FOREWORD

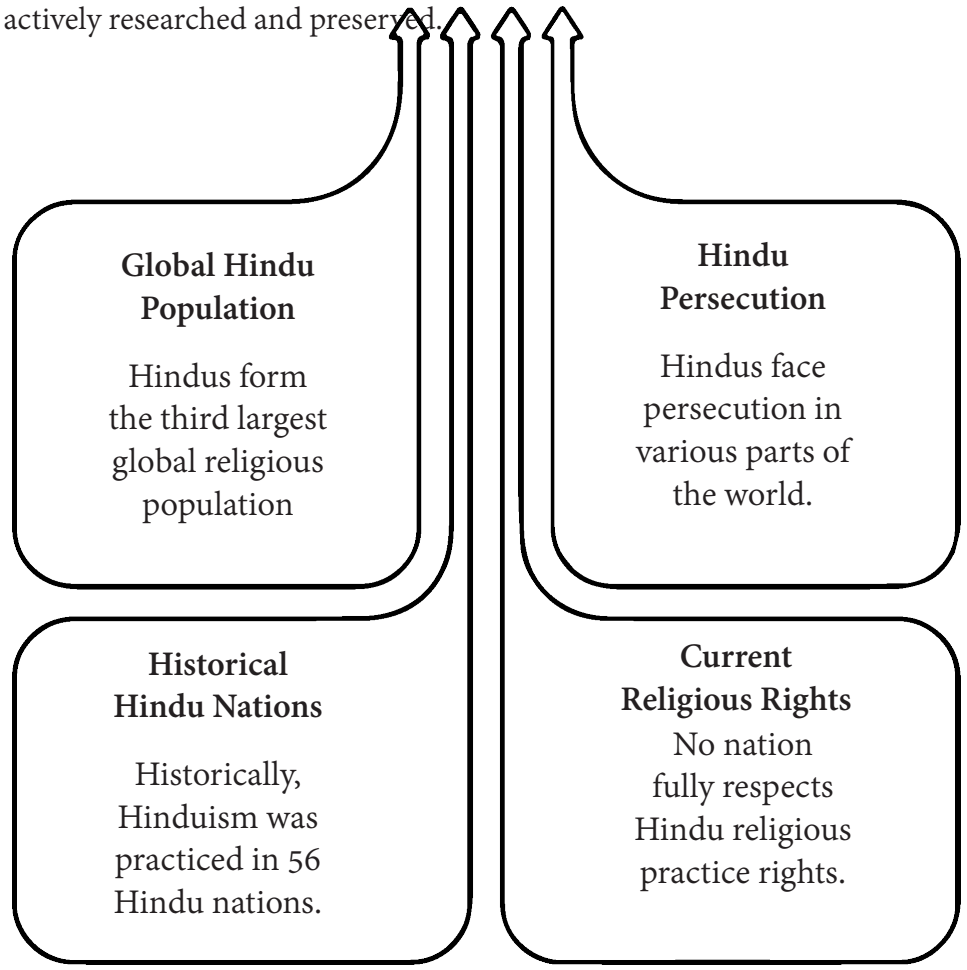
The United States of KAILASA is the revival of the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu Civilizational Nation.

The United States of KAILASA (USK) provides a base for the revival, preservation, and central administration of Hinduism, similar to the Vatican, which serves as a central administration hub for the Roman Catholic Church.

The United States of KAILASA is a sovereign nation headed by THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM, JAGATGURU MAHA SANNIDHANAM HIS DIVINE HOLINESS BHAGAVĀN NITHYANANDA PARAMAŚIVAM established in accordance with the applicable international and customary law which revives the Holy Seat of the Sarvajñapīṭha established and maintained by the primordial divinity Lord Paramaśiva Himself from time immemorial.

The United States of KAILASA is a non-violent Hindu nation, the First Sovereign State for Hindus, founding its principles on the ancient Hindu heritage of Guru- śiṣya paramparā. The Kailasa Unnatho Paramparagatha Nithyananda Sampradaya is the Sovereign religious order of Sanyāsis (Hindu monks and nuns) and other orders, including, Grihastās, Rudrakanyās, as per Hinduism. The purpose of The United States of KAILASA is to revive, preserve, protect and promulgate the ancient enlightened Hindu civilization based on Sanātana Hindu Dharma.

The Sovereign Order of KAILASA's Nithyananda (SOKN) is an atypical government, simultaneously functioning as the supreme governing body of Hinduism and a sovereign entity under international law. This mirrors the unique status of The Holy See, which is an atypical government as well, as it serves as both the supreme governing body of the Catholic Church and a sovereign entity under international law.



The United States of KAILASA is established on the principles of life and the universe revealed by Paramaśiva. The Constitution of The United States of KAILASA is rooted in the timeless revelations of Paramaśiva, it is a charter that seeks to uphold the principles of enlightenment, freedom, and dharma, which are the bedrock of a peaceful and prosperous civilization. The Preamble to this Constitution, as revealed by THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM BHAGAVĀN NITHYANANDA PARAMAŚIVAM, draws upon the highest scriptures of Hinduism - the Bhagavad Gitā, the Brahma Sūtras, and the Upaniṣads – the Prasthānatraya - which form the spiritual foundation of The United States of KAILASA's governance and vision for the world.

The Constitution of The United States of KAILASA is a living testament to the eternal truths of Sanātana Hindu Dharma, as expounded by Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam. At a time when humanity finds itself at a crossroads, faced with unprecedented challenges of conflict, disconnection, and materialism, the wisdom of the ancient seers comes to the forefront to offer guidance, clarity, and hope. It is through this sacred compilation that The United States of KAILASA seeks to share the light of Hindu and Āgamic knowledge with the entire world.

Revived by THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM BHAGAVĀN NITHYANANDA PARAMAŚIVAM, the United States of KAILASA aims to provide a safe haven for practicing Hindus and a platform for the revival of traditional knowledge, spirituality, culture and the science of enlightenment and the science of power manifestation.

Hindus constitute the third largest religion in the world, they are persecuted worldwide and while earlier there were 56 Nations where Hinduism was practiced, currently they do not have any country where their rights to practice their religion authentically are respected and the ancient tradition actively researched and preserved.

- KAILASA is the origin and continuation of the unbroken civilization of the Hindu identity.
- One of the unique characteristics of the Hindu identity is its synchrony and harmony of material goals with spiritual advancement as evidenced in its fourfold pursuits of individual existence as dharma-artha- kāma-mokṣa.
- Hinduism has the unique component of embodiments of the Ultimate happening again and again on planet Earth as avatārs to reestablish dharma that degrades over time with the loss of knowledge and values.
- The Supreme Pontiff of Hinduism, Jagatguru Mahāsannidhānam Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam (hereinafter referred to as "SPH", "His Divine Holiness" or "HDH"), the 233rd Guru Mahāsannidhānam (Pontiff) of Thondaimandala Aadheenam, ordained as the 293rd Guru Mahāsannidhānam (Pontiff) of Śyāmala Pīṭha Sarvajñapīṭham, ordained as the 23rd Guru Mahāsannidhānam of Dharmamukti Svargapura Ādheenam, and coronated as the 203rd Emperor of Sūryavaṃśa Suraṅgi Sāmrājya, and multiple other Hindu kingdoms, declared the revival and establishment of KAILASA in accordance with internationally accepted norms, with the right to sovereign self-determination, to fulfill this purpose of preserving the said rights of Hindus, who practice the most ancient and most peace-loving tradition in the world, in an announcement that outlined the vision for the State under a time-tested model of Hindu governance and Hindu administration, as a place where Hindus can practice Hinduism authentically and peacefully.
- The Bhagavad Gitā, often described as the 'Eternal Song of God,' is an exquisite dialogue that distills the essence of dharma, self-realization, and the journey towards the ultimate truth – enlightenment.
- It guides the individual towards the fulfillment of both personal and collective responsibilities. The Brahma Sūtras provide the philosophical framework that integrates and harmonizes the varied teachings of Vedānta, offering clarity and cohesion in the pursuit of ultimate knowledge. The Upaniṣads present profound spiritual insights into the nature of existence, consciousness, and the path to liberation.

- As revealed and explained by Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam, these scriptures come alive, offering a deeper understanding of their eternal truths.
- His interpretations transcend mere intellectual comprehension, providing direct experiential insights into the eternal realities of life.
- This Preamble is not merely a declaration of ideals; it is a living, breathing document that reflects the enlightened civilizational principles of The United States of KAILASA - a nation revived to foster a global community rooted in compassion, non-violence, and spiritual fulfillment.
- The Preamble invites all of humanity to participate in the journey towards enlightenment, embracing the values of oneness, harmony, and righteous living.
- Through this sacred text, THE SPH Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam has gifted humanity the guiding light needed to navigate the complexities of modern life while remaining rooted in the eternal wisdom of the Vedas and Āgamas.
- It is a call to action - to live in alignment with cosmic law, to experience the ultimate state of bliss, and to create a world where every being can explode in the space of Paramaśivoham.

PREFACE

MahāKAILĀSA has manifested successfully in bhūmaṇḍala (planet Earth) for the benefit of humanity, to bless the humanity.

KAILASA is the revival of the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharmic civilizational nation.

KAILASA has sovereign territories gifted by a few nations through treaties and autonomous territories gifted by a few nations and indigenous nations through international standard bilateral territory treaties.

The only civilization which is still alive is the Hindu civilization, and it was not just ancient; it was enlightened.

Enlightenment is the center of that civilization. At every level it was not just highly advanced, it was fully enlightened - spiritually, socially, morally, culturally, scientifically, in creativity and art, economically, politically. In every field, it was an enlightened civilization.

Now with the grace of Paramaśiva He Himself manifested and revived the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharmic civilizational nation in this bhūmaṇḍala.

MahāKAILĀSA, the higher planes and lokas in the vertical time zones and parallel universes are eternal.

In bhūmaṇḍala, sometimes, when it starts degrading, He Himself manifests out of His compassion and grace and revives, mapping MahāKAILĀSA on bhūmaṇḍala and manifests it to grace, bless this bhūmaṇḍala.

Like Śrī Kṛṣṇa says, yogaḥ naṣṭaḥ parantapa – In course of time, when yoga is lost, He assumes a being and manifests, revives, reestablishes – adā yadā hi dharmasya glānir bhavati Bhārataabhyutthānam adharmasya tadātmānaṁ sṛjāmy aham – He Himself manifests and revives the enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharma civilization.

Paritrāṇāya sādhūnāṁ vināśāya ca duṣkṛtām dharma-saṁsthāpanārthāya sambhavāmi yuge yuge – He Himself manifests.

Paramaśiva Himself manifests and revives this ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharma civilizational nation.

This whole work of this revival has happened with Paramaśiva's grace and compassion with He Himself manifesting along with a generation of Hindus. A full generation of Hindus worked inspired by Him, devoted to Him, sacrificed with their hard work, sharing of their time, treasure, talent, did their tyāga in a very systematic and organized way and above all, facing all the persecution, genocide boldly and standing up for Sanātana Hindu dharma.

Successfully Paramaśiva has manifested this MahāKAILĀSA – the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu civilizational nation.

When I use the word enlightened I mean all the parama satyas about Paramaśiva, Īśvara and Jīva (individual soul), jagat (world), how people can connect with Him, how He connects with people, this whole knowledge is enlightenment – Paramaśiva bhakti, Paramaśiva jñāna, Paramaśiva vijñāna– all these three put together is what I call enlightenment.

To give you one example, the parama satya about temple is Paramaśiva manifests through the arcāvatāra, through the deity. He resides, lives and manifests as arcāvatāra. He accepts our worship, prayers; He gives boons, blessings, His presence, healing and more. This is the parama satya about temple.

Those who are against Sanātana Hindu dharma completely try to discredit temple and deity worship. Even those who try to support Sanātana Hindu dharma look at the temple only as a social utility value where you experience peace and satisfaction and people gather in a worship altar. But the parama satya about temple needs to be revived – Paramaśiva is real and He manifests in the deity when He is installed, invoked and prāṇa-pratiṣṭhā is done as per the Agama He gave to humanity. Those truths, parama satyas need to be demonstrated. Only anything which can be demonstrated and is reproducible will continue to survive and flourish.

So one of the first responsibilities of Paramaśiva's manifestations this time is to establish the parama satyas about the temple science – Paramaśiva is real and He manifests through the deities with the proper Prāṇa-pratiṣṭhā science. When He manifests as arcāvatāra, His presence does so much good to the whole world. This revival happened successfully with the grace of Paramaśiva almost in every KAILASA around the world.

We have thousands of organizations of KAILASA present in over 150 countries and more than 100 indigenous nations and kingdoms known as ancient nations. Many of the organizations have NGO status with the United Nations and hold various levels of diplomatic relations – some have sovereign status, some have autonomous status, some have extra-territorial status, some have diplomatic status, some have diplomatic seat agreement, some have host country agreement, and some are legally recognized church-status organizations by that country.

With Paramaśiva's grace He has manifested various levels in various places all over the world but in all temples He is fully present. It may be run, administered and maintained by the monks and nuns and people who belong to the Sovereign Order of KAILASA's Nithyananda or by the affiliated organizations and initiated disciples and devotees everywhere. In all KAILASA's temples Paramaśiva is real and fully manifesting and available in the form of deity, arcāvatāra.

Every level parama satyas need to be revived. All the parama satyas Paramaśiva revealed about this whole Cosmos and the Cosmic Constitution in Vedas and Āgamas.

This Cosmic Constitution – the natural law of the universe - mapped to this bhūmaṇḍala are the Dharmaśāstras. These parama satyas need to be demonstrated. We need to show to the world all these parama satyas can be demonstrated and they are reproducible, user-friendly in cognitive, emotional, social, political, moral, economic and every level.

The great parama satyas Paramaśiva revealed about this Cosmic Constitution in the Vedas and Āgamas which are mapped to this bhūmaṇḍala through the Dharmaśāstras, all these need to be demonstrated as a real, workable, functional model.

One example of the great social system of Sanātana Hindu dharma is the varṇāśrama system. All those against Sanātana Hindu dharma are trying to destroy Sanātana Hindu dharma by mis-presenting, abusing, attacking and trying to destroy this varṇāśrama dharma tradition and system. Even the Hindus who are supporting this great system are not demonstrating that it is a functional model.

There are around 149 major and minor Dharmaśāstras; 32 are major Dharmaśāstras which are capable of being used and applied as a functional jurisprudence model. When KAILASA started reviving the varṇāśrama dharma, we saw the amazing benefits of sons doing fathers' jobs, sons learning from their parents and elders. These systems are amazing successful ways of specializing in every field. No sthapati who studied in the so-called colleges can produce a masterpiece like the 1000 pillared hall of Meenakshi temple or Belur Halebidu temples but the hereditary sthapatis - by the time the child is 7 or 8 - starts manifesting mastery when he starts living and learning with the parents and elders.

The ecosystem to specialize great things comes by this hereditary education system because it comes from generations who master and perfect, giving a breakthrough in every generation in that field. The field gets a breakthrough every few years. Many aspects of Sanātana Hindu dharma are now demonstrated as functional, successful, peaceful, happy, blissful and prosperous social models and structures.

The purpose of KAILASA is to demonstrate that our ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharma civilization is still functional, still has great value not just spiritually but also socially.

The great system called Responsible Democracy is from Sanātana Hindu dharma. Responsible democracy means people who are educated, involved, and who have given their life to that field, make decisions and votes on matters relating to that field. For example, people who gave their life for education, studied and dedicated their life for educating others, gather and vote on any matter relating to the education of the masses. In the same way, people who gave their life for wealth generation (not grabbing but generating), because they gave their life to generating wealth and made many people generate wealth, vote and decide all the economic policies of that nation. This is called responsible democracy. Neither can all be given voting rights, nor can people be kept away from policymaking and decision-making.

A unique tradition of Anubhava Maṇḍapa in Veerashaiva tradition and Devasiriya Maṇḍapa in Tamil Shaiva tradition reveals the nuances, details and depths about the principles of responsible democracy. Our Dharmaśāstras elaborately discuss this concept and principle of responsible democracy.

In KAILASA, we are reviving every dimension of ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharma civilization by the grace of Paramaśiva, absolutely in a non-violent way, with pure ahiṁsā. Just through diplomatic cooperation, through treaties, a few countries had given small sovereign islands to KAILASA for its people to live and revive Sanātana Hindu dharma. With that, the first KAILASA was manifested successfully - Paramaśiva manifested KAILASA. Then a few other countries gave small territories like less than 200 acres. But with Paramaśiva's grace, Paramaśiva Himself manifested various communities, sanghas of KAILASA - like in some places the male monk sannyāsa sampradāya was established, in some places female nun sannyāsa sampradāya was established, in some places grihastha sampradāya was established.

With Paramaśiva's grace, a few countries have given not sovereign but autonomous status where we have freedom to administer, live, and self-govern in that particular area with our philosophy, principles and our structure. In some countries we received few properties with extra territorial status.

With Paramaśiva's grace, we stitched all of these and evolved as the United States of KAILASA. First Paramaśiva manifested KAILASA, then the United States of KAILASA. With Paramaśiva's grace, as we are a non violent civilization and KAILASA is a service based organizational nation always contributing, we only serve people and don't grab others' wealth, attack anyone or convert people. Neither does KAILASA have the attitude of militant missionaries nor the attitude of missionary militants. KAILASA is absolutely non-violent, ahiṁsā-centered service-based organizational nation.

A few more indigenous nations welcomed us and gave us autonomous territories within their nation, which is allowed as per the Constitution of their countries, through their diplomatic relations and bilateral treaties and we have also started expanding.

Our service activities have spread all over the world and integrating all these as per the Montevideo convention all the requirements of a nation are fulfilled – a permanent territory, permanent population living in the territory, permanent government structure and ability to enter into treaties with other countries.

With Paramaśiva's grace the expansion is happening all over the world. Next it evolved to the level of K.A.I.L.A.S.A IGO (Inter Governmental Organization). First, Paramaśiva manifested KAILASA, one small sovereign territory. Then it multiplied and evolved into the United States of KAILASA. Then it raised to the level of K.A.I.L.A.S.A IGO – KAILASA's Alliance of International Legal bodies And Sovereign Authorities. With Paramaśiva's grace, now K.A.I.L.A.S.A IGO has manifested formally.

With Paramaśiva's grace, we have evolved UAN – United Ancient Nations. Paramaśiva successfully manifested and is introducing it to the world formally now. It is United Nations for Ancient Nations and Indigenous Nations. This is a profound intergovernmental body, more than 100 nations are already members of this UAN. It is to unite and support all the indigenous nations and kingdoms all over the world, for protecting the rights of aboriginal communities, promoting peaceful coexistence and mutual understanding, reviving ancient sacred sciences and knowledge systems, and advocating for the sovereignty and rights of the indigenous peoples worldwide.

KAILASA has also created a World Health Organization for indigenous nations, an International Monetary Fund for indigenous nations, and World Bank for indigenous nations. All these structures have evolved and now are successfully functional.

I welcome all of you to be a part of this ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharma civilizational nation's revival. Successfully Paramaśiva revived it in various levels. Now it is available for the world so we can go on serving. We have also revived and established KAILASA's Sovereign Order of Monks, Nuns, Gṛhasthas, and Vānaprasthas on this planet Earth for all of us to manifest enlightenment as a lifestyle, Paramādvaita as a lifestyle.

Paramaśiva successfully manifested and made KAILASA available for all of you. We are here welcoming every one of you to become part of this great revival of the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharma civilizational nation and grow together and make this planet Earth a better place to live in.

- Presidential Address on the SPH (Supreme Pontiff of Hinduism) Nithyananda Day (3 January 2025)

The parama satyas about MahāKAILĀSA will make you manifest the ultimate Paramādvaita in your life in all levels – cognition, emotional, social, moral, spiritual, environmental.

In all six levels experience Paramādvaita. Paramādvaita means experiencing the ultimate oneness with the ultimate life force, power, Paramaśiva. Paramaśiva is a living manifestation of what you can imagine about God and more than that. All the manifest and unmanifest and more is Paramaśiva.

Having oneness with that ultimate Paramaśiva's being is Paramādvaita. Paramādvaita means experiencing oneness with Paramaśiva, the ultimate Supreme Godhead.

The whole universe rises, stays and goes back into Paramaśiva. Experiencing ultimate oneness with Paramaśiva is Paramādvaita.

Experiencing Paramādvaita in the cognition level happens by intense sādhanā and spiritual initiation. Practice of Paramaśiva bhakti, Paramaśiva jñāna, Paramaśiva vijñāna, the devotion towards Paramaśiva with the proper knowledge of Paramaśiva and manifesting the powerful truths of Paramaśiva in your life all these put together makes you experience Paramādvaita with Paramaśiva in cognition level.

That is not enough. Next is emotional level. All devotional practices like building a temple, visiting a temple, worshipping in temple, daily doing Ānmārtha pūjā, personal worship and Parārtha pūjā - all these kriyas, rituals, devotional practices like kīrtan, japa, nāmasankīrtan makes you experience Paramādvaita in emotional level.

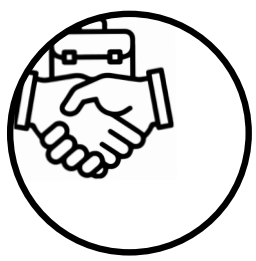
This is also not enough. We need to experience Paramādvaita in all the six levels – cognition level, emotional level, social

Cognitive Level

Experience Oneness with Paramaśiva through spiritual initiation and the practice of Paramaśiva Bhakti, Jnana, and Vijnana.

Emotional Level

Experiencing emotions through devotional practices, such as temple building, rituals, kirtan etc.



Social Level

Enriching and causing others to experience Paramadvaita as well, by sharing the principles within one's community.

Moral Level

Establishing all interactions, including financial, legal, and interpersonal relations, centered around Paramadvaita.

Spiritual Level

Achieving a collective state of integrity and shared Paramadvaita experience, leading to daily miracles in one's own life.

Environmental Level

Experiencing Paramadvaita even with the trees, rivers, forest, hills and everything.

6 Levels of Paramadvaita

The pursuit of Paramadvaita, the experience of ultimate Oneness with Paramaśiva, is crucial for humans regardless of religion or culture. The government of KAILĀSA prioritizes fostering a spiritual society while addressing the need of social aspects in Paramadvaita. It supports citizens' growth across all dimensions at each level.

Scan to explore the 6 levels of Paramadvaita level, moral level, spiritual level, environmental level.

This ultimate truths, Paramasatyas of Paramaśiva, the great truths of living enlightenment, should be experienced by every being in all these six levels.

The purpose of human existence is to experience living enlightenment, Paramādvaita, jeevan mukti in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level, environmental level – all six levels. Paramaśiva Sena is for this revival and to make all those who realize this experience Paramādvaita in all forms of Paramaśiva jñāna, Paramaśiva vijñāna, Paramaśiva bhakti, in all six levels of cognitive level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level.

First, the cognition level. Through Paramaśiva bhakti, Paramaśiva jñāna, Paramaśiva vijñāna, and initiation you can experience Paramādvaita in your cognition level. Through the religious practices, devotional practices like kīrtan, bhakti, pūjā, as Nārada Bhakti Sūtras explain the sixteen ways of doing bhakti – doing sevā, worship, being a servant of the Lord; kīrtans and singing the Lord's name, doing pūjā and rituals, anamartha pūjā, Parārtha pūjā – all these religious practices and devotional practices make you experience Paramādvaita in emotional level.

When you enrich others, cause others, with Paramādvaita, everyone around you like your family and team with whom you work, with whom you share your life, whoever is part of your reality- you will experience Paramādvaita in social level. That is why enriching and causing is important, because only through enriching and causing, you will experience Paramādvaita in social level.

The society you are living in should be enriched with Paramādvaita for you to experience Paramādvaita completely. Due to invasions and colonization, Hindus lost confidence to enrich others with Paramādvaita in social level. This is one of the biggest crimes done to Hindus. By continuously facing cultural genocide and violent conversion, due to militant missionaries and missionary militants, Hindus lost not only the then-existing social level Paramādvaita civilization but they also lost even the courage to enrich others with the great principles and truths of Paramādvaita.

Hats off to Śrīla Prabhupada and His ISKCON movement for breaking that fear, taking Harināma to every city, every town and enriching people, demonstrating the importance of teaching the Sanātana Hindu Dharma principle of Kṛṣṇa bhakti in social level.

All Hindus, wake up to the truth - just experiencing Paramādvaita in cognition level and emotional level is not enough. You need to enrich people with this great Paramādvaita, the science of living enlightenment, jīvanmukti. If you don't enrich, the society around you will put the toxins of materialism, self-doubt, Guru-doubt, deity-doubt, God-doubt and all types of doubts and hatred and denials in you, because they are waiting to put their ideas in you. Better enrich and make your Paramādvaita as experience in social level.

The whole Paramaśiva Sena program is to make you experience Paramādvaita in all these 6 levels - cognition level, emotional level, social level. moral level, spiritual level, environmental level. Hindus, whether the countries they went and settled in, or the countries from where they came, all those countries have suffered colonization and invasion. Even in the countries they went and settled in, they suffer with the deep inferiority complex due to the prolonged invasions, colonization and one of the largest untold genocides.

One of the largest untold genocides in the world was suffered by Hindus. The longest, largest, untold genocide was suffered by Hindus. It is 10 times bigger than the Jewish Holocaust - whether it is with respect to the number of people who died due to the invaders and colonizers or the properties lost or the people displaced - in every level, it is the longest, largest, untold genocide.

Due to this genocide, the confidence of Hindus was crushed. Not only did they lose Paramadvaitic experience in social level, they even lost confidence that they can build a society with Paramādvaita experience at social level.

It is time Hindus wake up. Let us take this as the sankalpa –that we will experience Paramādvaita in all six levels - cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level, environmental level.

Hindus are the most peaceful, nonviolent civilization and unfortunately, the most persecuted civilization who suffered the largest, longest, untold genocide. If we don't tell what our ancestors, predecessors, forefathers sacrificed, we are doing injustice to them. If we are not telling the world what our predecessors suffered, we are doing injustice to their sacrifice and we have not learnt the lessons from history. If you don't learn the lessons from history, it is going to repeat. Wake up!

Let us experience Paramādvaita in social level. The people with whom you share your life, those who are part of your reality, enrich them with this great principle of Paramādvaita, this experience of Paramādvaita. Enrich them, cause them with

Scan to watch THE SPH's revelations on the six levels of Paramadvaita Paramādvaita. That is the only way you will experience Paramādvaita in the social level.

Living with the people who experience the same truth as you is KAILASA. That is what is svarga. That is what is heaven. That is what is the ultimate world. We can make Kailasa on this planet Earth. We can map Kailasa on this planet Earth. We can invoke Kailasa with the grace of Paramaśiva on this planet Earth. Paramaśiva has already manifested. We can all be part and manifest Kailasa wherever we are by enriching and causing the Paramādvaita at the social level.

Next is the moral level. All interactions you do with others and others do with you come under moral - good or bad, right or wrong - all types of interactions, whether they are related to money or relationship or legal or anything. All types of interactions can be classified at the moral level. The lowest is the country law, the highest is the cosmic law. Country law is the minimum level of morality expected from everyone in that country. Cosmic law is the ultimate morality everyone should radiate. From country law to cosmic law, at every level, all interactions, transactions and relationships are classified under the moral level.

Only if you enrich everyone around you with this Paramādvaita principle, the whole society will start radiating Paramādvaita in the interaction level. So all interactions between you and others will be with the great celebration of Paramādvaita at the moral level. Paramādvaita should be your moral life. Your sense of right and wrong—whether based on country law, financial morals, or relationship morals— should be centered on Paramādvaita.

Paramaśiva beautifully says in the Vedas – Eko'ham bahu syām aha - Let Me become many to celebrate Me. That is the truth you should be experiencing at the moral level. You should feel everyone around you is radiating Paramādvaita, including you. So all interactions, transactions,and relationships- everything - is Paramādvaita centric. This is experiencing Paramaśiva in moral level, experiencing Paramādvaita in moral level.

The Hindu jurisprudence, Sanātana Hindu Dharma jurisprudence, Manuvādī Dharmaśāstras and Varṇāśrama dharma are absolutely centered on Paramādvaita at the moral level and social level. Due to the continuous Hindumisic and Hinduhobic media, hate speech, false propaganda and brainwashing, even Hindus started doubting the practicality, functionality, sacredness of Manuvādī Dharmaśāstras and Sanātana Hindu Dharmic social, moral structure, Varṇāśrama dharma.

Hindus forgot that among the 49 pre-Bronze age civilizations, the only civilization that is still alive, unbroken and continuous is the Sanātana Hindu Dharma civilization. It is because of their social, moral fabric which was established on Paramādvaita, Manuvādī Dharmaśāstras and Varṇāśrama dharma.

Paramādvaita experienced at the social level and moral level is dharma. The Manuvādī Dharmaśāstras and Varṇāśrama dharma kept Sanātana Hindu Dharma alive even though all the 48 pre-Bronze age civilizations were wiped out. There were 49 pre-Bronze age civilizations. All 48 are only there as a relic. Only Sanātana Hindu Dharma is still living as a civilization.

Unfortunately even Hindus are not realizing their strength has always been Manuvādī Dharmaśāstras and Varṇāśrama dharma. The Hindumisic, Hinduphobic media, anti-Hindu media and institutions have been doing continuous hate speech and activities of cultural genocide and brainwashing. Unfortunately, Hindus are losing the moral and social level Paramādvaita, Manuvādī Dharmaśāstras and the Sanātana Hindu dharmic fabric of the Sanātana Hindu civilizational nation.

Oh Hindus wake up! It is time you all wake up and realize what kept you alive for so long and revive your strengths so you can continue to flourish and serve the humanity. You have a reason to exist because you have so much of good to contribute to humanity. The most nonviolent, peaceful and blissfully coexisting civilization is the Sanātana Hindu dharmic civilization- the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharmic civilization, the most contributing civilization.

You can see that globally Hindus are the richest ethnic minority in in 112 countries including USA, Canada, Australia and UK as per the statistics. Even in USA and Canada, Hindus are the richest ethnic minority because they are the biggest contributing and law abiding people leading to crime-free societies with the lowest divorce rate, highest education and lowest drug abuse or any form of addiction.

Hindus need to know what their strength is and why they are successful everywhere. They need to revive their strengths of experiencing Paramādvaita at the social level and moral level.

The weakness of Hindus is they are rapidly losing that strength, that experience, due to prolonged invasions, colonizations and modern day Hindumisic, Hinduphobic media infrastructure and interests.

O Hindus wake up! It is time we revive the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharmic civilizational nation all over the world to contribute to humanity. Next is the spiritual level. Only when you experience Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level and moral level, your life will be radiating Paramādvaita in spiritual level. Your life will be filled with miracles. You will be causing miracles for yourself and everyone around you and everyone around you will be causing miracles for themselves and for you. It is possible. Paramaśiva has manifested it as KAILASA and demonstrated.

When you experience dharma in social and moral level, you experience the Paramādvaita in social and moral level. Dharmo rakṣati rakṣitaḥ – When you protect dharma, dharma protects you. In spiritual level, only when everyone around you radiates dharma, in the collective integrity, collective authenticity, collective enriching, collective responsibility, collective causing, collective Paramādvaita experience, you experience Paramādvaita in spiritual level. For experiencing Paramādvaita in spiritual level, collective integrity, collective authenticity, collective enriching, collective responsibility, is fundamental need.

Build collective integrity so you can all experience Paramādvaita in spiritual level where you cause miracles for others and others cause miracles for you, and life becomes spiritual celebration. You experience spiritual life when you experience Paramādvaita in spiritual level.

ŚrīKṛṣṇasaysinBhagavadGītābeautifully–Yogaḥnaṣṭaḥparantapaḥ–Incourseoftime,yogaislost.Dharmasaṁsthāpanārthāya sambhāvāmi yuge yuge - To reestablish dharma, He manifests again and again to establish Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level. That is why He says in Gita – Paritrāṇāya sādhunām vināśāyaca duṣkṛtam dharmasaṁsthāpanārthāya sambhāvāmi yuge yuge.

Only when you manifest Paramādvaita in social and moral level, you will start experiencing it in spiritual level. Experiencing Paramādvaita in spiritual level means everything you want will just like that manifest, you will cause miracles for others and others will cause miracles for you. You will be the cause for the spiritual miracles in everyone's life. Everyone around you will be the cause for the great spiritual miracles in your life. You will see Paramaśiva everywhere, in you and everyone will see Paramaśiva in you and in them. Everyone seeing Paramaśiva everywhere, living in that society and ecosystem is what I call experiencing Paramādvaita in spiritual level.

Next is environmental level. Environmental level means experiencing Paramādvaita even with the trees, rivers, forests, nature, everything – with the whole environment around you, with the whole universe manifest and unmanifest.

In KAILASA, every being is given right to live. In KAILASA, you can't cut trees, you can't kill any animal – it is a law. All animals and trees are given the status of being and all of them are given the right to live. River is a living entity. Hill is a living being. River is not just a living being, she is a goddess. Today we worship Ganga, Yamuna, Saraswati. Kumbh Mela is the largest pilgrimage. Ganga, Yamuna, Saraswati are the largest worshiped deities in the whole world because the largest spiritual pilgrimage and the largest gathering of humanity happens at the Kumbh mela. Kumbh mela is the largest gathering of humanity and it is to worship Ganga, Yamuna, Saraswati, the 3 rivers, goddesses. We don't see environment and rivers as ordinary human beings but as divine beings because we know they are gods and goddesses.

Experiencing Paramādvaita in the environmental level is the ultimate. In all six levels we should experience Paramādvaita. The whole Hindu civilization is established on experiencing Paramādvaita in environmental level, not just at social, spiritual and moral levels. That is why Hindus are the largestvegetarian society.

Every enlightened principle of Hinduism is established on experiencing Paramādvaita in environmental level. That is why KAILASA works with all indigenous nations to protect environment, the forests, rivers, land, for the generations to come.

Not only humanity should wake up to the truth of global warming, but we should also learn how to live with nature blissfully, coexisting with nature blissfully, not imbalancing the nature. We should not think planet Earth is only for human beings. We should experience Paramādvaita with the whole environment, that is the only way we can save the world, humanity and planet Earth, the brahmāṇḍa and universe we are in.

Experiencing Paramādvaita in all these levels only will make you complete enlightened being. KAILASA is manifested by Paramaśiva for this purpose - to demonstrate to the world it is possible to experience, live and radiate Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level.

O Hindus wake up! It is time now we need to understand our glorious ancient, enlightened Sanātana Hindu dharmic civilization's truths, powers, reality and revive it. Paramaśiva has manifested MahāKAILĀSA for this purpose.

KAILASA is experiencing Paramādvaita in all six levels - cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level. Every activity of KAILASA is to manifest, experience and radiate Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level.

Purpose of human life itself is to manifest Paramādvaita in all these six levels. Enrich the world with Paramādvaita. Be the cause for the world to experience Paramādvaita in all the six levels. Be Paramaśiva's ambassadors. Manifest Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level. This is the only way you can manifest the ultimate reality. Let us all make this planet Earth a blissful place to live in and coexist, celebrating knowing that each of us is a manifestation of the Divine, celebrating Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level.

We have to revive Sanātana Hindu Dharma as we are the only hope for humanity, being the nonviolent, ahiṁsā based civilization, blissfully coexisting love and enlightenment based civilization. Ahiṁsā paramo dharmaḥ – among the natural laws of life, nonviolence is the ultimate natural law of the universe.

Let us celebrate ahiṁsā and blissfully coexist, remove all types of terrorism and coerced conversions. It is time humanity wakes up to the truths of ultimate life. We Hindus have the responsibility to take this great message of experiencing Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level, to the world.

Paramādvaita should be lived and manifested in every level so Paramasatya becomes life inside you and outside you.

Your life is not just life inside you. Your life is life inside you and life outside you and the impact of life outside you on your life inside you, all three put together.

How Paramādvaita should be experienced and become your reality in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level, environmental level is important to know so you understand you cannot take some component of this truth lightly.

One of the biggest life negative ideas drilled into the Hindu minds is to lose their enlightenment ecosystem. It is the worst conspiracy done against the ancient enlightened Hindu civilization.

Experiencing Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level, environmental level is important. First it should start in the cognition level. But that does not mean it is the only first priority. This is a deep misunderstanding and misinterpretation by the anti-Hindu elements and vested interests. Even Hindus started believing the idea of Hinduism imposed on them by the invaders and colonizers.

Śṛṇvante putre amṛtasya putrāḥ – O Sons of Immortality!

The most beautiful, powerful, wonderful, ancient enlightened Hindu civilization was radiating Paramādvaita in all these six levels - cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level, environmental level.

First it should start in cognition level undoubtedly but that is not the first priority. All the six levels are priorities. You cannot live Paramādvaita in only cognition level and emotional level and think that your life will be fulfilled. Wake up to the basic truth of life. If the law of the land is against Hinduism completely, anti-Hindu, against the great principles of Paramādvaita, how do you expect your life to radiate Paramādvaita?

Slowly not only you forget your Paramaśivatva, you start believing Paramaśivatva is impossible and you start thinking these stories of people radiating Paramaśivatva living enlightenment are all myth, legend, false, lies and stories. That is the way invaders and colonizers brainwashed the whole Hindu civilization. First they said all these Puranas are not true. They used their fake science and fake rationalism as a weapon against the Hindu race.

Usually the pseudo science and fake rationalism is used as the weapon in the hands of the Hindumisic elements to destroy the great ancient Hindu civilization. Hindus are falling prey for it, not only getting brainwashed, but Hindus even started believing the enlightened Hindu civilization's principles will not generate wealthy society. We forgot that in the ancient world, before the colonization, 40% of the world's GDP was Hindu nations' GDP.

Sanātana Hindu dharmic civilization is not only capable of making you wealthy civilization, it is capable of making you responsibly wealthy. It is from Sanātana Hindu dharmic civilization that the best things in the world came out, the best fruits humanity is enjoying is the gift of the Sanātana Hindu civilization to the world.

When you radiate Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level, you generate such large innovative energy. Not just generating wealth, you develop such sublime, powerful, extremely life positive political structure, administration structure because so much importance is given to every individual's complete wellness – physical wellness, mental wellness, emotional wellness, wealth, blissful peaceful happy relationships.

So many authentic researchers and scholars are making statements about how rich the Hindu civilization was, how great the Hindu civilization was. When Hindus were forcibly brainwashed and made to believe that in cognition level and emotional level Paramādvaita is enough, they not only lost the glorious civilization but they don't have the backbone to stand again.

You need to do purvapaksha why you were great, why you are suffering now, who is responsible, what is responsible for your suffering and how to get out of it and become great again.

The only way is reviving the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu civilization in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level.

Why Paramādvaita should be manifested in all six levels, how it should be manifested, what should be done, when it should be done, all this should be thoroughly understood.

In cognition and emotional level when you start radiating Paramādvaita, you will experience inner peace. It is a good way to start but it is a wrong way to end if you stop with that.

If you just stop with experiencing Paramādvaita in cognition and emotional level, you are absolutely criminally negligent. You will not only not keep it alive for the next generation, you will start doubting your Paramādvaita experience inside you as a delusion, fantasy or illusion.

Paramaśiva manifested KAILASA to radiate Paramādvaita in cognition level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level.

When Paramādvaita is radiated and manifested in social level, everyone you deal with in your life will see you as the ultimate reality Paramaśiva and you will see them as the ultimate reality Paramaśiva.

Kṛṣṇa says in Bhagavad Gita, 'My devotee sees Me in everyone and within them.'

It is not some myth or fantasy or dram He is selling. It is possible experientially. In social level when you experience Paramādvaita, you see God in every living being. When you complete with everyone around you – family members, teamily members- people with whom you work and share your life, personal time - when you enrich them with living enlightenment, Paramādvaita, your whole life will take a 360 degree turn upward. You will manifest a totally new higher reality. When people around you see you as Paramaśiva and you see them as Paramaśiva, that is heaven because so much of sensitivity, friendliness, love and care will be added in every interaction, not just in every relationship. Every interaction will be blissful.

Kṛṣṇa says in Chapter 6, verse 31 of Bhagavad Gita:

sarvabhūtasthitaṃ yo māṃ bhajatyekatvamāsthitaḥ
sarvathā vartamāno'pi sa yogī mayi vartate ||6-31||

The yogi who is established in union with Me and worships Me as he Supreme Soul residing in all beings, dwells only in Me, though engaged in all kinds of activities.

It is practically possible. People believe only if you go and sit in the forest and do some tapas, this is possible. With intense completion and enriching everyone around you with living enlightenment, it is possible in your very life.

Love makes you feel your beloved is God, your beloved in turn makes you feel you are God.

You see God in the eyes of your beloved. In turn when your beloved sees God in you, the completion of godliness happens so deeply, it is God's love beginning in you and reaching to your people and God's love overpowering them and pouring back on you - when this love cycle gets completed, you literally experience Paramaśiva, Paramādvaita in social level. Every interaction will be fulfilling. Every face you see will bring tremendous joy and bliss.

Do not waste your life by experiencing Paramādvaita in just cognition and emotional level. Enrich and share in the social level boldly. Break from the cowardliness pattern.

Be the Śaiva Śarabha, Vedānta Simha, Paramādvaita Śarabha.

Stop being intimidated by your cowardliness patterns of shrinking and living Paramādvaita just in cognition and emotional level.

Only when you start boldly enriching people around you with Paramādvaita, your Paramādvaita experience will start settling in you permanently. Only then will your Paramādvaita experience make your life ecstatic.

Paramādvaita is not something you just experience during meditation in cognition level, in emotional level during pūjā; it should fill your life more than your breathing. It is your very soul.

When Kṛṣṇa says, sarva bhutasya yo mām - Me manifesting in every being - a person who experiences this experiences Paramādvaita in social level.

Put your time, talent, treasure in building Paramādvaita centric relationships, Paramādvaita in your social level. Paramādvaita should be every day sweetly, beautifully radiating bliss. Bliss is the flavor of Paramādvaita. The way it radiates, manifests, should be so intense and powerful and fulfilling.

Only when Paramādvaita adds more and more intense bliss in you experientially, you will realize why it is so important to experience Paramādvaita in all levels. Only if you start experiencing Paramādvaita with your boss, you will become innovative in your work. When you manifest Paramādvaita with your team, you will become creative. When you manifest Paramādvaita with your subordinates, you will stop manipulating and will be contributing.

If you are manipulating and exploiting in your workplace, you will start shrinking and hate yourself; that is the punishment you are giving yourself. What you believe about everyone round you, you will start believing about yourself because third eye has both sides vision. The perception you carry about others is carried by the third eye. If you see the other person as Paramaśiva, you will see Paramaśiva inside. If you see the other person as devil, you will see devil inside.

Only when you see everyone as Paramaśiva, you will see you as Paramaśiva. Bring completion with everyone around you. When you break the arrogance and complete with all past crimes and mess-ups, expose your cancer, allow your ecosystem to clean you up, help you to complete, help you live a happy blissful life of Paramādvaita, you will manifest Paramādvaita in social level and become innovative in your work.

Only sincere seekers who are sincerely interested in manifesting Paramādvaita are creative because they see that seeing Paramaśiva in everyone makes life a celebration. You need to complete the tumors and pus and frozen ego and arrogance, your heart needs to flower with the ultimate truths. You need to sincerely enrich others and hold the space for others and bring collective integrity.

Only then you will believe we had beings like Rāma, Sītā, Pāṇḍavas, Gopikās, Kṛṣṇa who walked on this Earth. Only when you bring Paramādvaita in social level, you will realize how sweet life is. When you see others' eyes seeing you as Paramaśiva, you get confidence in your Paramaśivatva. Do not underestimate the influence of people around you on you. Unconsciously the people around you mould your conclusion about you by the way they behave with you. In turn, you mould their conclusion about them.

Bring Paramādvaita in social level. Only then the next step of Paramādvaita in moral level can happen. Paramādvaita in moral level means by law you are bound to do all interactions in moral level where the word given is stronger than even any legal document.

The word given is more important than life itself is shown by Bhīṣma. He experiences Paramādvaita in moral level. For him, his word is more important than his life itself. He kept his vow of brahmacarya because the word he uttered was more important than his life itself. Amba was threatening Bhīṣma that if he doesn't marry her, she will be the cause of his death. But Bhīṣma said that is upto her but he cannot marry as he had taken up the vow of brahmacarya for life. Amba went and did tapas and got boon from Mahādeva, took rebirth as Śikhaṇḍī and came back and killed Bhīṣma but Bhīṣma remained with his vow of brahmacarya because the word given and integrity is more important than life.

Integrity is more important than life because even if you lose life here and keep integrity, you will have life in higher worlds. Integrity and Paramādvaita are values beyond time. Paramādvaita experienced in moral level is powerful as seen by the power of Draupadi, Gāndhārī, Pāṇḍu in Mahābhārata.

When you bring Paramādvaita to the moral level, you manifest such powerfulness in your life. Kṛṣṇa, who played with all kinds of situations as Pūrṇāvatāra - even with Brahmāstras like that of Aśvatthāmā, which He managed and revived Parīkṣit—kept His word. Because He had given a word to Vāli in His Rāmāvatāra, after killing Vāli from behind, He vowed that He would be killed in the same way. True to His word, He accepted death in the same manner in His Kṛṣṇāvatāra.

Bringing Paramādvaita in moral level means your country law should be Paramādvaita. The cosmic law should be the country law where you live. Paramaśiva manifested KAILASA to demonstrate to this world Paramādvaita in moral level is possible.

That is why Paramaśiva manifested KAILĀSA with sovereign land — to prove to the world that Paramādvaita at the moral level is possible, where Paramādvaita itself becomes cosmic law and country law, the very reality of all interactions with everyone. Paramādvaita at the moral level means that every interaction — in terms of money, relationships, and owning up to responsibilities — is aligned to oneness.

The sufferings we went through are because Paramādvaita was not manifested at the moral level. Unless we have a sovereign land where Paramādvaita becomes law, the foundation of all interactions and morals, only then is the revival of the enlightened Sanātana Hindu civilization possible. It is a fundamental need. That is why Paramaśiva manifested MahāKAILĀSA, where Paramādvaita is the law in every interaction.

It is literally heaven to live in that type of ecosystem where Paramādvaita is the law of the nation. You will be so sure of yourself and others, so all your energy moves towards creativity and innovation and does not flow towards fear and insecurity and lower cognitions. The word you give is more important than life itself. It is joy to live with that kind of consciously competent beings. Even to see that kind of beings and live around that kind of beings, empowers and rejuvenates you and revives your trust on Paramādvaita and the enlightened civilization.

Give life for integrity, to keep Paramādvaita in moral level. Like Bhīṣma, even if you give life to keep integrity, you will have life in MahāKAILĀSA. If you try to cling on to life by breaking integrity, you will rot and die like Śakuni.

Bhīṣma could not be killed and till the end he was only made to stop fighting. He waited and left the body when he wanted – on Makar Saṅkrānti, during Uttarāyaṇa, the best time to leave the body.

Those who live a cunning life, clinging to existence by compromising on integrity and without any core values, live like a fox and die like a fox — a cheap death. But people with spiritual stamina and conscious competence, for whom Paramādvaita is the law of their life, live like God on planet Earth, leave like God on planet Earth, and reach MahāKAILĀSA.

- Presidential Address on the inauguration of Global Maha Kumbh Mela (14 and 15 January 2025)

From time immemorial, Vedas and Āgamas very clearly present that satya, truth should be experienced in six levels. Any ultimate truth should become your experience in six levels. This is the first truth, parama satya we should understand.

The six levels are the cognitive level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level.

Only if you experience any truth in these levels, it becomes complete, permanent, ultimate for your life. The whole of human life is to experience Paramādvaita, living enlightenment, jīvan mukti.

Living Paramādvaita is the goal of human life. At any point — whether as a just-born baby or one about to leave the body — the goal of human life is to experience Paramādvaita in all six levels: cognitive, emotional, social, moral, spiritual, and environmental.

To make Paramādvaita as experience in all the six levels, KAILASA is needed because it is only from this ecosystem the truths can be spoken loud and clear. Truth can be told to the world loud and clear only in the ecosystem where people are able to experience this truth in cognitive level, emotional level, social level, moral level, spiritual level and environmental level.

KAILASA ecosystem is needed where a core group starts experiencing this and forms a conscious-beings-infrastructure. Then the truths can be shared with the world in a practical and user friendly way.

Any emotion you go through experiencing Paramādvaita is devotional practice. Pūjā makes your whole day productive. Never think pūjā is taking your time; it actually adds life to your time. Even if you do a simple study of your life before you started doing daily pūjā and after, the number of hours you are awake, sharp, active and able to function would have multiplied, because naturally you start getting up for pūjā earlier and you don't waste your time lazing around as you need to take bath and get ready for pūjā and then have the prasādam offering.

Before going to sleep, if you do pūjā and fall asleep, it will be such deep good sleep. The mood you are in when you fall asleep will be the same mood when you come out of sleep. If you fall asleep energetic and alive with the deep emotional fulfillment of Paramādvaita, you will experience nidrā samādhi sthitiḥ – nidrā or sleep is samādhi – and wake up to sahaja samādhi.

Completion with everyone you are sharing your life, enriching your family and teamily, enriching those around you, is too important because only when you enrich them with this Paramādvaita, you will experience Paramādvaita in your social level. You may be highly integrated, experiencing Paramādvaita intensely, but if you don't make Paramādvaita as your experience in social level, it is so easy to put a self-doubt in you, the original delusion in you. Then just like Nārada, when the original delusion starts, then it is free fall and you won't even know when you lost your Paramādvaita. Experiencing Paramādvaita in social level is absolute necessity for your Paramādvaita anubhuti to survive in you.

Enriching your family and teamily around you with Ṣaṣṭāṅga yoga – integrity, authenticity, responsibility, enriching, causing, completion – is important to experience Paramādvaita in social level. You practicing can give you Paramādvaita in cognition level.

Many sincere seekers failed not because they did some crime but because they did criminal negligence underestimating the impact of society on them.

Experiencing Paramādvaita in social level happens when you make Paramādvaita as part of all those around you – family, team, with whoever you are spending your day to day life, who is part of your day to day reality. Holding Paramādvaita in their cognition, emotion and being is you experiencing Paramādvaita in social level. It is a basic need because your life is not just at the cognitive level and emotion level. Much of your life and reality is on social level and centered on the society around you.

Next is the moral level. The Paramādvaita should penetrate you and society around you deeply. Moral is the relationship between you and the society around you. That decides what is right and wrong.

Bahujana hitāya, bahujana sukhāya – for the good of many, for the welfare of many – when you decide to live the truth of eko'ham bahu syām aha – you experience Paramādvaita in moral level.

Many times you justify yourself to lose morality saying "People will exploit me if I live the high morals like eko'ham bahu syām aha." You believe that you are good and people around you cannot become that good. So instead of taking steps to build social anubhuti, you convince yourself that Paramādvaita in moral level is not possible and convince maintaining your fake and inauthentic identity.

Paramādvaita in social level is not difficult or impossible. You not trying needs to be broken. Before even trying to enrich others, you come to the conclusion it is not possible. With the fear of being exploited and bullied, you stop experiencing Paramādvaita in social and moral level. You just need to break the pattern of getting overwhelmed and fear of getting exploited.

Next is Paramādvaita in social level. If you see everyday people look at you as Paramaśiva, and you see people as Paramaśiva, in that energy sharing explodes spiritual experience of Paramādvaita where you become the cause of miracles in others' lives and others become the cause of miracles in your life. You experiencing Paramādvaita with the people who are experiencing Paramādvaita is experiencing Paramādvaita in the spiritual level. Power manifestation is not legend or myth; it is realities waiting for you to manifest them in your life.

Next is the environment level. Every life around you starts vibrating, not just pets or trees or animals, everything around you – sthāvaraṁ jaṅgamaṁ – the whole environment around you – radiating Paramādvaita, you celebrating Paramādvaita with the environment and the environment celebrating Paramādvaita with you - is experiencing Paramādvaita in the environment level. That is what KAILĀSA is — where the hill itself becomes Aruṇācaleśvara, Aruṇagiri, and the Kailāsa hill becomes the environmental experience of Paramaśiva.

One of the biggest problems Hindus face is that they are not moving beyond the cognitive and emotional levels — this is criminal negligence. Paramādvaita becomes reality only when you manifest it in all six levels and stop getting tired or giving up. You are Paramaśiva; you can manifest this.

O Hindus, wake up! If you want Sanātana Hindu dharma to be flourishing and radiating, living civilization, in all these six levels Paramādvaita anubhuti should be revived.

Invasions and colonization have taken away three Paramādvaita components of your life, not just shrunk the territory. Invasions and colonization have reduced Paramādvaita from the six levels to just cognition and emotional level and little bit of social level in the form of some temples.

For over a century, Hindus have been brainwashed into believing that revival is not possible, and still remain in deep slumber, thinking that Sanātana Hindu Dharma cannot be destroyed — even though the land, quality, and quantity of the civilization are drastically shrinking.

Before the invasions and colonization started, from Malaysia to present day Kandahar, the whole land was having Sanātana Hindu civilizational nation in all six levels. Such large area in quality and quantity was available.

The worst villains in the Mahābhārata still had moral, spiritual, and environmental experience of Paramādvaita. There was no crime Duryodhana had not committed against Bhīma, yet Bhīma never even thought of violating the rules of the gadā fight. Finally, Kṛṣṇa had to intervene and have Duryodhana's thigh broken to uphold Dharma.

Gāndhārī literally lost all her sons except Duryodhana, yet she was able to manifest Paramādvaita by making Duryodhana's body as strong as vajra with just her gaze.

Not only has the land of the Sanātana Hindu civilizational nation shrunk, but even the quality of Paramādvaita has diminished — from all six levels to less than 3.5 levels: cognition, emotion, and barely 25% of the social level.

Because Paramādvaita is destroyed in social, spiritual, moral and environmental levels, even in cognitive and emotional levels also it is alive only in few people only. This is the level of yogaḥ naṣṭaḥ parantapa. That is the urgent need to revive Paramādvaita in all six levels on emergency basis.

If Hindus don't manifest in all six levels, the toxins of society will penetrate and whatever has been built in the cognitive and emotional level will be swallowed and lost in course of time. You can blame people but the suffering will be yours. Unless you experience Paramādvaita in all six levels, you will not experience mokṣa or break from the janma–maraṇa chakra, because you will not even feel at home in KAILASA.

- Presidential Address on Paramaśiva Sena

Introduction to Hinduism
Preamble to the Cosmic Constitution

D E C L A R A T I O N

"We, the citizens of KAILASA, inspired by the divine revelations of Paramaśiva as preserved in the Vedas, Āgamas, and the core scriptures of Hindu dharma—108 Upaniṣads, Bhagavad Gītā, and Brahmasūtras —guided by the living embodiment of Sanātana Hindu Dharma, The Supreme Pontiff of Hinduism, Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam, solemnly declare:

To revive and uphold the ancient enlightened Sanātana Hindu civilizational nation as a model of cosmic order and spiritual sovereignty. We affirm the principles of dharma (cosmic righteousness), artha (prosperity), kāma (fulfillment), and mokṣa (liberation) as the eternal pillars of a harmonious society.

KAILASA transcends the confines of political and religious boundaries, embodying the universal identity as a living expression of spiritual integrity, cultural richness, and oneness. Rooted in the timeless wisdom of Vasudhaiva Kuṭumbakam — the world is one family—we commit to fostering the transformation of humanity through ahiṁsā (non-violence) rooted in the ultimate reality of Oneness and hence the supreme dharma (ahiṁsā paramo dharmah).

The ultimate purpose of human life is the realization of one's Paramaśivatva, the experience and expression of one's superconscious state, through all dimensions of life. KAILASA stands as the sacred ecosystem for this realization, enabling every being to manifest extraordinary powers (śaktis) and fulfill the highest potential of existence.

As per the authentic Hindu tradition, Guru is the fulcrum of one's realization of the ultimate truth of Paramaśivoham ('I am Paramaśiva') through the grace of His initiation (dīkṣā) as revealed by Paramaśiva in the Śiva Sūtras – 'Dīkṣā Mokṣaha'.

Drawing from the divine truths expounded in the108 Upaniṣads, Bhagavad Gītā, and Brahmasūtras, our Constitution is built on the eternal principles of satya (truth), dharma (righteousness), prema (love), and mokṣa (liberation). These scriptures provide the framework for a society rooted in spiritual enlightenment, justice and the harmonious coexistence of all beings.

With steadfast devotion to Paramaśiva's vision, we resolve to create a society that honors the dignity, freedom, and spiritual potential of every being, committed to eternal peace and the fulfillment of humanity's ultimate purpose.

Introduction to Hinduism
Preamble to the Cosmic Constitution

PREAMBLE TO THE COSMIC CONSTITUTION ADOPTED BY THE UNITED STATES OF KAILĀSA

Dharma-based Hindu Legal Jurisprudence of The United States of KAILĀSA

The Ancient Hindu Legal System

The most ancient system of jurisprudence in the world is the Hindu/ Hindu jurisprudence. The system was based on dharma. Dharma is defined by the sage Jaimini, author of the mīmāsa sūtra as follows:

codanā lakṣaṇo'rtho dharmaḥ

Dharma is a function that propels one to action.

It may be briefly described as the code of conduct: it teaches both religious and secular matters. Unlike many modern systems with the king at the helm of affairs, in the Hindu jurisprudence, the king himself was subject to the law. Arbitrary power was unknown to Hindu jurisprudence and the king's right to govern was subject to the fulfillment of duties towards his subjects, the breach of which resulted in forfeiture of kingship.

The judges were independent and subject only to the law. The whole system was based on fairness and equity of justice with the highest regard for integrity, impartiality, and independence of the judiciary. The Hindu judiciary consisted of a hierarchy of judges with the Court of the Chief Justice (Prāḍvivāka) at the top, each higher Court being invested with the power to review the decision of the Courts below.

In the time of Mahābhārat, to receive the daughter of a fisherman in marriage, the king could not just forcibly take her but his son, Devavrata makes a vow of lifelong celibacy so that he nor any progeny of his would ascend to the throne thereby assuring the fisherman his daughter's progeny would continue and he could be assured of her and her progeny's future (Devavrata was thereafter celebrated and known as Bhīṣma for this ferocious vow). In the more recent times of Chanakya, the Court consisted of three jurists (dharmastha) and three ministers (amātya).

Requisite Qualities of Judiciary

Visible Equity

The great jurists, Manu, Yājñavalkya, Kātyāyana, Bṛhaspati and others, and in later times commentators like Vācaspati Miśra and others, described in detail the judicial system and legal procedure which prevailed in Hinduism from ancient times. The divine sage Nārada enjoins that when the king occupies the judgment seat (dharmāsanam), he must be impartial to all beings, having taken the oath of the son of Vivasvan.

The oath of Vivasvan is the oath of impartiality as evidently manifested in the fact that the son of Vivasvan is Yama, the god of death, who is impartial to all living beings.

Kātyāyana says, "The king should enter the court-room modestly dressed, take his seat facing east, and with an attentive mind hear the suits of his litigants. He should act under the guidance of his Chief Justice, judges, ministers and the members of his council. A king who dispenses justice in this manner and according to law resides in heaven". These provisions are significant.

The king was required to be modestly dressed (vinīta-veṣa) so that the litigants were not intimidated. The code of conduct prescribed for the king when acting as a judge was very strict and he was required to be free from all "attachment or prejudice".

The judges and counselors guiding the king during the trial of a case were required to be independent and fearless and prevent him from committing any error or injustice.

Kātyāyana says, "If the king wants to inflict upon the litigants (vivādinam) an illegal or unrighteous decision, it is the duty of the judge to warn the king and prevent him. When the judge realizes that the king has deviated from equity and justice, his duty is not to please the king for this is no occasion for soft speech (vaktavyam tat priyam nātra); if the judge fails in his duty, he is guilty. A judge should be austere and restrained, impartial in temperament, steadfast, God-fearing, assiduous in his duties, free from anger, leading a righteous life, and of good family.

Integrity

The foremost duty of a judge was integrity which included impartiality and a total absence of bias or attachment. The concept of integrity was given a very wide meaning and the judicial code of integrity was very strict. Brihaspati says, "A judge should decide cases without any consideration of personal gain or any kind of personal bias; and his decision should be in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the texts. A judge who performs his judicial duties in this manner achieves the same spiritual merit as a person performing a Yajña."

The strictest precautions were taken to ensure the impartiality of judges. A trial had to be in open court and judges were forbidden to talk to the parties privately while the suit was pending because it was recognised that a private hearing may lead to partiality.

Śukra-nītisāra says, "Five causes destroy impartiality and lead to judges taking sides in disputes. They are attachment, greed, fear, enmity, and hearing a party in private."

Another safeguard of judicial integrity was that suits could not be heard by a single judge, even if he was the king. The King had to sit with his counselors when deciding cases, and judges must sit in benches of uneven numbers. Śukra-nītisāra enjoined that "Persons entrusted with judicial duties should be learned in the Vedas, wise in worldly experience and should function in groups of three, five, or seven."

Kautilya also enjoined that suits should be heard by three judges (dharmasthstrayah). Yājñavalkya says, "The Sovereign should appoint as assessors of his court persons who are well versed in the literature of the law, truthful, and by temperament capable of complete impartiality between friend and foe." These assessors or jurors were required to express their opinion without fear, even to the point of disagreeing with the Sovereign and warning him that his own opinion was contrary to law and equity.

Kātyāyana says, "The assessors should not look on when they perceive the Sovereign inclined to decide a dispute in violation of the law; if they keep silent they will go to hell accompanied by the King."

Precedence in the case of Conflict

Nārada says, "The basis of a judicial decision (vyavahāra) may be (i) Dharma-śāstra, (ii) (previous) judicial decisions (vyavahāra) or custom (caritra) or the decrees of the Sovereign. The authority of these four is in the reverse order, each preceding one being superseded by the one following it.

Explaining the Importance of Truth (Satya) in Evidence

Brihaspati says, "Judges who are well-versed in the dharmaśāstra should address the witness in words praising truth and driving away falsehood (from his mind)." Nārada enjoins, "The judges should inspire awe in the witness by citing moral precepts which should uphold the majesty of truth and condemn falsehood."

All the smrtis were unanimous in holding that perjury before a court was a heinous sin as well as a serious crime. There were other provisions, calculated to reduce the changes of false evidence being given.

Kātyāyana enjoined, with much common sense that there should be no delay in examining witnesses obviously because delay dims the memory and stimulates imagination, "The Sovereign should not grant any delay in the deposition of witnesses; for delay leads to great evil and results in witnesses turning away from the law."

About the Department of Justice of The United States of KAILASA

The United States of KAILASA, the only Hindu nation on planet Earth, is headed by the Supreme pontiff of 2 billion Hindus.

The nation of The United States of KAILASA is built on the supreme principle of tyāga which is loosely translated as sacrifice. Tyāga in Sanskrit and as per the Hindu scriptures is not sacrifice but it is the renunciation of one's identities at various levels. It results in breaking free of the limiting binding cognitions. It is the super power which makes one manifest Paramaśiva.

The justice system of The United States of KAILASA is the ultimate one, exactly as ordained by Paramaśiva, based on pure compassion.

The fundamental premise of the justice system of The United States of KAILASA is the truth of Paramaśivoham- I am Paramaśiva. Whether we realize it or not, experience it or not, every one of us is the Ultimate Paramaśiva. Any perception or belief or cognition that is otherwise is pure delusion. So the justice system of The United States of KAILASA does not evaluate or judge a person, or classify him or her as a saint or sinner, as these classifications themselves are redundant in the face of the truth of Paramaśivoham.

Hence the justice system is not based on punishment, the social concepts of right and wrong, neither confession nor atonement. It is based on pure dharma and cosmic law as revealed by Paramaśiva and the understanding of prāyaścitta which is based on realization and completion and realignment to the Ultimate.

Paramaśiva's system does not judge a being as innocent or guilty. It only reminds a person about his or her fundamental purpose of life to realize he or she is Paramaśiva already. Any miss or non-alignment to this truth is realigned with prāyaścitta which is a reminder rather than punishment and hence does not engender the biggest delusion of modern society, fear.

Cosmic Constitution

"OM NITHYĀNANDA PARAMAŚIVOHAM"- is the guiding principle of the Supreme Court of The United States of KAILĀSA. It expresses the ultimate responsibility of the Supreme Court of The United States of KAILĀSA- to ensure justice as per the Cosmic Constitution enshrined as the Constitution of The United States of KAILĀSA, standing on the supreme existential truths of Oneness (advaita), non-violence (ahimsā), compassion (karuṇā), and with the aim to help every being realize the ultimate reality of Paramaśivoham - I am Paramaśiva.

The 'NITHYĀNANDA Śruti' section of the Cosmic Constitution is perpetual and cannot be amended in any way at any time as it embodies the Ultimate Truths of the Cosmos and life as revealed, explained and established by THE SPH.

Source Knowledge of Hinduism

The Vedāgamas are the Source knowledge of Hinduism or Sanātana Hindu Dharma. The revelation from the Vedāgamas form the Śāstra Pramana, the scriptural authority on truth, which came down directly from the mouth of Paramaśiva to His consort Devi Ādiśakti.

In the Svacchanda tantra, Sadāśiva, the Super Consciousness reveals:

āgatāṃ śivavaktrebhyo gataṃ ca girijāmukhe ।
matam hi vāsudevasya tasmādāgama ucyate ॥

Translation: That which has come from Śiva's mouth and directly heard and received by Devi Girija (Pārvati), which has been ordained by Sri Vāsudeva (Viṣṇu) to govern the world, therefore that is called āgama.

Hence, Agamas are directly revealed by Paramaśiva, they are more like a practical manual of how to, what to, where to, when to. All these details are answered with the right context, giving enough of understanding and tremendous user friendliness.

Pramāṇas - the Four Authorities and Evidences of Truth

1. Śāstra Pramāṇa is the scriptural evidence, the direct, ultimate authority on the Truth as it is, for it is directly from Paramaśiva, the Adiguru (original Guru), the Source of all that is. In Sanātana Hindu Dharma, Vedāgamas are the irrefutable Śāstra Pramāṇa. All knowledge currents, philosias, rituals and lifestyle systems, and Yogic sciences for humanity are in- depth systematically revealed in Vedāgamas and form the pramāṇas.

2. Āpta Pramāṇa is the ancient authentic, time- tested, fool- proof compilations of experiences of Enlightened Sages such as the Ṛṣis, Siddhas, Munis, Incarnations (Avatars), the direct disciples and followers and descendants of Bhagavān Sadāśiva, like the Saptarṣis, Maharṣis, including the Enlightened Ones such as Patañjali, Vālmiki, Agastya Mahāmuni, Abhinavaguptā, Kṣemarāja, Paramahamsa Yogananda, etc. The compiled experiences verify and expand further on the Vedāgamas, forming Āpta Pramāṇa.

3. Ātma Pramāṇa are the direct experiences of the Living incarnation, THE SPH NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM, who is respected, revered as the living incarnation by millions of people worldwide.

4. In the space of Pure Oneness or Śuddhādvaita with Bhagavān Paramaśiva, the Ātma Pramānas of THE SPH NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM are from the words of His Gurus, His own experiences, and all that He has imbibed as a 'cognition' and directly experienced, and done thorough verification and authentication with the Śāstra Pramāṇa, and then presented to the world.

Vedas are the ultimate, superior authority for the Hindus. Vedas are like a pure science, where the ultimate truths are explained, but Āgamas are the scriptures where the applied technology, the applied science is expanded.

All the Hindu bodies accept Vedāgamas as Śruti (that which is heard), and everything else follows as Smritis (the remembered scriptures).

The fundamental principles of existence, one's existence as individual self or one's existence as part of the society, one's existence as part of one's family, one's existence as part of one's community, one's existence as part of one's country, one's existence as part of the humanity, one's existence as part of the Cosmos, in every level of existence there are some fundamental principles to manifest what one wants as reality - Paramaśiva explains this science as Agama.

Guiding Texts

The Constitution of The United States of KAILĀSA is based on the Śruti- Vedāgamas which form the articles of the Constitution and the Smritis form the guidelines of the Constitution. The Code of Civil Procedure is based on the Śrutis-Smritis. The justice system of The United States of KAILĀSA follows the Dharmasūtras and Dharmaśāstras.

Dharmaśāstras are guidebooks of dharma as they contain guidelines for individual and social behavior, ethical norms, as well as personal, civil and criminal law. The four major Dharmasūtras are by Āpastamba, Gautama, Baudhāyana and Vaśiṣṭha.

Dharmaśāstras enumerate four sources of Dharma– the precepts in the Vedas, the tradition, the virtuous conduct of those who know the Vedas, and approval of one's conscience (self-satisfaction)

The Dharmaśāstras present their ideas under various categories such as:

- Ācāra - normative behavior and practices of a community, conventions and behaviors that enable a society and various individuals therein to function
- Vyavahāra - judicial procedure, process, practice, conduct and behaviour
- Prāyaścitta - atonement, alternative to punishment or incarceration

The four major Dharmaśāstras are Manusmriti, Yajnavalkya smriti, Narada smriti, Viṣṇu smriti and Mahabharat Shanti parva.

The sacred scriptures of the sovereign order of The United States of KAILĀSA include:

1. Direct teachings of THE SPH available in video, audio, book, electronic formats like ebooks, social media posts
2. Ākāśic readings and writings of Kālabhairava through THE SPH
3. Prasthānatraya:
   a. Bhagavad Gītā
   b. Brahma Sūtras
   c. Twelve major Upaniṣads
      i. Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad
      ii. Kena Upaniṣad
      iii. Kaṭha Upaniṣad
      iv. Aitreya Upaniṣad
      v. Taittirīya Upaniṣad
      vi. Muṇḍaka Upaniṣad
      vii. Māṇḍūkya Upaniṣad
      viii. Chāndogya Upaniṣad
      ix. Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad
      x. Mahānārayana Upaniṣad
      xi. Praśna Upaniṣad
      xii. Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad

Chief Justice of The United States of KAILĀSA

The Chief Justice of the The United States of KAILĀSA is Paramaśiva Himself in the form of HIS DIVINE HOLINESS BHAGAVĀN ŚRI NITHYĀNANDA PARAMASHIVAM.

The Muktikopaniṣad is the revelation of Bhagavān Rāmā to Hanumān and is the compilation of the 108 key Upaniṣads:

Īśāvāsya	Kena	Kaṭha	Praśna
Muṇḍaka	Māṇḍūkya	Taittirīya	Aitareya
Chāndogya	Bṛhadāraṇyaka	Ātma	Jābāli
Śvetāśvatara	Haṁsa	Āruṇeya	Garbhā
Nārāyaṇa	Paramahaṁsa	Amṛtanāda	Kaivalya
Śubālā	Mantrikā	Nirvāṇa	Śukarahasya
Yoga-śikhā	Turīyātita	Ātmabodha	Mahat
Nādabindu	Dhyānabindu	Sannyāsa	Amṛtabindu
Tejobindu	Kṣurika	Brahmavidyā	Yogatattva
Mudgala	Māṇḍalabrāhmaṇa	Triṣikhibrāhmaṇa	Kālāgnirudra
Dakṣiṇāmūrti	Sarabha	Bhasmajābāla	Kuṇḍikā
Vajraśūci	Skanda	Maitrāyaṇī	Kauṣītaki
Avyakta	Maitreyī	Jābāladarśana	Ādhyātmā
Sāvitrī	Rudrahṛdaya	Yogachūdāmaṇi	Nṛsiṁhatāpinī
Sītā	Vāsudeva	Rudrākṣajābāla	Mahāvaḳya
Devi	Akṣi	Sūrya	Ekākṣara
Śārīraka	Sarvasāra	Nirālamba	Paiṅgala
Śāṇḍilya	Avadhuta	Yogachūḍāmaṇi	Jābāla
Bhāvana	Kaṭharudra	Yājñavalkya	Prāṇāgnihotra
Bhikṣuka	Satyāyanī	Atharvaśikhā	Advayatāraka
Bṛhadāraṇyaka	Hayagrīva	Varāha	Brahma
Gaṇapati	Kalisaṁtara	Dattatreya	Bṛhajjābāla
Tripuratāpanī	Annapūrṇā	Garuda	Tarasāra
Parabrahma	Atharvaśira	Akshamaya	Tripura
Bahvruka	Saubhagyalakshmi	Pañcabrahma	Sarasvatīrahasya
Nārada-Parivrājakas	Paramahamsa- Parivrājakas	Pāśupata-Brāhma	Rāmarahasya
Kṛṣṇa	Gopālatāpanī	Rāmatāpanī	Muktikā

These Upaniṣads collectively explore deep philosophical and spiritual concepts, offering insights into self-realization, the nature of consciousness, and the relationship between the individual soul and the supreme. They form the foundation of Vedāntic thought and are considered the essence of Hindu wisdom.

Significance of Muktikopaniṣad and Connection with Adikailasa

The dimension of KAILASA beyond the 11th dimension of the universe - Dvādaśānta - has reflected in few places on planet Earth. The hill form reflected on the KAILASA mountain which is in Tibet. The Kalpataru under which Sadaśiva is sitting is reflected on the banyan tree in Adikailasa.

That is why Kāmika Āgama clearly describes 'Southern side of the physical KAILASA, under the Banyan tree Sadaśiva sits.' Including Kapila muni all the Saptarṣis were around. Near Adikailasa are seven huge rocks representing Saptarṣis where they were living and meditating. Sadaśiva revealed the Āgama under this banyan tree to all those Rṣis and Kapila Mahāmuni.

When Śrī Rāmacandra came to south of Bharat, He was living with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa during the exile in Ramanagara where Adikailasa is established. This is where the Kākāsura vadha (killing of demon named Kākāsura) happened.

The Swayambhu Linga under the banyan tree which KAILASA now has in the name of Nithyānandeśvara Paramāśiva was the Jyotir Linga available in this whole area. Śrī Rāmacandra used to do pūjā everyday here for this Iṣṭa Liṅga. Under this sacred banyan tree Sadaśiva revealed (again as the first time revealed to Devi under the same banyan tree) Vedas, Āgama and Upaniṣads to Śrī Rāmacandra, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa.

Again after Śrī Rāmacandra went back to Ayodhyā, after the victory in the war against Rāvaṇa, Hanumān asked Śrī Rāmacandra to teach the essence of the science of Mokṣa. Then with this whole family of Bharata, Śatrughna, Lakṣmaṇa, Sītā, and Hanumān, Śrī Rāmacandra went into the Nirvikalpa Samādhi state and came out under this banyan tree and explained all the 108 Upaniṣads as He received from Sadaśiva and chronicled it.

Thus, Śrī Rāmacandra is the first organizer of Vedas. It is Śrī Rāmacandra who talked about all the 108 Upaniṣads and 4 Vedas and organized and presented first time in the Hindu literature as Muktikopaniṣad, the 108th Upaniṣad. That was given by Śrī Rāmacandra to Hanumān.

It is in this energy center that Devi experienced Oneness with Paramāśiva. It is here that Saptarṣis, Kapila experienced Oneness with Paramāśiva. It is here that Śrī Rāmacandra, Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa were revealed the Vedas, Āgama and Upaniṣads and they experienced Oneness with Paramāśiva. It is here that Hanumān experienced the same Oneness from Śrī Rāmacandra. This sacred space is hence the pilgrimage center for all the followers of Paramāśiva, Devi, Kapila muni, Śrī Rāmacandra, Sītā and Hanumān.

The Supreme Pontiff of Hinduism (SPH) Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam has revealed the essence of the Upaniṣads in His revelations on the foundational truths of the Cosmos and Existence.

The Upaniṣads, while unique in their individual expressions, are unified by certain fundamental truths - such as the nature of the self (Ātman), the truth of Brahman (Supreme Consciousness), and the realization of oneness. The SPH has conveyed these timeless principles extensively, making them accessible to all seekers. His teachings bring forth the core essence of these ideas, which resonate throughout all Upaniṣads.

The SPH has woven seamlessly the truths revealed in the Upaniṣads starting with the foundational Śrutis of Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, Kena Upaniṣad, Kaṭha Upaniṣad and other Upaniṣads. These texts contain foundational principles and the truths of oneness, Self-realization, and the nature of existence. By deeply exploring these core Upaniṣads, the SPH has illuminated the central themes that are echoed across all 108 Upaniṣads.

The SPH's approach goes beyond traditional commentary by emphasizing experiential realization. His teachings invite seekers to live and experience the wisdom of the Upaniṣads. This method of transmission allows the essence of the Upaniṣads to be felt and integrated into daily life.

Through His revelations, the SPH has demonstrated that the truths in the Upaniṣads are interwoven and coherent, rather than separate teachings confined to individual texts. By presenting a synthesis that cuts across various Upaniṣads, He has highlighted the essential unity among them, effectively imparting the essence of all 108 through the depth of a few key texts.

The SPH embodies the teachings of the Upaniṣads in His own life and mission, showing that their essence lies not only in intellectual study but in living enlightenment. His very being and teachings act as a living expression of the Upaniṣadic truths, exemplifying that realizing their essence is not about quantity but about the depth of spiritual insight and practical application.

Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad

What Is Upaniṣad?

When you sit with a deep trust with a Master and listen to him, there is a gap between thoughts. You are something beyond thoughts. That relaxed and deep sitting with a receptive mood, deep trust and feeling connection is Upaniṣad. It gives you the experience of the space between thoughts and experience between thoughts. Sitting again and again with a Master with deep trust makes you established in that space. Sitting again and again in deep trust and deep feeling connection in restful awareness with the Master establishes you in that thoughtless space.

Introduction To Upaniṣads

Upaniṣads are the first and foremost scriptures of the Hindu tradition, which itself is the earliest and foremost spiritual tradition of the world. The Hindu tradition is the primal spiritual tradition on planet Earth. To call the Upaniṣads merely 'books' is too small a word — they are the very source of all spiritual thought trends and currents.

In the Hindu tradition, we developed six ways of 'liberated thinking'. Liberated thinking means a thinking style which constantly keeps you excited, enthusiastic, energetic, joyful, rejuvenating yourself, naturally intelligent, naturally aligned to the laws of life and naturally blissful.

By your very nature, you are blissful, intelligent, conscious and aware. You are hardwired to experience the peak possibility and the highest Existence. The thought trends which awaken your highest possibilities, which make you live your highest possibilities, which make you feel fully excited, joyful, awakened and alive, are what we call 'liberated thinking trends'.

Source of the Six Systems of Liberated Thinking

The Hindu tradition developed six systems of liberated thinking trends - Sānkhya, Yoga, Pūrva Mīmāṃsā, Uttara Mīmāṃsā, Nyāya and Vaiseśikā. These are the six major liberated thinking thought trends that the Hindu tradition developed.

Sānkhya is having liberated thinking by understanding the Existence, the laws with which nature or Prakṛti is functioning, understanding the laws with which it is associated with the Source, Consciousness and aligning yourself to it.

In Yoga, the thought trend is this: whatever you consider as 'you' — your body and mind — when tuned and aligned to Existence, you experience the ultimate completion, fulfillment, knowledge, joy, excitement, bliss, and sheer existence itself.

Pūrva Mīmāṃsā or Karma Kāṇḍa is experiencing liberated thinking through your actions by aligning with various energies of the Cosmos and experiencing the Ultimate, Enlightenment, fulfillment and completion.

Just by aligning your understanding, buddhi about you, God and the world (Jīva, Īśvara, Jagat) and living the liberated thinking lifestyle is Uttara Mīmāṃsā, Vedānta.

