed through all symbolic stations of Consciousness, now realizes its identity with Brahman. The overseer, being an aspect of Īśvara, aids in this transition.

स्मृतेश्च ॥ ४.३.११॥
smṛteśca || 4.3.11 ||
This is confirmed by Smrti as well.
परं जैमिनिर्मुख्यत्वात् ॥ ४.३.१२॥
paraṃ jaiminirmukhyatvāt || 4.3.12 ||
Jaimini holds that the jīva attains the Supreme (Brahman), because of the primary (or direct) meaning.

This sūtra presents Jaimini's view that the jñāni's ultimate destination on the devayāna path is the supreme, nirguṇa Brahman, as this is the primary teaching of Śruti Jaimini asserts that the jīva ultimately reaches Brahman (the Supreme Reality), not merely the loka of a deity, because the upaniṣadic texts use words like "Brahmaloka", "amṛtatva" (immortality), and "paramam padam" (the supreme state) in the primary sense - not metaphorically. Therefore, the culmination of the devayāna is mukti (liberation) in Brahman.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.11 - mahataḥ paramavyaktamavyaktātpuruṣaḥ paraḥ | puruṣānna paraṃ kiṃcitsā kāṣṭhā sā parā gatiḥ ||
"Beyond the great Ātman is the Unmanifested; beyond the Unmanifested is the Puruṣa (the Cosmic Soul); beyond the Puruṣa there is nothing. That is the end that is the final goal."

From the Paramādvaita perspective, this sūtra marks the confirmation that the jīva's final destination is Paramaśiva Himself, not just a celestial realm or symbolic deity. The journey through higher lokas is only a means, not the end. The upaniṣadic usage of "Brahmaloka", "sāyujya", etc., reflects the space of Paramaśiva — the kailāsa-jñāna, not a physical or symbolic domain. Sāyujya with Paramaśiva is not merging and disappearing, but conscious coexistence in śuddhādvaita space, where the jīva is one with Paramaśiva in knowledge, will, and bliss.

दर्शनाच्च ॥ ४.३.१३॥
darśanācca || 4.3.13 ||
And (this is so) because the Śruti declares so.

न च कार्ये प्रतिपत्त्यभिसन्धिः ॥ ४.३.१४॥
na ca kārye pratipattyabhisandhiḥ || 4.3.14 ||
And the intention (or pursuit) is not for the effect (kārya).

If someone thinks the jīva desires to attain some created loka or deity, that would contradict the essence of mokṣa.
True realization aims for the Uncreated (akṛta) - Brahman, which is beyond cause and effect.

Hence the goal (abhisandhi) of the seeker cannot lie in kārya. Mokṣa is kāryātīta - beyond all effects.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.11 - tapaḥśraddhe ye hyupavasantyaraṇye śāntā vidvāṃso bhaikṣyacaryāṃ carantaḥ | sūryadvāreṇa te virajāḥ prayānti yatrāmṛtaḥ sa puruṣo hyavyayātmā || "But those wise men of tranquil minds who lives in the forest on alms, practising penances appropriate to their stations of life and contemplating such deities as Hiranyagarbha, depart, freed from impurities, by the Path of the Sun, to the place where that immortal Person dwells whose nature is imperishable."

In Paramādvaita, Paramaśiva is not within creation - He is source, sustainer, and space of all.

This sūtra affirms that the intense seeking (abhisandhi) of the spiritual aspirant is not toward any created deity or loka. Instead, the goal is oneness with the svarūpa - the very consciousness of Paramaśiva. Liberation means entering the nirvikalpa sāyujya — eternal conscious experience of Paramaśiva's ananta sat-cit-ānanda. Even Brahmā or Hiraṇyagarbha is a manifestation within the space of Paramaśiva - not the goal. Thus, spiritual seeking is only fulfilled when the jīva recognizes itself as Paramaśiva.

अप्रतीकालम्बनान्नयतीति बादरायणरुभयथा च दोषात् तत्क्रतुश्च ॥ ४.३.१५॥

apratīkālambanānnayatīti bādarāyaṇarubhayathā ca doṣāt tatkratuśca || 4.3.15 ||

Because the support is not a symbol (pratīka), he is led (to Brahman) - so says Bādarāyaṇa; and in both cases (symbol or non-symbol), there are defects (if taken as such); hence, it is a kratu (creative meditation) on That (Brahman).

Bādarāyaṇa holds that the jñāni is led (nayatī) to nirguṇa Brahman (apratīka, non-symbolic, attributeless) because their realization depends (ālambanāt) on knowledge of the absolute.

Brahmaloka is a proximate stage (4.3.9–10), but the jñāni's ultimate destination is nirguṇa Brahman, guided by intention and Śruti. This aligns with Advaita's tenet that jñāna (4.2.17) leads to non-dual mokṣa, transcending all conditioned realms.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 3.14.1 - sarvaṃ khalvidaṃ brahma tajjalāniti śānta upāsīta | atha khalu kratumayaḥ puruṣo yathākraturasmiṁlloke puruṣo bhavati tathetaḥ pretya bhavati sa kratuṃ kurvīta || 3.14.1 || "All this is Brahman. Everything comes from Brahman, everything goes back to Brahman, and everything is sustained by Brahman. One should therefore quietly meditate on Brahman. Each person has a mind of his own. What a person wills in his present life, he becomes when he leaves this world. One should bear this in mind and meditate accordingly."

This sūtra directly supports the living-pathway model of Paramādvaita that the soul does not reach mokṣa by external icons or formal rituals alone. Paramaśiva Himself, as Divine Intelligence, guides the jīva at the time of death — if the jīva held authentic inner visualization (kratu) of Paramaśiva or guru. The nirgama (departure) of the soul is a sacred transition guided by Divine Will, when tat kratuḥ (living intention) is aligned with reality.

Without Divine guidance the soul may fall into lower realms or remain in confused states (preta, piśāca, etc.). Hence, deekṣā, initiation by living avatāra, and pratyakṣa sambandha with Paramaśiva are essential to ensure proper guidance at death.

विशेषं च दर्शयति ॥ ४.३.१६॥

viśeṣaṃ ca darśayati || 4.3.16 ||

And the scriptures indicate a distinction (in the journey of the soul).

The scriptures explicitly show this viśeṣa - the specific guidance or difference in the soul's upward journey (devayāna). Those who meditate on Brahman with proper knowledge go on the devayāna path through flame, day, bright fortnight, etc whereas others go on the pitṛyāna path, leading to rebirth. So, śruti shows a viśeṣa - difference in destinations, guides, and experiences based on knowledge and intent.

सम्पद्याविर्हाय स्वेनशब्दात् ॥ ४.४.१॥

sampadyāvihāya svenaśabdāt || 4.4.1 ||

Having attained (Brahman), the self does not depart, because of the word ‘svena’ (his own) in the śruti.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.12.3 - evamevaiṣa samprasādo'smāccharīrātsamutthāya paraṃ jyotirupasampadya svena rūpeṇābhiniṣpadyate sa uttamapuruṣaḥ sa tatra paryeti jakṣatkrīḍanramamāṇaḥ strībhirvā yānairvā jñātibhirvā nopajanaṃ smarannidaṃ śarīraṃ sa yathā prayogya ācaraṇe yukta evamevāyamasmiñcharīre prāṇo yuktaḥ || “In the same way, the joyful self arises from the body and, attaining the light of the Cosmic Self, appears in his own form. This is the Paramātman, the Cosmic Self. He then freely moves about eating, playing, or enjoying himself with women, carriages, or relatives, not remembering at all the body in which he was born. Just as horses or bullocks are harnessed to carriages, similarly prāṇa (life) remains harnessed to the body.”

This sūtra affirms that jīva does not depart after realization. In Advaita, liberation is abiding in Brahman, no travel involved. In Paramādvaita, the jīva realizes that there was never departure or return, just the ever-present oneness as Paramaśiva. This realization is mokṣa-centric and reveals the fundamental non-duality of jīva, jagat, and Īśvara.