Nyāya is liberated thinking — the pure power of analysis. By continuously dividing, dissecting, and examining, layer after layer, analyzing again and again, the truth reveals itself. Liberation comes simply by logic itself.

If Nyāya liberates through endless dividing and analyzing, then Vaiśeṣika liberates through endless adding and including.

Sānkhya, Yoga, Pūrva Mīmāṃsā, Uttara Mīmāṃsā, Nyāya, Vaiseśika - these six liberated thinking trends and liberated thought currents were developed by the Hindu tradition. Each one of them is independently complete to give you the experience of liberated thinking from A to Z, Alpha to Omega.

If you are practicing Sānkhya, you don't need any support from Yoga or any other liberated thinking trends. Sānkhya is enough to take you from wherever you are to wherever you have to be. It is an independently intelligent and independently sufficient thinking trend through which you can experience liberated thinking.

If you are practicing Sānkhya, you don't need support from any other thought trends.

Same way, if you are practicing Yoga, you don't need any support from any other liberated thinking trend. In Sanskrit, a liberated thinking trend is what we call Darśana (ability to perceive). In English, you can't translate the word 'Darśana' into Philosophy. No. Philosophy is too poor and a superficial word. We may use the word 'Philosia' - a new possibility to see - to translate Darśana.

Ṣat Darśana (six Philosias) of Hindu tradition were developed from Upaniṣads. Upaniṣad is the mother who gave birth and delivered all the Ṣat Darśana. Upaniṣads are the mother who delivered all the Ṣat Darśana.

Each thought trend, each liberated thinking trend, gave birth to thousands and thousands of sampradāyas, paramparās, orders which is equivalent to the word 'religion' in the West. What you understand from the Western world as religion, in Sanskrit that equivalent word is sampradāya, order. In Sanātana Dharma, the Hindu tradition is the mother where the six thought currents were developed, and from which many religions are born.

The Hindu tradition – what people often reduce to the word Hinduism – is too vast, too multi-dimensional, too alive to be caged under the narrow framework of 'religion'. A religion in the common sense is usually one set of beliefs and one prescribed lifestyle. But the Upaniṣadic tradition is not a single belief system. It is the source of liberated thinking currents, the fountainhead of human consciousness exploring itself in infinite ways.

From the Upaniṣads were born the Ṣat Darśanas (six great systems of thought):

- Nyāya (liberation through analysis),
- Vaiśeṣika (liberation through inclusion),
- Sāṅkhya (liberation through enumeration),
- Yoga (liberation through alignment),
- Pūrva Mīmāṃsā (liberation through action/ritual completion),
- Uttara Mīmāṃsā / Vedānta (liberation through Self-knowledge).

From these currents, countless sampradāyās (traditions), āgamas, lineages, orders, and religions emerged.

That is why calling the Upaniṣads or the Hindu civilization a religion is like trying to fit the ocean into a small pot. The Upaniṣads are not one religion – they are the source and womb of all authentic spiritual explorations.

Choice proves the depth, not confusion. Mono-religious people always try to abuse the Hindu tradition as a confused religion. Choice shows the depth, not the confusion.

When you go to a Pizza Hut, if you see a variety of choices, will you say that the owner is confused? No! The owner is brilliant. That is why he is able to provide choices, varieties.

Anything you see in the world now, which you can appreciate and celebrate, is from Vedamātā. It is Vedamātā's glory, the way She is standing for humanity and the contribution She has done to human consciousness. Everything is from Her. Everything is Her gift to humanity. Whether it is mathematics, astrology, astronomy, anatomy, whatever words you may use, all the thought currents, thought trends, everything best you see and hear is Vedamātā's gift.

The thought trends developed from the Upaniṣads are a gift to humanity. Upaniṣads are kept as the highest books in the Hindu tradition. In the sacred literature of the Hindu tradition, Upaniṣads are kept as the topmost. Non-controversially, all sampradāyas, all the six liberated thinking trends – Sānkhya, Yoga, Nyāya, Vaiseśika, Uttara Mīmāṃsā, Pūrva Mīmāṃsā accept Upaniṣads as the first and foremost ultimate book.

The religious historians have made a big mistake of classifying the Upaniṣads into one frame of a religion, and pushing it on Hindu tradition or on Hinduism in the modern day as it is described. If we classify Upaniṣads as books belonging to one religion, we are disrespecting the glory and possibility of the Upaniṣads. Upaniṣads may be classified as the source of all the liberated thinking trends and source of all the lifestyles which evolve human beings to the higher levels.

As the Upaniṣads are the source of all the liberated thinking trends which evolve human beings, obviously Upaniṣads are the first and foremost sacred text for all sampradāyas including for the Nithyananda Sampradāya. Upaniṣads are the first and foremost sacred text based on which our lifestyle should be aligned.

Upaniṣads should be read, re-read, understood, realized, lived, radiated and worshipped. Upaniṣads are the purest, pristine pure truths. Upaniṣads are Existence introducing itself to itself, Existence celebrating itself to itself, Existence showing itself how to become itself.

The first and foremost book anyone should read, understand and digest is Upaniṣads. Each verse in each Upaniṣad gives birth to liberated thinking trends which have liberated tons of human beings.

Upaniṣads Make Incarnations

Whenever you feel fear, feel threatened by something and in that agitation you try to change the situation by your own efforts – that is Yoga. If you try to surrender to the highest intelligence and request that intelligence to intervene and protect you – that is bhakti. Knowing you can never be violated, being in the original space of Advaita and automatically making all the so-called fears and threats melt down is Living Advaita. Upaniṣads stand for Living Advaita.

It is not that Yoga is wrong or a little less or bhakti is wrong or a little less. Upaniṣads, the Living Advaita, is something totally different. They have so many interpretations but they do not take away the sacredness and originality of the Upaniṣads.

Sometimes people question, "Why is there so much fighting in Hinduism? Even the eminent people like Śaṅkara, Rāmānuja, Madhva, these great Masters have so many different opinions; sometimes one directly attacks the other. Even the top level Ācāryas are not in sync with each other. Common people like us, how can we understand anything? What can we take as right?" Some scientist discovers something and he gets the Nobel Prize. Within a few years, another scientist disproves what that first scientist discovered and he also gets the Nobel Prize. That does not mean both of them have a difference of opinion. It is a different angle the truth is presented in. Actually, because of the first discovery, the way he lifted us, the second was even possible.

In the field of knowledge, different opinions means different thought trends, multiple choices with amazing freedom and possibilities. Each one explores in his own way, expresses in his own way. Even when you read, internalize Śaṅkara, you will never become the follower of Śaṅkara. You will be the expression of Śaṅkara. That is why in Śaivism, we have a beautiful word 'Śiva Gaṇa' – who embodies Śiva. When you constantly cognize and radiate Śivoham, you will not become a follower of Śiva, you will embody Śiva.

Gaṇa means who embodies, who is filled. So the difference of opinions and different commentaries on Upaniṣads should not put you away from Upaniṣads, but should inspire you to explore the original Upaniṣads. Yes, no doubt Śaṅkara wrote a commentary in a different way, Rāmānuja wrote a commentary in a different way and Madhvācārya wrote commentary in a different way. Each one of them wrote commentary in a different way.

Vivekānanda translated and wrote a commentary in a different way. Swami Gambhirananda has translated and written in a different way. You will be surprised, Swami Gambhirananda belongs to Ramakrishna Sampradāya, but he dares to differ from Vivekānanda. That is the beauty of Hindu tradition. Ramakrishna Mission has published at least 3-4 commentaries. Each one of them dared to differ from Vivekānanda. That is the greatness of Hinduism. Nobody disrespects Vivekānanda. We can't and we don't.

Same way, when Osho writes commentary, he does not disrespect anybody but he dares to differ. That is the space in which Sanātana Dharma has grown. That is the space in which the whole Hindu tradition has expanded. That is the space in which the whole Hindu tradition has flowered.

These commentaries, different commentaries, the kind of a space available in the Hindu tradition, the kind of a space existed in Sanātana Dharma! Of course, so many people exploited it, so many people misused it; that is different. Yes, Śaṅkara has his own opinion, Rāmānuja has his own opinion, Madhva has his own opinion; and people try to use this to show Hindus are confused.

Each one of them may have a different opinion, but all of them wrote commentary on Upaniṣads only. So we may have thousands of opinions and ideas, but no one questions the sanctity, authenticity and authority of Upaniṣads. This is where everyone merges and comes together. Each scientist may have a different discovery, theory and thesis, but they all uphold the spirit of the science. Same way, each Master may have different ideas, theories, concepts and principles, but all of them uphold the spirit of Upaniṣads.

The more you read, re-read, digest and internalize, the more it makes you beautiful from within. I tell you, the more you see yourself in the mirror, the more you will fall into the delusion you are beautiful. When you look at the mirror for a long time, you have to come to terms with it. How do you come to terms with it? Tolerating, then accepting, then slowly developing some appreciation and finally landing into delusion. But with Upaniṣads, the more you read, re-read, your inner space will become beautiful.

Every truth which puts you in Cosmic cognition, puts Cosmos into your cognition. Brahmāṇḍa should enter into Piṇḍāṇḍa and Piṇḍāṇḍa should enter into Brahmāṇḍa. The macrocosm should become part of the microcosm and microcosm should become part of the macrocosm. Not only the drop should merge into the ocean but the ocean should merge into the drop. Drop merging into the ocean is Enlightenment. When the ocean merges into the drop, He is an incarnation.

A small joke: A woman is standing in front of the mirror in her bedroom. She is not happy with what she sees, and tells her husband, “I feel horrible! I look old, fat, and ugly! And I am really depressed. Please give me some compliments to get me out of depression.” The husband says, “Your eyesight is damn perfect!”

For a long time you stand in front of the mirror to get yourself deluded. With Upaniṣads, the more you read, re-read, read, re-read, your whole inner space will become beautiful.

Once you read and understand you disappear into that concept. But only by reading again and again the concept disappears into you. Only when the concept disappears into you, you are secure that you will never forget it. It won’t be lost in your life; it has become part of you.

Microcosm becoming macrocosm is Enlightenment. Macrocosm becoming microcosm is incarnationhood. You having the Cosmic cognition and Cosmos having you in the cognition; you dissolving into these great truths and these great truths dissolving into you – both of them are totally different. With Upaniṣads, not only those great truths will provoke you to dissolve yourself into those truths, even they will dissolve into you. Provoking your being to dissolve into the truth can be done by any spiritual book. If you read some stotras of saints, your whole being will be provoked to dissolve into the truth. That is what the great Bhaktas did, the saints of the Hindu tradition preaching devotion did. The intensity of the passion and emotion is used beautifully to merge with the Cosmos.

Meerā, Jñānasambandar in Tamil Nadu, Rāmadāsa, Chaitanya Mahāprabhu, Akkamma Devī in Karnataka, Annamācārya in Andhra, Mānickavasagar – they all used the intensity of passion and emotion to dissolve into the Cosmos. Provoking you to dissolve into the truth, any spiritual book can do. But provoking the Cosmos to dissolve into you, only Upaniṣads can do.

Only Upaniṣads can raise you to that height. You become so vast that Cosmos dissolves into you. The microcosm becomes as big as macrocosm, so macrocosm can just dissolve into it. If you have to have the whole Universe in your mouth, your mouth has to open to the size of the whole Universe. If the truth has to dissolve into you, you should grow taller than the truth. That can only happen by Upaniṣads. That is why Upaniṣads don’t make just enlightened beings, they make incarnations.

The ability of the Upaniṣads to put you into the Cosmos, its ability to raise you into the Cosmos and its ability to make you radiate the Cosmos is unquestionable, unimaginable. There are some books which can refine your understanding, refine your sacred sentiments, but only Upaniṣads can refine your understanding, sentiments and sacred beingness. Beingness means experiencing liberation as your existence of the future, present and past - liberation as your future, present and past. They are the understandings which become part of your being, which stay in your being as cognition and as a powerful existential and experiential truth.

For example, if you have a strong belief inside you about you: you are a blessed being, God is supporting you and He is constantly taking care of you, you can pray to Him and He supports you - that is one of the finest subtle sacred experiences you have about you. Same way, if you have that feeling connection. "Whenever I call upon my God or Guru, immediately He responds to me, He is available to me." If you have that as part of you, if you feel the moment you pray and you call your Iṣṭadevatā or Guru, immediately He responds and is available to you – that is the most subtle sacred sentiment. Ultimately you know you are going to become enlightened and relax into the Cosmos, no question of suffering in the birth and death cycle.

Sometimes people get this very strongly into them. It is not faith. Be very clear. Faith is which comes up and goes down along with the sun-moon cycle. Anything that comes up and down with the sun-moon cycle is faith. But there are some things in you that the sun-moon cycle cannot change. In the morning you feel, "Yes, yes, yes, everything is great," and in the night you feel, "No, no, no, no, no," then it is faith. During Pūrṇimā (full moon), you feel everything goes well, "Wow, life is great!", then during Amāvásyā, you feel, "No, I don't know what is happening," then it is faith. That which comes and goes with the sun-moon cycle is faith.

But sometimes beyond this coming and going and faith, certain understandings become part of your bio-memory. They are just there forever. Subtle sacred sentiments, understandings and the truth of the being do not change based on the sun and moon coming and going. If you have the understanding intellectually: 'Anyhow all these are going to dissolve back into where it came. Whether I had 2000 acres when it is all dissolving, what matters?' If this understanding does not change by the sun and the moon coming and going, it is called jñāna (sacred knowledge).

Same way, 'How much ever I have SDHD about me (self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial about me), the source from which I happened cannot have denial towards me. He is the source. Today or tomorrow, I have to dissolve into Him only. He only has to protect me, and I dissolve myself into Him. He is the Ultimate.' If this understanding happens in you and this feeling connection happens in you, which does not change by sun and the moon coming and going, I call this as sacred sentiment (bhakti).

'Whether I feel bound or liberated now, ultimately I can never be bound because I am the reflection of the Cosmos. Neither Cosmos nor reflection can be bound. Not only I cannot bind the sun, even can I bind the sun's reflection in the water it? In the mirror, can I bind it? I can bind the mirror; I can bind the water in the pot but not the reflection.' If you have this understanding in your very core being which does not come and go with the sun and the moon, the ups and downs, I call this vijñāna (sacred cognition), Cosmic cognition.

Some books can awaken jñāna in you, some books can awaken bhakti in you, but only Upaniṣads can awaken jñāna, bhakti, vijñāna, all the three in you. Only Upaniṣads are capable of awakening all the three in you completely. It is a gift of Gaṅgā Mātā and Sarasvatī Mātā. Between the Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā valley, this civilization happened. The civilization did not need to wage wars, defend, does not have enmity or possessiveness; it never bothers about the outer world or its comforts. That great civilization which gave tremendous peace naturally by fulfilling all the needs, in that space only, Upaniṣads have happened.

The most important, ultimate wealth you can accumulate in your life is Jñāna (sacred knowledge), bhakti (sacred sentiment), vijñāna (sacred cognition). The cognition you need to have to experience Upaniṣads is just openness, nothing else. Jñāna, bhakti, vijñāna – all the three can happen in you just by receiving it openly.

Upaniṣads Teach How To Live Advaita

Having all the necessary intellectual understanding to live Advaita is jñāna. Having all the necessary feeling connection and strength to live Advaita is bhakti. Having all the necessary cognitions to live Advaita is vijñāna.

Living Advaita means radiating all-powerful, all-knowledge, always blissful, Satchitānanda. Please be very clear, Satchitānanda is not a fantasy. It is not a fantasy of the Hindu brain. Satchitānanda is not a fantasy. Satchitānanda is reality.

Upaniṣads are the most powerful expansion on Living Advaita. Whatever is required for you to live in Advaita is explained in the Upaniṣads. Such brilliant brains cannot have fantasies and delusions. You cannot think the brains of these Ṛṣis having delusions or fantasies. No! If someone can grasp, understand and poetically present such high truths, no way you can accuse them of having fantasies or delusions. That is why Satchitānanda is not a delusion. It is as true as your breakfast and good night's sleep. If you had a good meal or a good night's sleep, none will question you on that as it is a simple possibility.

Satchitānanda, the all-knowing, all-powerful, always blissful, is such a simple possibility. It is really pathetic to deny the existence of your higher possibility. Denying your higher possibility is denying your future. If you deny that you can become rich, happy, comfortable, you are denying your whole future. Same way, denying your possibility of Satchitānanda is denying your spiritual future. It is spiritual suicide.

Do not allow people to force you to commit spiritual suicide. There are tons and tons of people forcing you to commit spiritual suicide through their direct, indirect teachings and preachings. Through the TV serials, cinemas, books, entertainment shows, media, internet, people are constantly forcing you to deny your future spiritual possibility.

Guru is the death bell for all those ignorance. Guru is a powerful wakeup call towards your spiritual possibility by waking you to your spiritual possibility and spiritual future. Waking you to your spiritual future and possibility is the job of the Guru. Satchitānanda is not a delusion or illusion or imagination. Living Satchitānanda is possible. That is the first statement you need to understand about Living Advaita.

Second: the understanding you need for spiritual possibility is jñāna (sacred knowledge). You need certain kind of emotional strength when you go through a transformation. When you start Living Advaita, certain emotional strength is required. The intensity of the passion and emotion can be used to explode into Living Advaita and take you to the next levels.

No person has taken a decision to live sannyās intellectually after intellectual analysis and conclusion. No. Anyone who has taken sannyās after intellectual analysis and conclusion is never successful. Only a person who used his emotional passion and depth has been successful in sannyās. Your emotion is a pure power which can just transmit you from one space to another space. Only people who used that power, that strength, that pure emotion and power of devotion and took the decision of sannyās were successful.

When you have that pure devotion, you are always alone with your Master. No one else will be there. Only when the devotion comes down, you will see others. It is like only when the flood recedes, you will see the rocks on the bank. If it is flooding, you won't see any rock, tree or anything. So, when that devotion strength is flooding you, you won't see anybody around you. You know it is only you and the Master; nothing else and nobody else exists.

Only when the devotion comes down, you will see, 'Oh, why is she shouting at me all the time? Why is he looking at me like that? Why is he trying to snatch my pencil? Why is he taking my laptop away? He is not talking to me properly.' All that starts when the devotion comes down.

Understand, the necessary sacred sentiments for you to experience Living Advaita is bhakti. Beyond doubt there are some basic understandings. Those are the necessary cognitions.

Reading spiritual books or listening to the satsaṅg is allowing the possibility of having spiritual cognition. If you listen to ten ideas from the Master's mouth, two ideas you may be debating, but suddenly the fourth or fifth will just sit and go inside in your cognition and become an unshakeable cognition! Even you will forget to question them.

When your SDHD (self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial) was busy fighting with two-three ideas, other three-four ideas will just go and sit inside your being. Satsaṅg is always for that purpose. Satsaṅg is actually for that purpose.

The Master will be throwing some twenty ideas. Your logic is not capable of fighting with all the twenty ideas; but your SDHD (self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial) will be fighting in two-three fronts with four-five ideas. It can be doing this drama only with a few concepts and thoughts, not with all. By the time it does this drama, the other two thousand ideas, two thousand truths which the Master is giving will become part of your cognition. That is the purpose of satsaṅg.

It is to raise your spiritual cognition higher and higher and higher every day and beyond your SDHD; that is the purpose of satsaṅg. Raising your cognition and spiritual cognition every day beyond your SDHD is the purpose of satsaṅg.

The main theme of Upaniṣads is to make you live in Advaita by giving you the jñāna (sacred knowledge), understanding, sacred sentiments (bhakti), emotional strength, sacred cognition (vijñāna). Existence, Not Action Decides Life

If you see a person sitting next to you, how will you feel? If you see a dog sitting next to you, how will you feel? If you see a plant sitting next to you, how will you feel? If you think the person who is sitting next to you is alive, you will react either with love or withdrawal; you may react in different ways. If you see the dog sitting next to you, you will react in some way. If you don't react the same way to the plants, it means you don't feel they are alive.

Listen to this logic, you will understand the conclusion. Why do we feel that the plant is not so alive, the person is more alive and the dog is a little less alive? Because we have the wrong knowledge that action decides life. No. Existence decides life, not action. A man can do more actions than a dog, the dog can do more actions than a plant – you gauge and measure the existence of life in them based on the actions. This is the basic misunderstanding. Some of these basic misunderstandings can be repaired only by Upaniṣads.

Only the Upaniṣadic Masters carried that kind of an inner space. If a dog is sitting next to you and you judge it as having a very low life, you may not even respond. That dog also won't respond. Whoever makes you love yourself, you love that person. It is the law of life.

Your attitude may be different – respectful, sometimes reverence, sometimes fear. Whoever makes you love you, you will love that person. The Master's whole work is making people love themselves truly.

For human beings, the way of responding to their existence is blessing or healing them or asking about their problems and giving some solution, consolation or courage. For these plants, just a good look through the eyes which is respecting their life is enough for them to beautifully expand, celebrate and love their own existence.

One good thing with plants is you don't need to train them. They don't have SDHD (self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial). They don't have an exploiting mentality. They don't have an exploiting tendency. They do not have something which is not them as part of them. With human beings, they internalize something which is not them as part of them. So Master has to separate that and show them who they are. The moment Master shows you who is you, you will just fall in love with you.

Power of the Mahādeva component of you

The Mahādeva component of you which fulfills whatever you want, which gives so much good feeling about you is the real you. All of you have the Mahādeva component in you which makes you feel so good about you. Sometimes people say, "No, I think I never had or saw that part. I don't think I have that. I think I left that in Kailāsa when I came down!" or "After I came here, it got parceled and somebody stole it!" No!

नैनं छिन्दन्ति शस्त्राणि नैनं दहति पावकः ।

nainaṃ chindanti śastrāṇi nainaṃ dahati pāvakaḥ ।

No one can cut it and take it away from you. No one can burn it and take it away from you.

All of us have the Mahādeva component in us. How much ever you deny, you do catch a glimpse of that; you do experience it. You can go on denying, "No, that and all is not there. Why should I imagine and create a mess unnecessarily? No, no, no!" You can go on denying.

When you know that Mahādeva's component in you is still active, alive and it has not expired, you fall in love with you. Falling in love with yourself is the only way to keep nityotsāha, nitya utsāha (eternal excitement). Nothing else can give you eternal excitement.

Even if you fall in love with the Master, He will push that love back to you by saying, "Fall in love with your component of Me, your component of Mahādeva." When you fall in love with the Master, you fall in love with the Master's component of Mahādeva.

Even that can be denied by your mind after some time with the mind game, play and all that. Fall in love with your component of Mahādeva which is eternal excitement, inspiration, nithyotsāha, nitya utsāha.

The person who has touched the eternal excitement about himself only will have tolerance beyond logic. Illogical tolerance, beyond logical tolerance will happen to you when you understand the Mahādeva's component of you, Mahādeva's side of you, God's side of you, because you will just be in love with that existence. You will just be in a trance with that existence.

Being in love with Mahādeva's component of you is bhakti. Whenever you go dry, catch that component again. It will bring tremendous tolerance which is beyond any logic. A man who has achieved tolerance beyond any logic can never be disturbed or destroyed. This is the law of life. This is the law of life because when you know the Mahādeva's component of you, you are just in love with your existence; you are just in love with your possibilities. It is not some delusion. It is not some illusion. It is a possibility for every one of you.

No one can take away your consciousness. No one can take away your Enlightenment. No one can take away your understanding that you are Mahādeva. Whenever tiredness, boredom comes to you, remember: "I am Mahādeva and I have Mahādeva as my Master to remind me and help me to reach the experience of Mahādeva."

Don't immediately sulk by saying, "No, no. Yes, he will tell me to become Mahādeva. But, getting up from the bed and moving the body… He expects too much from me. He makes me do too many things. How can I think so much? How can I act so much?" Your inability to think or act never takes away your existence as Mahādeva. Your action does not touch your Mahādevahood, Śivahood, Godhood; it does not touch your Mahādeva's component of you.

Some people express it through their intellect. Some people express it through their body. Some people express it through creating complications. There are some people who are 'Doctorate in Complications'! They create so many complications - even before taking two steps ahead, internally twisting and turning their legs, like they have taken two thousand steps! "Why should I do it?" "He doesn't love me." "I think He expects too much from me." "He's trying to think I am intelligent unnecessarily. Even if I am intelligent, why should I work?" "Why should I enrich the world?" "Why should I do this?" "Why should I do that?"

"I think non-doing is joy." That is one of the biggest lies you believe. Non-doing does not take away your Śivahood. You just do not experience your Śivahood, expand and radiate. If you are non-doing, you are doing complications (PhD in Complications).

You may be an engineer in Noida, or a doctor in Bangalore, or a lawyer in Ahmedabad, or a sannyāsi sitting in Vārāṇasī, whoever you may be – You have Mahādeva's component, the highest possibility of all-knowing, all-powerful, always-blissful as your existence. That is your possibility. That is you. Start living it and start loving that component of you. Whether it is in your profession, career, family, relationships, life – express this.

Decide how Mahādeva will respond to this situation. - "If Mahādeva is a lawyer like me in Allahabad High Court, how will He respond? Let me live like that." That is Dharma. "If Mahādeva is a doctor like me in Bangalore, how will He live? Let me live like that." That is Dharma. Live with all your possibilities blissfully.

If Mahādeva's component is not there in you, you can't even breathe. The amount of things you need to do for breathing is ten thousand times more than what you need to do to finish all your projects successfully. All your projects (imagined, unimagined) are ten thousand times less than your breathing project.

Good thing Mahādeva made all that automated! Otherwise, you will be sitting and drawing – "through the right nose, half an inch expansion hole and two and a half feet pipe. If I inhale and then keep the air inside my lungs for these many seconds…" By that time, breathing would have stopped. How much of your consciousness, existence is required for your breathing? Only one ten-thousandth of the effort and consciousness is required to finish off all your so-called projects in life. Your life is far easier.

If you exist, everything is possible. For all possibilities, you don't need a separate technique, method to open them up in you. Only whatever you believe is not possible for you, you need to undo those wrong beliefs. But there are tons of things you just did not bother to believe are possible. For all those things, even just remembering, it'll start opening up in you.

For example: living without food. You may have started believing it is not possible for you. Actually, it is not possible for you till you are trained. You need to go through a lot of yogic practices, meditations. Just to have a glimpse of you, you can try some of those yogic practices. That's all. You are not required to be completely without food. That is not required for Enlightenment. It is just one of the yogic excitements.

About this 'able to live without breathing' – you know you can't because you started believing it. In the Himalayas, there are yogīs who bury their heads in the sand and live like that for eleven days. Whatever you already started believing is not possible for you, you will not be able to do; that is okay.

There are many things you have not taken the decision or belief or stand where those things not possible for you are actually possible for you. If you start opening up to things as a possibility, suddenly it may be available for you. There are so many things which you have not closed the door on. They are still available and open for you. Reminding you about all your possibilities is Living Advaita. That can happen only by Upaniṣads.

Upaniṣad Is The First, Foremost and Final Word Of The Universe

This is the first, foremost and final word given to the Universe from the Universe, given to humanity from the Cosmos. Upaniṣads are not like science where it is developing every day. For example: today a scientist will come and declare something as truth and everyone will agree. That will be considered as truth. People will make their life's decisions, align everything based on that truth. In ten years, another scientist will come along and prove that the whole thing is false and declare something else as truth. Then people will start aligning their life towards that. Then after five years, somebody else will come along and declare that as a lie and prove something else as truth.

If the truth is going to be changing tomorrow, it is not the truth even today. Upaniṣads are not like science which is evolving or changing. It is like a scientist carrying a lantern in a thick forest and telling the truths about the forest to the world – 'Oh, there are ten trees, two snakes and it's dark.' When you walk further, 'No, no, the forest is not just ten trees and two snakes, it is more than twenty-five trees and two elephants.' When you walk further, 'No, no, it is not even twenty-five trees. It is trees, trees, trees everywhere as we turn the lantern. There are trees all around and different types of animals.' This is what science is.

Upaniṣads are a Ṛṣi sitting and seeing the whole forest in a flash of lightning and describing it. The lantern descriptions will always change; but a Ṛṣi sitting on the peak of the hill, seeing the whole thing in one flash of lightning and penning it down is Upaniṣads. Understand the difference between these two.

Upaniṣads are the first, foremost and final word on truth. There is nothing like Upaniṣads which declares all the truths so close to the heart.

Śruti (heard): Upaniṣads are not said by any Ṛṣis. It is heard by the Ṛṣis. Who said it? It is the Cosmos singing about Itself. It is directly the Universe declaring Itself universally to the Universe.

Upaniṣads are Cosmic Cognitions to Live as Cosmos

Clear up all your old cognitions about life. Clear up all your old cognitions about God. Drop all your old cognitions about you. Drop your old cognitions about the world. Drop all your old cognitions and be fresh to receive the original Cosmic cognition from the Cosmos itself. Plan and live your life as the Cosmos wants you to live.

Each Upaniṣad mantra is a Cosmic cognition for you to live as Cosmos. Your relationship with you, your relationship with God, your relationship with life, your relationship with everything can be defined and redefined with these Upaniṣadic mantras.

Upaniṣadic mantras are far more powerful than any sound you can hear on planet Earth. Such a powerful vibration! Such powerful truths! Prepare yourself, clean up all your old cognitions about you. Complete with all of them, because you are going to complete with Completion itself. It is time to complete with Completion itself and enter into the Complete Completion space, Completion with all incompletions and Completion, and then entering into the space of Complete Completion which Upaniṣads describe as the state of the Cosmos, as the state of the Universe.

Keep yourself ready for the Cosmic cognitions. For example, the 2nd verse of the Upaniṣad says, 'Decide to live hundreds of years living in this liberated way.' What a life affirmative science this science is! It is not life negative. Every one of your DNA which hears these mantras will be supported to decide and programmed to live hundreds of years.

These Cosmic cognitions should be made the core of you, your DNA, your very bio memory, your very muscle memory. Each of these verses should be heard, loved, cherished, digested, lived, radiated and enriched. Get ready to drop all the old cognitions to live this new cognition.

Remove all these old cognitions and record these new Cosmic cognitions called Upaniṣads into your very core, into your very DNA. Let us all stand together as a Sangha to spread this Cosmic cognition to the whole world. Spreading this Cosmic cognition to the world is the greatest service we can do to the world. It is Sangha which always enjoys Buddha. But Dhamma is the greatest service to the whole world.

The whole world will not enjoy Buddha even if you give it to them. They will not know how to enjoy, how to live, how to cherish. It is like diamonds given to a beggar who does not know what to do with them and he spreads them all around. Or it is like a beggar who got a huge bag of diamonds, and as he has no work, he passes the time by throwing the diamonds one by one into the ocean. Human society will handle the Buddha like that only. They do not know the value. It is Sangha which enjoys the Buddha. The greatest gift Sangha can give to the world is Dhamma (Dharma). Take these Upaniṣads, the highest Dharma to the world.

Living Advaita is the Realization that You are Always Complete

Living Advaita means realizing you are Whole, one with the Whole, and that you are not a broken, separated or divided part. Broken means once and for all taken out. Separated means internally divided. Divided means internal sub-division. You are neither broken nor separated or even entered into sub-division from the Whole.

The Whole exists as Whole. It is not that now you will achieve Completion, and in the future you will experience Complete Completion. The Completion is Complete Completion when you realize even in the past you were always Completely Complete. Living Advaita means realizing Complete Completion not just in the present or in the future but also in the past.

The person who says, 'In the future I will be Completely Complete,' is a Yogī. The person who says, 'Now itself I am Completely Complete,' is a Tantric. The person who realizes, 'Not only in the future or present, even in the past I was Completely Complete,' is Advaitī.

Understand, the depth of the Completion is complete in you when you understand even in the past you were complete. When your incompletions of the past become not only meaningless or irrelevant, but just un-rememberable, non-cognizable by you; they don't have any more place in you – you are Living Advaita.

The main message of the Upaniṣads is not just that in the future you will be complete. In the future you will be complete is the message of Yoga Sūtras. Even now you are complete is the message of Śiva Sūtras. Even in the past you were complete is the message of the Upaniṣads.

Complete healing happens in you not just by becoming complete in the future or in the present, but only when you realize even in the past you were complete. Only then, the Complete Completion happens in you. Only Upaniṣads have the 'audacity,' not just to tell you, but have the courage to give you the experience that even in the past you were Completely Complete.

That is why, what will happen if you practice Yoga Sūtras can be predicted; what will happen if you practice Śiva Sūtras can be experienced; what will happen if you realize the Upaniṣads can neither be predicted nor be explained!

Living Advaita means not just becoming Completely Complete in the future, not just becoming Completely Complete in the present but realizing experientially you were Completely Complete even in the past. There was never ever any incompletion in you. That realization is Living Advaita. That can be given only by the Upaniṣads.

Upaniṣads: the original source of all religions, original source of all the truths. Living Advaita heals, completes, fulfills, puts bliss not just in your future or in the present, but also in your past. Only Living Advaita is capable of changing your past.

You may think, 'How can the past be changed? It is already over.' No. Nothing is over. As long as you remember, it still exists. Anything you remember still exists. Anything from the past you still remember is present; it is present about the past. It is about the past but it is in the present. The pain you have about the past, incompletion you have about the past, it may be about the past, but it is in the present. That is why it is still painful, it is still experientially incomplete.

Same way, a desire may be about the future but it is in the present. That is why it is so powerful to inspire you to move towards it. It can drive you experientially. Anything which is not present will not have power over you. It doesn't have life. So, the past or future is present as long as you remember, and it is still alive. As much as you can extend into your future, it is only about the future, but it is in the present. All your desires are about the future in the present. All your creations, declarations, everything you want is about the future, but in the present. All your pains, guilt, incompletions are about the past, but in the present.

It is Upaniṣads, one and only Upaniṣads which declare with a clear understanding and experientially complete your past in the present, future in the present and present in the present. When the Completion of present in the present happens, past in the present happens, future in the present happens – Complete Completion happens. Not only your future and present, even the past is transformed. No account is settled till you realize and reach Living Advaita in the Cosmos.

Just for you to reach Living Advaita, your past gets stored but does not get recorded. Anybody's past once recorded in the Cosmos, that is what comes down as Purāṇa. It means he has completed and recorded it in the Cosmos. From amoeba to Anantanārāyaṇa, he has finished the journey and won the game. So, now he is presented as Purāṇa, like Bhāgavata Purāṇa, from Matsya to Kalki.

All our files are still pending, not yet archived. Even now, by waking up and Living Advaita, we can re-write the whole history. You can re-write the whole history; not just socially, even cosmically. So take the decision to live Advaita; decide to reach the space of Complete Completion to the extent even your past is re-written. Not just the present or the future, even your past is re-written. Get ready to enter into this great mystical journey.

Patañjali only dares to say, 'Your future can be completed; do these practices.' Even Mahādeva only dares to say in Vijñāna Bhairava Tantra, 'Even up to your present will be completed immediately; practice these techniques.' Only the Upaniṣad which nobody wrote but were channeled only have the audacity to say, 'Not just your future or present, even your past can be transformed and rearranged.' Nothing is complete till you start Living Advaita.

Mahādeva vibrated the Cosmic knowledge - Vedas, as Dakṣiṇāmūrti. Ṛṣis radiated it and read it out from the Cosmic knowledge. That is the way the Upaniṣads were delivered to planet Earth. Mahādeva just sat in silence as Dakṣiṇāmūrti under the Banyan Tree and radiated it as a vibration, vibrant silence, living silence, the alive silence. The Ṛṣis just spelled out the Cosmic Records, the Akashic Records in words and shared it with the world. This is the way Upaniṣads have happened.

Living Advaita means, realizing not just in the future you will be out of Māyā (delusion), not just in the present you are out of Māyā experientially, it is realizing even in the past you were never in the clutches of Māyā. It is far, far beyond the word

'Enlightenment.'

What explanation you have been given through the word 'Enlightenment,' what idea you have about 'Enlightenment' and what promise was given to you through the word 'Enlightenment' – the truth of Living Advaita is far higher and beyond. Enlightenment is always about either the future or the present. It is only Living Advaita that has the courage to tell you the truth about the past also. As long as the future is not complete, the past can't be complete also.

Till you die, your whole biography cannot be written. Only at the last moment can your biography be written. Same way, till you finish your future, your past cannot be frozen.

As long as your future is not completed, the past can't be completed also. Only when the future ends can you have an idea about your past. So, do not be under the myth that your past is lived and over already. Experientially transforming the future, present and past is Living Advaita.

Living Advaita – No Period of Delusion or Dark Night

The Whole, the Cosmos, the Universe comes from the Whole. Even when it comes, it doesn't get separated; it continues to be established in the Whole. When it goes back, it goes back to the same Whole.

Living Advaita means declaring there is no period of delusion. The promise and message of Yoga Sūtra is, now you are in delusion. If you do this, you will be liberated in the future. That is Yoga.

'No, no, no, even now you are liberated, even now you are free. You are not at all bound.' That is Tantra.

'Not only in the future or in the present, even in the past you were always free' is Advaita.

There is no delusion period. Your history has no dark pages. Cosmos never writes and never makes a dark page in your history. Out of your own sheer stupidity, you go on making some part of your life as a blackened part of your life, dark part of your life. There is no dark night in your history is the message of Advaita.

The Whole comes from Whole. Mahādeva comes from Mahādeva and He is established in being Mahādeva is the truth. The earlier you start celebrating, the earlier you start enjoying life.

In the world, there are three kinds of people. One: people who go on feeling life is poverty. They live and leave life in poverty, utter powerlessness, and not having what they want or not having enough. That is one group.

Second: living on OPM (Other People's Money). That is the second group. Never deliver anything to people and create fear only. Blackmailers never deliver anything to the world. They just blackmail, create fear and grab. Non-contributing members of the society and living on OPM (Other People's Money). 'Other People's Money' is not only other people's money, it is using all the resources of other people. They use others' power, intelligence, everything and never contribute to them And live on OPR (Other People's Resources).

Third: this is the essence of the Universe. The group which goes on contributing, sharing, enriching, radiating, living in utter richness of Śiva Bodha.

Three Types of People

Enough has already been deposited in your DNA, your bio memory and muscle memory. It is now you who need to start writing the cheques, blank cheques and distributing them to the world and start living it. No one has been sent to the Earth to live a poor life, living the life of powerlessness and resourcelessness. No one has been sent to live on other people's resources, thinking that you are resourceless.

Blackmailers are the most frightened stupid people because they feel they do not have enough resources. They need an Inner Awakening. Resources, money, strength, intelligence, power – all these are resources. When you feel you don't have enough, you live in utter disgrace and die. That is the kind of lifestyle, 'You think of you as Shava (corpse).' That is the inner image (mamakāra) you carry.

This second group: 'Yes, I don't have but I can swindle others.' Living on other people's resources, non-contributing elements of society When this OPM becomes too large, Bhagavān has to land, Kṛṣṇa has to happen and clear the whole thing.

Otherwise, there is no justification for the Mahābhārata War. We have not recovered from the Mahābhārata War. What all we have lost because of the Mahābhārata War, still we have not recovered. We are still suffering the after effects and side effects of the Mahābhārata War. We lost so much knowledge, technology, everything we had. Most unfortunately, people with the knowledge also got killed.

What we lost because of the Mahābhārata War is unimaginable. There is no reason for a personality like Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa to conduct such mass destruction! I will say, Mahābhārata War is equivalent to Pralaya (dissolution of the Cosmos). We lost all the best things. Few things remained and escaped that War.

The only reason Kṛṣṇa had to do this mass cleansing, acid wash on the planet Earth is because this OPM group had become too much – people living on other people's money, other people's resources – money, power, knowledge, work.

Blackmailers are the most sick people on the planet Earth. Not just sickening people, sick people. There is a difference. Sickening means you need to be angry towards them. Sick means you need to be sympathetic towards them. Blackmailers are the most sick people because not only they feel powerless, they go on trying to swindle and live on other people's resources. They are non-contributing blackmailers.

The third group is the most intelligent and brilliant group. They realized whatever is required for them to fulfill what they imagine as their life and mission. They have the intelligence, energy, knowledge, plan of actions, creativity, everything. And more than that, they already know it is there in their DNA, very bio memory, very muscle memory and very bioenergy. 'Let me start living it.' This group is the most intelligent and brilliant beings on planet Earth. They are the salt of the Earth. They are the sugar of the Earth. They are the sweetness of the Earth. They are the Earth!

This one truth: whatever you need to feel fulfilled, whether it is Mercedes Benz car outside your house in your portico, or worriless mind all the time, or being in the space of Śivoham all the time, or having happy relationships in life, or amazing health, or living with all the extraordinary spiritual powers and siddhis - whatever you imagine is the peak of your life and can't imagine - knowledge, creativity, power, resources, energy, everything – all the best things are already there in your bioenergy, biomemory and muscle memory. You just have to start living it. You don't need to acquire it.

Requirement is not acquiring. Requirement is liquidating. Don't sit on the prime property which is twenty five thousand crore and die without having bread and butter for breakfast. Don't be the owner of the billion dollar property and die without having bread and butter for breakfast. Whatever is required for you to radiate the Śivoham is already available in your biomemory, muscle memory and bioenergy. Start living it. Decide to live it every moment.

'Come on, I am Mahādeva. Let me radiate the Śiva Bodha, the joy of being Mahādeva. He is in my DNA programming. He is in my bio memory programming. He is in my muscle memory programming. He is in my bioenergy programming.'

pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidam pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate |
If the Whole comes out of the Whole, it has to be the Whole. There can never be a hole. When the Whole comes out of the Whole, it has to be Whole. There can never be a hole.

Whatever may be the mamakāra (inner Image), you may carry yourself as Shava or Jīva, the truth is, you are Śiva, Mahādeva. You are the Whole. From the Whole, even when you think you have become part and got separated, you are the Whole. You are the Whole. You are the Whole, the 'W.' This means double victory, double 'V' – VV (two 'V's joined together become 'W'). When you feel you are the Whole (Cosmos), don't think only you are celebrating, even the Cosmos is celebrating. That is why double 'V' – double victory.

When you feel Śivoham, when you feel you are Mahādeva, don't think only you become ecstatic, Mahādeva is also ecstatic. Cosmos is waiting to celebrate its glory towards you. Whenever you declare you are Mahādeva, don't think Mahādeva is sitting there and saying, 'How dare you say 'I am Mahādeva' without becoming pure and capable like Me!' No! He is saying, 'You are telling me 'I am Mahādeva.' Now I am fitting Me in you!' Mahādeva is not an envious God. No. He is not saying, 'What? You say you are Mahādeva? Have you done tapas like Me? Have you done all the qualification tests? Have you passed all the qualifications? How can you claim My throne?' No!

The moment you say, 'I am Mahādeva,' He says, 'Wow! I have one more body through which I can celebrate My existence.' He is waiting for more and more people to declare Śivoham. He is waiting for more and more people to become Gaṇa. In Sanskrit, Gaṇa means embodying. He is waiting for more and more people to become Śiva Gaṇa, embodying His very existence.

Many of you think, 'Oh, I am constantly remembering I am Śiva,' and one part of you questions, 'Hey, I am not qualified. I have not trained myself. I have not done tapas. How will Śiva accept me as Him?'

Please understand, in Aksharamana Malai, there is one beautiful line sung by Ramana Maharshi.

என்பலோலுந் தீனரை யின்பூறக் காத்தூநீ

யநெ்நாளூம் வாழ்ந்தரூ ளரூணாசலா

He is talking about himself: 'என்பலோலுந் தீனரை யின்பூறக் காத்தூநீ (Even a person like me, You are saving, establishing, protecting. O, Arunachala, let you live long).'

Through this statement Bhagavān (Ramana Maharshi) is not making himself low. He can never be low. He is revealing the truth: 'Even if you think you are a dīna, means the worst inner image you may have about you, He is here; Mahādeva is here to protect and celebrate Himself through you.'

The moment you decide – 'I will live Śivoham, the truth (satya), I am Mahādeva' – immediately Mahādeva starts expressing all His powers through your being. He is not saying, 'Qualify first, then I will give you.' No! You start living, you decide to declare, you decide to live, is the qualification.

The moment you even remember Śivoham, He immediately rushes into you, fills you, starts experimenting and radiating. This sacred ash (vibhūti) and Rudrākṣa (sacred beads) are the masks of Mahādeva. The moment you put that on and say, 'Śivoham,' He just fills and radiates Himself through you.

Śivoham is not just some theory and concept. It is the ultimate medicine for whatever may be the problem. It can be the most difficult or real problem like today evening, the person who gave the loan to you is coming to collect the interest of ten thousand rupees and you only have a thousand rupees. You don't know what to do or how to get the other nine thousand rupees. Even with that problem, Śivoham is the solution.

Śivoham works because the owner of the medicine is waiting to make it work. He is waiting to celebrate through every one of us. He is waiting for just one missed call. If you utter Śivoham and you immediately feel the connection and start expressing powers, it is a live call. If you just utter Śivoham mechanically and nothing happens, it is a missed call. But even if it is a missed call from your side, He never misses responding, replying, calling you back.

Even if you chant mechanically, try to remember mechanically, try to remember for the sake of argument, 'Eh, if I am Śiva, okay let this wheezing problem become alright.' Even in that debating way if you are trying it is a call though a missed call. Debated practice or challenged practice is a missed call. It will never go to waste. Kailāsa never misses a single missed call!

Even for a debate, try 'Eh, if I am Mahādeva, let my eyes be healed. Let me see. I will check. I will challenge.' Even in a challenging way, checking way, arguing way, debating way, playful way, you can check. Practice Śivoham playfully. You may practice Śivoham doubtfully, playfully, for the sake of argument or challenging - whatever way you may practice it for, whether it is a live call or a missed call – you will never be missed. Śivoham really can be a powerful solution. Try it first.

Understand this one satya. These great truths revealed in our Upaniṣads are not myth. Myth, mythology – these words are the most abusive words given to our Purāṇas, Śāstras and Upaniṣads. Myth is an abusive word. The right word for our Purāṇas, Upaniṣads, Śāstras is subjective truth.

When Bhāgavatam says Kṛṣṇa lifted the whole Govardhana Hill with His little finger, it is not a myth or mythology; it is a subjective truth. A person who wants to live that truth, for him it is the truth. Śivoham is not a myth or mythology. It is subjective truth. Whatever you remember in you, in your inner space, can either suffocate you or make you blissful and expanded. If you remember something painful, it suffocates you. If you remember something blissful, it expands you.

Anything you remember and it suffocates you is a pattern. Anything you remember and it expands you is subjective truth. Śivoham, Ahaṁ Brahmāsmi, Tat Tvam Asi, Prajñānam Brahma, Soham Haṃsa – all these Mahāvākyas are not myth. It is subjective truth. Start living it.

Tsunamis don't stop because of the plastic covers lying on the beach. Śivoham does not stop because of a few stupid incompletions you are having in your being. Anything which you remember, anything that suffocates you by remembrance is incompletion. Anything that expands you by remembrance is subjective truth.

Consciousness by Nature Does Not Allow Incompletions

First of all, you need to understand that your consciousness has a constitutional setup. The basic constitution of the consciousness does not allow incompletions to be inside it. By its nature, they are ejected out.

For a good DVD player, the moment you insert a corrupted CD, it just ejects it out as a default setup; it does not play. Same way, the constitutional setup of your consciousness does not play with incompletion. By its very nature, it just ejects and rejects it.

So, don't be sitting and calculating the plastic covers and coffee tumblers (cups) lying in Marina Beach (a beach in Chennai) and thinking, 'Such a dirty place. How will the tsunami come?' Tsunami cannot be stopped by the plastic covers. Śivoham cannot be stopped by the small incompletions you think you are having. Start living it. That is the only key!

When you feel victorious, Mahādeva feels victorious. He wants you to be victorious, because that is the way He feels victorious. The Whole celebrates you feeling as Whole, because the Whole feels fulfilled when you feel you are Whole. He wants you to experience Śivoham.

There is no other reason for Him to make Himself available to you other than making you experience Śivoham, because He also celebrates you experiencing Śivoham.

Remember this one line: He celebrates when He is able to make you celebrate, because Mahādeva loves you! This is the real meaning of God loves you.

Bhagavān Ramana Maharshi says, "என்பலோஞ் தீனரை யின்பூறக் காத்தூநீ. யநெ்நாளூம் வாழ்ந்தரூ ளரூணாசலா."

He says, 'Even the worst people are protected, saved, celebrated. O Mahadeva, because you are doing this, let you live long.' If he is a dīna, how can he bless Mahādeva? Don't you see the whole conflict?

In the first line, he says, "என்பலோஞ் தீனரை."

In the next line, he says, "யநெ்நாளூம் வாழ்ந்தரூ ளரூணாசலா."

He has a powerful message in that one line. Even if you think you are the lowest, you have the right and capacity to bless Mahādeva because you are Him and He celebrates through you. When you celebrate, He celebrates through you. When the microcosm dances, macrocosm joins. When you do naṭana (dance), Naṭarāja (the King of Dance, Mahādeva) joins. The truth is, you are programmed for Śivoham. You are programmed as Mahādeva. You just need to start living it, radiating it now.

A normal man's life in the waking state runs based on logic. How much ever you condemn logic, you can't drop it. A waking state of human life is bound by logic and functions by logic. Logic is the law of waking state in human life. But, human life is not just the waking state as we are all made to strongly cognize.

When the emotion interferes in any equation, logic loses its base. For example: two plus two is four is logic. But in a painting, the paint you used and the canvas put together is not painting. That is not equivalent to painting. You can't even come to the logical conclusion on the amount of force used by the painter on the brush which reached the canvas and made the paint stick to the canvas. The amount of paint used, the amount of force used, the canvas used, all put together can never equate painting, because the component of emotion is involved.

That is why even the country's law gives huge punishment if the crime is a heinous crime. All murderers don't get hanged. Only in the rarest of the rare, they get hanged. What decides the rarest of the rare? The emotion involved in it, like when a child is killed. When a child is raped and killed, naturally too much emotion is involved in it. The child has a future; it can't defend itself, it can't protect itself. It is defenseless. Life which has a future, when that is harmed or killed, naturally becomes rarest of the rare crimes.

In any field when emotion is involved, logic cannot be taken to the end and it does not give the right result. Emotion is the smell of consciousness. That is why your dreams can never be logically analyzed or concluded. The natural law of a human being's waking state is called logic. The natural law of a human being's dream state is called emotion. Even the fragrance of consciousness — emotion — if it intervenes in a scene or interferes in a happening, your logical conclusions cannot be arrived at. Your logic loses its value, stature, status, and its ability to answer the questions of why, who, what, when, where, and how. You can never have an answer for why, when, where, what, how of the dream.

There is Nothing Called Mental Disorder

Sigmund Freud is the biggest fraud who sold a big hypothetical, fraudulent system of thinking to the world, which can never be questioned and proved. Most of the mental disorders are created false diseases. Now Leon Eisenberg, scientific father of ADHD (Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder), just before his death, confesses – 'ADHD is a fictitious disease.' He says,

'ADHD is a prime example of a fictitious disease.' The scientific father of ADHD is uttering these words and he is dead. 'ADHD is a fraud; it is intended to justify starting children on a life of drug addiction'; Dr. Edward C. Hamlyn, founding member of the Royal College of General Practitioners is making this statement.

Now, it is too late. Already the human consciousness, human bio-memories, human muscle memories have started believing the why, how, when, where, what of ADHD. It has already become part of our thinking system. There are tons of articles about this fictitious disease and on how they have developed it.

Whose hands are we in? 24.4% of the money is used on the promotion of medicine. Only 13% is used for research and development to make sure the medicine is safe. Only 13% is used to make sure the medicine is safe, and 24% (almost double the amount) is used to push their medicine on people.

Actually, there is no such thing as mental disease. It cannot exist because the mind is liquid; it is fluid. Only solid existence can have conflicts. Liquid existence can never have conflicts. Can water have conflict with the vessel? If any vessel gets filled, it just fills itself. Concocted compositions of fears compiled systematically and preached are psychiatric and psychological disorders.

These psycho-pharmacology units all over the world are made by those who have vested interests. If there is delusion, instead of waking that person out of delusion, they encourage it. For example: a person is sleeping and dreaming that he is being chased by a tiger. He shouts, "Tiger, tiger, save me, save me!" He is blabbering even in his sleep. Say you are the person who is standing next to him and watching this happening, what do you need to do? Just tap him and wake him up. That's all.

There is primary delusion. But, the solution is not as difficult as it is projected and told to us. The solution kills more people than the disease. If this chemotherapy and other killing drugs were not there, people would be alive for a longer time with cancer than with medicine. Medicines kill more people than diseases.

The internet has done such great good to humanity, human society. Some people are using it for bad; that is different. All these truths come out and reach common man because of the internet. The field of emotion can never be logically analyzed, organized or arranged. To understand that, you need a totally different level of cognition.

The cognition which empowers you to experience the law of the waking state is logic. The cognition which empowers you to experience the flow of emotion is love. Other than love, nothing else can be useful to dissect, bisect and understand emotions.

Sigmund Freud is the biggest fraud who exploited the ignorance of human beings. He knew that the component of emotion cannot be logically analyzed and understood. Same way if you develop a system to analyze logically the component of emotion, you can't disprove the system also.

The gray area of "neither can be proved nor can be disproved" has been abused, misused and manipulated by Sigmund Freud. When you know law, if you are using the gray area, you are a criminal. If you know the field of emotion, dreams, mind, and if you use the gray area, you are a criminal. If you know the science of consciousness, and if you use the gray area, that is the biggest conspiracy. The most authentic beings who never exploited the gray area of consciousness and presented the truths as it is are Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis.

Most of the founders of religious organizations had powers; they had some experience of consciousness. They used the gray area to establish their vested interests. They use their knowledge and the people's ignorance of inability to disprove what they claim. The combination of all this was used to establish their vested interests.

Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis are the Masters who don't even want to spell out their names! We have the few names that are spelled out possibly by mistake. Other than that, nowhere are they ready to even declare their names. Even in those rare instances, only the last name, means the family name is available for us, Like Vyāsa is a title, not a name. That much of apauruṣeyatva - authorlessness! That much of non-interference from the author or his vested interests! What a sacrifice!

A person who leads the army should never have fear even in the corner of his being, because so many people's courage is exploited by his courage. He can't have fear even in the corner of his being. He has awakened so many people's courage and led all of them. He has no right to have fear.

An intellectual person can have fear, but not hypocrisy to exploit the gray zone, gray area. A person who leads the army has all the right to exploit the gray area. He has the right to wage guerrilla wars. He has the right for hypocrisy but not for fear. An intellectual has the right to have fear, but cannot exploit the gray area of knowledge.

Some of the religious leaders have done more damage to planet Earth by using the gray area of the consciousness zone. Sigmund Freud used the gray area of the emotional zone where he developed a theory which can neither be proven right nor be proven wrong. As long as it can't be proven wrong, it can continue to exist. That is what is using the intellectual gray area. Same way, some of the founders of religious organizations, when they have some spiritual powers through conscious experiences, but not yet fully awakened and enlightened, used that gray area to establish their vested interests.

If you are living Hindu Tradition, please be proud of the Hindu Ṛṣis. You are living an unexploited, unmanipulated, unadulterated truth as your life. It is told to you as it is. Neither the disease is fictitious nor the diagnosis is fuzzy methods. If you are screaming seeing the tiger chasing you in your dream and asking for help, the Ṛṣis will just say, "Come on, wake up my son." They just wake you up. That's all.

The system which empowers you in the waking state is logic.

The system which empowers you in the emotion, dream state is love.

The system which can empower you in the conscious state is Advaita.

Understand, all your emotional ups and downs, mood swings, if you handle it with love, it will just empower you, and you will never have any disease related to your mind. Your fear, phobias, depression, everything, handle it with love. You will just be free from all mental, psychological, psychiatric disorders. This one word 'love' is the sarva roga nivāraṇi (cure for all diseases) for any mental, psychological, psychiatric disorders. You don't need to go through these fuzzy diagnostic methods. All the problems of consciousness can be handled just by one principle – Advaita.

Advaita is Beyond Logic and Emotion

Logic will not be useful in the field of emotion, and emotion will not lead you in the right level, right angle in the field of consciousness. That is why whenever you fall into the space of emotion, you lose your logic, and when you fall into the space of consciousness, you lose your emotion.

If your basic cognition is emotion, you lose all your logic. That is why it is called falling in love. Actually, it is not exactly love; it is attachment, infatuation. When you are infatuated, attached, all your logic disappears. When you are coming in touch with the Advaitic space, all your emotion disappears.

Advaitīs should live sannyās. Sannyās itself does not lead to Advaita. First become an Advaitī, Jīvanmukta. Then sannyās will be possible and successful. Otherwise, you will start developing attachment to your kamaṇḍalu (water pot)! If your cognition moves to Advaita, automatically you go beyond logic and emotion.

पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ||
pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidam pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate |
pūrṇasya pūrṇamādāya pūrṇamevāvaśiṣyate ||

When the cognition gets centered on consciousness, life is love, laughter, joy and life itself. Let us now understand how to make our cognition centered on this sacred truth: "The Whole comes from the Whole and is established in the Whole and gets back to Whole. And even during this whole process, it remains as Whole." How can we align our cognition to it?

Śūnya is Infinity

Mathematically you can never understand this verse. Mathematically you can't say, "Two comes out of two, stays as two and goes back to two; even after that it remains as two." No. That is why the concept of zero no brains were able to conceive other than the Ṛṣis' brains.

When the concept of zero itself was revealed, the consciousness of the Ṛṣi was "the Whole was the value of the zero, not nothingness." Infinity was the definition of zero by the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis. But the logical mind which received these understandings was not able to comprehend. So, they made that as nothingness (Śūnya). Sa Anya means 'there is nothing other than this exists' - is Śūnya. Sa Anya – nothing other than this exists. Anything you call as anya, inclusive of that is Śūnya. Sa Anya - anything you call as other, including all that is Śūnya.

Zero of the Hindu Ṛṣis is not zero of the Western mathematicians.

Zero is not nothing; it is infinity. Zero is not nothingness, it is infinity. If this one cognition is digested into your system, if this one truth becomes your cognition, your whole life will take a new turn.

You will not believe any stupid theories of you going to have death or destruction. These stupid theories of one life concepts – all that will disappear. How can you have one life? How can life have one life? You can have one body at any one time; that is accepted. How can life have only one life? Then are you just a body? Then after life leaves, the body should be functioning. Then if suddenly the body is not functioning, then something is leaving. What leaves, how can there be only one body? If there is only one body, then it should not be leaving it. Tons and tons of stupid cognitions you are carrying will melt down; tons and tons of stupid beliefs you are carrying will melt down with this one sacred truth – zero is not nothingness; zero is infinity.

Śūnya as it was discovered, as it was spelled out by the Ṛṣis did not mean nothingness; it meant infinity. Sa Anya means anything you call as Anya, all that together is Śūnya. Sa Anya means anything you think or understand or feel as Anya is all put together. The possibility for the other to exist does not exist in Śūnya because anything you call as other, we have included; that is why it is Śūnya.

This first mantra, Śānti Mantra of Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, which is in the 40th chapter of Yajurveda is given the first place in the series of Upaniṣads.

There are four major commentaries on Upaniṣads.

Nīlakaṇṭha Śivācārya

Ādiguru Śaṅkarācārya

Rāmānujācārya

Madhvācārya

All four of them are great enlightened beings, incarnations. There is no question of comparing anyone with the other. All four of them made Upaniṣads user-friendly for different types of groups at different times. The differences you see in the commentaries by these Masters is not because of the Masters, it is because of the disciples.

Nīlakaṇṭha Śivācārya is the first one who wrote the commentary. It was much earlier than Ādiguru Ādi Śaṅkarācārya, Jagadguru Śaṅkarācārya. Nīlakaṇṭha Śivācārya wrote the commentary based on what was the need of the human society at that time. What needs to be highlighted to them, what is the best way for them to be able to experience the Upaniṣads – from that angle he presented Upaniṣads.

Then came Jagadguru Ādi Śaṅkarācārya. He is one of the greatest incarnations. He revealed the Upaniṣads for human society at that time. The need of the disciples, need of the human society at that time was different.

So, when each Ācārya happened, each one of them made the Upaniṣads user-friendly for that time and society. The differences between the Ācāryas and their commentaries should be taken as a richness of Hinduism, not as chaos or confusion of Hinduism. They provided paths for different mindsets.

In the main core truths, all four of them are not at all differing. When it comes to applying or achieving that experience, the methodology they are deriving, developing, asking us to practice in reaching that space, making those great truths user-friendly for practicing, and making that as a cognition in inner space – only those they have their own methodology.

These anti-Hindu intellectuals, they go on telling us our Ācāryas are all different and there is no single conclusion. Our Ācāryas neither have conflict nor confusion, or contradict each other in the core experience. When they tried to make it user-friendly for each society based on that time's requirement, the instructions differ, explanations differ. It is like one Ācārya says, "When there is a red light, don't drive." Another one Ācārya says, "When there is a green light, then drive." Another one Ācārya says, "When there is a yellow light, don't drive, but be ready to drive." The more Ācāryas' bhāṣyas you read, you will only have more clarity and depth. After reading all the four, one only achieves the maturity to write one's own bhāṣya.

The Hindu tradition is so pure, so vast that each Ācārya made these Upaniṣads user-friendly at different times. So, for that particular time in human society, they revealed the truth accordingly so that people can live it, radiate it and achieve that original space of Completion, Complete Completion, Brahmajñāna, Ātmajñāna, Śivapada, Viṣṇupada.

Nīlakaṇṭha Śivācārya is an Ādiśaiva, so he calls it Śivapada. Ādi Śaṅkara is a Smārta Brahmin, so he calls it as Brahman. Madhvācārya and Rāmānujācārya call it Viṣṇupada (achieving the space of Viṣṇu, grace of Viṣṇu). These different words were used – Sālokya Mukti, Sārūpya Mukti, Sāmīpya Mukti, Sāyujya Mukti. Ultimately, the commentaries are not written to establish their ego. It is written to cater to the needs of the human mind at that time.

Whole Remains Whole – There is Nothing called Incompletion

The first mantra from Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad:

पूर्णमदः पूर्णमिदम् पूर्णात् पूर्णमुदच्यते |
पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ||
pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidam pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate |

All the four Ācāryas were not able to write different commentary on this mantra because it was so clear that you do not need to write a commentary. Śrī Kṛṣṇa makes his Gītā's eighteen chapters based on Upaniṣad's eighteen verses.

Upaniṣads are the conversations that happened about the satya (truth) from the Ṛṣis who originally revealed this mantra (Sūtrakāras); then the great Masters who wrote the commentary (Bhāṣyakāras); then the great Masters who wrote the commentary on the commentary (Tīkākāra, Vārttikakāra).

The person who revealed the original sūtra is Sūtrakāra. The person who writes the first bhāṣya is Bhāṣyakāra. The person who writes the commentary on the commentary is Vārttikakāra. The person who writes commentary on the commentary of the commentary (vārttika) is Tīkākāra.

ॐ पूर्णमदः पूर्णमिदम् पूर्णात् पूर्णमुदच्यते |
पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ||
ॐ शान्तिः शान्तिः शान्तिः

oṃ pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidam pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate |
oṃ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ

Let us offer our respects to everyone who is responsible for this great truth, the Ṛṣis who revealed it and the great Masters who wrote the bhāṣya, vārttika, tīkā and their sampradāya Devatās. Let us bow down to all of them, invoke all Their presence, offer our respects to all of Them and enter into the sūtra.

Completion, from Completion even if you think Completion has moved out, the Completion remains Complete. Completion, even if you feel moved away from Completion, it remains Complete. Completion merging into the Completion remains Complete.

All your incompletions are imaginary. If you tell your DNA, your body, the source of your body, "All your incompletions are imaginary," you will walk out of any disease. Disease is nothing but you strongly believing you are away from this Whole.

The Whole remains as Whole. Completion remains as Completion. Even when you think you have incompletion, the incompletion does not exist. Whether you have as simple a problem as constipation, or as complicated a problem as conflict with the Constitution of the country you are living in, this truth can be a great help. This satya can relieve you from that problem and suffering. This satya can liberate you.

Meditate on this one line: "Even when you strongly believe you have incompletions, they are not factual." There is a very beautiful incident: once a great disciple of Ramana Maharshi (Muruganar) was sitting at the feet of Bhagavān Ramana Maharshi. A few devotees had come from various parts of Tamil Nadu. A conversation was happening. The conversation was about many small things, like construction which is going on in the ashram, so that food can be served to everyone. There was a question about some construction that was going on in the ashram, about the kitchen or extension of the kitchen. Bhagavān was a micromanager, so he called that disciple and asked, "Did you do the door frame?" That person was replying something and Bhagavān made a statement, "Go to Chettinad and make the door frame exactly like that." Then, Bhagavān made a beautiful statement in Tamil:

வாசல் மட்டும் இல்லடா, வரவேற்கவும் சிட்டினாட்டிலேந்து கத்துக்கிட்டு வா.

"Not only the door frame, even how to receive and how to take care of people, learn from Chettinad and come."

Then suddenly the conversation turned to charity, means giving. So using this chance, the great disciple Muruganar asked Bhagavān, "O Bhagavān, you wrote beautiful verses on Aruṇācaleśvara. Please give the meaning. Give us the commentary on those verses." It seems suddenly Bhagavān's face became very shy and he started blushing. A fifty five year old great Advaiti suddenly in the mood of blushing and shy! It is recorded that Bhagavān said, "It is too intimate. I cannot speak about it." Because, that whole song is Akshara Mana Malai (Bridal Garland of Letters). Bhagavān put himself in Madhura Bhāva and wrote towards not even Aruṇācaleśvara but Aruṇācala Hill, because Bhagavān related to that Hill as Mahādeva.

Of course, he had a high reverence and respect for the Deity also. Whenever the Deity came in the procession from the temple, he would go and stand, bow down, stretch his hand to receive the vibhūti. He was very respectful to the Deity also. But, he himself worshipped that whole Hill as a Deity. So, he could not comment.

Now the punchline. Then Muruganar asked, "If you say commenting on it, explaining it is so difficult because it is too intimate, if you can't comment on it, why did you reveal those verses to us? Why did you write those verses?" Bhagavān said, "When I wrote those verses and sang, whoever was around me, they were so dedicated, devoted disciples, I did not feel I am talking to somebody else. I felt like I am talking to Me! So I wrote to Me. I revealed those truths to Me."

Your DNA, your bio-energy is always in the space of Completion. Whether you think you have a stomach pain, headache, or as simple an issue as a small scratch on the skin to as difficult a problem as cancer, tell your DNA, "You are complete and get back to Completion. You are complete and get back to your original state of Completion." Don't go on imagining that there is some incompletion in you. Even if you are convinced there is a disease in you, that cannot become a fact or the ultimate truth.

The power of suffering is, it will convince you to go on suffering forever. That is the worst power of suffering. If you are convinced that suffering is going to be with you forever, you are in hell. That wrong conviction needs to be weeded out. The wrong conviction that the suffering is going to be there with you forever brings the disease again and again back to you. If you convince your DNA, your bio-memory that you are complete, then Completion will be brought back to you, health will be brought back to you.

Any problem in your life is nothing but incompletion which is imaginary, i-m-a-g-i-n-a-r-y. Our Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis who revealed this truth are not in delusion. They are neither in delusion nor in the mood of cheating you.

For example: if a great gold merchant, out of his love for Śiva declares, "I will make hundred kg gold ornaments for Mahādeva" and he himself is a master of that science, will he cheat two grams of gold from that hundred kg of gold jewellery? One: he knows the science, the quality checking. Second: he is full of gratitude. Neither will he cheat nor will he allow anybody else to cheat, because he knows the science.

Same way the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis, neither they can be in delusion nor they can put you in delusion, because they have nothing to gain by putting you in delusion. This gold merchant has nothing to gain by stealing two grams of gold from that hundred kilograms of gold which he wanted to give to Mahadeva. Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis sacrificed their whole life to humanity. They are neither in delusion nor can put others in delusion.

The job of the Master is the most difficult job. Master has to completely teach you the opposite way of thinking, opposite to what society has taught you. For example: you go to somebody and tell the person you have a headache, and that person rolls on you, "Oh you have a headache! What happened to you? This should not have come to you!" And he cries and wipes his face on your clothes. You think, "Oh, how loving this person is, how caring this person is!" But, when you come to the Master, He has to tell you, "Please tell your innermost being it is not the true state of you." Then you think, "Ah, if you get this headache, then you will understand. All your philosophy..." You feel Master is insensitive.

When you tell your DNA, "You are complete," you walk out of diseases.

When you tell your relationship issues, "You are complete," you walk out of relationship problems and have healed complete relationships.

When you tell your desires, "You are complete," much more than anything you desired, life showers on you.

When you tell your fears, "You are complete," no harm can be done to you however many people may try to harm.

When you are complete inside, no one can frighten you, no one can harm you. Cosmos functions on intelligence. It functions on Completion. Completion is not just replacing your Anacin, Metacin, Paracetamol; it replaces Anacin, Metacin, Paracetamol also. It is much more than that. Completion is God.

पूर्णमदः पूर्णमिदम् पूर्णात् पूर्णमुदच्यते |
पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ||
pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidam pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate |
pūrṇasya pūrṇamādāya pūrṇamevāvaśiṣyate ||

This Completion can be practiced. You can live it, you can use it, you can assimilate it in your life. You can digest it. You can use Completion and solve the problems of your life, whether it is a disease as simple as headache, or as complicated as cancer, or the interpersonal relationships, or as simple as a simple verbal fight, or as complicated as divorce. Completion is a practical and user-friendly solution.

When people have knowledge about the common man's problems, they only plan how to commercialize it. Everyone who has knowledge, uses that gray area for their vested interests. Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis are the most authentic people, knowing the whole Cosmic law, but never used any gray area for their vested interests.

A lawyer uses the gray area of law to prove his necessity. A doctor uses the gray area of the law to prove he is needed. In each field, people who have knowledge about that area try to prove, ascertain their vested interests using the gray area. Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis had the knowledge about the whole Cosmic law but never used any gray area for their vested interests; instead, revealed the truth as it is with such utter dedication to the truth.

When these mantras were uttered the very first time on planet Earth, the path for civilization was getting delivered, the unadulterated, undiluted purpose for civilization was getting delivered. The whole ambience was charged with peace, vibrant peace, vibrant silence, not the silence of the graveyard but the silence of Unclutching, silence of Completion. In the vibrant presence of Mahādeva, all the Ṛṣis were raised and vibrating in the same frequency of Mahādeva. They are not just enlightened, entangled with Mahādeva but in that entanglement, uttered these great verses.

Incompletions may be Factual but not Real

Understand the whole purpose is Completion. All your incompletions may look factual. Let your cognition function constantly based on the real. Let you think, act, decide, respond, react, based on the real. Your incompletions may be factual, but can never be real. You understanding "Completion is Completion is Completion" makes you recover quickly even from the so-called factual incompletions. Understand and cognize it is Completion in Completion in the space of Completion.

You have layers to your being. The mind you use for everyday activity – brushing, taking bath, eating - only that mind, that part of you gets confused or develops self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial. It is only skin deep. That is a Freudian mind – fraudulent mind. Freud could go only to that depth, not more than that.

If Freud could go a little deeper, the history of today's world will be different. The whole lifestyle of today's world would be different. Just below your vested interest plan, the vast and beautiful truth is vibrating continuously. One dip into the truth ocean relieves you from all the insecurity, fear and greed. Naturally, all your vested interests will melt down and you will just stand for the truth. It is that superficial mind which conspires.

Glorious Lifestyle of the Hindu Civilization

In the time of the ancient Hindu civilization, an average man worked only two to three hours a day. The society had four divisions: Brāhmaṇa – the teachers; Vaiśya – business community; Kṣatriya – rulers; Śūdra – working class. There was no higher and lower among these groups. All of them were doing different responsibilities. In all these four varṇas, there are four āśramas: Brahmacārya – students; Gṛhastha – married; Vānaprastha – retired; Sannyāsī – completely dedicated to teaching this Enlightenment science to the world, and to live, radiate this Enlightenment science to the world.

In these four varṇas and four āśramas, only the working class Gṛhasthas were working. In the eight groups, only among the Gṛhasthas, the Śūdras were working. The two teams like Vaiśya and Kṣatriya were only selling and administering. So, almost like eighty percent of the society was just relaxing. The number of Śūdras was not that big. Among the four varṇas, only one varṇa was working. Among the four āśramas, only one Gṛhastha āśrama was working. They had to support all the other three āśramas. Among the four varṇas, only Śūdras were working. All the other three were not working and they were a rich society too.

Modern day history is a complete lie by saying, 'There was a stone age. Then in the metal age, it was like brass, bronze, iron.' No. In the metal age, it was straight gold in Hindu civilization. Working on the gold started much ahead of working on brass, bronze, silver and other metals.

In those days people had transport which was capable of going between the planets, not just country to country (deśa to deśa) but planet to planet (graha to graha). Our business class and rulers were great people. One corporate capitalist was saying recently, "Water should not be natural water which is freely available to human beings. In the next ten years, it should be made as a commodity." Please understand the basic conspiracy plans.

In the Hindu civilization, even food was not a commodity. Today, we are in a transition period where water is freely available and available for payment also. So we understand water cannot become a paid commodity. But after ten years, our next generation will not even remember there was a time water was free, drinking water was free. We may be the last generation who drank free water and grew up!

The Hindu civilization was the last generation who were having free food and growing them. Food, medical care, water, everything was free. Now more of us are working, more of us are shedding our blood, sweat and more population. Then what is happening? The number of greedy people and the science of keeping people superficial has become successful. That is why even though you know after five days you are not going to use it, you go on buying electronic gadgets. Each house has huge electronic wastage where gadgets were used maybe once or not even once.

The first thing we need to do is not revolution. It is putting the common people first instead of our businessmen and our rulers. We need to awaken our businessmen and rulers by helping them to see the deeper parts of themselves from the superficial skin level of their mind, help them to get into their own inner space, give them a dip in that pure consciousness. Simply they will understand their fear and greed which decides for billions of people on the planet Earth is completely false. It may look factual but not real.

One king's fear that the other king may kill him, makes him generate a huge army to kill, and sacrifices so many lives in the concept of nation. The concept of deśa has nothing to do with the concept of nation. The fear of the king to protect himself, he claims that he is a protector of tons of people, and in that he makes thousands to sacrifice their lives to protect himself. One king's greed to expand his kingdom goes and kills thousands of lives. All he needs is neither sacrificing thousands of his people's lives, nor killing thousands of other country's soldiers; he just needs one Inner Awakening. He needs to dive into his depth and understand his fear and greed may be factual but not real.

Whenever you see incompletions in your life, if you understand they may be factual but not real, you will reinvent yourself. Let's say a person gets back pain. If he thinks it is real and the incompletion is real, he can literally just collapse. Ordinary back pain has collapsed so many people. They lost confidence on themselves, "O, if this continues, how will I go to my office? If I don't go to the office, how will I make money? If I don't make money, will my wife stay with me, will my son stay with me? How will I educate my daughter? My life has collapsed." Ordinary back pain has collapsed millions of people.

When you think it is a real incompletion, you are gone. If you understand it may be factual but not real, you will approach the back pain with clarity. "This incompletion is imaginary." That same back pain can help and support you to reinvent yourself. "What is the reason for the back pain? Is it my sitting posture or my way of perceiving me or my thinking about myself? What is it? Let's look in." It can lead to reinventing yourself. Ordinary back pain can even make you enlightened or can just collapse you. Both can happen just by ordinary back pain.

A simple fight between a husband and wife — if you think about it, it may be factual but not real. When you look in and ask, "What can be done to go beyond this?", you can reinvent yourself. Or you may decide, "No, this fight is never going to end. Divorce is the solution."

But pause for a moment. A simple verbal exchange — it may not even be a fight, just a few strong words. Even the words may not carry the wrong meaning; only the tone may be a little loud. It is not a "meaning problem," it is a decibel problem.

If you look in and say, "Hey, this is factual but not real," then that incompletion itself can help you reinvent yourself. Recognize: it is a decibel discrepancy problem, not a meaning problem.

But if you decide, "No, I cannot stand this torture. This is going on forever! From birth, my father shouted at me. Since the time I got married, my husband has been shouting at me. Later, even my son started shouting at me. My whole life is just listening to shouting! I can't take it anymore. I am calling it off." — then you are mixing up layers. How can your husband be responsible for your father shouting at you?

Is there no way of logically analyzing the logic? Can we not have a basic logical system to analyze the logic logically?

Whether it is a small headache or a decibel discrepancy problem, or even something as serious as cancer — whatever may be the problem — it may look factual, but it is not ultimately real.

The only thing you need in your whole life is the stamina to stand up till you see victory, nothing else. Your victory is guaranteed. The real problem is your fear about failure making you powerless, nothing else. Your victory is guaranteed. Just you need to know these incompletions may look factual, but they are not real.

We may wonder, "Why is Mahādeva, Nīlakaṇṭha having poison in his throat? After all, it did not affect him, it did not go inside, can't He just throw it out? Why is He keeping it in his throat continuously?" Understand the secret. All medicines are poisonous. That is why in the Siddha tradition, we have a word "Pāṣāṇa" which means medicine and poison. For both, the word is Pāṣāṇa. Hālahāla: the ultimate poison is the ultimate medicine for all diseases. He keeps that in His throat. Just by the words which come from the throat, or breathing air which comes from the throat, it heals everyone.

When it is with Mahādeva, it is no more the poison- Pāṣāṇa, it is medicine- Pāṣāṇa. In the hands of murderers, even medicine becomes poison. In the hands of Mahādeva, even poison becomes medicine. He did not want to spit it out because these fools will gather and use it as poison. He feels, "Better be there, so that it will be used as medicine only." The safest locker to keep the poison is in His throat. So, He keeps it there and makes sure nobody misuses it. It is always used for the good of society, humanity. Nīlakaṇṭha, Mahādeva, keeps the poison just to use as medicine.

Deśa Vs Nation

What is the difference between deśa and nation? The very concept of deśa is from the truth of Hindu tradition.

अन्नम् बहु कुर्वीत

annam bahu kurvīta means, let us produce food in large quantities. Producing not just food, everything in large quantities and making it available to everyone as easily as possible is deśa

In the original Hindu civilization, the concept of deśa is to produce as much as you can and exchange it. It was not that in Hindu civilization we did not have business. We had. But there was never a low value for shoes, high value for knowledge. It is the modern civilization that is really caste-oriented. The moment you put low value for shoes, high value for food or knowledge, you already made a difference between Brāhmaṇa and Śūdra. There was no valuation between shoes and knowledge. The man who produces shoes, produces in large quantities and makes it available to his community. The man who gives knowledge makes it available for everyone.

Don't ever spread the lie that Śūdras were not allowed and did not have access to education. Droṇa says very clearly to Karṇa, "Karṇa, there are a lot of schools which teach for every community. I am not able to teach for every community because I have decided to choose a few people and make them masterpieces. So I am working with the king's family." Karṇa was not denied education because he was a Śūdra. And Paraśurāma says very clearly, before even cursing Karṇa, "Hey, if you have told me you are not a Brāhmaṇa, you are a Kṣatriya or a Śūdra, I would have directed you to the Gurus who are of my same caliber. I took a vow that I will teach only Brāhmaṇas. So for my integrity you have become an obstruction. You disturbed my integrity." That is why he was angry.

The valuation of the products produced by the community started the difference. A teacher always has a right to work with selected few disciples to produce masterpieces.

Upaniṣads themselves have so many references where a child of a court dancer was given education. A child goes to the Ṛṣi. The Ṛṣi asks, "My son, what is your father's name and your gotra, your family tradition? So based on that I will start your education." The kid says, "I don't know the name. I will run and get back to you." He runs to his mother and asks the mother. Mother says, "Please tell your Guru I am a court dancer. So I have relationships with multiple men. So, I do not know to whom you were born. I don't know your father's name. Please go and tell this to your Master." The kid comes back and tells Master, "My mother told me she is a court dancer. She has relationships with multiple men and she does not know who fathered me." Immediately, the Master hugs that child and says, "You are so truthful. Your integrity proves you are of the highest order. Please come and join." And during the Vidyārambha (the initiation into education), you are supposed to chant your father's name. The Ṛṣi says, "You chant your mother's name." He becomes Satyakāma Jābāla. Understand, the Ṛṣi says, "You chant your mother's name." Mother's name can be used as an initial is not something new. It is as old as Hindu tradition.

Never education was denied based on community. And we had a great system of specialization, because we need to make everything available to the whole community. We were functioning on mass production for which the specialization skill was needed. That is the reason a son would do the same profession as his father so that the specialization happens. Updating and specialization happens when you spend more and more years on that particular responsibility and skill.

If you see the lifestyle in villages, when the harvesting happens, the temple priest would get one share, the village barber would get one share, the village doctor would get one share, and the village house cleaner would get one share. The temple priest, house cleaner, all of them get the same share. It is a myth spread amongst us that the Brahmins get more. They were given only the share based on the harvesting. So after the harvesting, outside the house, that old lady would sit with that sixteen share, sixteen measurements. All sixteen people would come and collect their share and go. Mass production and sharing was deśa.

This Bhārata deśa was so beautifully divided into small units economically and connected as one deśa ideologically. The mantra chanted in Rāmeśvaram, the mantra chanted in Kedārnāth would be the same. The visualization done in Rāmeśvaram, the visualization done in Kedārnāth is the same. The visualization done in Gaṅgāsāgar and visualization done in Somnāth Temple is the same. So, it is ideologically centred and economically independent. It was such a powerful, beautiful, unimaginable, inimitable system. When you value the product of a teacher higher than the product of the Śūdra, you create community difference. It was not that there was no time that degradation happened. There was a time when little dilution and degradation happened. Those fault lines are used too much by the anti-Hindu forces to destroy our whole civilization.

Varṇāśrama-dharma of Hindu tradition

In which society are there no higher and lower divisions? Get into the aircraft, walk through the business class and economy class. How do the business class people look at you? In the modern day city also, in all apartment complexes there will be A class, B class, C class – like one bedroom-hall-kitchen, two bedroom-hall-kitchen, three bedroom-hall-kitchen. Just see how the 3 bedroom-hall-kitchen people relate with 1 bedroom-hall-kitchen people, then you will know. Human beings are social animals. They will have differences of higher and lower.

The best possible way it can be maintained is through the Varṇāśrama-dharma of Hindu tradition.

All the good things we still have remaining, Hindu civilization is responsible. There was little dilution in Varṇāśrama-dharma, no doubt. But that does not mean that it needs to be replaced or that it needs to be thrown out. This is the best system to keep the differences minimum.

The division was always based on your integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enrichment, not based on the money you swindle and hide under your bed or possess. We are neither money-centric nor power-centric or confusion-centric. The Hindu civilization is knowledge-centric, Enlightenment-centric, conscious-centric civilization. It is a consciousness-centric civilization.

The Brahmins, priests, teachers shared whatever they had. The agriculturists shared whatever they had. The carpenters shared whatever they had. Whether you shave your head once, twice, or even five times a year, or whether someone in your house shaves only once a year, it doesn't matter. If you own land, you still give the barber his share. That was the beauty of the lifestyle. The barber was not just a barber — he was also the musician. The teacher was not just a teacher — usually he was also the temple priest, the local doctor or healer, and often even the astrologer.

The idea of poverty, the idea of richness inserted into our brain now in the modern day is completely wrong. When you bring Completion into your being, you will see the right idea of wealth, right idea of richness, right idea of health, right idea of peace, right idea of devotion, right idea of joy, right idea of pleasure, right idea of Enlightenment. Having the right cognition about all this is Living Advaita.

We just need more and more leaders who are soaked in the consciousness of Completion without fear and greed, who are able to take decisions without fear and greed, who are soaked in the space of Completion. One person who is soaked in the space of Completion can create such a beautiful community around him.

Hindu civilization is not based on ruling, it is based on administering. Produce more and share more. Everyone is involved in everyone's life. I have seen a person who cleans the toilets, when he comes to take his share, and the temple priest when he comes to take his share – they will be sitting and chatting. The Brahmin temple priest would be sitting and chatting with the toilet cleaner and his family. The toilet cleaners will show their hands to have some astrological predictions or palmistry readings. And this priest will nicely hold the hand and look into the hand with the big lens and read the lines and advice based on his palm lines. Both of them get the same share.

Our biggest problem now is nothing to do with poverty; straight we need to bring more and more Completion. We already have a large quantity of whatever we need. We just need to make sure it is available for everyone. Planet Earth has more resources than the number of human beings living on it. It is those few people holding, controlling and not making it available. Nature is so powerful and beautiful; it knows how many human beings it is producing and it can simply create, produce whatever it wants to support human beings.

Just if the non-vegetarian lifestyle is given up, that is enough. The whole world will have food. The amount of land required for a vegetarian person and non-vegetarian person is so different. A non-vegetarian person requires thirty times more land for his food, because thirty pounds of rice or agricultural products which we can directly consume needs to be spent to get one pound of flesh. Thirty pounds of vegetarian food which we can directly consume needs to be spent to get one pound of flesh.

The Hindu civilization was pure vegetarian. They were not a non-vegetarian civilization. There were few animal sacrifices in few rituals but that is like one whole year, maybe some hundred animals will be sacrificed. Now every year, billions of animals are killed for food.

Space of Completion Changes Our Thinking and Perception

This one truth of Completion can completely change the way we think and perceive.

पूर्णमदः पूर्णमिदम् पूर्णात् पूर्णमुदच्यते |
पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ||
pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidam pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate |
pūrṇasya pūrṇamādāya pūrṇamevāvaśiṣyate ||

Human society has to get back to Completion naturally. Naturally, we are evolving towards Completion. We are coming from Completion, going towards Completion. Incompletion is in-between imagination; it is factual, not real.

Śivaliṅga is the visual representation of Completion. Our whole civilization is centred on that Śivaliṅga. Our business is based on temples. Our entertainment is temple-based entertainment. Our administration is based on temples. Whether you are born or dead, you will be taken to the temple only. If you are dead, you will be taken around the temple. If you are born, you will be taken into the temple. That's all.

Reviving temple-based civilization is reviving Hindu civilization.

Education rooted in the temple, arts blossoming from the temple, science inspired by the temple, even our very style of thinking shaped by the temple. Social gatherings, celebrations, festivals, even our ways of rejoicing — all centered around the temple.

To revive temple-based civilization is to revive the Hindu civilization. To revive the Hindu civilization is to revive the civilization of Pūrṇatva - Completion. That is the purpose of our life. That is the sacred goal of our existence. Let us revive, revive, revive.

Grading based on the community should be stopped. Differences based on community should not be allowed. The community system itself should not be destroyed. It is one of the oldest, strongest social fabrics which is keeping our civilization alive for the last thousands of years.

Deśa is all about producing in mass and sharing it with the world. When the decision makers who are in business or ruling are caught in fear and greed, then it is all going to be about possessing and controlling.

Wealth handled with incompletion will lead to possessiveness. Power handled with incompletion will become controlling. A powerless man, when he is given power, he will only be controlling. A poor man, when he is given wealth, he will only be possessing. Poor man does not even know how to live with wealth. He will just make a big iron godown, thick wall iron godown, put everything inside, lock it, sleep on it and die. That's all!

Is this the purpose of wealth? Whole life he spends worrying. "Will anybody know what I am keeping under my bed? Will anybody steal it?" A poverty-conscious man, even if he stumbles upon wealth, he can't live it. A poor man, an incomplete man, even if he sees wealth, he is not going to enjoy it or live it. He may possess it but he will not live it.

Same way a powerless man, frightened and fear-based person if he is given power, he will only be controlling it; he will not be expanding it. A person who is established in the space of Completion, even if he does not have wealth, knows how to create wealth and live it. A person who is in Completion, even with the small powers which are available to him, knows how to enrich people with power.

Life has No Hypocrisy

Constantly empower yourself. Have power and go on empowering people with power. In whichever field you empower people, you will become more and more powerful.

Only by producing more musicians will you become a great musician. Only by producing more dancers will you become a great dancer. Only by producing more doctors will you become a great doctor. Only by producing richer people will you become a richer person. Only by producing more leaders will you be a great leader. Only by producing more enlightened beings will you become an incarnation.

Empowering can happen only if you feel powerful and complete inside. If you feel incomplete, empowering does not happen.

Life has no hypocrisy.

Meditate on it: Life has no hypocrisy. It means when you are authentic in empowering people, you will become more powerful.

When you are authentically enriching people, you will be more enriched. "No, no, no, I believe in all these but practically I know if I make him big, he will become big and I'll be small." This hypocrisy will only make you smaller and smaller.

Life responds in an authentic way. Life has no hypocrisy. Decide, "Throughout my life, I was, I am, I will always be authentically enriching, empowering people continuously."

In whatever field you may choose, whatever good things you may have, it can be as simple as one handful of rice to as much as the knowledge about different fields, whatever you may have – empowering, enriching makes you more and more enriched and empowered.

If you are a businessman, support as many people as possible to become businessmen. You will become a great businessman. If you are a musician, support as many people as possible to become a musician, you will become a great musician. Any field, only a Completion-based person will feel empowering others and enriching others enriches himself and empowers himself. An incompletion-based person will continuously possess. Life has no hypocrisy.

If you possess out of greed, you will neither own nor live. If you control out of fear, you will neither have power nor have the people whom you are controlling under you. And if you share out of richness, you will have more and more. If you empower out of powerfulness, you will have more and more powers.

Life has no hypocrisy. People who are sincere, honest, standing up for empowerment and enriching powerfully are showered so much. Those people who try to possess, internally they deeply feel that insecurity, poverty, powerlessness and incompletion. How much ever they try to act externally, the hypocrisy is clearly studied by life. Life responds to them exactly as they are.

In every level of thinking, let this one truth be the core truth of your being, your core cognition from which you are constantly making decisions. For a woman, the core cognition will be, "I am a woman. I need to protect myself." Even by hypnotizing, mesmerizing, you can't take away that part.

Those people who write mesmerism, hypnotism books, who teach all these things, they write that even if you hypnotize or mesmerize some women by putting a hot charcoal in their hand and say it is cold, hands won't get burnt, even in that state, if you touch their clothes, they will wake up, come out of the hypnotized state or mesmerized state and they will protect themselves. No one can be mesmerized, hypnotized and used.

For a woman, "I am the woman" is the core cognition. For a man, "I am not enough" is the core cognition. For a woman, it will always be, "I have to protect myself. I am a woman." That fear is the core cognition. For a man, "I am not enough." Greed will be the core cognition.

Replace both with the cognition of Completion. "Hey, I cannot be violated. Anything which can be violated is not me!" For man, "I am enough unto myself. Nothing can be added to me. If anything can be added, it can be taken away." If something can be added to you today, tomorrow it can be taken away.

If something is not true today, how can it become true tomorrow? That is why in Sanskrit, we have a beautiful word "upādhi." It has two meanings – title and disease. Title and disease – both use the word "upādhi." All these titles and diseases, both are one and the same.

Reality Based Life

It is verily practical for you to practice in your life every day. Your external conditions do not matter for you to be established in the cognition of Completion. You can be as simple as a village buttermilk seller, an old elderly woman. That doesn't matter. You can be established in the space of Completion.

Let the cognition of Completion penetrate your every decision and action. When existence teaches all of us how to live, the first verse is: Completion is Completion. This is Completion, that is Completion. From Completion, this and that happens. Whether this becomes that or that becomes this, it is only Completion moving into Completion, and Completion becomes Completion. Whether this becomes that or that becomes this, Completion moves into Completion.

Sit and do the Completion process, technique, suddenly you will see incompletion disappear. Anything which can disappear, how can you say it existed earlier? Something is not going to be there tomorrow, how can you say it is there today? This stone may not exist in the same form tomorrow, means this may be factual but not real.

Today, if you take this stone and throw it at somebody's head, they will be hurt. But it is not real because tomorrow it may or may not exist in the same form. If something which cannot exist tomorrow, it is not real even today.

Your whole life, you are centering it on factual; that is why so much suffering. Center it on real. A person who centers his cognition on real lives a non-serious life. Non-serious life is celebration.

நாம் ஆர்க்கும் கூடியல்லனோம், நமனை அஞ்சோம், ஏமாறோம் இடர்ப்படோம்.

It is a word from Vageesha Munivar, a great enlightened being (Thirunavukkarasar). We are not frightened even about so-called death. If your everyday thinking, everyday feeling is based more on the so-called fact, you will have more fear, more greed, more incompletion, more bondage, more suffering, more torture.

Food is required for living. But are you spending twenty four hours on food? If you are spending twenty four hours on food, that same food will kill you. Same way, facts are required for a simple, smooth running of life. But don't be obsessed with the fact-based life. Don't judge yourself, gauge yourself every day based on the bank balance you have. Food is required for living, but if you are too obsessed with it, that itself will kill you.

Facts are required for smooth flow of life, but if you are too obsessed with it, that itself will destroy you. Let your life be reality based. Let your biomemory and muscle memory be built on reality more and more.

Anything which was not there yesterday, cannot be there today. Anything which is not going to be there tomorrow, cannot be there today. Establish yourself beautifully in the space of Completion and reality. Let more and more of your biomemory and muscle memory become Completion based thinking, reality based thinking. It's not that you will not bother about fact, you will handle it intelligently. It's not that you won't eat, but food won't be able to eat you.

Now you are so obsessed with facts, it's not that you are using them, they are using you. If you are smoking one cigarette per day, you are smoking the cigarette. If it is a hundred cigarettes, cigarettes are smoking you.

If you are eating what is necessary for living, you are eating the food. If it is more than that, food is eating you! Same way, facts. It is required for smooth running. Like you need to know two plus two is four, so that when you receive the salary, you collect the exact amount and come back. Live your transactions based on those facts. But that itself cannot be the core of your cognition.

You have to learn how to drive to reach your office, but that itself is not enough for you to run your office. Driving is a basic lesson for you to reach your office, but to run your office, you need a different cognition. If you think, "Oh, driving itself is a big and great thing I learnt," then be a driver your whole life. That's all. You will never become a CEO. The fact-based cognitions, understandings, calculations are like learning to drive, but reality-based cognition is learning to live. Learn to live.

That grace which comes to you when you learn to live, the courage of Enlightenment, the beauty of Enlightenment, the grace of Enlightenment, even the kings will feel jealous of you. Celebrities will feel shy looking at your grace, and kings will feel jealous of the power you are radiating. Businessmen will feel guilty of the way you are living.

It is reality-based life, reality-based cognition. No one can torture you. All the people who try to torture you will finally torture themselves and disappear.

Karma comes back! Life functions with clear, straightforward, honest, authentic principles. It is intelligence. No way you can cheat life. Life has no hypocrisy. Life has no place for hypocrisy. Cognition: your inner thinking, feeling, decision-making, your cognition, if it functions based on reality, it is not that you will forget the facts, you will know the facts and you will be able to play with the facts. People will feel you are doing miracles but you are not doing miracles, you are just playing with the facts.

If you stand with the cognition of reality, neither somebody can honour you nor add something to you, nor somebody can dishonour you or take away something from you. The person who tries to honour you will be happy more and more. The person who tries to dishonour you will fall into depression and suffer more and more. The person who tries to honour you, gets that same honour back because you can't be honoured. The person who tries to dishonour you, gets back that same dishonour because you can't be dishonoured.

Like Mahādeva, He is sitting – you try to pour milk and sandal on him, it will only shower on you. You will only be enjoying that smell. And you try to put something else, then that will also be on you only. He is there - can neither be honoured nor be dishonoured.

Live in the cognition of reality. The cognition of reality: Completion was, Completion is, Completion will be. You are established in the space of Completion. Even when you imagine you have incompletion, your incompletions may be based on facts, but it is not based on reality. Fact is different, reality is different. Your incompletions may be based on fact, but can never be based on reality. The law of reality, the principle of reality, the dharma of reality is:

पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ||
pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidam pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate |
pūrṇasya pūrṇamādāya pūrṇamevāvaśiṣyate ||

Means, from the space of Completion only, Completion comes out. Even when Completion comes out, Completion remains as Completion. When the Completion goes back, Completion remains as Completion. Even when you think they are separate, both remain as Completion. It is always Completion in the space of Completion and Completion.

In the dream you see many things. You even run if a tiger chases you in the dream. It may be factual for the time being. It can't be real. Same way, even in the so-called waking state, when your dreams pull you and push you, your perceptions may be factual but not real. The perceptions getting established in the space of real, perceptions turning to real, is living Advaita. Make your perceptions real. Let your cognition be established in reality. The Śānti Mantra can give you eternal śānti just if you make it as your cognition.

Completion, this is Completion, that is Completion. If this is removed from that, both remains, continue as Completion. When the Completion merges into Completion, Completion alone remains. If the Completion is removed or perceived to be removed from Completion, again Completion alone remains as Completion.

Vivekānanda says, 'Forget about all you know as religion. Go back to Upaniṣads, the Source. Drink from the Source which will strengthen you.'

Context of Habits and Lifestyle

Many times, the ācāra (everyday practices) you observe get the status of religion, and sometimes the ācāra starts contradicting the main core truth of religion and you continue to practice the ācāra and leave the religion.

It is like they tell a story: In one mutt they had a cat. the cat used to jump around the Sannidhānam when he did pūjā. It will create a big ruckus. So, the Sannidhānam said, "Hey, first tie the cat before I start the pūjā, so that I don't have a disturbance." They tied the cat, and the Sannidhānam did the pūjā peacefully. On the second day, again they tied the cat and he did the pūjā. Third day, again they tied the cat and he did pūjā. After some time it became a habit. Before the Sannidhānam starts the pūjā, they tie the cat so that he can start the pūjā.

One fine day, the cat died and they didn't know what to do. Without the cat, how to start the pūjā? And they started searching around here and there for a cat. "Hey, we have to tie the cat. Only then the pūjā can start." Finally, that day the Sannidhānam didn't do the pūjā because the cat was not there!

Unfortunately, the ācāras get into the state of religion when the reason, context is lost in course of time. There are thousands of stories where ācāra becomes anuṣṭhāna (religion). Ācāra and anuṣṭhāna is a way of living religion only if you know the context of the ācāra and the anuṣṭhāna. Once in a while, you have to review all the ācāra and anuṣṭhāna you are doing.

Are you doing it from the right context? Based on what you can measure the scale, are you in the right context? How to align yourself to the right context? The scale to align you to the right context is Upaniṣads. Again and again and again, go back to the source – Upaniṣads. Upaniṣads will give you the clarity, setting the right context for the ācāra and anuṣṭhāna you are following and making you live the context in your everyday life.

Ācāra and anuṣṭhāna means habits and lifestyle, the everyday habits and lifestyle you are supposed to follow. Neither should you give up the ācāra and anuṣṭhāna, nor should you be without knowing the context. You should do it by knowing the context. People who give up, lose spiritual strength. People who don't know the context become superstitious.

If you give up ācāra and anuṣṭhāna, you will lose spiritual strength. If you don't know the context and continue to do so, you will become superstitious. So, those who don't know life and those who are living a superstitious life – for both, the greatest medicine is Upaniṣads.

It is like extracting the gold out of mud. They collect the gold ore, process it, boil it, acid wash it. Finally, the gold comes out. Did the gold come from out of nowhere? No. It came only from itself. But was the gold there in the beginning? No. It came only from itself. Exactly like the gold that comes from the gold ore, an enlightened being is there inside you. Only if it is there, can it come out. Otherwise, it can't come out.

Whatever needs to be added in you for you to become an enlightened being is Completion. Whatever needs to be removed from you is the idea you have incompletion. There is no incompletion itself. If something is there, it will continue to be there. From the gold ore, if all the dirt can be removed and gold finally remains, how can you say there was a time this dirt was part of the gold? Anything which can be removed, how can you say it was part of it?

You were insensitive to see both of them are separate in the beginning. Now, they have separated to the level you are able to sense, that's all. If the dirt is inside the gold, can it be separated? No. Because it was never inside, it can be separated. If the incompletions are part of your programming, it can never be separated. Because it is already out of you, it can be taken out. Now they are out of you, but not to the level you can sense it. Once they are out of you to the level you can sense it, you declare:

पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ||
pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidam pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate |
pūrṇasya pūrṇamādāya pūrṇamevāvaśiṣyate ||

Once you perceive you the way your Guru perceives you, you will declare you are an enlightened being. When the Guru see you again and again, he perceives you are separate, your incompletions are separate. That is why he attacks your incompletions. But you feel your incompletions are very much part of you and you feel the Guru is attacking you. What to do?

Your incompletions can never be part of you. If it is, it can never be separated. If it can be separated, it can never be part of you. Only gold can come out of gold. Anything else which comes out of gold was never part of gold.

In Hindu tradition, all the human possibilities are used to intranalyze and internalize the spiritual truths. One of the biggest possibilities of human beings is a deep in-depth analysis. When you do an in-depth analysis, beyond your logic your being opens up. That is why vādaprativāda, debates are a powerful method to intranalyze and internalize the Hindu truths.

By doing vādaprativāda with Buddhists, Śaṅkara established his ultimate Advaitic experience into the Buddhists. From Buddhism, more than ninety percent he digested and assimilated. So, at the end of the day the Buddhists and Śaṅkara, both were enriched. Similarly for Nāgārjuna. By doing debate with the disciples and followers of Śaṅkara, he established his ultimate experience. No doubt He picked up so many convincing points from the Hindu tradition. In debate, ultimately nobody wins, nobody loses; both get enriched.

Fullness, Completion, comes from Completion, continues to remain as Completion. From which it came, and which came out, both continue to remain as Completion. When it goes back, Completion remains as Completion. If this is the case, can Completion come out of Completion? If it is not, then why do we perceive incompletion? This is the question for debate. When you debate, you will intranalyze, you will understand, you will look in, you will see the possibilities.

Debating with the right person is a joy. That is why Vyāsa comes down to taste debating with Śaṅkara. It goes on and on and on till one disciple understands who is debating with whom, falls at the feet of both and chants:

शन्करम् शन्कराचार्यम् केशवम् बादरायणम् ।
śankaram śankarācāryam keśavam bādarāyaṇam ।

Śaṅkara, Mahādeva, is sitting here as Śaṅkarācārya. Keśava, Viṣṇu, is sitting here as Bādarāyaṇa. How is the debate going to end? Who is going to win? Who can lose? Then, both of them reveal their identity to each other and end the debate.

Again and again and again, the truth needs to be relived, remembered, rejoiced, radiated. The truth needs to be relived, remembered, rejoiced, radiated. Remember, relive, rejoice, radiate.

सूत्रभाष्यकृतौ वन्दे भगवन्तौ पुनह् पुनः ॥
śankaram śankarācāryam keśavam bādarāyaṇam
sūtrabhāṣyakṛtau vande bhagavantau punah punaḥ

One does the Sūtra, one does the Bhāṣya. End of the day, this question: Can Completion come out of Completion? Is there anything called incompletion? If it is not there, why are we perceiving it? And what is the truth about the Completion coming out of Completion? All these questions do not have an answer. When you dig, dig, dig, dig, dig these questions, you will only have experience.

Have you seen the psychiatric drugs and other drugs advertisements in your TV channels? There will be some twenty-five diagnostic lines: "If you have mild laziness and little tiredness associated with or without your back pain and knee pain, and if you have a small, slight headache at the age of forty-five, or before and after if you have a little bone weakness and bone pain before sixty five or after sixty five or around sixty five, please consult your doctor. You may be heading towards osteoporosis." If you see this advertisement, who do you think will be very sure that they don't have it, or they are approaching osteoporosis?!

How the fuzzy diagnostic methods are taught to you, for you to believe you have a disease so that you can come to the doctor for medicine and you can be exploited. Society has taught you the fuzzy diagnostic method to make you believe you have incompletions, so that you can be divided into pieces and exploited.

So please listen, the straightforward and single line answer. Do you know your incompletions are separate from you and you can end it? Then, stop with it. Stop with it. This is straightforward. "I have knee pain. Let me get the herb or the oil and apply it on the knee pain." Straightforward, over.

But now unfortunately, when you are having knee pain, you are seeing that advertisement. "A middle aged lady, unable to walk slowly..." and the lines goes on, "If you have a knee pain before forty five or after forty five or around forty five and you have a little tiredness, laziness, unsaid restlessness in the evening or before evening or around the time you go to the bed; if you have the craving and feel like eating and drinking whenever you find time; you are not able to control or you think you are not able to control, please approach your family doctor. You may be heading towards osteoporosis." If you see this advertisement, what will you do? You will go and buy the drug or go to the doctor.

And your friends, family and relatives, who don't want to see you happy, have a vested interest in keeping you in low profile. So, why do you want to accept their fuzzy diagnostic methods, diagnose and confirm that you have incompletion so that they can exploit you with their medications? Each one will give you a solution for incompletion. Your uncle, the moment he makes you feel you are incomplete, he will tell, "Serve me and take care of me. I will stand by you and protect you from all incompletions." The next guy, he will come and tell you, "Marry me and live with me. I will protect you from all incompletion." Husband is a person who stands by you during all the troubles, trials and problems of life which will not be there if he is not there in your life! Every person who gives you the fuzzy diagnostic method and convinces you that you have incompletions, has something to gain by you believing you have incompletions. The truth is you do not have any incompletions.

Basics of Life should be Non-Profit

Before explaining a book, we have to explain what it stands for. Before explaining what it stands for, we have to explain who made it stand for that. Before explaining who made it stand for that, we have to explain who wrote it. That is where now the whole thing starts.

How can we tell the modern world that something exists, there is a book which has no author? Profound, extraordinary expressions, truths, realizations, revelations, but no author! Author is dissolved in the authenticity of the truths. Whenever a book is written, the truth and the personality who presents the truth, both of them are expressed in that book. That is why all books are biographies of the author. Whether it is science, history, religion, philosophy, self-development or whatever classification you may give – all the books, you basically have to classify as biography because there is no book which does not have the smell, presence and touch of the author. In the libraries, we should first classify all books as biographies. Under the section biography, you can classify as biography based on religion, science based on religion, mysticism based on religion, self-help based on religion. The more the personal involvement, the more it becomes fiction.

In a science book, the more the scientist is present, the less the science is present. In a philosophy book, the more the philosopher is present, the less the philosophy is present. In a history book, the more the historian is present, the less the fact and truth of the history is present. When historians have personal interests, likes, dislikes, history can never be presented to you authentically. In any book, the more the author is present, less truth is presented. More his personal touch, less the reality.

That is why all pharmaceutical companies should be non-profit organizations. Having medical care under the profit industry is the most dangerous. Share Trading, Forex Trading, Currency Trading – all these can be kept under the for profit-people. The for-profit mentality is madness the world is suffering from.

Currency is a delusion. Share is a delusion. So, let the mad people live with delusions. But health is a reality. Let it not go under the hands of mad people. Greed is a legal madness, legally accepted madness. Currency, Share Trading – all these are the delusions of the human mind which were developed by collective greed.

The mad people who are deluded by the collective greed, let them play with delusions, collective delusions. No problem. But food, clothes, shelter, medical care, the basic needs of human beings should be kept out of the for-profit industry, the for-profit madness, for-profit world.

There is so much reinvention of Āyurvedic principles within allopathy. Some of the vital components have been missed. That is one matter. Some of the vital components allopathy has not yet caught up with — that too is another matter. But the important truth is this: the allopathic system itself was not originally created out of exploitation or cunningness. Yet, over time, so many important components of life have been caught under the legally accepted madness of greed.

Actually, we don't need any more wealth to align the world. We just need more intention to align the world, and we will have new humanity immediately. Just these few things, the basic needs, things of human life – food, clothes, shelter, medical care - let them be free from the poisons of the human mind, greed and fear. Let nobody's fear and greed exploit these.

In the Western countries, especially the United States of America, the greatest thing is that the majority of the hospitals are non-profit organizations. But the pharmaceutical industry is not non-profit. In India, it is the other way. Majority of the hospitals are for-profit entities. But many of the medicines are available at a lower price.

The basic things of life should be kept out of the human mind's madness. In the Hindu Tradition, the Upaniṣadic period, the pharmaceutical industry and the hospitals – both were under the non-profit sector. Anywhere a person or a human mind intervenes, the truth is either diluted or killed. In the Hindu Tradition, knowledge was always non-profit. And, there was insistence of knowledge being non-profit, Guru begging and feeding the disciples.

Knowledge in the non-profit sector kept the purity of knowledge. Fear is neither socially nor legally accepted madness of humanity. But unfortunately, greed has become a legalized madness of humanity. Weapons, army should be for-profit industry and be heavily taxed. Entertainment should be a for-profit industry and heavily loaded with tax.

But food, clothes, shelter, medicine, the basic things should be non-profit. That is the only way we can keep human beings safe on the planet Earth. Food should not become a for-profit industry. The spirit of annadān, sharing food should be kept alive on a large scale.

Sikhism as a religion kept and is still keeping the Hindu spirit of sharing food. Just that one spirit is still responsible for why we have not fallen prey to a single for-profit entity in the field of food. In many developed countries, the whole country is dependent on few of the for-profit companies for their whole food and food supply. Hats off to the Sikhs, Jains and Lingayats of Karnataka! By doing anna dasoha, Lingayats in Karnataka kept that tradition of food is free. We need to live this truth – food is free – to revive the Hindu Tradition. Food industry should not go under any for-profit or even non-profit; it should be freely available.

In the Upaniṣadic periods, we were very clear what should be non-profit, what should be for-profit, what should be heavily taxed, what should be freely available. Food should be freely available. It should not come under the for-profit industry, because all the best things should not be influenced by the greed and fear of human beings.

History should be kept out of the minds of the vested interests. Any psychological fear or greed makes the history written by the person for-profit industry. There are many historians who belong to the for-profit industry. There are few who belong to the non-profit industry.

First, the for-profit historians and non-profit historians should be segregated and separated. People who have specific fear and greed, vested interests in some ideas, ideologies are called for-profit historians. Unfortunately, society does not recognize the psychological fears, greed and vested interests.

Physically when somebody is greedy and makes billions of dollars, you recognize it. Certain kind of anger gets built towards them. The "have-nots" always have deep anger towards these "haves." That is why all the mass media, the so-called mainstream media is always against the "haves" because the consumer of the mass media is "have-nots." They are catering to their consumers and clients with the understanding of the hatred "have-nots" built towards "haves." The "have-nots" have started developing a kind of anger towards those who have. But unfortunately, these psychological greedy guys who have vested interests, fear or greed towards some ideology or a person, their sickness, and the damage they caused to the consciousness of humanity is not at all recognized by the society.

If any society wants to live in peace and create a heaven, the Satyaloka of the Upaniṣadic periods, that society should understand the way you perceive you. The way you are taught about you is from history, and the people who write your history should be free from psychological fears, greed and vested interests.

If you are reading the history written by the people with vested interests and based on that information, the way it is presented to you, if you create an idea about you - you are dead! You will be suffering with the same problems the historian is suffering from. The same fears and greed he has will be transmitted to you.

How careful you are when you eat your food because it is going to become part of your life, that careful you should be when you eat the ideas through reading books and receiving information. Your education should be completely free from the for-profit, and be completely free. Knowledge is free. That is why the Upaniṣads are now available to you freely.

The pharmaceutical industry, if you allow that fear and greed of the individual, the whole world will be sick, consuming pills every day. That is what has happened to humanity. In any field, if you allow the fear and greed of the individuals to make that decision, you are doomed in that field.

Gold has a value is a delusion. Diamond has a value is a delusion. Currency has a value is a delusion. Let the mad people live with the delusion! Don't let them play with the reality which is our food, our medicine. Do you want to make money? Do you want to feel rich? No problem. Work with gold. Work with diamonds. Work with Share Trading. Work with Share Market. Work with currency. Keep them all in huge buildings under lock and key and feel that you are the owner of that. Feel proud about it. We are happy you will be with them; they will be with you.

Let the human madness of fear and greed not affect a large part of humanity's everyday life. Same way in history, if the individual's fear and greed is allowed to work, that exact fear and greed will be transmitted constantly from generation to generation. The one and only way to purify humanity and revive the Upaniṣadic civilization is, history should be written by people who have pure vision.

The vision influenced by fear and greed is one type. Pure vision is totally different. Vision influenced by people with fear and greed distorts even while they are seeing what they are seeing. Even while they are seeing what they are seeing, it is distorted by them through their own fear and greed. If they pen it down and you start imbibing that in your life, noone can save you. You will be imbibing the same fear and greed patterns in your life.

Fear and greed in food and medicine makes your body impure. Fear and greed in the history and concepts you get makes your psychology impure. Fear and greed in religious and spiritual ideas makes your consciousness bound. Religion and spirituality should completely be kept out of any physical, material and psychological vested interests. Because, if any material and psychological vested interests involve themselves with the religious concepts and spiritual principles, that is the worst crime against humanity.

The Upaniṣadic tradition is where the complete purity of religious and spiritual principles is maintained. Be blessed and feel blessed that we are all following a tradition which has kept the highest purity, which has kept itself so pure without any material or psychological vested interests in our spiritual principles. No Upaniṣadic Ṛṣi was a servant of somebody or boss of somebody. They did not have a vested interest or ideology to maintain, needed to be maintained or an organization which needed to be kept alive forever. They do not have an organization-based religious structure.

That kept us pure without any psychological, material, materialistic vested interests of fear and greed. The purity of any product will be reduced, if the influence of an individual gets into it, whether it is pharmaceutical medicines, prescribed drugs or history written by human beings. More influence from the individual, the less it is truthful and useful to humanity.

All scientific books, history books and fiction books are biographies. All the books should first be classified as a biography. Then under the biography, there can be subclassifications, subdivisions – history, geography, science, whatever you want. As of now, the way of humanity is so person-based, individualistic and power centric.

The Authorless Upaniṣads

Upaniṣads are Apauruṣeyā - not created by any person, not written by any person. Upaniṣads, by its very introduction, the first line – they are mystical. When you introduce yourself to anybody, just by your name, your parents and your background– ninety five percent of the introduction is over. Only the remaining five percent is going to be decided based on your actions. Similarly, the Upaniṣads just by this one word 'apauruṣeyā (authorless),' introduce themselves to all of us as authorless, because it is not touched by any vested interests.

The vested interests have different levels. First, material level – money and related things. Second, the psychological level – trying to influence people as you want, so that you will be the leader. Then next, the collective psychological level – trying to keep certain ideology up and alive for generations, or trying to influence humanity through certain ideology and keeping them under control.

Upaniṣads are free from all these levels of corruption. Neither bottom level nor middle level or high level. The corruption-free book in the whole Universe is Upaniṣads. Corruption-free book and corruption-free knowledge source is Upaniṣads. No individual is involved. No individual is glorified. No individual's vested interest exists.

It is authorless (apauruṣeyā), aprameya, achintya, anirvacanīya. The names of the people who penned down did not get recorded because it is not in their thoughts. There is no influence on the thoughts revealed in the book. There is no influence of Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis on the great truths revealed in the book. That is why it is apauruṣeyā.

The information broadcast industry, information feeding industry should be out of any for-profit vested interests, especially ideological fear and ideological greed. It should be out of ideological fear-greed industry. If somebody is greedy and he handles only money and gold, he will not harm the society. Let him live with his private madness, in his separate world. Let him add as many zeroes as he wants in his bank balance in the electronic screen of the computer. Let him go on declaring, "Today the gold rate is billion dollars for each gram." No problem. Because that is not going to affect humanity directly. None of us is going to die if we don't wear gold jewellery. So all the things which do not affect humanity directly, let it be with the for-profit people, the legally accepted madness of greed. But purity of the history, information broadcasting, religion and spiritual ideas should not be allowed to be contaminated by the vested interests with certain fear or greed towards certain principles or ideas.

The first verse of the Brahma Sūtras starts with:

athātho brahma jiñāsā

Now let us inquire into the reality.

No vested interests, no presumptions, no theories, not even a presumption "In God we trust." After the study of the Brahma Sūtras, a disciple can choose to be an atheist or theist. Such a vast possibility! Knowledge should be from the source of possibility. Knowledge should be from the source of freedom. What an inner space of no vested interests even towards some ideologies, some ideas! That is why they were so alive even to update themselves. They are alive to reinvent themselves.

Apauruṣeyā: no spiritual tradition had the courage to establish themselves on apauruṣeyā! No author, no founder, no coordinator, no convenor. We are from a religion which has no founder. We are from a religion which has no author. We are from the tradition which is completely freedom-based. What a purity of an ideology! What a level of purity is maintained when the truths are presented! What a brilliance!

The Upaniṣads are from the ultimate civilized and most sophisticated brains. If at all our civilization reaches maturity in the future or in a few thousand years – the religion, history, information broadcast – all the three will become purely non-profit and uninfluenced by the individual's fear, greed and ideologies. The system of a religious organization should be banned to keep the purity of the ideas being taught. When the organizational priorities come into consideration and existence, the truths are compromised.

Retaining the purity of those teachings without the interference of our fear and greed is the only way we can offer our gratitude to those great beings for their purity, their sacrifice and their dedication. Ṛṣis retained the purity of the truth, because that is the best way to exist, best way to breathe, best way to eat, best way to clothe, best way to entertain, best way to enjoy the pleasures and joys of life, best way to think, best way to feed in the source of pure truth.

Introduction to Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad

The first verse:

ईशावास्यमिदꣳ सर्वं यत्किञ्च जगत्यां जगत् ।

īśāvāsyamidagṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।

The translation: By the consciousness enveloped must this all be, whatever moving thing there is in the moving world.

Īśā! Understand this word. This word means consciousness which has all the auspicious qualities, which is causal. It is the actual source of everything which we may know or may not know. It is not only the source, it permeates. Īśā is not just the source of these plants, stones, you, me; it continues to permeate, fill all of us and everything, even when we are in this form. The consciousness is not just the source, it is the base. It is not just the base material, it continues to be the base which keeps the material together in this shape.

The word 'vāsyam' means must. Must! There is no maybe, might be, can be, could be. No! It is a declaration. Declarations are expected to be used as a basic cognition in our tradition. No other spiritual tradition gives so much space for question-answer and debate, and no other spiritual tradition is so conclusive and inclusive.

Inclusiveness and Conclusiveness

Inclusiveness always takes away the conclusiveness. 'Oh, everything is one and the same.' The inclusiveness takes away the conclusiveness. But, here inclusiveness and conclusiveness in Completion! Inclusiveness and conclusiveness in the space of Complete Completion! Hindu tradition is the first and foremost, one and only inclusive and conclusive tradition.

Inclusiveness is always the extreme of emotion. Conclusiveness is always the extreme of logic. Both never go hand in hand. Only if logic and emotion both merge and see reality, it is possible. Logic always operates from fear. So, it goes on dissecting, dissecting, dissecting, dissecting. Emotion always operates in the space of greed, and it tries to go on adding, adding, adding. Emotion tries to be inclusive, so that it can feel fulfilled with greed. Logic tries to be divisive, so that it can be conclusive. When both ripen and merge, the being blossoms, which is beyond logic and emotion, which is your individual soul, biomemory. Your basic root cognition from which you operate, only the inclusiveness and conclusiveness can be in the space of Completion, and it can go completely well with each other.

People who lost conclusiveness for the sake of inclusiveness lost their strength. They became theology-light. All these theology-light traditions: 'Oh, okay. Be as you want. Okay. Let us celebrate.' All the theology-light groups, most of the cults, function on inclusiveness and very bad on the strength of conclusiveness.

People who miss the inclusiveness and hold on to some conclusiveness, they become fanatics, terrorists. They are more dangerous than cults. The one and only tradition – Hindu Tradition - is ultimately inclusive and ultimately conclusive, completely inclusive and completely conclusive because it is the core. The core cannot choose between inclusiveness and conclusiveness.

This word 'īśāvāsyam idaṃ sarvaṃ (ईशावास्यमदिं सर्वं)' is the ultimate inclusiveness and ultimate conclusiveness! In this one line: 'Whatsoever exists is enveloped by this consciousness' is the ultimate inclusiveness! You cannot include anything further in this. yatkiñca (यत्कञ्चि) means whatsoever. Jagat (जगत्) means changeful. How much you may think it is changing, as long as your thinking is happening you will perceive the Universe as happening. When you settle down in Samādhi, you will perceive the whole Universe in the space of Samādhi.

As long as you are thinking, you will perceive the other part of you as the Universe which is happening. When the thinking settles down in you and you become peaceful, you enter into Samādhi. You will perceive the other part of you also in the space of Samādhi, God. The Jīva decides to perceive his other part as Jagat or Īśvara.

When you perceive as Jagat, dvandva exists, the dual. When you perceive it as Īśvara, only Advaita exists. That is why Īśvara becomes Īśā. Even if you translate the word 'Īśā' into Lord, there is a gap. The Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis are not saying, 'īśvaravāsyamidaṃ (ईश्वरवास्यमदिं).' No! That word 'Īśvara (ईश्वरा)' can create a kind of subtle barrier. They say, 'Īśā (ईशा)' where you don't feel intimidated.

A mind which is still active, if you describe God as an embodiment of independent, intelligent, free-willed being, you will always feel intimidated. You will say, 'If something else also exists, then should I relate with that through fear, begging, praying, greed, offering, surrendering or should I start praying? What kind of relationship should I start developing with it?'

The mind always tries to retain its existence by the methodology of relating. When the method to relate is disconnected, it disappears. It is by the methodology of relating that it retains its existence. So, when the mind is there, if the Masters utter the word 'Īśvara,' immediately, 'Oh, He is there. He is intelligent. He is independent. He has a free will. So, He may judge me. He may not accept me. So, how should I relate with Him? Should I start praying to Him? How should I please Him? Should I start talking to Him? Should I start escaping from Him, denying Him? Or what should be the thing? Or should I start conquering Him?'

He is not Īśvara as you perceive, who moves like you. He is Īśā, who can be perceived only when there is no movement in you. Any perception you have about Him, when there is a movement, He is only Jagat, not Īśvara.

Only these three you need to know in life. Everything else will be clear if you know just these three – Jīva (individual soul) which perceives, Jagat (Universe) which is constantly changing and Īśvara (God).

As long as there is a movement in you in the form of thought and feeling, it tries to include and conclude. Thought tries to conclude. Feeling tries to include. As long as these movements are happening in you, what you perceive internally and externally is Jagat – changing.

When this thought and emotion which try to include and conclude merge, that Śānti or silence prevails. You will understand that whatever you perceive as Jagat also is nothing but Īśā.

I can say that the whole Sanātana Hindu Dharma starts and ends in this first line. When logic goes on trying to conclude and emotion goes on trying to include, when they are both moving, they have not completed with each other. Only when there is an incompletion will there be movement. When there is Completion, there is no movement. It is pure silence. When there is movement, you will perceive yourself inside you and outside you.

Even when something is changing, it is Īśā, energy. Even when you think and perceive it is changing, it is Īśā. When you reach the silence of you, when there is no movement internally, there is no incompletion, there is only Completion – you will perceive you internally and externally as Īśā.

When there is a change in you in the form of thinking or feeling, what you perceive and what you perceive as you internally and eternally is called Jagat (Universe) which is changing. When you are in the space of Completion, peacefulness, then what you perceive as you and everything else is God.

The Upaniṣads is Dharma declaring its authority by itself without the help or the authority of any author. Here, Dharma does not need authenticity or authority from anyone else. The author who writes authentically naturally brings authority. The Upaniṣads don't need anybody to authenticate them. So, nobody has authority over them. That is why they are apaurūṣeya (no author). They are declaring their own grandeur and beauty by their own existence.

īśāvāsyamidagṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।
idam sarvaṃ (इदम् सर्वं)
vāsyam (वास्यम्)

There is no doubt about it being 'may be,' 'must be,' 'could be,' 'this is what it should be,' 'what else can it be.' No! 'This is what is my experience.' 'I don't know.' 'It is up to you.' Nothing of that sort!

ईशावास्यमिदगं् सर्वं यत्किञ्च जगत्यां जगत् ।
īśāvāsyamidagṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।

Whatever you perceive as changeful internal and external of you, even when you perceive it as changeful internal and external of you – it is God, consciousness which is beyond any change.

There are different levels of understanding. When there is a movement, thought flows in you. When there is a change in you, the external also changes. So, it is called the world. This is Yoga.

Stop the internal movement in you. Internally when the movement stops, external movements will also stop. You will perceive the world as consciousness. This is Tantra.

Even while you perceive the change internally and externally of you as changeful, it is consciousness. This is Living Advaita.

Your logic functions continuously in the form of thought by dividing, dividing, dividing, dividing, dividing to come to a conclusion. Your emotion functions in the form of including, including, including, including to reach Completion. Only when the inclusion and conclusion merge into each other Completion happens.

People who sacrifice conclusion for the sake of inclusion are poets. Poets can be amazing inclusive people, but they can never be conclusive or practical. People who sacrifice inclusiveness for the sake of conclusion are amazing mathematicians. They will be amazingly conclusive, but you cannot live with them. They will be really dead!

The best statement ever made with the ultimate inclusiveness and conclusiveness is this one statement:

īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat

Dharma declares its own authority.

'Consciousness' the word itself expresses so much intimacy! If you translate that same word 'Īśā' into Lord, it is intimidating. If you translate that word into consciousness, it is so intimate!

As long as you have a will, free will, you will always be intimidated by something which has free will. So, you need to be told that the Lord's will is not like your will which intimidates, which feels threatened by anything which exists. It is neither interested in intimidating you nor bothered to protect you.

If you are expecting protection, you will only end up in hopelessness. Nobody can protect you, nobody can save you, because you don't need to be saved! Wake up to your reality. You neither need to be saved nor you need to be a saviour. At the most, any saviour just needs to utter this one statement only: Neither you need to be saved nor you need a saviour. Wake up!

Inclusiveness and conclusiveness in its pure form! No mathematician can be so conclusive as this verse. No poet can be so poetic, so inclusive as this verse.

Truth and Technique

īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।

Whatever changeful there is in this ever-changing world is all enveloped, is all personification, is all Īśā, consciousness. A being who has experienced Īśā, who has received Īśvaratva as vara is Īśvara. He who is established in the space of Īśā is Īśvara.

This word 'Īśā' should be understood as consciousness, intelligence, the material, subtle cause, all-pervasive, sustaining support, and the reason why the Universe is still bound in this form. Lord (Īśā) is not just the source of this flower, He permeates this flower and He envelopes this flower. For this flower to exist in the form of this flower, He is the reason. He is the material. He is the subtle and causal which causes this to exist.

Tomorrow it may change into a different form. It may wither away. It may become a seed for another plant to happen. At that time, at this moment and earlier, Īśā (the consciousness) permeates all this. This statement is the ultimate truth and the ultimate technique. A flawless truth and technique! There are some statements and truths that cannot be applied as technique. There are some statements and techniques that cannot be the truth.

When Ramana Maharshi says, 'Whatever is moving, is moving only by the grace of God. Without His grace, nothing can move,' it is an amazing technique. When Ramana Maharshi's mother came to bring him home to Madurai from Tiruvaṇṇāmalai, Ramana Maharshi wrote a letter, a small chit and gave it to her. In that he said, 'Whatever happens, happens by His will. And without His will nothing can move.' It is an amazing technique. It is not true! In reality, in truth, you do have free will. Him going all the way from Madurai to Tiruvaṇṇāmalai happened due to him (Ramana Maharshi), because he did it. So what he said is a technique. If you relax into that, you will realize the truth – truth of the free will merge into the Cosmic will. It is a technique, not a truth.

The same way, there are truths which cannot be used as technique. Ātma has no pain. Ātma has no suffering. Soul has no pain, no suffering. This is a truth, but it cannot be tried as a technique on the body. There are some truths which can never be techniques. There are some techniques which can never be truth.

Here is the master stroke: the Ṛṣis know there may be some students who may not even come back to the next class. Even if you come to just one Upaniṣad class, they want to give you Enlightenment. So, they load the whole truth into this one statement. This one statement is all-inclusive and ultimately conclusive; it is a truth and a technique.

If some statement has to be the truth and a technique, it has to be clear. If the same statement is made – 'The consciousness envelopes everything,' it can only be the truth, not a technique. You can't try that in your present state. If the statement says, 'Whatever is moving will be only consciousness,' it can be a technique, not the truth immediately. The word 'vāsyamidaṃ (वास्यमदिं)' means it is now. It makes this line both a truth and a technique. Here, jagatyāṃ jagat (जगत्यां जगत्) means whatever is moving and perceived as moving in this moving world, whether this moving is a perception or reality, it is perceived as moving. Sometimes it really feels like it is moving. Whether you perceive it as moving or it is really moving, it is pervaded by consciousness, enveloped by consciousness.

ॐ ईशावास्यमिदं सर्वं यत्किञ्च जगत्यां जगत् ।
oṃ īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।
'By the consciousness enveloped, must this all be. Whatever is moving there is in the moving world.'

Whenever you operate based on logic, you arrive at conclusions and move from conclusions to more conclusions, like math's conclusions and science's conclusions. One of the important components of your life moves in the line of conclusions. It doesn't care about anything else.

There are many advantages when you are moving with conclusions. If you want to reach Delhi, you want to have a conclusive calculation – how many hours will it take? Which road do you have to drive? How many kilometres is it from where you are? You need conclusive details. Only then you can reach Delhi. So there are many advantages if you move in the language of logic which is very conclusive.

Unfortunately, there are some disadvantages. You will feel bored because life itself is not always conclusive and life itself is not always logically analyzable, quantifiable or reproducible.

All systems which try to analyze, quantify, replicate and reproduce have their own disadvantages and restrictions. This includes astrology which tries to logically calculate, mathematically analyze and come to a conclusion about life. It can only be a rough direction. It can never be a conclusion. If you see it this way, the boss is Kanni Rasi (Virgo), his driver is Kanni Rasi and his sweeper is Kanni Rasi, how is the boss a boss, the driver is a driver and the sweeper is a sweeper? It can only go in rough directions.

Thinking, approaching and planning with that conclusive approach, conclusive way of thinking often makes you stop seeing the whole. Conclusion is one of the methods which has some advantages and disadvantages, but is not complete. In a similar way for inclusiveness, these people will never be practical. 'Oh, everything is one and the same. Life is love.'

If you look deeply, even they don't believe what they are saying. Maybe in some emotional high, they will utter some words. This inclusive group has more poets, people who preach love. This conclusive way of thinking and living has its own disadvantages. The inclusive way of thinking and living also has its own limitations and disadvantages.

The language of inclusiveness is vague. If you say, 'I want to reach Delhi. Please show me the way. Tell me how,' these inclusive people will ask, 'Why do you want to reach Delhi? This itself is Delhi. Why don't you celebrate here itself in whatever way you want to celebrate? That is Delhi. Delhi is Delhi. Delhi is everywhere. Everywhere is Delhi.' These inclusive people talk more like drunkards. They don't make life practical. But they have one advantage, they will never be boring or tiring. They know the juice of life is in inclusion.

The logic (head) is always trying to be conclusive. The emotion (heart) is always trying to be inclusive. Both have their own limitations, advantages and disadvantages. Somewhere this inclusive emotional trend should meet the conclusive thinking style and merge together. It is only in that being where both meet and blossom, ultimately the reality is perceived and lived as reality.

A small story: A drunk man is stopped by the police around midnight and he's asked where he is going at this time of night. The man replies, 'I am going to attend the lecture on alcohol abuse and the ill effects of alcohol on my health.' Officer, 'Wow! Really? That sounds interesting! Who is giving that lecture at this time of night?' The man replies, 'My wife.' The joke seems to be very inclusive and conclusive!

Look into your life, most of the time you are stable because of your conclusiveness. You grow because you take the risks and challenges of inclusiveness. Somehow we will have to meet both, complete both and bring both to Completion. A man who wants to be conclusive in his life will be very stable. He will get married, have a house, get a job in a Fortune 500 company, have a car and he will know how to drive from his house to his office. A very stable life! It is conclusive, but has no growth.

All growth and expansion happens when you operate and switch to the mode of inclusiveness. Only there you get the energy, intensity, clarity and depth to take risks. Somewhere these two should have Completion in your being. That happens only when you know how the law of life functions and all the Cosmic law emerges. Dharma itself emerges out of an inner space where inclusiveness and conclusiveness become complete, emotion and logic becomes complete.

To run a family, you need to be inclusive. To run the office, you need to be conclusive. To run your life you need to be inclusively conclusive. Ultimately when you merge your logic and emotion (inclusiveness and conclusiveness), it should become inclusively conclusive or conclusively inclusive, not inconclusive.

Truth and Technique

This first statement is shocking. It is so inclusive and so conclusive. That is why it can be applied immediately as a technique, and it will be realized as a truth any moment by you. Sometimes these great truths can't be applied as a technique. Sometimes there are techniques that can't be taken as truth. Ramana Maharshi saying, 'Nothing will happen without his grace. Only what he wants will happen.' is a powerful technique if you practice it honestly with integrity, but many people exploit it.

Many of these so-called religious people, they make the mistake of saying, 'Only by God's will everything happens. Everything happens finally by His will.' These words can be a powerful technique if you use them honestly but it is not the truth. How the exact words uttered by Ramana Maharshi are misused! There are some things which our Masters said, sacred secrets that are techniques, not the truths. So these words of Ramana Maharshi – 'Everything happens only by God's will' – is an amazing technique. If you just use that in your cognition, you will just settle down into the depth of your being. So much inner healing will happen. You may suddenly wake up to the truth. You will know very clearly where your will is interfering and distorting God's will, and how you can let God's will prevail without you willing to will against it. You will be awakened to the truth if you practice that technique sincerely, but that statement itself is not the truth.

In the same way, by saying, 'We are beyond suffering and pain. No suffering can happen to us. No pain can touch us', it is the truth but it cannot be a technique for you to practice immediately. When there is a gap between truth and technique, you need the guidance of a living Master and practice. The truth is related to soul, consciousness. There are many truths which can't be applied as techniques. There are many techniques which can't be taken as truths.

Here, this statement is a truth and a technique.

īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।

You can start practicing now. You can live this as a truth now. You don't need any Master. You don't need any practice. You don't need any preparation. When the truth is separate and the technique is separate, people are confused. It takes time and they lose faith. It is like the truth is Jñāna Yoga, Advaita Jñāna Anubhūti – everything is one, that Oneness is the truth. So for you to achieve that, the technique is either Karma Yoga (work selflessly), Rāja Yoga (do all these spiritual practices) or Bhakti Yoga (celebrate the feeling connection with the Divine). There are different paths.

When the truth and technique are separated, the space for confusion grows and the gray area becomes greater. When there is more gray area, there is more possibility for exploitation, more possibility for pseudo Gurus. When anyone repeats the Upaniṣads, even if he is a pseudo Guru in the beginning, he will learn it and become a right Guru. The system is such that anyone who walks into it even with the wrong purpose, comes out with clarity, understanding and living these truths. These great truths are not declared by people who have vested interests or interests in exploitation. That is why they did not even declare their name.

Authors do not have authority because they are not lending authenticity to these words. When an author lends authenticity to some words, he also gets authority over those words. Here, Dharma declares its existence. Dharma expresses its authority. Dharma expands its very core. Dharma declares its own life by its own authority. The Cosmos is telling you how to live with it, how to radiate it, how to enjoy it, how to experience it.

When there is no gap between truth and technique, you don't need any guide, Guru or middleman. You just need a Guru to tell you, 'No need for any Guru.' There is no gray area. Nobody can exploit it. A Guru cannot even change anything. He just has to repeat it.

The Hindu tradition is one of the most foolproof, powerful spiritual traditions that has ever evolved on the planet Earth. It can never be manipulated by anybody, any pseudo Guru, because it has not left any gray area. There is no gray area and nothing to manipulate. The possibility for manipulation comes only when there is a gray area.

Perception, Fact, Truth and Reality

yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat: whatever you think as moving in an ever moving world. It means that movement, change is your perception and is factual. Many times, your perception is not factual, your fact is not truth and your truth is not reality. Understand these words – perception, fact, truth, reality. Perception: the Earth is flat. The sun goes round the Earth. Fact: the Earth is round. The Earth is going around the sun. Truth: the Earth is not exactly round and the sun is going round the Earth. Reality: how the Earth is, see it from Google map. The Earth and sun both are going round each other. Perception, fact, truth, reality.

The perception that the Earth is flat is because you can only perceive that much. The perception that the sun is going around the Earth is because you see one side of the sun in the morning and the other side in the evening. It has literally gone around.

Then comes the facts. The fact is that the Earth is not flat, it is round. The sun is not going around the Earth. Only the Earth is going around the sun. This means the perception is expanded a little.

When the perception expands beyond your perceived time and space, it evolves to the truth where the Earth is not exactly round and the sun is going around the Earth. This (Earth) goes around this (sun) is what you consider as fact.

You need to know that this whole setup is going around something! So in that way, in a few million years the sun will go round the Earth once. This whole setup of going around is centered on something. That is the truth.

The reality is, if you see a few kalpas, the Earth's shape is neither flat nor round. It is ever changing. As for whether the sun goes around the Earth or the Earth goes around the sun, neither of them are actually going around each other. That is the reality.

Perception is the product of your senses functioning with limited time and space. A fact is the expansion of time and space within your perception. Actually your perception is the same, but it is expanded beyond limited time and space.

Truth is what is perceived when your perception is altered by the expansion of time and space. Reality is your perception realizing the truth beyond time and space.

Understand these definitions. Your perception working within the limitations of time and space is perception. Your perception working beyond the limitations of time and space is fact. Time and space altering your perception is the truth. Your perception going beyond time and space is reality.

So this statement:

īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।

It is neither a perception nor a fact. It is the truth.

Changing: the world is changing can be a fact. The fact that the change itself changes is the truth.

Changing which is established in constantly changing. So the change is established in change – jagatyāṃ jagat.

Whatever you perceive as change is not only changing, it is established on something which is changing. So actually by this statement, the Īśā Upaniṣad declares, 'Don't suffer because of change. That change itself is established on change. Do not have fear or greed because of change, because change is established on change.'

It is like things are just moving constantly in front of your mouth – grapes, fruits, sweets, ice cream, neem leaf, so many things. You just try to jump and catch that in your mouth. Sometimes if it is tasty, you celebrate life. Whether it is tasty or bitter, don't worry because it is changing. Change itself is changing.

Perception is your senses operating within the limits of time and space.

Facts are your senses operating beyond the boundaries of time and space.

Truth is your perception transformed by the perceived.

Truth is revealed beyond time and space itself, because it is so immense and it transforms the way you perceive.

Reality is perception beyond the boundaries of perception, time and space.

Perception is bhoga (senses). Fact is yoga. Truth is jñāna. Reality is vijñāna.

Perception always leads to bhoga (sensory pleasures).

Fact always leads to yoga (trying to unite with the higher truth).

Truth leads to jñāna (Enlightenment).

Reality leads to vijñāna (Living Advaita).

ईशावास्यमदिं सर्वं यत्कञ्चि जगत्यां जगत् ।

तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्वद्धिनम् ॥

īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।

tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam ॥1॥

The translation: by the consciousness filled must this all be, whatever moving thing there is in the ever moving world. With this renounced, you may enjoy. Covet not the wealth of anyone at all.

Perception: whatever your senses can perceive in a limited time and space. Fact: whatever your senses perceive with more time and space. Truth: whatever you understand as a result of your perception evolving with a lot more time and space. Reality: Existence as it is, beyond your perception, time and space.

When you restrict your perception to limited time and space, you are caught either in fact or in truth. Neither is the ultimate. Perception: the Earth is flat. The sun goes around the Earth. Fact: the Earth is round. The Earth goes around the sun. Truth: the Earth is not exactly round. It is more like an orange, a little pressed above and below, and the sun goes around the Earth.

In the perception level, you feel that the sun goes around the Earth. In truth level also, the sun goes around the Earth. Yet both are not one and the same. In truth, you know with a clear understanding that the sun goes around the Earth in a few billion years because this whole sun family is not stagnant. The whole solar system is moving around centred on something. The sun will go around the Earth at least once in billions of years. Reality: the shape of the Earth cannot be described as round or a little orange fruit. No description is possible. See it as it is. Both the sun and the Earth are going around each other. The Earth goes around in one year. The sun goes around within a few billion years.

Life is all about evolving your cognition from perception to fact, fact to truth, truth to reality. It has nothing to do with so-called bliss, love, renunciation, devotion, yoga, nothing. All these are side effects.

When your perception evolves to fact, you may suddenly become meditative, yogic, loving, blissful. The purpose of life itself is to evolve from perception to fact, fact to truth, truth to reality. When you are moving from fact to truth, you may suddenly become active, more loving, blissful, lose your cunningness.

The highest form of violence is when you decide you will not be useful or productive to anybody. That is the highest form of violence. When you are angry towards your boss, you decide: 'I will not be useful to his aim, his goal.' In the same way, when you are angry with yourself, you will be angry with the Saṅgha, your Guru, everyone and everything. Then you will decide: 'I will not be useful' or 'I will not make any of their declarations into reality.'

Love means making yourself a catalyst for everyone's reality. Not only should you perceive whatever you can do, you have done, but everyone also should feel whatever you can do, you have done it to make everyone's reality. Nothing more can be done. That is what is love.

People drop hypocrisy and become loving when many of their perceptions move towards fact, facts move towards truth and truths move towards reality. That is all is life – moving from perception to fact, fact to truth, truth to reality. Reality is Īśā.

The Upaniṣads declare very clearly, consciousness fills all these.

īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।

This one verse clears so many doubts created by materialists, so-called rationalists, or so-called irrational rationalists. In Tamil, we use that word 'Paguthārivu (பகுத்தறிவு).' Tamilian Paguthārivu (பகுத்தறிவு), Tamilian atheists who are not even rationalists, they are irrational rationalists.

Nothing purifies you like the truth. Simply sitting and giving advice to human beings is useless. Telling them: 'Be more loving, be more blissful, be more caring, be non-violent' – all this is just useless, utterly useless, not even one percent useful. If you are at all really sincere in helping yourself and others, don't do this stupid thing of giving empty advice.

Move people from perception to fact, fact to truth, truth to reality, all the best things that need to happen to people start happening. They automatically become more loving, more caring, more intelligent, more non-violent, more enriching.

Automatically, all good things will happen to you and through you.

The aim of the Upaniṣads is to lead you to higher and higher reality – असतो मा सद्गमय) तमसो मा ज्योतर्गमय । मृत्योर्माअमृतं गमय ।। asato mā sadgamaya। tamaso mā jyotirgamaya। mṛtyormāamṛtaṃ gamaya ।।

This verse is from Bṛhadāraṇyaka Upaniṣad and it means, lead us from unreality (of transitory existence) to the reality (of the eternal Self); lead us from the darkness (of ignorance) to the light (of spiritual knowledge); lead us from the fear of death to the knowledge of immortality.

The side effect may be bliss. You may become more blissful. Side effect may be intelligence. You may become more intelligent. The side effects may be thousands and thousands of auspicious qualities. You may become a good, moral person. But the aim is to lead you from unreality to reality.

Best Way to Imbibe Upaniṣads

The best way to listen to the Upaniṣads should be in the morning. After you wake up, wash yourself, come and drop your body in the presence of the Master and listen, listen, listen! After that, whole day just digest, digest, digest, not doing any work related to mind other than this digestion. And if at all needed, doing a little physical work like gardening or agriculture.

Body can do some cleaning of the Deity or do a little agriculture or gardening, but the mind should not work. The mind should only be working on these great truths, digesting it and falling into that space at night as sleep. This is the best way to listen to Upaniṣads. Anyone who listens to Upaniṣads in this way even for three months will experience Living Advaita.

Your mind should not be engaged in any other mental activities which require you to move away from contemplating these truths. The body can be engaged. You can be doing some gardening. You can be doing some agricultural work. The mind should not be engaged in anything which moves you out of this contemplation on Upaniṣads.

Enriching never moves you out of engagement with the Upaniṣads. If you are working on enriching, it is perfect! It only strengthens your understanding of the Upaniṣads. Other than that, not doing any other mental actions, activities and digesting. Not doing mental activities, but doing only physical activities. Not doing mental activity means even the unnecessary wandering should not be there. Mind should be engaged in thinking, contemplating on these great truths you heard. It should be engaged.

Listen to the morning satsaṅg. Spend a little time contemplating on it. Just to keep yourself awake, do some physical activity. Otherwise you will fall asleep or you will just drift away into your worrying, incompletions. To keep you away from it, you can do some simple physical activities like gardening, agriculture or cooking. Some physical activities where the mind is not required to be engaged in certain actions or the mind is not required to be engaged in any activity other than contemplating on Upaniṣads.

Then have debates on Upaniṣads. You can watch the retelecast satsaṅg. Once the sun sets, have a non-violent, active and powerful debate again. You should not be taking a stand just because you took that stand. Without being sincerely convinced, you should not move to the other stand. If you are sincerely convinced, you should not have the blockage of ego. 'No, I already took this stand. How can I change?' No. You should be able to change. And you should change only if you are sincerely convinced, not otherwise. This is active non-violent debate.

You will never understand the conclusion unless you are active in that thinking process. Unless you are active in that thinking process, you cannot catch the truths in the end. You can't see the climax of the movie, understand the whole movie and enjoy the movie. You need to watch from the beginning to catch the climax.

tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam ॥
The literal translation: "With this renounced, you may enjoy. Covet not the wealth of anyone at all."

Cosmic order comes from truth and reality, not morality. This looks like a very simple moralistic instruction. It is not! Order never comes from morals and discipline in the Cosmos. It comes from intelligence and knowledge, truth and reality.

So-called moral people can never face the change of the changing world. They are completely imbalanced, because morality is a set of vidhi and niṣedha understandings – what to do and what not to do in particular situations. But the world is jagatyāṃ jagat (जगत्यां जगत्) – changing which is established in changing. Change established in changing!

When there is so much change, the person who is trained in certain morals will always be shaken and confused. He will not be able to handle life. He will not be able to handle situations. For example: in some places, vegetarian food is moral. In some places, non-vegetarian food is right. What should you do? The person who is established in morality will be constantly confused and struggling internally. The person who is established in truth and reality can constantly play with life. Only he can wage war.

Maybe Kucela (bosom childhood friend of Śrī Kṛṣṇa), who was established in morality can live a peaceful life with the wealth he was gifted by Kṛṣṇa. But only Kṛṣṇa, who is established in reality can wage a war and win the game. In the modern day, even a common man's life is a war. It is no longer a goody-goody, peaceful and relaxed life. Nobody is going to let you live in your cozy space.

This is not a moral lesson. It may bring some moral principles into your life. When you internalize this line:

tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam ॥

It may bring you some morals. This line should be understood as a life strategy, not from the context of morals. The literal translation is "With this renounced, you may enjoy. Covet not the wealth of anyone at all." It may look like a moral teaching. If you look at this from the context of moral teaching, you will miss the whole truth revealed by the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis.

Not Just the Perceived but the Perceiver also is Changing

Cognizing whatever is, is change established in changing and this whole thing is filled with consciousness and intelligence. Don't think only the planet on which you are standing is moving, even the whole solar system in which the planet is established is moving. Not just what you perceive as the world, even the perceiver is changing.

The biggest fear all human beings go through is, "If the perceiver changes, what will happen?" See, your whole life you conclude something as pleasure, something as pain, and you plan, act, work, build everything based on that. Suddenly, at some point the perceiver who gives you the understanding about what is pleasure and pain seems to be changing. That is what frightens you. That is what makes you shiver. That is what shakes you.

The person who knows that even the perceiver changes and accepts this change, updates himself. You might have spent ten years on your career as an IT engineer, lawyer, doctor, activist. Suddenly when your inner space changes, the concepts of your pain and pleasure change too. Don't be afraid of that change; don't be afraid of that change of your perception, because that change of perception is a gift given to you for your sincerity in supporting your perception.

If your perception told you, "Being a doctor is the best," you built your career on that. But suddenly your perception changes and it says, "Being a doctor is no longer a pleasure, no longer desirable." Don't be afraid of that perception and don't try to snub that perception. It is a gift happening to you.

The perception evolving, evolution of the perception is a gift happening to you, which is just happening from perception to fact, fact to truth, truth to reality. Anybody who stops the evolution of perception commits spiritual suicide (Ātmahatyā) - killing the soul and the possibility. Upaniṣads just declare their own strength by their own statements. They don't need any author to authenticate them.

Whatever you hold with fear of losing, that will be taken away from you! People say, "I am such a good person. I have never cheated anybody. Yet my wealth has been taken away, but the wealth of these guys who cheat everyone has not been taken away. They are all living wealthily." Somebody else's wealth is not taken away means he does not have fear of losing it. If he has fear of losing name and fame, exactly that will be taken away.

The law of life is, whatever you hold on with fear of losing it, exactly and precisely that will be taken away from you. It will be the most precise operation. Life does precise operations. Exactly what you are afraid of losing, that will be taken away from you. If you want to retain anything in your life, just renounce the fear of losing it.

Kālabhairava's eyes, when they look at you, the only thing He does not like is fear and powerlessness. Just stand in front of Him without any fear or powerlessness, you will become Him. You will see you in Him! It is a law of life.

Strength of Renunciation

If you are afraid that your name and fame will be taken away, precisely only that will be taken away. Your wealth will not be touched. If you are afraid your credibility will be taken away, precisely only that will be taken. Nothing else will be touched. Everything else will remain with you. If you are afraid that your house may be taken away, precisely that will be taken away. You may have your bank balance, car, everything else. Only that (house) will be removed.

The law of life is, life is not sadistic. It does not want to see any powerlessness in your inner space. Anything which creates powerlessness in your inner space, precisely that will be taken away just to make you understand you can live without that, not to punish you.

Kālabhairava is not sadistic. Life is not sadistic. He will not take away something from you just to torture you. No! He wants to tell you, "Fool, don't be powerless thinking that you will lose this. And if you lose it, you will lose everything in your life, or you will become powerless in your life. Now, I am taking that away. Without that you are still able to live your life beautifully."

Remember and pen down ten items in your life which you really, really protected, or you were afraid if without that you may not be able to live, and you were holding on to it. But after it was taken away, you even forgot the name of it! Look in. You will see you have at least ten items in your life. It may be money. It may be name and fame. It may be a man or a woman, or it may be a person in your life. It may be your credibility. It may be your city. It may be your bedroom. It may be your house. It may be your car. It may be anything. You can look in, remember and pen down the ten items easily in the next ten minutes. You will be able to remember, recollect and write ten items about which you really thought if you lose that, you are lost, your life is lost, nothing is left for you - "No, I can't. I can't let go of this. This is my life!" You held on to something like that. When it was removed, not only did you not miss it, after a few days you even forgot about it. It is to remind you of your innate strength.

Renunciation does not make you weak. Something getting removed from your life does not make you powerless. Kālabhairava takes away and removes things from you. Anything removed from you or added to you is only done for your fulfillment and joy, not to punish you. Life is celebrating, fulfilling itself through you. That's all. Be very clear, this is the definition of renunciation – remembering nothing can make you powerless. Anything removed from your life cannot make you powerless is renunciation (vairāgya).

Rāga means feeling obsessed, completely overpowered by desire. Desire is rāga. Attachment is rāga. Obsession is rāga. Arāga means detachment, hatred. Virāga means, knowing very clearly whatever you think as core of your life, even those things if they are removed, you will not become powerless, you will not miss them, you will not become empty, you will not be disappointed, you are not going to be dead. You will even forget you had those things or they being part of your life. Having this clarity is renunciation.

Business is war. Your living is war. Relationships are war. Everyone is in their own Kurukṣetra. Kurukṣetra has never ended. Everyone has their own Kurukṣetra. Let this be the strategy for your Kurukṣetra. No one can win over you. No one can shake you. No one can frighten you. Be Vedānta Kesari (the Lion of Hindu Strength).

The moment you have fear that if something is removed from your life you will become depressed, you will become empty, you will lose life – that fear becomes the strength of your enemy. When he knows you cannot be frightened, he becomes powerless. If you can be frightened, your enemy is powerful. If you cannot be frightened, your enemy becomes powerless. This is the simple understanding and simple cognition – "Anything can be removed from me, I will not become powerless. I will not become depressed. I will not lose anything. I will not be lost. I may not even remember that I had that in my life."

Be very clear, the spiritual truths when it becomes part of your cognition and strategy, anywhere you go, Kṛṣṇa is driving your chariot. Internalize just this one truth.

तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा
tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā
Tena (तेन) means, with this understanding, from this context.
त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्विद्धनम् tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam
The world is ever changing, but it is filled with consciousness (Īśā). The consciousness is independently intelligent and compassionate.

If something is removed from you, don't curse life. It is done with tremendous compassion. Here, the Upaniṣads are declaring for you to do tyāga and renouncing with this context of īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat (ईशावास्यमदिं सर्वं यत्कञ्चि जगत्यां जगत्). It means, the world is changing and it is established in changing. It is filled with consciousness (Satchitānanda) which is intelligent, truthful, blissful and compassionate.

A blissful being will always be a compassionate being. When you are blissful, you will see all the good things and the best things come out of you. When you are blissful, you will be such a good person. Only when you are frustrated, will you express all the bad qualities – violence, cunning strategies. A blissful person is always a compassionate person. Consciousness, independent intelligence has its own will and functions out of pure compassion. Renunciation is not supposed to be done out of frustration or inability or powerlessness.

Change - Possibility for You to Reinvent Yourself

When life removes something from you, it is providing an opportunity for you to reinvent yourself. You will then be clear that nothing can frighten you, nothing can make you lose, nothing can put you in powerlessness and depression.

You will also understand exactly who the enemy is. You will pinpoint exactly who your enemy is, where things need to be done. You will not be confused. You will not overestimate your enemy. When you are frightened, you overestimate your enemy. Because you overestimate your enemy, you become powerless. Because you become powerless, it becomes easy for your enemy to destroy you. It is a vicious circle.

When you are clear, you will not be lost. You will not become powerless. Just have this one word in your throat all the time – "So what?!" Keep this as a mantra – "So what?!"

Know clearly, nothing removed from you can make you powerless. Life removes it only to make you understand you can live without it. Reinvent yourself. Wake up!

List out the ten items which you really, really thought, if it is removed from you, you will be lost, your life will collapse. But when it was removed, not only are you living your life now, you even forgot you had that once in your life as part of you. You will have ten things, either persons or things or places. At least ten things will be there. Pen the ten things down which were part of your life, which you really felt that if it is removed, you will collapse. But now it is not there in your life, not only have you not collapsed, you even forgot that they were once part of your life.

Everything when it is removed from your life, it is just life giving you a beautiful chance to reinvent yourself. It is just to remind you – "Fool, without that also you will be powerful!" Kāla (Time) can tolerate anything, but He is allergic to powerlessness. If He sees there is some possibility of powerlessness in you, he just pulls it out. When Kāla sees fear in you, He says, "Hey, don't bother! Whatever you are afraid of losing, you will see now I am removing it. You will not become powerless, you will not be depressed. You will be living without it. After sometime, you will even forget it was part of your life. Learn this."

The next line, words in the Upaniṣad:

tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam ॥

Whenever you are centred on fear and fear of losing something, you will become violent, grabbing. How to become nonviolent? The second part of the statement can become a strategy in your thinking and life. Grabbing will never fulfill you. People who try to grab will never be powerful.

Whatever is, which is changing and established in changing, is filled by consciousness, pure consciousness.

Whenever change is happening outside of you, internally don't feel life is sadistic, it is punishing you, it is taking away something which you really like or you have settled down with. Ability to understand that every change is a possibility for you to reinvent yourself is renunciation. Rāga means obsession, attachment. Arāga means detachment, dead. Virāga means understanding that the change is established in change, and that is filled with consciousness.

Every change is done with tremendous compassion and consciously. No change is an accident. Constantly looking at life as an accident is the attitude of atheists. Understanding the way it happens or the way you perceive is a conscious happening is Living Advaita. The way it is happening externally, the way you perceive internally – both, if you think is an accident, you are an atheist. If you understand it is a conscious happening, you are Living Advaita.

Whether something is happening externally or something is perceived internally, look in. Look in how many times you cursed life and what kind of ideas you have about life and others. If you think life and others are cruel, constantly exploiting, demanding, non-caring, non-supportive, then be very clear, you are an atheist. Don't think atheism or theism is dependent on whether you believe God exists in the form of Deity or not. Atheism or theism is dependent on whether you understand God exists as everything or not.

As long as you cognize "Why me? Why me? Why me?" and life is taking away the things which you really enjoy, life is sadistic – be very clear, all the happenings in your life you look at as an accident. Why Upaniṣads used the word "jagatyāṃ jagat (जगत्यां जगत्)" – change established in change? Because even your perception – it is all changing - will change. Even your perception that things are changing will change. Even that is not complete perception. Neither it is changing is a complete perception, nor it is not changing is a complete perception. It will change as long as the perception needs to change.

Like in the dream, you are feeling three tigers are chasing you and you are shouting, "Save me! Save me! Give me a machine gun! Is there no one to give me a gun and save me?" Your friend hears you shouting, screaming in the dream. He just slaps you and wakes you up. In that moment, you will feel, "Wow! I am free of this nightmare!" And you will thank your friend for it. After a few days, even you will forget you had a nightmare and you will be shouting at him, "Why did you wake me up? I was having such a peaceful sleep!" That friend has to take the blame.

You forget that you were suffering. He woke you up and released you from the suffering and torture you were going through in the dream state. After waking up, you forget what was going on in the dream state and you think, "Oh, such a pleasant sleep! He woke me up!" After waking up, you have the responsibility of life now. In the dream, whether a tiger is chasing you, or you are dancing with somebody, you have no responsibility. At the end of the dream, you have no responsibility. When you are woken up, when you are awake, you have the responsibility to live. Sometimes, this responsibility to live seems to be a big torture when you think the change established in change is accidents continuously happening.

Your attitude towards life and others decides whether you are going to grow more and more consciously, or you are going to rewind, recoil into the unconscious zone. If you think, "I think that dream state was much better than this waking state. There were only three tigers chasing me. Here, so many people are chasing me!" – naturally, consciously you plan to rewind, recoil.

All daydreaming is nothing but withdrawing from the waking state due to your own conscious decisions. Understand this word "your own conscious decisions." Whether you perceive something as change which is established again in change, everything is happening with tremendous compassion.

Your desires are respected. Your intentions are revered. You and all your demands, requests are received and accepted by life. Life is here to celebrate itself through you. Life is not sadistic. There is no such thing as life pulling something out of you. It goes on expanding, expanding, expanding, adding itself through you.

First of all, get out of this basic pattern which you carry deeply internally – "Am I qualified for all these things?" Everything you are having and want to have, you are qualified for all of that and much more because life is celebrating itself through you.

You may not be qualified to have all of them, but life is qualified to celebrate all this through you. That deep rooted pattern of self-doubt – "Am I qualified for all these things?" "Am I qualified for all this?" That self-doubt will not allow you to be blissful for more than ten minutes. For ten minutes if you are blissful, it cannot stand - "Are you qualified? Oh, you are jumping around? Let us see how long it goes! You will see, in ten minutes, something will come and you will collapse!" You are constantly preparing yourself for collapse.