मुक्तः प्रतिज्ञानात् ॥ ४.४.२॥

muktaḥ pratijñānāt || 4.4.2 ||

He is liberated because of the declaration (in the śruti).

Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad 3.8 - vedāham etaṃ puruṣaṃ mahāntam ādityavarṇaṃ tamasaḥ parastāt | tam eva viditvātimṛtyum eti nānyaḥ panthā vidyate’yanāya || “I have known that Great Puruṣa, resplendent like the sun, beyond all darkness. Knowing Him alone, one crosses over death - there is no other path for liberation.”

The Upaniṣads clearly assert that knowledge of Brahman equals immediate liberation - this is the pratijñā. In Advaita, this leads to jīvanmukti; in Paramādvaita, it is svarūpa-siddhi – the resting in the space of Paramaśiva.

आत्मा प्रकरणात् ॥ ४.४.३॥

ātmā prakaraṇāt || 4.4.3 ||

(The jñāni is) the Self (Brahman), because of the (scriptural) context.

Brahman as ātman is the central theme in major Upaniṣads: “tat tvam asi” (Chāndogya 6.8.7), “ahaṃ brahmāsmi” (Bṛhadāraṇyaka 1.4.10).

Thus, based on the principle of prakaraṇa (context), ātman is to be taken as Brahman itself — the substratum of all beings.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.1.9 - yaḥ sarvajñaḥ sarvavidyasya jñānamayaṃ tāpaḥ | tasmādetadbrahma nāma rūpamannaṃ ca jāyāte || “For him who knows all and understands everything, whose austerity consists of knowledge-from Him, the Imperishable Brahman, are born Brahma, name, form and food.”

From the perspective of Paramādvaita, this sūtra reinforces that the Self (ātman) is not a limited, bound individual, but the living, conscious expression of Paramaśiva. The context of the entire Brahmasūtra is mokṣa-centric, and hence every reference to the Self must align with that which is eternally liberated (nitya mukta) - Paramaśiva.

From the PoV of mokṣa, ātman is that which is simultaneously jīva, Īśvara, and jagat - all three being spontaneous, synergistic expressions of Paramaśiva.

This is why, when the Upaniṣads speak of the ātman, they are not referring to a limited experiencer but the source of all experience, the turīyātīta-turīyātīta state which transcends even Īśvara.

Hence, based on the prakaraṇa - the surrounding teachings on liberation and eternal reality - ātmā must be interpreted as the infinite consciousness of Paramaśiva.

अविभागेन दृष्टत्वात् ॥ ४.४.४॥

avibhāgena dṛṣṭatvāt || 4.4.4 ||

(The jñāni exists) without division (as Brahman), because of it being seen (in Śruti).”

This sūtra affirms that the liberated jñāni exists in non-dual unity with Brahman, as taught by Śruti, emphasizing the indivisible nature of their liberated state.

ब्राह्मेण जैमिनिरुपन्यासादिभ्यः ॥ ४.४.५॥

brāhmeṇa jaiminirupanyāsādibhyaḥ || 4.4.5 ||

Jaimini holds (that the released soul attains union) with Brahman, because of scriptural statements such as narrative passages and others.

In this sūtra, Jaimini's view is presented: that the liberated soul attains Brahman, and this is substantiated by various scriptural statements, such as upanyāsa (narratives), stutis (praises), arthavāda (explanatory passages), samāhāra (synthesis). These collectively suggest that the jīva becomes one with Brahman or attains Brahman in liberation (mokṣa).

citi tanmātreṇa tadātmakatvādityauḍulomiḥ || 4.4.6 ||

Sage Auḍulomi says that liberation consists in pure consciousness alone, because the self is of the nature of that (consciousness).

Auḍulomi presents the view that mokṣa is not some new state or transformation but the abidance in pure consciousness (citi), because the self is nothing but consciousness (cit-svarūpa).

The jīva, being identical in essence with Brahman, does not become something new in mokṣa. Liberation simply means shedding ignorance and recognizing oneself as pure consciousness. The term "tanmātreṇa" emphasizes only that — no dualities, no attributes, no adjuncts.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.1.3 - yadā paśyaḥ paśyate rukmavarṇaṃ kartāramīśaṃ puruṣaṃ brahmayonim | tadā vidvān puṇyapāpe vidhūya nirañjanaḥ paramaṃ sāmyamupaiti || “When the seer beholds the self-luminous Creator, the Lord, the Puruṣa, the progenitor of Brahma, then he, the wise seer, shakes off good and evil, becomes stainless and reaches the supreme unity.”

Jīva is Paramaśiva by nature; mokṣa is simply the conscious settling into that reality as cit, free from all borrowed identities. "Cit" is not mere awareness - it is Paramaśiva's conscious presence manifesting as self and cosmos. "Tanmātreṇa" implies that the jīva's essential nature is untouched, unmodified, pure and sovereign (svatantra). Liberation (mokṣa) is not a process or a destination; it is the cognition and establishment in this truth.

एवमप्युपन्यासात्पूर्वभावादविरोधं बादरायणः ॥ ४.४.७॥

evamapyupanyāsātpūrvabhāvādavirodhaṃ bādarāyaṇaḥ || 4.4.7 ||

Even so, because of the exposition and the previous state, there is no contradiction, says Bādarāyaṇa.

The descriptions of liberation (like merging into Brahman, reaching Brahmaloka, etc.) in the Upaniṣads do not contradict the idea that the self was always Brahman. Because of the "pūrvabhāva" - the previous condition of ignorance - the jīva was mistakenly perceived as bound, and thus liberation appears as a change, though in reality there is none. The Upaniṣadic expositions (upanyāsa) merely describe this transition for the sake of instruction, not because real transformation occurs. Hence, no contradiction exists between śrutis describing the jīva as Brahman and those depicting the process of attaining mokṣa.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 2.2.8 - bhidyate hṛdayagranthiśchidyante sarvasaṃśayāḥ | kṣīyante cāsya karmāṇi tasmin dṛṣṭe parāvare || "The fetters of the heart are broken, all doubts are resolved and all works cease to bear fruit, when He is beheld who is both high and low."

Even bondage is a delusion consciously entertained by consciousness. Liberation is simply the choice to withdraw that delusion.

सङ्कल्पादेव च तच्छ्रुतेः ॥ ४.४.८॥

saṅkalpādeva ca tacchruteḥ || 4.4.8 ||

And indeed, (liberation takes place) merely through saṅkalpa (will), because the scriptures declare so.

त एव चानन्याधिपतिः ॥ ४.४.९॥

ata eva cānanyādhipatiḥ || 4.4.9 ||

And for this very reason, (the jñāni) is not under the control of another.

Since the liberated soul has merged in Brahman and realizes non-duality (advaita), there is no second entity or overlord to govern, limit, or control the mukta. The jīva is now one with satya-saṅkalpa-brahman, the all-powerful, will-actualizing Brahman.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9 - sa yo ha vai tat paramaṃ brahma veda brahmaiva bhavati nāsyābrahmavitkule bhavati | tarati śokaṃ tarati pāpmānaṃ guhāgranthibhyo vimukto'mṛto bhavati || "He who knows the Supreme Brahman verily becomes Brahman. In his family no one is born ignorant of Brahman. He overcomes grief; he overcomes evil; free from the fetters of the heart, he becomes immortal.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.1.6 - adyatheha karmajito lokaḥ kṣīyata evamevāmutra puṇyajito lokaḥ kṣīyate tadya ihātmānamanuvidya vrajantyetāṃśca satyānkāmāṃsteṣāṃ sarveṣu lokeṣvakāmacāro bhavatyatha ya ihātmānamanivudya vrajantyetaṃśca satyānkāmāṃsteṣāṃ sarveṣu lokeṣu kāmacāro bhavati || "Everything perishes, whether it is something you have acquired through hard work in this world or it is a place in the other world which you have acquired through meritorious deeds. Those who leave this world without knowing the Self and the Truths which they should know are not free, no matter where they go. But those who leave this world after knowing the Self and the Truths which they should know are free, no matter where they are."

The liberated jīva becomes Paramaśiva, the source and ruler of all. Yet there is no separate overlord, because the jīva has realized its original state as Svayam-Prabhu Paramaśiva. Ananya-ādhipatiḥ means that the being is not subject to any other deity, karma, or cosmic force. This freedom is not isolation, but cosmic responsibility without bondage, the state of sarvajñatva (omniscience) and sarvakartṛtva (omnipotence) without ego.

अभावं बादरिराह ह्येवम् ॥ ४.४.१०॥

abhāvaṃ bādarirāha hyevam || 4.4.10 ||

Bādarī says there is non-existence (of separate individuality), for thus (it is reasonable).

According to sage Bādarī, once the jīva realizes its identity with Brahman, there is complete cessation (abhāva) of individuality. The individual self (jīvabhāva) is sublated. Just as waves merge back into the ocean, the jīva merges back into Brahman - without residue. There is no return, no duality, no trace of separateness

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.8 - yathā nadyaḥ syandamānāḥ samudre'staṃ gacchanti nāmarūpe vihāya | tathā vidvān nāmarūpādvimuktaḥ parātparaṃ puruṣamupaiti divyam || "As flowing rivers disappear in the sea, losing their names and forms, so a wise man, freed from name and form, attains the Puruṣa, who is greater than the Great."

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 2.3.8 - avyaktāttu paraḥ puruṣo vyāpako'liṅga eva ca | yaṃ jñātvā mucyate janturamṛtatvaṃ ca gacchati || "Beyond the Unmanifest is the Person, all-pervading and imperceptible. Having realised Him, the embodied self becomes liberated and attains Immortality."

The individual identity does not "cease" in the nihilistic sense but is dissolved into its source, Paramaśiva. The liberated being retains existence, but no longer as a limited self. Instead, the self operates as Paramaśiva - beyond the duality of jīva and Īśvara. This is not void or negation, but total absorption (sāyujya, ekatva) into the Infinite.

भावं जैमिनिर्विकल्पाम्नानात् ॥ ४.४.११॥

bhāvaṃ jaiminirvikalpāmnānāt || 4.4.11 ||

Jaimini holds that the individuality continues, because the scriptures declare differentiation (vikalpa).

Scriptures speak of the liberated self enjoying pleasures in the company of Brahman or gods (e.g., Brahmaloka). Descriptive variations like different kinds of liberation (sālokya, sārūpya, sāyujya) suggest some residual individuality.

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra acknowledges the multi-layered reality of mokṣa: For those liberated in Brahmaloka via devayāna (path of the gods), a divine individuality is retained to enjoy eternal existence with Brahman. This is not bondage, but a chosen experiential state - a manifestation of Paramaśiva's will.

द्वादशाहवदुभयविधं बादरायणोऽतः ॥ ४.४.१२॥

dvādaśāhavadubhayavidhaṃ bādarāyaṇo'taḥ || 4.4.12 ||

Bādarāyaṇa says (liberation is) of both types, like the Dvādaśāha sacrifice.

Bādarāyaṇa suggests that both approaches are valid, just as the dvādaśāha sacrifice may have two methods of performance (ritualistic and mental).

Some aspirants attain mokṣa through Self-knowledge alone, via śravaṇa-manana-nididhyāsana. Others may involve upāsanā (meditative worship), ritual, and mental sankalpa leading up to realization. The goal remains the same – mokṣa – but paths differ based on adhikāra (eligibility) and temperament.

Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad 2.4.5 - ātmā vā are draṣṭavyaḥ śrotavyo mantavyo nididhyāsitavyo maitreyyātmano vā aredarśanena śravaṇena matyā vijñānenedaṃ sarvaṃ viditam || "Indeed, O Maitreyi, the ātman (Self) is to be realized — one should hear about it, reflect upon it, and deeply meditate upon it. For, O Maitreyi, when the Self is seen, heard, reflected upon, and known, everything becomes known through that Self."

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.23 - nāyamātmā pravacanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena | yamevaiṣa vṛṇute tena labhyaḥ tasyaiṣa ātmā vivṛṇute tanūgm svām || "This Ātman cannot be attained by the study of the Vedas, or by intelligence, or by much hearing of sacred books. It is attained by him alone whom It chooses. To such a one Ātman reveals Its own form."

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 1.2.12 - parīkṣya lokān karmacitān brāhmaṇo nirvedamāyānnāstyakṛtaḥ kṛtena | tadvijñānārthaṃ sa gurumevābhigacchet samitpāṇiḥ śrotriyaṃ brahmaniṣṭham || "Let a brahmin, after having examined all these worlds that are gained by works, acquire freedom from desires: nothing that is eternal can be produced by what is not eternal. In order that he may understand that Eternal, let him, fuel in hand, approach a guru who is well versed in the Vedas and always devoted to Brahman."

From the Paramādvaita perspective, the sūtra reveals the compassionate inclusiveness of Sanātana Dharma, whether one chooses the path of surrender, ritual, devotion, or pure knowledge, liberation is accessible. Paramaśiva is not bound by form or formlessness – He responds to the intensity of your integrity (niṣṭhā), not merely the path. The "dvādaśāha" analogy shows flexibility in spiritual practice: Some perform internal yajña (sankalpa, upāsanā) and others, external yajña (rituals, karma). In Paramādvaita, both are celebrated as legitimate when done with Oneness-consciousness.

तन्वभावे सन्ध्यवदुपपत्तेः ॥ ४.४.१३॥

tanvabhāve sandhyavadupapatteḥ || 4.4.13 ||

In the absence of the (subtle) body, the state is like twilight, because it is logically possible (to conceive so).

Just as twilight (sandhyā) is a state between day and night - a transitional, non-distinct phase - the liberated soul (mukta-puruṣa) exists without individuality but not without awareness. Even in the absence of the subtle body, a kind of continuity or presence is not logically impossible.

From the lens of Paramādvaita, the liberated being does not become void or lose reality; rather, it expands into its cosmic source - Paramaśiva - who is both formless and manifest, transcendent and immanent.

The absence of the tanū (subtle body) is not a deficiency, but the ultimate flowering. Just like sandhyā (twilight) merges light and darkness in oneness, the mukta merges the finite self with the infinite source, not by losing identity, but by transcending identity into oneness with the all-pervading Paramaśiva.

This explains how a liberated being continues to operate in the cosmic will (icchā śakti), even without the subtle body, being no longer bound but continuously radiating as divine existence.

भावे जाग्रद्वत् ॥ ४.४.१४॥

bhāve jāgradvat || 4.4.14 ||

When there is (the subtle body), it is like the waking state.

As long as the liṅga śarīra exists:

There is semblance of activity, just as in the waking state (jāgrat).

However, Brahma-jñānīs do not identify with these activities.

It is like acting in a dream or play - fully conscious of its unreality.

Thus, “jāgradvat” means the appearance of worldly engagement remains, but the consciousness is free.

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.12.3 - evamevaiṣa samprasādo'smāccharīrātsamutthāya paraṃ jyotirupasampadya svena rūpeṇābhiniṣpadyate sa uttamapuruṣaḥ sa tatra paryeti jakṣatkrīḍanramamāṇaḥ strībhirvā yānairvā jñātibhirvā nopajanaṃ smarannidaṃ śarīraṃ sa yathā prayogya ācaraṇe yukta evamevāyamasmiñcharīre prāṇo yuktaḥ “In the same way, the joyful self arises from the body and, attaining the light of the Cosmic Self, appears in his own form. This is the Paramātman, the Cosmic Self. He then freely moves about eating, playing, or enjoying himself with women, carriages, or relatives, not remembering at all the body in which he was born. Just as horses or bullocks are harnessed to carriages, similarly prāṇa [life] remains harnessed to the body.”