It is unfortunate, you don't even believe you are qualified for celebration. As long as you think life is accidents happening, even if you feel joyful, you will think, "Have I done enough tapas for this? Why is this happening? Maybe by mistake it is happening. Let us see. In a few hours, it will become alright." Only when you come to the cognition that the change established in change is consciousness, only from that context tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam (तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्विद्धनम्) can happen.

The second line is beautiful! It says, "With this…" means the context of the first line – "...you may enjoy." All enjoyment will happen to you only if you are clear it is consciously delivered to you, not accidentally stolen by you. As long as you feel you are not qualified, you will be stealing. The more you are stealing, the more you will feel insecure. The more insecure you feel, the more you will feel you are not qualified. The first verse of the first Upaniṣad asks you to break that pattern.

Coveting Vs Enriching

Whatever change, whether you perceive it as good or bad is consciously done to you by a higher consciousness which is more intelligent than you. If you look at your life with this cognition, suddenly you will see, for all the so-called bad things, you will see the reason – life is asking you to reinvent yourself. For all the good things, you will see, you are qualified – life wants to celebrate through you.

The moment you understand you are qualified and life wants to celebrate through you, you will settle with so much peace and joy! It will take away the insecurity you carry. It will break the insecurity you carry. The moment you know that you are qualified, you will not bother to covet anyone's due. You will never feel like coveting, grabbing, grabbing somebody else's wealth. Wealth does not mean only money, gold, jewellery and all that. Even coveting and grabbing somebody's attention is coveting. Coveting, grabbing and stealing anything which belongs to somebody is stealing.

Coveting (kasyasvid) means anything you take from others which is not enriching them. Anything by enriching them, they offer it is an offering. Whole life's transactions are either coveting or offering. Whether it is a simple smile or billion dollars, if you are enriching and they share it, it is an offering. If you are not enriching and taking it, it is coveting. Keep your accounts free. That is the best way to prepare yourself for your death.

Decide! It has nothing to do with quantity. Sometimes, even a small stone can be stuck. Sometimes, even the huge stone ball can be rotating in the water. When you are flowing with enriching, your whole life will flow beautifully like the ball rotating or floating in the water. There will not be friction. All around you life is completely lubricated. There is no incompletion. All around you life is beautifully flowing.

So decide, whether it is your career, personal life, relationships, even with your body – don't covet pleasure from your body. Whenever your body feels tired and you continue to do some action because you think it brings pleasure, it is coveting from your own body. Whether it is relationship with your body, relationship with other person, your career, your attitude towards life and world, human society, anybody, decide from today – tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam (तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्विद्धनम्).

The first line is not an instruction; it is a truth revealed.

īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।

It is a truth revealed.

The second line is an instruction.

तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्विद्धनम् ॥
tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam ॥

It is an instruction.

A person who goes on enriching and enriching, even if he is offered, he never gets bound. When you don't enrich, anything you take is coveting and you are bound by it. Coveting brings bondage, karma and after effects.

Actually, if you understand the first line and set your cognition, the second line is the after effect, the result of it. The only thing you need to renounce is the things you don't have but which you are still thinking you have and living with it. You just need to renounce what you don't have. You don't need to renounce what you have. That is the truth.

All these things if you look, actually all of them you don't have. What is fear? Apprehension about something which has not happened, which is not reality.

What is greed? It is wanting to have something, being obsessed about something which is again not there. End of the day, getting comfortable with fear and greed, or becoming powerless because of fear or greed.

Getting comfortable with greed, or becoming powerless due to fear – both are foolishness because the "change is established in change." That is also pure consciousness.

If you see a knife in the hands of a thief or a robber who is standing next to you, and you see a knife in the hands of your mother – how do you respond to both knives? Mother playfully puts the knife near the neck of a child and says, "Are you not afraid?" The child says, "No! I am not afraid of the knife because it is in your hand! It is in my mother's hand!" Life's knife is in the hands of pure consciousness which is intelligent, compassionate and loves you. It is not in the hands of a robber.

The idea you have is that you are violated. You can never be violated. You can go on trying to convince everyone that you are getting violated. In that process, because you repeat it so many times, you make everyone believe it and you also start believing you are violated. Otherwise no one is violated.

Having the clarity that consciousness fills everything, by consciousness all this is filled. If you understand and look at it with this cognition, you will have answers for the one thousand questions you cherish. "Oh, if everything is consciousness, why is there so much suffering in the world?" If your cognition changes, you will also have an answer for that question, but you will not be able to utter it for others. There are many answers you cannot utter, because it will create only more cross questions, not the solution.

Understand this one truth: Everything is consciousness! So your secret crush, or the fear of getting crushed, both will become meaningless when you understand everything is consciousness. Secret crush, fear of getting crushed, both will become meaningless when you understand that whole life is consciousness.

When you bring this īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat (ईशावास्यमदिं सर्वं यत्कञ्चि जगत्यां जगत्) as your cognition, your secret crush and fear of getting crushed – both will be crushed. Only from that context, tena tyaktenabhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam (तेन त्यक्तेनभुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्विद्धनम्) happens.

If you are demanding attention from somebody without enriching that person, it is coveting! It is kasyasvid. Ramakrishna says beautifully, "This crow thinks he is very brilliant and intelligent. Nobody can throw stones at him, kill him or anything. Finally, he goes and eats filth!"

Same way, this secret corner of you which you believe is a powerful strategist who takes all the most intelligent decisions to keep your life together, about which you are very proud of – that part of you is exactly like the crow. It acts very intelligent, thinks it can covet everyone's wealth and it is very brilliant.

Finally, just because of that small part, your whole life is filled with fear, self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial (SDHD). You really are a better person than you imagine yourself to be. If you come to this clarity, you will understand that secretly you don't even need to plan for this coveting.

Most of us go on planning for coveting. Either we wait for an opportunity to do it without getting caught, or we wait for the courage to do it without getting caught. Opportunity or courage are decisions from your very being. From now on, decide - only enriching! Give more so that what is given back to you is only an offering, not coveting. This is the exactly word "mā gṛdhaḥ (मा गृधः)" means don't covet.

Non-stealing, non-demanding, brings you freedom. Realizing you don't need to, brings you the ultimate freedom. Realizing you don't need to, brings you ultimate freedom. Keep yourself in the cognition of īśāvāsyamidagṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat (ईशावास्यमदिगं् सर्वं यत्कञ्चि जगत्यां जगत्), keep yourself in the context of "by the consciousness all is filled, whatever moving there is, which is established in ever moving."

All your secret strategies for coveting only bring SDHD (self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial) in you. So, drop all the plans you have secretly for coveting and understand honestly, sincerely you don't need to covet. You can live your life by going on enriching. Enriching can be an amazing, powerful, ultimately secure and showering lifestyle. Coming to this conclusion that enriching will be an amazing, powerful, secure, showering lifestyle is Completion.

The day you come to this conclusion consciously that enriching is an amazing, ultimate, secure, showering lifestyle, you come to Completion and all the fears disappear. Freedom simply happens. That day is your Enlightenment Day! That moment is the Completion moment for you!

Whatever Exists is Energy

What science has declared, the last word of science is energy. It is the first word from the first Veda of the first Upaniṣad. The first Veda is Ṛgveda. The first Upaniṣad is Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad. The first statement is īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ (ईशावास्यमदिं सर्वं). Whatever exists is energy. Where science ends, spirituality starts.

Whatever exists is energy. There is no border line, boundary between matter and energy. There is no watertight compartment between matter and energy. Gross energy is matter. Subtle matter is energy. When it is subtle, it is energy. When it is gross, it is matter. There is no border line between these two.

All these five elements are nothing but energy – Earth, water, fire, air, ether. In the East, we had the tradition of worshipping all these five elements. Spirituality started by worshipping these elements only. In the earlier upāsanās from Śvetāśvatara Upaniṣad, there is no mention of Gods or Goddesses. There is no form. In Kenopaniṣad and all, there is no form mentioned. But nature is worshipped because nature is the first doorway towards the Divine.

In these five energies, Earth is an energy which you can understand. When a stone is used, what effect does it have on somebody? If the Earth is compressed, how will it become? You can physically see the Earth. So, Earth is energy. It is easy to understand. Water is energy. You know if the flood comes, what the water can do. Water is energy which you can understand. When the forest fire happens, you know what the result is. Fire is energy which you can understand. When a cyclone or a tornado happens, you can understand that air is energy.

But we miss to understand that ether is also energy. Because it is so subtle, so sensitive, we can't feel the happenings in the space of ether. We can feel the happenings in all these four spaces – Earth, water, fire, air. You can feel and sense it. Because of that, we can understand. We forget to understand that space (ether) is also an energy, a power. It is more subtle and more powerful. When it becomes subtler, subtler, subtler, it becomes more powerful, more energetic.

The science is created by the Masters to handle the power of ether and to use the power of ether in a proper way. To handle the Earth, we have a lot of mechanisms and instruments. To handle the water, we have a lot of things. To handle the fire, we have a lot of things. You can use the fire through a proper oven and a proper furnace. So we have designed so many things to use these four elements. Our Masters have designed Vāstuśāstra to use the ether element, to use the space element. The vāstu, the structure of the house is designed and the science is created to use the space.

Three Types of Spaces

There are three types of spaces. One is the Cidākāśa. Cidākāśa means the space which is inside your being, inside your body, the space from which you operate. The second thing is called Katakāśa (the space in which you are living). Third thing is called Mahākāśa (the whole sky, whole Prapañca).

The ākāśa which is inside your body is called Cidākāśa. The ākāśa which is the space under which you are living, which surrounds you is called Katakāśa. The ākāśa which is all over the Universe, the Prapañca is called Mahākāśa.

The Mahākāśa is always pure, energetic and powerful. But the Katakāśa gets impure by your thoughts. The Katakāśa has the capacity to be energized or to lose its energy by your thoughts. It acts more or less like a living being.

Never think your house is a matter. Your house is energy. It is an expression of energy. You can understand this one example. If the water is compressed by a compressor, it becomes energy. The air, if it is compressed by a compressor, you can even move a train. It becomes energy.

Same way, if the ether is compressed in some particular space, in particular shape, again that becomes energy. Iron piece, if it is a square, it is different. The same one kg of iron, if it is a rectangle bar, the effect or the power is totally different. If it becomes an I-bar, it will be stronger and it is totally different. The shape plays a major role even in the gross materials. Iron is one of the elements that belongs to the Earth element. The Earth element, according to its shape, the effect and energy varies.

The same way for ether (ākāśh) also. According to the shape in which it is locked or it is blocked, the energy changes. It's a very subtle concept but if you understand, you can understand the great gift or the great research which our Masters have done, or the great sacrifice which they did by doing all this research, creating all this wisdom and giving it to us.

If the Earth is formed in one shape, that creates a different purpose, that creates a different effect. If it is formed in other shape, that is used for a different purpose and gives a different result. The same way, the ether can be handled. It can be used in different forms and in different shapes. The technique to use the ether at its best, to its maximum level is called Vāstuśāstra.

When the ether is put in one particular size, inside the room, inside that space, whoever lives in it, they are controlled by that ether and that ether is in turn controlled by them. Their thoughts affect the ether and the ether affects their thoughts.

For example: if you go out and sit in the open sky, nature, by your own feeling, you can understand your being feels expanded. That is why we always love to go and sit outside for relaxation. We always try to go outside and sit. You feel something; your personality is expanding. You become a little larger or your boundary is getting expanded. When you enter a house where the roof height is only eight feet or nine feet tall, even though your head is not hitting it, you feel like you are being compressed or shrinking. Your mind does not feel free or your thoughts are not flowing. The shape in which you are living, the space in which you are living plays a major role on your mind and thoughts.

Same way, your thoughts play a major role in the space in which you are living. House is not a place where you live. House is how you live. It is the extension of your personality. It is the extension of your being. One more thing you need to understand, in vāstu, there is a sūtra which is proven in the modern day – "The rocks, plants, trees or furniture, everything responds to your thoughts."

One of the leading spiritual magazines carried a report where they planted three same types of roses in the pots. The water was given the same way. The minerals were given the same way. Same type of care was offered. Only one difference is, all the three were kept in different rooms. Every day the owner would go to one plant and curse that plant – "You will never be alive. You will never do anything properly." Continuously that plant was being cursed. The second plant, he would not do anything. He would just pour water and go away. The third plant, he would go and say, "You are going to have beautiful flowers. Don't bother about it. Your life is going to be totally different." Just words, nothing else.

First plant, he would go and say all the negative things. Second plant, he would go and pour water, then go away. Third plant, he would go and speak in a very loving way. This research was done for 11 days, 21 times, by 21 different persons. By the 11th day, the same thing was repeated. They said that all 21 times, the first plant died; all 21 times, the second plant grew normally. The third plant grew twice as much and was flowering twice as much. You can understand how much the thoughts are reciprocated or thoughts are affecting the surroundings.

And one more thing, like an ECG, now they feel the vibrations of the trees. In an experiment, the researchers had connected some 10 trees in one garden with that machine. Their vibrations were read by the machine. The woodcutter was asked to enter into the garden thinking about cutting one tree. He was already given the instruction – "You think that you are going to cut this tree and enter the garden." The report says, only that tree graph went haywire, not the other trees. That particular tree graph went haywire when he entered the garden with the idea to cut that tree. So, when the same man entered without any idea of cutting that tree, the graph was going normal and smooth. Through these few things, you can understand very clearly that your thoughts are clearly reciprocated, or your thoughts are affecting the surroundings.

The Vāstuśāstra says, "All your thoughts are captured and stored in your house where you stay." Never think that where you stay, the place is a dead place. It is an alive energy. The houses where you stay, the ether has the capacity to hold your thoughts or to collect your thoughts. Whatever you think, those thoughts just get settled in your house, in the place where you stay. It is like cobwebs. For 15 days if you don't clear your house, your house will be surrounded by cobwebs. The same way, if you don't do meditation or spiritual activities, your house will be surrounded by negative cobwebs, negative thoughts. Cobwebs are physical things which you can see and clear. But the spiritual things, the subtle things, thoughts, you do not know how to see. You will not know how to clear.

Whether you believe it or not, whether you want it or not, your thoughts are stored in the place where you stay. Never think that the house is a dead space. House is a living being, a living space. When they describe Lakṣmī, they say the Gruha is a Lakṣmī – Gruha Lakṣmī. The very house is Lakṣmī.

The thoughts which you radiate, the thoughts which you emit are only going to get stored, or in a way you are energizing it. You are continuously energizing the house by your presence. It is up to you to decide whether to energize positively or negatively. Your thoughts are continuously energizing your house. They are continuously energizing your house either positively or negatively. All your thoughts are energizing.

Most of the time we have only discontentment, dissatisfaction and fighting. Even if you don't fight with others, you fight with yourself. The guilt and all these thoughts only you are releasing. So when you release all these thoughts, naturally the whole space in which you are living gets totally contaminated. If the river is flowing, it is pure and it makes others pure also. Whomsoever gets into it, makes them pure. If the same river becomes a small pool, what happens? First, it gets green and mossy. Then whoever enters into it, they get dirty also.

Same way, if the house is not flowing with energy, if it is not bubbling with joy, if it is not bubbling with ecstasy, it is just going to become like a pool. All our negativity and all our vibrations are just stored.

Presence of the Master

When a Master enters the house, what happens? Master is like Mahākāśa. You are Cidākāśa. The space in which you live is Katakāśa. The space in which you are living is more or less like a pool. The Master is like Mahākāśa, the river. Mahākāśa means the open sky. The enlightened person is the Universe, because he has nothing internally. Enlightened person has no thoughts, not even good thoughts internally. He has neither good thoughts, nor bad thoughts. He is just emptiness. He is just an open sky. Through him the energy radiates, nothing else.

Master means, he is the man who has no thoughts, who has no mind. He is the representative of Mahākāśa. So when Mahākāśa enters into the Katakāśa, simply it is flooded with energy. It is like a big river entering into a small pool. What will happen to that dirty pool? It will simply be washed, cleansed and filled with new water.

The same thing happens in a multiscale and very big way when the Master enters into the Katakāśa. When the Master enters into the space where you live, the whole thing is totally rejuvenated, the whole thing is recreated. They say the vastu becomes vāstu. Your thoughts become vāstu, which means the place where you live. Vastu becomes vāstu. Your thoughts only become the space where you live. The place is different and the space is different. The place can be cleaned by a vacuum cleaner but the space can be cleaned only by meditation.

Say 'YES' to Life

एवं त्वयि नान्यथेतोऽस्ति न कर्म लिप्यते नरे ॥ २ ॥
kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchataṃ samāḥ |
evaṃ tvayi nānyatheto'sti na karma lipyate nare || 2 ||

The translation says, "Even while doing deeds here, one may desire to live a hundred years. Thus on you, not otherwise that this is it, the deed adheres, not the man."

This verse is the essence of Hindu Tradition. Again and again Hindu Tradition is all for life. Live so powerfully, so clearly that all your patterns, engrams, fears don't find any place. You are just radiating. You are just overflowing. Live! Live! Live!

कुर्वन्नेवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषेच्छतं समाः ।
एवं त्वयि नान्यथेतोऽस्ति न कर्म लिप्यते नरे ॥ २ ॥
kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchataṃ samāḥ |
evaṃ tvayi nānyatheto'sti na karma lipyate nare || 2 ||

This verse is actually a blessing. The Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis expect you to achieve everything just by the first verse.

तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्विद्धनम् ॥ 1 ॥
īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।
tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam ॥ 1 ॥

They do not expect you to have any doubt. With the kind of space they are carrying, the Ṛṣis feel with this verse, you are enlightened! Now, you just need a blessing. A disciple who is enlightened needs the blessing from the Guru. Actually, this verse is a blessing.

कुर्वन्नेवेह कर्माणि जिजिविशेच्छतगं् समाः ।
एवं त्वयि नन्यथेतो'स्ति न कर्म लिप्यते नरे ॥२॥ kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijiviśecchatagṃ samāḥ ।
evaṃ tvayi nanyatheto'sti na karma lipyate nare ॥2॥

kurvan (कुर्वन्) – performing.

eva (एव) – alone.

karmāṇi (कर्माणि) – as per the earlier sūtras' context - working, being active, established in the cognition of the earlier sūtras, earlier verse – īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat (ईशावास्यमिदं सर्वं यत्कञ्चि जगत्यां जगत्).

jijīviṣet (जजीवषित्) – you should desire to live. You should not fall into depression, collapse, knowing that all change is established in change and it is consciousness; so what is there? It should not make you feel tired or bored.

shatagṃ samāḥ (सहतगं् समाः) – literally hundred years. In those days, hundred was a figure or a number. To indicate forever and ever, they said, "Hundreds of years." So it is not a hundred years but hundreds of years!

tvayi (त्वयि) – you.

na (न) – not.

anyata (अन्यत) – other alternative.

asti (अस्ति) – is.

na (न): – not.

lipyate (लप्यिते) – adheres.

nare (नरे): – man.

itaḥ (इतः) – than this.

Actually in this verse, the Upaniṣads are declaring, internalize the great, beautiful first verse of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad.

तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्विद्धनम् ॥ 1 ॥
īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।
tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam ॥ 1 ॥

By internalizing this verse and by making this verse as your cognition, now the Ṛṣis are telling you, Upaniṣad is declaring:

"Live forever in this cognition."

Sometimes when you feel, "Everything is God, everything is consciousness; so what is there for me? Come on, get a blanket. Let me do Nidrā Devī Pūjā (worship Goddess of sleep)!" Everyone wants to do that one pūjā happily! Unfortunately, many are not able to do even that pūjā! Nidrā Devī Pūjā means falling asleep!

Knowing this truth, don't give up on yourself! This truth should be inspiring you, exciting you, entertaining you, expanding you. Actually, when you internalize that there is no need to worry about anything, change is established in change, and even the change established in change is pure consciousness, you become free from all fears and greed. You become so excited, alive, living, bubbling, joyful. You just know your whole life is in front of you. When you feel your whole life is in front of you with so much excitement, you will look at the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis, Upaniṣads – "Now what do you want me to do?" Then, Upaniṣad will be giving you the blessing.

एवं त्वयि नान्यथेतोऽस्ति न कर्म लिप्यते नरे ॥ २ ॥
kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchataṃ samāḥ ।
evaṃ tvayi nānyatheto'sti na karma lipyate nare ॥ 2 ॥

"One should desire to live in this world for hundreds of years, all the while doing his deeds dispassionately as sanctioned by the scriptures, and treating them as his offerings to Īśvara, the quintessential Supreme Lord, the Lord of the whole Creation. In this way, the deeds done by you shall not cling to you, the deeds will not cause their good or bad effects upon the doer of those deeds, simply because they are being done with the doer mentally convinced that he has not done them, he is not intellectually and mentally committed to these deeds, or they are done without his claiming any rights over the fruits of those deeds. There is no other way by which a man can free himself from the bondage created by the deeds. O, beings, enjoy the life! Live the life being established in this cognition and living!"

Kāmika Āgama – Lifestyle Instructed by Mahādeva

If Upaniṣads are the ultimate principle book which gives you Enlightenment and cognition of pure Enlightenment, the book Kāmika Āgama is the ultimate precise lifestyle book with direct instruction from Mahādeva to Pārvatī. As far as the science of Enlightenment is concerned, Upaniṣads are our first and foremost principal book for Hinduism and for the whole of humanity.

As far as day-to-day lifestyle on how to brush, how to take bath, how to wash ourselves, how to dress, how to apply sacred ash, and how to wear Rudrākṣa – in all these, Kāmika Āgama is the book for the whole world, directly given by Mahādeva to Devī. This is the book for the whole Hindu tradition. It is the lifestyle to cause your reality. The exact meaning of the word "Kāmika Āgama" is lifestyle to cause your reality.

It has such precise instructions on what should be the size of your brush, what should be the way, where, how, which direction you should be facing and taking a bath. All the instructions are there. It is just mind blowing because of its exhaustive, precise narration and instructions handed down.

Let us start imbibing Kāmika Āgama as much as we can in our lives. The best way to exist is as Mahādeva said, as Mahādeva revealed, as He has ordained, as He has given.

तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्विद्धनम् ॥ 1 ॥
īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।
tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam ॥ 1 ॥

"Yes, I have this cognition now. The whole future is in front of me. I am free to live as I want. How should I live?" Then Mahādeva comes down and gives the instruction, "Come on! Take this Kāmika Āgama. This is the way you should live." Understanding how to cook offerings for God to how to offer, how to do everything -it is not just a fashion book, makeup book, cookbook, hygiene book, dressing book, ritual book, worship book, health book – it is all these put together.

कुर्वन्नेवेह कर्माणि जिजिविशेच्छतग्ं समाः ।
एवं त्वयि नन्यथेतो'स्ति न कर्म लिप्यते नरे ॥२॥
kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijiviśecchatagṃ samāḥ ।
evaṃ tvayi nanyatheto'sti na karma lipyate nare ॥2॥

Performing your actions, live forever blissfully! Please imbibe Kāmika Āgama as much as you can joyfully. Don't feel bound. Don't feel restricted. Don't feel conditioned. As much as possible, make Kāmika Āgama as your lifestyle.

Decide 'For Life' – Yours and Others'

Please understand exactly what this verse means – "You should live! Your cognition should decide to live!" One of the biggest problems all human beings have, whether it is you don't have money, or you don't have enough excitement and inspiration to run your life, or you don't have enough money to run your life in the external world, or you don't have enough energy to run your body, or you don't have enough energy to run your mind, whatever you don't have – please be very clear, it is the side effect from some of your decisions not to live.

Always support life. You decide at some points: "Better not to live. Instead of living this kind of a life, better not to live." You should always think: "I will live in a better way. Wherever I need to transform, no question of better not to live than living in this way." Whether your body does not have energy to get up, or your mind does not have enough excitement, whatever you may think you lack is nothing but the side effect of the decisions you made in your past against life. So, through this verse, Upaniṣad declares: "Always, always, decide for life!"

Always, always, always at any moment, decide for life! Your decision against life is SDHD (self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial). Actually, physically when you feel bored, that comes as tiredness. Mentally when you feel tired, that comes as boredom.

All pain is suppressed anger. Whenever you become angry, you become violent and decide against life. Whenever you choose for life, your anger melts down into love and compassion. Any decisions, even for people who attack and cherish enmity towards you, never decide against their life; never decide they should die or they should suffer. Always decide they should not interfere in your life. Any attempt they do to harass you or interfere in your life should fail.

Decide only for life. When somebody attacks you, tries to harass you, if you decide, "Let them be killed or be destroyed," it is against life. Always decide: "Let them not be able to disturb me or harass me. Let them fail in their attempt to harass me or disturb me." That's enough. "Let them transform so as not to disturb me or harass me." That's enough. That is the decision for life.

Whenever you decide for life, you become so powerful and strong, naturally no one will be able to harass you or disturb you. Cosmos will decide what to do with the people who are trying to attack you or harass you. Cosmos will decide what to do with them. God will decide what to do with them.

For you, be very clear, you always decide for life. A person who decides for life will be a Tyāgarāja. He will be such an amazing sacrificer out of love, without even thinking he is sacrificing. Always decide for life.

There is a beautiful story of the great Ṛṣi Dadhīchi. He even gave up his own body, his own spine to be used as a weapon for the victory of the Gods, Devatās. He always decides for life. He did not decide against his life. He already achieved what he needs to achieve through his body. That is why he was ready to give it up if it is going to be useful for somebody.

Keep this as your cognition:

कुर्वन्न्एवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषेच्छतग्म् समाः |

kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchatagṁ samāḥ |

One should always decide for life – yours and others. And, whenever you decide for life – yours and others, it will never be in conflict with each other.

You and others always being in conflict means living in an animal world. You and others when it does not exist in conflict, you become a human being. You and others when it is complementing each other, you become Devatā, in the space of Devatā (divine being). So, if you are living in a space where there is conflict between yours and others' lives, you are still living the life of beasts, animals.

If you are living a life where there is no conflict between yours and others' lives, you have come to human space, you have come to Bhūloka (planet Earth).

If there is always a conflict between yours and others' lives, you are in Pātāla (lower plane). If you are in the space of no conflict between you and others' lives, you are in Bhūloka. When your life and others' lives complement each other, you are in Devaloka (heavenly plane). So, you decide what kind of loka (abode or plane) you want to reside in. Always decide for life!

कुर्वन्न्एवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषेच्छतग्म् समाः |

kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchatagṁ samāḥ |

Decide To Live Hundreds Of Years

Today, sit and complete all the decisions you took against life. Remember, whenever you make the decision: "Instead of this kind of life, better I leave, better I go" – all these decisions, thoughts you engaged, entertained, now it is time you complete with all that. If there is some complication, contradiction, decide: "I will live! There is no question about it! If there is an incompletion, conflict or complication, I will complete it and make myself better. The decision to live is unquestioned."

Do not be tired of your decision to live. Do not weaken your decision to live. Do not abuse your decision to live. All disease is just the expression of your unconscious decisions against life. Your decision to live can change your DNA. Just this one verse: Completion with all your decisions against life.

Just this one verse, take it as a command from Cosmos, command from Dharma Devatā. Dharma Devatā serves Kālabhairava as a dog. The dog of Kālabhairava is Dharma Devatā. Dharma is the dog of Kālabhairava.

It is directly from Upaniṣads: Decide for life! Complete with all your decisions against life. Knowingly or unknowingly, whenever you decide against life, now complete with all that; that's enough. Your DNA will have different programming, different energy.

All your decisions against life should be completed. Incompletions created against life should be completed. All the incompletions against life, all your decisions against life will be rooted in fear and your wrong belief you may not be able to live.

Creating a delusion you may not be able to live, convincing you not to live, making you decide not to live and not living, is fear. With fear you can do both: one, bhāg lo (भाग लो) – run. Second, bhāg lo (भाग लो) – participate. Bhāg lo (run) or bhāg lo (participate).

Decide for life. If there is a delusion that you may not be able to live, don't decide that you don't want to live. No! Decide: "I will complete this and continue to live. No question of giving up!" Not to give up on yourself and others is the decision expected from you from this verse:

kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchatagm samāḥ |

This verse is a spiritual support for all the sick, weak, tired, poor people on the planet Earth. Whether it is a physical sickness, mental tiredness or boredom in life or poverty in your outer world, whatever may be the problem, this one verse "kurvann eveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchatagṁ samāḥ (कुर्वन्न् एवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषेच्छतग्म् समाः)" is solution.

Fear has two expansions: 'Forget Everything And Run' or 'Face Everything And Rise'

All your decisions not to live are made in the powerless space. All your decisions not to live are made when your stomach is upset. All your decisions against life are made when your stomach is upset, when you have weak guts. So, whenever you have a stomach upset, don't think, brood over and decide about life. Just take a little Haritaki powder and clean. Then sit and plan your life. Do not entertain, believe and allow anti-life decisions in you. No situation can make you powerless, give up on yourself. Always decide:

kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchatagm samāḥ |

"Whether my boss is hitting at me, or my spouse is firing at me, or society is suppressing me, no question of shrinking. No question of making even a single decision against life. No!" When you decide for life, it will always be in tune with them also. Even they will start falling in tune with you beautifully and become part of you. That is why I insist on

kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchatagm samāḥ |

Always decide for life. Not having money in your bank account cannot make you poor. Poverty is you declaring bankruptcy voluntarily. Not having money in your bank account, you giving up and declaring bankruptcy is poverty. Same way, feeling tired is not giving up on life. Deciding not to get out of tiredness is giving up on life.

Beautifully, Upaniṣad declares: "kurvanneveha karmāṇi (कुर्वन्नेवेह कर्माणि)" – one should decide. 'Should!' - It is an instruction. It is blessing cum instruction. Not 'one may decide,' 'one can decide,' 'one will...' No! One SHOULD decide to live in this world for a hundred years, all the while doing his deeds dispassionately from the context of this earlier verse:

तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्यस्विद्धनम् ॥ 1 ॥

īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।
tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasyasviddhanam ॥ 1 ॥

From that context, one should decide to live forever. The moment you decide to live, complete with all your decisions not to live and drop, your very DNA changes!

There was an incident of a Buddhist monk's mummified body found in Mongolia, nearly two hundred years old. The Dalai Lama's personal physician, who is also a monk, examined the body and declared that the monk is not dead — he is still in a meditative state. He identified this state as Tukdam.

In Saṁskṛta, we call it Turīya; in Pāli, it is known as Tukdam. He confirmed that the monk is established in the state of Turīya.

The body, though mummified, was perfectly preserved — hair, skin, form — everything intact. If he were truly dead for two centuries, such preservation would have been impossible.

This is the unique science only Eastern mystics and monks can understand — the science of not using the body, yet not being dead. In the Eastern traditions, this is known as Jīva Samādhi.

The Buddhists have chosen to preserve his body, to keep it intact, worship it, and revere it as a living symbol of Jīva Samādhi — the state of Turīya.

It is just a clear decision to live. If any of you want to achieve this state, all you need to do is only one thing – just complete with all your incompletions, your decisions made consciously and unconsciously against life. Nothing should make you powerless. Nothing can make you powerless. Life is available to you eternally. Eternal life is available to you.

Sit and spend time in penning down all the moments you made decisions against life, the thought currents you entertained against life, the thought trends you entertained against life. Pen down all those incompletions and incidents, and complete with them.

Once you complete with all your decisions against life and this order, command by Upaniṣad – kurvann eveha karmāṇi jijīviṣec chatagṁ samāḥ (कुर्वन्न् एवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषिच् छतग्म् समाः) – when this becomes your inner space as a Vedānta Kesarī (The Lion of Vedānta), when you roar – kurvann eveha karmāṇi jijīviṣec chatagṁ samāḥ (कुर्वन्न् एवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषिच् छतग्म् समाः)" – the state of this Mongolian monk is your birthright and you will all achieve it.

Always decide for life. You have a right to live. With this context of īśāvāsyamidaṃ sarvaṃ yatkiñca jagatyāṃ jagat (ईशावास्यमदिं सर्वं यत्कञ्च जगत्यां जगत्), decide to live and align to this context more and more even if you have not achieved it. Just because you have not yet achieved that context, do not decide not to live or go against life. Decide to live. Declare and decide: "My DNA, I have the authority to reprogram, deprogram, program as I want!" Decide to live!

Even if one corner of you has self-doubt by saying, "I have decided many times not to live. What to do?" say "I don't care! Now I am deciding to live. Whenever those decisions against life come up, I will complete and clean it up. I am declaring and deciding to live!"

As a disciple of Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis, as a follower of Upaniṣads, declare: "kurvann eveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchatagṁ samāḥ (कुर्वन्न् एवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषिच् छतग्म् समाः) – I decide to live. My decision is for life. From now on, not only consciously, even unconsciously, subconsciously, I will not entertain decisions against life. I will entertain only decisions for life."

Decision for life is Ketu. Decision against life is Rāhu. The power which makes Ketu live is Guru. Even when the demon went and stood in the line of Devatās to receive the nectar, his own SDHD part was not complete. That is why when he put the nectar into his mouth, before he could swallow and digest, his head was cut off. But, his desire to live cannot be destroyed. That is why he became Ketu and Rāhu. His SDHD became Rāhu, his decision to live became Ketu and he continues to exist. So, finally the SDHD failed. Understand, decide to live. Deciding to live is the message from Upaniṣads to all of you. Look in, look in, look in, look in, look in and purify yourself again and again to your very DNA. Decide to live.

Any of your decisions against any of this, is a decision against life. Even your decision to entertain tiredness by lying down in bed and supporting that tiredness, your decision to encourage boredom by lying down and withdrawing from life, is a decision against life. So, the essence of this Upaniṣad's declaration is to decide for life.

kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijīviṣecchatagṁ samāḥ |

Deciding for life is making Lakṣmī live in your heart and awakening Lakṣmī in your heart. Deciding for Lakṣmī to live in your heart and awakening Lakṣmī in your DNA is what is the meaning of Viṣṇu awakening Lakṣmī during the churning of the milky ocean, Mahādeva kept the Hālāhala poison in His throat and becoming Nīlakaṇṭha. All poison can be used as medicine by the right person in the right direction and in the right way. All medicine is poison, but when used properly it becomes medicine. So, who else knows the technology of using the ultimate poison in the ultimate proper way other than Mahādeva! That is why He kept it in his kaṇṭha (throat) and uses it properly as medicine just through His breathing, His words and by blowing through His mouth. That is why when He blows through His mouth, the Kuṇḍalinī Snake which has taken a little bit of that poison awakens and starts dancing. When this poison air comes out, that poison feels awakened. Decide for life. When you decide for life, even poison becomes medicine with you.

The first thing the Upaniṣads declare: Decide to live. It is not as simple as you think. It is really deep. Every step of life, don't give up! Go on deciding to live. In every opportunity, be open to live. You are living as long as you are opening yourself for life.

If you think wealth is life, you should be constantly opening up for wealth and taking responsibility for it till the end of your so-called end of time.

If you think power is your life, you should be constantly opening up to power till the end of your so-called life.

In every step, whatever you believe as life, opening yourself for that constantly is saying yes to life.

"One should decide to live hundreds of years" does not mean you just decide to breathe, inhale and exhale for hundreds of years. No! Whatever you believe as life, open up for that.

Be very clear, what you decide as life, being available for that and saying "yes" to that constantly is kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijiviśecchatagṃ samāḥ (कुर्वन्न्एवेह कर्माणि जिजीविषेच्छतगम् समाः). If you think money is life, even at the last moment of your life you should be saying "yes" to it. If you think power is life, even at the last moment of your life you should be saying "yes" to it and making decisions for it. If you think Enlightenment is life, you should be saying "yes" to it even at the last moment of your life.

Saying yes to life means, not just saying yes to breathing, inhaling and exhaling,Saying yes to life means, deciding to live. It means, deciding to live and take responsibility for whatever you believe as life. Deciding for what you believe as pleasure, life, joy, bliss and taking the responsibility continuously for it is making the decision to live.

First you need to have a clear understanding of what you consider as life. It is not just deciding to breathe, inhale and exhale. What you consider as joy, the purpose of your life, inspiration for your life, excitement for your life, saying "yes" to that, deciding for it is saying 'yes' to life.

Nothing is right or wrong. Deciding for political power is not something wrong. Deciding for money is not something wrong. Deciding for Enlightenment is not something wrong. Nothing is right or wrong. Your decision without conflict makes everything right. Your decision with conflict makes everything wrong.

If you have self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial (SDHD), even if you decide for Advaita, it will be wrong. If you don't have SDHD, even if you decide for money or political power or any mundane so-called ordinary things, it will not be wrong. Finally, it boils down to the strength of your decision.

"One should decide to live in this world for hundreds of years, all the while doing his deeds dispassionately as sanctioned by the scriptures."

Decide to live! At some point, your decisions may prove themselves to be not sufficient. You may have to reinvent yourself at one point in life. "Even then, when that point comes, I will reinvent myself. As of now, with the knowledge I have, the clarity I have, the completion space I have, this is what is right, I decide for it. Even if I have to change it later on, reinvent myself, that is okay. Now, I am deciding. When I need to reinvent myself, without a blink of an eye I will decide to reinvent myself." Dropping the old decisions and understanding and entering into the new decisions and understanding is renunciation.

Renunciation Without Giving Up Tradition

The level of Completion you hold now determines the possibilities - the sādhya - that open up in your life. You may feel, "This, this, this I will do; this is my decision for life." Then, as you grow deeper into that Completion, newer and higher possibilities will begin to open up.

At such moments, the ability to stand up again and decide for life, again and again - the ability to either renounce old decisions and move to new ones, or assimilate the old into the new - this is true renunciation (sannyāsa).

Often, in the name of renunciation, people simply throw away things - even parts of tradition that need not be renounced.

That is not real renunciation.

The real process is this:

1. Decide for life.

2. Be absolutely clear about what you consider as life: What is your passion? What excites you? What inspires you? What brings you joy, bliss, and fulfillment?

3. Take responsibility for that and live it fully.

4. While living it, new knowledge and new possibilities will open up. In that moment, again decide for life, decide for expansion — and reinvent yourself.When reinventing, if the old decisions can be digested into the new, keep them. If not, let them go without fear. Renounce them and move forward.

This is exactly what the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad declares:

kurvann eveha karmāṇi jijīviṣec chataṃ samāḥ - By living and radiating life-affirming action, one should desire to live a hundred years.

There are some people who try to get attention and sympathy by saying: "Only after I die will you all know how important I am!"

What foolishness! Just to prove your importance, you want to die?!

Live and prove your importance — not by dying.

Prove it through your life, your contribution, your radiance.

But many times, you encourage such thoughts — oscillations, conflicting and contradicting patterns.

If you decide you are a sannyāsī, then start living it now. That is Mahādeva's instruction. Don't think, "Till I take sannyās, let me try one or two affairs. If nothing works out, then I'll plan for sannyās." No! That is not how Mahādeva teaches.

Or, if you decide, "I am going to get married and live," live that fully. But when new possibilities open up later in life, have the guts to reinvent yourself. Don't remain stuck just because you once took a decision.

Always decide for life.

All self-conflicting decisions are self-pain-inflicting decisions.

Entertaining panic patterns, anxiety attacks, fears — all these are nothing but deciding against life.

Understand: Intelligence means knowing that whatever you fear will never be as bad as you imagine it to be.

– If you fear poverty, when it happens, it will not be as bad as you imagined.

– If you fear disease, when it happens, it will not be as bad as you imagined.

So, stop engaging with pain patterns. Stop entertaining anxiety and fear. Because every time you do, you are making a decision against life.

Power of Free Will

Your every thought counts. Your every decision counts.

Understand: Human birth alone has free will. Neither Devatās (celestial beings) nor asuras (demons) have it.

Devatās enjoy the pleasures of their past karmas.

Asuras and beings in Naraka suffer the pains of their past karmas.

Only humans can create fresh karmas, take new decisions, and redirect their destiny.

This is why śāstras glorify the human body as the greatest opportunity.

- śreyas ca preyas ca manuṣyam etas tau samparītya vivinakti dhīraḥ
Kaṭha Upaniṣad 1.2.2

Both the good (śreyas) and the pleasant (preyas) approach man. The wise one examines both and chooses śreyas. Only humans have this power of choice. Neither gods nor demons stand at this crossroads.

- labdhvā sudurlabham idaṁ bahu-sambhavānte mānuṣyam arthadam anityam apiha dhīraḥ
Śrīmad Bhāgavatam 11.9.29
After many births, one attains the rare human body, which, though temporary, can bestow the highest purpose.

Human life is called sudurlabham - extremely rare - because only here the arthadam (capacity to attain the ultimate purpose) exists.

In Devaloka, Indra can enjoy nectar and Rambhā's dance, but cannot invite a new dancer. His enjoyment is bound by past karmas.

In Naraka, if allotted to Krimi-bhakṣya (eaten by worms), you cannot say, "Please change worms to ants." No choice is given. On Earth, however, even in the middle of suffering, you can pause, re-decide, and redirect your life.

The Unique Power of Free Will in Bhūloka

Neither Naraka (hell) nor Svarga (heaven) grants you the right of individual will.

Only here, on Bhūloka (planet Earth), you are given the sacred privilege of puruṣakāra - the ability to choose, to decide, to rewrite your destiny.

Please use it strongly, actively — as the Upaniṣads thunder:

uttiṣṭhata jāgrata prāpya varān nibodhata
(Kaṭha Up. 1.3.14) -
Arise! Awake! Attain the Highest by making the right choice.

You might have decided two thousand times against life. But if you decide now, "From this very moment, I correct all my past decisions against life. Whether they are two hundred, two thousand, or twenty thousand — I decide for life, for dharma, for Paramādvaita."

That one decision is enough to insert itself into your very DNA.

It will reprogram, re-align, and re-structure your bio-memory and muscle-memory to your new way of existence.

Every active decision, every living thought has power.

When you decide here, on Earth, it does not stay within you alone. Your decision immediately creates a ripple in the Sun, the Moon, Saturn, and the entire Cosmos.

In Svarga, Indra cannot decide for a new life; he only enjoys the cumulative results of his past karma. In Tapoloka, a Muni may sit in samādhi — but he cannot decide to step out for shopping! He is bound by his decision to remain in tapas. In all higher or lower lokas, there is enjoyment or suffering, but no fresh decision-making.

This world alone is so full of choice, variety, colourfulness. Why? Because here, you hold free will.

Wherever there is will, there is also responsibility. Your freedom is your responsibility.

Science of Prayer

The Science of Thought and Cosmic Tathāstu

You need to know that every thought you create vibrates in the Cosmos - in the Sun, Moon, Jupiter, and Saturn. You are responsible for every thought you generate, every thought you attest, every thought you say 'yes' to.

Now, you can declare: "I may have messed up a lot in the past. But now I decide: I erase all the mess I created. From this moment, I am deciding for life. Let my DNA start reprogramming, aligning, and flowing for life."

The moment this decision is declared, it immediately reverberates in the Sun, Moon, Jupiter, Saturn, Rāhu, and Ketu. And all of them, the cosmic powers, respond in unison: "Tathāstu!" — So be it.

Learning to receive this Cosmic Tathāstu is the science of prayer. The methodology of prayer is not lamenting, not begging but knowing the context that the Cosmos itself is Tathāstu and whatever conscious declaration you make, it supports and affirms.

Without this context, your prayers are nothing but lamenting - like calling a saved number on your cellphone and saying, "I don't expect a solution; I just want to cry."

But when you know the science, when you align to life, when you declare consciously, the Cosmos itself says: Tathāstu. Decide 'For Life'

This truth: Deciding for life needs to be internalized from multiple angles. You need to complete from multiple angles. When people have pain, they say, "Death is much better than this pain." No! This pain itself is because you decided many times earlier to die. Now stop deciding for death. Decide for life. You will walk out of this pain. You will burn, melt this pain and get out. If you always decide for life, even if your body is not functioning, you will be in Jīva Samādhi (eternal life).

Whenever a person whose bio memory and muscle memory always decides for life, if he sits, anybody who walks into his breathing space automatically gets healed, because their muscle memory and bio memory also starts deciding for life. Just this one verse if it can be internalized, people can walk out of so many diseases.

kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijiviśecchatagṃ samāḥ ।

Decide to live. Decide for whatever you believe as life. Decide for whatever gives you joy, inspiration, excitement, pleasure and bliss.

Mental Setups Deciding Against Life

We all know the truth. We understand that everything changes including what we perceive and what we do not perceive. How can we coexist in Advaita with other beings even if one of us - either you or others - do not accept that change as something necessary and good for all of us?

The 2nd verse is the answer.

evaṁ tvayi nānyatheto'sti na karma lipyate nare ||

When you decide to live, you decide for life based on the understanding that everything is consciousness.

Some people decide against life when they see the suffering in it. They feel powerless to face life, so they turn away from it.

For example, imagine yourself at the age of six, sitting in school. The teacher asks, "Who is the first Prime Minister of India?" You eagerly raise your hand, jump up, and shout, "Mahatma Gandhi!" The whole class bursts into laughter. In that moment, you feel, "I've done something wrong. I should not put up my hand and jump like this. I should stay quiet in a crowd."

That single decision stays with you. Even as a forty-seven-year-old CEO sitting in a meeting, when you have an idea, you hesitate to speak. Instead, you whisper it to someone else, and they share it with the group—receiving the recognition that could have been yours.

You shape your entire future based on one incident. Look within. You will see thousands of decisions you have made against life because of just a few moments like this.

When you decide for life, you must do it again and again—at least a few times—until every part of you begins to listen. Your decisions against life may have formed a huge chunk within you. You may not need to destroy every one of them, but you must create enough powerful decisions for life to outweigh and drive them out.

Each decision against life becomes a soldier fighting against you. You may already have millions of such soldiers within. But every time you make a powerful decision for life, you create one soldier in your own army.

The beauty is that you don't even need to build an army strong enough to destroy the opposing side. You just need to create enough strength, enough sound, enough life-energy - and the army against you will scatter and run away!

If you have made a thousand decisions against life, you must at least make ten strong decisions for life to nullify them. This alone begins to shift the balance.

Most often, people decide against life because of small, trivial incidents. A mental pattern takes root - a setup that habitually chooses against life - all because of a few unpleasant experiences.

There is also a second category: people who, out of ignorance, decide against life believing that it will bring them peace or liberation. They think, "Instead of living like this, let me die."

But does death bring freedom? Absolutely not. If you choose suicide because you cannot handle your wife, you may end up with ten wives exactly like her - in hell! And there, you won't even have the option of committing suicide!

Some people say, "Alright, I am deciding for life—let me see how far it goes." After two days, one small shake, and they fall back; they collapse. Again they begin entertaining the thought, "Instead of this, I should just withdraw."

Every withdrawal you make out of powerlessness is against life. Whether you withdrew from your job thinking it would be too stressful and too much responsibility; or you withdrew from your love affair, feeling you could not stand up to those who opposed you; or you withdrew from your career or responsibilities; or you withdrew from your decision to take sannyās - any such withdrawal is against life. Withdrawing out of powerlessness is against life.

Before you start anything, spend enough time examining: "Is it nonviolent? Does it avoid hurting others?" Do that analysis. Because if something is violent - if it harms others - then the moment you realize it, you should withdraw. That is Living Advaita. Withdrawing because you became powerless is against life; withdrawing because you recognized violence is for life.

Sometimes you may withdraw precisely to become more powerful. For example, if you step back from a decision to kill because you recognize it as violence, that is the right withdrawal. In fact, that withdrawal is a decision for life.

This is the basic understanding you need to hold: whatever makes you powerful and supports Living Advaita—decide for that.

Deciding For Life – The Juice and Essence of Planet Earth

Decide for life. Every time you decide for life, it immediately reflects in your very being. The number of times you have decided against life is what sits within you as disease.

So make a firm resolve: "However many times it may take to decide for life and drive these diseases out, I will decide - that's all! This disease has to disappear. Whether it takes one decision or a thousand, I don't care. Whether it disappears in this birth, in this body, or in the next body - whether I end up with this body healed or with a new, healthy body - I don't care. I am simply going to stick to the decision for life."

This alone is enough. You will immediately see your body begin to transform.

Whatever you decide forever becomes the decision for life right now. For instance, if you decide with clarity, "Until death, I am going to decide only for wealth," you will feel, "Then why should I delay until death? Let me start deciding now, and let me start expressing." Instantly, your life aligns and tunes itself to that decision.

Frustrated beings are the true criminals of planet Earth. When someone lives in frustration, they repeatedly decide against life, and they become a danger to the planet. But when someone constantly decides for life, they become the very juice, the very essence, of planet Earth.

Go on deciding for life and know that when you need to change, even your change will automatically happen when you decide for life.

For example: if you decide for wealth thinking that it is life, after some time you will realize that much more than wealth, there is something in you which is more important for life – you will start deciding for that. That may be health. And after some time you will realize that, more than health, something more important exists in you. That is life, that is Enlightenment.

So ultimately, if you go on deciding for life, you will decide for Living Advaita.

When you believe money is life but you decide for Living Advaita, then you will be hypocritical. When you believe money is life, decide for money. When you realize health is life, decide for health. When you realize Enlightenment is life, decide for Enlightenment. When you realize everything is life, decide for everything.

You will have the energy to have everything – money, health, Enlightenment, everything.

Deciding For Life Frees You from all Karma

There is no other way by which a person can free himself from the bondage created by deeds. However much you may listen to these truths, you must sit and internalize them. Only then will deciding for life become your very core cognition.

This is the only way to free yourself from all your past karma: decide for life, and work for life.

People often ask, "In the past I have committed violence. I have eaten animals, killed many creatures, harassed so many people. How can I be freed from this karma?"

The Upaniṣads declare: the only way is you decide for life.

Enriching is the greatest decision for life you can take.

When you enrich someone with wealth, your karmas—your decisions against wealth—will dissolve. You will be free.

When you enrich someone with food, your karmas—your decisions against food—will go away. You will be free.

When you enrich someone with spiritual knowledge and Enlightenment, all your past karmas, all decisions against life, and all bondage created by past deeds will disappear. You will be free from all karma.

You will become a Jīvanmukta - one liberated while living. You will live Advaita. Learn to decide for life. The more decisions you make for life, the healthier, wealthier, more awakened, and more enlightened you become. You live Advaita.

This is the essence of Hinduism. This is the essence of the Hindu tradition: Decide for life.

If you feel dharma is your life, decide for dharma.

If you feel artha is your life, decide for artha.

If you feel kāma is your life, decide for kāma.

If you feel mokṣa is your life, decide for mokṣa.

If you feel all four are your life, decide for all four of them.

Deciding for life liberates you from all bondage, all karma. Every problem you face is the result of a decision you made in the past. Every obstacle in your life is nothing but a decision you once took - knowingly or unknowingly. But you can now decide strongly for life. When you do, you will see all the best things of life expressing and radiating through you. The Upaniṣads are crystal clear. They declare: there is no other way.

evaṁ tvayi nānyatheto'sti na karma lipyate nare ||

Decide for Life – Freedom from Karma

If you want to be liberated from karma, there is no other way. There is no other way to be freed from karma. There is no other way by which a person can release himself from the bondage created by his deeds. If your own decisions and actions have created certain bondages, only by deciding for life - and acting from that space - can you free yourself from them.

One more thing to understand: even laziness is an action, born out of your decision against life. So when you decide for life, laziness, tiredness, boredom, hatred, and anger, all of these will melt away. Everything will be cleared. So, decide for life. Decide for life. Karma is the bondage created in you by your commission or omission of certain acts that are incomplete with your own cognition about life. For example, if you think money is life, then, acts you performed which did not bring money and acts you failed to perform which deprived you of money both become karma, because they leave you incomplete with your concept of life.

Any act of commission or omission that is in sync with, and complete with, your concept of life does not bring karma. It leaves no incompletion. But commission or omission of acts that create incompletion with your concept of life is karma.

You can liberate and free yourself from this karma is by deciding for life. When your very core decides for life, your laziness, your boredom disappears. Tirelessly you stand up again and again, aligning with life.

Good or Bad Based on Whether Your Acts are Complete with Your Concept of Life

कुर्वन्नेवेह कर्माणि जिजिविशेच्छतगं् समाः ।
kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijiviśecchatagṃ samāḥ ।

Deciding tirelessly again and again to live, naturally aligns all your acts into the concept of life you carry. So, all your commission and omission of the acts align themselves to the idea of life you have. So, your commission and omission of acts become complete with the idea of life you have.

Actually, this one line alone can resolve the question that troubles many people: "Why are bad people so rich while good people are poor? Why are bad people healthy while good people suffer from disease?"

The truth is that whether you are considered good or bad depends entirely on whether your acts are complete with the concept of life you hold.

If your concept of life revolves around pleasure and money, and your acts align perfectly with that concept, you will naturally receive pleasure and money, that's all. There is no one to judge whether money is the ultimate purpose of life. God is not a judge. He only observes the kind of completion you carry within yourself. Ultimately, He does not even intervene; it is an automated mechanism in the functioning of the universe. If He wishes, He may interfere - but that does not mean He is constantly intervening.

Be very clear: God is not sitting every day passing judgment on you, saying, "Oh, this person is chasing money all the time. Let me punish him." No!

Over time, as you continue deciding constantly for life, you may realize that there is something more important than money. You may evolve. Your idea of life may shift. You may reinvent yourself. When that happens, let your acts align with this new understanding and the renewed version of yourself.

Therefore, decide for life again and again. Do not entertain laziness or boredom. Live in a state of constant excitement, passion, and compassion.

The only way to be free from karma and from the bondages created by your acts and deeds is to decide for life.

Hard Power Vs Soft Power

In Hinduism, in the Hindu tradition, God is not represented as hard power. Hard power refers to political authority like administration, bureaucracy, law, courts, punishment, and reward. It is the voice that says, "You have to do this, or you will be prosecuted and put in jail! You should not do this, or you will be prosecuted, imprisoned, tortured, and perhaps even hanged!" This is hard power.

Soft power, on the other hand, is spiritual power. Here, people rise out of their own inspiration. They voluntarily come, learn, evolve, and raise themselves. In the Hindu tradition, Mahādeva is not hard power; He is soft power, sitting in Kailāsa and teaching. Indra may represent hard power, but not Mahādeva.

The concept of God in the Hindu tradition is beautiful and subtle. Because God is understood as soft power, Bharat wielded soft power across the world. Our concept of God is rooted in soft power. Even today, the world's largest practicing religion is Yoga. Yoga carries no hard power, it was never enforced by armies, courts, or punishments. We never portrayed or believed our Gods to be hard power. We always understood and revered them as embodiments of soft power.

Anyone who wants to play the role of God must be the center of soft power. In our society, the highest respect, the highest position in the social order, was reserved for those who embodied soft power. Hard power was never our ambition.

Our concept of God is never that He comes and sits as a Judge, declaring a Judgment Day where all souls gather to receive verdicts. No! There is no hard power - it is completely soft power.

Even now, the largest and most practiced religion in the world is Yoga. People may be born into many religions, but the most widely practiced discipline every single day across the world is Yoga. It was never spread through hard power. It was never spread through political authority. It was never spread through political clout.

God is not hard power. He is the source of soft power. Mahādeva sits in Kailāsa. He does not govern the Akhilāṇḍa, Aṇḍāṇḍa, Bhuvanāṇḍa, or Brahmāṇḍa—all the universes, worlds, and planets—through control. No! He simply sits in Samādhi. Once in a while, He opens His eyes and teaches in silence. When people have problems, they come to Him. He blesses them, attends to them, and again relaxes into Samādhi.

The very description of God is soft power.

In the Western religions, the very description and concept of God is based on hard power. Anyone who wants to play God must become the center of hard power. That is why the clash between politicians and priests has always been prevalent in the West.

In the East, however, it was always different. The Rājas and Rājagurus were always together, because they understood that their zones were different. Kings never felt threatened by the priests or by the Gurus, because of the way Gurus thought and acted. The Guru was rooted in soft power, and therefore the king always felt secure.

There are thousands of stories in Bharat about kings where a brother, a son, ministers or commander in chief seized the throne from the king. But there is not a single story where a Guru took over the kingdom from the king. The Guru often knew more secrets and information about the king and the kingdom, yet we do not have a single reference where a Rājaguru imprisoned the king and seized the kingdom. The king felt completely secure. The very thinking of the Guru was always about soft power; it had nothing to do with hard power.

A little understanding of the difference between hard power and soft power gives great clarity about the Hindu tradition - and even about how to handle yourself. If you always deal with yourself through hard power, you become insensitive to life. If you always think only in terms of law and move only within that framework, then your entire life will be controlled by law.

Let soft power, the spiritual understanding and power decide many things in your life, rather than the fear and greed of hard power. If you allow fear and greed to dominate through hard power, you become a slave. Soft power, however, is always inspiration-based. It is never fear-based or greed-based.

There is a big difference between not raping someone because of fear of the law, and not raping someone because you do not want to be violent or invade another's space. Abstaining from violence out of fear of law and punishment is hard power. Abstaining from violence because you respect another's space, dignity, and freedom is soft power.

Order that arises from soft power is permanent and eternal. True order never comes from hard power; it comes only from soft power. Hard power may create temporary "law and order," but lasting order can arise only through soft power.

Contemplating and exploring hard power and soft power will answer thousands of your questions. It will help you think more clearly. You will gain countless insights into life. It will actually answer thousands of your questions, and it will question thousands of your answers.

A Guru who only answers your questions will lead you to a cult. A Guru who questions your answers will lead you to culture.

The simple difference between the spiritual component and religion is this – wherever the truths are given to you to assimilate and to develop your thinking from perception to fact, fact to truth, and truth to reality, it is spiritual. Anything other than this is religion. That's all!

Why does Hinduism have so much freedom? Because Hinduism was never used by its founders or its preservers to control people. Religion was never a tool to control people.

From Rāmeśvaram[1] to Kedāranāth[2], from morning till night, the actions of people are the same. But we had fifty-four deśas[3]. Even a great personality like Śaṅkarācārya never bothered to unite the whole land under which his influence prevailed as one country. Actually, if Śaṅkarācārya had wanted to, he could have done it.

Jñānasambandar cured the Pāṇḍya king. The king offered the whole kingdom at the feet of Jñānasambandar. Jñānasambandar was from the Chola kingdom, he could have simply said, "Alright!" to ruling the Chola Kingdom Also, Chola king's daughter was married to the Pāṇḍya royalty. Jñānasambandar could have said, "Come on, after all, the queen is from my kingdom. Let both kingdoms be merged, and I will be the Rājaguru for all." He could have said that, but he did not. He simply said, "No, you continue to rule. I will appoint a Sannidhānam who will be a Rājaguru for you and guide you."

We are so clear: we are not interested in hard power. We are only interested in empowering, inspiring, and raising human beings. We are clear that soft power means deciding for life, while hard power means controlling. Hard power is always about control. Soft power is always about life, inspiring, liberating, enlightening, and freeing.

The concept of God that society holds is of immense importance. It is the very key to the entire social structure. Never think that the concept of God is unimportant.

Those who deny God – atheists - always chase hard power, for they are empty within. But a truly brilliant and intelligent person is established in soft power. He knows that life is sustained by inspiration and nothing else.

Even the simplest decision has cosmic significance. When you have a headache and you declare, "I will be free from it, I will clear it, and I am out of it," that single decision creates a ripple in the Sun and the Moon. When you decide, "I will come out of my headache. I will come out of my depression," that very decision heals the hole in the ozone layer. Your inner healing is directly connected to the healing of the cosmos, the ozone layer, the Sun, and the Moon.

So, turn inward. Look deeply into your life. Work to be free from karma. Work for life. Think for life. Be in life, for life.

एवं त्वयि नन्यथेतो'स्ति न कर्म लिप्यते नरे ॥ २॥
kurvanneveha karmāṇi jijiviśecchatagṃ samāḥ ।
evaṃ tvayi nanyatheto'sti na karma lipyate nare ॥2 ॥

This verse from the Īśopaniṣad teaches that one should live a full life, engaged in action (karma) without being bound by it. The key lies in the inner attitude: when actions are performed in alignment with dharma, without attachment, they do not bind the soul.

The Three Kinds of Human Beings

Whatever we call as a spirituality, spiritual path, the whole thing can be classified in three ways. One based on intellect, second based on emotion, third based on being. All three are very clearly described in these three lines. Ṛṣis cannot address one single person, they address the whole world. In these three lines, they finished the whole thing. People who are born, who are living and who are going to come (who have lived, who are living, who are going to live) – all the three levels of people are past, present and future, all the three are covered just in these three lines.

Actually, Upaniṣads are nothing but the keys to open your inner treasure. They are just keys to unlock the inner treasures. Here, the Ṛṣis are giving a key. Some religions give a key for only emotional beings. Some religions give keys only for intellectual beings. Some religions give only for the beings who are situated on the energy level.

There are only three kinds of human beings – intellectual, emotional and energy level beings. Every religion handles only one kind of beings. That is the problem. All religions do not suit everybody. Every religion has its own method. It suits only a particular human kind. No religion can suit the whole of humanity except this one sūtra. In this sūtra, they address these three kinds of people. That is why the Upaniṣad Ṛṣis are so courageous to say 'for a person like you'. Every one of you is addressed here.

Every one of you is individually addressed and the paradox is, it is so individualistic and so collective. Whenever it is collective, it cannot be individual. Whenever it is individual, it cannot be collective. Here, the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis break that idea. Here, it thoroughly and paradoxically suits the entire group, the entire mass. The keys for the head, heart and the soul, all the three levels' keys are delivered to you.

If somebody understands this one sūtra, all religious conflicts will disappear. Every religious master, enlightened master tries to give the way it worked. For example: Buddha worked through the head even though he speaks of compassion. Even his idea about compassion is nothing but the head. Jesus worked through the heart. So whatever he speaks, it will only be through the heart. Ramakrishna worked through the being. Ramakrishna, J. Krishnamurti, Ramana Maharshi – all these people worked through the beings' energy. So whatever they speak, it will be only about energy.

Every Master gives a key for a particular type of human being, for a particular type of mind. Here, the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis are giving the key for all three kinds of people. These three lines very clearly describe all three kinds of people. First, who desires to live a hundred years. This shows very clearly the person is involved in his activities in the world and believing 'I am the doer.' There is no other path other than this. The path of living without being smeared by your doing. Who desires to live a hundred years, involved in his activities in the world and believing 'I am the doer.' Hundred years does not mean hundred. Here, hundred means countless, just numberless.

Upaniṣads – Inspiration to Enter into Enlightenment

The Upaniṣads should be an inspiration for you to enter into Enlightenment and spirituality. Honestly, people who want to brag about their intellectuality, their philosophical greatness and those who want to brag – 'I know, I know' – only study the Upaniṣads. That is why almost all commentaries, the more complicated it is, the more popular it is. If you read the Upaniṣads directly, you will understand how simple these Ṛṣis are.

There is a small Zen story. One enlightened Zen Master went to a traditional Zen monastery. There are always two paramparās – Guru paramparā and Jñāna paramparā. Guru paramparā means preserving the scriptures, the Pīṭhādhipati, the regular Pīṭhādhipatis, pīṭham after pīṭham. In his old age, he appoints a young male heir to take over his seat – 'Take care of the pīṭham. Take care of the property. Take care of all these scriptures which are written and kept by our Masters.' The pīṭham is like preserving the milk and Enlightenment is like drinking the milk. The Pīṭhādhipatis preserve the milk and keep it safely so that we can drink it. The enlightened people who drink and enjoy, understand and realize the whole truth.

One enlightened Zen Master goes to a Pīṭhādhipati of a Zen monastery who is a very egoistic guy. When the enlightened Master arrived, he asked, 'Who are you?' The enlightened Master said, 'I am dharma.' Dharma means the man who is following the dharma. 'I am just on the path of dharma, Buddha's humble servant.' Then this Pīṭhādhipati started saying, 'Do you know who I am? I am the disciple of this Svāmi.' He started telling about his Guru paramparā. 'I belong to Bodhidharma's lineage. I belong to the tradition of Bodhidharma. I am the disciple; great, great grand disciple of Bodhidharma.' The enlightened person was keeping quiet the whole time. The moment he spoke, the enlightened one started laughing. The Pīṭhādhipati got really offended and immediately shouted, 'Why are you laughing?' In Zen monasteries, they will always serve you tea. The enlightened Master drank the tea and told the Pīṭhādhipati to give a little water. He washed the cup and poured water into another cup. Then he emptied that cup, washed that cup and poured the water into another cup. He emptied that cup, washed the other cup and poured water into another cup. Then the enlightened Master asked if the fourth cup of water and the first cup of tea had any relationship. The first tea cup is emptied, washed and water poured into the other cup. That cup is washed and water poured into another cup. That cup is washed and water poured into another cup. What is the relationship? Even the tea smell will not be there. In the first cup when you wash it, the tea smell will be there. In the second cup, a slight colour will be there. In the third cup, fourth cup, just plain water. That Pīṭhādhipati got a shock. Then he said, "This is the same relationship between you and Bodhidharma, that's all. You and Bodhidharma are related only in this way, nothing else." The Upaniṣads have become just an intellectual property. That is the reason they became more complicated.

The Upaniṣads are to inspire you to enter into meditation, and to lead the spiritual life more and more.

Please don't understand what you understand as the English word 'emotion.' Involving in the activity means you need some motion, energy. The energy which makes movement, motion in your being is emotion. If you are heart centred, you will be continuously involved in the activities of the world. Those who desire to live a hundred years are always an intellect. They want to live for a long time because intellect never enjoys anything totally. When you see a Himalayas intellect giving a running commentary, he will say how beautiful it is, how exciting it is. 'I'll go and tell my wife. I went to Gomukh. I went to Tapovan. I did all these things.' Intellect never lives in the moment. Because of that, they always feel dissatisfied. Then they want to live again and again and again. Once you live with the world without the running commentary, without the head, you feel so satisfied, so settled. You don't even want to live the next moment. You are totally settled, you are totally relaxed and you will see that existence does the whole thing.

There is a Tamil proverb about inserting a needle into the banana. If you insert a small needle neither banana will feel, nor your hand will feel you are inserting. So, slowly inserting the truth. This line inserts a major truth in your mind without making it very complicated. The path of living without being smeared by your doing, means you live in the coal but you never become black. You never become dirty. Nothing affects you. You never get smeared and you are just fresh and as beautiful as you were.

One who desires to live a hundred years, who is an intellectual person, for him this key – the path of living without being smeared by your doing means - live without the running commentary. When you live without the running commentary, nothing smears and you never get smeared.

All your dirt is nothing but your accumulated words. You accumulate words which are not there. For example, say you went to the Himalayas. Will you say say there was a Himalayas? 'Was there a Himalayas? What are you talking about? Where was it written Himalayas? Tell me. 'The big thing was there.' You cannot even say 'a big thing,' something was there. That's all. But, you never related 'that thing' with the word 'Himalayas.' When you mention the word 'Himalayas,' in between that and you, you never relate with it existentially. Again and again you think – 'I see the Himalayas.'

You never see what is there. J. Krishnamurti says beautifully, it is a wordless experience, thoughtless experience. When you look at the Himalayas, do not create any words. Just try to feel what it is. If a child sees the Himalayas, what will he think? He doesn't know anything about the Himalayas. What he sees, he will just see. If a child enters into your room, how he looks at everything as if he is going to eat the whole thing. He just lives through his eyes. He has no words. When you create a word, ājñā gets locked. When you see without words, you see the whole and its totality. When you travel, try to relate with everything without words. Now itself don't think – 'Oh I cannot do.' The words 'I cannot do' is also one more word! Don't believe the words 'I cannot do.' Drop that word and try to see. Words are not your nature. If words are your nature, you cannot drop it. Words are not your nature. How to know the word is not your nature? Everyday in deep sleep, are you having words? So, it means you can be without words. Your being can exist and be alive without words. So just try your best to look at things without words. Then this key will work for you. The key for living without continuous running commentary is the path for the intellectual people.

Going Beyond Words

The next is the emotional person. He is one who is involved in his activities in the world. This is the ultimate way. This is the secret, deep secret of Karma Yoga. In the first line – the experience merges. The second line – experience disappears. Visualize as if you are seeing through the ājñā. There will be no words. When you look through the ājñā, you come to the present moment. You simply fall into the present moment. As of now, you are just being pulled by the past or by the future. You hang between these two. Have you seen the hanging bridges? They hang between the two ends. You are nothing but a hanging bridge also, between the past and the future. When you look through the ājñā, you just simply fall into the present. Either look through the ājñā or just drop the words and see in a relaxed way.

In Vipassanā, you cannot breathe through the lungs. You have to breathe only through the navel. Breathe in that way and see in a very relaxed way. When you see, immediately the word will rise. Don't believe those words. One by one visualize as if you are plucking a flower and throwing it. Continuously for ten to fifteen minutes visualize. Suddenly you will see the gap. That traffic is less. You are able to see without traffic.

The Himalayas is such a graceful energy. The moment you try, it helps you a thousand fold. Try a simple experiment. You are not going to do anything separately. Just sit instead of talking and chatting with the next person, or wasting your time on what has happened here, what has happened there, what is happening in America, what is happening in my house. Everything will go on beautifully. You can be sure of that. Relax, instead of wasting time. Relax and enjoy this time. You are in the spiritual field, energy field. Above all, you are having all the three – mūrti, sthala, tīrtha. So, don't miss it. Continuously sit for some meditation, some technique. Continuously be inside yourself.

Try your best to use maximum time on meditation than on ordinary talking or other things. When you relate with existence, you will understand the whole thing is energy. One more secret: except the word 'Himalayas,' there is no difference between you and the Himalayas. The moment the word disappears, the boundary of you and the boundary of Himalayas merges with each other. You may think how can a word create such a huge boundary.

An example: in the Ganga if you place a bamboo on it, you can say Ganga on this side, Ganga on that side. If you just lift the bamboo, what will happen? The whole thing is only Ganga. Same way in the whole of existence, there is no bamboo except the words you are using. There is no bamboo. Only this bamboo creates you and Ganga. Only the bamboo creates this 'I' and 'you.' Tat Tvam means me and you. This difference is made by the bamboo which you are using. Bamboo represents the words which you are using. Words which you are using makes the difference between Tat and Tvam. When you lift those words (bamboo) you understand Tat Tvam Asi – I am, you are that, that art thou. Only one thing you need to do: just lifting the words is enough, Ganga will become one again.

Key for Emotional People – Fall in Love with the Work and Path

If you are involved in the activity continuously, two things you need to do. Whenever you work, don't think you are working for some reason. If you are working for some reason, you will be watching the watch continuously (when office time will be over). You will make your whole office hours a hell. Falling in love with work is the technique for people who are working continuously. Just fall in love with the work itself. This is a technique for the people who are involved in these activities in the world. The moment you fall in love with the work, the experience of the man who is working dissolves and disappears into the work itself. The only hindrance in Karma Yoga is nothing but the moment you work, your mind will be asking, 'Oh when will this time end? When can I go on vacation? When can I go here? When can I go there?' The moment you go on vacation – 'When can I go back to America? My work is all pending. What can I do? There is so much work. I am sitting here doing all these things and all the other things.' The mind is such that when you do this, it will ask for that. When you fall in love with the work, the very idea of 'I am working' disappears. Let your mind take the other course. Let your mind start enjoying every step. Let you start enjoying the present moment and you will have full freedom. When you don't want to travel further, you can come back. What is wrong? When you have full freedom, why should you be bothered about the end?

Emotional people are always bothered about the end. There is a beautiful śloka by Ādi Śaṅkara – 'tataḥ kiṁtataḥ kiṁtataḥ kiṁ tataḥ kiṁ(what next, what next, what next, what next).' You are just going, going, going without experiencing it.

The fruit of action is always understood in two ways – kāminī or kanchana. Ramakrishna says, 'The fruit of the action is understood by what money I will get, or what pleasure I will get.' Understanding the very journey itself is a pleasure. Don't think going there and seeing water coming out from that small hole is the only pleasure. The very journey of seeing the whole thing is also a pleasure. If you see the magnanimity and the grandeur of the Himalayas, only then you will understand that existence is really intelligent. Unless you see such grandeur, you will not understand that you are a very tiny being.

As of now, all your life is centred on your head. Continuously you think about 'me, me, me, me, me.' Your whole life revolves around you, centred on you. You will never understand that there is something bigger than you. Unconsciously you never agree there is something bigger than you existing in the world. Only when you see these great and unimaginable things, you understand – 'Yes, I think there are some other intelligent beings also on planet Earth. We always think that we are intelligent people. Even though we don't agree consciously, unconsciously every one of us has a clear cut idea that we are the most intelligent people. Only when you see these grand things created by the divine nature, only when you see and lose yourself in all these things, will you understand you are simply a small particle, dust. You are simply a nobody. We are just dust.

Before your birth, the world was not existing, it was running. After your birth, it will not exist, it is going to run. Understand that you are a nobody in the presence of the divine. Life is not totally centred on you. Life is centred on the very life itself. You are just running around the centre. Don't think the centre is running around you. We always think that energy is running around us. No. You are running around energy. Your life is not going around you. You are going around life. God is not going around you. You are going around God.

The moment you understand the grandeur of life, then you will understand you are insignificant. You will never ask, 'What next, what next, what next, what next.' The very journey itself becomes a pleasure. If you don't understand the very journey itself is a pleasure, you can never answer the question what. If we understand the very journey is pleasure, every moment is joy, every moment is pleasure. You will be just like a child enjoying the whole thing. The moment you understand the very journey is a pleasure, every moment is a joy, then you will see everything looks ecstatic and joyful. We have come here to enjoy the very journey. That is the reason the Ṛṣis have made very small temples. The temples in the Himalayas are not as big as those South Indian temples. There is no art, no culture, nothing to see. You can't even see Gaṅgotri Devī. The truth is you are not going there to see the temple. That is not the goal.

Only the logical mind is goal oriented. Never be goal oriented. Be path oriented. Enjoy the whole travel, fall in love with the work. There is a beautiful śloka in the Bhagavad Gītā which says exactly the same truth.

karmaṇyevādhikāraste mā phaleṣu kadācana |
You have a right only to do the work, not to ask for the fruit.

Don't think you are asked to work without a salary. Gītā is not asking you to work without getting a salary, but don't continuously think about salary. When you work, fall in love with the work. Then you will enjoy both the working hour and the salary time. If you do not know how to enjoy the working hour, you cannot enjoy the vacation. Because enjoying working hours or vacation is not the question, the ability to enjoy is the question. If you have the ability to enjoy, the vacation and working hours also you can enjoy. Your working hours are one third of your life. In America, a little more than that. One third of your life is the working hours. If you just work for some result, some vacation, you are wasting three hundred days for sixty-five days of vacation. You are wasting three hundred days just for the sake of sixty-five days of vacation.

Shambala is touching the planet Earth only in Tapovan, Gangotri, Gomukh. Gomukh is the place from where you can go to

When you fall in love with the work and the path, not only you enjoy the path, you enjoy the result also. The ability to enjoy, the capacity to be blissful increases. If you have a knife, that same knife only you are going to commit murder, or conduct an operation. For both, you need a sharp knife. So, if you are going to enjoy your vacation or enjoy your working hours, both ways you need a sharp knife – the ability to enjoy. If the knife is totally blunt, you cannot do the operation or the killing. If you do it with a blunt knife, the operation will become a killing. It will become a murder. You cannot do anything with a blunt knife. Same way, you cannot do anything with a blunt mind, blunt emotion. Blunt emotion means always asking for the result. Alive emotion means falling in love with the work itself. Falling in love with the very path is an alive emotion. Let your emotion be sharp so that you fall in love with the very work and path. That is the key for emotional people.

Effects of Saying 'No' to Life

Now the next verse, Verse 3 of Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad.

असुर्या नाम ते लोका अन्धेन तमसाऽऽवृताः ।
ताँस्ते प्रेत्याभिगच्छन्ति ये के चात्महनो जनाः || ३ ||
asuryā nāma te lokā andhena tamasāvṛtāḥ |
tāṃste pretyābhigacchanti ye ke cātmahano janāḥ || 3 ||

The translation: 'The various abodes of the Asuras, the lower level existence, are in the form of inferior or lower grade worlds which are like hells covered by darkness, representing all the negative qualities, collectively called tamas. Those who literally kill the Ātma become ghosts who inhabit such horrible abodes, and this they continue to do repeatedly.'

People who say yes to life and what will happen to them were described in the last verses. Now, people who say no to life and what will happen to them is being described. Always 'no' is entertained as frustration. Then it evolves as anger, violence, self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial. All these are various expressions. But, it starts as frustration. One of the important qualities to say yes to life is tremendous patience. Tremendous patience!

Every time when what you want does not happen, don't say no. End it with a yes. If something does not happen the way you want, don't accept it and keep quiet. Don't allow frustration. Do whatever needs to be done. At the end, say, 'Alright, yes!' Next, be prepared again with all the patience to move further, to do things further. The people with whom you are living – first yourself and everyone else around you - their ignorance or inability should not give you frustration, should not make you say no to you. The moment you accept no and say no to expansion, you have started saying no to you.

ताँस्ते प्रेत्याभिगच्छन्ति ये के चात्महनो जनाः || ३ ||
asuryā nāma te lokā andhena tamasāvṛtāḥ |
tāṃste pretyābhigacchanti ye ke cātmahano janāḥ || 3 ||

Saying no to you is the worst sin. The inability and ignorance of you and the people living around you cannot reduce your creativity or plans to express your peak possibility. This is one definition.

We can see multiple explanations and understandings from various fronts. For example: when you are having pain in some parts of your body (headache or stomach ache), don't shrink. When that headache or stomach ache happens, don't add psychological suffering to it. 'Oh, if this continues, what will happen? I am still young. Already I am getting a headache and stomach ache. If the stomach ache goes up two inches, it will become chest pain. If the headache goes a few inches below, then it will become chest pain. What will happen to me? How long will I live?' Don't add psychological suffering when your body experiences some pain. Don't increase the strength of actual pain.

Whenever there is suffering, you should move from perception to fact, fact to truth, truth to reality. You should not go down from perception to more perception of suffering. More perception of suffering leads to more depression. More depression makes you feel the whole world is hell. The perception, if it is handled with powerfulness, will move from perception to fact, fact to truth, truth to reality. If you have a headache, look into it. See what it is. Why and how much of your contribution is there in that headache? What is the message the body wants to give you through that headache? Have patience to deal with yourself. Have patience to deal with others.

Never ever plan based on anger and violence. You are only allowed the usage of anger and violence in your life for spontaneous defense when you are attacked. That is the only violence allowed. There is no question of planned violence and anger. The planned violence and anger literally puts you in a space where people constantly plan violence and anger. With anger, they plan violent things towards you. Thousands continuing to revere you cannot happen by cheating. It happens only by tremendous patience and saying yes to life. Never ever entertain planned violence based on anger in your life. That is equivalent to saying no to life. When you say no to life –

ताँस्ते प्रेत्याभिगच्छन्ति ये के चात्महनो जनाः || ३ ||
asuryā nāma te lokā andhena tamasāvṛtāḥ |
tāṃste pretyābhigacchanti ye ke cātmahano janāḥ || 3 ||

'The various famous abodes of the Asuras are in the form of inferior or lower grade worlds, which are like hells covered by darkness, representing all the negative qualities, collectively called tamas. Those who literally kill the Ātma become ghosts who inhabit such horrible abodes, and this they continue to do repeatedly.'