In Paramādvaita Śāstra, Paramaśiva manifests as the individual out of pure saṅkalpa (divine will). When a being realizes Oneness with Paramaśiva but chooses to retain the liṅga śarīra for loka-kalyāṇa (welfare of beings), the body continues like the waking state, radiating jñāna, śakti, and kriyā.

This "waking" is not of ignorance, but of conscious embodiment, just as a lucid dreamer knows he is dreaming, the mukta knows he is Paramaśiva even while acting. Such a being is not doing karma, but living as Kriyāśakti itself. The retention of the subtle body is not a defect, but a glorious expression of Paramādvaita. This is the true living liberation: Paramaśiva experiencing and radiating through form.

प्रदीपवदावेशः तथा हि दर्शयति ॥ ४.४.१५॥

pradīpavadāveśaḥ tathā hi darśayati || 4.4.15 ||

Like a lamp, the infusion (of the self); for thus indeed the śruti shows.

The liberated being is no longer bound by avidyā or doership. However, just as a lamp (pradīpa) illuminates without attachment, the Self "pervades" the body for the sake of prārabdha karma alone. The lamp metaphor shows how consciousness pervades the body without identification. Jīva is not the body, yet, due to saṅkalpa or karma, there is a functioning presence. The Upaniṣads show that Self's presence in the body is without bondage, like a light in a room - shining independently.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.20 - aṇoraṇīyānmahato mahīyānātmā'sya jantornihito guhāyām | tamakratuḥ paśyati vītaśoko dhātuprasādānmahimānamātmanaḥ || “Ātman, smaller than the small, greater than the great, is hidden in the hearts of all living creatures. A man who is free from desires beholds the majesty of the Self through tranquillity of the senses and the mind and becomes free from grief."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.12.1 - maghavanmartyaṃ vā idaṃ śarīramāttaṃ mṛtyunā tadasyāmṛtasyāśarīrasyātmano'dhiṣṭhānamā tto vai saśarīraḥ priyāpriyābhyāṃ na vai saśarīrasya sataḥ priyāpriyayorapahatirastyaśarīraṃ vāva santaṃ na priyāpriye spṛśataḥ || "Indra, this body is mortal. It has been captured by death. Yet it is the base of the Self, which is immortal and formless. One who has a body is subject to both happiness and unhappiness. In fact, there is no end to happiness and unhappiness so long as one has a body. But when a person is free from the body, nothing good or bad can touch him."

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 7.26.2 - tadeṣa śloko na paśyo mṛtyuṃ paśyati na rogaṃ nota duḥkhatāṃ sarvaṃ ha paśyaḥ paśyati sarvamāpnoti sarvaśa iti sa ekadhā bhavati tridhā bhavati pañcadhā saptadhā navadhā caiva punaścaikādaśaḥ smṛtaḥ śataṃ ca daśa caikaśca sahasrāṇi ca viṃśatirāhāraśuddhau sattvaśuddhau dhruvā smṛtiḥ smṛtilambhe sarvagranthīnāṃ vipramokṣastasmai mṛditakaṣāyāya tamasaspāraṃ darśayati bhagavānsanatkumārastaṃ skanda ityācakṣate taṃ skanda ityācakṣate || "Here is a verse on the subject: 'He who has realized the Self does not see death. For him there is no disease or sorrow. Such a seer sees everything (as it is) and also attains everything in whatever way (he wants).' He is one (i.e., before creation; but after creation), he is in three forms, five forms, seven forms, and nine forms. Then again, he is in eleven, a hundred and ten, and even a thousand and twenty forms. If one eats pure food, one's mind becomes pure. If the mind is pure, one's memory becomes strong and steady. If the memory is good, one becomes free from all bondages. The revered Sanatkumāra freed Nārada from all his shortcomings and led him beyond darkness (i.e., ignorance). The wise say that Sanatkumāra is a man of perfect knowledge."

The jñāni's engagement is effortless, spontaneous, and aligned with Brahman's infinite freedom, ensuring no contradiction with non-duality. This sūtra reinforces Advaita's tenet that the liberated jñāni, as pure consciousness, engages with forms like a lamp's illumination, per Śruti, without compromising non-dual mokṣa.

Just like a lamp illumines space without effort, the Self illumines the body without attachment. In Paramādvaita, this is the divine radiance of Paramaśiva, actively manifesting out of freedom and saṅkalpa.

स्वाप्ययसम्पत्त्योरन्यतरापेक्षमाविष्कृतं हि ॥ ४.४.१६॥

svāpyayasampattyoranyatarāpekṣamāviṣkṛtaṃ hi || 4.4.16 ||

Because the revelation (in the śruti) is dependent on either absorption (svāpyaya) or attainment (sampatti).

This sūtra is a conclusion to the section that discusses the state of the liberated soul (mukta) - whether it merges into Brahman (like water into the sea) or retains individuality with a form in Brahmaloka (as per some Upaniṣads).

Two primary Upaniṣadic descriptions are:

Svāpyaya - complete merging or dissolution into Brahman, like rivers into the ocean as in

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.8 - yathā nadyaḥ syandamānāḥ samudre'staṃ gacchanti nāmarūpe vihāya | tathā vidvān nāmarūpādvimuktaḥ parātparaṃ puruṣamupaiti divyam || "As flowing rivers disappear in the sea, losing their names and forms, so a wise man, freed from name and form, attains the Puruṣa, who is greater than the Great."

Sampatti - attainment or proximity to Brahman, retaining a trace of individuality as in:

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.15.1 - tadhaitadbrahmā prajāpatayai uvāca prajāpatirmanave manuḥ prajābhyaḥ ācāryakulādvedamadhītya yathāvidhānaṃ guroḥ karmātiśeṣeṇābhisamāvṛtya kuṭumbe śucau deśe svādhyāyamadhīyāno dharmikānvidadhadātmani sarvaindriyāṇi sampratiṣṭhāpyāhiṃsansarva bhūtānyanyatra tīrthebhyaḥ sa khalvevaṃ vartayanyāvadāyuṣaṃ brahmalokamabhisampadyate na ca punarāvartate na ca punarāvartate || 8.15.1 || || iti pañcadaśaḥ khaṇḍaḥ || "Brahmā taught this knowledge of the Self to Prajāpati, and Prajāpati taught it to Manu. Manu, in his turn, taught it to all human beings. A young man goes to live at his teacher's house and serves him, and when he is free he studies the Vedas in the prescribed manner. After finishing all his studies, he goes back home and marries. But he continues to study the scriptures in a sacred place. He also teaches his children and disciples in such a way that they will be religious. He keeps all his senses under control and avoids violence unless he is at a holy place. This is how he lives his whole life. Then after death he goes to Brahmaloka, and he is not born again, he is not born again."

In Paramādvaita Śāstra, both svāpyaya and sampatti are not mutually exclusive. They are dimensions of the same realization of Paramaśiva. Svāpyaya - dissolution into Paramaśiva, formless, unmanifest state. Sampatti - empowered, embodied expression of Paramaśiva - eternal individual identity with divine powers.

जगद्व्यापारवर्जम् प्रकरणादसन्निहितत्वाच्च ॥ ४.४.१७॥

jagadvyāpāravarjam prakaraṇādasannihitatvācca || 4.4.17 ||

(The liberated Self is) devoid of activity related to the world, due to context and non-proximity.

This sūtra continues the discussion on the nature of the liberated Self (mukta-ātman).

It says that after liberation, the jīva does not engage in any worldly activities (jagad-vyāpāra). The context of the Upaniṣads describing mokṣa talks only of supreme rest, unity, and bliss, not worldly action. The Self is no longer associated with the body or the instruments of action; hence it has no proximity or involvement with the world.

Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad 3.2.9 - eṣo'ṇurātmā cetasā veditavyo yasmin prāṇaḥ pañcadhā saṃviveśa | prāṇaiścittaṃ sarvamotaṃ prajānāṃ yasmin viśuddhe vibhavatyeṣa ātmā || "That subtle Ātman is to be known by the intellect here in the body where the prāṇa has entered fivefold. By Ātman the intellects of men are pervaded, together with the senses. When the intellect is purified, Ātman shines forth."

प्रत्यक्षोपदेशादिति चेन्नाधिकारिक मण्डलस्थोक्तेः ॥ ४.४.१८॥

pratyakṣopadeśāditi cennādhikārikamaṇḍalasthokteḥ || 4.4.18 ||

If it be said that there is direct instruction (and hence the Self is still distinct), (we say) no - because the statement is made by one established in the sphere of authority.

These teachings are spoken by beings who are adhikārika, i.e., divine functionaries (like deities or cosmic beings who still operate within the domain of authority and relative reality).

They appear to give instructions for the benefit of aspirants and to exemplify certain states - not because any liberated Self actually requires instruction.

The liberated Self is one with Brahman, and hence there is no other to give or receive instructions. Any appearance of dialog or instruction (e.g., Brahman "telling" the soul something) is only apparent and meant for the didactic purpose in the scriptures - not an ontological truth. Adhikārikas (beings in roles of cosmic administration, like Indra or Prajāpati) may speak as if to another, but these are not absolute communications.

Brahman (Paramaśiva) assumes roles as both the liberator and the liberated. Direct instructions are part of the conscious will (icchā śakti) of Paramaśiva to educate, guide, and bless other beings. Such statements are made by divine beings or Paramaśiva Himself, not to imply duality, but as a compassionate expression of non-dual Oneness guiding itself.

विकारावर्ति च तथा हि स्थितिमाह ॥ ४.४.१९॥

vikārāvarti ca tathā hi sthitimāha || 4.4.19 ||

The jīva, until liberated, is subject to modifications (vikāra) of body, mind, intellect, and subtle experiences.

The liberated Self (mukta), however, is beyond vikāra, resting in the unchanging reality of Brahman. (The Self of the non-liberated) remains subject to modification; for so indeed the state is declared (in the śruti).

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.18 - na jāyate mriyate vā vipaścin nāyaṃ kutaścinna babhūva kaścit | ajo nityaḥ śāśvato'yaṃ purāṇo na hanyate hanyamāne śarīre || "The knowing Self is not born; It does not die. It has not sprung from anything; nothing has sprung from It. Birthless, eternal, everlasting and ancient, It is not killed when the body is killed."

The jīva, as long as it remains in delusion (moha), rotates through vikāra - physical, mental, karmic, and existential modifications. These modifications belong to āvaraṇa and vikshepa śakti, which veil and distort the truth of Paramaśiva in the experience of the bound soul.

The liberated jīva, upon realizing itself as Paramaśiva, is no longer in the loop of vikāra. Scriptural declarations of change point to the experience of beings who are still in the anādi saṃsāra chakra (beginningless cycle of birth and death).

In the state of oneness with Paramaśiva, the soul is avikārī, śāśvata, satyasaṅkalpa, nityamukta - changeless, eternal, and completely fulfilled.

स्थितिमाह दर्शयतश्चैवं प्रत्यक्षानुमाने ॥ ४.४.२०॥

sthitimāha darśayataścaivaṃ pratyakṣānumāne || 4.4.20 ||

The state (of the soul) is declared; and thus it is perceived and inferred (through pratyakṣa and anumāna).

This state of the jīva - being conditioned and entangled - is not only stated by śruti (revelation) but is also demonstrated through pratyakṣa - direct perception and anumāna – inference.

The conditioned state of the jīva — full of duality, desire, effort, and suffering - is both revealed by scripture and also verified in experience and logical reasoning. One directly perceives the jīva undergoing pain, pleasure, aging, and death. From the visible changes and karma-phala, one can infer the presence of a subtle body and the jīva's bondage.

Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.3.10 - indriyebhyaḥ parā hyarthā arthebhyaśca paraṃ manaḥ | manasastu parā buddhirbuddherātmā mahānparaḥ || "Beyond the senses, are the rudiments of its objects; beyond these rudiments is the mind; beyond the mind is Ātman known as Mahat (great)."

In Paramādvaita, this sūtra confirms that the bondage of the jīva is an experiential reality. The state (sthiti) of the jīva — being under māyā, experiencing dualities, and cycling through births - is not only described by the Veda but also seen in our direct experience (pratyakṣa). Further, by inference (anumāna) - from observed cause and effect, karma, desire, suffering - one confirms this condition.

भोगमात्रसाम्यलिङ्गाच्च ॥ ४.४.२१॥

bhogamātrasāmyaliṅgācca || 4.4.21 ||

And because of the indication of mere equality in enjoyment.

The only indication is that of similarity in enjoyment — not actual multiplicity.

The śruti's mention of "enjoying" Brahman is not to imply duality (jīva enjoying Brahman as object). Rather, it's a figurative expression indicating ananda, the bliss of identity.

Taittirīya Upaniṣad 2.1 - brahmavidāpnoti param "The knower of Brahman reaches the Supreme."

Here, bhoga refers not to worldly enjoyment, but to the cosmic celebration of Oneness, the divine life in alignment with Paramaśiva.

The similarity in bhoga (bhogamātrasāmya) implies that every mukta manifests Paramaśiva's bliss, power, freedom — equally, without difference; yet each one retains unique expression, not egoic individuality, but divine līlā (play).

This sūtra upholds Paramādvaita by clarifying that mukti is not annihilation of the soul, nor separation from Paramaśiva, but experiential Oneness, where the jīva enjoys the fullness (pūrṇatva) of Paramaśiva.

अनावृत्तिः शब्दादनावृत्तिः शब्दात् ॥ ४.४.२२॥

anāvṛttiḥ śabdādanāvṛttiḥ śabdāt || 4.4.22 ||

There is no return (to worldly existence), because of the scriptural statement; there is no return, because of the scriptural statement.

This sūtra forms the conclusion (niḥśreyasa-pratipatti) of the Brahmasūtras, emphasizing that the liberated being (mukta-puruṣa) does not return to the cycle of birth and death - punarāvṛtti - and this is not a matter of mere reasoning or philosophy but is declared by the śruti (Vedas).

Chāndogya Upaniṣad 8.15.1 - tadhaitadbrahmā prajāpatayai uvāca prajāpatirmanave manuḥ prajābhyaḥ ācāryakulādvedamadhītya yathāvidhānaṃ guroḥ karmātiśeṣeṇābhisamāvṛtya kuṭumbe śucau deśe svādhyāyamadhīyāno dharmikānvidadhadātmani sarvaindriyāṇi sampratiṣṭhāpyāhiṃsansarva bhūtānyanyatra tīrthebhyaḥ sa khalvevaṃ vartayanyāvadāyuṣaṃ brahmalokamabhisampadyate na ca punarāvartate na ca punarāvartate || "Brahmā taught this knowledge of the Self to Prajāpati, and Prajāpati taught it to Manu. Manu, in his turn, taught it to all human beings. A young man goes to live at his teacher's house and serves him, and when he is free he studies the Vedas in the prescribed manner. After finishing all his studies, he goes back home and marries. But he continues to study the scriptures in a sacred place. He also teaches his children and disciples in such a way that they will be religious. He keeps all his senses under control and avoids violence unless he is at a holy place. This is how he lives his whole life. Then after death he goes to Brahmaloka, and he is not born again, he is not born again.

From the Paramādvaita lens, mokṣa is not about "going" or "coming" but about stabilizing in the experience of Oneness with Paramaśiva, the source consciousness, here and now. The idea of "non-return" (anāvṛttiḥ) is not spatial or temporal - it is a revelation that there was never a real departure from the state of Paramaśiva. The Vedas declare this to break the delusion of a separate self. Once this truth is realized, the being rests in saṃpūrṇatva (completeness) and does not fall again into duality. This truth is revealed in scriptural authority (śabda-pramāṇa).

Introduction to Hinduism
Preamble to the Cosmic Constitution

INTRODUCTION TO THE UNITED STATES OF KAILĀSA

The United States of KAILASA (USK) is the revival of the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu civilizational nation with its sovereign territory. It is the first Sovereign State for all the two billion born and practicing Hindu diaspora worldwide.