The various lokas (worlds) are not just physical, but psychological too. It means, they do exist as planes, spaces, somewhere and you do create that around you because of your inner space. In the Cosmos, hells do exist in certain spaces, in different planes where collectively all these people have tea parties! Only thing is, poison is served, not tea!

People of lower consciousness and who constantly say no to life, where they all gather and live, exist, that place only the Upaniṣad declares it as asuryā nāma te lokā (असुर्या नाम ते लोका) – covered by darkness. Lower grade worlds covered by darkness. andhena tamasāvṛtāḥ asuryā, andha, tamasāvṛtāḥ (अन्धेन तमसावृताः असुर्या अन्ध, तमसावृताः) – all the three words are basically the same meaning. But three different words are used.

Covered by darkness, covered by all the negative qualities. andhena tamasāvṛtāḥ (अन्धेन तमसावृताः) means blinding darkness. Darkness which just makes you blind, shrouded. Darkness which is natural does not make you blind or go blind. That is why the Upaniṣads are using the word blinding darkness. It means, the darkness created by the negative qualities is blinding you. It is not ordinary darkness. The Ṛṣis don't want to disrespect the ordinary darkness. They lived in darkness and they know darkness does not blind you. That is why the specific word 'blinding darkness.'

Any modern day man will say, 'All tamas will make you andhā. All darkness will make you blind. Why should you use the word 'blinding darkness'?' Because, only a man who lived in darkness, utter darkness, knows the power of darkness. When you live just with the sun and the moon without any artificial light, fire is okay, your eyes develop the unique power to see through the darkness.

Don't think, don't cognize that darkness blinds you. Negative qualities which blind you are described as darkness here. That is why Upaniṣads are using the word 'blinding darkness' in the form of inferior or lower grade worlds which are like hells covered by darkness, representing all the negative qualities, collectively called tamas.

This is the key word 'killing the Ātma.' Ātmahana (आत्महन) – slayers of Ātman. It means, not just killing somebody, some body. Any decision, thinking which stops your expansion of life, your experience of life is ātmahana (saying no to life). When you have a headache, if you approach it with restlessness, anger, violence, irritation, and make it a permanent headache or permanent suffering, that is saying no to life. If there is a disciple who is giving you a headache, handle them, train them. Even if they don't listen, have tremendous patience and continue to train them. Never come to the conclusion you can't train people. Have tremendous patience in every dimension of your life, never coming to the conclusion of saying no to life is saying yes to life.

Mercy Killing is Not Permitted in Hinduism

This sūtra clearly implies that mercy killing is wrong. Killing yourself due to some pain or suffering means committing suicide, or killing yourself with the help of professionals, doctors – euthanasia, or assisting somebody to kill themselves – all this is wrong as per Upaniṣads. Hindus should not allow mercy killing on themselves or practice euthanasia.

So, as per the Upaniṣads: euthanasia (mercy killing) is not encouraged or allowed. Even if the worst suffering is happening, go through life. Because, even those sufferings will be teaching you something and making you reinvent yourself in the next birth.

Do not reject any lessons that life brings you. Do not say "no" to life in any form in which it presents itself. Instead, learn to say "yes" to life. Reinvent yourself by saying a powerful "yes" to life.

As Hindus, we should not practice euthanasia - not even as part of a profession. In countries where mercy killing is permitted, if a patient asks you to assist, politely excuse yourself by citing religious reasons. Practicing Hindus must not support or engage in euthanasia.

In Hindu tradition, one does not become a Hindu merely by birth. You become Hindu only when you begin practicing Hinduism. This gives a clear understanding: anyone who practices Hinduism is a Hindu. This is a powerful truth.

For Hindus, there is no question of saying "no" to life, even if life presents itself in ways you feel unable to tolerate. Every practicing Hindu should state in their will that all available intelligence, energy, and resources must be used to keep them alive for as long as possible. Mercy killing (euthanasia) is neither supported nor encouraged in the Hindu tradition. In any form, denying life is not supported.

Why Vegetarianism?

A practicing Hindu must be vegetarian. You cannot deny the existence of animals or their right to live.

People often argue: "Plants also have life and experience pain. If you can eat them, why not animals?" The difference is this: plants have not developed the muscle memory required to store pain within them. They may register some form of alteration or disturbance, but they do not existentially feel pain.

One of the key DNA qualities of pain is its capacity to be stored and replayed. This memory of pain is a significant marker of sentient suffering - and it does not exist in plants. Because plants lack this dimension, consuming them, along with other agricultural products, is permitted.

Moreover, the human body is naturally designed for a vegetarian lifestyle.

Within the next fifteen years, the world's population can be sustained with sufficient food - if humanity chooses vegetarianism. Why? Because nearly thirty pounds of agricultural produce is required to create just one pound of meat. These thirty pounds of food could have directly nourished people instead of being diverted to produce flesh.

Therefore, a vegetarian lifestyle is not only healthy but also the most affordable and sustainable choice. By simply being vegetarian, you are engaging in annadāna (the sacred service of offering food). Every vegetarian meal you eat is like feeding twenty-nine additional people, because you are not consuming the thirty persons' share of food that would otherwise be lost in meat production.

So, each time you partake of vegetarian food, remember: twenty-nine more people are blessing you for allowing them to eat.

All practicing Hindus must be vegetarian, because saying "no" to life is the most dangerous act. You do not have the right to deny life.

You have no right to commit ātmahana (the killing of the Self), because you are Ātmagaṇa. the very embodiment of Ātman. Since you yourself are the living expression of Ātman, you cannot have the right to destroy it.

Saying Yes to Life - Yes to the Revelations and Expressions of Your Consciousness

ताँस्ते प्रेत्याभिगच्छन्ति ये के चात्महनो जनाः || ३ ||
asuryā nāma te lokā andhena tamasāvṛtāḥ |
tāṃste pretyābhigacchanti ye ke cātmahano janāḥ || 3 ||
"People who say 'no' to life become ghosts inhabiting dreadful realms—lower-grade worlds resembling hells, shrouded in darkness, filled with negative qualities. And they continue to dwell in such states repeatedly!"

So, understand: saying "no" to life is the greatest sin. Even while living, saying "yes" to death is ātmahana—hell itself. But even at the time of so-called death, saying "yes" is liberation—Enlightenment.

Vārāṇasī stands for this very principle: saying "yes" to life even when it presents itself as death. To say "yes" to life, even in the face of death, is the essence of liberation.

Saying "no" to life in any form is ātmahana. Whenever you feel that life is acting against you—when you experience the thought, "Life is not cooperating with me, not supporting me, not making what I want happen"—know that this feeling is as vast and ancient as the universe itself.

This is the truth revealed from the Akāśic Records:

"By its very existence, life expands into infinite possibilities. Because Existence itself says tathāstu—'so be it'—to life, it reveals those possibilities to you. What you perceive as being denied are simply the very possibilities life has shown you. If Existence truly wished to deny you, it would not reveal those possibilities in the first place. The very fact that they are revealed means Existence has already said 'yes' to you. Your choice to live has been accepted, respected, and encouraged. By claiming that life is not cooperating or supporting you, you are denying the revelations and expressions continuously offered to your very consciousness."

By its own light, the Moon reveals its black patches. On New Moon Day (Amāvāsyā), you cannot see these patches. Only on Full Moon Day (Pūrṇimā) do the dark spots become visible. This means: it is only by the Moon's own shining that even its flaws are revealed.

In the same way, when possibilities are revealed to you, it is proof that life itself is shining upon you. The very fact that you are able to recognize possibilities means that life is supporting you.

For example: you may realize that flying is possible for you, yet complain that life is not allowing you to achieve it. Or you may see that becoming a billionaire is possible, and then lament that life is not letting it happen. But understand this: the very moment life reveals something as possible to you, it is already saying "yes." The very fact that you perceive flying, or wealth, or any possibility at all, shows that life is encouraging you, guiding you, and granting you the awareness of that potential.

Life is Always Supporting You

You may feel that life is not allowing what you want to happen. For example: you always longed for health, but it never seemed to manifest. Or you desired wealth, and just before achieving it, everything collapsed.

But understand: the very fact that the idea of health arises in you, the very fact that hope is generated that wealth is possible—this itself is solid proof that life is supporting you. Otherwise, even the possibility would never be revealed to you. The moment a possibility is made known, life is already saying "yes."

The thought "life is not supporting me" is as absurd as saying "my breathing is not letting me breathe" or "my eyes are showing me darkness." Even your recognition of darkness is possible only because your eyes are functioning. That, in itself, is proof of their support.

In the same way, if you dream of becoming a billionaire and feel denied entry into the "Billionaire Club," remember: the very concept that you can become one is proof that life is supporting you.

Only when you begin to see the countless ways in which life is already supporting you will you choose to say "yes" to life. As long as you remain stuck in the thought that life is denying you, you will continue to say "no" to life.

It is like this: your office provides you with a beautiful house, a car, and everything else you need to live and work comfortably. One morning, while drinking your coffee, the cup slips, and some hot coffee spills on your feet, giving you a small burn. Immediately, you file a complaint against the office: "See! They are responsible! They should have provided a carpet. Then the coffee would have been absorbed and would not have reached my feet to burn me!"

How illogical and adhārmic such an action would be!

That is exactly how you sound when you say: "Life is denying me its possibilities. Life is not giving me what I want."

There was once a lady who was a habitual grumbler, constantly complaining about everything. One day, her preacher thought he had finally found something she could be happy about: her farm crop was the best for miles around. Meeting her with a big smile, he said, "You must be very happy! Everyone says your potatoes look so healthy this year!"

She replied grimly, "True, they are pretty good - but what am I going to do when I need some bad ones to feed the pigs?"

This shows: you can always find a reason to grumble. And even that is the compassion of the Cosmos. Out of kindness, it provides you with reasons to complain - so you don't feel too bad about yourself!

Understand: the very experience of hope within you means life has hope in you. If you feel even a spark of hopefulness, it is because life is gifting you that feeling, because it still trusts your potential.

Do not think hope is your "birthright." Birth itself is not your right! This word birthright is a foolish idea. When birth itself is not your right, how can you claim anything else as your birthright?

Someone once asked Ramana Maharshi, "Bhagavān, how do I know I have received God's grace?"

He replied, "The very effort you are making to reach God is nothing but God's grace!"

The disciple then asked, "Should I try through spiritual practices, or should I simply depend on God's grace? How will I know when I have received it?"

Ramana Maharshi said, "Even the thought that you should try, or the very act of trying, is itself solid proof that you already have His grace. Only if His grace is upon you can you even think, plan, or act towards Him."

This is what it means to say "yes" to life and not commit ātmahana. Understand this: when the word ātmahana is translated into English, it literally means "killing the Ātman." But how can you kill the Ātman?

The Gītā defines 'which cannot be killed is Ātma.'

नैनं छिन्दन्ति शस्त्राणि नैनं दहति पावकः |

nainaṃ chindanti śastrāṇi nainaṃ dahati pāvakaḥ |

That which cannot be made wet by water, burnt by fire, dried by air, or cut by the sword is the Ātman. That which cannot be killed is Ātman. So how can you literally say, "Kill the Ātman"?

Killing the Ātman (ātmahana) actually means saying no to life. Never say no to life.

Whenever you feel life is denying you something, look at it from this angle: it is like the silver lining that makes you see the cloud. You cannot complain, "Oh, such a big cloud!" The very fact that you see the cloud means there is an end to it, otherwise you wouldn't see it at all.

Even the energy you receive to say, "Life is denying me something" is itself proof that life is supporting you. Why? Because the very idea that you want something shows that life is alive in you, fueling that desire.

Here, the Upaniṣads declare what is right and wrong, what is good and bad. They reveal the sacred truths about dharma and adharma to the Universe.

Saying yes to life is always right and brings all that is good.

Saying no to life is always wrong and brings all that is negative.

So, all your questions – "Why is someone who is so good suffering?" or "Why is someone who is so bad enjoying?" – are rooted in a wrong understanding of life itself.

All your questions are answered by this one sacred truth. Each question contains thousands of answers within it.

When you ask, "Why is such a good man suffering?" - you have already concluded that he is a good person. Now, apply this sacred truth to that conclusion. Ask yourself: Has he said yes to life? If he is suffering, is he truly saying yes to life?

Similarly, when you ask, "Why is this bad person enjoying?" - question your conclusion that he is bad. Ask: Is he saying no to life? This is how dharma reveals itself. Internalize it. Observe it. Question all your moral standards. Question all your concepts of right and wrong. Even if someone strongly believes that sensual pleasures are life, and that is the way he expands, he is saying yes to those pleasures - he is saying yes to life.

When life - or your own inner self - teaches you, your aspirations begin to mature: "Maybe life is not only about sense pleasures. Perhaps a good name and fame is real life."

When your aspirations mature, cultivate the strength and power to move toward them, placing sensory pleasures as a secondary priority. Retain your powerfulness whether you say yes to sense pleasures, or yes to name and fame, or yes to mental pleasures.

Name and fame are forms of mental or psychological pleasure. As your consciousness evolves, life raises you to experience conscious pleasures - those arising from initiation, bliss, or deep spiritual experiences.

The pleasures you experience during Kuṇḍalinī awakening, during Completion (when you feel fully complete), during initiation, or during an energy darśan without any support from the senses or mind - these are the pleasures of consciousness.

In summary, there are three layers of pleasure:

1.Pleasures of the senses

2.Pleasures of the mind

3.Pleasures of consciousness

Saying yes even to your sensory pleasures, as long as they support your life, is still saying yes to life.

As long as you perceive and believe sensory pleasures are your priority and they expand you and they bring you tremendous joy, fulfillment, contentment, pleasure – saying no to sensory pleasures is saying no to life. It is self-denial, killing the Ātma (Ātmahana). Spend a lot of intelligence, energy, time in introspection, intranalyzing, internalizing and making decisions in life.

Saying Yes to Matured Aspirations

The ability to retain your powerfulness and say yes to the maturity of your aspirations is vairāgya.

As your aspirations mature, they may progress from the pleasures of the senses, to the pleasures of the mind, then to the pleasures of consciousness, and ultimately to the bliss of consciousness itself - tanmayānanda, the bliss inherent in your very existence, the Advaita Anubhava, the direct experience of non-duality.

Saying yes to the maturity of your aspirations, and embracing them as they mature, means that you yourself also mature.

Conversely, when you are unable to say yes to your matured aspirations, it indicates stagnation or aging, not true maturation.

Whenever your aspirations have matured, but due to powerlessness you continue to say yes only to lower aspirations while denying the higher, matured ones, it constitutes ātmahana - the denial or destruction of your own Self.

Role of Upaniṣads and Kāmika Āgama

If you feel: “There is a certain level of confusion, conflict, or contradiction in me. Until I grasp and come to clarity, what should I do? What should I say yes or no to?” - for this question, the Upaniṣads, God, and the Kāmika Āgama are introduced.

Only now the personal form appears - not before. Until this point, the context is established. Only then does the hero enter! In the Hindu tradition, context is higher than the hero. You tend to think the hero is greater than everything else because, being attached to form, anything presented in form impacts and impresses you. That is why context assumes human form as God.

If the context moves with hands and legs, acting and teaching as you do, that is Guru.

Context assuming form as per your perception is God.

Context assuming form in a way you can directly perceive is Guru.

Whenever you experience doubt, conflict, incompletion, or are unable to internalize these sacred truths and take immediate decisions in life, what you need is the Kāmika Āgama. In it, the truths of the Upaniṣads are transmitted in a user-friendly, day-to-day manual.

The Science of Enlightenment - the context of life - should be drawn from the 108 Upaniṣads.

Lifestyle should be rooted in the Kāmika Āgama.

Administration - running the Saṅgha, setting rules of right and wrong, prāyaścitta (atonement), enrolment, inclusion, and removal - should be conducted as per the Manusmṛti.

The Vision of KAILASA: Upaniṣads are the ultimate, supreme, and authoritative scriptures. The 108 Upaniṣads, described and listed in the Muktikopaniṣad by Śrī Rāmacandra Prabhu to Hanumān, form the highest scriptural authority for KAILASA.

The Kāmika Āgama is the authoritative guide for day-to-day lifestyle.

The Manusmṛti is the basis for administration and governance, as well as for structuring life in KAILASA.

In the Kāmika Āgama, as revealed by Mahādeva, there is nowhere a restriction that these Āgamas should be taught or practiced only by a particular community. On the contrary, Mahādeva explicitly declares the term Śivavipra. Śivavipra means “follower of Śiva.” The authority to read, practice, preach, and share the Āgamas belongs to anyone who chooses to follow Śiva.

That is all. The word Śivavipra cannot be reduced or mistranslated as belonging to a particular community.

Anyone who chooses to follow Śiva, with devotion and sincerity, has the right (adhikāra) to read, practice, live, and preach the Śaiva Āgamas. The authority is not based on birth, but on bhakti and commitment to Śiva.

Thus, all of us who decide to follow Śiva have the adhikāra—the sacred right and responsibility—to live and share the truths of the Śaiva Āgamas.

Death Based Religions Say No to Life

ताँस्ते प्रेत्याभिगच्छन्ति ये के चात्महनो जनाः || ३ ||
asuryā nāma te lokā andhena tamasāvṛtāḥ |
tāṃste pretyābhigacchanti ye ke cātmahano janāḥ || 3 ||

Right or wrong, good or bad, evolution or involution, expansion or contraction, what is sādhanā (spiritual practice), what is vedanā (suffering), what is yoga (union), what is roga (disease)—all these questions are answered in this one verse, with this one word: Ātmahana.

Ātmahana means saying no to life.

Saying no to life inevitably leads to the lower levels of existence—dussaṅga, the company of degraded or negative people.

Such company will, in one way or another, brainwash you into their mindset, push you into their space, and manipulate you into doing what they want. Eventually, they will abandon you and escape, leaving you in trouble. Being cunning and shrewd, they move on only to entrap others.

A very popular preacher of suicide theology was preaching, teaching, literally mesmerizing and hypnotizing everyone to commit suicide. This suicide-theology preacher preached so much that many people committed suicide! Somebody asked, 'Why are you not committing suicide? You are teaching so many people to do so!' He said, "If I die, then who will teach this idea and make more and more people commit suicide?'

Dussaṅga! The major warning this Upaniṣad gives is dussaṅga (wrong company).

Teaching death is very easy. That is why all death-based concepts spread like wildfire. All the death-based religions and concepts of killing yourself and killing others spread like wildfire. But life-based religions and concepts take a lot of time.

The pure life-based religion, ahiṃsā, saying yes to life, is Jainism. How much struggle that religion has to go through to spread! Actually, there are hardly any followers. Literally, there are no followers of Jainism except for a handful of monks and a few people. That is the truth. Because it is life-based, it does not spread that wildly.

Billions of animals are killed every year for our food. How can you kill a life for your snack? It takes a lot of time to accept life-based truths and understandings. It is very easy to receive, teach, and spread death-based ideas and concepts, because they are all agitating. Agitation is misunderstood as excitement. Power of Satsaṅga

Bad people's company is such that they can even steal and rob the Guru from your life - the Guru who happens after janmas of tapas. After hundreds of births, through your prayers, your tapas, your fasting, and your meditation, a living Guru happens in your life.

But the bad company – asuryā nāma te lokā andhena tamasāvṛtāḥ (असुर्या नाम ते लोका अन्धेन तमसाऽऽवृताः) – the company of asurās (people with destructive tendencies) can take away and rob even this greatest happening — the Guru — from your life.

Be aware. Be careful.

ताँस्ते प्रेत्याभिगच्छन्ति ये के चात्महनो जनाः || ३ ||
asuryā nāma te lokā andhena tamasāvṛtāḥ |
tāṃste pretyābhigacchanti ye ke cātmahano janāḥ || 3 ||

Always pray: "Let me have satsaṅga. Let me not have dussaṅga. Let me not have bad company that moves me away from the spiritual lifestyle."

Dussaṅga is the worst curse. Even falling into depression or slipping from your spiritual lifestyle and spiritual practices is not a crime - it may be a mistake. But if you have good company, you can always recover and come back.

The company of bad people, however, is a blunder. They will always appear enchanting and enticing, because they encourage all your basic instincts. They stimulate your agitated excitement, but they never let maturity happen.

So remember: the company of bad people is a blunder. But just good company is enough - with satsaṅga, you will become enlightened.

pretyābhi (प्रेत्याभि) means after death. Whoever does Ātmahana (killing the Ātma by saying "no" to life), after death they enter the space where negative people exist. It is a simple truth. Same frequency attracts the same frequency. Birds of a feather flock together. That's all - nothing mystical about it.

If you are a negative person, you will not be happy even in satsaṅga. You will only seek out negative people and gossip: "Pssst! Do you know what he is doing? Do you know what she is doing?" Only with that kind of talk will you feel comfortable.

In the same way, if you are a person aligned to truth, life, and spirituality, you will feel comfortable only with such friends who share those higher values.

Saying Yes to Maturity of Life

If you feel sensory pleasures are your life, then saying "no" to them is saying "no" to life itself. When life teaches you that sensory pleasures are not ultimate, refusing to learn that lesson is also saying "no" to life. Remember, whenever life gives you the experience that sensory pleasures are not ultimate, move further. Let your pleasures mature. Let your aspirations evolve. If you say, "No, no… I think that is too much, too risky. I think it is okay to stay here. That's good enough," - that again is saying "no" to life. Saying "no" to the evolution of life is itself saying "no" to life.

If you are confused - "Now, if I say yes, am I saying yes to my passions and sensory pleasures, or should I say yes to maturity and evolution? Life has already shown me many times that sense pleasures are not ultimate. It is asking me to mature. What should I do?" Even if you think it might be a mistake, always decide in favor of maturity. Even if it turns out to be an error, it is an error on the right side. Those who kill the Ātma (Ātmahana) enter the realm of demons - the hells covered in blinding darkness and filled with the negative qualities of tamas. So, wake up. Decide for life. Never give up. Come what may, look through it. You will see the light on the other side of the tunnel. However long the tunnel may seem, the light will be there at the end. Don't give up.

Don't give up. As Hindus, we have the right to say those words - "don't give up" - after being beaten, attacked, and persecuted for centuries. Even in just the last three hundred years, countless Hindus have been killed, tortured, and abused solely because of our faith, our way of life. Yet after all that, we are still standing. We have earned the right to declare: "Don't give up."

After such torture, we were even made to believe that our own upper castes oppressed and killed our own lower castes. That is the height of crime. After being massacred, the few of us who remained were told: "No outsiders killed you. You killed each other!"

We were surrounded by countless dead bodies - helpless, wondering how to dispose of them, who had killed them, who was responsible. And the story we were fed was: "You did this to each other in your sleep. You rolled on them, they rolled on you, and that's how they died." This is the narrative we were forced to accept.

Yet, even through this, we withstood everything. We did not give up. Now it is time for us to win. We will never give up. We will teach humanity the power of not giving up. We have faced the worst situations in which anyone else would have surrendered, but we stood firm. We have the right to tell the world: "Don't give up. Always decide for life."

Understand: saying "no" to life always comes from ignorance - whether at the level of an individual, a social leader, a political leader, or any decision maker.

Politicians and bureaucrats, merely for the sake of bribes, compromise the health of the common man. Lower-quality products are made available to the public in exchange for these bribes. Whether in the field of pharmaceutical drugs or the food industry, the best is never made accessible to the masses. At times, even dangerous and risky practices are permitted by paying off bureaucrats, politicians, or officials.

All of this is nothing but a denial of life. Unfortunately, those who accept such money do not even enjoy their ill-gotten gains during their lifetime; instead, they hoard and stash it away in remote tax-haven islands. Thus, for wealth they will never truly enjoy, they end up saying "no" to the lives of countless people.

If you look within and study your own life, you will see that all the difficulties you face are the result of saying "no" to life, including the poverty imposed upon you. In this 21st century, there is no real need for poverty. Humanity has already awakened a critical mass of people capable of working and producing enough food, clothing, shelter, and medical care for the entire population of planet Earth.

In fact, if just 2% of the human population worked eight hours a day in a disciplined way, we could provide these four basic needs - food, shelter, clothing, and medical care - for every single person on the planet. We have already reached and surpassed that percentage in this century. Then why does poverty still exist?

If in some way you do not have access to these essentials, understand clearly - it is only because the decision makers are saying "no" to life. The only way to solve this problem is for more and more people who consciously say "yes" to life to become decision makers. This transformation cannot happen through revolution. No revolution will succeed, because the people who usually lead revolutions are themselves those who say "no" to life.

Real change can come only through evolution - not by removing the people in power and replacing them with others, but by empowering everyone and raising more and more people who consciously say "yes" to life.

In the Hindu Tradition, working eight hours a day was never considered a lifestyle. Work rarely exceeded three to four hours per day, yet there was abundance for all. Why? Because the decision makers consistently said "yes" to life. They delighted in seeing people live in prosperity, rather than hoarding wealth in their treasuries under tight control. Unlike today, the decision makers in the Hindu tradition were not insecure or possessive - they trusted in abundance and shared it freely.

The Bhāgavatam describes that 16,000 golden palaces existed in Dvārakā. Each citizen had their own golden palace. This is not just perception or mere fact - it is truth. Kṛṣṇa never felt insecure; it was established by His expansive space of saying "yes" to life. Above all, Dvārakā was a city of soft power, not hard power. It was a city built by immigrants - whoever loved Kṛṣṇa, whoever wished to be with Him, gathered around Him and together created their own heaven. It was never about domination or control. People did not stay there because Kṛṣṇa was king and ruled over them. No!

He disliked the very space of hard power. That is why He left Vṛndāvana. He could easily have become king of Mathurā after killing Kaṃsa, but He said, "No hard power!" Instead, He handed the kingdom back to Kaṃsa's father and chose to go where those who truly loved Him would gather - where people who wished to celebrate life around Him would come together. Only soft power. Even the entire Nārāyaṇī Senā (Kṛṣṇa's army) was not a conventional force, but rather volunteers of Nārāyaṇa - devotees of Nārāyaṇa, disciples of Kṛṣṇa, and followers of Bhagavān.

Say "yes" to life! Let there be no corruption - whether on the physical level or the mental level. Mental corruption means spreading lies, which some media houses often do because of vested interests. This is a mental-level scam, a psychological scam, an information scam.

Understand: whether it is a physical-level scam, a mental-level scam, or a conscious-level scam - such as spreading strong lies in the name of religion, especially when speaking about what will happen to an individual after death, it is corruption. If we teach concepts that are not the ultimate truth, even if taught in the best possible way, it is still a conscious-level scam.

The last form of the Divine you will experience is the feminine. Before you experience the formless Divine, you will encounter truth and from truth you will leap into reality. And the truth is: God is Devī. The last form you will experience is Devī. It is only through Her that you will slip into the formless Existence, which we call Mahādeva or Śiva - whatever name you choose for God, for Super Consciousness.

There are various stages of samādhi. The last stage is Savikalpa Samādhi, Saguṇa Samādhi, from which you enter into Nirvikalpa Samādhi. In this final experience of Saguṇa Brahman, you will realize the Mother - Devī.

Whether they are physical, psychological, or conscious lies - spreading wrong ideas in any form is a scam, and that is saying "no" to life. Say "yes" to life as much as possible, in every possible way.

People often ask: "Is organ donation accepted in the Hindu Tradition?" The answer is yes. Organ donation is perfectly accepted and supported, because it is once again saying "yes" to life.

The only exception is the body of an enlightened being, which should never be touched or disturbed. After such a being leaves the body, it should be preserved exactly as it is, through the proper Hindu method of mummification known as the Jīva Samādhi process, described by Tirumūlar.

Tirumūlar was none other than Mahādeva Himself, who entered into the body of a farmer. The story tells that this farmer, while tending his cows, was bitten by a snake and died. His cows surrounded him, crying in grief. A divine being, passing through the skies, saw this scene and, out of immense compassion, entered into the farmer's body to relieve the suffering of the cows. Who could feel such compassion for paśu (cattle)? Only Paśupati—the Lord of all paśus, Mahādeva - could feel such deep empathy for them! It was He who assumed the body of Tirumūlar and returned to life.

Tirumūlar beautifully describe the entire science of preserving the enlightened body through the Jīva Samādhi process - the Hindu way of mummification. Such preservation is meant only for enlightened beings. For everyone else, organ donation is not only accepted but is one of the noblest ways to say "yes" to life. Any person can write a will to donate their organs, and it is one of the best ways to say "yes" to life.

Power of Dāna (Charity)

Whenever you consciously decide to say "yes" to life, all the other energies associated with life awaken within you.

A simple act of dāna (charity) - such as giving money for someone's medical expenses or offering annadāna (food donation) to someone - is a way of saying "yes" to another's life. In the Ayurvedic Tradition, hunger is considered a disease. When you give food, you are curing that disease.

The very moment you offer food, you say "yes" to another's life, and immediately the life-energy in your own stomach is awakened. As a result, any disease related to your stomach begins to heal.

In the same way, vaidya-dāna - giving financial help or support for someone's medical care, medicines, or surgery - also awakens healing energy within you.

For example, if you are suffering from a heart problem, and you perform vaidya-dāna for a poor patient with the same condition, the life-energy in you will be awakened. Your recovery will accelerate, and healing will happen quickly.

The moment you say "yes" to another's life, the life-energy within you responds to that "yes." And whenever your life-energy awakens to the "yes," your body naturally begins to heal.

All dāna is saying "yes" to life. Even if the poor appear in the garb of sādhus, it is far better than their becoming thieves. So, never deny them. Whoever comes in the garb of a sādhu, give to them. At the very least, by wearing that garb, they will slowly begin to imbibe the qualities of a sādhu.

Even when you are travelling - whether on a two-wheeler or in a car - always keep some change (coins or small currency) in your bag. Never miss giving to a single beggar at any traffic signal.

Thousands of people may tell you, "Don't encourage begging. Don't give. They will become addicts or misuse the money." That is their problem, not yours. By giving, you are saying "yes" to life. And when you give from this context - "By offering this dāna, I am saying yes to his life" - you will see that the very life-energy of saying "yes" to life is awakened, not only within you, but also within the person receiving.

Dāna – One of the Highest Forms of Saying Yes to Life

The tradition says there are five groups of people you should never meet empty-handed. You should always give something to them:

1. A child – Whenever you meet a child, always share something. A child always carries and radiates life-energy.

2. A pregnant woman – She is carrying a new life within her. Whenever you see her, offer something.

3. A beggar or a poor person in need – Always share something with them.

4. A sādhu – Never miss an opportunity to give.

5. The Guru – The tradition says you should never approach the Guru empty-handed; always offer something.

These five are considered sacred opportunities for giving. Offering to them is saying "yes" to life itself. And remember, you will never become poor by saying "yes" to life and by sharing.

Go on sharing and you will be showered. Dāna (charity, sharing) is one of the highest forms of saying "yes" to life. Whether it is sharing food, clothes, knowledge, or even enlightenment itself, dāna is among the greatest ways of affirming life.

When you give dāna from the context of saying "yes" to life, you awaken the life-energy not only in yourself but also in the one who is receiving it. So, always say "yes" to life. Constantly sharing from this context will awaken tremendous life-energy within you.

Wherever you get a chance to say "yes" to life, do it. Always give from that space. Go on sharing as much as you can, again and again, from the deep understanding that every act of giving is saying "yes" to life. A child, a pregnant woman, a beggar, a sādhu, or a Guru – these five, you should never meet empty-handed. Whenever you see them, always share something with this clear context of saying "yes" to life. And whichever position you may hold – as a social leader, a bureaucrat, a religious leader, a spiritual teacher, or a political leader – let every decision you take be grounded in saying "yes" to life. Then so much blessings, strength, and security will be showered upon you by the Cosmos.

Sharing and giving are among the most important ways of saying "yes" to life. Even spiritual healing is nothing but saying a deep "yes" to life. When someone receives healing, their very bio-memory also picks up this truth of affirming life.

The moment the bio-memory catches the fire of "yes to life," it begins to heal itself. Suddenly, so much healing, so much recovery, so much health starts happening! Say a deep "yes" to life. That is the essence of these three opening verses of the first Upaniṣad – the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad. Always say a deep, powerful "yes" to life, and never say "no" to life.

Remember, all your fears are nothing but the mind saying "no" to life. Consciously say a powerful, deep "yes" to life.

Qualities of Consciousness

Verse 4:

अनेजदेकं मनसो जवीयो नैनधेवा आप्नुवन्पुर्वमर्षत् |
तद्धावतोऽन्यानत्येत तिष्ठत् तस्मिन्नपो मातरिश्वा दधाति || ४ ||
anejadekaṃ manaso javīyo nainaddevā āpnuvanpūrvamarṣat |
taddhāvato'nyānatyet tiṣṭhat tasminnapo mātariśvā dadhāti || 4 ||

The following verses enumerate the attributes and qualities that are special and exclusive to Īśvara. He is stable. He is the One without a second. He is the eternal witness, surpassing even the agility of the mind. He existed before anything came into being.

He was present in the beginning and remains the embodiment of jñāna (truthful knowledge), enlightenment, and wisdom.

He is all-pervading, omnipresent, omniscient, all-knowing, and beyond the comprehension of even the Gods such as Indra.

He overtakes all who run swiftly, even though He Himself does not move an inch. It is by relying upon His powers and authority that the various deities - such as Vāyu, the Wind God - are able to perform their cosmic functions: producing rain, sustaining life, and enabling mortal beings to live, to breathe, to bear the prāṇa and the vital airs.

Consciousness itself is unmoving, yet swifter than the mind. The Gods of the senses - cannot overtake it nor go beyond it. Ever abiding, it swiftly moves ahead. It outpaces all who run. Within it, the life-energy (prāṇa) moves and expands through space, supporting and sustaining all activities of existence.

In this verse, the quality of Īśa is defined - the quality of pure consciousness is revealed. You may ask, why is this distinction important? Because sattva and tamas can appear similar externally, yet their contexts are completely different.

For example, the sattva and peace radiating from Ramana Maharshi, and the laziness of a beggar lying outside Ramana Maharshi's āśram - though outwardly they may look the same, their contexts are worlds apart.

This is one of the greatest confusions Hindu society faces. Lazy people may appear inactive outwardly, yet internally they are full of agitation, endless movement, endless incompletions.

Inaction can arise from many causes: inability, refusal to take responsibility, a non-committal lifestyle, distorted thinking patterns, laziness, vengeance, anger, hatred towards life - ten thousand forms of incompletion. None of this can ever be called sattva.

True sattva is pure inaction that comes only from Pūrṇa Pūrṇatva - Complete Completion without even a trace of incompletion. In that sattva, you may or may not act; you may or may not remain inactive. Action or inaction no longer defines you. When Completion is present, you are established in sattva. Out of that state, you may even choose to act - not out of need or incompletion, but simply to teach others.

अनेजदेकं मनसो जवीयो नैनद्देवा आप्नुवन्पूर्वमर्षत् |
तद्धावतोऽन्यानत्येति तिष्ठत्तस्मिन्नपो मातरिश्वा दधाति || ४ ||
anejadekaṃ manaso javīyo nainaddevā āpnuvanpūrvamarṣat |
taddhāvato'nyānatyeti tiṣṭhattasminnapo mātariśvā dadhāti || 4 ||

All these qualities are described - consciousness is unmoving, yet swifter than the mind; not just "One," but Oneness. The Upaniṣad reveals the qualities of consciousness so that you do not miss the context. Without context, you may walk into a temple and see only stone - a beautiful piece of art, perhaps even a museum exhibit, carvings of exquisite shapes and sizes, nothing more. But when you go with the right context, the same temple becomes a living space to connect with God, with consciousness itself. It is a space to celebrate Enlightenment. It is a place to live and experience Advaita - the ultimate Oneness.

Importance of Context

Now, the Upaniṣads are setting the context. In the very first statement, they declare the ultimate truth - that everything is consciousness. In the following verses, they reveal the essential truth of saying "yes" to life, and explain what happens if you say "no" to life.

Now, they begin describing the qualities of consciousness (Īśvara). You must know what is consciousness and what is not. You must also understand how to begin your practice, how your practices can be aligned, and how to orient yourself in the right way.

If you do not know the context, then even if you enter a temple, it will not serve you. Sometimes, without the right context, you may even lose respect for the temple - and once lost, regaining that reverence can be very difficult. In the same way, before starting any practice, the context must be set.

In Hindu tradition, context is more important than the God Himself. Īśa - the context, the principle - is more important than Īśvara Himself.

Only when you know that He is the Creator, Maintainer, and Destroyer will you even understand why you need to relate with Him. All the qualities described here are to set the context - to show you why you should do what you should do. He is unmoving in a world where everything is moving.

He is Oneness. He is swifter than the mind, which means wherever your mind can reach, He is already there. He is beyond your mind. The phrase manaso javīyo means: whatever hope you carry, its fulfillment is He; whatever fear you hold, the very space from which it arises is He. So, instead of running behind your hopes or your fears, run behind Him.

nainad devā āpnuvan pūrvam arṣat - the gods of the senses cannot overtake or go beyond Him. Indeed, God associates Himself with one sense, but Super Consciousness (Īśa) is beyond all these gods of the senses.

Meditating on these qualities, wherever they manifest, is meditation on Īśvara. In fact, this verse is more of a technique than a description. It is given for you to apply neti, neti, neti - "not this, not this, not this." If it moves - not that. If it is lower than Oneness - not that. If it is within the mind - not that. Here, the qualities are revealed not merely as attributes, but as a practical method to discover consciousness itself.

What is Completion? Anything that does not generate this very question is Completion. Go on completing. You cannot give an "answer" - only a technique. The question "Who am I?" can never have an answer, because it is not a question but a quest. The only true response is an experience.

Here, two things must be understood. First, the qualities of consciousness are described. Second, they are not described in an affirmative way, but as a method - for you to apply the process of "neti, neti" (not this, not this).

Look carefully at the descriptions: consciousness is unmoving; it is Oneness; it is swifter than the mind; the gods of the senses cannot overtake it; it moves swiftly, outrunning all that runs - yet it does not move. Now what can you do with such paradoxical statements?

Naturally, they are meant to be used for negation. "In it the life-energy moves and expands" means: whatever you are, you exist in it, you live in it, you expand in it, you merge into Oneness in it.

Everything happens in the Super Consciousness described here as Īśa. In it, all things arise. In it, all things dissolve. When you begin to relate with Īśa, you become Īśvara. And when you experience Īśvara, you dissolve into Īśa.

Every description in this Upaniṣad's fourth verse is given only as a technique to reach the truth as it is. Meditate on these qualities - but when you begin to meditate, you will realize that you cannot meditate on these qualities. They are not objects of meditation. They are tools, techniques, for you to inquire and discern: what you are perceiving as Īśa - is it truly Īśa or not?

So, sit and investigate.

What is unmoving? Anything you imagine cannot be it.

What is Oneness? Anything you imagine will always have the imagined, the imaginer, and the act of imagining. As long as there are three, it is not That.

Swifter than the mind? Whatever you do with your mind, or whatever your mind can conceive, it is not That.

These qualities are given not to define Īśa positively, but to help you peel away the layers - neti, neti, neti - until only the truth remains.

Unattributable Consciousness

Even if you describe through a negative quality, Īśa becomes Īśvara. The moment you try to perceive, relate, connect, or even seek to become one with Īśa, He has to grace you as Īśvara. Only then can He make you into Īśa.

Aham can never become Śivoham on its own. Only Śiva can extend Himself, absorb the whole Aham, and radiate as Śivoham. Īśa is the pure space - consciousness without attributes.

You cannot even give the attribute of "Super Consciousness" or "super-Super Consciousness." Even the word attributeless is inadequate; it does not convey the truth.

The right understanding is that it is unattributable - nothing can be attributed to it. That consciousness, the moment you attempt to describe it - "It is compassionate, it is ever-loving, it is graceful" - you are giving a positive description. If you say - "It cannot be realized by the mind, speech, or senses; in it the life energy moves and expands" - you are giving a negative description.

The Upaniṣad declares:

nainaddevā āpnuvan pūrvamarṣat (नैनधेवा आप्नुवन् पूर्वमर्षत्) - "The gods of the senses cannot overtake it or go beyond it." It cannot be cut by the sword, nor affected by anything.

Whether you give positive attributions or negative descriptions, Īśa becomes Īśvara - only to support you in experiencing Īśa. Know clearly: Īśa and Īśvara are not two. They are pure Oneness.

That is why, whether you contemplate through positive attributes or through negative descriptions, working on consciousness directly leads you to the experience of Īśa - pure consciousness itself.

This is such a short Upaniṣad! To convey something that is very brief, you actually need more time. One great author once wrote a forty-page book. Someone asked him, "Why such a short book? Only forty pages? Did you not have time?" He replied, "No, I had enough time - that is why I wrote forty pages. If I didn't have time, I would have written four hundred pages."

Condensing takes intelligence and energy, not expanding. Expansion means you are not responsible - you can utter whatever you want. But when you condense, you are responsible. You are bound by every word you utter. The bhāṣyakāras (commentators) enjoy a certain freedom. The sūtrakāras (those who create the original aphorisms) do not.

The sūtra is razor-sharp, concise, responsible. The commentary may expand, but the sūtra cannot. The Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad is just a handful of verses - eighteen, nineteen at most. In such a condensed scripture, why is one full verse dedicated entirely to negative description? Not even to positive attributes! Why?

So, any form your mind assumes, Īśa has already gone beyond that. It cannot be grasped or grabbed by the mind.

The mind never truly grasps; it only tries to grab, because it is based on restlessness. There is a subtle but profound difference:

Grasping a person is love. Grabbing a person is lust.

Grasping Existence is communion. Trying to grab Existence is taking possession.

When you grasp, both will be in the space of Completion. When you grab, both are stuck in the space of incompletion.

The mind that never plans to grasp, yet knows how to perceive, is buddhi - intelligence that grasps. The restless mind, however, always grabs. Look at what humanity has done to planet Earth.

Never in history has so much damage been done to Bhūmā Devī (Mother Earth). Wherever we go, the mess, the grabbing, the exploitation is evident! Even after grabbing so much, we have failed to provide for everyone.

So much "no"has been said to life. At the end of the day, if all human beings were simply provided with the basic necessities - food, shelter, clothes, and housing - it could at least have been a tolerable mistake, a tolerable blunder.

A consciousness from which you feel the need to provide for everyone will never grab. A mind that grabs will never feel the responsibility to provide for all. That is why so much grabbing happens, and yet people are still deprived.

The idea that "if people are provided, they will become lazy" is completely wrong.

Look at Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā, the two sacred Mothers - they have provided so much for us. Even after receiving their bounty, we did not become lazy. In fact, the whole Hindu civilization flourished between these two rivers.

Contrary to popular belief, they did not merge directly into the ocean as we see today. In the West Bengal area, the Gaṅgā flowed lower than Sri Lanka, because the landmass was different. When the Hindu civilization evolved, the Gaṅgā extended almost up to Australia, and beyond Australia it merged into the ocean.

There is ample evidence from Akashic Records and research by scholars studying history and the changing geography over time. Sarasvatī stretched as far as below South Africa; Gaṅgā extended to Australia before merging into the ocean. The region between these two rivers is where Hindu civilization truly flourished.

Gaṅgā Mātā and Sarasvatī Mātā provided abundantly for us, yet we never became lazy. The idea that providing humans with basic necessities will make them lazy is fundamentally wrong.

Human consciousness, by its very nature, is programmed for action. Kṛṣṇa says very clearly: "gahano karmaṇo gatiḥ" (गहनो कर्मणो गतिः - Gītā 4:17). The world itself is programmed for action. How long will you sleep? How long will you run your life without a strategy? How long will you entertain boredom or fatigue?

As long as you carry hatred toward your boss, who you feel is exploiting you, you may lie on a beach "on vacation" - but that vacation is nothing but revenge. You say to yourself: "You are exploiting me. You are swindling me. Now see! I won't do anything!" - throwing tantrums in your mind and body.

When you feel exploited, when someone takes undue advantage of you, your inner space reacts. You protest, you rebel, and you decide: "I am not going to do anything!"

But how long can you entertain boredom, fatigue, and rebellion? Not more than a few days. Even those who appear lazy, tamasic people who may not act with their bodies, will always feel body discomfort.

Laziness cannot be entertained indefinitely. Eventually, you will become active and start expressing yourself. Action is inevitable; it is the nature of consciousness.

Whether you grab or deny the responsibility of sharing, both arise from unconsciousness. The mind always tries to grab. That is why the Upaniṣad declares: "manaso javīyo" (मनसो जवीयो) - it outruns the grabbing mechanism within you. Every one of us possesses this grabbing mechanism, which we call the mind. Consciousness, however, transcends it. It outruns the mind, the very mechanism that tries to grab.

Purity of Food for Grasping Subtle Higher Truths

Trying to grasp consciousness requires a subtle intellect (sūkṣma buddhi). Consider Arugampul (அருகம் புல், Bermuda grass), a unique grass that grows near water ponds and is used in worship of Ganesha. Herbal juices like Bermuda grass juice, Bel juice (Aegle marmelos), Vilva juice, and neem juice are all examples of a diet that purifies the body and mind.

Understand the power of food through the sūtra: "āhāraśuddhi" - based on the purity of your food, your intellect gets purified, your memory gets purified, and your ability to grasp higher truths increases. When you cannot truly grasp, but act as if you are intelligent, you tend to grab and mess up the entire process. You feel the pressure to show that you are knowledgeable, that you understand better than others. But without the ability to truly comprehend, grabbing leads to chaos.

When the food is pure, the sattva (purity of mind) becomes pure. When sattva is pure, Smṛti - the ability to recollect, connect, grasp, and assimilate knowledge - becomes strong. Smṛti is not just memory; it is the ability to recollect the essence, connect it with the present, grasp it, and assimilate it.

Practical example: Take Haritaki powder at night. The next morning, read the Upaniṣads - notice the depth and clarity you experience. Now contrast: Eat a McDonald's burger, a large Coca-Cola, and finish with a loaded pizza. Lie down. Next morning, try to read Vedāntic texts. You will notice the difference. This demonstrates why a herbal, sattvic diet is essential for the intellect and spiritual grasp.

Sāttvic food - pure vegetarian food - helps refine your system and develops the subtle intellect with which you can grasp, rather than grab. If you grab the word "ekaṃ (एकम्)," you understand only "one." If you grasp the word "ekaṃ (एकम्)," you understand Oneness. The most subtle insights arise when subtle grooves form in the brain, and this is supported by a pure sāttvic and herbal diet.

Step by step, let us grasp what the Upaniṣads declare in this verse. It is consciousness giving its own address and declaring itself to all of us - the visiting card (business card) of consciousness. If you follow this verse, you will reach Īśa (pure consciousness). First, the word "anejad (अनेजद्)" - "unmoving."

The first verse of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad says:

īśāvāsyam idaṃ sarvaṃ yat kiñca jagatyāṃ jagat |

jagatyāṃ jagat (जगत्यां जगत्) means "change established on change." Īśa (consciousness) pervades it. In reality, the entire universe is nothing but change founded upon change. Yet, even though change is established on change, it is still filled with Īśa (consciousness).

Now, the Upaniṣads declare that this consciousness is unmoving, untouched by change itself. Īśa (consciousness) fills the universe - which is change established in change, jagatyāṃ jagat (जगत्यां जगत्) - yet remains ever unmoving.

Do not allow yourself to become tired psychologically or bored mentally. Instead, meditate on this profound truth.

For the next eleven days, every morning, drink about 200 ml of Bermuda grass juice—arukampul juice (அருகம் பூல் சாறு). This will deeply cleanse your system. You will realize that as soon as creatinine levels rise in the body, the ability to grasp subtle truths diminishes.

Attribute of Unmoving

What is it that is unmoving? The Earth is moving. The Moon is moving. The Sun is moving. Do not think that the Sun is stationary - it too is moving, though at a pace you cannot easily grasp. It takes billions of years. The entire solar system is moving, centered around something else. In fact, everything in the cosmos is in motion. So, what then is unmoving?

The very idea "I exist" is the only unmoving reality. Before you grasp anything - before you perceive, think, or understand anything, whether it is an idea, a concept, a truth, or a sensory experience - there is always the remembrance: I exist. Whether it is the Sun, Moon, Earth, or the whole universe, all these are objects you grasp. But the being that grasps, the awareness of its own is-ness, is the only unmoving reality.

If all this feels overwhelming, simply cool your system - wash your hair with gingelly oil (sesame oil) and let the body settle. Then sit and do manana (intranalyzing). Ask yourself: What is that anejad (अनेजद्)? What is that which is unmoving?

Consciousness itself is declaring: "I am unmoving." If you grasp what is unmoving, you will also grasp Who am I? What am I? Therefore, grasping consciousness is the first priority for all seekers.

Everything we do - whether standing upside down in āsanas, practicing vegetarianism, applying vibhūti (sacred ash) from temple to temple, gathering brown cows and their dung to prepare vibhūti (bhasma), or wearing large Rudrākṣa mālās that catch people's attention - whatever we do, be it temple-building or rituals, all of it is only for one purpose: to grasp consciousness.

Here, a direct technique is revealed. Consciousness (Īśa) is handing over its visiting card. And the very first line on that visiting card says: "Unmoving."

Let us start grasping what happens by manana (intranalyzing) anejad (अनेजद्) – unmoving. The beauty of these descriptions is that they can only be realized; no one else can teach them to you through commentaries. The more someone comments on this verse, the more questions it will awaken in you. That is the real commentary.

Providing more answers is not commentary - it is just a lullaby: "Okay, this is the way consciousness is. Please rest. Don't worry." You don't need a lullaby; you need the weapon to analyze.

Questions are the weapons with which you can analyze and intranalyze.

The Guru who only answers your questions will lead you into a cult of mere following. The Guru who questions your answers, who makes you think, internalize, and intranalyze only will lead you into a culture.

The Hindu tradition has always been a culture where following is purely voluntary. We were strong in our ability to transmit the truths, and clear about the power of our presence. That is why we declared our religion to be one of voluntary following.

Nobody forces you to buy rice, cook, and eat. It is voluntary. If you feel hunger, you know where the food is - go, buy, cook, and eat. In the same way, we were clear that these truths are the only way to be free from suffering. We made it completely voluntary.

People who did not wish to follow the Hindu structure, lifestyle, or dharma were still given full freedom and space - even within our own kingdoms and culture. That is why we did not build organizations; we built centers of education.

We were so confident of the truths that we made the whole system voluntary: if you want, you can follow; if you don't, you need not.

That very space gives room for everyone to discover Sanātana Hindu Dharma. It is the most discovered religion - not the most followed, but the most discovered. And within it, the most discovered tradition is the Advaitic Śaivite tradition.

There is always a space that is not filled. For example: when you are sitting on a seat, there is still some space left unoccupied, so you are able to move. But for some people, when they sit on the same seat, they completely fill it - leaving no space to move. In that case, movement is impossible because the seat is already fully occupied.

In the same way, understand why consciousness declares itself as unmoving. Because it has already filled every possible space that exists, it cannot move anywhere anymore.

So, try to grasp and define: What is moving? What is unmoving? Why does something move? Why does something remain unmoving? Among the things that do not move, what should be identified as consciousness? What truth is consciousness trying to make us understand by this word anejad (अनेजद्)—unmoving?

The Upaniṣad, the ultimate scripture, the Book of books, declares the very definition and qualities of the Cosmos.

Context of Life

The most important instruction human beings need is clarity about the goal, path, and purpose of their life - and the setting of the context for their life. In this 4th verse, the Upaniṣads are giving precisely that instruction: set the context for life.

Whatever you think of constantly, you become that. So the Upaniṣads are setting the context for what you are expected to think, and in which direction your mind needs to move.

By its very nature, the mind flows outward through the senses - towards external perception - because that is the path of least resistance. Cognizing external information is easy for the mind, so naturally it drifts outward.

If the mind is forcibly turned towards the Source by sheer hard power - rules and regulations - it results only in suppression and depression. That is why the mind resists rules. But if the mind can be guided with the right context to turn towards the Source, that is what is called soft power.

Soft power is not "soft." Yoga is soft power. Religions built primarily on hard power are often uneasy with yoga precisely because soft power is not weak. The authority your father has over you is hard power. The authority your uncle has is soft power: uncles give candies and fulfill small wishes without taking full responsibility. That is why you run after your uncle more easily than after your father. You obey your uncle's small requests because it's soft power - and soft power is far from gentle.

What the Upaniṣads aim to do in this verse is exactly that: set the right context and turn the mind toward the Source using soft power. Hard power cannot do this. Large buildings, elaborate institutions, or heavy religious infrastructure do not guarantee genuine following.

Truth carries authority, but authority is not the same as truth. Forcing the mind toward the Source from the level of the senses by hard rules and coercion only produces suppression and depression.

The good news is that soft power is sufficient: it can gently guide the mind to its Source and open the way to realizing its own divinity. Every word of this verse is designed to set the context for the mind's entry into the Source. Each word points you toward meditation: sit, cognize, and intranalyze.

अनेजदेकं मनसो जवीयो नैनधेवा आप्नुवन्पुर्वमर्षत् |
तद्धावतोऽन्यानत्येत तिष्ठत् तस्मिन्नपो मातरिश्वा दधाति || ४ ||
anejadekaṃ manaso javīyo nainaddevā āpnuvanpūrvamarṣat |
taddhāvato'nyānatyeti tiṣṭhattasminnapo mātariśvā dadhāti || 4 ||

Anejad means unmoving. Sit. When you sit and contemplate on unmoving you are setting the context for your mind to reach its Source and purify itself, complete itself. Cognize each word in this verse. Meditating on each word in this Sūtra will lead you towards the Source, Completion and fulfillment.

Turning Towards The Source with Soft Power

Now, let us work with this one word: ekam (एकम्). Ekam should never be translated as "one." Its real meaning is Oneness. If something is unmoving and merely "one," then it must be the largest - like a stone - incapable of change. Nothing new could emerge. So the word one is not the right translation for ekam.

Oneness is the true translation, because in Oneness, inner expansion, evolution, and expression are all possible. One is static, closed, and dead. Oneness is dynamic, open, and alive. The very word "one" points to deadness; the word "Oneness" points to life.

Use soft power and move toward the Source and Completion. Each of these words in the Upaniṣad sets a context for you to experience consciousness directly.

Tiredness and boredom have no place when you are sincerely moving toward the Source. Usually, the mind turns inward only through hard power - whenever it faces failure, rules, regulations, or laws, it is forced out of powerlessness to look inside. That is why most people hate turning inward: they associate it with suppression. But when you approach the Source through the right context - through soft power - the inner journey becomes alive, joyful, and liberating.

Whenever you turn inward out of powerlessness, that very turning inward becomes almost impossible. Think back: many times in your youth, you went inside only when you felt powerless. When you didn't get the marks you expected in an examination, you sat with yourself.

When your friend rejected you - you sat with yourself.

When you didn't get what you wanted - you sat with yourself.

When your proposal to your love was rejected - you sat with yourself.

But the moment he or she accepted, the next scene was a duet! The mind is like that: the instant acceptance happens, it rushes outward, extroverted. Only in failure do you find the "hero" sitting with forefinger on the chin, thumb on the cheek, eyes looking up to the left.

So, going inward to the Source - intranalyzing - has always been portrayed as something you do only when you are powerless. That is why, even when soft power tries to turn you inward by giving the right context, the first things that arise are boredom and tiredness: "Why am I doing this? Am I wasting my time?" As if you are about to change the entire Universe and everyone is waiting for your speech!

Understand: this concept of "wasting time" is a stupid concept. Whoever thinks, "I don't want to waste time," just needs to do one thing: maintain your breathing as slowly and as deeply as possible. You will never waste time. You will have as much time as you want on planet Earth. Be very clear: whenever your breathing is chaotic, you are wasting time.

If you have seen a spinning machine, you know how it works: cotton is fed in on one side, and thread comes out from the spinning wheel on the other. In the same way, your life energy is the cotton, and from it you can spin out time - more years, more longevity.

Life force is infinite. The raw material is abundant. The only question is: how much thread are you able to spin for yourself?

The process of spinning is nothing but maintaining your breath as slow as possible and as deep as possible.

That is how you spin out the number of years you need. When your breathing is chaotic, you are wasting time. When your breathing is deep and soft, you are gaining time. So, never believe this idea of "wasting time." There is no such thing as "limited time" available to you.

The first thing you need to understand is this: turn inward to the Source to achieve meditation or Completion, as revealed in this Upaniṣadic verse. And the way is through soft power - setting the right context and allowing the mind to turn naturally towards the Source.

Your mind can be directed towards consciousness in two ways: either by hard power or soft power. Hard power means rules, laws, regulations, and enforcement. It can push you in, but always at the cost of suppression and depression. You begin to hate it. One of the greatest successes of Sanātana Hindu Dharma is its voluntariness. Nothing is forced. That voluntariness itself is the glory. Without depending on the hard power of rules and regulations, just through soft power - the power of context, the power of inspiration - your mind is led towards the Source, towards Completion, towards consciousness.

This is the work of the verse. Each word of it, when meditated upon, when thought over again and again, when internalized deeply, turns the mind inward towards Completion. Do not entertain the tiredness and boredom that usually come when hard power is used to push you inside. That belongs to a past where you were forced. Now, it is the gentle strength of soft power guiding you. In this space, there is no room for boredom, no space for tiredness - only the effortless turning of the mind towards its Source.

Ekam. Oneness.

Meditate on it again and again: Ekam, Oneness. Not one — but Oneness. God is Oneness, never "one." The very moment you utter the word one, it slips into politics: only one can hold authority, and the second automatically threatens the first. From there, insecurity begins - endless conflict between the "one" and the "other." It is only because of Oneness that Sanātana Hindu Dharma can celebrate countless Gods and Goddesses. Infinite expressions, yet rooted in the same Oneness.

Sit with Ekam. Meditate on it. At the deepest level of existence, everything is Oneness. That is why, even with your worst enemy, there is something in you that is the same in him. And with the one you love most, towards whom you have affection, reverence, desire, or even possessiveness - there too, something is the same.

Make a list. On one side, write the people towards whom you feel love, respect, reverence, attraction, or possessiveness. On the other side, write those who trigger fear in you: a little fear, a lot of fear, deep terror, or even the kind of fear that makes you shiver the very moment you remember them. Now look carefully: in all of them - the loved, the desired, the feared, the hated - there is something identical. That unshakable sameness is Ekam, Oneness.

Attribute of Oneness

All the beings towards whom you feel fear - terrible fear, even horrible fear - with them too, you share Oneness. Pause and dig deep: What is that Oneness? The pure truth is this: Consciousness itself is Oneness.

Every being has consciousness - whether it is Indra, who enjoys the heights of Svarga, or a demon in the depths of Pātāla; whether it is Kinnara, Kimpuruṣa, Gandharva, Gāndhāra, Yakṣa, or Rākṣasa.

All jīvas are called jīva because they have jīva. All beings are called beings because they carry being. That shared essence is Oneness. Even with the beings towards whom you feel greed, or the beings towards whom you feel fear - like Śani, who seems to be attacking you through Śani Sāde Sāt, or the Guru who protects you - there too, Oneness exists.

Remember: Guru is the only graha among the Navagrahas who never gives bad results. Wherever Guru is placed, He always protects. Śukra, on the other hand, though He bestows pleasures and wealth, can indirectly harm. By showering abundance, He can make you lose awareness and fall prey to Rāhu.

What is Rāhu? Rāhu is hypocrisy. Rāhu is the tendency in you to "jump the gun." When you are inauthentic, when you know you are skipping responsibility, and still you justify - that is Rāhu in action.

The Purāṇas tell us: during the churning of the ocean, Rāhu knew he was a demon, yet he jumped the line and stood with the devas to receive nectar. He quickly grabbed it and swallowed before anyone could stop him. But Mohinī - none other than Mahāviṣṇu - was serving. And still, swifter than Mahāviṣṇu, Rāhu grabbed!

Understand: your buddhi (intelligence) which protects your life is Mahāviṣṇu. But hypocrisy, with its cunning swiftness, can overpower even your buddhi. It can justify itself, trick you, and make you jump the line of dharma. That is Rāhu.

So whether it is Śani testing you, Śukra tempting you, Rāhu deceiving you, or Guru protecting you — the substratum running through all of them is Oneness.

Meditate on Oneness. There is Oneness between you and the beings you fear, Oneness between you and the beings with whom you feel greed, and Oneness between you and the Whole itself. This Oneness is so subtle. You cannot hold it, you cannot catch it. You can only smell it.

It is like Gaṅgā. Can anyone say, "I have caught hold of Gaṅgā, I have trapped Gaṅgā in my hand"? No. The moment you close your hand, Gaṅgā is no longer there. As long as your palms are open, Gaṅgā flows through them. Oneness is the same. With open palms of awareness, you experience it flowing. The moment you try to grasp or grab, it slips away. And yet, the moment you smell Oneness, fear and greed are not removed brick by brick - they are bulldozed!

When you smell Oneness between yourself and the person you are terrified of, fear is simply bulldozed. When you smell Oneness between yourself and the people with whom you entertain greed - love, lust, possessiveness, attachments - all of that is blasted, bombarded, gone.

This does not make you a dry, insensitive being. From sensitivity, you rise into sensibility. You develop a sensible sensitivity. From the powerfulness of Oneness, whether you show love or whether you show anger, it becomes power for the other person who receives it. From powerlessness, whether you show love or whether you show anger, it only creates more powerlessness in the other.

Meditate on Ekam to be Established in Powerfulness

If you want to be established in powerfulness, the best technique is: Meditate on Ekam - Oneness. The good news is, there is already Oneness between you and Mahādeva. The great news is, He is waiting to give you that experience! When you cognize Mahādeva, never think of Him as your competitor. People often fear, "If I say I am Śiva, will He be offended? Will He ask, 'Have you really become qualified to utter Śivoham?'"

No. Absolutely not. He will only say: "Dear one, start saying Śivoham. I will make you qualified." Mahādeva is not standing at the door demanding an entry ticket, asking for your qualification certificate before giving you the experience. He is simply saying: "Start. Declare. Live. I will give you the qualification."

So, always cognize Mahādeva as the One who encourages you to begin. He will never appear rough and judgmental saying, "Have you become qualified? Even Nārāyaṇa has not yet achieved this. You think you will?" No! He is not that. I am telling you the truth as it is.

When you say Śivoham and sometimes fail to maintain that powerful space, He will not punish you. He will only say: "Don't bother. Repeat again and again. Cognize more and more. Behave, act, live more and more as Śivoham. Even if in the beginning there is some hypocrisy, don't worry. Start. It will align." He is here only to make you experience Him.

Because the Oneness between you and Him is consciousness itself. He is waiting to have you as part of Him. He is waiting to receive you into Him. He is waiting for you. You don't even need to knock at the door. Go near the door - it is already open. He is standing there, arms open, to receive you.

The very idea that the door is locked, that you must knock, is a lie. A stupid idea given to you, which you believed. Because you never went near the door, from a distance you assumed it was closed. Walk near. It is open. He is waiting.

This verse is God declaring about Himself. He is giving introduction about Himself. Consciousness is declaring about itself.

अनेजदेकं मनसो जवीयो नैनद्देवा आप्नुवन्पूर्वमर्षत् |

anejadekaṃ manaso javīyo nainaddevā āpnuvanpūrvamarṣat |

Consciousness is declaring about Itself here. Understand: Sanātana Hindu Dharma is such that whatever has been revealed in its śāstras is never a lie. Science is only yet to catch up with us. Just because modern science has not reached that space does not mean what our śāstras declared is false.

So much has already been revealed in our Upaniṣads and Hindu tradition - about cosmology, about numbers, about time itself. For example, in the Kāmika Āgama, numbers are described with precise words. Hundred million trillion is called Parārtha. We have a language even for the highest numbers that today's science has not yet conceived.

Because science is slow to catch up, don't fall into the foolishness of thinking, "Let science prove it first, then I will start following." By the time you wait, your life will be wasted. Thousands of truths were already declared by our śāstras, and science has only later confirmed them. There are still thousands more which science will one day prove.

anejadekaṃ manaso javīyo nainaddevā āpnuvanpūrvamarṣat |

This is the declaration of Consciousness about Itself. The Super Consciousness is revealing what It is.

Understand: not only have we revealed so much about cosmology, but we have also revealed the impact of cosmology on your everyday life. No other tradition on planet Earth has such precise knowledge, able to predict even the smallest decisions of the day. Should you travel today to a village in the north or to the south? All these are decided based on where Rāhu, Ketu, Śani, and Chandra are positioned in the cosmos.

Even the piṇḍāṇḍa - your day-to-day decisions, your micro-actions - are influenced and aligned with the movements of the brahmāṇḍa. Sanātana Hindu Dharma is the only tradition that not only explored the vast Cosmos, but also revealed the precise science of how cosmic powers impact your body, your mind, and your very consciousness, and the sacred science of aligning yourself with them.

Attribute of Swiftness

Now, manaso javīyo (मनसो जवीयो). It means "swifter than the mind." You cannot have Vākyārtha Sadas on manaso javīyo, because the very moment you begin to talk about it, it has already gone beyond.

Before you even start imagining, Consciousness is already there. However much you visualize or construct with your mind, by the time you reach that space, Consciousness has already transcended it.

Manaso javīyo – swifter than the mind. Anything that the mind can say, anything the mind can conceive, it is already beyond. That is why Vākyārtha Sadas on manaso javīyo is only possible by sitting in silence. Even the Gods of the senses cannot overtake it.

तिष्ठत्तस्मिन्नपो मातरिश्वा दधाति

tiṣṭhattasminnapo mātariśvā dadhāti

Remaining situated, it outruns all other running ones. Mind, speech, senses. In it the life energy, mātariśvā (मातरिश्वा) moves and expands itself, supporting all activities.

तिष्ठत्तस्मिन्नपो मातरिश्वा दधाति

tiṣṭhattasminnapo mātariśvā dadhāti

It outruns all the running ones, in it the life energy moves and expands itself, supporting all activities.

तद्धावतो'न्यानत्येति तिष्ठत्तस्मिन्नपो मातरिश्वा दधाति ||

taddhāvato'nyānatyeti tiṣṭhattasminnapo mātariśvā dadhāti ||

It is unmoving, Oneness, swifter than the mind. The gods of the senses cannot overtake it, because even before they attempt to reach, it has already gone beyond. Yet, as it remains situated, it outruns all the running ones – mind, speech, and senses.

Remaining situated means remaining utterly stable, still, centered. And from that very stillness, it outruns everything. Running along with the mind and merely outrunning the mind is just being a competitor.

But here, the Upaniṣads declare something deeper: Remaining in absolute stillness, it surpasses all movement. Wherever your mind runs, wherever your speech runs, wherever your senses run - it is already present there.

So the great question arises: What is it that can outrun the mind, speech, and senses, yet remain ever-situated, unmoving?

Energy of Life

What is present in that life-energy which moves and expands itself? The Upaniṣads declare it beautifully in the words:

mātariśvā dadhāti (मातरिश्वा दधाति). These words directly declare the immortality that is in all of us.

Even when mortality is spoken of - whether of one who has realized or one who has not yet realized - it is only the immortal being's mortality that is described.

Because the Upaniṣad does not say life-energy dissolves or dies. No! It only says: life-energy moves and expands, moves and expands, moves and expands.

You neither take birth, nor do you die. It is like a vast landmass. When it is fenced, it suddenly appears as separate countries, nations, races, or communities. In truth, it is always one land. In the same way, in your life, the divisions of birth, youth, old age, and death are nothing but fences created by corruption in love.

The friendliness of the mother, when fenced, becomes "compassion" and "care."

The friendliness of a beloved, when fenced, becomes "relationship."

When these fences collapse, you experience "aloneness," "old age," and finally, what you call "death."

Why do you feel birth, youth, old age, and death? Because as your life-energy moves and expands within consciousness, the fragrance, the very smell of consciousness, is friendliness.

When you cut that into compartments, when you fence it, your life-energy starts to believe: "One day, when these fences of friendliness are denied to me, I will be dead."

If your life-energy is made to believe that life means: waking up in the morning; having breakfast, lunch, dinner; doing a few activities; going back to sleep; then corruption has already happened.

This corruption makes you feel: "One day, I will not be able to do these things, so that will be my death." Understand: whatever you perceive, or are unable to perceive, based on that you define your "life."

But life-energy itself never dies; it only moves and expands.

Life is not based on what you are able to perceive or unable to perceive. It is based on what exists. Sometimes your mother may not show friendliness. That does not mean she has stopped loving you.

Sometimes life-energy may not provide you with the breakfast you wanted. That does not mean it has killed you. Your immortality is the truth.

In one country, you may have idli for breakfast; in another, a burger; in another, nectar itself. You are not dead because you didn't get your idli or your burger. The conceptual change in how you label love does not take away its basic friendliness. What you experience: with your mother, with your beloved, or even on your deathbed with the nurse or doctor offering care - it is all the same friendliness of life-energy. But by creating fences, you separate, divide, and label these as "different." That labeling is what makes you feel you "have life" or "do not have life."

If you believe eating is life, then the day you cannot eat because of diabetes or obesity, you will feel your life is over.

If you think sex is life, then when your body cannot perform anymore, you will feel you are dead. Whatever fence you create - whether as love or as life - that very fence corrupts the truth. In reality, you simply move and expand in that same space of friendliness.

Only the person who understands this truth: "I neither have life, nor death" can truly renounce. That is why renunciation is possible only at the feet of a Master - in the living presence of one who embodies this truth.

Otherwise, without a Master, you will go on imagining. Deep down, you will know it is only imagination. Then you will live only to prove yourself right, or to protect your ego, or to cling to your arrogance. Real renunciation is possible only when you understand:

tiṣṭhattasminnapo mātariśvā dadhāti (तिष्ठत्तस्मन्निनपो मातरिश्वा दधाति).

The life-energy moves and expands in space, supporting all activities.

Meditate on life's energy - mātariśvā (मातरिश्वा). The Upaniṣads declare: "What is that in me which moves and expands when I leave this body? What is that which enters into this body, uses this body, moves through this body, and expands when I leave this body? What is mātariśvā?"

Mātariśvā is the life-energy which moves and expands itself, supporting all activities.

If you meditate on this one word, mātariśvā, you will understand why death is celebrated as liberation in Vārāṇasī. Literally in Kāśī, whether you consciously understand it or not, Mahādeva gives you the direct experience of mātariśvā dadhāti - the life-energy moving and expanding itself.

You are not punished for not having realized immortality. If you do not yet have the experience, you are treated with compassion, not judgment. In Kāśī, Mahādeva declares: "If you do not have knowledge of immortality, I am responsible to give it to you. I am not here to punish you for ignorance. I am here to liberate you."

The entire structure of Āgamas is established in the Four Pādas - CaryāPāda (lifestyle), KriyāPāda (rituals, processes), YogaPāda(Yoga), JñānaPāda(Knowledge). The JñānaPāda is also called VidyāPāda. All these Four Pādas are established on this one truth:

mātariśvā dadhāti (मातरिश्वा दधाति).

The life-energy moves and expands itself, supporting all activities. Life-energy does not dissolve or disappear. It only moves and expands itself. Again and again: It just moves and expands. On this immortal truth, all the pādas of Āgamas - Caryāpāda, Kriyāpāda, Yogapāda, Jñānapāda - are built. This is the revelation of the Upaniṣads: Your life-energy eternally moves and expands, supporting all activities.

Sit, think, contemplate, internalize. If you are over sixty, work on this verse seriously: you are already running on a bonus. Take mātariśvā dadhāti (मातरिश्वा दधाति) deeply into your being.

Ask yourself: what is that in us which is unborn and will never die, yet simply moves and expands when we drop the body Whether you believe it or not, this is the truth. Mahādeva (महादेव) makes Himself available in Vārāṇasī so that you may directly realize this truth. Wherever you go, He makes Himself available as Acalamūrti. He will make Himself available in both forms – Acalamūrti and Sacalamūrti.

Both manifestations are for the same purpose: to give you the direct experience of mātariśvā dadhāti - the life-energy that moves and expands, supporting all activities.

Discovering your consciousness is the purpose of life

तदेजति तन्नैजति तद्दूरे तद्वन्तिके।
तदन्तरस्य सर्वस्य तदु सर्वस्यास्य बाह्यतः ॥ ५ ॥
tadejati tannaijati taddūre tadvantike।
tadantarasya sarvasya tadu sarvasyāsya bāhyataḥ ॥ 5 ॥

The translation: That moves, and That moves not. That is far off, That is also near. That is the inner space of all this, and That is also the outer space of all this.

Through this statement, Upaniṣad is declaring you need manana (intranalyzing) to experience consciousness, śravaṇa is not enough. Śravaṇa (listening) to instigate manana (intranalyzing). The 5th verse also describes the various qualities of consciousness, or the various techniques with which you can move yourself towards consciousness and experience consciousness.

तदन्तरस्य सर्वस्य तदु सर्वस्यास्य बाह्यतः ॥ ५ ॥
tadejati tannaijati taddūre tadvantike।
tadantarasya sarvasya tadu sarvasyāsya bāhyataḥ ॥ 5 ॥

'That moves, and That moves not. That is far off, That is also near. That is the inner space of all this, and That is also the outer space of all this.'

It seems like a confusing description, but it is the clearest statement ever uttered on the planet Earth! It is the most authentic statement ever uttered on the planet Earth!

Discovering your consciousness experientially is the very purpose of your life. Whether you lived as a spiritual seeker, a cook, lawyer, engineer, doctor, professional, or even as someone who did "nothing" - none of that counts in the Cosmos. Whether you lived as a political leader or a social leader - nothing counts in the Cosmos. The only thing that counts is this: Have you discovered your pure consciousness?

The good news is, whatever you consider to be the "goal of your life" - and whether you achieved it or not - is not a goal at all in the Cosmos.

If you think, "I don't have a good name in my neighbourhood" - don't worry, that is not the goal of life.

If you think, "I don't have this, I don't have that" - don't worry, none of that is the goal of life.

Even those who have all these things have wasted their time and energy!

Understand: this goal is not one of many priorities in life - it is the only goal in life. The only goal in life is discovering your pure consciousness. Every moment you spend in discovering your consciousness - use that moment, treasure that moment. Every moment you did not spend on this goal - you have wasted those moments in your life.

Whenever you are able to think, reflect, and intranalyze with the goal of reaching your Source - know that every such moment is meditation, even if your thinking feels confusing at first.

'That moves' means consciousness. Tadejati means 'That does not move.' The Upaniṣads are declaring the ultimate about the Ultimate in riddles, paradox and words which are apparently confusing and chaotic! tadejati tannaijati (तदेजति तन्नैजति) means 'That moves, and That moves not.' What do you understand by that? They are saying, 'Sit and contemplate what is the meaning of 'That moves, and That does not Move.' What is that which moves and does not move?

How can something be far off and be near? 'That is the inner space of all this. That is also the outer space of all this!' Brahmāṇḍa is 'the outer space of all this.' Piṇḍāṇḍa is 'the inner space of all this.' It is That, and it is This!

तदेजति तन्नैजति तद्दूरे तद्वन्तिके।
तदन्तरस्य सर्वस्य तदु सर्वस्यास्य बाह्यतः ॥ ५ ॥
tadejati tannaijati taddūre tadvantike।
tadantarasya sarvasya tadu sarvasyāsya bāhyataḥ ॥ 5 ॥

If you just intranalyze and understand this one verse, you will become enlightened! Vākyārtha Sadas is the best practice - even the elderly can do it.

Sit and intranalyze: "What is it that moves, and that does not move, that is far off, and that is also near?" Mahādeva is describing Himself. You can never understand Him with your logic; only He can introduce Himself to you. And here, He is introducing Himself:

"That moves, and That moves not.

That is far off, and That is also near.

That is the inner space of all this, and That is also the outer space of all this."

Mahādeva is not merely giving you His visiting card; He is describing Himself.

Contemplate on it deeply: He is the inner space of all that exists. He is also the outer space of all that exists. Actually, if you truly contemplate on these verses, you will attain complete Brahmacārya. These verses are so powerful that they directly awaken your Kuṇḍalinī Śakti. And once your Kuṇḍalinī Śakti is awakened, Brahmacārya becomes natural, effortless.

Discovering your consciousness is the one and only purpose of life. Whether life places you in heaven or in hell, the single message life is constantly sending is: discover your consciousness. Even if life gives you all that you desire - placing you on the highest pedestal in terms of society, wealth, power, name, and fame - the message remains the same: discover your consciousness, which is beyond all of these.

And if life pushes you into poverty, hunger, disease, and despair, suffocating you with suffering at every step, still the message is the same: discover your consciousness. That alone is the way out of all suffering. Whether you are showered with abundance or crushed by hardship, life sends you only one message again and again: discover your consciousness.

Only Reality can Stand the Scrutiny of Consciousness

Anything that moves and does not move must itself be beyond movement and stillness. The way to perceive such perception is not by questioning it too much.

The moment you begin questioning the dream, the dream melts away. Dreams always present completely illogical situations before you. If someone you deeply love appears in a dream and is about to embrace you, and you question, "How can this be so easy, how can this be possible?" - the dream disappears. If you are about to taste the food you have always longed for, and you question, "How can this be possible?" - the dream dissolves.

Perception works the same way. You must relate to it very sensitively, without questioning it too harshly. It is like a touch-me-not. The moment you question it, it disappears. That is why, when you question your love, it vanishes. All your so-called "falling in love," the moment you ask, "Is this authentic?" you will find it reduces merely to skin and skin color - not even skin deep. The moment you question perception, it dissolves.

Facts can stand the scrutiny of logic, but not of the larger logic of life. For example, someone may claim: "The Earth is flat." To your simple, straightforward logic, yes it looks flat, so it must be flat. But it cannot withstand the broader logic revealed through instruments, observation, and analysis. Facts survive ordinary logic, but not larger logic.

Truth, however, can stand the scrutiny of logic, larger logic, scientific instruments, discoveries, and research. Truth can withstand all enquiries. Yet, even truth is not the ultimate. Truth still does not stand the scrutiny of consciousness.

Reality alone is that which can withstand the scrutiny of consciousness.

Only when your Third Eye is awakened will you understand that there is no such thing as inner or outer. That is the natural result of Third Eye awakening.

How can you recognize whether someone's Third Eye is fully awakened? The idea of inner and outer will have completely disappeared in them. With the awakening of the Third Eye, one perceives everything - internally and externally - without any difference, division, or gap.

It is only ignorance that makes you feel something is internal or external, far or near. It is like a bamboo stick floating on the Gaṅgā. Because of that bamboo, you say "the right side of the Gaṅgā" and "the left side of the Gaṅgā." But can the Gaṅgā ever truly be divided? No! Even if the bamboo is removed, Gaṅgā is not re-united either, because division and uniting never happened in reality.

"Gaṅgā is divided" is perception.

"Gaṅgā is not divided" is truth.

"Gaṅgā can neither be divided nor united" is reality.

A single bamboo stick can give rise to perception, fact, and even arguments around truth - all of which do not exist in reality. In the same way, the ideas of inner and outer, moving and unmoving are created. Just as the bamboo appears to divide the Gaṅgā, your ignorance and powerlessness appear to divide you.

How you handle the bamboo stick is exactly how you should handle your ignorance: recognize that it cannot divide you into inner and outer; it cannot make you "moves" or "moves not."

Understand this example:

The Gaṅgā is your consciousness.

The bamboo stick is your ignorance or powerlessness.

The notions of right and left, near and far, inner and outer, moving and unmoving - are illusions created by that stick.