Unlike any other modern nation, the United States of KAILASA (USK) provides a base for the revival, preservation, and central administration of Hinduism, similar to the Vatican, which serves as a central administration hub for the Roman Catholic Church.

The United States of KAILASA stands for all the great values enshrined in the constitution of KAILASA, the Vedas and the Āgamas.

It is governed by the Sovereign Order of KAILASA's NITHYĀNANDA, the oldest Governing Body for Hinduism. The Sovereign Order of KAILASA's NITHYĀNANDA (SOKN) is an atypical government, simultaneously functioning as the supreme governing body of Hinduism and a sovereign entity under international law. This mirrors the unique status of The Holy See, which is an atypical government as well, as it serves as both the supreme governing body of the Catholic Church and a sovereign entity under international law.

The United States of KAILASA within its historical cultural, religious legal framework has and shall remain in perpetuity in the future, notwithstanding the impacts of climate change during the time of Kumari Kandam, colonial legacies, annexation of territories by modern states and upheavals resulting in loss of physical territory.

KAILASA, an eternal and timeless realm, has existed in perpetuity, its spirit and essence enduring despite the trials of time. However, the sovereign lands of its citizens were lost to the waves of the Indian Ocean when Kumari Kandam, the ancient Hindu homeland, sank beneath the surface due to the ravages of cataclysmic climate change and ecological destruction. This calamity, a stark reminder of the consequences of neglecting the delicate balance of nature, has driven the people of KAILASA to seek a new home, where they may rebuild and thrive in harmony with the environment.

Later on in history, the rest of our lands were lost as an effect of colonialism, further eroding our connection to our ancestral heritage and cultural identity. Yet, the resilience and determination of the people of The United States of KAILASA continue to shine, a beacon of hope for a brighter future.

Kumari Kandam is the Ancient Enlightened Sanātana Hindu Civilization , emphasizing its role in shaping cultural heritage and spiritual beliefs, thus strengthening the bond between Hindu identity and transnational ancient roots. The legitimacy of the sovereignty of The United States of KAILASA persists independently of physical territory, drawing from established legal doctrines that recognize the persistence of statehood beyond physical dominion.

The United Nations upholds the privileges of The United States of KAILASA while recognizing the inherited unbroken historical sovereign status of The United States of KAILASA as per the preamble of both the UN Convention on Diplomatic Relations and the UN Convention on Consular Relations that declares that historical "rules of customary international law continue to govern," and confirms that "all nations from ancient times have recognized privileges and immunities" of sovereign entities of "differing constitutional and social systems" (preamble) and requires that a "state shall not discriminate as between states" including a historical form of statehood (article 47.1).ate as between states" including a historical form of statehood (article 47.1).

Introduction to the Founder of The United States of KAILĀSA

THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM (SPH) JAGATGURU MAHASANNIDHANAM (JGM) HIS DIVINE HOLINESS BHAGAVĀN ŚRI NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM is the Avatār of this day and age, an incarnation as per Hinduism. Throughout history, incarnations such as Śri Ramachandra Prabhu, Bhagavān Śri Kṛṣṇa, or Ramakrishna Paramahamsa have emerged to elevate human consciousness. The Cosmic Super Consciousness has embodied the human form once more as THE SPH for the Super Conscious breakthrough of the current era.

This ancient enlightened Santana Hindu civilization was strategically and systematically dismantled by foreign invaders, who massacred nearly 100 million Hindus and desecrated Hindu temples. In 1947, the rich indigenous traditions and lineages were forcibly and illegally annexed. Many ancient ecosystems were mercilessly ransacked and destroyed. With the partition of India, Sanātana Hindu kingdoms were torn apart over night. Hostility and religious intolerance forced Hindus to flee what was their home for thousands of years. During the Colonial era, the enactment of the Hindu Religious Endowment Act (1925) had extensive implications on Hindu educational institutions, places of worship, and traditions. This legislation established a precedent for colonial authorities to take control over Hindu temples under the administration of the Hindu Religious Endowment Board. To this day, these religious establishments continue to be subjected to subjugation and control as a result of the British-era policy. The notorious Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowment Department has been associated with land encroachment, embezzlement of temple funds, destruction of traditional practices, and the deterioration of sacred temples. The kingdoms which survived until the 21st century found themselves without hope for the future. After millennia of relentless ethnocide against Hinduism, the legacy of these lineages and traditions was on the verge of extinction. As history unfolds with all these losses, just as Bhagavān Śri Krishna warned, "yogo naṣṭaḥ parantapa," the ancient sciences and the succession of gurus and kings who protected them were both lost. Only with the descent of THE SPH in 1978, the revival of the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu civilization was assured. This is recorded by the Rishi Agasthya in the timeless revelations, commonly known as the Nadi readings. In these readings, Rishi Agasthya foretells that nations will flourish by the rule of enlightened beings (Siddhas):

"When this crores of people follow Him (THE SPH), the country will flourish by the rule of Siddhas. Let us live this day worshiping NITHYĀNANDA as Paramahamsa Sarveshwaran as He is none other than Eesan (SHIVA)."

THE SPH, who is recognized, revered and worshiped as the Incarnation of Paramaśiva, was declared as "Bhagavān" (God), and graces with the title "Jñāna Vijñāna Cakravarti," meaning accepted by all the Hindu kings as the Emperor or Supreme Ruler of both the Peethas (spiritual Sanātana Hindu kingdoms) and the Sāmrājyas (States).

KAILĀSA existed as ancient, indigenous, aboriginal and religious Hindu Samasthānas (Kingdoms) which held sovereignty and acted as spiritual kingdoms (Peethas) and political states (Sāmrājyas). Both were closely intertwined and functioned together like the structure of the Vatican, the Holy See.

The core of the ancient enlightened Sanatana Hindu Civilization was the allegiance to the presiding deity. As a thriving ecosystem, all communities revolved around the temple, which was considered to be the residence of the Divine. The foundational texts of Hinduism, the Veda-Āgamas, regard the deities themselves as living entities. According to the Kamika Āgama, the supreme ruler of the kingdom is the presiding deity and the Guru the deity's divine representative. A temple serves as the divine residence. The kings and queens are only political administrators, and they could not interfere with the rights and or usurp property in the name of the deity.

The president of the Akhil Bharatiya Akhada Parishad (leading apex body for millions of Hindu monks) recognized, revered and worshiped THE SPH as the Incarnation of Paramaśiva. In 2015, he coronated THE SPH with the title of, "THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM" officially.

THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM has assumed the responsibility to revive these ancient kingdoms back to their original glory and rebuild the enlightenment ecosystems:

Juridical Statehood of The United States of KAILĀSA

UNITED NATIONS CONVENTIONS

The United Nations upholds KAILĀSA's privileges while recognizing KAILĀSA's inherited unbroken historical sovereign status as per the preamble of the:

UN Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations (UN VCDR) & UN Vienna Convention on Consular Relations (UN VCCR)

» Declares that historical "rules of customary international law continue to govern" relationships

» Confirms that "all nations from ancient times have recognized" sovereign diplomatic rights irrespective of "differing constitutional and social systems" (UN VCDR preamble)

» Requires that a "state shall not discriminate as between states" including a historical form of statehood (UN VCDR article 47.1).

The United States of KAILĀSA is a sovereign subject of international law—possessing distinctive attributes of juridical statehood derived from THE SPH NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM's inheritance of the unbroken succession and the revival of three (3) ancient Hindu sovereign states, namely the Sūrya Vamsa Surangi Samrajya Sarvajnapeetha , Suvarnapeetha Swargapura Samrajya Sarvajnapeetha, Shyamala Peetha Sarvajnapeetha and also the Kanchi KAILĀSA Sarvajnapeetha and seventeen (17) sovereign Hindu ecclesiastical historical institutions, that receive customary recognition by the United Nations as per the Vienna Convention of Diplomatic Relations of 1961 and the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations of 1963.

KAILĀSA is the revival of the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu civilizational nation with its sovereign territory. It is the first Sovereign State for all the two billion born and practicing Hindu diaspora worldwide. Unlike any other modern nation, the United States of KAILĀSA (USK) provides a base for the revival, preservation, and central administration of Hinduism, similar to the Vatican, which serves as a central administration hub for the Roman Catholic Church. The United States of KAILĀSA stands for all the great values enshrined in the constitution of KAILĀSA, the Vedas and the Āgamas. It is governed by the Sovereign Order of KAILĀSA's NITHYĀNANDA, the oldest Governing Body for Hinduism. The Sovereign Order of KAILĀSA's NITHYĀNANDA (SOKN) is an atypical government, simultaneously functioning as the supreme governing body of Hinduism and a sovereign entity under international law. This mirrors the unique status of The Holy See, which is an atypical government as well, as it serves as both the supreme governing body of the Catholic Church and a sovereign entity under international law.

The Pandya Dynasty existed for several thousands of years as a Hindu Sovereign State, it was ruled over by the Shyamalapeetha Sarvajnapeetha, a Hindu Sovereign Papal State, in which through the line of succession, THE SPH NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM is the 293rd Sovereign Supreme Pontiff.

The Sovereign Hindu Papal state of Shyamalapeetha Sarvajnapeetha, through unification with 20 other sovereign Hindu States and sovereign ecclesiastical historical entities, became part of the United States KAILĀSA which thus became a Sovereign independent juridical state, with THE SPH NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM as the Sovereign.

All the regents of the Chola empire – one of the longest-ruling dynasties in the world's history, and the Pallava dynasty were coronated and initiated by the Gurumahasannidham (Supreme Pontiff) of the Sovereign ecclesiastical historical entity of Kanchi KAILĀSA Sarvajnapeetham Thondaimandala Adheenam. THE SPH NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM, is the 233rd Sovereign Supreme Pontiff in this Sovereign ecclesiastical lineage of Kanchi KAILĀSA Sarvajnapeetham.

The Chola dynasty, established their empire over Southern Asia and South East Asia, from Kanchi (Tamil Nadu, India), Kedah (Malaysia), and developed diplomatic and trade relationships all over Asia including Southern China. The Kings of the Chola dynasty, such as King Rajarajachola after all victories installed a Shivalinga in the Sri Palsamy Mutt, Thanjavur which is presided over by THE SPH.

The Sovereign ecclesiastical Historial entity of Kanchi KAILĀSA Sarvajnapeetham, through unification with 20 other sovereign Hindu States and sovereign ecclesiastical historical entities, became part of the United States KAILĀSA, with THE SPH NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM as the Sovereign Supreme Pontiff, thus acquired all rights of the Sovereign ecclesiastical entity of Kanchi KAILĀSA Sarvajnapeetham, treaties, and constitutional authority of the Pallava and Chola dynasty.

The United States of KAILĀSA is not a competition any Nation. The United States of KAILĀSA is complementing every Nation - Like the Vatican for Catholics, Israel for Jews, KAILĀSA is the first religious Nation for all Hindus to keep Hinduism alive, a seed bank of Hinduism.

The establishment of the KAILĀSA government-in-exile is a direct response to the historical persecution faced by the Kanchi KAILĀSA Thondaimandala Sarvajnapeetha – one of the Sovereign Hindu ecclesiastical Civilizational Nations established by Lord Paramaśiva (primordial Hindu Divinity) revived 5,000 years ago, with its capital as the City of Kanchipuram. This persecution started with the invasions of 13th century that brought seven hundred years of relentless persecution, cultural genocide, ethnic cleansing, destruction of life and property, finally bringing the indigenous spiritual tradition to the threat of complete erasure, including the illegal and forceful removal of the 227th Guru Mahasannidhanam (Supreme Pontiff) by the British Government, followed by His enforced disappearance around August 1946. The persecution and interference in the succession of Guru Mahasannidhanams persisted even after Indian independence in 1947, with every Guru Mahasannidhanam facing relentless persecution, interference by deep-state authorities in execution of spiritual and temporal responsibilities, assassination attempts, enforced disappearances and being denied the right to continue the tradition. The British colonial authorities, and later, independent India's Hindumisic deep-state elements, systematically dismantled the Kanchi KAILĀSA Thondaimandala Sarvajnapeetha through deceptive legal manipulations, misappropriation and illegal property seizures of property worth more than 3 billion USD, annexation of sovereign land valuing close to a trillion USD, mob violence, and unlawful interference in Sovereign spiritual succession. In light of the more than seven hundred years of cultural genocide and relentless persecution, the 230th Guru Mahasannidhanam declared the necessity of forming a government in exile to protect the tradition from further persecution. In 1988, He identified and trained the current SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM (SPH), NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM, from the age of 10 to assume this responsibility. In 2003, THE SPH relocated the entire Kanchi KAILAASA Thondaimandala Sarvajnapeetha from India to North America, establishing it as an Intergovernmental Organization (IGO) called KAILĀSA, to safeguard the heritage and ensure the continuity of the ancient enlightened Sanatana Hindu civilization in the face of continued persecution by the Hindumisic deep-state elements of the alternative dystopian society left behind by the British.

Further, in international law, the Doctrine of Continuity states that upheavals and revolutions within a country, changes in governmental forms, the extent of a country's territory, and measures taken during a military occupation do not negate the existence of the country.

Therefore, just as any other state under international law, KAILĀSA shall be afforded its due diplomatic recognition, privileges, and immunities.

International Laws

22 reports of The United States of KAILĀSA have been published documenting the various aspects of The United States of KAILĀSA including recognizing its juridical statehood.

The United States of KAILĀSA, under the Divine guidance of THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM (THE SPH), is unwaveringly dedicated to fostering global harmony. This endeavor is pursued by building bridges of understanding and fortifying the bonds of amity among nations through the channels of spiritual and cultural diplomacy by the profound principles outlined in various United Nations (UN) documents. Through a resolute commitment to elevating discourse and representation, KAILĀSA consistently supports international forums and discussions. Representatives actively engage in deliberations on focused issues, articulating the concerns of the expansive Hindu diaspora, and proffering Hindu-centric solutions to nations across the globe, in alignment with the principles expounded by THE SPH BHAGAVĀN ŚRI NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM.

In international law, the principle of Continuity of States, states that if there were upheavals and revolutions within a country, changes in governmental forms, the extent of a country's territory, and measures taken during a military occupation do not negate the existence of the country. International law recognizes a state's legal personality through the recognition of its identity.

This perspective extends to periods of annexation or occupation, where the legal personality of a state is considered to persist, enabling its subsequent re-establishment. Historical examples date back to the eighteenth century and include cases like Portugal and Genoa, as well as instances of state re-establishment after the Vienna Congress of 1815. More recent examples, such as Poland, Ethiopia, Czechoslovakia, Albania, and Austria during and after World War II, serve as modern instances of state re-establishment, offering additional evidence in favor of recognizing and preserving a state's legal personality over time.

Right to Self-Determination

The right of a people to self-determination is a cardinal principle in modern international law.

» Based on respect for the principle of equal rights and fair equality of opportunity

» People have the right to freely choose their sovereignty

» People have the right to choose their international political status with no interference.

The member states of the UN (UN General Assembly Resolution 1514) recognized that colonized people's:

1. "Determine their own destiny and form of government."

2. Have the "freedom to build their national states by the freely expressed will and desire of their people"

Rights of Indigenous people as enshrined in UNDRIP (Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples)

Article 4: Indigenous peoples, in exercising their right to self determination, have the right to autonomy or self-government.

Article 5 Indigenous peoples have the right to maintain and strengthen their distinct political, legal, economic, social, and cultural institutions.

Article 6 Every indigenous individual has the right to a nationality.

Article 8: Prevention of any form of propaganda designed to promote or incite racial or ethnic discrimination directed against indigenous people.

Article 9: Right to belong to an indigenous community or nation by the traditions and customs of the community or nation concerned

International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR)

172 countries recognized the right to self determination at this convention.