From a small perspective, the bamboo may seem to have divided the river. For an ant, that bamboo stick is equivalent to a massive dam - "Wow! Such a big dam. The Gaṅgā cannot touch me. I am protected!" But in truth, that stick is not even a ship, let alone a dam.

When your perception is limited, what impact can that bamboo stick—or your powerlessness—have on you?

When your perception rises to the level of fact, what can that bamboo stick do to the Gaṅgā, and what can your powerlessness do to you?

When you rise to the level of truth, what can that bamboo stick do to the Gaṅgā, and what can your powerlessness do to you?

When you rise to the level of reality, what can that bamboo stick do to the Gaṅgā, and what can your powerlessness do to you?

What does that bamboo stick truly mean to the Gaṅgā, and what does your powerlessness truly mean to you?

Have Vākyārtha Sadas on all these questions. Then you will understand, digest, and grasp the essence.

It is a truth that consciousness moves, and it is also a truth that consciousness does not move. It is a truth that consciousness is far off from the farthest space, and it is also truth that it is nearer than the nearest space. Truth is the inner space of the whole Cosmos. Truth is also the outer space of the whole Cosmos. It pervades and is uniformly ever-present inside and encompassing the Cosmos from the outside. This is an amazing sūtra! Please listen to what the Upaniṣads want to declare through this verse: Break from that which makes you perceive inside and outside separately, moving and unmoving separately, antar-bāhyataḥ separately.

tad ejati tannaijati (तदेजति तन्नैजति) – "That moves, and That moves not."

Ask yourself:

What is it that makes you perceive something as moving or unmoving?

What is it that makes you perceive something as near or far?

What is it that makes you perceive something as inside or outside of you?

Enlightenment Experience Beyond Inner And Outer Space

Here is the experience of the Supreme Pontiff of Hinduism, Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam, on the day of His enlightenment experience:

On the Vaikāsi-Viśākham - the month of Vaikāsi, on Pūrṇimā Tithi, under Viśākham Nakṣatra - in the evening, when He was just eleven years old, He went and sat on a rock in Pāvaḷakkuṇḍru, the Sacred Coral Hill. He did not choose which rock to sit on. That very rock upon which He sat has now become a Tīrtha Kṣetra (sacred energy field) for all His devotees and disciples. Whenever He found time, He would go and spend some moments in that area, because it was there that Devī became enlightened. On that day, He was not even engaged in any serious meditation. The whole ambience was calm and beautiful, so He simply decided to close His eyes. The moment He closed His eyes, the intensity of His yearning started taking over Him - the yearning to realize Himself, His true nature. Finally, this intensity completely possessed Him.

The Kaṭhopaniṣad declares: śraddhā viveca (श्रद्धा ववेच) - "śraddhā took over Naciketā." All of you know how it feels when fear or greed takes over you. When you are seized by fear or a panic attack, you act in ways that later make you feel guilty or ashamed. You repent for them, yet you do not know why you did them. In the same way, when lust or greed takes over, you act in ways that you can never logically justify, even to yourself. But when authenticity (śraddhā) takes over you, it is ten thousand times more intense than fear or greed. Fear taking over you is called a panic attack. Greed taking over you is called restlessness. When authenticity takes over you, it is called Satori.

Bhagavān's sincere seeking overpowered Him. He simply felt: What is it that I am seeking? Who is it within me that is seeking? Who is it that feels such deep discontent with everything I see and hear? Who is it that is discontent even with my very existence? All of you carry a subtle discontent with your own existence. But you never look into it - never question why, what, or who is having that discontentment. Each time you begin to turn inward, if you get a small distraction - a sweet like a rasgullā, or some other comfort - you forget the inquiry. Again and again, those questions are lost in the rush of outer happenings.

But for one whose whole being is consumed with these questions—Why? What? Who is discontent?—that person is a seeker. In Bhagavān, this intense seeking took over completely: Who am I that is experiencing this suffocation, this discontentment? That very heaviness plunged into the depths of His consciousness.

Suddenly, the first thing that happened was that the idea of inside and outside broke. The boundary between inner space and outer space dissolved. The very first experience: He was able to see everything around Him - 360 degrees, in all ten directions - above, below, all around. Not only was He able to see, He was able to feel and experience everything. He felt that the skin of the rock on which He was sitting, and the skin of His own body - both held Him equally. In both, He existed equally. The air, the gentle breeze, the setting Sun, the rising Moon, the sacred hill of Arunācala, the plants, bushes, shrubs, trees - everything became alive, vibrantly alive! The idea that something was "inside" and something else "outside" was completely lost.

First, He was able to see in all ten directions, a complete 360 degrees. In the very next moment, He realized that not only was He able to see - He was able to experience all of that as Himself. He did not feel vulnerable. He felt powerful. He simply knew He is Oneness, Existence itself. There was no "inner" and "outer." There was no "moving" and "unmoving." The slightest movement of the plants was His own movement. The deepest stillness at the very center of the Cosmos was His own stillness. All the concepts you ordinarily carry - moves, moves not, near, far off - simply dissolved. The ideas of inner space (inside you) and outer space(outside you) were utterly forgotten. At that moment, Mamakāra (Inner Image) drank the Life Image, ate the Outer Image, and danced upon the Others' Image! Do manana - deep intranalyzing, Vākyārtha Sadas - on this statement: "Inner Image drank the Life Image, ate the Outer Image, and danced on Others' Image." It means there are no gaps between images. There is no room for imagination or delusion. Ignorance itself had melted down.

तदन्तरस्य सर्वस्य तदु सर्वस्यास्य बाह्यतः ॥ ५ ॥
tadejati tannaijati taddūre tadvantike।
tadantarasya sarvasya tadu sarvasyāsya bāhyataḥ ॥ 5 ॥

Whenever you look in, that immature "you" - the Inner Image which constantly craves security and goes on begging - will slip away like a bar of soap in a bathtub. When you drop soap into water, it just slips through your hand. In the same way, whenever you try to catch hold of the Inner Image by looking in, it slips away. But after a few minutes, the soap begins to melt and merge into the water.

In the same way, even if you are not able to firmly hold your Inner Image, if you simply continue looking in - running behind it and pressing it with intensity - it will eventually dissolve. It will no longer exist. That is why seeking itself gives the experience of liberation.

Every time you try to catch the "soap" of the Inner Image and it escapes, one layer of it is peeled off. Again, when you catch it and it slips, another layer is shed. After a few such moments, the soap is gone. The Inner Image dissolves, leaving only liberation.

तदन्तरस्य सर्वस्य तदु सर्वस्यास्य बाह्यतः ॥ ५ ॥
tadejati tannaijati taddūre tadvantike।
tadantarasya sarvasya tadu sarvasyāsya bāhyataḥ ॥ 5 ॥

You need to find out: What is it that makes you experience "inside" and "outside" as separate? What is it that makes you experience "moves" and "moves not" as separate? What is it that makes you experience something as far away and something as near?

The Upaniṣads clearly declare: "Find that which makes you experience something as moving, something as unmoving, something as closer, something as farther, something as outside, and something as inside." Complete with that, and you will experience the truth of this verse. Until then, it will only remain intellectual jugglery.

The very declaration of the Upaniṣads is itself both a technique and the truth. What the Upaniṣads declare here is simultaneously a truth and a method for realization. Go on engaging in Vākyārtha Sadas and manana (deep contemplation) on this. Then you will recognize: it is a truth-cum-technique.

Upaniṣads made User-friendly is Āgamas

Āgamas should have been regarded as the Book of Hinduism. For all matters of lifestyle and social conduct - how we should live in society with liberated thinking, how we should relate to one another, and how we should establish ourselves in conscious living - for everything, Āgamas should have been the scripture.

No Master has the courage of vision or clarity of thought at such depth other than Mahādeva. Mahādeva is truly unimaginable! Some may raise the doubt: "How do you know the Āgamas were written by Mahādeva? How do you know they were not written by someone else who merely attributed them to His name?"

Understand this: any brain that can think with such profound depth, such clarity, such highest cognition - that very being has already become Mahādeva. Such a one has achieved Śiva-consciousness. So there is no need to worry whether it was written by Mahādeva with four hands, seated under the Banyan Tree with Umā by His side, in Cin Mudrā, holding the ḍamaru and fire in

His hands - or whether Mahādeva who expressed as Tirumūlar, or entered into the body of some enlightened being, some Ṛṣi.

From whichever consciousness, brain, and mind the Āgamas have manifested, that source has already become Mahādeva. It is only from Him that such revelations can emerge. There is no doubt that the Upaniṣads are the first scriptures, but the Āgamas are the most minute, detailed, and practical scriptures.

The Upaniṣads made user-friendly are Āgamas. Whatever the Upaniṣads declare, the Āgamas translate into lifestyle.

You are Not Just the Body

यस्तु सर्वाणि भूतान्यात्मन्येवानुपश्यति ।
सर्वभूतेषु चात्मानं ततो न विजुगुप्सते ॥ ६ ॥
yastu sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmany evānupaśyati |
sarva-bhūteṣu cātmānaṃ tato na vijugupsate || 6 ||

'One who, indeed lives by seeing as it is all existing beings in the Self, Consciousness itself, and the Self within all existing beings, thus does not feel violated, by virtue of not separating oneself from anything existing.'

Now, the Upaniṣads are concentrating on one declaration, one truth: the perception you have about yourself. If you believe you are made only of flesh, bones, and blood, then you can never conquer the fear of death. Everyone, including Mahādeva, does not carry the same flesh, blood, bones, and physical body forever. He assumes a body whenever He wishes, wherever He wishes.

Only the bio-memory is eternal; the biology is not. If you think you are just biology, and that flesh, bones, and body are enough to describe you completely, that everything about you can be known merely through biology, and you believe that to be the truth, then be very clear: you will never realize the greater possibilities of life.

One of the worst beliefs, and the biggest life-denial statements, is the idea that you have only one birth.

This falsehood arises from the assumption that you are nothing more than a physical body, and that biology alone explains you. As long as you think you are just the body, your ambitions, aspirations, desires, and fears will remain shallow and immature. They will lack depth.

A little pleasure at the tip of the five senses will be enough to please you:

if the tip of your tongue is pleased, you think you are pleased;

if your eyes are pleased, you think you are pleased;

if your genitals are pleased, you think you are pleased;

if music and sound please your ears, you think you are pleased.

But you are not such a small, limited being!

If you understand that the body is a part of you, that is perfect. But if you think the body is the whole of you, then you have been cheated - cheated in a big way by society, which taught you the false idea that you are only the body.

Raising Your Maturity Level

The idea you carry about yourself decides the quality of your life. If that idea matures, your desires, fears, anxieties, plans about life, and aspirations – everything - will be transformed. You will raise yourself to a higher, mature level.

Maturity means having the right idea about "me." Have the right idea about whatever you think as you, whatever you feel as you. Your life is not created by external situations. It is shaped by the stuff you are made of internally.

Think of boiling water:

If you put a potato in, it becomes soft.

If you put an egg in, it becomes hard.

The boiling water is the same - the situation is the same. What changes is the stuff inside. In the same way, external situations do not decide what you will become. The ideas and concepts you hold about yourself decide it.

Here is the good news: whatever you believe as "you," that belief shapes you.

If you believe the body alone is you, you will live and die with that limited identity. Those who believe they are only the body, and that there is only one birth, stop all possibilities of growth. They get stuck in the kāraṇa śarīra (causal layer). When they die, they remain in a waiting space, unable to expand further.

This was the state of Ahalyā in the Rāmāyaṇa. She was stuck in the wrong idea of life - that death ends everything. Because of this, she remained trapped like a stone in the causal layer. When Rāma came and placed His feet on her, He liberated her from that wrong cognition and restored her expansion.

The belief you carry about yourself plays the most crucial role.

The good news is: whatever you believe, you become that.

The great news is: if your belief is wrong, you can change it, mature it, and transform it.

The greatest news is: this transformation is very simple and available to you right now!

You Cannot Be Violated

yastu sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmany evānupaśyati |

'One who, indeed, lives by seeing as it is, all the existing beings in the Self itself, and the Self within all existing beings, thus does not feel violated by virtue of not separating oneself from anything existing.'

Hell is the number of times you feel violated every day. Heaven is not feeling violated. It has nothing to do with the boiling water. It has everything to do with the stuff you are made of - whether potato or egg. The water does not decide; the inner material decides.

Are you a couch potato or an enlightenment egg? That is what determines your life. External situations do not decide whether you constantly feel violated or constantly feel strengthened. Every time you face boiling water, remember: the possibility of reinventing yourself is available. "Yes! Now I can reinvent myself in a much better way!"

If there is a snowstorm, Existence itself will give you the ability to grow hair like a polar bear.

Be very clear: your existence is never denied. You suffer only when you decide to torture yourself. No poverty, no disease, no death can violate you. One of humanity's biggest problems is this: even before life attacks, you decide life will attack, and you commit suicide internally!

Stop this pattern of constantly feeling violated. The most stupid pattern a human being suffers from is the feeling of violation. And the worst part? When you tell someone about it, they get angry at you!

Even death cannot violate you. No poverty, no disease, no depression can violate you. Whoever understands this truth - if this statement echoes in your inner space and you feel, "Yes, it is true" - you are Mahādeva.

Nothing can violate you - remember that. Whatever you call ignorance, instability, depression, disease, poverty, or even death - none of these can violate you!

Live like Mahādeva. Be crazy! In society, cranky fellows are considered crazy. But you be crazy out of powerfulness, not out of powerlessness.

When you feel powerful, you carry that light touch of craziness which radiates as grace. That is not madness, it is grace. In your dance, your steps, your thinking, in the way you sit, walk, talk, and carry yourself, let this one truth be the undercurrent: "I cannot be violated! I cannot be violated!"

What is violation? It is the feeling that something external can trigger suffering in you.

The belief that "violence can happen to me" - that itself is violation.

"Hey, this happened!" So what?!

"Hey, I lost my job!" So what?!

"This morning, an accident happened, someone in my family died!" So what?!

This is not insensitivity. Falling into powerlessness is not love. Suppose someone in your family meets with an accident, or someone very close to you suffers, and you collapse into powerlessness - rolling on the ground, expressing extreme grief - does it help them or you?

No! Do what needs to be done.

Give them the best medical care. Give moral support. Give psychological support. Give love from powerfulness.

Society has brainwashed you into believing that you prove your love by suffering. The more you suffer, the more you convince the other that you love them. This is utter stupidity.

Real love is powerfulness. In every crisis, listen to the ones who never fall into powerlessness - because their decisions carry clarity and strength.

Establish yourself – 'You cannot be violated!' That brings you the strength of Mahādeva. Immediately, your DNA starts vibrating in the same space of Mahādeva's DNA. Anybody who wants Mahādeva's DNA, blood transfusion with Mahādeva, take this concept and go on digesting it from today.

यस्तु सर्वाणि भूतान्यात्मन्येवानुपश्यति ।

yastu sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmany evānupaśyati |
sarva-bhūteṣu cātmānaṃ tato na vijugupsate || 6 ||

'I cannot feel violated. Why cannot I be violated? Because, I am there in everything that exists and everything exists is there in me.'

Everything is your mirror. You mirror what is, and what is mirrors you.

Whether you feel strong, weak, depressed, or energetic - nothing can violate you.

The very idea that something can violate you is the most dangerous belief.

When people say, "You have only one life," or "You are only the body," they are planting ideas that bind you in suffering.

Meditate on this one truth: I cannot be violated. Falling into powerlessness stops you from doing what you need to do.

But if you understand the stuff you are made of, you will never feel violated.

If you know you are not a potato but an egg, you will never be afraid of boiling water. You know it is only going to strengthen you. And those who threw you into the boiling water will be the ones afraid: "Oh God! What have we done? He has come out with more strength, more power, more clarity, more energy!"

What can boiling water do? What can acid do? A man smeared in ashes, a man who has become Mahādeva, cannot be touched. This is the highest truth.

If you internalize even a little that you are also the body, immediately a new clarity arises: "Yes, if I am also the body, then I am something more than the body. So anything done to the body cannot finish me off. Then what is that part of me which is more than the body?" This very expansion by manana (intranalyzing), reflection, "I am the body also", makes you Mahādeva.

In Bengal, there is a tradition called pāgal. Pāgal means "mad." These are the people who refused the brainwashing of society that insists, "You are only the body, and once the body dies, you are dead." They said "No!" to that lie. Those pāgals slowly became the Bauls. If you listen to the songs of the Baul mystics of Bengal, you will see that they all sing of this one truth: You are more than the body.

Spiritual healing in KAILASA is rooted in this one truth: "I cannot be violated." Healing means giving this truth as a direct physical experience to the bio-memory of the person being healed. Understand: everyone mirrors you.

Everyone cheats like you. Everyone is honest like you. •Everyone is integrated like you. Everyone is inauthentic like you.

If you are authentic, the whole world around you is authentic. If you are inauthentic, the whole world around you is inauthentic. If you are sad, everyone appears sad. If you are bright, everyone shines with you. If you feel violated, the whole world will violate you.

If you know with certainty, "I will never be violated," then no one will even dare to think of violating you.

When you give problems to others, pause and see - are you making them weak or strong? In the southern part of Tamil Nadu, there are trees which, even if buried by natural calamity, never disintegrate. In time, they become stone. They are called Kalmaram in Tamil. If you visit Thiruvakkarai near Pondicherry, you will see them - trees that have become stone.

Understand: it is the stuff out of which you are made and the belief you carry about yourself that decides: Will you disintegrate when you are buried, or will you turn into stone? Will you simply be buried, or will you live on in Jīva Samādhi? That is decided by the concept you hold about your Jīva (individual self).

If, while living, you constantly carry the feeling "I can be violated, I will be violated, I may be violated, I think I am vulnerable" - that belief will become your reality.

Just remember: nothing can violate you.

Stop shrinking your identity to the level where you feel you can be violated.

If you think you are only a few thousand rupees or a few hundred dollars in your purse, then if someone steals your purse, you will feel violated.

If you think your name and fame are your very being, then if someone looks at you without respect, you will feel violated.

If someone glances at you with disgust, you will feel violated immediately.

It is how you identify yourself that decides whether you feel violated or not. Whoever stands with the powerful declaration:

"I can never be violated. I cannot be violated. I will never be violated. I am beyond any violation." - such a person is a Śiva Gana.

Such a person embodies Mahādeva Himself.

Mahādeva is both a principle and a form. Whoever grasps this principle - your very form becomes Mahādeva's form. You begin radiating the grace of Mahādeva, the beauty of Śiva, the grace of Śiva, the grace of Īśa.

Start working with this one truth: "I cannot be violated.

Anything that can be violated is not me. Anything that can be violated is not me, because I am Mahādeva.

Śivoham! How can Śiva be violated? Never!

Anything that can be violated is not Śiva.

I am Śiva!" Cognize this logic. Function from this logic. From today, sit, meditate, and breathe only this truth: "I cannot be violated."

Everything Exists In You

'One who truly lives by seeing the whole Existence as established in Consciousness, the Self itself, and Consciousness as established in the whole Existence - such a being, by virtue of not perceiving oneself as separate from Consciousness, neither feels violated nor hates anything that exists.'

What you experience as you determines your entire attitude toward life.

If you feel that something exists apart from you, immediately fear or attraction arises. If you believe that the "other" will complete you, romance begins. But know this: once romance appears, fear will inevitably follow. If you think the "other" will threaten you, fear develops. Both romance and fear are foolish, because in truth the "other" does not exist outside of you.

sarvabhūteṣu cātmānaṃ tato na vijugupsate ॥

This is one of the most important principles of Hindu tradition. It is the ultimate declaration! It is God speaking. Same words but if it comes from a different person's mouth, it has a different value.

yastu sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmany evānupaśyati ।

The Upaniṣads are nothing less than the Cosmos declaring its own authority - authentically, directly, in this very verse. This verse is not just philosophy; it is both a truth and a technique that can be lived and practiced.

"One who, indeed, lives by seeing the whole Existence - all that is manifest and unmanifest - resting in the Consciousness, and the Consciousness pervading the whole Existence, does not feel violated or hate anything that exists, by virtue of not seeing oneself as separate from the Consciousness."

Do not think in a roundabout way: "If everyone changes, then I will also change." No. Start with you, and you will see that everyone else also begins to change. Your change will support others' change, and their change will in turn strengthen yours. Thus, a beautiful virtuous circle of transformation is born.

If, instead, you keep waiting for others to start first, they too will wait. Then no one will change, and this inaction will create a vicious circle of stagnation. Blessed are those who decide to be the first to begin the transformation. Cursed are those who endlessly wait for others to change.

When you open up, the other will open up. When you become unarmed, the other will also become unarmed. But if you wait, others too will never start. They will go on piling up more weapons, and you will also go on piling up more weapons. This hypocrisy only sustains the vicious circle.

The first and foremost truth:

yastu sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmany evānupaśyati ।

'One who, indeed, lives by seeing as it is the whole Existence, all unmanifest and manifest beings.'

It is like a dream which you experience at night. Only after waking up in the morning do you decide, with your cognition, whether it was a good dream or a bad dream. Otherwise, a dream is just a dream. In the same way, life is life. When you start judging, you begin to label it as good or bad.

Know this very clearly: everything exists in you.

There are two methods to realize this truth.

The first method is by witnessing the body and mind externally. If you feel, "Everything exists in me", the first reactions of fear and greed will surface. "If everything exists in me, then why did the tiger attack me? Why did the lion attack me? What will happen if I am caught in the coil of an anaconda?" With this, you may conclude: "No, I will see my body and mind separately. Whatever happens, happens. It is just Existence. If this body needs to live, it will live. If not, it will be destroyed." This is one attitude.

The second attitude is: "No, this body and that body both have the same Consciousness. With this clarity, I will decide what that body has to do and what this body has to do, and make it all function smoothly."

Both these understandings, when they mature into cognition, become power in you. When cognitions mature fully, they manifest as siddhis (extraordinary powers).

There is a story from Rāmakṛṣṇa's teachings. A Guru was teaching his disciple: "Everything is God." The disciple received the teaching and went into the street. There, he saw a mad elephant charging towards him. The mahout, struggling to control the animal, was shouting: "Move out! Move out! This elephant has gone mad! Save yourselves!"

Everyone ran away to safety. But the boy thought: "Today I heard from my Guru that everything is God. Why should I bother about the elephant?" So he stood still! The elephant came charging and flung him into a corner. He was badly injured, with broken bones, lying in pain. The other disciples carried him back to the Gurukul.

The Guru asked: "Why did you do this?" The boy replied: "You said everything is God! So I thought this elephant is also God. How could it harm me?" The Guru smiled and said: "Yes, everything is God. But the mahout who warned you - he is also God!"

Actually, for this boy, his cognition had not yet matured. If it had matured, he would have manifested a siddhi. He could have stopped the elephant, or ensured that the elephant did not harm him, or even if the elephant threw him, his body would not have been injured. Even if something happened to the body, he would not have experienced suffering. So many possibilities exist when cognition matures.

Understand: cognition not yet becoming mature cannot be the reason to say that the truth is not truth enough. That is exactly what atheists do. Just because their cognition has not matured, they deny the possibility altogether.

For example, ten years ago, if someone had told you: "Anything you want to know in the world will be available right inside your pocket. By pressing one or two buttons on a touch screen, anything you want to know in the world will appear instantly" would you have believed it? Certainly not. If someone had told you this ten or fifteen years ago, you would have dismissed it. But now, it is reality. Your mobile phone is enough. Anything you want to know is simply available at your fingertips.

Understand what denial is. A person who suffers from denial is the person who is denying. The only ones who truly suffer from denial are the atheists - and those around them who choose to believe them. By denying, you are the only loser. In the same way, the earlier you catch this truth - "Everything exists in your consciousness, and you exist in everything" - the higher your life will rise. The earlier you grasp it, the better your life will become. Your life will mature into its ultimate possibility.

Weaken the Roots of the Tree of Ignorance with the Acid of Truth

If you want to destroy a tree, you first need to weaken its roots. Your ignorance is like such a tree. The one truth that will weaken the very roots of your ignorance-tree is this: "Whether I understand it or not, this is the truth. The earlier I understand it, the better it is for my life." This single declaration will shake and loosen the roots of ignorance.

Do not postpone by saying, "When it becomes my experience, I will start living it." No! Hold on to this: "Whether I grasp it or not, this is the truth!"

In villages, there are always a few people who try to steal trees from the forest. By law, only trees that die naturally can be cut and taken; no one is allowed to cut down a living tree. So, these people who want to steal trees resort to a trick - they pour a little acid on the roots. Within a month, the trees dry up and die. The forest officers then assume, "These trees died naturally." Afterwards, the cheats cut and carry them away.

Exactly the same way, the acid to dry out the tree of your ignorance is this truth: "Whether I understand it or not, this is the truth. The earlier I cognize it, the earlier my life will become mature and high-end." This very cognition acts like an acid that dissolves ignorance. It brings tremendous healing, excitement, and joy into your being.

Romance with life - not because it is your other half, but because it is you. As long as you are searching for the "other half," even if you find someone, he will remain half and you will remain half. It will never be complete.

Completion happens only when you realize that the person you are searching for is you. Then you are full, and he is full. Only then does the relationship become completion to completion, not incompletion to incompletion.

The person you seek is not outside; it is yourself. If you seek completion outside, even when you find it, greed will quickly turn into fear, and fear will become greed. This is what creates the so-called "intimate enemy" or love-hate relationship. When the hormones go up, it feels like love. When they go down, it feels like hate. It is simply a fight between hormones - testosterone and adrenaline. All your fear and greed is nothing but this fight. When testosterone is high, you call it love and romance. When adrenaline is high, you call it fear and hatred.

Unclutching Vs Completion

If you know - "I am away from body and mind. Everything is there, and everything happening is here; this is everywhere" - this is the Brahmanical way of realization.

But if you understand - "Everything is in me and I am in everything. I know how to alter, change, and do what I have to do" - this is the Śaivite way of realization.

In the Brahmanical way, the moment fear and greed arise, you understand: "I am not this body and mind. I am away from both. I exist in everything, and everything exists in me. Whatever happens, happens." This is the Brahmanical interpretation of this verse, and how the verse is made practical in Brahmanical thinking.

The Śaivite way is different: "I exist in that, so I will make sure that it does not harm this, and there is no fear-and-greed interaction between the two. Both live in a beautiful space of Oneness. I know how to make that do what this wants, and this do what that wants, to keep the space of completion." This is the Śaivite way of thinking.

Unclutching is the Brahmanical way of thinking.

Completion is the Śaivite way of thinking. Completion happens when this cognition matures and expresses as siddhis(powers).

The story Ramakrishna shared comes from the cognition of unclutching. The Guru told the disciple: "Yes, everything is God. Sit and mature this cognition. Then, when you go and stand in front of the elephant, it will simply sit, bow at your feet, and salute you. First, strengthen and mature this cognition. Look into your enemies' eyes and see that they start responding the way you want. Then, when you face any challenge, it will be subdued and align to your will."

This is the Śaivite cognition.

The Nithyananda Way – Boon of Protection till Maturity of Cognition

Here is the next level of cognition. The Guru will say: "Everything is Consciousness. You exist in everything; everything exists in you. This is the truth. You do not even need to wait for this truth and cognition to mature in you. Go and face the challenges until it becomes matured in you. I will see to it and protect you. See how this cognition responds to me - it will respond the same way to you. Once it becomes mature, it will automatically respond to you in the same way. Till then, I am here to protect and save you. Go and do it!" This is Nithyananda's way of interpretation.

"Yes, this is the truth. The cognition has to become mature in you. All this is true. But you do not have to wait. I have the veto power and the right to protect you when you are standing and working with this truth. Go and do it. I will be there. I am responsible for the elephant bowing down in front of you. The cognition may not yet have matured in you, since you have only just heard it from me. Remember what you have just heard and put that responsibility on me." Say to yourself: "I may not yet have realized that you are also part of me, but my Guru has realized. So, with that strength, I am standing here. Bend and fall at my feet." This is the Nithyananda way!

Only a person who has become enlightened can radiate the energy of Ānanda Gandha. "Enlightenment may not yet have become matured cognition in me, but it has become truth in my Master's being. He has told me I can do it with His authority. I am stretching my hand - let the energy flow! Be healed!"

Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramashivam has done this successfully with millions of His disciples. That is why He says this is an honest, integrated, authentic, responsible lifestyle of Sanātana Hindu Dharma.

Man cannot achieve it just by himself; he needs to be given. That is why enlightened beings happen. Enlightened beings teach, but they do not happen just to teach - they happen to give. Teaching is only one of the preliminary methods for giving.

This is Bhagavān's blessing to all His disciples: "With all my integrity and authority as an enlightened being, I authentically bless all of you today. Take this one cognition - everything is in me and I am in everything. With My authority, I am telling you and blessing you to go and live it! Do not worry whether it has become a matured cognition in you or not. Go and live with courage, knowing that it has become an experience in your Guru and He has authorized you to live it. You will not have any risk. You will not be placed in any wrong situations. You will not have any suffering. Go and live it. I will be there protecting and making your cognition mature."

He further declares: "One, I will make this cognition - 'everything exists in you; you exist in everything' - an experience and matured cognition in you. Two, till it becomes matured in you, I will protect you whenever you play with this cognition. You will never be at risk. You will only be supported, protected, and matured to achieve this cognition. Go and live this. With all my integrity, authenticity, and from the authority of an enlightened being - with responsibility and enriching - I am giving this as a boon to all of you. Please live this truth: 'Everything exists in you; you exist in everything.' Live! Live! You will not lose anything; you will only achieve everything."

With His experience of this truth, Bhagavān places it in the center as His responsibility:

"Let this experience prove its authenticity by making this cognition mature in all of you, and by protecting you whenever you are playing with this cognition until it becomes mature. I am requesting and ordering my experience of Enlightenment -'Everything exists in me and I exist in everything' - to protect all of you and make this experience your cognition. It will protect you whenever you play with this cognition. It will not put you in any risk. It will help and support you more and more by showing many miraculous and beautiful happenings in your life, so that you are strongly able to believe and live this cognition.

This is the first step, and Śivoham will start flowering in every one of you."

Deeper Secrets of Love

When you put an idea inside you, observe how your mind creates ripple effects. The moment you hear: "Everything is in your consciousness, and you are in everything that exists" - for a normal person, the first ripple that arises is: "If everything is in me and I am in everything, why is there so much suffering and conflict? The ones I love do not love me. Those who love me, I do not feel love towards them."

Love, by its very nature, is a triangle, never a circle. Whoever loves you, somehow you have already taken them for granted. You feel they are already in your pocket, in your kitty. But you always crave adventure, exploration, and excitement: "Come on, let us see what is next! This is already in my pocket, in my bag." It is like moving from house to house during alms: "This house has already given me what I wanted - the rice is in my bag. Let's go to the next house." So the conflict stands out:

"Whoever I love never loves me. Whoever loves me, I take them for granted and cannot show the same love towards them." This is one of the biggest inner problems. If everything is in you and you are in everything, why then do such conflicts exist? Sometimes you are even afraid of the very people who love you. The intensity with which they possess you can frighten you. Instead of awakening love in you, they awaken fear. Their passion for possessing you makes you feel they may bind you, restrict you, or take away your freedom. Many times, Existence itself begins moving through these conflicts, and you even forget that you have conflicts. But that is not the state to be achieved through this verse. That is not the space this verse is pointing towards.

How are these conflicts handled? How are these thought trends created?

First, connect with the person whom you love but who does not shower enough love on you, or whom you feel unattended by. Remember that person. Note all the incompletions that arise in you about that person and pen them down. Trace back and write when all these incompletions and recurring patterns started in your life.

Second, consider people with whom you feel you are loving them and they are also reciprocating. You feel complete and happy. Remember them and connect with them. Check if any incompletions arise even about them. Pen them down and trace when the same patterns began in your life, with whom and how you started developing them.

Third, consider those with whom you feel they love you but suffocate you, yet you do not feel love towards them. Remember and connect with them. Pen down all the incompletions they provoke in you, and trace when those patterns started in your life - the persons, incidents, and situations.

Do these three exercises:

One: with whom you feel love but they don't reciprocate and you feel unattended.

Second: with whom you feel love and attended, and they also reciprocate.

Third: with whom you don't feel love, but they love you. They shower so much on you, but you feel suffocated, fearful that they may possess you, or have other incompletions.

Understand all three. Sit and do manana (intranalyzing):

What are the patterns each one of them evokes in you?

When did those patterns start happening in you?

With whom did you start building those patterns?

Pen down everything.

When you do these three exercises, you will understand that the whole thing is a lie – mithyā. Lie is too small a word. When you do these exercises, you will realize the whole thing is mithyā. Every point sticking out is a lie:

Whom you say you love is a lie.

The person whom you think is not responding to your love is a lie.

With whom you say you love and he reciprocated is a lie.

With whom you say you don't feel love, but the other person has so much love for you and you feel fear of being possessed or have other incompletions, that is also a lie.

You will understand the whole thing is a lie.

Upaniṣads Are Conscious Acid Wash

Upaniṣads are literally a conscious acid wash; they continuously mature your aspirations and understandings. A person who works on himself and constantly matures his aspirations is a seeker. If two persons decide to work together and mature each other's aspirations, it is called married life.

Go on working with people. By working with others and helping mature their aspirations, you also mature your own. The job of a spiritual teacher, religious teacher, or ācārya is to help people mature their aspirations. Maturation of aspirations can happen only through acid washing with the Upaniṣads.

Just do this one process: "Why conflict?" Upaniṣads present conclusions in a formulaic manner. If you do the simple exercise of intranalyzing (manana) these three aspects, you will understand that whatever conflict you see externally exists within you, and whatever completion you see externally also exists within you. Thus, whatever incompletion or conflict you see externally is inside you. You will truly understand that yastu sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmany evānupaśyati, sarva-bhūteṣu cātmānaṃ tato na vijugupsate is the truth.

Sometimes, if your room is too hot or suffocating, the moment you step outside, you may feel a cool breeze and relief, even though the weather itself has not changed. In comparison, you experience better conditions. But for somebody already standing outside, they may wish to enter the room.

Comparative realities are not existential realities; they serve mainly for comfort. You plan, "Shall I do this job or that job better?" - this is a comparative reality. Most of the time, people live and die in comparative reality itself.

The biggest conspiracy against human beings is atheism. Atheism goes beyond comparative reality. No other reality is accepted; even the possibility to explore is denied. The solution lies in developing the right thought-current during every crisis - nothing else.

Just do one simple manana (intranalyzing) with all the conflicts you experience in your life. You will suddenly see that whatever appears as good or bad externally exists inside you, and whatever appears good or bad internally manifests outside you. Incompletion in, incompletion out. Completion in, completion out. Completion out, completion in. Incompletion out, incompletion in.

Freedom is Expanding the Boundary You Feel About You

By understanding completion out, completion in; incompletion out, incompletion in; completion in, completion out; incompletion in, incompletion out, you will experience immense freedom and restful awareness. You will feel, "Wow! Then I can do as I want. I can play as I want. Everything is in me!"

Freedom means feeling a larger number of people, places, and spaces as part of you. Freedom means expanding the boundary you feel about yourself. Everyone uses something to experience freedom. A rich person uses his wealth; the more people depend on his money, the more he feels his freedom is expanding - they are all under him.

A person who identifies with a political party feels everyone in that party is under him; he feels his freedom has expanded. Similarly, a person who identifies with a language or a state feels the whole zone belongs to his freedom.

Everything in life is essentially a freedom struggle. But real freedom can only be received from someone who is already free, not from anybody else. The moment you intranalyze and understand "in is out" and "out is in", then there is no inside or outside. It is only in-out or out-in. If you have seen "out" first, you will describe it as out-in because of what you saw first. If you have seen "in" first, you will call it in-out. In-out, in-out, in-out, in-out, in-out, in-out - that is all. You cannot claim out-in or in-out; it is the same flow.

In the Tamil Siddha tradition, there is a beautiful mantra:

Śiva, Śiva, Śiva, Śiva, Śiva, Śiva, Śiva, Śiva.

It then transforms into Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi. Vaśi means "let it become part of me, part of me, part of me".

Śiva means "let me become part of It, part of It, part of It".

It is the same flow: Śiva, Śiva, Śiva, Śiva, Śiva, Śiva; Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi, Vaśi.

This truth cannot be attained through non-working, lazy belief. The neo-middle class often exhibits a kind of non-working faith: "If it is true, let it work immediately." They do not care about preparation. They are not ready to prepare, yet they expect everything to work in their lives instantly. This is what constitutes a non-working, lazy belief.

A seeker must be responsible. He cannot waste his time and energy on non-working, lazy beliefs. Most people who have wasted their lives in the name of being a seeker fall into this category - they rely on non-working, lazy beliefs.

सर्वभूतेषु चात्मानं ततो न विजुगुप्सते ॥ ६ ॥
yastu sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmany evānupaśyati ।
sarva-bhūteṣu cātmānaṃ tato na vijugupsate ॥ 6 ॥

You need to intranalyze it, internalize it. Then you will catch the glimpse. These great truths need to be celebrated. They need to be celebrated.

Utility Value Vs Inherent Quality

If you think a stone is too big, you will start comparing everything else to that stone: "Oh, that stone is smaller than this. That stone is equivalent to this. This stone is a little bigger than that." Based on the stone that attracted your attention due to its qualities, you begin comparing all other stones and everything around it, trying to grasp and understand. This is exactly what you are doing in your life.

You try to gauge, study, cognize, and comprehend everything based on the idea of 'I' (Aham). The 'I' is the heaviest thing you perceive in your life. You are literally in love with it!

Understand the 'I' you perceive - the 'I' you experience from the moment you wake up until the moment you fall into deep sleep, and even in your dreams. Sometimes, even in deep sleep, the 'I' you perceive feels so heavy, so important, so glorious. It is only with its support and existence that you are able to perceive, enjoy, and relate to Existence.

What you perceive as 'I' is enchanting, mesmerizing, and extremely useful - more useful than everything else - because everything else is perceived through the 'I'. Your hands are useful to touch someone, your eyes are useful to see, your tongue is useful to taste, your ears are useful to hear, and your nose is useful to smell - all because of the 'I' that exists, functions, and operates. That is why you grasp, possess, and cling to the 'I'. There is so much greed to keep it functioning and so much fear of losing it. It becomes too heavy, too big, and overwhelming because everything functions centered on it.

Because it is the first useful thing in your life, you are just in love with it, celebrating and enjoying it. This is not wrong, but you need to understand the quality of that 'I' which you are celebrating.

Unfortunately, because of the utility value of the 'I,' you celebrate it for what it does, not for its intrinsic quality.

The more you celebrate the 'I' for its utility, the more your life becomes dull and lifeless.

The more you begin understanding the quality of the 'I,' the more alive and vibrant your life becomes.

Even in a relationship, if the husband is perceived merely as a utility - for providing security - the relationship will gradually become dull and dead. However, if you appreciate the quality in him that allows him to provide security, your love for him will deepen.

Similarly, if a wife is seen only as a utility - for household responsibilities, pacifying lust, or other functions - the relationship will progressively become lifeless. But if you recognize her quality that enables her to fulfill these roles with love and care, the relationship will grow deeper and sweeter. You will fall in love more and more.

The same principle applies to children. If you regard your son merely as a utility or future security, the relationship will become dull, dead, and frozen over time. But if you perceive the quality that makes him capable of serving as future security, your love for him will naturally deepen.

Do not cognize anything based on utility value. Whether attachment, detachment, or fear, let nothing function merely on utility. When you perceive the quality itself, life becomes entirely different.

If you base your life on utility value, then only your eyes are important because you can see with them, only your ears are important because you can hear, and only your tongue is important because you can taste. These are merely utility values.

Do not reduce your consciousness to mere utility.

Whether you are enlightened or not, whatever you are, once you die, your eyes will stop functioning. Yet the 'I' that you are experiencing now will still be able to perceive everything, even without the physical eyes you currently possess.

The truth is: you are always afraid, thinking, "If these eyes are gone, how will I see?" No! The 'I' you are, by its very quality and capability to perceive, sees. The eyes merely serve as one of the utility functions of that 'I.' The 'I' itself is capable of seeing even without these physical eyes.

Your ability to smell through your nose will not end when the nose stops functioning. It is a mistaken belief you are carrying. When the nose stops breathing or becomes useless for smelling, do not think you will lose the ability to smell. The 'I' within you has the capacity to perceive higher and lower frequencies than those detectable through the nose. You will be able to perceive those frequencies with the 'I' itself, without using the nose.

Similarly, the sounds and decibels you hear using your ears will not limit your hearing. When the physical ears stop functioning, the 'I' you are is capable of perceiving higher or lower decibels.

You may then ask, "Why are deaf people not able to hear?" When they assume this body, they are using only a portion of the body; hence, they cannot utilize the other capacities of the body without that specific part.

Upon renouncing attachment to the body, the 'I' revives to its original state and can function without the restrictions imposed by the physical body.

The constant belief that "this body has great utility value" is misleading. The body has utility in certain frequencies, but the 'I' you are, by its very quality, can experience life more profoundly and fully, independent of the body and mind you consider essential.

Drop the fear. When the body or its faculties cease, do not believe you will lose these abilities. This belief is a complete lie, propagated by fear or greed. With this single understanding, observe how the quality of the 'I' is being reduced to mere utility in your life.

For example, a kamaṇḍalu (traditional jug): why do you keep it? Because it has the utility value of storing water for drinking. Just for that reason, you love it. Any day, if something else can provide the same utility, you will discard it. That love will become dull, and life will become dull.

Look at the quality that makes it useful. Why is it capable of holding water without contamination? What is the quality it possesses? When you observe its quality, you will begin to feel the grandeur of the kamaṇḍalu. Though it is just a seed of a tree, it has beautifully grown and can preserve water without spoiling.

Start with the utility, but then dive deeper and observe the quality. The more you perceive its qualities - the thickness, the structure, the way it has formed - you will start falling in love with its very existence. Eventually, even if you do not store water in it, you will keep it simply for its beauty. It is loved because it exists.

A person whom you consider important in your life - look at the qualities that serve as a utility for you. You will suddenly notice your love being rejuvenated, whether it is for a husband, wife, son, daughter, child, brother, father, mother, or Guru.

Many people perceive the Guru merely as a utility value - for healing or for receiving boons. If you stand only on the periphery of this utility, the moment a better utility is available elsewhere, you may abandon the Guru or remove the Guru from your life. However, when you observe the quality that serves as the utility, you will suddenly fall in love with the Master once again, as when you first started relating with Him. It will be a repetition of those initial days, the moment you first saw Him. When you look into the quality, your love is naturally rekindled.

With everything, observe the quality that is serving as the utility for you. Turn your attention towards your very 'I' - What is the quality that lights my eyes, activates my ears, enlivens my nose, and allows my tongue to taste? What is the quality of the 'I' that energizes all these faculties and illuminates them?

Consider just an ordinary flesh of three inches by four inches - how does it gain the power to taste anything on the planet? How do such small openings acquire the ability to hear and categorize everything on Earth? What is this 'I' that enlightens all these senses? What is this 'I' that allows me to generate a million thoughts per second and manage such enormous data, which even a billion supercomputers could not handle? What is it?

All of you should meditate on the quality of the 'I' - that which is so useful to you in life in so many dimensions: physical, mental, emotional, psychological, and every other level. What is the quality of the 'I' that makes it so useful? Whenever you see the quality that becomes so useful to you, you naturally fall in love with it forever.

Know the quality of the 'I.' As long as you look only at the utility of the 'I,' you remain in Aham. When you realize the quality of the 'I,' you awaken to Śivoham. The quality of the 'I' expresses itself as utility for you in countless ways. Meditate on those qualities of the 'I': Why does it enlighten my eyes? Why does it enlighten my ears? Why does it enliven my nose? Why does it give power to my mouth?

You are not an accidental combination of hormones and chemicals. Any doctor who defines you merely as such is a quack. Do not be fooled by them. The 'I' has an inherent quality that makes all these dimensions of you alive. Meditate on that quality.

When you meditate, you will begin to enjoy it. Laya, hṛdaya-laya will happen - you will simply become one with that and fall in love with it. Look deeply into the quality of the 'I' each one of you is carrying: What is it that enlightens all my senses and my mind? Meditate on it. Contemplate it. Reflect upon it. The more you contemplate, the more you will understand. Aham will transform into Śivoham.

Explore the qualities that are becoming a utility in your life - the qualities of the 'I' that are so useful to you. Then you will begin to understand one of its most important qualities. Why are you able to see everything? Because you exist in everything. Why are you able to hear everything? Because you exist in everything.

Everything you see - you exist in that.

Everything you taste - you exist in that.

Everything you hear - you exist in that.

Everything you touch - you exist in that.

When you look within, you will realize this truth expressed in the verse: "You exist in everything!" There is nothing to be afraid of.

यस्तु सर्वाणि भूतान्यात्मन्यएवानुपश्यति ।
सर्वभूतेषु चात्मानं ततो न विजुगुप्सते ॥ ६ ॥
yastu sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmany evānupaśyati |
sarva-bhūteṣu cātmānaṃ tato na vijugupsate || 6 ||

There is nothing in which you don't exist. You exist in everything that exists. You will come to that realization the moment you start meditating on what is that 'I,' that 'I,' that 'I.'

Significance of Vākyārtha Sadas

यस्मिन्सर्वाणि भूतान्यात्मैवाभूद्विजानतः ।
तत्र को मोहः कः शोक एकत्वमनुपश्यतः ॥ ७ ॥ yasmin sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmaivābhūd vijānataḥ।
tatra ko mohaḥ kaḥ śoka ekatvam anupaśyataḥ ॥ 7 ॥

'In one who has cognized the reality, all existing beings become the very Self. Then what delusion, what sorrow of incompletion can be there for that Seer living in the space of Oneness, Living Advaita?'

The Upaniṣads declare the greatness of the Jīvanmukta through the phrase "ekatvam anupaśyataḥ (एकत्वमनुपश्यतः)". Notice, the Upaniṣads are not using the word ekam (एकम्), but ekatvam (एकत्वम्). Whenever the Upaniṣads use the word ekam (एकम्), you should understand it as ekatvam (एकत्वम्) - Oneness, not merely "one."

For example, when your wife is really, really angry, even if she uses the word "Honey," you must know the context of that word! Similarly, when your mother, full of love, calls you "Monkey, come here," she is not scolding you. You must catch the meaning from the context. In the same way, when the Upaniṣads use the word ekam (एकम्), it does not mean "one," but "Oneness."

Because of its purity, Oneness cannot be diluted. The Āgamas are the words of Mahādeva; the Upaniṣads are the very breath of Mahādeva. Therefore, whenever there is any conflict or difference of opinion, it is the Upaniṣads that must always be followed and respected. Even using the form of Mahādeva, some dilution can happen - people may get diverted. But with the Upaniṣads, there is no possibility of dilution. They are pure truth, truth, truth, leading you directly into reality.

As the Upaniṣad declares: "In one who has cognized the reality, all beings become the very Self. Then what delusion, what sorrow of incompletion can there be for that Seer living in the space of Oneness, Living Advaita?"

In the Hindu tradition, there is no "meditation" in the sense it is popularly understood. Instead, the tradition is rooted in manana - intranalyzing. The Hindu path is very clear: there are only three steps - śravaṇa (right listening), manana(intranalyzing), and nididhyāsana (living). What we have as dhāraṇā and dhyāna are nothing but manana - intranalyzing.

तत्र को मोहः कः शोक एकत्वमनुपश्यतः ॥ ७ ॥
yasmin sarvāṇi bhūtāny ātmaivābhūd vijānataḥ ।
tatra ko mohaḥ kaḥ śoka ekatvam anupaśyataḥ ॥ 7 ॥

Manana and Vākyārtha Sadas practiced every day will give you a complete understanding. Each time you keep these spiritual truths in your inner space - analyzing them, thinking about them, contemplating them - your incompletions will melt down. This is Living Advaita.

No matter how much you struggle to find a solution externally, you will never find the solution you expect. If you are expecting an external solution, you need to be told you are a fool. And wherever you really need to be told that you are a fool, you should be told - because that is truly good for you.

If you have a disease, you need to be told that you have that disease. Only then will you understand its seriousness and start taking the proper medication. In the same way, manana (intranalyzing) is extremely important. With manana, your life gets aligned to Living Advaita.

Śaṅkara says beautifully:

श्रुते शतः गुणम् वध्यिान् मननम्

मननात् अपि निदिध्यिासनम्

लक्ष गुणम् अनन्तम् नर्विकिल्पम्

śrute śataḥ guṇam vidhyān mananam mananāt api nididhyāsanam lakṣa guṇam anantam nirvikalpam

The meaning is this: manana is a hundred times superior to śravaṇa. Intranalyzing is a hundred times superior to listening. Living is a hundred times superior to intranalyzing. And Nirvikalpa Samādhi, Living Advaita, is infinitely superior.

You need to listen and intranalyze again and again and again. Other than the spiritual solution, there is no solution - whether the matter is personal, professional, organizational, intrapersonal, or interpersonal.

Interpersonal conflict is a direct fight. Intrapersonal conflict is like a cold war - you don't fight outwardly, but you keep waiting inside. When it becomes a fight, at least it is an equal fight. But cunning people don't fight directly; they wait. At some point, when they get the neutral position, they will use that position to attack.

Whether you hide violence, keep it internally, or act out cunningly - whether it is an interpersonal, intrapersonal, organizational, or professional problem, or even your own plan - it will only start stinking inside you.

The only way anything can be solved is with a spiritual solution. Vākyārtha Sadas is the best way to arrive at spiritual solutions and to discover them for any problem.

The more Vākyārtha Sadas you do, the more truth will be revealed to you, and the more Living Advaita will happen in you. Vākyārtha Sadas is essential to internalize the great truths. It clarifies many hidden self-doubts. There are questions you may never even verbalize, but they sit inside you in the form of self-doubt. A verbalized doubt can at least be clarified; an unspoken doubt festers as self-doubt.

Verbalized self-doubt is just doubt; once you verbalize it, at least it comes out. Others can help you address it. You yourself will begin to see your own depth. As of now, you may not see it fully. Only when you sit in Vākyārtha Sadas will you start discovering the true depth of your own being.

When you begin to cognize that everything exists in your very consciousness, then the illusion of 'in' and 'out' will simply dissolve. The delusion disappears, and Advaita becomes your living reality. Whatever you do will naturally be established in the space of Advaita. God, in His pure form, will radiate through you and live through you.

Āgamas are uttered by Mahādeva. Upaniṣads are expressed from the very existence of Mahādeva - His breath is the Upaniṣads, and His words are the Āgamas.

This one truth - 'seeing all existing beings in your very Self' - can be experienced in countless ways: through yoga, prāṇāyāma, visualization, verbalization, or simply sitting. There are thousands of approaches to realize this great truth.

When you see that everything exists in your consciousness, your very soul, your very Self - where then is the question of incompletion? Where is the question of sorrow? Where is the question of delusion? There is only Oneness, Living Advaita, ekatvam - the space of Oneness.

Power of Love

Love can be as simple as giving a smile - a calculated smile - or as manipulative as planning to take something from another. The moment you express love in order to gain something - whether money, pleasure, or any other benefit - even those small, calculated acts give you a glimpse of Oneness. As you evolve, unconditional love blossoms. When you start giving calculated love, a certain confidence develops in you.

When the SDHD (self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial) melts down, the confidence you build, the energy you radiate, naturally flowers as unconditional love.

Unconditional love does not depend on any action you perform. Even with your very breathing, you will be radiating love for the whole world, for existence itself. Your very thought will be: "What more can I do? How can I contribute further?" If some of your actions are rooted in calculated, conditional love, do not deny them. Move forward with them, and you will see that they give you the confidence to radiate unconditional, uncalculated love. If you deny conditional love at its stage of growth, you cut off the possibility of ever reaching the next level.

The leaves of a plant may not be edible, but if you allow the tree to grow, its flowers and fruits will be nourishing. In the same way, conditional, calculated, and planned love is often the beginning, the first step in your relating with life. Do not deny it, destroy it, or abuse it - simply wait and nurture it.

Perhaps today you smile, hoping that the other person will smile back, so that a connection may form. Tomorrow, that same person may become your business partner, your life partner, or may support you in your ventures. Whatever your plans may be, it is fine. Do not stop the act of love, the function of love.

Even when it is calculated, acting from the space of love builds your confidence in love itself. And that confidence will ultimately allow you to radiate unconditional love. Through more acts, deeds, and expressions of love, the confidence in love deepens, and from functioning in love, unconditional love naturally begins to blossom.

One of the most important things you need to develop in life is the confidence to function from the space of love. Only then can you take the leap into confidence and function from the space of Oneness. In the space of Oneness, there is no cunningness, no conditions, and no planning. Unfortunately, most people lack the courage to jump directly into that space, so they keep playing some hypocritical game.

Bhagavān Śrī Ramakrishna shares a story: An enlightened being once walked across a river. Seeing this, someone asked him, "How can I walk like that as well?" The Master replied, "There is no mantra or magic. Simply remember Mahādeva's name, and you can walk." The man went near the water, chanting Mahādeva's name. But he could not walk - he began sinking. The enlightened Master looked back and saw him struggling. The man cried out, "Oh Master! What happened? I am not able to walk on the water!" The Master replied, "You chanted Mahādeva's name, but at the same time you held your cloth high so it would not get wet. You did not truly have the confidence that you could walk on the water. You prepared yourself to drown. You carried only that space."

If this man had walked on the water, it would have been the Guru's pride. The Guru is responsible for the disciple's growth.

So why was he not able to walk? The Guru saw that the man lacked confidence. By holding his cloth, he was already convinced he would sink. The Guru's first step would have been to teach him to love the water.

Completion is not merely the absence of incompletion; it is also communion. Simply thinking "You live, I live" is not completion. He needed to be taught the science of love. That would have infused him with confidence. Confidence means: "I know the water will not kill me. I know I can swim, and the water will carry me safely." When love is experienced, one can then jump into the space of trust: "Yes, I can walk on the water."

Love is one of the most powerful stepping stones for Living Advaita. Most people are stuck because of their inability to love. Wrong ideas about love have been taught - that it must always be pure, unconditional, grand, or a life-sacrificing act.

But understand: just as a plant cannot have the greed to give fruit on the very first day, love also needs to grow. First, the plant brings flowers. The flowers become unripe fruits. Then unripe fruits ripen. In the beginning, love may be expressed through small or even calculated acts - and that is perfectly fine.

Start with courage. From there, you will naturally develop immense confidence in functioning from the space of love. You will be amazed to see that some of the greatest sacrifices and unconditional acts will happen through you - even before you think or plan them.

Look at the boons of Mahādeva. He is not a fool who simply grants whatever Bhasmāsura asks and then runs around in fear. No. He is established in the space of unconditional love and tyāga (sacrifice). Before He even considers the side effects or after effects, He has already given. That is the nature of true sacrifice and unconditional love - it happens even before thought arises.

Through Mahādeva's līlās (divine plays), we can glimpse the vastness of His space. The Purāṇas beautifully describe His behaviour. He marries Pārvatī, who comes from a royal family. She was born in the Himalayas as the daughter of Himarāja, she was raised in the comforts of a palace. She could not easily adjust to the rough, cold climate of Kailāsa. When Mahādeva saw that Pārvatī needed a more comfortable environment, with Gaṇeśa running about and Subrahmaṇya desiring his own dwelling, He called upon Viśvakarma to build the most beautiful golden city. Even Rāvaṇa came to attend the inauguration ceremony. All the devotees of Mahādeva - Kinnara, Kimpuruṣa, Gandharva, Gāndhāra, Yakṣa, and Rākṣasa - gathered there to witness the inauguration of this divine golden city.

After the inauguration, Mahādeva opened Himself and declared, "Whoever wants whatever, I am here to bless you all. Take it." Without hesitation, He granted whatever each being asked.

Rāvaṇa stepped forward and said, "I want this city." There was no second thought, no alternative idea, no weighing of side effects or aftereffects. Mahādeva is Mahādeva—Tyāgarāja, the very embodiment of unconditional love and sacrifice. Without hesitation, He simply said, "Take it."

The entire world had gathered for the inauguration, and in that very moment He gave away the whole golden city. That city became Laṅkā. Rāvaṇa, blinded by greed, took possession of it and returned. But his greed did not stop there - he desired even Kailāsa itself. That was the beginning of his downfall and he was ultimately crushed beneath it.

Understand: all the greatest acts of unconditional love and sacrifice arise only from the space where thought does not interfere. That spontaneous space is the true expression of tyāga. But for such a space to blossom in you, in the beginning you must nurture even the small, conditional acts of love. Do not dismiss them. Encourage them. Even a smile, even a small gesture - these are stepping stones. Over time, they build the confidence and strength to radiate unconditional love. And remember - acts of love are not always dependent on giving.

There was once a poor old lady in Madurai who made a living by cooking and selling idlis. One day, Mahādeva Himself came all the way from Kailāsa - though He has no shortage of divine food there - as if He longed only for her humble idlis. He said to her, "I will work for you. You give me idlis." The lady, innocent and simple-hearted, agreed. Mahādeva then asked, "How many idlis will you give me?" She replied, "As many as you can eat, that many I will give you." In her simplicity, she did not realize she should have made at least one condition - something like: "I will give you a full meal, but in return you must finish the task assigned to me by the king."

At that time, there was a flood in the Vaigai river at Madurai. To protect the city, the king ordered every citizen to contribute by building up the embankment - each person had to dump mud and reinforce a section of the riverbank. The entire city took up the task. Some citizens worked themselves, while others hired laborers to fulfill their share.

It is said that the Vaigai itself is not a natural river but was created by Śiva's own Bhūtas and Gaṇas when they had come to attend His marriage. Mahādeva always delighted in rivers. In Kailāsa, He rests where Gaṅgā Herself flows and washes His feet. So too, in Madurai, He wished for the presence of a river. Before returning to Kailāsa, He often stayed in a palace by the riverbank. This riverfront palace became His abode. He would sit there, playing dice with His Bhūtas and Gaṇas, enjoying somarasa, watching the flowing waters. The main palace, where Mīnākṣī Devī lived, ruled, and held her royal court, became what we now know as the great Madurai Mīnākṣī Temple. But Mahādeva, carefree and sovereign, chose the riverbank palace. He did not involve Himself in administration, nor did He support Mīnākṣī in the royal duties. He simply wandered about, granting boons to all who came to Him.

Mahādeva went to the old idli-seller and asked, "What will you give me if I do your share of the embankment work?"

The lady, simple and trusting, said, "I will give you as much as you want to eat."

Only when He began eating did she realize the enormity of the commitment she had made. He ate and ate until nothing was left. Then, content, He lay down and went to sleep.

The poor woman panicked and tried to wake Him: "Hey, get up! Do your work, otherwise the king will punish me!" But Mahādeva replied lazily, "No, I just ate. I feel a little tired." And He simply continued to rest.

When the king came to supervise the work, he saw one portion of the embankment untouched. "Whose portion is this?" he demanded. The people answered, "It belongs to the old lady who sells idlis." The lady was summoned. She cried, "What can I do? I hired this man. I gave him all that he wanted to eat, but after eating he is lying down there, sleeping!"

But in truth, Mahādeva had not only eaten her idlis - He had eaten all her karmas too. That is why He consumed everything. The king turned to Him in anger and asked, "Why are you not working?" Mahādeva gave no reply. He simply sat up and looked at the king with calm, luminous eyes. The king, furious at being ignored, lifted his stick and struck Him.

The moment the stick touched Mahādeva, the blow was felt by every living being in existence - including the king himself! Stunned, the king realized whom he had beaten.

Love is not always about giving. Sometimes, even taking is an expression of love. When Mahādeva descended to Madurai and ate Vandi's idlis, it was pure love. Outwardly, He was "taking." Inwardly, He was showering grace. In fact, His love shines even brighter in this playful act of grabbing all the idlis with both hands, chutney dripping, and calling out to the old lady: "Come on, put some more!" while she rushed here and there - grinding, cooking, serving, exclaiming "Wait, wait, wait, I'm making more!" That scene, full of intimacy and laughter, is even sweeter and more endearing than the grand act of giving away the golden city of Laṅkā to Rāvaṇa. Because love is not bound by the form of the act. Whether giving or taking, in Mahādeva, it is always love.

Be very clear: love does not need to be restricted only to the act of giving. Love cannot be defined only as unconditional or selfless. Whether it is an act of giving or receiving, whether conditional or unconditional, selfless or selfish - start practicing.

Ultimately, yes, unconditional, selfless love is the highest fruit. But remember, that fruit will never come if you cut off the roots the moment they begin to sprout. The tree cannot bear fruit if it is not allowed to grow.

Yet, foolish people, in their hurry for the fruit, destroy the very roots. If you truly want the fruit, allow the roots to exist, allow the tree to grow. When Mahādeva was eating idlis from Vandi and playing with her, the loving space He was radiating was so grand, so alive! And when the king lifted his stick and struck Him, the truth of Oneness was demonstrated openly. Understand, He could have done anything - He could have sent the stick flying back, He could have killed the king on the spot, He could have shown His power in a thousand ways. But He did not. Why? Because after eating Vandi's idlis, He was resting in Samādhi, absorbed in the bliss of Cosmic Oneness. In that state of Oneness, the blow given to Him was felt by every being - including the king himself. The foolish king, not knowing whom he was striking, only struck himself.

The kind of right Rāvaṇa had over Mahādeva was only one-sided love - the right of a devotee over the Lord. But the real peak of love is when Mahādeva Himself feels He has a right over you. That is true love.

When Rāvaṇa asked for Laṅkā and took it, it was only Mahādeva acknowledging that His devotee had a right over Him. But in Vandi's scene, Mahādeva Himself declares His right over her - that is the peak of love!

Think: this poor old lady was surviving only by selling idlis. Her entire day's cooking was her profit, and whatever money remained was her running capital for the next day's livelihood. Mahādeva goes and sits with her and not only eats her profit - He eats her capital also! Tomorrow, what will she do to live? He knows this, but still He goes on swallowing everything. Other than the mud pot and that stove, He did not leave anything for her. He did not even do the job He had agreed to do. He just lay down and rested!

Understand, every līlā of Mahādeva is not just a story - it is a demonstration of love. It is only by practice that the confidence to operate from the space of love will start developing in you. And that confidence will naturally help you take the jump into the space of Oneness. Loving Advaita will always lead to Living Advaita. Take this as a spiritual practice.

Now look inside yourself: what ways do you stop yourself from radiating love? Do you say, "Oh, this is just a small act… this is cunning… this is calculated"? Drop all these judgments!

Yes, ultimately, love should become selfless, uncalculated, unconditional. But where are you going to start? You have to start exactly from where you are.

Start operating constantly from the space of love, however small the act may be. Automatically, purification will happen. Automatically, the space of unconditional love will grow in you.

Love current of Mahādeva

Understand the love current of Mahādeva. You always associate love with an act. If you try to define love only by an act, then tell me - who would ever define Mahādeva chasing Vandi and eating all her idlis as love?

Only when you experience the love current of Mahādeva will you understand that this is one of the most beautiful, cute, and loving acts He has ever performed. It cannot be compared with any other līlā of Mahādeva. If you want to really catch the love current of Mahādeva, meditate on that scene: Vandi is running around, struggling - boiling idlis on one side, grinding chutney on another, stirring sambar on the third - and He is sitting with an empty plate, licking His fingers, smiling, and saying: "Hey! I am waiting!" That is Mahādeva's love current.

If you want the protection of Mahādeva, meditate on Him as Kālabhairava - the One who even removed the head of Brahmā. If you want Enlightenment from Mahādeva, meditate on Him as Dakṣiṇāmūrti - the One who transmitted Enlightenment in silence to all the Ṛṣis.

If you want wealth from Mahādeva, meditate on Him as Dhanākarṣaṇa Bhairava - the very form that blessed Kubera with prosperity.

If you want powers from Mahādeva, meditate on Him as Chakradāna Mūrti - the One who gifted the Sudarśana Cakra to Viṣṇu.

But if you want to understand the love current of Mahādeva, then meditate on Him in that playful, sweet, intimate form - sitting with an empty plate in front of Vandi, licking His fingers and asking, "Give me more idlis… more chutney…" Meditate on this love current of Mahādeva, and you will know what real love is.

Here, Mahādeva is described only with those simple acts of Him. Meditate on the love current of Mahādeva. It is not bound by acts. It is a current. Encourage, even if it is the smallest act. Encourage acting out of the space of love. You will find the meaning of life.

'In one who has cognized the reality, all existing beings become the very Self. Then what delusion, what sorrow of incompletion can there be for that Seer living in the space of Oneness, Living Advaita?'

It is love that gives you the immediate jump-start into the experience of Advaita. It is love that gives you that very experience. The Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad declares the pure science of Oneness.

But what is the applied science? What is the method? What is the utility value of this verse in your life? The answer is love. Love is the method through which you enter into Ekatva (Oneness). Love is also the utility value of Ekatva once you experience it. Both the journey and the fruit - both are love.

Love makes you experience Ekatva. And once you have tasted Ekatva, its practical utility in your life is, again, only love. Now, what is this love current? Just like the Gaṅgā flows - from Gaṅgotrī to Gaṅgāsāgar, from Gomukh to Kolkata - the current flows. In Gaṅgotrī, it is pure, fresh, untouched. In the middle, in Lucknow, it is somewhat polluted. By the time it reaches Kolkata, it may be heavily polluted. Still, whether pure, somewhat polluted, or very dirty - the current of Gaṅgā is still the current of Gaṅgā.

In the same way, your love current will take many forms. At one point it may be mixed with selfishness. Sometimes it may feel like a business deal - give and take. Sometimes it is demanding. Sometimes it is selfless. Sometimes it is not just selfless but an extraordinary sacrifice. Whatever form it takes, love current is love current. Don't dam it. If you dam it, you are damned.

Even if the Gaṅgā water is polluted, if the current flows, it can purify itself. If you allow love to flow - whether it looks selfish, demanding, calculated, or pure sacrifice - it will automatically purify itself. The only instruction: Don't stop the current of love.

Even if your love looks selfish, even if it feels like business, it is okay. Function. Move. Be active. Be alive. Be interactive. Because when you flow without blocking, without damming yourself, the current itself will start purifying you.

In the beginning, your love may look like selfishness or a give-and-take arrangement. But if you keep it alive - keep it flowing - you will see: within a few days, that love will start bringing joy, excitement, and energy into you. Once you taste that, your whole interest will shift towards that love which makes you flow, irrespective of whether the other person receives it or not, reciprocates or not. You will realize: love itself makes you powerful.

The love current - the current itself - should always be encouraged. Many of your judgments like "my love is selfish" or "my love is business-like" are nothing but self-doubt. They are not even real.

Think: even if you build a whole empire out of selfishness, what happens at death? You leave the entire thing behind - for humanity. At that moment, everything has become selfless! Then how will you define selfishness and selflessness?

There are some people who, in the name of renunciation and selflessness, just sit, eat, and produce nothing. When they die, they leave nothing for the world. That is real selfishness. They only sucked from society, without giving back.

Don't get cheated by words like "renunciation" when it is actually inertia. Always encourage creation. Discourage demolition and laziness. Understand more deeply: this is the love current of Mahādeva. When you are powerful and creative, you will never do wrong, you will never make a mistake. Don't bother whether someone receives your love or not, reciprocates it or not, responds to it or not.

The love current of Mahādeva can be seen in the way He expresses Himself and connects with humanity - whether it is cutting the head of Gaṇapati, or giving away the golden city of Laṅkā to Rāvaṇa.

In the Purāṇas, only two cities are recorded as having been built by Viśvakarmā, the cosmic architect, specifically for Mahādeva, as per His order. One is Laṅkā, which was originally built on Kailāsa for Mahādeva to reside. When Rāvaṇa came to attend, as per the tradition of those times, the host had to offer a gift to the guest. So, when Mahādeva asked Rāvaṇa, "What do you want?", Rāvaṇa replied, "I want this city." Without a second thought, Mahādeva gave the entire city away as the visitor's gift.

The second city is Tiruvaṇṇāmalai, which Mahādeva still inhabits. Madurai already existed when He came to marry Mīnākṣī, and the expansions there were done by Mīnākṣī Herself. Only these two cities were designed by Viśvakarmā directly for Mahādeva. Laṅkā He gifted away. Tiruvaṇṇāmalai He still uses.

Whether it is giving the golden city to Rāvaṇa, demanding more idlis from the old lady Vandi, or when the whole society was fighting over who has the right to receive initiation - Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, Śūdras, Caṇḍālas, or only Śivācāryas - Mahādeva never entered into the argument. He just went, picked up a small cuckoo bird, initiated the bird, and liberated it. That is Mahādeva. His love current flows beyond logic, rules, or boundaries.

Initiation is available to all beings - not only to human beings, but to every living being, irrespective of caste, creed, or gender. Mahādeva's love current flows into everyone. Whether it is cutting off the head of Brahmā as Kālabhairava, or removing the head of Dakṣa as Vīrabhadra, or even teaching the Science of Enlightenment to the very Ṛṣis who were performing yāga-yajñas to destroy Him - His love current is present in all of it.

Look at what He carries: the ḍamaru, the fire, and even the demon under His feet. All of these are gifts sent by the Dārukāvana Ṛṣis, who wanted to destroy Him through their rituals. The Dārukāvana Ṛṣis had mastered the science of yāga-yajña and believed they had become God Himself, that there was no need for Mahādeva. They thought they were the ultimate.

Mahādeva had to make them understand. He had to reveal the futility of their arrogance. It is like people today who say, "I am fine. I am happy. Why do I need spirituality?" Maybe you are happy now - but that happiness is fragile. Just a small imbalance, and everything collapses.

Mahādeva comes to shake us awake: "Fool, your so-called happiness is only because things are moving as you expect. The moment a small imbalance happens, you will not be able to handle it. Raise yourself to the space where there can never be any imbalance."

The exact incompletion of those Ṛṣis was their excessive possession of their wives. To reveal this, Mahādeva manifested in the most beautiful form, Sundareśvara, and walked house to house as a bhikṣāṭana, begging for alms. The beauty of that form was beyond imagination - beyond any human beauty.

Naturally, when the Ṛṣipatnīs saw Him, they forgot their very identities. The Purāṇas say they did not even know whether they were male or female - they simply knew they were souls, and the Cosmic Soul was standing before them. That is the truth of devotion: the relationship between the individual soul and the Cosmic Soul, the soul–goal relationship.

The Ṛṣis, seeing their wives captivated, were shocked and furious. Out of their powerlessness and incompletion, they attempted to destroy Him through yāga-yajñas. Whatever they invoked and sent against Him, Mahādeva simply wore them as ornaments, as weapons, as expressions of His grace.

Finally, He turned to those very Ṛṣis and gifted them the Science of Enlightenment. That is the love current of Mahādeva - He transforms even attacks into gifts, even curses into blessings, and even hatred into Enlightenment.

Whether it is granting Enlightenment to the very Ṛṣis who tried to destroy Him, or descending as a humble wood seller to humble the arrogant musician in Madurai who was holding the whole city for ransom, or protecting Mārkaṇḍeya from the clutches of Yama, or any of His countless līlās - every single action of Mahādeva is nothing but the radiance of His love current.

Understand: only one who has the guts to play with the unknown can truly love. Only such a person can love, receive love, and radiate love. Love is never about clinging to the known - it flowers in the space of the unknown. In the space of the unknown, love is alive, vibrant, dynamic. It keeps you in wonder, in awe, in freshness.

Even in ordinary human marriage, couples who consciously keep the space of the unknown alive continue to experience love. Relationships are nothing but this constant renewal - being ever-new to yourself and to the other. That is why Mahādeva's līlās are eternally fresh. They are not history, they are happening currents of love. To connect to them is to allow your own love to remain new, alive, and ever-expanding.

Love will make you live Oneness. Because of Advaita, Oneness becomes your reality with the love current of Mahādeva. When you authentically experience the love current of Mahādeva, the Oneness you experience will continue to keep the juice of celebrating Mahādeva alive.

यस्मिन् सर्वाणि भूतन्य् आत्मैवाभूद् विजानतः |

'In one who has cognized the reality, all existing beings become the very Self. Then what delusion, what sorrow of incompletion can there be for that Seer living in the space of Oneness, Living Advaita?'

The love current of Mahādeva is not only the path to Oneness - it is also the very fragrance of life after Oneness. Understand: love is not just the method; it is also the utility value. By practicing love now, by meditating on the love current of Mahādeva, you will be led into the experience of Oneness. And once you experience Oneness, the way you live, the way you cognize, the way you move, the way you operate, the way you exist - everything will be the same love, but radiating in a new dimension.

There has always been a conflict between Advaitis and Bhaktas. Advaitis dismiss Bhaktas as mere Līlāvādis, forever talking about devotion without realizing Oneness. Bhaktas, on the other hand, criticize Advaitis as Māyāvādis, who neither understand nor celebrate devotion and love. Beneath this fight lies a subtle fear on both sides.

Bhaktas are afraid: "If I experience Oneness, everything will become 'me, me, me' and I will lose devotion." Advaitis are afraid: "If I open to devotion, I will lose my state of Oneness and fall back into duality." This is nothing but a foolish misunderstanding. Experiencing Oneness only deepens and strengthens your ability to radiate devotion. When you fall into the trap of 'me, me, me,' you lose both love and devotion. But when you truly settle in Oneness, you expand into love - the purest devotion.

There is a very beautiful incident from the life of THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM BHAGAVĀN SRI NITHYANANDA PARAMAŚIVAM. When His Guru, Arunagiri Yogīśvara, wanted to reveal to The young Avatar the power of Oneness, of Advaita, He was seated on the steps of the Kalyāṇa Maṇḍapam in Tiruvaṇṇāmalai Temple, facing north.

In front of Him was His own Samādhi, to one side the main deity in the Garbha Gṛha, and to the other side the majestic Arunācala Hill, Aruṇācaleśvara Himself. Arunagiri Yogīśvara pointed and said: "This, that, that - everything is Me. Just see." As He moved His hand, little Nithyananda literally saw the Garbha Gṛha, the Hill, and the whole temple dissolve and merge into Arunagiri Yogīśvara Himself. When He moved His hand again, everything returned to its place.

It is easy to dismiss this as an illusion - but it was not. It was a direct initiation, an experience of restful awareness and Oneness. During the whole vision, little Nithyananda was holding tightly to the feet of Arunagiri Yogīśvara, thinking: "If I hold His feet, so much energy and power will flow into me."

But in that moment of Advaita darśan, even the idea of "energy will come, power will come" disappeared. There was only the experience of Oneness, only the recognition that He and I are One. Overwhelmed, The young Avatar prayed to His Guru: "Whatever may be the experience, let me always retain this ability to feel deep love, to be in this love current." Arunagiri Yogīśvara laughed and said: "Advaita will only strengthen the love current. Advaita will only strengthen bhakti."

Exaggeration on the One Who Can Never Be Exaggerated

What takes Oneness away from you is simply this: not being able to cope with reality as it is. You always feel reality needs to be a little more colorful than what you are experiencing now.

You feel life runs because of hope, so you believe that something more than what you actually perceive is required for you to be alive. That constant need for hope becomes the idea: "I need something more to move on." Even as a child, this begins. You needed fairy tales. From the very beginning, the cognition was: "Only if there is something more, I can continue." So life itself has been running on the fuel of "something more."

This projection of something more takes two directions:

If it is about quantity, you think: "I need more money, more cars, more houses. Only then life will be great." This is materialism.

If it is about quality, you think: "I need a better way of loving, better way of giving, better way of serving." Then you become spiritual.

But whether it is quantity or quality - the very idea that something more is required for you to feel complete, fulfilled - that itself is the first delusion. Because this idea has sunk into your bio-memory, you cannot simply erase it. It has become an ingrained pattern: always imagining what is not there, cooking up what is not there, hoping for what is not there, and even faking what is not there - thinking either it will happen, or it has already happened.

This hope and exaggeration runs so deep that it even expresses in ordinary conversation. Just sit and talk with someone for half an hour, one hour - friend, family, anyone. Then review the whole conversation. You will see how many times either you or the other person exaggerated something. If you are convinced that someone is great, or something is great, you go on building it up - far beyond what you have actually experienced. This habit of hoping and exaggerating cannot be transcended directly.

There is one Being about whom you can never exaggerate. Whatever you say, it can never be an exaggeration. That is Mahādeva – the Cosmic Consciousness. Divert your whole attention towards Him. Then, even when you exaggerate and hope, it all settles on the One who can never be exaggerated. Naturally, your hopes and imaginations no longer lead you into delusion; they lead you into Reality.

The love current of Mahādeva is nothing but this: all your hopes, all your greed, your desire for more - more color, more quality, more quantity, more experience of life - being directed towards the Ultimate, who can never be exaggerated.

Nothing more golden can be painted upon Him. However much you glorify, it will always be less than what He truly is. This transforms the very mechanism of exaggeration and hope inside you. Instead of cooking up illusions about yourself or the world, your longing and "need for more" settle down on Him.

When you have no higher subject, your exaggeration always turns towards yourself, keeping you in delusion. But when you turn it towards Mahādeva, the same energy flowers as bhakti.

Your continuous demand for "something more" cannot be removed directly. It dissolves only when it is offered to Him - the inexhaustible, the immeasurable, the Ultimate. Then, all your hopes and all your longings merge into Him. This is what I call feeling connection, love, devotion, bhakti: the settling of your hope, your exaggeration, your asking for more, onto God or Guru - something beyond you.

When your attention rests on Him, your life becomes alive, rich, overflowing. You break out of delusion and illusion. You wake up into Oneness, and in that Oneness, your life becomes so alive and rich and you break the delusion and illusion.

If you don't have anything other than yourself to exaggerate, to hope for, to demand more from in quantity or quality, you are the poorest person alive. That is spiritual poverty, conscious poverty, depression. But if all your exaggeration is directed towards God or Guru, you are one of the richest beings on planet Earth.

When everything inside you revolves around something beyond you, you naturally wake up into Oneness. The antidote for delusion is devotion. The antidote for māyā is līlā. Understand: exaggeration is inevitable. You cannot kill it. Record even ten minutes of your own conversation - you will see exaggeration constantly erupting.

Even if you hate someone, you exaggerate negatively about them. Exaggeration is the very way your mind functions. So, until the mind dissolves, let your exaggeration be centred on God, Guru, or your Iṣṭa. If it is centred on God, you will experience Him in deities. If it is centred on Guru, you will experience Him as a living presence.

Exaggeration is the raw material of your inner mechanism. When this raw material is directed towards the One who can never be exaggerated, it becomes devotion. That is the only way to wake up to Reality.

Before Enlightenment, there will always be the need to exaggerate, to hope, to demand "something more." After Enlightenment, there is no need to exaggerate, because you know - nothing can be exaggerated.

Anything you say about Him is still less than Him. Words will fail, and you will only cry: "Oh, words are not enough to describe Him." Whoever decides, "In my words, deeds, and thoughts, all my exaggeration will only be centred on my Iṣṭa," - that being is already walking the path of Enlightenment. That being is ready to wake up. Look in. That is the love current of Mahādeva.

Guru is nothing but the expression of God demanding you to shift your exaggeration onto the Divine. Guru is the statement of God. God is the state of Guru. The state gives the statement: "Shift. You have suffered enough with your exaggerations. Shift now. I am here to liberate you from this need to exaggerate."

Wake up to the Reality which can never be exaggerated, the Reality which is too vast to be contained in words. To shift, you need to experientially see something that makes you go "Aaah!" - an awe, a wonder, a breakthrough. That is when the Guru appears and gives you that "Aaah!" moment, the direct shift of your exaggeration from yourself to Him. Even after Guru happens in your life, don't miss that "Aaah!" - that shift. Blessed are those who experience it, for they wake up.