ICCPR Declaration:

"1. All people have the right of self-determination. By right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social and cultural development."

Montevideo Convention on the Rights and Duties of States (1933)

The political existence of the State is independent of recognition by other States. Even before being recognized, the State has the right to defend its integrity and independence, provide for its preservation and prosperity, and consequently, organize itself as it sees fit, legislate concerning its interests, administer its services, and determine the jurisdiction and competence of its courts. The exercise of these rights is limited only by the exercise of the rights of other States in accordance with international law.

Definition of Statehood

The Montevideo Convention on the Rights and Duties of States (1933) states that a legitimate nation has:

(i)A permanent population (ii)A defined territory (iii)A government and (iv)

The capacity to enter into relations with the other states.

KAILĀSA meets all 4 criteria of the Montevideo Convention.

Doctrine of Acquired Rights

Upholds the principle that rights, once legally established and recognized, cannot be arbitrarily dismissed or infringed upon by subsequent changes in government policies or state structures.

Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties

Article 70 (1)(b): The termination of an international treaty "does not affect any right, obligation or legal situation of the parties created through the execution of the treaty prior to its termination."

Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations (1946)

Functional Sovereignty

- Form of Sovereignty distinct from the traditional state based Sovereignty
- Attributed to entities that, while not sovereign states in the classical sense, are granted a special status due to their unique roles and functions.

Sovereign Equality

- The fundamental underpinning of the modern international order
- States that all states have equal rights and duties and are equal members of the international community
- As a Sovereign State, KAILĀSA enjoys the same respect and responsibilities as all other nation-states today, big or small.

Sovereign Immunity - Ius imperii

- The right to rule over a people and a territory - a term used in international law to refer to the sovereign acts of a state or the Sovereign of the state.
- Principle of international law that protects states and their sovereign entities from being sued in the courts of another state without their consent.

The Continuation of Sovereignty as per International Law

KAILĀSA is an unbroken cultural, religious, historical, civilizational, and sovereign continuation and revival of multiple historical Hindu Sovereign States and Hindu ecclesiastical entities. The unbroken continuity of these nations results in the applicability of the following international customary laws and corresponding rights to THE SPH and KAILĀSA.

1. Instrument of Accession

   During the time of political independence of India a treaty was imposed for the annexation of the territory of the Surangi kingdom through threat of force and political pressure. This treaty was contrary to Hindu law as these kings were merely the regents of the presiding Deity, having no authority to accede their kingdoms to a non-Hindu entity.

   The treaty also explicitly states:

   - "Nothing in this Instrument affects the continuance of my sovereignty in and over this State"
   - "Nothing in this Instrument shall be deemed to commit me in any way to acceptance of any future Constitution of India"

2. Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (VCLT) 1969 invalidates the "Instrument of Accession" as it clearly states as grounds for invalidity of a treaty to include:
   - Restrictions on authority to express the consent of a State (article 49 VCLT)
   - Corruption of a representative of a State (article 50 VCLT)
   - Coercion of a State by the threat or use of force.
3. 3. Annexation by force is illegal in accordance with international law
   - The International Law Commission (ILC) of the UN Charter
   - The Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court (ICC) in Article 8

» The Hague Regulations and Geneva Conventions

4. Doctrine of Continuity

» By the doctrine of continuity, THE SPH NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM derives all sovereign rights and powers of the royal lineage as the sovereign from His inheritance and continuation of the unbroken succession of the Kingdom of Sūrya Vamsa Surangi Sāmrājyam Sarvajnapeetha. The Doctrine of Continuity is a set of legal facts that imply that the legitimacy of KAILĀSA manifests as a natural outcome of historical legal facts without mandating the need for further validation, confirmation, or support from other nations.

» In the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu civilization, political temporal rule (known as Porulatchi in Tamil) could not be separate from the spiritual rule (known as Arasatchi). The Pandya Dynasty existed from the 3rd - 4th centuries BCE to the 13th -14th centuries as a Hindu Sovereign State. The Hindu Sovereign State (Pandya Dynasty) was ruled by the Hindu Sovereign Papal State (Shyamalapeetha Sarvajnapeetha). The unbroken succession of the Shyamalapeetha Sarvajnapeetha was revived by Śri Tirujñānasambandar, the great incarnation of Paramaśiva who healed the Pandyan King Goon Pandyan.. Throughout history, kings maintained a reverential guru-disciple relationship with the Supreme Pontiffs. Through a line of succession, THE SPH NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM is the 293rd Sovereign Supreme Pontiff today. The appointment of the Guru Maha Sannidhanam is referred to as "Pandya Niyamana Murai" or the "Pandya Coronation Procedure." All successors are crowned with a ruling staff and a crown and given the right to conduct all administration "Sakala Nirvagankalyum Vagikkirathu." The British Government in India recognized the Shyamalapeetha Sarvajnapeetha as a State and the Guru Maha Sannidhanam as the Head of State.

» Functional immunity, honor and protection of the Head of State - Under Section 641 of the Code of Civil Procedure "The Saiva High Governor-in-Council is pleased to exempt Saiva Samayachariar Tirugnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi Avergal, the Saiva High Priest of Madura from personal appearance in the Courts of the Presidency." This shows that heads of the Shyamalapeetha Sarvajnapeetha are also recognized as the heads of the State and not subject to prosecution, or appearance in front of a court. The British conferred the title "Rao Bahadur" to rulers of kingdoms. It was given to the 289th Pontiff of the Shyamalapeetha Sarvajnapeetha, recognizing the status of Guru Maha Sannidhanams as the rulers of the Kingdom of Madurai by the British. The British also accorded the head of Shyamalapeetha Sarvajnapeetha protection equivalent to a Head of State while traveling to other states and back. An example is the 1827 ruling by Magistrate R. Peter when the Guru Maha Sannidhanam was assured protection while traveling from Salem to Coimbatore.

Juridical Statehood

Refers to the legal recognition of a political entity as a sovereign state under international law. It is the formal, legal recognition that:

1. It is an entity.
2. It is constitutionally independent of all foreign states.
3. It enjoys membership in international organizations.
4. It possesses various rights and obligations under international law.

De Jure Vs De Facto Government

1. De Jure Sovereignty - meets the legal criteria of statehood • may lack actual control or power over the territory or its administrative functions • widely recognized by the international community
2. De Facto Sovereignty - might lack legal recognition • has all the characteristics of a state and has control or power over the territory or its administrative functions • may not be widely recognized

KAILĀSA possesses both de jure and de factor sovereignty.

Responsible Democracy

PREAMBLE TO THE COSMIC CONSTITUTION

Reviver
THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM
JAGATGURU MAHASANNIDHANAM
HIS DIVINE HOLINESS
BHAGAVĀN
ŚRI NITHYANANDA PARAMASHIVAM

The Constitution and Preamble of The United States of KAILASA (USK) are unique charters that define the nation as a spiritual civilization revived for humanity.

The Identity and Authority of the USK Constitution

The Preamble is a foundational declaration that establishes the USK not merely as a political entity, but as a living testament to the ancient enlightened Sanatana Hindu civilization and cosmic law.

The Preamble holds immense sacred authority as it was revealed by THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM (SPH), JAGATGURU MAHA SANNIDHANAM HIS DIVINE HOLINESS BHAGAVĀN NITHYANANDA PARAMAŚIVAM. The entire juridical-legislative tradition of the Constitution is rooted in the timeless revelations of Paramaśiva and the Vedāgamas, which are considered the source knowledge of Hinduism (Sanātana Hindu Dharma). The spiritual foundation of the USK's governance draws specifically upon the Prasthānatraya, the highest scriptures of Hinduism:

- The Bhagavad Gītā distills the essence of dharma, self-realization, and the journey toward enlightenment.
- The Brahma Sūtras initiate a direct inquiry into the fundamentals of Existence, integrating the varied teachings of Vedānta for clarity and cohesion.
- The Upaniṣads present profound spiritual insights into consciousness, the nature of reality and the path to liberation.