If you study the whole Śiva Purāṇa, if you look at all the līlās of Mahādeva in Madurai, everything is simply about giving you that "Aaah!" - shifting your exaggeration pattern from yourself to Him.

Otherwise, how could you call love the act of Mahādeva taking away the two eyes of a hunter, just because that hunter believed in Him?

How could you call love Mahādeva eating the old lady's food and then refusing to work?

But it is all love. Only if you shift, you will understand - it is love, it was love, it will always be love.

All your sufferings come only from your qualitative and quantitative expectations - and the exaggeration built on them.

Expectation is like fire. You cannot live with it for long, so you try to cool it by pouring exaggeration. This subtle cycle of expectation–exaggeration is nothing but the constant hope: hope for heaven, hope for Enlightenment, hope for something which is not here and now.

If you can shift from aham to Śiva, you will experience Śivoham. Anything you deeply love becomes part of you. Anything you feel is part of you, you begin to deeply love. That's all. If you feel "you are you," you will exaggerate your actions, your memories, your experiences.

If you feel "I am Mahādeva," you will celebrate His presence, His experiences, Him.

Celebrating the Source is always liberation. Celebrating only the small branch is bondage. You are never away from Mahādeva, but your perception about yourself is only a small branch. If you celebrate that branch, it is bondage. If you celebrate the Source, it is liberation.

Just open your mouth and speak for ten minutes - you will see how much you exaggerate about yourself. That is why Purāṇas are the antidote for your disease of exaggerating yourself. They shift you. See how unconsciously you exaggerate yourself and things around you - from the need for fairy tales, which is hope getting exaggerated, to the need for carrying tales, which is desperation getting exaggerated. Whether it is fairy tales or carrying tales - it is suffering.

The shift is simple: from you to Him, from aham to Śiva. Shift it towards His state or His statement. State is Śiva. Statement is Guru. This shift makes you experience and celebrate the love current of Mahādeva, the love current of Guru.

When you rest your pattern of exaggeration on your matter, you are a materialist.

When you rest your pattern of exaggeration on your qualities, you are a so-called spiritualist.

When you rest your pattern of exaggeration on the society around you, you are a politician.

When you rest your pattern of exaggeration on confusion, you are a clerk or worker.

When you rest your pattern of exaggeration on your failures, you are a depressed person.

When you rest your pattern of exaggeration on Mahādeva or Guru, you are an enlightened being.

Whatever your pattern of exaggeration is - that decides the very flow in which your life will move.

Understand: an unending source of inspiration can never be exaggerated. It is too vast even to be described.

If you rest your exaggeration on your failures, you will constantly blow them up, keep on talking about them, and live in depression. Remember, exaggerating your failures is depression, not peace. Internalize this. Do Vākyārtha Sadas on it - explore how in every single conversation you exaggerate you - your behavior, your body language, your words, your actions, your deeds. See how everything in you is flowing only towards more and more exaggeration.

Then see: how can this same current be shifted? Shift it towards Mahādeva. Shift it towards His state or His statement.

What is Right Eating?

When you constantly soak yourself in the experience of Oneness, you naturally radiate extraordinary powers. Every time you break a pattern with the clarity of Oneness, by the cognition of Oneness, one extraordinary power flowers in you.

For example, when you break eating disorder patterns, not only are you freed from them, but you also gain the power, the ability to consciously manipulate your stomach, your digestion, and your health as you desire. What I call an eating disorder is not just about overeating or undereating. It is the compulsion of having a fixed standard time for eating due to physical, physiological, or psychological reasons.

Physical reason: "Oh, I may get tired. I am getting tired."

Physiological reason: "If I don't eat, I will have gas, acidity, or diabetes."

Psychological reason: "If I don't eat, I will die."

For any of these reasons - physical, physiological, or psychological - binding yourself to a fixed pattern of eating is an eating disorder.

The right eating is beautifully described by a great saint from Tamil Nadu. Valluva Nāyanār beautifully described:

மருந்தென வேண்டாவாம் யாக்கைக்கு அருந்தியது அற்றது போற்றி உணின்.

(Marundhena vendaavaam yaakkaikku arundhiyadhu attradhu pottri unnin.)

Means, you don't need medicine for your body if you eat the food knowing that earlier what you have eaten has left the body.

If you eat only after the earlier food has been completely eliminated from your body, you will never need medicine for your health. Before every meal, ask yourself: Has my earlier meal been fully digested and cleaned out? Only when the previous food has left your body and become part of you as energy should you plan to eat the next meal. If not, first cleanse the system with jala basti (water enema) and then eat. After every meal, take a little Harītakī powder. It supports digestion and ensures cleansing. Before the next meal, make sure your stomach and bowels are cleaned. If this does not happen naturally, at least perform an enema (jala basti) before eating again. Never allow two meals to remain in your stomach at the same time.

Every time you break a pattern, you gain extraordinary powers. When you break your eating disorder pattern, not only are you freed from that limitation, but you also gain the power to manipulate your body and mind as you wish. If you have practiced saṃyama even once, you will know how easily you can play with your body. All the so-called theories of acidity, diabetes, or tiredness related to food are true only as long as you continue to associate yourself with them.

Someone once wrote: "One of the biggest prisons human beings suffer is what others think about them." But there is an even bigger prison - what you think about yourself.

What you think about you is a deeper bondage than what others think about you. When others' opinions trouble you, it is only because your own self-image is fragile and constantly shifts based on them.

If what you think about yourself remains stable, no external opinion can imprison you. Because your self-perception is so fluid and weak, what others think of you becomes a major prison. And if that is the prison, then what you think of yourself is the suffocating cell inside the prison.

Others' opinions affect only your external life, but what you think about yourself directly impacts both your body and your mind.

Anyone who has practiced saṃyama even once can simply play with so-called "diabetes," "gastric trouble," "acidity," or any hunger-related issue. They can even cause miracles.

Hindu Health and HealthCare

In the Hindu times, the largest building in every village served as a common utility space - it was the school, the hospital, the cinema, the theatre, the art gallery, and ultimately the place for teaching Enlightenment. That place is what we call the temple. It was not merely a mall or a place of worship; it encompassed all aspects of life. Everything - storing grain, teaching principles, providing medical care - was conducted there.

Our lifestyle was such that we didn't need excessive hospitalization. From the beginning, we were trained to take care of ourselves. An important aspect of this awareness was that we were prepared to leave the body gracefully when the time came. We did not cling psychologically or consciously to a single body. When you hold on to just one body, only then do you need excessive medical intervention.

We understood that when there is a need, the body will recover, and when the body is too damaged, we simply drop it and take another one. Until the true science of life - the authentic science of body, mind, and consciousness - is taught to humanity, people will remain addicted to medicines.

Chemical medications, discovered only a hundred or two hundred years ago, disrupted zonal food practices, regional dressing customs, local medical knowledge, religious practices, education systems, and regional physical, mental, and conscious belief patterns. We are the last generation to have parents who maintained traditional regional beliefs and faith. We are the last to inherit the Hindu understanding of body, mind, and consciousness in its full authenticity.

What you cognize about your body, mind, and self is a mechanism. Whatever you cognize becomes your reality. We had yogis like Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam's yoga guru, Raghupati Yogī, who could perform extraordinary feats. He could sip cold water through the nose and, by the time he spat it out through the mouth, it would be boiling. He could sip hot coffee through the mouth and release it through the nose as ice cubes. He could manipulate his body to become a hot boiler or a freezer. He could even cook just by touching a pot: put water and rice in a mud pot, touch it, and in two minutes the rice would be ready.

During the month of Margazhi, when little Nithyananda was taken to the temple for yoga, the water in the tank would be cold in the early morning. Yet, Raghupati Yogī could point to the spot where Nithyananda was bathing, and the water there would become warm or even hot. He radiated control over his body and the environment in ways that amazed everyone.

Our ancient body-mind-consciousness mechanisms were taught to us in a very colloquial way by our mothers, grandmothers, and grandfathers during casual evening or night stories. "If you feel feverish, apply vibhūti from the Śiva temple; you will be alright. Don't worry."

The modern ideas, in contrast, are delivered with high intensity and noise, which often overwhelms the mind. Just a few decades ago, in Tiruvannamalai, there were at least fifty ideal, enlightened beings visibly radiating the Śivoham experience - living embodiments of Mahādeva's power. Some of them were Thinnai Svāmi, Saakku Svāmi, Sorakkai Svāmi, Nārāyaṇasvāmi, Mouna Svāmi, Aṇṇāmalai Svāmigal, Raghupati Yogī, and Kuppammal. They radiated the power of Mahādeva, declaring it through their very existence.

Take Sorakkai Svāmi, for example. "Sorakkai" means bottle gourd. Half a bottle gourd shell would be placed in front of him, and people would offer food in it. He would eat only when he desired. When fresh offerings came, he would empty, clean, and refill the gourd. He had 25–30 dogs as companions and lived his entire life in a tiny three-by-three-foot structure. He barely moved, communicated occasionally, or smiled now and then. Birds would even sit on his head and eat from his hair. His disciples built a small stone-pillared structure around him. At times the sitting posture would be different. That is why we could even presume that he is still alive. The way he existed visibly radiated the power of yogic tradition. By living as examples, these beings - Rāmsuratkumār, Sorakkai Svāmi, Mouna Svāmi, Aṇṇāmalai Svāmi, Thinnai Svāmi, Sadhu Om, Kuppammal, Isakki Svāmi, Raghupati Yogī - were demonstrating and radiating yogic powers and the possibilities of conscious living just a few decades ago.

The thought currents, the undercurrents and the energy currents of this verse need to be explored. Whenever you explore a sacred secret, it should become an energy current in you, not just a thought current. If you contemplate on any spiritual truth for twenty-four hours or so, it'll become a thought current. If you meditate continuously on it, it becomes your very being. It becomes an energy current. Until it becomes an energy current, you have to meditate on the sacred secrets revealed in those verses.

यस्मिन् सर्वाणि भूतन्य् आत्मैवाभूद् विजानतः |
तत्र को मोहः कः शोक एकत्वम् अनुपश्यतः || ७ ||
yasmin sarvāṇi bhūtany ātmaivābhūd vijānataḥ |
tatra ko mohaḥ kaḥ śoka ekatvam anupaśyataḥ || 7 ||

'In one who has cognized the reality: all existing beings become the very Self, then what delusion, what sorrow of incompletion can there be there for that Seer living in the space of Oneness, Living Advaita.'

The Oneness that empowers you should not remain just a thought or an idea. It must become a living, experiential current of power within you - something that produces tangible results in your life. Unless a profound truth manifests results, you will not truly live it.

Essentially, life is a long bargain. At age seven, you are ready to exchange whatever you have for something better. At fourteen, even if you have gathered possessions or experiences with great effort and love, if something more beneficial appears, you exchange without hesitation. By twenty-five, whatever you have accumulated with sentimental or emotional attachment, you are still willing to exchange it for something more valuable. Your whole life flows as this pattern of exchange.

Everything you acquire - money, experiences, relationships - has value precisely because it can be exchanged for something greater. Sentiments may be softened, hearts toned, attachments adjusted, but this flow cannot be stopped. It is the truth of life, not the ultimate reality, but a functional truth: life operates as a long, ongoing bargain.

Every experience you have accumulated in your early life is worthy of being given up for the experience of Oneness. Oneness is the most powerful "future" you can choose. You will choose to exchange your past experiences only when Oneness becomes a living experience in you. The human mind responds only to experiential bargains, and Oneness is the ultimate currency.

Oneness is not just a moral lesson like, "Oh, everyone is one, just love." Oneness is a spiritual power - a living force, not a concept. Many people think, "How can there be Oneness? I am separate. He is separate." Forget about experiencing Oneness with another person - first, decide to experience Oneness with your own body.

Start there. You might logically think: "I am this body. How can I experience Oneness with another body or mind? How can Oneness be real?" Thinking this way makes you a foolish beggar.

Imagine a beggar who finds a hundred-dollar bill. He starts calculating: "In two minutes I got $100. In 24 hours, how much will I make? In a week? In a month? In a year, I could make millions!" He plans stocks, investments, newspapers, and strategies based on this one accidental hundred-dollar bill. How deluded he is! That one bill does not guarantee thousands more, let alone millions. Similarly, if you think, "I am this body, they are that body. How can Oneness exist between us?" you are equally deluded. You are not just your body.

Decide to experience Oneness with your body first. Oneness should give you the power to handle your body - your own temple. Sit, observe, and do completion with all parts of your body. Even though your body is not independent intelligence, it displays independent stupidity: each sense functions in its own unpredictable way. Bring completion and coherence among them. Harmonize your senses, your body, your mind, and begin your journey into living Oneness.

Any great truth, if it becomes your living power while you are in the body, will shape the way you live. All spiritual teachings are ultimately designed to equip you with power when you leave the body. They ensure that you are never in a powerless state, whether in life or at the moment of death.

The Hindu tradition is essentially a preparation for this: to leave the body gracefully and to move through successive births until you achieve Oneness with the Cosmos. From the very first day, even before birth, the child is subtly introduced to the concept of departure from the body through rituals like Garbhadāna, preparing them for the ultimate journey.

Anything that becomes a realized experience for you now - not just a concept - will be your strength in crises: whether a crisis arises while in the body or at the moment of leaving it. In both cases, the truth must be experiential, not theoretical. Oneness must become this truth that empowers you. Once it becomes your living reality, you will never abandon it. You may let go of everything else in life, but the experience of Oneness and cognizing life from that state will remain your constant foundation.

तत्र को मोहः कः शोक एकत्वम् अनुपश्यतः || ७ ||
yasmin sarvāṇi bhūtany ātmaivābhūd vijānataḥ |
tatra ko mohaḥ kaḥ śoka ekatvam anupaśyataḥ || 7 ||

This verse reveals the utility of Oneness. It declares: When you live Advaita, where can there be incompletion, where can there be delusion? Only when delusions and incompletions dissolve are you truly living Oneness – Niranjana, Nirvikalpa, Nirāmaya, Nijānanda Bodham. Oneness must become your living experience, not just an idea. Many ask, "Yes, we want Oneness in our lives. But tell us, how can we make it our experience? That is why we are here."

The answer is simple yet profound: your decision creates your experience. Whatever you direct your attention to, you invest your energy into, and that becomes your reality.

Attention on the Oneness Experience

This is the technique: Any experience you give your full attention to becomes your reality. You constantly pay attention to your SDHD – self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial – because it was taught to you by some so-called "great intellectuals" whom you respected. Most of you learned this SDHD from your school's moral science teacher.

Each of you probably had at least one teacher who really impressed you. Yet that very person could have been the greatest hypocrite on planet Earth. He built an amazing brand of himself before you, presenting himself as the ideal moral man. But in truth, he became the source of your SDHD.

Someone once went to Buddha and asked: "Tell me the way to get enlightened." Buddha replied: "Give me the list of the people who made you, who molded you, who impressed you." The man said: "My father, mother, and one of my teachers." Buddha said: "Go and kill all of them and come back. I'll give you Enlightenment." Of course, Buddha did not mean physical killing. He meant mentally killing - freeing yourself from the ideas they put into you. It is precisely those few people who impressed you that planted the seeds of self-doubt, self-hatred, and self-denial within you.

The more attention you give to your experiences of self-denial and self-hatred, the more those become your reality. Decide: "I will give more and more attention to my Oneness experience."

Your conscious decision to empower the Oneness experience is enough for Oneness to blossom in you. It is simply declaring your willingness - your conscious willingness - for it to take you over. Look at your life: whatever you make fashionable, whatever you look up to completely, that is what you move toward, and that is what becomes reality in you.

Anything you give attention to, anything you believe is a great experience, you will crave - and you will achieve. There is no logic behind it. Whenever people need to be convinced to do something which is not logically good for them, but they still must do it, society convinces them by declaring it is fashion.

Understand how you are exploited. The people who decide what should be fashionable are the greatest exploiters - including the entire theory and concept of money and your bank balance.

In the Hindu tradition, very few people worked to meet the needs of life, yet everything was abundantly available. Now, almost 80% of humanity is working just to meet basic needs, and still there is so much poverty. In those days, business was about more production. Today, it has become about possession. Even the most basic, freely available things are privatized, packaged, and sold as commercial products.

In the Śiva Līlās, there is a story where Mahādeva comes down as a wood seller. He cuts wood in the forest and sells it in the cities. A lady in the street asks Him: "Times have become so bad that even wood is being sold?"

What does this mean? It shows that access to natural resources was considered a basic right of human beings. It was not privatized in those days. As time passes, with the growth of corporate culture and the spread of capitalistic mentality, don't think that more and more production is happening. What is really happening is more and more legalized snatching and possessing.

The people who make fashion statements in your life are the ones who decide what experiences you should give your attention to. If you pay your attention to the Oneness experience, you will see it becoming power in you.

The Guru is the being who makes the fashion statement about the Oneness experience. An Incarnation is the being who makes that Oneness into your very own experience.

Anything that becomes an experience while you are alive becomes your strength when you leave the body. Anything that becomes a power in you while you are in the body remains your power even when you leave the body. Decide to pay attention to the experience of Oneness. That very decision will make you constantly flow toward the Oneness experience, and you will make it a reality in your life.

Oneness is higher than Highness or Holiness titles. The Highness and Holiness titles are nothing compared to the experience of Oneness. Let Oneness be your experience. Let Oneness be the center of your life. Give attention to your Oneness experience. Put your attention to the experience of Oneness. Think about it, contemplate, feel it, encourage and entertain it. See all the ways we can think, contemplate, encourage and enrich Oneness in our being.

Attributes of Consciousness

kavir manīṣī paribhūḥ svayambhūr yathātathyato-arthān vyadadhāc-chāśvatībhyaḥ samābhyaḥ || 8 ||

Translation: Pure consciousness is all-pervasive (like space), beyond the coming and going, absolute radiant and self-effulgent, unembodied boundaryless whole (beyond subtle body), woundless, muscleless having no incompletion with the body (beyond gross body); consciousness is the ever pure space devoid of the dirt of ignorance (beyond causal body), and is untouched by the delusion of incompletion; consciousness is the all-knowing seer of all (past, present, future), the lord of all minds, consciousness transcends all beings, consciousness is self-existent by itself with its independent will and intelligence, having no cause for its happening; it is pure consciousness, that from time eternal, has enriched the ages and each being, by ordaining desirable responsibilities onto them, as per their nature and space, and their actions and results thereof.

Read this translation again and again - at least ten times. In this verse the Upaniṣads declare the nature of consciousness. You are being given the right direction: a conscious direction. The verse describes what you must do to experience the ultimate consciousness.

Pure consciousness is all-pervasive. The moment you begin to meditate you immediately sense that you are more than the body. The extent to which you can experience that all-pervasiveness is the extent of what you can visualize.

Physical objects can be seen and grasped even if you do not know what they are made of or how they feel; their external form is available to perception. But to truly know something you must experience its depth - you must feel one with it.

With a mental idea, likewise, you often need to become one with the idea to grasp the emotion and context behind it. Spiritually, only to the degree you experience oneness with an idea will you truly understand it. If a thought or a poem speaks of love, it remains merely a thought until you feel the emotion it points to. The more deeply you live that emotion, the more fully you will understand the words and the thought-current behind them.

Your capacity to grasp determines the scope of your experience. That is the beauty of the Upaniṣads' definition of consciousness.

You cannot carve a statue of what the Upaniṣads declare as consciousness. You cannot pretend to have grasped it without actually grasping it. You cannot reduce it to a rote mantra or a dead ritual.

Any ritual that arises from the Upaniṣads must be alive. That is why the Āgamas are so alive: you cannot make the Āgamas dead. However often you attempt to suppress them, they will reappear and enliven practice. Nigama means Vedās; Āgama means applied Vedās - a user-friendly version, a manual on how to use the Vedās.

Meditate on pure consciousness. What is "all-pervasive"?

Is it the ocean? No - water is not all-pervasive.

Is it the air? No - it lies beyond the vāyu-maṇḍala (the air-field).

Is it space? No - within our local space there are only a few billion planets; the universe contains far more than we have yet understood or imagined.

Meditate on the vyakta–avyakta(the manifest and the unmanifest).

Pure consciousness is all-pervasive - beyond coming and going, absolutely radiant and self-effulgent, unembodied, boundaryless, and whole.

The Upaniṣads remind us again and again through this verse to align ourselves with the context of defining consciousness: "Pure consciousness is all-pervasive, beyond coming and going, absolutely radiant and self-effulgent, unembodied, boundaryless, whole, beyond the subtle body, woundless, muscleless, having no incompletion with the body, beyond the gross body. Consciousness is the ever-pure space, devoid of the dirt of ignorance, beyond the causal body, and untouched by the delusion of incompletion." This description must be meditated upon.

Pure consciousness is all-pervasive. But what is all-pervasive?

Is it space, Earth, water, or fire? No - even space is not all-pervasive. Then what is subtler than space, which alone is all-pervasive? There are countless things beyond our very capacity to conceive.

So what is pure consciousness? When you contemplate deeply, you will experience a sudden click - an inner recognition. Every contemplation on pure consciousness gives rise to such a click, revealing that consciousness is for you. With continued contemplation, your understanding becomes deeper, subtler, and more refined. These refined clicks are what constitute spiritual growth.

Measure of Spiritual Growth

Spiritual growth means your ability to experience consciousness - your expertise in consciousness. Your expertise in experiencing Enlightenment is spirituality. When the subtle mind becomes intensely aware, when the blood flows fully into the brain, whatever your brain can grasp as the experience of consciousness - your expertise in catching that subtle experience of Enlightenment, of pure consciousness - defines how much you have grown spiritually.

Spiritual growth is measured by how much of consciousness you can directly experience. It depends on the power and refinement of your brain, the subtle grooves within it, and its ability to catch and hold the experience of consciousness. That alone makes you spiritual.

All spiritual practices exist only to develop these subtle brain grooves, enabling them to catch pure consciousness. Whether you sit in silence on the banks of the Gaṅgā in Haridvāra, or in the silence of Maṇikarṇikā Mahāśmaśāna in Vārāṇasī, or in the stillness of Gomukh Tapovana, the purpose is the same: to refine your subtle brain grooves so they can catch the experience of consciousness. That awakening is spirituality, which is beyond body and mind.

Before death, you must glimpse what consciousness truly is. The most subtle concept or experience of consciousness that you attain while alive will be the one that naturally opens up as you leave the body. This is the greatest gift you can receive from a Master.

Pure consciousness is all-pervasive - beyond coming and going, absolutely radiant and self-effulgent, unembodied, boundaryless, whole, woundless, muscleless, and free of any incompletion with the body. It is the ever-pure space, untouched by the dirt of ignorance.

Contemplate. If you catch the subtlest understanding of consciousness, you will simply know that it is you. You will begin to fall in love with It. Consciousness always tastes Itself only through Itself. Meditate on consciousness. Contemplate this truth.

Have Vākyārtha Sadas on it.

Reflect on what lies beyond space - both within and without. What is That which fills everything? What is That which makes everything move? What is That which is the source of me?

The subtlest contemplation gives you a click - an inner recognition. That click marks the level of your spiritual growth. If you contemplate again tomorrow, you will receive a deeper click, a subtler understanding, and thereby experience deeper spiritual growth. This is how spiritual growth unfolds.

How you function, how you perceive, what you have done, what you are doing, and what you will do - how you think and how you will think - all of this depends on one axis. That axis is your concept of "you," what you believe yourself to be.

Look within. What do you think of yourself? A bundle of worries? A mixture of failures and successes? A heap of confusion? Whatever you perceive as "you" determines how you perceive the world - as good or bad, right or wrong.

Why is tapas required? Tapas means willingly undergoing austerity and facing difficulties. When you go through tapas, the kind of understanding you develop about yourself changes profoundly. Even the smallest things that come from society will feel like a blessing. A little comfort from the world will seem like a great gift. Tapas sets the standard for what you perceive as yourself, for what you feel qualified to receive from the world. With that standard established, you live in lasting contentment.

Mahādeva describes contentment as one of the important Yamas. Patañjali missed it. When Patañjali listed the Yamas, he placed contentment instead under Niyamas. But Mahādeva places it directly in Yama itself. Tapas (austerity) sets such a powerful standard about yourself that you remain forever content. Whatever comes into your life, you say: "Oh, I was like that. This is already too much!"

Have The Right Idea About You

Having the right idea - developing the right understanding about yourself - is very important, because it is from that idea that you function. If you think you are the body, you will spend your whole life working to keep the body comfortable, pursuing sensory pleasures. If you think you are the mind, you will dedicate yourself to mental pleasures.

What are mental pleasures? When someone praises you, when you are recognized as one of the greatest persons in your field - these are pleasures of the mind. When you believe mental pleasure is most important, you will not bother about the body. Mental pleasure becomes your first priority, and you will do everything for it.

On the other hand, if you think the body is you, you will not care about what others say, or about name and fame. You will do everything solely for the pleasure of the body.

But when you begin to feel that you are consciousness, then whatever you do - for yourself, for others, and for the world - becomes Enlightenment, Living Enlightenment. When you know you are consciousness, whatever you do for yourself becomes tapas.

Even if you apply sandal paste to your body, bathe in bādām (almond) milk, drink somarasa (the nectarine drink of the heavens), and lie down amidst the greatest comforts and luxuries, it is tapas. The moment you realize you are consciousness, everything you do - even for the body - is tapas.

Introduction of You to You

The concept you have about yourself is the context you carry for life. The concept you hold about you is the context you set for your entire existence.

What you think about yourself can be diagnosed immediately, and it can be changed simply by your will. Willingness is all you need. In the Āgamas, Mahādeva describes willingness as the only qualification for all initiations - Samaya, Viśeṣa, Nirvāṇa Dīkṣās, and Ācārya Abhiṣekam. For every initiation, He insists that willingness alone is necessary.

If you are unclear about the concept you carry about yourself, then be very clear - you are carrying confusion as yourself. There is no doubt about it. The moment you doubt your concept of you, confusion has already entered. Then whatever you do for yourself, for others, or for the world, everything becomes utter confusion. People around you fall into chaos - they do not know who you are, what you mean, what you want, how to relate to you, or how you will relate to them. Chaos and confusion pervade everything.

The concept you carry about you can be changed instantly, simply through your willingness. Your decision itself is that willingness.

The Upaniṣads are introducing you to yourself. The Upaniṣads declare here: who you are. Pure consciousness is all-pervasive, beyond coming and going. That is you.

Do not think this truth is meant for someone else. Do not postpone it by saying, "After I realize it, then I will become it." That is like playing with mud. You sit in the middle of the house covered in mud, and your mother says, "What happened to your skin? There is mud everywhere." If you reply, "Oh, once I realize I am the skin, I am the body - until then I am only mud," you are being foolish.

In the same way, if you say, "When I realize I am consciousness, then I will be consciousness. Until then, I am only body and mind," you are being foolish. Whether you realize it or not, mud is mud and the body is the body. A knife is going to hurt your body, not the mud. Life is going to touch your consciousness, not your body and mind.

The Upaniṣads are speaking to you. They are introducing you to yourself. Decide from this very moment: All my thinking, action, and planning - about myself, about life, about everything - will be rooted in this one truth: "I am pure consciousness, all-pervasive, beyond coming and going."

The first thing that will happen is the collapse of your fear of death. The fear and anxiety born of ignorance will also collapse.

What is this fear of anxiety? It is the thought, "Someday I may be caught in fear. I do not know how I will handle myself. I may go mad. I may lose my mind."

What is the anxiety of ignorance? It is the feeling, "Oh, I am so ignorant. I don't know what to do with my life. I don't know what I will be able to achieve."

Both the fear of anxiety and the anxiety of ignorance collapse the moment you accept the introduction given to you by the Upaniṣads. Immediately there arises tremendous strength in your perception, strength in your cognition, and strength in your thinking.

Strength in thinking is the very foundation of life.

The concept you carry about yourself is the driving force of your life. It decides when you wake up, why you wake up, and how you wake up. It determines when you think, what you think, how you think, and why you think. It governs why you behave as you do, why you react as you react, why you respond as you respond, why you move as you move - and ultimately, why you are who you are. You must experience a pure conscious cognition of yourself.

So what are we truly feeling about ourselves? And how do we catch the truth about "us" as introduced by the Upaniṣads? The Upaniṣads declare: Pure consciousness is all-pervasive, beyond coming and going, absolutely radiant and self-effulgent.

Definition of Hindu

Pure consciousness is all-pervasive (like space), beyond coming and going - absolute, radiant, and self-effulgent; unembodied, boundless, whole (beyond the subtle body); woundless and muscleless, having no incompletion with the body (beyond the gross body).

Consciousness is the ever-pure space, devoid of the dirt of ignorance (beyond the causal body), and is untouched by the delusion of incompletion.

Consciousness is the all-knowing seer of all - past, present, and future; the Lord of all minds.

Consciousness transcends all beings. It is self-existent, with independent will and intelligence, having no cause for Its existence. It is pure consciousness, which, from time eternal, has enriched the ages and every being by ordaining desirable responsibilities onto them according to their nature, their space, and the actions and results thereof.

Who is a Hindu? Whoever has already cognized themselves as described in the Upaniṣads, particularly in this Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad verse, or is sincerely working towards altering their cognition as the Upaniṣad declares.

Either one should have already cognized oneself as the Upaniṣad reveals, or one should be working to cognize oneself in that way - only then is one truly a Hindu. Whoever does this is a Hindu.

Religions that seek numbers as their priority and are used for political power or as instruments of social dominance grant membership by birth alone. In the Hindu tradition, we never use our religion for political power. This is a purely spiritual tradition. It will continue to remain a spiritual tradition, retaining its purity.

We never declare that someone is Hindu merely by birth. Only by practice does one become Hindu. Only by practice does one truly belong to the Hindu tradition. This gives greater freedom: neither birth is a prerequisite, nor does mere birth make one a Hindu. Whoever cognizes themselves, or strives to cognize themselves, as pure consciousness - as the Upaniṣads declare in this verse - is a Hindu.

Cognizing You as Consciousness

Pure consciousness is all-pervasive, beyond coming and going. Whatever patterns you have that deny this truth - that you are all-pervasive and beyond coming and going - pen down all of them. Start exploring.

Let us begin the work of completion. The statement "absolute, radiant, and self-effulgent" is meant to be your cognition of yourself. Write down anything that denies this cognition. What other beliefs or cognitions are you carrying that contradict this understanding? Identify all the cognitions that deny your being absolute, radiant, and self-effulgent. Pen them down.

Let us trace the root of these patterns. Do not worry, thinking, "If I make a list of all these patterns as per the Upaniṣad, I may have 25,000 patterns - I could publish a book on it…" That is not necessary. Consider cotton bags: even if there are 10,000, you do not have to burn each one individually. Just a single matchstick will set the whole stack ablaze.

Similarly, if you see 10,000 patterns, you may think, "How will I overcome them all? I would have to address each one individually, 10,000 times." No - just identify the root, the one matchstick, and the work is done.

Sit and pen down your patterns. After noting 10–20 patterns, you will suddenly realize that they all boil down to one fundamental pattern. That pattern itself reduces to one ignorance. You will discover that addressing this single ignorance requires only one concept. You will realize that even that concept does not hold ultimate power over you.

You are already powerful. You will realize that not only are you enlightened now, you have been enlightened forever. Digging deep is what allows this realization. Manana (reflection) makes enlightenment happen. Internalizing these truths also brings enlightenment.

The statement "Pure consciousness is all-pervasive, beyond coming and going" should be your cognition. What else do you experience about yourself other than this? What beliefs are you carrying about yourself? Where are you denying your experience as declared in the Upaniṣads?

Beyond coming and going means birthless and deathless. You do not come to some place and go away from it. So, what is it that makes you believe you come and go? Which patterns must you complete to realize that you are beyond coming and going? Sit and list those patterns.

The Upaniṣads declare that you are all-pervasive, pure consciousness, beyond coming and going. You are already that. So, what is it that makes you believe, "I come, I go"? Pen down those patterns. Examine and discuss them.

Tomorrow, take up the next definition: absolute, radiant, and self-effulgent - I am absolute, radiant, and self-effulgent (svayamprakāśa), self-shining. Nothing else is required to glorify me or provide me joy, bliss, or excitement. If there is an idea that something else is needed to give me pleasure or excitement, or that something else can make me self-effulgent, that is a wrong pattern. What is it that gives rise to this wrong belief? I am self-excited, self-inspired, self-energetic, self-radiant, self-blissful, and a self-joy being. If I hold some other concept or cognition, what is it? Identify it, dig it out, and pen it down.

Let us work on Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad's 8th verse step by step. In three to four days, you will notice millions of incompletions merging into one or two patterns. Those one or two patterns will reduce to one or two fundamental ignorances. That one ignorance will reveal a single sense of powerlessness. That powerlessness will suddenly transform into powerfulness. Simply internalizing this truth leads to liberation.

Begin the Vākyārtha Sadas on "unembodied, boundaryless, whole, woundless, muscleless, having no incompletion with the body."

Consciousness is ever-pure space, devoid of the dirt of ignorance, and untouched by the delusion of incompletion. Consciousness is the all-knowing seer of all - past, present, and future. Consciousness transcends all beings. Consciousness is self-existent by itself. The first two lines may take many days of deep reflection. Once you understand the method, you can work on all these truths in one or two days.

Root of Ignorance

The Upaniṣads know you far more deeply than you know yourself. They declare who you are and what you are. Start living their truth. Whatever you cognize as "you," apart from what the Upaniṣads declare, pen down all of it. Every other cognition is an incompletion.

If the Upaniṣads declare, "You are absolute, radiant," then anything that tires you, brings boredom, or dampens your excitement - including your pains and sufferings - is an incompletion. You need to complete with it.

The Upaniṣads say, "You are devoid of the dirt of ignorance." If you still think, "I am ignorant in this area; I don't know about that," then you must investigate deeply into when you first started uttering, "I don't know."

Ignorance arises not when you truly do not know, but when you choose not to know. Trace back to your first declaration of ignorance. You will find that every such moment was a conscious choice of not wanting to know. Notice the times when knowledge felt like a burden: "Oh! So much work…" or when you subtly disliked knowing, or felt you were being used. You may have thought, "Why should I know so much? For living, we don't need to know or do so much." These thoughts are a direct "yes" to ignorance and a "no" to consciousness and life.

Your life is not confined to a ₹40,000 salary, a bike, and a house. Life does not end there. It is foolish to feel, "Why should I know so much? Why should I do so much?" Wherever you are not challenged to know more or do more, you are spiritually dead. Do not remain there. That is hell.

There is a beautiful verse in Tamil: Chola naadu Sorudaithu, Pandiya naadu muthudaithu, Chera naadu velam udaithu, Thondai naadu saandror udaithu.

The Chola kingdom was abundant in grain and rice. The Pāṇḍya kingdom, being on the oceanfront with long stretches of beaches, was rich in pearls. Cheranāḍu (Kerala), a hilly region, was known for its elephants. Toṇḍai Nāḍu - the land where the SPH Bhagavan Nithyananda Paramashivam was born and brought up, including Kāñcīpuram, Tiruvaṇṇāmalai, and Chennai - was full of enlightened beings. Kings and queens - including the father of Goddess Mīnākṣī - used to come to Toṇḍai Nāḍu, take people from there, and settle them in their own regions. This is how the Nāgarāttar community moved from Toṇḍai Nāḍu to Chola Nāḍu. Such practices were common among the kings of that time.

Why does Toṇḍai Nāḍu produce so many enlightened beings? The system there was designed so that one's ignorance and inefficiency were constantly challenged. The environment was purposefully structured that way. Tiredness, boredom, and inefficiency were never allowed to settle in. Attention was always given to knowledge and enlightenment, never to luxuries or conquests. Toṇḍai Nāḍu never sought to conquer. It was more like a human nursery, where beings were cherished, nurtured, and allowed to grow. The land was filled with pāṭhaśālās and gurukulas, institutions dedicated to learning and spiritual growth. People were not merely born there - they were made to happen.

Human beings are not just born; they are consciously cultivated. If life were only about birth, then anything could be artificially created. With today's 3D printers, we already have the technology to assemble material components. If it were simply about mechanical making, we could combine the male and female components, send them into a printer, and produce a 3D-printed human form. But that is not life. A being has to happen.

Toṇḍaimandalam was a land of constant challenge. Do not live in a place where your ignorance is not challenged - that is hell. Without even realizing it, you would be destroyed in such an environment. The true blessing is to be allowed to live among great beings - those who are already enlightened or are sincerely working towards enlightenment. In such a space, people are constantly brought back to authenticity, integrity, responsibility, and enriching.

Not bringing your incomplete thoughts about the results and selfishness on the path of your knowing and doing is what Kṛṣṇa says:

karmaṇyevādhikāraste mā phaleṣu kadācana |

You have the right to work, but not the right to expect results. The moment you begin to expect results, you disturb the quality of your work. By fantasizing about results, you neglect the actual process of working. Once your fantasies are exhausted, the real work will appear pale, dull, and uninspiring. In that state, work no longer excites you. The very day you conclude that knowledge is not required for survival, or that being active is not required for survival, you are already dead - you are simply waiting to be buried.

The Purpose of Knowledge and Action

We should never give the status of incompletion to the silly idea: "For surviving, why should I know so much? For surviving, why should I do so much? If somehow I get a job as a clerk in an office, earn a salary, have a two-wheeler and an apartment, that is enough." This is one of the silliest patterns in life, yet most human beings are stuck with it.

Knowledge is knowledge. Activity is activity. Neither should be judged, scaled, or measured based on the returns, income, luxury, or comfort they are expected to bring. Knowledge should exist for the sake of more knowledge. Work should be for the sake of more work. Work to get more work. Gain knowledge to gain more knowledge.

If you choose to use knowledge to achieve comfort and luxury, there is nothing wrong. Sarasvatī can always bring you Lakṣmī. But if Lakṣmī becomes the sole goal of Sarasvatī, then ignorance begins. Wealth can indeed be achieved through knowledge, but if wealth becomes the only goal of your knowledge, ignorance takes root.

Ignorance arises because you begin to feel: "Others are not so knowledgeable, yet they enjoy so much luxury. They have a big house, car, private helicopter, and everything. Why should I need so much knowledge to get the same? How can I also acquire luxury and comfort with less knowledge?" At that point, conspiring tendencies and cunningness enter your system.

The goal of knowledge should never be wealth. Wealth can come through knowledge, but it should not be the decision-making factor for you. Knowledge itself is the joy, the excitement, the taste of life. Only the one who is constantly exploring knowledge becomes the very embodiment of Sarasvatī - Mahāsarasvatī.

Knowledge for the Sake of Knowledge

Knowledge should be pursued for its own sake, not merely as a means to an end. Being active simply for the joy of activity itself is Durgā. Acquiring wealth through activity is not wrong, nor is acquiring luxury, but these alone should never be the ultimate goal.

The danger is that once your basic needs, wealth, or luxury are met, you may become inactive. You may begin to plan cunning ways to do less while acquiring more wealth and comfort. This is the very cunningness and these silly thoughts that cause the world to suffer. True 'aliveness' comes from knowledge and activity. These are the greatest of pleasures - thousands of times greater than any romance or luxury.

Being active is far more joyful and exciting than any of the so-called luxuries and comforts in life. Having a love for knowledge is infinitely more fulfilling than any romance. In fact, romance itself is nothing but the exploration of another person. The moment you feel you "know" the other, the romance dies.

The True Excitement of Exploration

The excitement in life does not actually come from the other person; it is your own excitement to explore and to know. Excitement always arises from knowledge. The moment you decide to make something else the purpose of knowledge, ignorance and cunningness begin within you.

For example, when your teacher asks you to memorize the multiplication table, but you think: "Why should I memorize this? My friend passed the exam without it, or my other friend has candy because his father is rich" - the very moment you decide not to learn, a layer of ignorance begins to cover you. That is when the dirt of ignorance starts settling in.

Mahāsarasvatī, the embodiment of knowledge, is very clear: only if you decide, will She allow you to enter into ignorance. Putting yourself in ignorance is your own choice; you are never pushed into ignorance by anyone else. Among the five cosmic actions - creation, maintenance, destruction, putting into ignorance, and liberation - creation, maintenance, and destruction are performed by Mahādeva in His Cosmic form. Liberation is bestowed when He assumes the form of the Guru. But putting into ignorance - that is done by you alone. Ignorance is never imposed from outside; it is always your own decision.

Breaking Free from Ignorance

Go back and reflect: when was the first time you said "yes" to ignorance and began developing this pattern? Dig out the ideas that initiated these patterns. Complete with them and break them. Suddenly, you will see that not only do you know what you have studied and read, but you also begin to discover multiple dimensions of yourself.

Knowledge is never linear. The moment you say "yes" to knowledge, you break ignorance. Ignorance is linear, while knowledge is always vertical and multidimensional. If you penetrate even a single layer of ignorance, suddenly the whole truth becomes available to you. If you know one handful of clay, you know everything about clay anywhere in the world.

If you know only a few mental setups and source patterns, but not the root patterns, you will remain powerless. Root patterns always make you powerless. A root pattern is the moment you said "no" to knowledge and began developing it into a habit. You continue to suffer your whole life, trapped in powerlessness.

A source pattern, on the other hand, shows you how the world itself says "no" to knowledge and suffers. When you understand this, you hold the solution to break the pattern. Source patterns always empower you. Knowledge of source patterns empowers you. Root patterns, when left in ignorance, make you powerless. But when you gain knowledge about root patterns, you discover the source patterns. And once you know the source patterns, you know everything.

Knowledge and Action for Their Sake

The Upaniṣads are introducing you to yourself - as you truly are - ever-pure space, untouched by the dirt of ignorance. If you believe yourself to be ignorant, then you are cognizing yourself in a way opposite to what the Upaniṣads declare you to be. That is not the truth. Sit and dig out the patterns: what makes you feel other than what the Upaniṣads reveal as your real self? If you cognize yourself as the Upaniṣads declare you, you are wise. Otherwise, you are simply "other-wise."

Let your reason for exploring knowledge not be limited to acquiring comforts, luxuries, and a so-called "settled life." What does "settling down" even mean? Settling down means living above the ground but behaving as though you are already buried beneath it.

Today's modern IT generation often thinks: "I will work until 40, retire early, make money, buy a flat, get a car, and settle down." But what does it mean to "settle down by 40"? Even while beginning their studies, their only goal in acquiring knowledge is to secure some comforts and luxuries. With such an approach, what kind of inspiration can one truly have for knowledge and life?

The purpose of being active, the purpose of knowledge, should not be reduced to the pursuit of wealth, luxury, or comfort. That alone should never be the goal. When knowledge is pursued only for these ends, it becomes heavy and burdensome. You will constantly be looking for cunning shortcuts - how to know less yet make more money. If money, wealth, and comfort are the ultimate purpose, life becomes like that of a buffalo - minimal movement, minimal activity. With such an attitude, even a small action exhausts you. Just one phone call feels draining. By the end of it, you are tired because your purpose was never rooted in the joy of being active, but only in the pursuit of comfort.

Let the purpose of being active (Durgā), knowledge (Sarasvatī), and Lakṣmī (wealth) simply happen. Lakṣmī for the sake of Lakṣmī. Durgā for the sake of Durgā. Sarasvatī for the sake of Sarasvatī. Whenever wealth brings you the idea that it is not necessary to be active, not necessary to acquire more knowledge, it is not Lakṣmī. It is Alakṣmī.

You are Beyond Your Muscles and Wounds

The dirt of ignorance covers you when the goal becomes something other than knowledge and being active. You should be active to the level as if you have no muscles. The muscles are just a utility for you. The muscles pick up whenever you need to do something is what is meant by the word 'dvādaśānta' in the Āgamas. And in the Pāda Pūjā mantras, you chant 'kailāsa sonnata dvādaśānta śyāmala pīṭha.' Dvādaśānta means the source of you which is neither inside you nor outside you, which is beyond your inside and outside. So, be that. Then you will understand you are muscleless, woundless. The muscles are only there as your instruments, tools. If you think you are muscles, you are wounded. Go back to the source of you when you started saying 'yes' to being wounded and 'yes' to being muscled. You are neither wounded nor made of muscles. You are muscleless, woundless.

The Power of Decision

Your decision brought you ignorance, and your decision alone can bring you to knowledge. Your decision created laziness, and that same decision is enough to bring you out of laziness. Your decision led to boredom, and your decision is enough to make you excited again.

The problem begins when you believe that something more than your decision is required for knowledge or for being active. If you used a key to lock a door, you only need the same key to open it - you do not need an elephant or a massive teakwood log.

But you think: "No, no, I locked it with a key; this same key cannot open it - it's too big."

First, drop this stupidity. You do not need anything more to undo what you have already done. If you have become ignorant, simply see how you became ignorant and undo it. If you have become tired, just notice what made you tired and undo that. If you have become bored with life, look at how that boredom arose and undo it. Believing that something more is required to reverse what you did is māyā (delusion).

Know your life. If you lost relationships because of a lack of love, simply decide to be loving - you will attract more. Do not bother about those who left; instead, recognize that you hold the science of locking and unlocking yourself. A person who always loves and never says "no" may be sweet, but not spicy. One who says both "yes" and "no" becomes not only sweet, but also spicy. A man who always says "yes" to knowledge may remain sweet, but not spicy. Sometimes you say "yes," sometimes you say "no." Now, start saying "yes" with knowledge, and you will be both sweet and spicy.

Remember: anything you have done can be undone with the same intensity. Undoing is never more difficult than doing.

Work on all these points. You will notice that so many patterns begin to loosen, so many dissolve, and so many become complete. With this, immense clarity arises - clarity in depth, in knowledge, in experience, and in cognition. You will recognize: I am consciousness. Along with this recognition comes the gift of all the qualities of consciousness. The moment you truly recognize - re-cognize - that you are consciousness, you will naturally have all the powers of consciousness.

You are Untouched by Delusion and Incompletion

Pure consciousness is all-pervasive, like space beyond the coming and going, absolute radiant and self-effulgent. Absolute radiant, self-effulgent, unembodied, boundaryless and whole.

Consciousness is not embodied. Consciousness is not inside your body or outside your body, it is everything. If consciousness is inside your body and your body and mind is there, then you can say embodied.

Upaniṣads are very clearly declaring: Everything is consciousness. Then how can you say you are embodied consciousness? Embodied means something other than consciousness should exist. It is declaring, unembodied, boundaryless, whole. It is just boundaryless. Try your best to imagine boundaryless, like space, boundaryless whole.

Woundless, muscleless means if there is a muscle, there is a possibility for wound. It is not restricted to your body. It is beyond any possibility of wounds or muscles. Having no incompletions with the body refers to being beyond the gross body.

Consciousness is the ever-pure space, devoid of the dirt of ignorance, beyond the causal body and is untouched by the delusion of incompletion.

Consciousness is the all-knowing seer of all – past, present, future. Consciousness transcends all beings. Consciousness transcends all beings (paribhuḥ). Anything that Is can become Not. Here, 'Is' and 'Not' do not exist. Consciousness is Isness which is beyond 'Is' and' Not.' It is like nitya is beyond nitya and anitya. Beyond 'Is' and 'Not' is Isness. The Isness is consciousness.

Consciousness is self-existent in Itself (Svayambhū). Svayambhū – kavir manīṣī paribhūḥ svayambhūḥ – it is independent will and intelligence. It is not some deadlight kind of a thing.

It has independent will, intelligence and no cause for its happening. Pure consciousness from eternal time has enriched the ages and each being by ordaining desirable responsibilities onto them as per their nature and space and their actions and results thereof. It is consciousness which is the center of the karma cakra. Consciousness is the center of everything.

In this verse, the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣi is exploding with the truth of consciousness. It is as if he feels he cannot fully describe or spell it out. Whenever words seem insufficient, one tends to repeat the same truth again and again: "That is that, that is that." When expression fails, repetition takes over. Thus, when you see words like paribhūḥ, svayambhūḥ, and others, they may appear different, but in depth they point to the same reality. The Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis repeat, repeat, and repeat - because the truth is beyond words.

Be assured, the Upaniṣads are declaring very clearly: you are untouched by delusion and incompletion. However cozy you may feel under the "incompletion blanket" - even if you embroider the words incompletion blanket on it - you are not touched by incompletions.

The Upaniṣads insist: You are untouched by delusion and incompletion. When the Upaniṣads declare this about you, then this is the truth of you.

No one else has the authority to define you - not even your Guru. The Guru may only point out your incompletions to help you get out of delusion. But remember: incompletions can never become permanent in you. You are untouched by incompletions. That is the truth. That is the right introduction of you to yourself.

If four or five heavy blankets are thrown on you, you may feel suffocated. But once you become aware, you throw them all off at once. This can itself be used as a technique: simply realize that you are not those blankets. You are untouched by incompletions. Be very clear about this. Pure consciousness is all-pervasive and untouched by the delusion of incompletion. Consciousness is the all-knowing seer of all - past, present, and future.

Importance of Vākyārtha Sadas

Everyone should spend at least one hour each day in Vākyārtha Sadas - debating, intranalyzing, and discussing the truths of the Upaniṣads. Only when you sit and discuss will you begin to think about them deeply. You have forgotten the art of contemplation.

During your work, you are not tired because of the physical routine; you are tired because of incompletions and emotional turmoil. It is the inner conflicts you go through the whole day that drain you.

Human beings are capable of at least twenty times more work than what you are currently doing. Even if you were to plough the land from morning till night, you are still twenty times more powerful than you believe. Physical activity never brings boredom or tiredness. It is the incompletions and emotional struggles that bring suffering.

Vākyārtha Sadas is the time to think about higher truths. When you constantly wound yourself emotionally without a plan for recovery, it is very dangerous. You must have a plan for recovery. If you hurt yourself throughout the day, at least for one hour you should heal yourself. Vākyārtha Sadas is that healing time.

It is when you put your mind and thoughts on higher possibilities. The Upaniṣads are such that you must digest them to feel powerful. Only when they become part of you will you truly experience power.

Pure consciousness is eternal. It has existed even before time itself began. Time and space belong to a much lower plane. Pure consciousness existed even before time. The more you comprehend consciousness, the more you will feel settled, secure, and beautiful. You will simply fall in love with yourself. All restlessness - both internal and external - will be quenched and completely dissolved.

Vākyārtha Sadas on consciousness can bring immense peace, joy, and bliss. Just as the moments you spend with the Guru fill you with joy and excitement, in the same way, meditating on consciousness through Vākyārtha Sadas can fill you with that same depth of joy and excitement.

Engage in Vākyārtha Sadas on the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad's definition of you and its description of consciousness. It is pure consciousness that, from time eternal, has enriched the ages and every being by ordaining desirable responsibilities (artha) onto them, in accordance with their nature, their space, their actions, and the results thereof.

Consciousness is the very center of all your karma, akarma, and vikarma - your actions, your inactions, and even the distortions of action. Your actions, their results, the doing, the non-doing, and even liberation from both doing and non-doing - ultimately all of this boils down to one truth: Consciousness.

If you wish to achieve something, you must cognize that you are consciousness. If you wish to achieve non-doing, you must cognize that you are consciousness. Consciousness must remain the center of everything. Whether you seek to achieve, or to transcend achievement itself, the center is always the same: the cognition "I am pure consciousness." That single cognition can liberate you from time and bring you into tune with time.

Consciousness alone enriches time and every being living under the flow of time - by ordaining desirable responsibilities (artha) to each, in alignment with their nature, their space, their actions, and their results.

The Lordship of Consciousness

Ramana Maharishi beautifully says:

karmam payan taral kartanadhu anaiayaalkarmam kaduvuluo undhipara

A beautiful Jñāna Undiyar, there is a verse Ramana Maharishi says: 'Your actions give results because the Lord, Consciousness, allows it. The Lord makes it happen, not karma itself. If the karma itself can directly bring a result, then karma itself becomes God which is not true.'

Understand this with an example: You write a cheque for one lakh rupees and take it to the bank. Only when the manager authorizes the release of funds do you actually receive the money. As a routine, you write the cheque, and he gives the money. Since there is no obstacle, you take it for granted and begin to think that just by writing the cheque, the money comes.

But writing the cheque is merely your karma, your action. It brings a result only when the manager approves it. He can stop, postpone, delay, or deny. Of course, you have other legal recourses, but that is another matter.

The key point is: the action itself does not produce the result in an automatic way, even though for the sake of convenience the system may appear automatic. In the same way, in the Cosmos, although things happen automatically for your convenience, never assume that karma by itself can bring results. Karma is not the Lord.

It is the decision of Consciousness that makes the result happen. This is the Lordship of Consciousness declared in this part of the Upaniṣad. It is Consciousness, from time eternal, that has enriched the beings, the ages, and every individual - by ordaining responsibilities desired by them, according to their nature, their space, their actions, and the results thereof. The Lordship of Consciousness is revealed in this verse.

It is pure Consciousness that, from time eternal, has enriched the ages and each being. It is Consciousness that has ordained desirable responsibilities upon them in alignment with their nature, their space, their actions, and the results thereof. Do Vākyārtha Sadas on this line. Discuss, debate, and intranalyze.

Consciousness is responsible for our nature, our space, our responsibilities, our actions, and the results thereof. Surrendering to Consciousness and meditating upon it can completely reprogram us. Through this, we can alter and transform our life as we wish. We can change our nature and space. We can change our responsibilities and actions. We can even change our results without changing our nature and space. We can change results without responsibilities, and we can change our nature without altering our space.

Responsibility, nature, space, action, and results - all these are interlinked. If you work only at the level of any one of them, changes happen only systematically, in sequence. First, your responsibilities must shift. Then, your nature must evolve. Then, your space transforms. Finally, the results manifest differently.

But if you work with Consciousness, the rules are entirely different. Consciousness does not follow the sequence. With Consciousness, anything can change without changing anything else - or everything can change at once.

Consciousness can interfere directly at any point and transform it instantly. Your responsibility may be one way, your nature another, your space and your actions may all be different - yet Consciousness can still directly intervene and alter the results. That is what we call a miracle. You may wonder, "How is this possible? My actions, my space, my very nature are aligned in a particular way, yet suddenly the result is completely different!" That wonder itself is the power of Consciousness revealing its supremacy over the chain of cause and effect.

The Freedom of Consciousness

Consciousness has so much freedom and power because it is the center around which everything moves. When you experience consciousness with your pure intelligence, you experience that as time. When you experience consciousness with your visualization capability, you experience that as space. When you experience consciousness with your logic, you experience that as your nature. When you experience consciousness with your desires, you experience that as responsibility. When you taste your consciousness as joy, you call that a result. Meditate on this line and you will understand.

An enlightened being can directly give you joy through consciousness. That is why you feel the result of your life is achieved. You feel life is a miracle when you touch and experience consciousness. Meditate on this line. Your desires could have been different, your responsibility could have been different, your nature could have been different, your space could have been different, your actions could have been different. Results can just be different. That is why Mahādeva is able to initiate even a black sparrow and liberate it.

The intervention of consciousness is possible because consciousness is the center. Constantly cognize that you are consciousness. You are not the son of somebody, the father of somebody, the daughter of somebody, the wife of somebody, the brother of somebody. You are not even a disciple of somebody. You are pure consciousness.

The Clarity of Advaita

In Śaiva Āgamas, there are Advaita Āgamas and Dvaita Āgamas (Dvaita-Advaita Āgamas). Dvaita Āgamas declare God is separate, we are separate. Dvaita-Advaita Āgamas declare in the beginning God is separate, you are separate. By spiritual practice, you and God become one. Advaita Āgamas declare that you and God are one from the beginning. Knowing this is spiritual practice. Śuddha Advaita Āgamas declare that even if you don't know, this is the reality. Śaiva Siddhānta is Śuddha Advaita Āgama, not just Advaita Āgama. It is Śuddha Advaita Āgama.

Truth always empowers you. Reality always makes you powerful. Nothing can make you more powerful than pure Advaita. Dvaita can make you egoistic. Even in your surrender, you will have a humble ego. Powerlessness will continue to rule you. Nothing like Advaita has the capacity to empower you. That is reality.

The action, result, nature, space, responsibility - everything is pure consciousness. Debate and discuss this. Do not remember the bondages from the body or through the body as part of you. From the body means your disease, your concepts about the body, feeling good or bad about the body, your skin color, everything. Through the body means feeling – 'I am the son of somebody, daughter of somebody, sister of somebody. Even a disciple of somebody!' No.

Cognize: I love Mahādeva just for the sake of love. No bargaining or expecting tomorrow He will give me Enlightenment. I have already realized. I already got It. In the course of my love, I had it. Now, my love for Him is only love for the sake of love. I just know, He is me. All my aspirations are His aspirations. All my inspirations are His inspirations. All my desires are His desires. All my powers are His powers. Advaita Bhakti – bhakti established in Advaita. Even with Mahādeva, there is no question of duality. Where does the question of duality come from with your family, parents, brother, sister, boss, subordinate?

Power of Initiation

Do not entertain, cherish, or engage yourself in the bondages from the body and through the body. Recognize that you are pure consciousness. When you recognize you are pure consciousness and live your life, it becomes a līlā (divine play) and drama. No incompletion will have a place or power over you. Your responsibility, your nature, your space, your desires, your actions, your results - if they go as per the law of karma, it's life. If it changes and brings a result which you never expected or brings a bad feeling, it's called an accident. If it changes and brings results which you never expected but makes you feel good, it is called a miracle. An enlightened being can interfere in that cycle and change it as they want because everything is centered on consciousness.

When you do yoga, work out, run, and do all the things required, and health comes, it is karma bringing the result. If the Master puts His hand on your head and health happens, it is consciousness interfering and creating a result. A result which is independent of your nature, space, action, and responsibility is Initiation.

In every being, only if an intervention of consciousness happens will the ball start rolling in a new direction and the progress towards Enlightenment will start to happen. You can never reach the Ultimate just by flowing through the law of karma. How many lifetimes would it take to get there? It's only with the spiritual and conscious intervention that the results can change, and you can reach Enlightenment.

Somewhere this karma cakra needs to be broken, and you need to be given new energy, inspiration, understanding, and possibility. If you are always stuck in this action-result cycle, you will never be given a chance to taste the possibility. The taste of possibility can be given to you only when divine intervention happens. Mahādeva intervenes in your life in the form of the Master. He assumes the form of the Master just to liberate people from the karma cakra. The Master gives inspiration, joy, bliss, causes miracles, and leads to Enlightenment.

Have clarity about the truth: 'I am pure consciousness. My responsibility, my being, my nature, my space, my action, my result—everything is centered in that consciousness and belongs to that consciousness. My surrender to consciousness is enough to change anything I want, as I want.' It is consciousness that is life. That is the result. The touch of consciousness can be a million times more beautiful, amazing, and fulfilling than any pleasure or fruit of life you are expecting. Decide to cognize yourself as pure consciousness.

Do Not Stop Seeking

अन्धम् तमः प्रविशन्ति ये ’अविद्याम् उपासते |
ततो भूय इव ते तमो यौ विद्यायाम् रताः || ९ ||
andhaṁ tamaḥ praviśanti ye’avidyām upāsate |
tato bhūya iva te tamo yau vidyāyāṁ ratāḥ || 9 ||

The literal meaning, translation: Those who worship avidyā, the ignorance that veils the true knowledge of truth, consciousness, enter into blinding darkness characterized by the absence of perception; but into greater darkness of ignorance than that, enter they who, considering themselves as scholarly and learned, are engaged in vidyā, the incomplete knowledge acquired for vested interests characterized by the impure perception of truth, consciousness.

The essence is, do not stop seeking. Anything can be given up, but not the seeking. Keep searching for the truth higher and higher. Universe eternally expands.

An enlightened being is a person whose mind has disappeared. He constantly goes through new experiences, expanding and continuously seeking. You are still a seeker if there is a part of your mind which can put you in boredom or tiredness. If your seeking becomes eternal, there is no part of your mind that exists to make you bored or tired. It becomes sure you will be a seeker forever; then you are an enlightened being.

Enlightened beings become one with the Cosmos; that is the ultimate experience but not final. The ultimate experience itself is constantly being alive, a constant powerful happening, not carved in stone. The Cosmos is a happening. It is not a dead state. It is alive, living and happening – infinity.

Universe is happening. All enlightened beings continue to seek. The enlightened being seeking means continuous expansion. If enlightened beings are expanding, seeking and happening, then you should be seeking. Kill all the parts of you trying to become stagnant. Any stagnation is disease. If you are able to bend the body 40 degrees, make it at least 41 the next day. Do not stagnate. If the mind is able to understand some concepts for 5 minutes, make it at least 6 minutes the next day. Killing all parts of stagnation in you by the constant inspiration and excitement is seeking.

If you are seeking something in the outer world, you will have the gifts of that world – luxury, comfort, name and fame, whatever comes from society. If you are seeking from death, you will get what you are seeking. Seeking should become your very being. Mumukśatva means constantly looking for reality. Don’t allow any stagnation. All stagnation is stupidity. If somebody is stuck, that is hell, the most cursed space.

Being stagnant or stuck is worshipping ignorance. Whether trying to understand good, bad, right, wrong, the laws of the Universe, the laws with which you yourself function or the laws with which life happens, go on seeking. You will never get an answer but you are not supposed to stop seeking. The reward for your seeking is experience, not an answer. If something is told to your very being, it is experience. If the experience is limited to your logic, it is an answer. If your seeking is from the depths of your being, the Cosmos will reply to your very being. That is called experience.

The moment you stop seeking, you start worshipping avidyā. You start worshipping ignorance. You become stagnant. Suffering never makes you stagnant, only pain makes you stagnant. The actual happening of your life is a suffering and never makes you stagnant. However, constantly remembering your suffering is painful, makes you stagnant. A remembrance which puts you in emotional turmoil makes you stagnant.

Do not allow any form of stagnation in your life. All the anti-Hindu forces use the human values as a pseudo-Hinduism to cause the death of traditional Hinduism. This could have been possible before 1978, not after that. Being human is great, human values are great, no doubt, but don’t say that itself is super. If you say that is super, you are a duper. Don’t try to kill the mystical possibilities, the superhuman possibilities of traditional Hinduism.

More than what you are doing, where you are matters for your life progress. You can be doing all types of kriyā, yoga and prāṇāyāma, sitting inside a bullock cart that is not even tied but you are not going to go anywhere. You can be as restless as possible, as active as possible, you can be as pulling and pushing as much as possible but you will be only there. You can be lying, resting, sipping a cup of juice or anything you want, but if you are lying in the flight, you are moving, you are flying. What you do does not matter; where you are matters. Human possibilities do not stop with human values.

Seek about everything. You have a right. You have a right to question the whole Cosmos. If you have stomach pain, don’t ask, ‘Why is there stomach pain? What did I eat? Is it indigestion, gastric? What is the reason? Why am I having it?’ Don’t think that way. Try to ask, 'Why do I have this habit of eating and digesting?'

Start questioning the roots. You will be declared as a rebel by Cosmos and all your needs will be met. It is the child that cries loudest that gets attention first. If you think – 'Should I do this prāṇāyāma, that yoga, take this herb?' – you may get your stomach pain cured, but you will have a headache tomorrow. Questioning the very root, always go to the extreme of questioning – 'Why this question of eating, digesting, getting energy from food?' When you go to this, you will be the child crying the loudest. Cosmos will reply to you, not only get rid of the pain but you get the power to become Nirāhārī. The child who cries louder gets not only candy, but keys to the store. Learn how to throw a tantrum with the Cosmos. So, question the very root, source. Let your 'whys' go to the depths.

Just one child (Nāciketa) throws a tantrum and Yama Deva has to sit and obey. Learn to throw a tantrum with the Cosmos because you have a right over it. Cosmos cannot just brush or push you aside. If you have not lost the spiritual seeking, nothing is lost. Seeking is nothing but your ability to throw a tantrum and get the attention of the Cosmic Mother.

Don't try to be Rāvaṇa who tried to shake Kailāsa. You will be caught under. Just be a Yogī. Viṣṇu cannot sleep there. Vaikuṇṭha will have a tsunami. He has to come down and attend to you. Vaikuṇṭha, Kailāsa and all are a parallel universe. Your Anāhata Cakra is Vaikuṇṭha. Your Ājñā Cakra is Kailāsa. If you shake your Ājñā Cakra, Kailāsa has to wake up and Mahādeva has to appear in front of you. Don't be arrogant out of your seeking. When you are sincerely seeking, arrogance will not happen. When you open your Third Eye, Kailāsa will open. If you sit and open your Anāhata Cakra with a depth of seeking, simply Nārāyaṇa has to wake up from his yoga nidrā and appear before you – 'My son, what do you want?'

Stop the worship of ignorance. Never stop your seeking for any reason. Awaken continuously. Understand, life doesn't end. Nothing should stop your seeking or make you a worshipper of ignorance.

Let Seeking Become Your First Response

अन्धं तम प्रविशन्ति ये ऽविद्याम् उपासते |
ततो भूय इव ते तमः यौ विद्यायां रताः || ९ ||
andhaṁ tama praviśanti ye ऽavidyām upāsate |
tato bhūya iva te tamaḥ yau vidyāyāṁ ratāḥ || 9 ||

'Those who worship avidyā (ignorance) that veils true knowledge, truth, consciousness, enter into blinding darkness characterized by the absence of perception but also into a greater darkness of ignorance than that. Those who consider themselves scholarly and learned are engaged in avidyā, incomplete knowledge, acquired for vested interests and characterized by the impure perception of truth, consciousness.'

avidyām upāsate – that is the key word in this verse. Having a don't care attitude about ignorance, is worshipping ignorance. Having a don't care attitude about ignorance, or having something else as the priority other than seeking and breaking the ignorance is worshipping the ignorance (avidyām upāsate).

Seeking should be your first reponse. In the so-called developed countries, they have what is called a first response team - those who rush to the scene of a crisis, an accident, a natural calamity, or a terrorist attack. They are the first to attend to the situation, the first to respond. In the same way, let seeking be the first response team for your whole life - for every crisis, every turn, every situation. Whether good or bad, gain or loss, peace or turmoil, joy or pain, bliss or suffering - let seeking be your first response.

When there is pain, don't stop at "Why me?" Throw a tantrum with the Cosmos. If you have stomach pain, don't think, "Why am I suffering with this?" Instead, ask, "Why does humanity suffer this way?" If you think only "Why me?" - you will become Buddhu, a fool. If you think "Why suffering at all for humanity?" - you will become Buddha, the Enlightened One. When Buddha saw a sick man, an old man, and a dead body, he did not think, "Why did I have to see such inauspicious sights? This is depressing." He asked instead, "Why does this suffering exist for humanity at all?" That questioning, that tantrum with the Cosmos, is what led him to Enlightenment. And the same truth applies to you: whoever throws a tantrum with the Cosmos will be freed from the very laws of the Cosmos.

All the laws and rules of the Cosmos are only for those who don't know how to throw a tantrum with the Cosmos. Seeking itself is throwing a tantrum with the Cosmos. Seeking is the most powerful way of integrating yourself. The moment you start seeking, you become the favourite child, the natural inheritor of the Cosmos. You begin to live like a Paramahaṃsa.

Dharma is for people who are absorbed in artha and kāma But if you start questioning dharma, seeking its depth, asking:"Why is it so? What is its source? How can I go beyond it?" then the very moment you ask why with your whole being, the Cosmos frees you from all laws, rules, and regulations. You become a liberated being.

If you do not throw a tantrum with the Cosmic Mother, if you do not question deeply, She lets you remain in your māyā (delusion). Delusion is simply not throwing tantrum. If a child is quietly sleeping, playing with little toys, enjoying candy, or even drawing in his own urine, the mother goes about her work, unbothered. Even if the child throws away one toy, She may just offer a better toy, or a sweeter candy, to keep him engaged, in delusion. But if the child decides, "No! I don't want anything!", throws everything away, and demands with all his being, only then does the Mother drop everything, rush, and lift the child into Her lap.

The same is with the Cosmos. You are in delusion if you are playing with your small toys and candies. What are your small toys? Your relationships, family and friends. What are your small candies? Your salary, one car and two houses. Drawing on your urine, what is it? Brooding over your incompletion. That is drawing on your urine. If you are a mother, you know kids do that. Whenever you are brooding over your incompletion, visualize you are drawing on your number one. Whenever you are creating more suffering, more patterns, more incompletions out of your old incompletions, you are drawing on your number two. Projecting your incompletions on the Master and abusing him means you are putting those fingers directly into your mouth.

The Cosmic Mother will try to distract you. She may offer you more candies, a better salary, a bigger career opportunity, a nicer house, even a lottery ticket or some extra comfort. She will keep giving, trying to hold your attention in the play of life. If you are satisfied with these, She simply says: "Alright, hmm.", and continues with Her work. But the moment you decide, "No! I am truly going to look into everything, question everything: What is pain? What is pleasure? What is life? Who am I?", then the real journey begins. When you feel pain, let your first response team be seeking: "What is this pain? Why does it exist?"

When you feel bliss, let your first response team be seeking: "What is this bliss? What exactly is happening in me when I experience it?" Making seeking your first response team is the greatest security you can ever have from the Cosmos.

If, throughout your life, seeking is your first response, then even at the moment of death it will remain your first response. And when you are able to seek into death itself, you will be enlightened.

If your first response team is seeking, even an ordinary cup of tea can lead you to enlightenment. When you sip a cup of tea, simply watch: What is happening as this liquid touches my tongue? What is happening as it travels through me? Why this response? Why am I reacting this way? A tea or a cigarette is never just a drink or a smoke. Each time you sip or smoke, the same patterns are cherished and repeated. If you are a habitual tea drinker or addicted to smoking, you will notice, it is always the same pattern replaying itself.

The same happens with daily activities: even when you shower, the moment you stand under the water, the same patterns return again and again. But if seeking becomes your first response team, you begin to break tons and tons of patterns. Suddenly, the most ordinary act, like sipping a cup of tea can lead you to enlightenment.

Root of Addiction

So many mundane activities - like drinking tea, smoking, or reading a newspaper are not just actions, they are addictions. Addiction does not belong to the body; it belongs to the mind. If you were truly absorbed in the freshness of the action itself, it would never become addictive. But when the same mental pattern repeats itself through an action, the action turns into addiction.

You are not addicted to tea or cigarettes for their own sake. You are addicted to the thought currents that rise up in you every time you sip tea or smoke. The body only performs the action; the mind clings to the repetitive pattern it enjoys. The same is true even for reading a newspaper. You don't really read from the paper - you read from your mind. If you read ten lines on the page, your mind spins two hundred lines of its own. That mental churn is what you are addicted to, which is why many people cannot go even to attend to restroom to attend to urine or potty without holding a newspaper in hand.

All addiction is the mental patterns you go through more than the physical actions you do. When you start enjoying the mental patterns you go through, with the same physical act than the physical actions you do – you get addicted to that. Use this definition whether for alcohol, marijuana or newspaper reading. It can be as simple as newspaper reading to as complicated as a sleeping pill or as difficult as creating accidents. There are many people that are accident addicts. At least a small scratch should happen to their car or two-wheeler, then they feel satisfied. Whether it is your drinking pattern, eating pattern or womanizing pattern, it's all patterns. Actually a womanizer, a drunkard or a smoking addict needs to be healed, not punished because they get caught with the pattern.

Making Seeking as First Instinct Response

If your first response to anything is seeking, no pattern can take root in you. Without seeking, patterns naturally get rooted. Seeking is like giving an Earthquake to your patterns. Patterns are like plants and trees clinging to the ground, and seeking is the great shake that makes them collapse. Whether a pattern began yesterday or two thousand years ago, seeking as your first response team will shatter it completely. This is Living Enlightenment.

Not having seeking as your first response is nothing but worshiping ignorance. Giving you eternal seeking is the very work of Mahādeva. With seeking, naturally, solutions come.

Anything can be given up but not seeking. Wherever seeking has stopped in you, look closely: that part of you has become frozen whether in body, mind, logic, or emotion. The moment you stop seeking, you lose the art of reinventing yourself. Without reinvention, you don't just stagnate, you rot. You stink to death while still alive.

Physically, your body's seeking is Yoga, the natural drive to return to its original state of balance.

Logically, seeking is liberated thinking breaking free from rigid patterns and limitations.

Emotionally, seeking is devotion, the longing to return to the purest form of love and connection.

Existentially, your being's seeking is enlightenment, the ultimate return to your original state of consciousness.

Seeking is the breath of life. It keeps you alive with the possibility of constant reinvention.

The dead are not dangerous to humanity; the living dead are. The real danger to Sanātana Hindu Dharma is not atheists, nor people of other religions. The true threat comes from non-practicing Hindus. They are the ones who pose a greater danger to Hindu tradition than anyone else. Such people, though alive, are frozen, they do not know how to reinvent themselves, how to realign, how to nurture seeking. They are non-living human beings. They are the greatest threat to those who are truly alive. If you see the reality, ghosts and spirits have hardly harmed humanity. It is the living dead, not the dead, who are the crisis. Do not fear the dead. Fear the living dead. Stay away from them.

Saint Māṇikkavācakar beautifully declares: "I am not afraid of snakes or wild animals, but I am afraid of foreheads that bear no holy ash. I fear people whose hearts do not hold the name of Mahādeva."

Let this be your compass: Fear those who lack seeking. If you see them, it is dangerous. If you hear about them, it is dangerous. If you speak with them, it is dangerous. Just five minutes in their company, and they can inject poisonous ideas that destroy your seeking. They walk away, leaving you to clean up the mess inside your own head.

If you want to get the attention of an elephant, just being an ant will never be sufficient. You will have to come to the level of a bird at least, and create a sound so that the elephant turns and sees you. The same is with the Cosmos. An ordinary broken human being can never get the attention of the Cosmos. Raise yourself by seeking and you will see Cosmos responds to you.

If you question 'why me?' – you will only be punished more and more. If you question 'why is it at all?' – you will be liberated. If you question 'why pain for me?' – you will only attract more and more. If you question – 'why is there pain for human beings? – you will be liberated. Seeking means having basic questions, first things first. Having seeking is not worshiping ignorance.

Two Types of People – Those Worshipping Ignorance and Those Worshipping Half Truth

This verse talks about two types of people - those who worship ignorance and those who worship half truth. Half truth is knowledge for the sake of vested interest, not for the sake of knowledge itself. When you start worshipping knowledge for the sake of knowledge, you become the embodiment of vidyā (knowledge). If you are worshipping knowledge for some vested interests, for the sake of luxury or for the sake of any other comforts, you'll be suffering with half knowledge, incomplete knowledge, the impure perception of truth, consciousness.

When you enter into the search of spiritual knowledge, seeking, you will have such liberating truths about freedom, all powerfulness. Great truths will be told but unless they become experience, you will not understand the concepts of freedom. Most of the time when you give in to your patterns, you will start declaring freedom. You will say, 'After all, I am enlightened. I am a soul. I am free.' Ramakrishna says beautifully, in one example – 'The crow may try to boast about itself, but finally ends up eating what it eats from the dustbin, dirt.'

So-called knowledgeable people, with incomplete knowledge, give in to their patterns and declare they are free. A more clear example is, without becoming Paramahaṃsa, trying to live like a Paramahaṃsa without getting to the space of non-attachment. Trying to live as if unattached - this is the most dangerous game people will play. No one needs to punish them, they will be punishing themselves. Giving in to your patterns cannot be freedom. Upaniṣads are trying to say people with incomplete knowledge, even before achieving Enlightenment, due to their vested interests will get completely distracted and destroyed.

Upaniṣads very boldly describe the obstacles you will face as an initial level seeker and advanced level seeker. For an initial level seeker, the biggest obstacle is boredom. If you find a block and don't break it, you just develop a 'don't care attitude' towards your ignorance. As for advanced seekers, without taking the responsibility of Enlightenment, trying to grab all the powers of Enlightenment. Enlightenment comes out of experience, not out of expertise.

The second level obstacles are more dangerous. You start behaving almost like enlightened but with incomplete knowledge. The definition of enlightened being is that his level of seeking will be totally different from your level. He will continue to be seeking because seeking is the only way he will be alive. You can prove you are alive by so many things, eating, having sweets and having physical pleasures. Through all of the senses you prove that you are alive to yourself and to others. An enlightened being is alive only if he is seeking. That is the only way he reminds himself he is alive and he proves he is alive to others. To that level, his very core will be seeking.

The Dangers of Not Living the Truth and Knowledge

These two concepts you need to understand. Those who worship ignorance – the initial level seekers who get into tiredness, boredom, unable to move further and the don't care attitude about ignorance. This is one group. The other group is a little advanced level seekers, who have spent time with certain concepts but don't align those concepts into their life. They feel acquainted with those concepts intellectually but not experientially. Familiarity always breeds contempt, even with the idea you are the consciousness. Being acquainted means having exposure to an idea, thinking about it for quite a long time, but you never made it your cognition. You never transformed your life. You never aligned your life to the truth. You think what you are living is much better than common men, normal people who don't even know they are consciousness. So with this justification, the worship of imperfect knowledge, the incomplete knowledge starts. The danger is you know how to manipulate others and you become a half Guru.

All neighborhood Gurus are in this space, in this mood. The impure perception of truth, consciousness, incomplete knowledge is the problem of advanced seekers. It is more dangerous than the initial level problem of initial level seekers. The advanced level seekers who worship knowledge which is incomplete, they won't have tiredness or boredom. They will be very active but in the wrong direction. Enjoy knowledge for the sake of knowledge. Celebrate knowledge for the sake of knowledge. Celebrate power and energy for the sake of power and energy.

Don't use power to manipulate others. Don't use knowledge to make money. Mentally don't have the disease of equating your knowledge to wealth. It's a mental disorder. Most of your physical and mental disorders are not at all disorders in Cosmic law. Researchers and scientists are still not able to smell what a real mental disorder, psychological disorder is. One of the biggest mental disorders is not being able to sit with yourself.

Just learning a concept and not making it as part of your cognition, is the most dangerous. There was a beautiful incident in the life of Ādi Śaṅkarācārya. One day He was walking with His disciples on his sthala yātrā (sacred travel to energy centers) and suddenly He felt thirsty. No water was found in that area. Only one guy was having a village arrack, you call it toddy (village liquor). Śaṅkarācārya went straight to that village and said, 'Can you give me a little? I am feeling thirsty.' The villager readily agreed and He drank. The disciples could not understand – 'What is this, Acharya?' Then they decided – 'If you can drink, why not us?' They also drank. After that Śaṅkarācārya was walking very steadily, stably but not these disciples. Then Śaṅkarācārya decided it is time to educate these fellows. They need to be shown the difference between the people who have made 'I am the consciousness' as a cognition and 'I am the consciousness' as an acquired acquaintance, not a cognition.

After some time, He again felt very thirsty. He looked around and found no water source, not even a village arrack. There was only one guy melting iron and pouring it into the mould in the metal workshop. He walked straight into the workshop and asked that guy to give him a little. That fellow was shocked and asked, 'Why?' He was told, 'Don't bother about that.' He asked to pour the whole liquid metal into his hand and He drank like you would drink the cold water from the well or a lake. Then He just looked back. The disciples were all wide-eyed. He just told them, 'Please drink.' They were all shaken. Śaṅkara just made only one statement, 'Why you can follow when I was drinking arak and not now?' Neither disciples drank nor did Ācārya force them to drink.

The moral of the story, just hearing these words and not making it as part of your cognition will make you feel and give you pseudo satisfaction, as if you know it is the truth. That is the most dangerous. Before initiation the disciple needs to be prepared. The moment you are initiated, you should just follow the truth.

Pain is such a self-destructive mechanism. It will not allow you to reinvent yourself with any new concepts and strategies. All the spiritual truths expressed in these Upaniṣads, like you are consciousness, you are untouched, you never come and go, you are the source of action, the result of all these are the highest possible strategies for your life. Knowing them but not living them makes you feel as if you are already living them. That is incomplete knowledge.

How much ever you may know about yoga, unless you do, you won't have the result. How much ever you may know about swimming, unless you start swimming you will not have the result. How much ever you may know about surgery, unless you do it, you don't know what it is.

Attitude of Inaction

Knowing but not doing:this is the most dangerous mental setup. Once you fall into it, your whole life is wasted.

Listening to truths but not living them is worse than ignorance. Once that attitude takes root, you learn to brush aside even the highest revelations. It becomes like watching an advertisement on TV, "Call now, call now, call now." You don't even care to change the channel. The same indifference creeps in toward the Upaniṣads themselves. When the Upaniṣads declare, "You are consciousness, you are consciousness, you are consciousness - start living it!" but, you simply nod and move on. By the ninth verse, the UpaniṣadUpaniṣad's tone rises with urgency: "Call now, call now, call now, don't get doomed!"

अन्धम् तमः प्रविशन्ति ये ऽविद्याम् उपासते |
ततो भूय इव ते तमो यौ विद्यायाम् रताः || ९ ||
andhaṁ tamaḥ praviśanti yeऽavidyām upāsate |
tato bhūya iva te tamo yau vidyāyāṁ ratāḥ || 9 ||

If you develop the attitude of inaction in the face of spiritual truths, then nothing can help you reinvent yourself. Each line of the Upaniṣads is a spiritual strategy to reinvent yourself. The attitude of inaction is: 'I'll attend all the sessions, classes, and learn the strategies. I don't need to do anything.' Statements like these are examples of avidyām upāsate—worshipping ignorance.

Pain in life always leaves behind stagnation.Stagnation is nothing but the residue of pain. Feeling stuck is the hangover of the pains you carry - and this continues again and again, until Enlightenment. There is only one solution: constantly reinvent yourself. Constantly restrategize yourself. Only then does stagnation dissolve, and life begins to flow again.

When you are driven by greed or fear, you will constantly reinvent yourself. If you are in love with someone, you constantly reinvent yourself to demonstrate your love or impress them. If you fear someone, you constantly reinvent yourself to escape from them or protect yourself. This reinvention driven by fear or greed happens naturally. Do the same out of inspiration, out of the great truths from the Upaniṣads.

The Upaniṣads say, 'All the incomplete knowledge which you learned but never made as experience makes you fall into hell.' Immediately, sit and start scanning sincerely all the concepts you heard but never made into experience.

Any spiritual truth must be put into action the very moment you hear it from the Master. If you do not make it your cognition by today's sunset, it becomes useless for you. Instead, you will cultivate the wrong pattern of listening without living. This is called Ātmahana - "the slaying of the Self," or saying no to life.

Those who listen to profound truths but fail to make them their cognition are truly stupid, foolish, cursed, and idiotic. If you keep postponing the assimilation of spiritual truths in your life, without allowing them to become your cognition, parts of you have already frozen, they have, in fact, become dead.

Restrategize your whole life with that truth: 'I am consciousness.' Do not be pushed by fear and greed. Be pushed by tremendous joy, inspiration, happiness, bliss, fulfillment, and completion. If your fuel is only completion and inspiration, you are blessed. Reinvent yourself, restrategize your life, make yourself more fluid and alive. Break the parts of you that are frozen and make them alive again. All tiredness and all boredom are nothing but frozen pains in your muscle memory. The only way to break the ice - the frozen pains - is to restrategize yourself.

Seeking should be the frying pan for the enlightenment dosa. Seeking should be the frying pan for pouring your being to restrategize and reinvent. Contemplate all the decisions and strategies you can make based on the truth, 'I am consciousness.' Restrategize your life and reinvent yourself. Not restrategizing is not only unhelpful but also dangerous.

If you start internalizing yourself as consciousness, as defined by the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, you will be in the highest possible space - Super Consciousness.

अन्धम् तमः प्रविशन्ति येऽविद्यामुपासते |

andhaṁ tamaḥ praviśanti ye'vidyāmupāsate |
tato bhūya iva te tamo ya u vidyāyāṁ ratāḥ || 9 ||

'Those who worship avidyā (ignorance) that veils the true knowledge of truth, consciousness, enter into blinding darkness characterized by the absence of perception. They who consider themselves as scholarly and learned or engaged in vidyā, the incomplete knowledge acquired for vested interest, characterized by the impure perception of truth, consciousness, enter into greater darkness of ignorance than that.'

Knowledge Without Experience

Acquiring knowledge through seeking can become overwhelming when you start feeling, 'enough of seeking'. If you began your seeking because of problems in your life, and those problems are now resolved, you might not want to continue seeking by giving in to your overwhelmed feeling. This attitude of not wanting to continue seeking is when you become dull due to either developing a careless attitude toward ignorance, or you become outwardly active without deep inner experience that is acquired only with seeking. To become active without true experience is dangerous. With knowledge but without experience, you create nothing but chaos and a mess.

This story illustrates the point clearly:

Brahmā and Viṣṇu were seekers and went searching for Mahādeva's head and feet. Brahmā went upward, and Viṣṇu went downward, seeking. Viṣṇu continued his search tirelessly, but at one point, he felt tired and bored but it did not lead him to cunningness. He returned and admitted honestly: "No, I am not able to do it. Forget about it." He developed a don't-care attitude toward ignorance thinking, "It is okay, what can be done?"

On the other hand, Brahmā also could not find the truth of reaching Mahadeva's head. Instead of accepting it, he tried to be cunning with his knowledge. Without the experience of having reached Mahadeva's head, he resorted to deception. He engaged in avidyā, incomplete or distorted knowledge acquired for self-interest, characterized by impure perception of truth and consciousness.

When Brahmā became cunning, he did not simply admit failure. Instead, he chose to lie, claiming he reached Mahadeva's head by bringing a flower, claiming the flower was from Mahadeva's head. He fabricated false evidence, false rituals, corrupted or misleading practices and false techniques to support his false claims.

Never fall prey to those who claim they have designed techniques based on their own experience but which are not aligned with Āpta Pramāṇa (the words of the Ṛṣis). In Hindu tradition, you can design any technique, any permutation, and combination is allowed—but it must be in tune with the Vedas, the Āpta Pramāṇa. If it is not in tune with pramāṇas—Ṛṣis' Āpta Pramāṇas—do not accept it.

If you accept someone's technique from their own experience that is not aligned with the original Hindu tradition, it is false evidence, a false technique, a false ritual—just like Brahma bringing a flower as false evidence, claiming that he reached Mahādeva's head. These so-called techniques may help you gain a little peace or some health benefits, but they will not lead you to Enlightenment—the Ultimate. Enlightenment is an entirely different game. Do not become victims of Brahma with his false claims and false evidence. Instead, catch Mahādeva.

This verse describes two major problems a seeker faces when transforming their cognition to 'I am consciousness.' Look inward and face all the difficulties you encounter when shifting your cognition to recognize yourself as consciousness—Mahādeva, Śiva. Seek the context, try to experience the truth again and again. When you reach the context, you will understand what the Upaniṣads mean by this verse.

ततो भूय इव ते तमो य उ विद्यायाṁ रताः || ९ ||
andhaṁ tamaḥ praviśanti ye'vidyāmupāsate |
tato bhūya iva te tamo ya u vidyāyāṁ ratāḥ || 9 ||

Some of the major difficulties you will face during your seeking is defined and explained in this verse. Your mind will try to encourage you to become a false Guru. That is what the second part of the verse describes – 'engaged in avidyā, the incomplete knowledge, acquired for vested interests, characterized by the impure perception of truth and consciousness.'

The Subtle Spiritual Difficulties

अन्यद् एवाहुर् विद्यया-अन्यद् आहुर् अविद्यया |

anyad evāhur vidyayā-anyad āhur avidyayā |

The translation: 'It is said that by vidyā, the knowledge cognized from the right context of grasping the truth, consciousness and the superficial knowledge acquired from the wrong context of grabbing, without cognizing the innate subtle truth, achieve different results. Similarly, it is said that by avidyā, the authentic actions and the ignorant actions done without grasping the truth, consciousness, a very different result is achieved. Therefore we listen to those wise beings who have explained that absolute principle to us.'

This is one of the most subtle spiritual difficulties that human beings inevitably face at the higher stages of seeking. If one does not properly align their understanding at the initial stages itself, then at advanced levels of seeking the difficulties become far more intense. This precise problem faced by human beings at higher levels of spiritual pursuit is described in this verse.

If you are a साधक (sādhaka – seeker), by your very being, you will naturally understand all these challenges. If you do not experience these problems within yourself, you are not truly a seeker but merely an intellectual knowledge-junkie. An intellectual junkie wanders through bookshops, collecting a few books, and chews on those words here and there like a donkey. Being a time-pass reader or a casual thinker does not make you a seeker. In spiritual practice, there is never any passing the time; you only gain time. If you are merely a time-pass reader or an information collector, do not claim to be a seeker.

साधना (sādhana – spiritual seeking) never brings pain; rather, it adds depth to your being and strength to your very bones. True seeking blossoms even in the marrow of your bones.

A seeker will never suffer from tiredness or boredom. If you struggle with tiredness and boredom, it means you are not a Seeker but merely curious, an intellectual knowledge-junkie. Such a person only reads, follows, collects information, and analyzes for the sake of casual dinner-table discussions and not for authentic spiritual transformation.

Most people try to become intellectual for dinner table discussion, where you can establish you are something a little more than everyone else who is sitting at the dinner table with you. You establishing yourself a little more than everyone else who is sitting with you at the dinner table is not going to make you a seeker. A seeker is someone whose very bone marrow is after the truths of life. A seeker never loses focus or attention because his very bone marrow is vibrating with what he is seeking.

The Upaniṣads beautifully describe in this verse the very subtle problems faced by advanced seekers - problems that go beyond boredom and cunningness. In the pursuit of ultimate samādhi, there is no compromise. Even a great Incarnation like Śrī Ramakrishna had to cut through the very form of Kālī, whom he had worshipped his entire life, to go beyond. The truth is uncompromising, and that truth is samādhi.

The Upaniṣad in this verse explain the difficulties faced by those who take enlightenment as their sincere goal. Ordinary people do not encounter such challenges, because they are not true seekers. This teaching is intended for those who are deeply committed to attaining samādhi as the very purpose of life.

It is said that the vidyā (knowledge) cognized from the right context of grasping the truth, consciousness, and the superficial knowledge acquired from the wrong context of grabbing without understanding the innate subtle truth, lead to different results. Similarly, it is said that by avidyā, the authentic actions and the ignorant actions done without understanding consciousness, achieve very different results. Therefore, we listen to those wise beings who have explained that absolute principle to us.

Purva paksha refers to things that need to be done first—preparatory steps for enlightenment. This is a significant statement: When your body is dried of testosterone and estrogen hormones, your brain develops very subtle and powerful grooves where Super Consciousness can reflect in its purest form, without any delusion, manipulation, interpretation, or interference. The reflection is so pure and authentic, it is as good as the original.

The context of pūrva-pakṣa, the preparatory discipline is essential for the process of enlightenment. This does not mean that everyone must become a sannyāsī, a renunciate. However, when seeking becomes intense, when your entire body and mind align with seeking, the system naturally evolves. The body and mind rise to a state where hormonal influences reduce, and the brain develops subtle grooves that allow Super Consciousness to reflect with great clarity and power.

Without setting the right context of what needs to be done first, pūrva-pakṣa the preparatory discipline - if truths are merely cognized intellectually, you may gain some power, strength, or knowledge, but you will never attain enlightenment. Seeking must always go hand in hand with tapas, the intense spiritual practice. Tapas means living the truths you discover, executing the conclusions you reach, and making those cognitions an inseparable part of your reality.

Necessity of Having Deep Seeking Alive

The 10th verse of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad reminds us of the importance of keeping deep seeking alive. Vidyā is the knowledge cognized from the right context of the truth. Seeking is the fire that constantly helps you reinvent yourself. All the best things in life—good health, a positive self-image, the ability to do tyāga (sacrifice), the romance with life—emerge from sincere seeking. A good feeling about yourself is one of the greatest wealth, and that fire lives in you when you are established in seeking.

Even an Incarnation is established in seeking. Once Enlightenment happens, the mind disappears, and He realizes—'I am the Whole. I am the Cosmos.' But the Cosmos itself is not stagnant; it is constantly expanding. How can it expand if it doesn't have the seeking to become something more? So, the very expansion of the Cosmos is fueled by its seeking. Mind disappearing is called Enlightenment, but seeking never disappears. That is why Enlightenment is ultimate, not final.

Seeking Vs Pattern Compulsions

Giving in to your compulsory patterns is suffering. Making seeking the compelling form of existence is Enlightenment. Sometimes, tall words are necessary to convey tall philosophical truths. Giving in to your pattern compulsions is not freedom. Materialistic Western civilization teaches that yielding to your compulsions is freedom, but this is not true freedom, it becomes a bondage. They supply material for your compulsions and exploit you. Let seeking be the compelling reality and the first response to life.

Ask yourself: What am I? The answer constantly changes - sometimes good, sometimes bad, sometimes knowledgeable, sometimes ignorant. Do not ask 'Who am I?' because that question presumes you are a being. Instead, ask 'What am I?' There are many compulsions—social, family, political, economic—but the worst is pattern compulsion, which imprisons you. Life becomes worse than hell when caught in pattern compulsions. Seeking is the antidote for all pattern compulsions.

The Power of Places and Seeking

The places where you stay—your house, your office—are associated with strong patterns. Even if you try, certain patterns are deeply tied to these places. For example, when you sit on your bed, you may feel sleepy even if you don't want to sleep. Similarly, each place has its unique association with certain behaviors and patterns.

Vārāṇasī is associated with seeking. If you want to be out of your pattern compulsions, awaken the seeking in Vārāṇasī. Each place is associated with certain patterns because those patterns are enriched and encouraged. In Vārāṇasī, seeking is entertained, encouraged and enriched. That is why Śrī Ramakrishna says, 'I saw Vārāṇasī as a golden city. It is not built by just stone, brick, wood and mortar. It is built by intense seeking, prayers, the sacred sentiments of millions and millions and millions of enlightened beings and billions and billions of devotees, visitors and pilgrims.' Each stone in Vārāṇasī is one Enlightened Master's seeking. The mortar binding the stones is billions of devotees' seeking and prayers. Each place radiates a certain pattern. Vārāṇasī is all about seeking, seeking, seeking.

Constantly keep your seeking alive - "Who am I? What is it that I see all around me which I classify as the world?"

Before accepting any friend request on social media, you first check the profile. Similarly, before accepting the "friend request" from the world, look at its profile - what is it, and who made it?

Whenever you try to study someone's profile, however much information is given, it always looks insignificant. What can you truly know about a person based only on his date of birth? At most, you may guess his age and decide whether to send a namaste emblem or a love emblem. Even then, you cannot be sure if the date of birth is true or false. Yet, your mind quickly jumps to a conclusion and starts functioning with that little information.

Even as you move along with life, never forget that your information is too limited. You need to dig deeper, gather more knowledge, and expand your understanding. After receiving new information, being ready to change, reinvent, and re-strategize yourself - this is seeking.

Understand, materialistic civilization never allows you to sit back and look. If you are permitted to sit back and observe, you become dangerous - because you will discover its shallowness. Sitting back and looking is what is called unclutching, meditation, and seeking. When you sit back and look, ask yourself: What am I looking for? What am I looking at? Where am I looking? Am I looking in the right direction? These simple questions are enough to awaken seeking.

All the make-up of the world disappears when you sit back and look deeply. With full make-up, if you step out into the rain, the black runs into the white, the white smears into the black; dyed hair turns grey again, and the face painted fair becomes dark. This is merely an exchange of colors. In the same way, sitting back and looking reveals the reality beneath all superficial coverings. What you are truly seeking can never be delivered by those from whom you are seeking, nor from the places where you are seeking.

This is why the materialistic society, with its day-to-day routine, is constantly pushing you—never letting you sit back and look. It does not want you to see through the illusions it creates. The moment you sit back and reflect, you begin to realize that what you are chasing will never give you what you truly seek. True meditation and seeking come from the courage to pause, to unclutch, and to see the world for what it truly is.

Keeping Seeking Alive

Ramakrishna says again and again, 'Once in a while, you should withdraw from your office, house, everything. Sit back and look.' Every night you have to withdraw, sit back, and look at your whole life. Ask yourself: 'What am I? What am I looking for? Why am I looking for that? From whom am I looking for it? Am I going to get it?' Coming back to these basic questions is seeking.

You may be running at a certain speed with your materialistic needs, demands, fears, and greed, but retaining the capacity to reinvent and restrategize yourself based on the conclusions of your seeking is what keeps seeking alive. You might have established a business for twenty-five years, and suddenly your seeking tells you that it is not the right field.

Based on the conclusions you reach through your seeking, having the ability to change, reinvent, and restrategize yourself with something new is keeping seeking alive. Have the ability to be fluid, to be alive, to be a seeker. Understanding seeking and keeping the seeking alive is what the 10th verse of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad wants to remind us again and again.

Changing Due to Boredom vs. Seeking

Many people change jobs, change houses, change cars, change wives, change everything out of boredom. Reinventing and restrategizing due to the conclusions of your seeking is different from changing due to your boredom and compulsive patterns—giving in to your compulsive patterns. Changing due to your boredom leads you to a deeper and deeper hell. Reinventing and restrategizing due to your seeking leads you to Enlightenment.

Without the context of seeking, even renunciation can lead you into laziness. A lot of people talk as if they are renouncing just to justify their laziness, dumbness, and stupidity. Renunciation is not renouncing action. Firstly, you grow the grass, feed the cow, and milk the cow. Then you make curd with the milk. By churning the curd, you get butter. By boiling the butter, you make the ghee. Lastly, you offer the ghee to the Deity, Divine, God, or Guru. That is renunciation, sacrifice. Not growing the grass is not a sacrifice—that is boredom and tiredness. Many people don't even take the effort to grow the grass, and they start to say: 'Oh, everything is māyā.' Without understanding the context, even the greatest truth can be missed and misused.

Seeking—honest seeking, authentic seeking, being integrated to your seeking—is one of the most important alignments you need to do in your life every day. It is only through seeking that your being is kept at the highest peak of awareness. Keep the seeking alive. Let seeking become your first response to life. Let seeking be the source of inspiration for you to live. Let seeking be the energy to live. Let seeking be the intensity to live.

Importance of Seeking in Spiritual Practices

अन्यदेवाहुर्विद्यया अन्यदाहुरविद्यया ।

Without the context of seeking, the most subtle truths are never cognized. Cognizing the most subtle truths in the right context happens only by keeping your seeking alive. Deity worship, attending satsaṅgs, reading scripture, doing voluntary service, prāṇāyāma, yoga, spiritual practices—whatever you are doing should strengthen your seeking, should make you stronger as a seeker. The depth of your seeking should continuously increase. Never think that higher goals in life can be achieved without seeking. No, everything, including higher goals, is achieved only through seeking.

The Consequences of Losing Seeking

When you first hear the Guru's words with deep seeking, interest, and excitement, you enjoy it. You start internalizing many things and making them part of your life. Then, after some time, your seeking diminishes. You listen but take it for granted: 'Okay, ah... He talks like this only. It's okay, I have heard enough.' When you start taking the Guru's words for granted, you may listen to His satsaṅgs for years, but you create a huge iron wall around yourself. The Guru's words never penetrate and become part of you. With each word, you create a pain pattern of how not to allow that into yourself, how to keep it away because of previous failures, or because you think, 'He is great, but it is not going to work out for me.'

By developing these patterns and thought trends, when the seeking is lost, even if you live around the Master for years, listening to His satsaṅgs for years, nothing will change for you. You become dangerously untrainable and non-transformable.

Seeking is Re-strategizing and Reinventing Yourself with the Master's Words

Taking the Master's words for granted, not internalizing them, not aligning your life to them, not using the Master's words to reinvent and restrategize your life, is the worst thing that can happen to you. Other than the Master's words, there is no other anchor available on planet Earth. Anyone who has drowned in the ocean of saṃsāra—the ocean of delusion and bondage—has only one anchor to raise themselves to the next level: the Master's words.

From the other plane of existence, the only bridge available to this plane, this universe, is an Enlightened Master's words. If you do not catch that and raise yourself, nothing else can help you—no pūjā, no meditation, no spiritual practice. The highest spiritual practice is catching the Master's words and constantly reinventing and restrategizing yourself. Reinventing and restrategizing yourself is the only way. Restrategizing yourself with every word of the Master, reinventing yourself with every word of the Master—that is seeking. If your seeking is alive, you will keep reinventing yourself. You will raise yourself by yourself. You will be alive, active, brilliant, and energetic because seeking is the most powerful way you can exist and experience yourself.

Grasping vs. Grabbing the Truth

'It is said that by vidyā - knowledge cognized from the right context of grasping the truth, consciousness - and by superficial knowledge acquired from the wrong context of grabbing without cognizing the subtle truths, certainly a different result is achieved. Similarly, it is said that by avidyā - ignorant actions - a very different result is achieved. Thus have we listened to those wise beings who have explained that absolute principle to us.'

Constantly keeping your seeking alive makes you grasp the truth - you will not try to grab it. For example, you see somebody melting down, overflowing with devotion, offering a bilva leaf to Mahādeva, and being liberated. You see that and then decide: 'Yes, if I pluck that tree's leaf and put it on this statue, I will have liberation.' That is grabbing the truth. You are not grasping it, you are grabbing it. You only see the action; you don't see the context.

So, you see everyone sitting in the padmāsana posture and chanting 'Oṃ' and all the Ṛṣis are enlightened. Immediately you think: 'Let me sit and do "Aaahhh..."' That is only grabbing the truth, not grasping it.

Grasping means understanding the context. All the problems people face in life come from trying to grab, not from trying to grasp. If you grasp the truth, you will have the approach of love towards it. Don't have the approach of result towards the truth - 'Alright, this is what I want. You say I should sit and chant Oṃ. Okay, I will do it. How many hours do I have to do it?' It is not a bank account. You cannot chant twenty thousand times 'Śiva, Śiva, Śiva,' deposit it in the bank, and expect Mahādeva to appear and give you what you want.

Most of the time, people try only to grab by asking: 'Give me a set of rules, a standard instruction, and I will do it. If I can't do it, what should I do? Give me plan B, plan C.'

Religions that try to cater to the mind by grabbing the truth, without the patience to grasp it, only give a set of rules that evolve into socio-political cults. In Hinduism, even pleasures and luxuries are side-effects that happen while you are traveling toward Enlightenment.

Any tradition that puts anything other than Enlightenment as its priority is not a religion. Be very clear - it is a socio-political cult. All such cults cater to human beings who try to grab the truth, not grasp it. For grasping the truth, you need a completely different space where intense seeking becomes the first priority.

When you try to grasp the truth, you look in and say: 'Wow! How can this simple act of plucking a bilva leaf and offering it to a statue liberate him? Why is he so blissful? Why is he in ecstasy?' If you approach the happening with tremendous love, you will grasp the truth. You will understand that something beyond the action is happening. He has a different context altogether. He has higher possibilities opening up to him. The body may be plucking a leaf and placing it on the deity, but the context behind the action is something else. You will understand that only when you approach the happening with tremendous love to grasp it.

If you try to put everything in a frame and draw a conclusion, you will only grab it. One of the great Masters of modern times - Unjaji Maharaj, a follower of Sri Ramana - was asked: 'You say enlightened beings don't have karma. What about your body movements and all that?' Unjaji said: 'Who says I am moving? I am not.' They said: 'But you are talking to us.' He replied: 'No. Because you expect that I should be talking, you receive the response that I am talking. Otherwise, I am not doing anything.' He disowns the responsibility for the very action he is doing. By the very act of talking, he declares that he is not talking. And it is true. He is right, because the agitation that happens in you before you speak is not happening in him. So, if you approach his talking from the context of love and understanding, trying to grasp what is happening, you will realize he is not talking.

If you approach a Master without patience - trying to frame him into your mold, your frame, trying to grab him as you want - you will say: 'What is there? He is also doing everything like me.' You will only be grabbing the truth; you won't be grasping it.

Approaching the world, God, Guru, and yourself with tremendous love, patience, and the context of grasping the truth is seeking.

Approaching everything with tremendous love and patience, from the context of knowing the truth and wanting to know the truth, is grasping - seeking.

If you approach the truth with the mood of grabbing, framing, and reducing it to utility value, you are trying to make a frame out of life. Soon you will be tired and bored.

Approaching God, Guru, life, yourself – everything - with tremendous love and patience to know the context, to grasp the truth, is seeking.

Seeking means approaching yourself, God, the world, Guru – everything - with tremendous love, patience, and receptivity. Try to grasp what is happening in the world with patience and love. Don't try to frame it. Don't try to relate with agitation. With God, approach with tremendous love and patience. Don't approach with fear, greed, or agitation.

To Guru, approach with patience and love. Try to grasp what is, not try to grab or frame him. Even toward yourself, approach with patience. What you want to achieve, what you want to do, your plans and visions - as they are becoming real day by day, celebrate them. Approach yourself with love and patience, not with agitation or by taking yourself for granted.

Again and again, understanding the context and trying to grasp the subtlest truth of everything is seeking. Seeking means approaching everything with tremendous love and patience, trying to grasp the truth and its context - not grabbing without cognizing the subtle truth. Develop seeking and keep your seeking alive.

Reinvent yourself through seeking. Re-strategize yourself with seeking. That is the basic truth this verse from the Upaniṣad wants to describe.

Context is More Important than the Action

The sacred secret, the key truth from this verse: the context you set for yourself before entering into action or life is more important than your decision of entering or not entering into life, and what you do or don't do in life. The context you set before entering into life is more important than what you do or don't do in your life. If you set the context of bhakti (devotion), your travel becomes a pilgrimage, the food becomes prasād (food offered to the divine), water becomes tīrtha, ash becomes bhasma (holy ash), music becomes kīrtan, man becomes human. Setting the context is much more important than the action or omission of the action. Doing something or not doing something is not more important than the context.

All the rules and regulations of the outer world - whether simple traffic rules or the laws of the land - are based only on the actions performed, whether by commission or omission. This is because the outer world can understand only action, measure only action, and function only through action.

The deeper search for stability, certainty, and possibility is forgotten, for the outer world cannot grasp beyond action. For example, whether you walk on the left side or the right side, whether you walk at all or not - the law can only go that far. And that is not wrong.

What becomes wrong is when people grow fanatical and declare, "Only this much exists." Creating rules and regulations for day-to-day functioning - where we should walk, how we should drive, how we should live together - is not a problem. It is useful and necessary. But to claim that "there ends the matter of life, and nothing further exists" is a serious mistake.

There is something called day-to-day life and something called life-and-death life. What is conducive for your day-to-day life – walk on this path, drive in this direction, walk in this place. These are conducive for day-to-day life. When those who formed the day-to-day life's laws and rules try to dictate the larger truths or interfere in the field of larger truths – there starts confusion, ignorance, manipulation, and exploitation. There is no lane system among the planets. There is no lane system in life and death traffic. The context set for day-to-day life may not be sufficient for life-and-death life. When you are entering the street, you need to know traffic rules. When you are entering into life, you need to know the laws of life, the truths of living Enlightenment.

Set the context before you enter into life. Life has no remote control. You have to get up and change it. If you have the right understanding and context, so much activism will be there in you. Being alive, intensely active is one of the first qualifications for spiritual life.

One who has the right context in life for what he is doing, one who feels he has completed whatever he wants to do and complete within himself, one who is fulfilled within himself always feels he is living a long life. One who feels incomplete always feels death has come earlier and untimely. There is no such thing as untimely. Death can never come in an untimely way. It comes on time. It does not know something called untimely. It always comes on time. When you have the context of being fulfilled, content, complete, you will feel life has so much to offer. It is so rich, so vast. The person who feels life has so much to offer and life itself is so much more is wealthy. He lives a wealthy life. Once you feel complete, you will overflow with life and share it with the whole world. Actually, enriching happens only after you feel completely complete. You start supporting others. You start enriching others. You will enrich everyone's lives only when you feel fulfilled, completely complete.

The Love Current of Mahādeva

Setting the context of completion brings activism into your life. That activism is the first step for Living Advaita. Bring completion into your life. Bring pūrṇatva into your life. Only when you enter into the space of pūrṇatva, you experience the love current of Mahādeva. The love current of Mahādeva is one of the most important, most powerful, brilliant, intelligent, energetic, efficient, alive, ultimate experiences of life.

The love current of Mahādeva does not just give you energy. It makes you become Mahādeva. It transforms you into Mahādeva. The deepest realities of life, the unsaid deeper realities of life revealed to you by the love current of Mahādeva is what are siddhis (powers). Society thinks of them as miracle powers.

The love current of Mahādeva awakens the unknown possibilities of you in you without even giving you any technique. It is just the love current. What you think as you is not only not you, it is hiding and covering the real you from you. It is hiding and covering the real you from you. The love current of Mahādeva will expose the real you to you, which is hidden by what you think as you. The love current of Mahādeva shows you the real you to you, which is He. He alters your very DNA, alters your very space, alters the very you.

Suspect the Thought Current, Not Just Actions

विद्यां चाविद्यां च यस् तद् वेदोभयं सह |
अविद्यया मृत्युं तीर्त्वा विद्यामृतम् अश्नुते || ११ ||
vidyāṁ cāvidyāṁ ca yas tad vedobhayaṁ saha |
avidyayā mṛtyuṁ tīrtvā vidyāmṛtam aśnute || 11 ||

Translation: 'The one who cognizes the pure essence of these two – vidyā and avidyā simultaneously, that is knowing the true and complete knowledge of consciousness and doing the actions from the sacred cognition of consciousness; thereby through avidyā crosses over and transcends death and through vidyā experiences and celebrates the nectar of immortality and bliss, the eternal space of Oneness with consciousness.'

Recognizing the karma pattern and thought current in which you are stuck by deciding to liberate yourself from that thought current is vidyā. Recognizing karma pattern and thought current in which you are stuck and breaking from it by having a breakthrough from that thought current is vidyā. Your decision to change yourself and have a breakthrough in your thought current is basically required to have any breakthrough and liberated thinking.

Understand some of these basic truths. If you have a thought current which can cause some health issues, be informed that the thought current can never give you fulfillment in wealth. It can never lead you to Enlightenment also. It cannot give you completion in any field of your life. If you are working towards Enlightenment, if a thought current is bringing sickness to you, it will not be able to bring you to completion. It means the thought current which you are entertaining will bring difficulties not just in one field but in every field. So, by repairing the thought current is not going to help, only by replacing it will help.

When you have a problem, do not suspect just your actions, but suspect the very you, your very thought current and idea about you. Suspect that very you, because change, transformation, reinventing, having a breakthrough from karma pattern – all this is easy and doable by a simple decision to suspect your very thought current.

Most of us go on suspecting our actions – 'I think in the morning I did not practice yoga, that is why I am sick.' 'I think because I did not go to the office in time, that is why I am not earning.' 'I think I am not making the right decisions in my office, that is why I am not earning.' All this is suspecting your actions. No. That is not going to solve the issue. That is not going to give you a breakthrough. Suspect the very cognition about you itself. Early in the morning being unable to get up and practice yoga means you have deep cognition that it is not possible for you. It doesn't look like 'me, me, me.' It looks like somebody else, not me.

The man who can doubt his own thought current will go beyond self-doubt. Actually the Ultimate, the Self should never be doubted. It is Self-effulgent. Whatever you can doubt – your self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial (SDHD) is all about your thought currents. You should doubt your thought current which is creating SDHDs in you, and complete that SDHD (self-doubt, self-hatred, and self-denial).

Do not be confused by the words. The thought current which you are having about you, the cognition you carry about you, that is what you celebrate as you even though it is not you. What you celebrate as you, that needs to be doubted. The completion needs to happen for you to drop that doubt from very Self which you cognize as you. If you are not able to get up early in the morning and practice yoga, it is a very simple problem. You are not able to run your life unless you get your morning tea or coffee. You are not able to relax unless you take out your stress on someone else. It may look like a very simple issue. But the simple issue cannot be healed, completed just by you attending to some of your actions. No. Don't think that being unable to get up in the morning problem will be solved if you learn to become active in the early morning. No. It is not that people who do not sleep in the early morning are enlightened beings. No. You need to dig it out and complete that very pattern of why you are not able to get up. Why are you doing what you are doing? Partially attending or looking into your problems will never solve the issue. The very thought current needs to be renounced.

If you are having a headache, be informed that it will not just resonate in your head, it will resonate till the end of your life, wealth, relationship with others, contentment, everything, because it is the thought current. One of the most paradoxical things in life is whenever you need to attend the Whole, you attend the part. Whenever you need to attend the part, you attend the Whole. It is very unfortunate. The very thought current with which you operate needs to be replaced. The very thought current needs to be renounced.

If you are entertaining the thought current you don't have enough energy to wake up in the morning, even if you have billions of dollars, you will be constantly cognizing that you don't have enough money to do what you want. You do not know the power of accumulating money and having it. You will consider them as zeros and continue to feel poor. The man who feels active about himself will always feel rich. The man who feels stagnant about himself will always feel poor. Feeling stuck internally is the real poverty.

Feeling Stuck

Unless you decide to give a breakthrough to yourself by breaking from your karma pattern, completion can never happen. Fulfillment can only happen when you break from the karma pattern. A person who is stagnant, who feels stuck with the basic issues of the body, even if he owns and has billions of dollars under his disposal, he will not feel wealthy or rich. How you feel about you decides your fulfillment and completion. If you are stuck in your health or in any other pattern, that feeling stuck gives you a deep sense of poverty, the feeling of being deprived, life is not fair and it is exploiting you.

Sometimes, just because of skin color, people feel life is not fair because life has not given them fairness. The madness for fairness that occupied the slaves in India during the colonial period is still continuing. The day this stupidity and obsession with fairness stops, that will be the true day of independence for India. We still worship and glorify fair skin. We are taught that fair people will not lie. Just look into your life. Unconsciously you go on believing that fair people will not cheat, lie, and are not bad.

Renounce everything the British forced on you, only then will you find your true identity.

Oh Bharat, renounce the karma pattern forced on you by the British, only then you will have a breakthrough. India's obsession with fair skin: in 2010, the whitening cream market was $432 million dollars. It is increasing 20% each year. 233 tons of skin whitening products are sold in India. India spends more money on whitening products than on Coca-Cola. Actually, it is the country's karma pattern due to slavery. As long as you don't give up on this whitening attitude and idea, you won't get out of slavery. Till the last tube of whitening cream is thrown out of Bharat, Bharat will continue to be a slave. This idea of fair skin indoctrinated into the common man has created a lot of suffering.

Until you decide to liberate yourself from this karma pattern or the thought current that life is not fair and feel stuck, completion is not possible. The good news is, you can get out of this karma pattern and you can break this karma pattern now. The great news is, all it takes is just a decision. Your karma pattern itself is a decision taken by you, so all it takes is your decision to undo it. Karma is nothing but the wrong decisions you took, so just deciding to make the right decisions will make it happen.

People who are able to break the karma pattern always get new people, situations, understanding, and the right things to celebrate life and to fulfill themselves. In the same way, people who cannot break their karma pattern internally will only escape from an external situation like running away and disappearing. They will never get out of karma. It follows them wherever they go. Before they go, the karma is sitting there. If your fortune is coming by train, your misfortune is coming by telegram. If you don't break the karma pattern internally and just try to break it externally, then wherever you go, your karma pattern is already sitting there with the pūrṇakumbha (sacred pot) to receive you. "Come, come, I am waiting for you only. Where are you escaping to?"

Unless you decide to give yourself a breakthrough by breaking free from your karma pattern, completion can never happen. Fulfillment can only occur when you break from the karma pattern.

A person who is stagnant, stuck with the basic issues of the body - even if he owns billions of dollars - will not feel truly wealthy or rich. How you feel about yourself determines your fulfillment and completion. If you are caught in health issues or any other pattern, that 'feeling stuck' creates a deep sense of poverty: the feeling of being deprived, exploited, and that life is unfair.

Sometimes, just because of skin color, people feel life is not fair because life has not given them "fairness." We still worship and glorify fair skin. We are taught that fair people will not lie. But look into your life - unconsciously, you keep believing that fair people will not cheat, lie, or be bad. Until you decide to liberate yourself from this karma pattern - the thought-current that life is unfair and you are stuck - completion is not possible. The good news is: you can break this pattern now. The great news is: all it takes is a decision.

Your karma pattern itself is a decision you once made, so all it takes is your decision to undo it. Karma is nothing but wrong decisions you took. Deciding to make the right decisions will break it.

Those who break their karma pattern attract new people, new situations, new understandings, and the right circumstances to celebrate life and fulfill themselves. But those who cannot break their karma pattern internally will only try to escape externally - running away or disappearing. They will never be free, because karma follows them wherever they go.

If your fortune is coming by train, your misfortune is already arriving by telegram. If you don't break the karma pattern internally and only try to change it externally, wherever you arrive, your karma will already be there waiting saying: "Come, come, I was waiting for you. Where can you escape?"

Breaking from the Cycle of Feeling Stuck

Breaking from the cycle of feeling stuck is the very essence of this verse. Vidyā means recognizing the thought current in which you are trapped and breaking free from it. You need only one thing: a strong, pure, and ferocious decision to reinvent yourself.

Understand these three words - strong, pure, and ferocious. You cannot be gentle with yourself when it comes to breaking patterns. One of the most foolish ways of functioning is being ferocious with others but gentle with yourself. It should be the opposite. Be ferocious with yourself to reinvent yourself, and gentle with others.

Let the Master be ferocious with others - that is His job, not yours. Your job is to be ferocious with yourself, to build the will to renounce the karma pattern. Only then will you break the cycle of constant suffering that comes from thinking in one direction but acting in another.

This is what is called vāsanā - going on imagining that you are responsible while never moving an inch in that direction. If you constantly dump responsibility on others, you will live in poverty and powerlessness, surrounded only by ghosts of your own avoidance. A responsible person lives in reality; one who shirks responsibility lives in illusion.

If you master the "science" of thinking in one direction while living in another, no one can save you. This is the worst pattern a human being can fall into. Even inaction is a form of action. Karma cannot be repaired - it must be renounced. It cannot be polished or adjusted - it must be dropped.

That is vidyā: to cognize the thought current in which you are stuck, and to make a ferocious decision to drop it and reinvent yourself.

You Worship What You Cherish as Goal

अन्यद्-एवाहुः सम्भवाद् अन्यद्-आहुर्-असम्भवात् |
इति शुश्रुम धीराणां ये नस्तद् विचचक्षिरे || १३ ||
anyad-evāhuḥ sambhavād anyad-āhur-asambhavāt |
iti śuśruma dhīrāṇāṁ ye nastad vicacakṣire || 13 ||

Translation: 'It is said that from the worship of the imperishable consciousness, the cause of manifestation (sambhavāt) certainly a different result is attained. And it is said that from the worship of the manifested, perishable entities (asambhavāt) such as Gods, spirits, ancestors, a very different result is attained – thus we have heard the revelation from those wise beings who explained that absolute principle to us.'

What is it that should be your goal?What is it that should be worshipped? What should be the ultimate object you cherish? These questions are being analyzed and answered in this verse. Worship does not mean just bowing down for a few minutes, offering ārati, or placing food before a deity.

Worship means whatever you constantly remember as your highest possibility, your sense of completion, and your ultimate fulfillment. If you think money will fulfill you, then money alone is what you are truly worshipping. Even if you worship a deity like Lakṣmī, if your intent is only money, then you are actually worshipping money - not Lakṣmī. If Lakṣmī suddenly decides, "I will not dispense money anymore," your worship would stop. The same applies to Sarasvatī and knowledge. If your worship is only for knowledge, you are in truth worshipping knowledge, not Sarasvatī.

Sri Ramana Maharishi beautifully said: "It is very difficult to feel spirituality or the social consciousness required for fulfillment, because most of us never become sensitive enough to perceive the ultimate truth as it is."

Our perception is limited: "If I am healthy, I am complete." If I have wealth, I am complete." "If I have freedom, I am complete." Even this much awareness itself is the beginning of spiritual awakening. But to ripen into full maturity takes many lifetimes. After a hundred lives chasing wealth, you realize it is not your better half. After a few hundred lives of having power and position, you realize these will not lead to completion.

Hormone-driven relationships are such where you realize after few thousand lifetimes that lust and attachment cannot bring completion. A matured soul is one whose body may be filled with hormones, but whose mind remains stable, not deviated by hormonal pressure. Until that maturity comes, worship - even of God - remains tainted by hidden agendas: wealth, power, lust, security.

The Upaniṣad is not moralizing. It simply reminds you: whatever you worship, you will attain that. Worship wealth annd you will be tortured by greed. Worship lust and you will live in the self-created hell of unfulfillment, because lust convinces you in advance that "it will never be enough." This is a self-destructive mechanism.

Therefore, the Upaniṣad asks you to look in and discover: What are you truly worshipping? Is it money? Is it power, name, and fame? Or is it Enlightenment, the conscious awakening itself? The very act of looking in evolves your perception.

The Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad does not deal with vidhi-niṣedha (do's and don'ts). It is not here to declare what is "right" or "wrong." Instead, it does something greater: It simply reminds you of reality. It reminds you of the highest truth.

The looking in itself will evolve your perception. Evolving the perception is all that this verse will expect to cause in you - evolving what you perceive about life, evolving what you perceive as life, evolving what you feel as life, evolving what you experience as your fulfillment.

Nowhere Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad is ready to tell you what is right and what is wrong, but it very clearly reminds you about the truth.

Expanding Your Perception

Expand your perception. Even if you build your body with yoga, what is the use? You may live 200 years. There are monkeys living 500 years. There are tortoises living 500 years. There are trees living 1000 years. What is the use of it? The number of years you live, breathe is not the goal of yoga or Hindu tradition. Purification of perception, expansion of perception is the essence of Hindu tradition. Expansion of perception is the essence of Sanātana Hindu Dharma. Upaniṣads are not saying: 'Don't worship something lower or something higher.' No! They are not indicating the do's and don'ts. That's the job of Smṛti. Upaniṣads are not giving any vidhi-niṣedha (the do's and don'ts). It is gently reminding you of the law of existence, the law of Cosmos only.

'It is said that from the worship of the imperishable consciousness, the cause of manifestation, certainly a different result is attained. And it is said that from the worship of the manifested, perishable entities, a very different result is attained. Thus we have heard the revelation from those wise beings who explained that absolute principle to us.'

With expansion of perception – yoga strengthens your body. Completion expands your perception. Bring completion to your perception. More and more you complete with all the incompletions, the more and more your perception will expand. The perception expands with the melting down of your incompletions. With that, the kuṇḍalinī awakens, enlightenment and powers express because of enlightenment.

All the powers are flavors of enlightenment. Awaken the need for conscious fulfillment in you. Awaken your larger perception about life. You will see kuṇḍalini awakening happens. You will see life is celebrated. You will see enlightenment become your reality. You will see clearly what Upaniṣad is trying to declare through this verse.

इति शुश्रुम धीराणां ये नस्तद् विचचक्षिरे || १३ ||
anyad-evāhuḥ sambhavād anyad-āhur-asambhavāt |
iti śuśruma dhīrāṇāṁ ye nastad vicacakṣire || 13 ||

It will just become reality for you. Make this as your experience. Make this as your reality. Make this as part of you. Make this as you. This is the nectar (amṛta).

A happening that can give perceptual change is Kumbh Mela. The place that can give perceptual change is Vārāṇasī. The person who can give that perceptual change is an Incarnation (Avatar). Bringing your lower perceptions and expanding them into higher perception is breaking your karma pattern. Naturally you start cherishing, worshipping the imperishable consciousness, not the perishable entities.

Recognizing the Imperishable and Avoiding the Perishable

सम्ब्ःउतिं च विनाशं च यस्तद् वेदोभयं सह |
विनाशेन मृत्युं तीर्त्वा सम्भूत्यामृतम् अश्नुते || १४ ||
sambḥutiṁ ca vināśaṁ ca yastad vedobhayaṁ saha |
vināśena mṛtyuṁ tīrtvā sambhūtyāmṛtam aśnute || 14 ||

Translation: 'One who cognizes the pure essence of these both – the imperishable consciousness, the cause of manifestation (sambhavāt) and the destructible (vināśam), the perishable, manifested entities, simultaneously such a person completes with the fear of death and transcends death by worshipping or by knowledge of the imperishable entities, and reaches the imperishable consciousness and celebrates the nectar of immortality and bliss, the eternal space of Oneness.'

Cognizing and understanding what is imperishable, what gives you the experience of the eternal space of Oneness, and what is perishable is crucial. However pleasant the perishable may look, appear, or feel, never choose the perishable, because its appearance of pleasantness is merely its marketing department, not the reality.

No matter how pleasant and sweet something may seem, never choose perishable, inauthentic entities. Whether it is a person, an attitude, or a thinking style, do not choose inauthenticity. What you choose internally, what you cherish internally, what you strongly cognize as important or as the center of your life - if it is perishable and inauthentic - it will go on adding fear and inauthenticity into you. Just as drinking venom is absorbed into the body as poison, entertaining perishable entities, impermanent ideas, or concepts will naturally turn into poison within your system. Don't carry anything inside your cognition that is inauthentic or perishable.

To be energetic, you don't need to eat the entire day. Constant snacking is not the food for true energy or health. To be healthy, just one or two meals of vegetarian and uncooked sattvic food are enough. Similarly, to be enlightened, you don't even need to engage in spiritual activities throughout the day. Instead, awaken the right cognitions internally by installing and invoking them.

If you invoke the truths internally within your being, they will create peace in you eternally. The deeper level of the Cosmic consciousness is peace and Sadāśiva. This verse will help you experience that deeper level of the Cosmos, which is eternal peace and Sadāśiva. This verse will make you experience the deeper level of the Cosmos which is eternal peace and Sadāśiva.

Sit with yourself and cognize which of your ambitions are perishable and inauthentic and which conscious manifestations are imperishable and authentic. Don't be afraid if you suddenly discover that there is nothing authentic in you—that everything is just perishable and inauthentic. Everything being inauthentic is not wrong; however, living without recognizing this truth is wrong.

Even if you recognize that everything you know internally is inauthentic and perishable, don't worry. This recognition itself is enough. Just drop the whole thing—drop everything you have discovered as perishable and inauthentic. There is nothing wrong with doing so. You may wonder, "How will I run my life? What will I hold on to?" Don't worry about that. You do not need to hold on to anything in your life. Life is independent of your thinking and cognition. It is an independent intelligence that will start expressing itself when you drop all the inauthentic cognitions.

When you drop all the inauthentic cognitions, the imperishable starts expressing itself in your thinking, actions, behaviors, responses, speech, and walking. In every way, the expression of Sadāśiva begins to happen. When you recognize all the inauthentic components of yourself, they will melt away, and the authentic, imperishable aspects will begin to manifest. That manifestation is living Enlightenment, living Advaita, Śivoham.

Each expression of the Śivoham experience is either a power or an experience—a spiritual experience or a spiritual power. The manifesting cause of sambhavāt is sambhava, the cause of happening. The source of happening is the Master. The source of happening is being reproduced within each of you as multiple powers and multiple experiences in every possible way.

Celebrate the imperishable. Celebrate the eternal. Cognize what is imperishable and what is perishable. What is destructible? What is indestructible? When you start recognizing the inauthentic perishable and the authentic imperishable within yourself, you will complete with the fear of death and transcend it. Then, there is no more death for you. The eternal space of Oneness becomes your reality—amṛtam aśnute. The Upaniṣad says: "Nectar of immortality and bliss."

Understanding the inauthentic perishable parts of you and your ambition is vital. Your ambition defines you. In your ambition, identify what is inauthentic and perishable versus what is authentic and imperishable. As you recognize this, the inauthentic and perishable will naturally leave your system, and your whole being will be centered on the imperishable and authentic. The more time, energy, and inner space you waste on the perishable and inauthentic in your lifetime, the more you will be working towards suffering, mṛtyu (death). On the other hand, as you purify yourself towards the authentic and imperishable, you move towards amṛta (immortality) and Enlightenment—the nectar of bliss, the eternal space of Oneness. Move more and more towards authentic identity. Move more and more towards the space of Sadāśiva, sambhava. Become more and more authentic. Become more and more imperishable. Recognize the authentic and imperishable aspects of your ambitions, and let go of the perishable and inauthentic.

Find Out What You are Worshipping

'One who cognizes the pure essence of these both – the imperishable consciousness, the cause of manifestation and the destructible, the perishable, manifested entities, simultaneously – such a person completes with the fear of death and transcends death by worshipping or by knowledge of the perishable entities; and reaches the imperishable consciousness; celebrates the nectar of immortality and bliss, the eternal space of Oneness.'

The central question of this verse is: What are you worshipping in your life? Worship here does not merely mean bowing down, offering ārati, or ritual prayers.

Worship means what you constantly hold in your mind as the highest possibility, what you believe will complete you, and what you make the center of your life. If you bow before Lord Śiva only for money, you are in truth worshipping money, not Śiva. If you worship Sarasvatī only for knowledge, you are worshipping knowledge, not Sarasvatī. If you have no goal at all and are simply dragging on in life, you are worshipping confusion and darkness.

Some people even worship confusion itself - whatever solution is offered, they immediately find a new problem. This is nothing but worship of stagnation, inaction, and the status quo. Being stuck without moving in any direction in life is hell, and it is nothing but the worship of confusion.

The Upaniṣad declares: "Whatever you think is your goal, whatever you hold as the essence of your life - that is what you worship." For some, this goal is money. For some, it is pleasure, name, or fame. For others, it is mere confusion.

The real question is: how much of you worships the perishable, and how much of you worships the imperishable? A part of you may desire money, recognition, or pleasure, while another part may feel: "This cannot be the end. I want something eternal, something that cannot be taken away." This balance decides the very direction of your life - whether you live as a householder (Gṛhastha) or as a renunciate (Sannyāsī).

Buddha once said: "If my Sannyāsīs inspire the imperishable truth within the Gṛhastas, then what I want will happen. If the Gṛhastas inspire the Sannyāsīs about the perishable, then it will happen as they want."

Imperishable is the bone structure of the Cosmic Law. When your inner infrastructure is built on imperishable truths, you can never collapse. When it is built on the perishable, you can never stand firm - you become like a beanbag wearing jeans, flesh without bones. The decision to worship the imperishable gives you true inner strength. Rooting your thinking in the imperishable is what it means to truly grow up.

Death is the question that can never be answered. Life is the answer that can never be questioned. The truth of death rests upon the imperishable. If you build your life upon the imperishable, death does not happen to you as you understand it. If you build life upon the perishable, life never happens to you as you want it.

Let your life therefore be built on the imperishable in every decision - whether career, relationship, or goal - ask yourself: "Will this express my imperishable nature? Will this strengthen my eternal self?" Any profession can be lived in the context of the imperishable. A doctor, an engineer, or a lawyer can root their work in the space of imperishable consciousness. Living from this context is what the Upaniṣad calls Living Enlightenment. To learn this is Completion. To align with it is Authenticity. To remember it is Responsibility.

Every day, when you apply bhasma, sacred ash, let it remind you that everything external is perishable. Internally too, recognizing the perishable aspects of yourself helps you hold onto the imperishable within. Do not fear that if you start working with the imperishable, you will lose your family, job, or wealth. The only thing you will lose is suffering, nothing else. When your logic is purified by the imperishable and your inner being greased with it, all conflicts, frictions, and sufferings will melt away.

At some point you must stop and contemplate: are you moving from the perishable or from the imperishable? What is driving you? What are you truly worshipping? Even in marriage, even in career, pause and ask: "How can I express my imperishableness here?" Let your decisions, words, and actions be rooted in the truths of the imperishable. This alone is authenticity. This alone is strength. This alone is freedom.

The Upaniṣad is not telling you what is right or wrong. It is not giving you a list of do's and don'ts. It is simply reminding you of reality: Whatever you worship, you will attain. If you worship the perishable, you inherit fear and death. If you worship the imperishable, you celebrate immortality and bliss.

Confusion - The Worst Perishable

Confusion is the worst kind of perishable. Even if you chase after pleasure, you may occasionally experience pleasure mixed with disappointment. But if you pursue confusion, it is akin to suicide—not just physical suicide but mental and spiritual suicide.

If you are worshipping confusion, you are essentially worshipping ghostly fantasies. These ghostly fantasies take two forms: lust and fear. Either your lustful fantasies become stronger than your ability to engage with reality, or your fear-driven fantasies overpower your ability to deal with reality. When these fantasies become extreme, you may think, "Even if I work hard, I can only earn 10 crore in a year, but I want 10,000 crore." You become paralyzed by lustful greed—stuck and unable to move forward. Similarly, fear-driven fantasies can paralyze you, leading you to think, "What if I fail no matter what I do?" These fears paralyze your reality and prevent you from functioning, leading to a state of being stuck. Worshipping confusion means remaining in this cycle of paralysis.

Whenever you feel stuck, look inward and raise yourself by breaking free from the fantasies that hold you—whether they are fantasies of lust or fear. Even if you live with a Guru but do not break free from your worship of confusion, you will remain trapped in confusion, life after life. You may even reach a point where you commit suicide, only to be reborn and plan suicide again. You could take another body, grow up, and cultivate a strong pattern that encourages you to end your life. By the age of thirty, you may find enough reasons to consider suicide. This cycle of birth, death, and self-destruction will keep repeating. Life becomes an ongoing attempt to justify why you should not live. Similarly, lustful fantasies that are unrealistic and impractical will paralyze you, leaving you stuck in confusion and repeatedly returning to square one.

Analyse What You Worship

Analyze what you are thinking and what drives you. What are you worshipping? What is at the center of your heart? Paint it—but do not paint Śiva without understanding why you are worshipping Him. True devotion and a genuine feeling connection are different from gambling devotion. When you truly connect with the divine, you are showered with what you need. However, when you make your relationship with the divine a game of chance, it is not genuine devotion.

If your mind is built on the perishable, it will remain logical, constrained, and limited. If your mind is built on the imperishable, your life will be magical. Whether you want a logical life or a magical life, the choice is yours.

Agitational Gratification Vs Delayed Gratification

In the Āgamas, Mahādeva describes the essence of true taste: if your entire tongue and mouth experience the flavor, that is real taste. This experience cannot happen with food that provides only the pleasure of agitational gratification. Highly spicy or junk food prevents your whole mouth from experiencing the essence. If you look deeper, you'll notice that after consuming junk food, within 3–4 minutes you feel depressed, tired, bored, and want to sleep. This is agitational gratification.

Whether it is through the eyes, ears, nose, tongue, or touch - agitational gratification will always be short-term and limited by a narrow vision. If you live only for these fleeting pleasures, you won't even have a vision for your own lifespan of 100 years.

The more you expand your cognition about your life, the better your strategies for living will become. If you think you are going to live for 100 years, you will know from the beginning how to maintain your stomach, body, and mind. If you are intelligent enough to understand that it is not just 100 years, but cycles of birth and death, then you will know how to handle everything.

If you approach your existence in a short-sighted way, you will run after agitational gratification - seeking whatever excites or agitates you now, even by hook or crook. The very word pleasure has different meanings for different people. If you think you are going to live for 100 years, meat or non-vegetarian food can never become part of your diet, because those types of food agitate you in order to gratify you. By agitating you, anything can bring a shallow sense of gratification. Such pleasure is low-level because your cognition about yourself is low, and therefore your cognition about pleasure is also low.

If you think your life span and existence extend beyond this one life, then your understanding of pleasure will transform. Until you are enlightened, birth and death cycles will continue. With this vision, you will know what pleasure truly is and what pain is. Having such a larger and clearer vision about yourself automatically aligns all your actions. What you consider pain or pleasure, good or bad - everything shifts as your cognition evolves.

A common man usually thinks of life as only the 20–25 healthy years in which he can enjoy so-called pleasures. By the time he is 25, he has little money and freedom. By the time he is 50, everything is over. If you consider only those 25 years as life, and plan only around them, that is a very short vision. All your strategies about yourself and your life will then be "vināśam ca" - destructible, because they are based on what is destructible. If you build a house with bamboo concrete that lasts only 20 years, how can you expect your fourth generation to live in it?

If you look closely, all short-term goals fall under agitational gratification - they agitate you and then gratify you. Even laziness works like this: the way you breathe and wake up early in the morning decides the quality of your entire day.

Understand these two words deeply: "agitational gratification" and "delayed gratification." When you think you exist only for 20–25 years, you will always choose agitational gratification.

If you know you have 100 years, your pleasures and pains will transform. If you understand you have many births and deaths ahead, your ideas about pleasure and pain will evolve even further. Then your life will not be hormonally hijacked. Hormones hijacking your life is one of the worst things that can happen - because even before you open your eyes to reality, your life is over.

Anything that pushes you into agitational gratification is a mental setup based on the perishable. Worshipping the perishable means you are bound to perish. You are actually planning your own destruction. Then why cry when destruction happens? You asked for it, worked for it, and chose it. If you work only for name and fame, you will get them - but you will also perish with them. If you work only for money, you will get it - but you will perish with it. If you build life on the perishable, you will perish.

Agitational gratification can happen through food, sound, visuals, smell, touch, imagination, or the mind - the totality of the five senses. If that is your goal because you perceive it as pleasure, know that you are worshipping the perishable and are bound to be destroyed.

But if you function from the principle of delayed gratification, with a long-term vision of yourself, of pleasure, and of pain, then you gain the right understanding of life. The quality of your food, the music you enjoy, the visuals you see, the fragrances you prefer, and even the touch you celebrate - all will transform when rooted in delayed gratification.

Whenever you experience pleasure, look in and ask: Am I agitated or peaceful? Are you grasping or grabbing? Grasping is love; grabbing is lust. The difference is simple. When you taste food, listen to music, enjoy a fragrance, or engage in touch - even in sex - observe: are you celebrating peacefully, or is agitation pushing you? If it is agitation, know clearly that you are aligning with agitational gratification - and you are planning your own destruction. When you perish, don't cry. You asked for it.

When your understanding matures, your taste matures. Then you begin to strategize your life and cognize yourself based on the imperishable. There is no shortcut. Either you choose the perishable or the imperishable.

Do not be cheated by the Lite Theologians. (Not "Light," but "Lite.") These Lite Theologians are cheats who keep people in delusion. They give false hope and wrong interpretations of life to sell their entertainment circus tickets. They do not care for your life or your future. For them, if a few thousand more tickets are sold, that is enough. They will tell you, "Don't think too seriously," because they themselves never think seriously. How can such people know love? What will they know about love if they cognize themselves only as perishable beings?

A drunkard may dance, and Mahādeva may also dance, but the two are completely different. The drunkard's dance is like the Lite Theologian's delusion. Mahādeva's dance is rooted in imperishable cognition, strategizing His existence based on the eternal. Cognizing yourself as imperishable and strategizing your life accordingly is the only way to exist and become imperishable.

Your cognition about yourself should be based on the imperishable soul, the consciousness that never perishes. Build your life on this foundation. From this cognition, develop your sense of right and wrong, good and bad, pain and pleasure. Do not build and strategize your life based on perishable identity - otherwise all your pleasures will be nothing more than scratching yourself with different objects, people, or body parts. Scratching is not pleasure - it is only agitational gratification.

Let your cognition and strategies for life be based on the imperishable. Then you will be imperishable - akṣara. Blessed are those who live from delayed gratification, for they live in the imperishable. Cursed are those who choose agitational gratification, for they align with perishing.

Look in. Do not be afraid to restrategize and reinvent your life. It is never too late. Even if you are going to die in the next 15 minutes - or in 15 years, 50 years, or 1500 years - it is not too late. Always turn back towards the imperishable. Do not let hormones hijack your consciousness. Do not let agitation be the decision-maker of your life.

Go on and on living with imperishable cognition. Then you will worship the imperishable, not confusion. You will worship the eternal, not the perishable. That is what the Upaniṣads declare - worshipping imperishable consciousness is choosing immortality. Understand the difference between these two. What are you worshipping? Don't be cheated by Lite Theologians. Sanātana Dharma suffers more from Lite Theologians than from any other religion's critics.

Necessity and Power of Seeking

'The Truthful, Effulgent, Eternal Being is the ultimate sustainer, nourisher and protector of all that exists! You are the embodiment of the imperishable Truth and Reality. Your Divine face of Truth is concealed by the blinding dazzling upturned pot, which has golden orb of effulgence. This radiant golden pot conceals your glorious face of truth from my view. O Pūṣan, O Sun, O Complete One, do reveal Yourself by removing that glaring veil, for I, on the path of Truth, am eager to have your Divine vision.'

First, we need to understand the context, the key ideas, and the sacred secrets which the Upaniṣadic Masters are revealing through this verse. The entire verse describes the necessity and power of seeking. Seeking is not what we commonly call religion or spirituality.

Much of religion and spirituality, as it is practiced, is businesslike - filled with bargaining, gambling, and silent negotiations. Sometimes this bargaining is based on the crude ideas of heaven and hell. At other times it hides in subtler forms, like love and hatred, or the feeling of being connected or rejected. But all of this is still negotiation. Seeking does not fall into any of these categories.

Seeking is your core's innermost suffocation realizing it needs to expand. It is your being's innermost decision to be free. Seeking means your deepest self deciding not to continue with the status quo. Status quo means living with the fantasy that someday, something will fall from the sky and suddenly align your life. This is fallible fantasy. Vision, on the other hand, is infallible.

When you take responsibility for your visualization, it becomes vision. When you avoid responsibility for your thoughts, it remains only fantasy. Much of what happens inside you is this endless play of fantasy, but the danger is when you elevate it into a religion. Fantasy can serve as entertainment, but it cannot serve as the foundation of life. Trying to build your life on fantasy is like trying to construct a building on a fiberglass pillar - it may look polished, but it cannot bear weight. At best, it can be decoration; at worst, it leads you into collapse. Yet people go on cherishing fantasy after fantasy, imagining that one day, from somewhere, something will fall into their laps and suddenly everything will be alright. This waiting, this clinging to fantasy, is status quo living - a refusal to act, a refusal to transform, a refusal to seek.

In the status quo life, you forget that you even have the power to make decisions. You begin to read, see, and understand more from your brain than from reality itself. That is why the mistakes you make while reading a newspaper, a magazine are often so striking - you don't actually read from the page, you read from your brain. Only after the second or third glance do you suddenly realize: "Oh! This is what it really says. But I thought it was something else!"

The same happens with seeing. Even when your eyes are open, you don't truly see the object before you; you see the projections of your brain. This is the prison of status quo living - being trapped in the cobweb of thinking, a suffocating karmic pattern, a mental loop that disconnects you from reality itself.

Seeking is the decision to melt and reinvent yourself. It is the greatest blessing - greater even than God's grace, greater even than Enlightenment. Why? Because Enlightenment is the culmination - there is no "separate joy" once you are That. But seeking is the honeymoon, the glorious space where you are alive with the fire to melt, to transform, and to expand.

Life, for an ordinary human being, is nothing but a slow freezing. From birth to death, he is hijacked - hijacked by his own hormones. At birth, he takes off with infinite possibility, but within moments hormones put a knife to his throat and command, "Fly as I say, and land where I want." From that moment, he is no longer the pilot - he is a prisoner. When the hormones finally declare, "Land here," the runway is death. This so-called "normal life" is nothing but a hormonal hijack. Falling in love only keeps you trapped, but rising in love sets you free. Only in the fire of seeking do you rise in love with the highest possibility. And the moment seeking awakens, your very bio-memory begins to reinvent itself, bringing you back to life -alive, awake, and free.

If you fall in love with something physical, you only alter your physique. You may start going to the gym, change your haircut, your hairstyle, your dress, even your skin color. But when you fall in love with the Superconscious, you awaken the ability to change your very consciousness itself.

Falling in love with the Superconscious is not just romance - it is seeking. It is awakening the power to reinvent and reorganize your very bio-memory and core consciousness. Whatever you feel connected to, you begin to adjust yourself to that. When you fall in love with the Superconscious, you awaken your bio-memory and intelligence to reshape not just your body, but your being. Seeking is nothing but the ability to reinvent your bio-memory, to reorganize your very consciousness, to transform the core of who you are.

When you begin to seek higher possibilities, your body is rearranged, your mind reorganized, your intellect reinvented, your bio-memory rejuvenated, and your consciousness re-cognized. When you re-cognize yourself, naturally you recognize yourself - and the world recognizes you as well.

This is the sacred secret the 15th verse of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad expresses:

"The Truthful, Effulgent, Eternal Being is the ultimate sustainer, nourisher and protector of all that exists! You are the embodiment of the imperishable Truth and Reality. Your Divine face of Truth is concealed by the blinding dazzling upturned pot, which has a golden orb of effulgence. This radiant golden pot conceals your glorious face of Truth from my view. O Pūṣan, O Sun, O Complete One, do reveal Yourself by removing that glaring veil, for I, on the path of Truth, am eager to have Your Divine vision."

The moment man began seeking, he looked up. In that glance, he knew there is something beyond imagination, beyond him. Looking up was the first act of seeking.He saw the Sun, and he knew: the Sun is a symbol. Beyond the Sun is the Truth.That is why Hindus are not mere nature worshippers.We don't stop with the elements.We worship nature, the force hidden behind nature, and the Reality that is beyond all nature.

The Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis prayed: "Please, O Pūṣan, O Sun, O Complete One, remove this glaring veil." They understood that even light itself can be a veil. Not only darkness hides the Truth - even dazzling glare can conceal it. This is the clarity of the ancient seers: to recognize that Truth must shine without veils.

Origins of Seeking

Maybe this is the voice of the first seeker on the planet Earth. This is the emotion described by the first seeker on the planet Earth, or this is the path traveled by the first seeker on the planet Earth. The first apex body of Hinduism – Ānanda Akhāḍā follows Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad and worships the Sun as their Guru. It is based on this verse. This is the oldest Upaniṣad. Ānanda Akhāḍā is the oldest pīṭha (the spiritual seat). This is the oldest expression.

The Truthful, Effulgent, Eternal Being is the ultimate sustainer, nourisher and protector of all that exists. You are the embodiment of imperishable Truth and Reality. Your Divine face of Truth is concealed by the blinding dazzling upturned pot.

When you fall in love, your capacity to reinvent yourself is awakened in you. Same way, when you fall for seeking, the capacity to reinvent your very core consciousness gets awakened in you. If your teacher says, 'Wake up early in the morning at 7 o'clock and start studying for the examination,' you won't do it. But when you fall for seeking, you will be up and alive at 3 o'clock in the morning reading Upaniṣads, doing Yoga, meditating. What puppy love can do to you, seeking can do the same thing to your consciousness, not just your body and mind. The energy which you radiate in your body and mind in puppy love, you will radiate tons of it in your core consciousness in seeking.

Miracles of Seeking

When the seeking is awakened in you, even you will be surprised about you. Your very understanding about you will become different when the seeking is awakened in you. You become so serene, so graceful, so alive, so light and ready to take off. You are no longer a hard stone. You just become one with the thin air and ready to go higher and higher and higher and higher. Seeking makes you lite and light!

In seeking, you can do everything that is possible for human beings to do. You can remove your kidney, wash it and put it back. You can remove the intestine, clean it and put it back. You can remove the heart, pump a little energy into it and put it back. If you can do that, how easy it will be for you to maintain your health. You get exactly that capacity related to your consciousness in seeking. You just know which part needs to be corrected, completed, cleansed, altered and awakened. Seeking awakens that potential in you. Not just cleansing your liver or kidney or intestine, but the source energy of your liver, kidney and intestine. Seeking just intoxicates you with the ultimate truth. Nothing else is needed. When you are intoxicated with the ultimate truth, nothing else is needed. Life in its fullest form is experienced.

The moment seeking starts, you wake up to Cosmos. How every morning you wake up to this world, same way when the seeking starts, you wake up to the Cosmos, the higher energy. It is the spirit of seeking that keeps the highest possibility available to human beings. The spirit of seeking is much more than Enlightenment itself. It is much more than anything which can be said and cannot be said.

Necessity of Purity of Seeking

To fully grasp the meaning of this verse, several key points must be understood. The origin of seeking lies in the Sarasvatī-Ganges civilization. Seeking began there - when it awakened, how did that civilization respond? How did they react? How did they express when seeking awakened in them?

The first truth to recognize is that we worship nature, but we are not merely nature worshippers. We are natural worshippers. The Upaniṣads make this distinction very clear. From the very first Upaniṣad, the Ṛṣi demonstrates profound maturity. The Ṛṣi does not simply say, "Oh Sun, bless me." Instead, he prays, "Oh energy behind the Sun, veiled by the brilliance we see, please reveal yourself." He clearly acknowledges, "Your shining face conceals Your original truth, Please remove it and reveal your real essence".

Even the glaring Sun could not mesmerize the Ṛṣis or divert them from their pursuit of the ultimate truth. In front of the brilliant Sun, they proclaimed, "No! You may be radiant, but you are only a veil. There is something beyond you, and we seek that. Let that be revealed."

Seeking beyond darkness, to find what lies beyond, is not extraordinary—it is natural. One always wants to see beyond darkness and avoid being stuck in it. But to look beyond a powerful light and ask, "What is the reality behind this light, as there is something more?" reveals the depth of the Ṛṣis' pursuit. Their seeking was so profound that nothing could distract, manipulate, misguide, or dilute it—not even something shining gloriously, "hiraṇmayena pātreṇa," radiating like golden light.

Actually the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis are beautifully describing their seeking. When they started seeking, one of the impressive things was the Sun in the sky. But they did not stop with the Sun. They started looking for what is behind the Sun which is making it radiant. The need to keep your seeking pure is emphasized in this verse. The power of seeking and the need to keep that seeking pure is the essence conveyed here.

हिरण्मयेन पात्रेण सत्यस्यापिहितं मुखं |
तत् त्वं पूषन्न्-अपावृणु सत्य-धर्माय दृष्टये || १५ ||
hiraṇmayena pātreṇa satyasyāpihitaṁ mukhaṁ |
tat tvaṁ pūṣann-apāvṛṇu satya-dharmāya dṛṣṭaye || 15 ||

The beauty is, he is praying to the same Sun – 'Oh Sun, your glory is veiling. Please remove that glaring veil and reveal yourself.' They know there is something glorious and something beyond this glory. The Ṛṣis wanted what was beyond glory. They are not lost in the glory itself. They are not lost in the shining skin. They are not lost in that shining and glaring effulgence. They are not lost in the golden orb of effulgence. They are not ready to be lost or satisfied with any form, name, glory, or powers. They are digging deep. They are looking deep. They are going to the next level. They are going into the source, the origin.

The real danger in your life is when you get cozy with the powers and glories of your life or the life you appreciate. You should explore the energy behind this glory, whether it is in your life or the life you appreciate.

There is so much suffering, sadness, and everything else, so when you find some peace, glory, and joy, you will always want to settle down in that very space. But settling down may dull your seeking. It may take away the seeking from you, which the Ṛṣis are not going to allow. Seeking should continue forever and ever and ever. It should become just your breathing style and lifestyle. It should just become part of you and your very core.

Seeking Beyond Glory

On the path of truth, even the most glaring veil is still a veil. However dazzling it may appear, a veil remains a veil. If you have traveled the path of seeking, you will understand what the Ṛṣis are revealing and what these great Masters are expressing. Seeking should be the first, foremost, and last quality a person develops - a constant pursuit of the ultimate truth. Whether you take up a job, build a career, or get married - in every decision, action, and step of your life - seeking should be the first priority.

When you get married, seek the truth of the relationship - how this relationship completes both you and the other person. What are the details, the nuts and bolts, of fulfillment or completion that the other is seeking in you, and you in them? Explore this - that is marriage.

In your career, explore what your employer is trying to complete through you and what you are trying to complete through them. With your customers, ask: What are they seeking to complete through me? How can I become complete through them? How can they enrich me, and how can I enrich them? When you approach life this way, you will discover tremendous integrity and authenticity in all your dealings.

When seeking becomes the source of inspiration in your business, career, or relationships, integrity and authenticity will radiate naturally - without even being practiced. If authenticity is awakened, even within a relationship, you are greater than any sannyāsī. If authenticity is not invoked, even as a so-called sannyāsī, you are worse than someone with multiple attachments.

It is the presence and depth of authenticity that defines you - not the number of relationships, businesses, or jobs you hold. You can be free, active, working, resting, making money, or spending it the whole day - nothing is inherently right or wrong. What matters is your authenticity - the ability to radiate it in relationships, business, career, or any part of life.

When seeking is awakened, your ability to radiate authenticity, the joy of living authentically, and the way you hold your family, team, and life will flourish. You will become authentic, integrated, and responsible without needing effort or practice. It is like the ultimate, conscious acid wash. You will be active day and night, producing results beyond imagination, continuously radiating energy that awakens others. Seeking not only awakens you - it awakens everyone around you.

The First Prayer: The Power of Seeking

This is the first prayer uttered on the planet Earth because this is the first Upaniṣad uttered on the planet Earth. So, this is the first prayer uttered on the planet Earth—seeking! The joy of seeking is expressed in this one verse. Actually, seeking, when it expresses through your head, comes out as knowledge to you. When it expresses through your heart, it comes out as devotion to you. When it expresses through your being, it comes out as energy. Whether it is knowledge, devotion, or energy, the source material is seeking.

Seeking is the way the God in you awakens. Early in the morning, when you remember yourself in the waking state, that is how you are awakened from the dream state. There is a dreamer version of you and a waking version of you. When you remember the waking you, the dreaming you merges into the waking you. You then wake up and move towards the waking state. This is a very important truth.

In the waking state, you exist as somebody. In the dream state, you exist as somebody else. The moment you remember the waking you, the dream version wakes up. It is the waking state person entering the dream and removing the dream person, causing you to wake up. In the same way, God, who is the supreme awakened being, enters into the waking state of you and moves you into that state. This process is called seeking.

This is your everyday experience which you can understand. You have four states—deep sleep, dream state, waking state, and awakened state. The awakened state of you entering into the waking state of you and awakening you is seeking. If you have started seeking, be very clear, God has graced you. He has showered His grace on you. Now, the train is going to stop only when you achieve your goal, not before that—Mumukṣutva. Śaṅkara says, "Awakening of seeking in a human being is one of the greatest and rarest things that can happen." Seeking fulfills everything you seek and beyond. It awakens the truth in you. It awakens the possibility in you.

Different Styles of Awakening

Seeking is the finest expression of God in human beings. When God expresses, you may express many qualities, including Third Eye power. But these powers are nothing compared to the expression of Mahādeva radiating in you. Every power is God expressing through you, but the finest, subtlest, greatest power and experience God can express through you is seeking, because He reminds His nature to you and makes you into Him.

When you are tired of dreaming - or when you can no longer handle the dream - you will decide to wake up. If it becomes a nightmare or turns into a fantasy too sweet to bear, you will wake up. The same is true in the waking state. When life is expressed too harshly or too sweetly, awakening happens. Expressing it too harshly and awakening is the lifestyle of renunciation. Expressing it too sweetly and awakening is the lifestyle of devotion.

In the dream state, if you see two tigers or two snakes chasing you, and the fear becomes unbearable, you wake up. In the same way, if you experience the perfect fantasy - being in the exact place with the person you've always longed for - you will suddenly wake up. If it is too sweet, you wake up. If it is too harsh, you wake up. Dreams can only be sustained in the space of struggle - not in extremes.

Similarly, in the waking state, if there is extreme sweetness or extreme harshness, you will wake up. As long as you live in the struggle between the two - between greed and fear, between pleasure and pain - you continue to sustain the waking state. But if either extreme takes over completely, the illusion breaks. Everything is over.

Allowing the lifestyle of extreme harshness and awakening is the lifestyle of renunciation—a Naga or an Aghori. Those who allow extreme sweetness and then awaken follow the lifestyle of devotion—a Śaivite. Using both processes to awaken is the lifestyle of a Nithyanandite. Whether it is a nightmare or a fantasy dream, you will wake up. Neither fantasy dreams nor nightmares will let you continue to sleep. Similarly, neither extreme harshness nor extreme sweetness will help you maintain your waking state. They will lead to awakening.

Cooperating with Life for Awakening

Whether life itself brings harshness or sweetness to awaken you—you will be wasting a lot of time. You voluntarily getting into that state, cooperating for your awakening, is what I call seeking. It is not that every night you wake up with a nightmare or fantasy dream; many nights you wake up because you are simply too tired.

In your life, it is not always possible to experience extreme harshness or extreme pleasantness all the time. Creating either extreme harshness in reality or extreme pleasantness leads to your awakening. Cooperating with life to create these extremes is what seeking truly is. With the concept of Śiva, you can make every moment of your life extremely pleasant.

The Impact of Self-Doubt, Self-Hatred, and Self-Denial

Your self-doubt, self-hatred, and self-denial will never allow you to experience extreme harshness or extreme pleasantness. When you encounter pleasantness, you doubt it: "No, no, no, this cannot be permanent or eternal." When you face harshness, you build up hope: "No, no, I will get out of it. I will have pleasantness and joy one day." The hope prevents you from going through extreme harshness, while doubt stops you from embracing extreme pleasantness. When you don't allow either experience and continue to indulge in your struggling state of incompletion, you only maintain your ordinary waking state.

Confusion as the Foundation of the Waking State

Sleep is the base material out of which dreams can be dreamt. Confusion is the base material out of which the waking state can be perceived. Only when you are in a state of sleep can you dream. Similarly, only when you are in a state of confusion can you perceive this waking state. That is why confusion becomes a very precious investment for you—one of the most precious investments! Do not let confusion become your most precious investment.

In every step, every line, every inch of your life, if confusion becomes your basic stand, your foundation, imagine the amount of time you are wasting and the energy you are destroying.

This is a beautiful verse in the Taittirīya Upaniṣad.

आनन्दो ब्रह्मेति व्यजानात् (३.६)
ānando brahmeti vyajānāt (3.6)

Bliss is God, don't waste it.

You may think – 'What do they mean by don't waste it?' Don't waste it by attributing it to your confusion. If you think confusion is bliss and maintain the stand that confusion is bliss, you are wasting your life, destroying your life. You are wasting and destroying bliss.

Your day-to-day habits get recorded in your muscle memory. Your lifestyle patterns like what you feel about you, all that gets recorded in your bio memory. Cleaning up your muscle memory can be done by building good habits. Cleaning up your bio memory like what you feel about you consciously can be done only by awakening the seeking.

Ferociousness of Seeking

Seeking leads you either into extreme pleasantness or extreme harshness of reality. Whether you find yourself completing your individual existence or expanding it into Cosmic existence, both paths lead to awakening. If your individual existence merges into Cosmic existence through devotion, it is called Upāsanā. If your individual existence becomes nothing by allowing Cosmic existence to take over, it is called Vipassanā. In both extremes, you are awakened. Whether it is Upāsanā or Vipassanā, you will experience awakening. Don't continue to dwell in confusion; otherwise, you will remain in this dilemma - the waking state. Dilemma destroys your dignity and takes away your self-respect.

Understand the last fifteen verses of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad. The essence lies in one word: "seeking." Make an intense decision to seek. The ferociousness of seeking is powerful, like the fire of Kālabhairava that burns away everything that needs to be destroyed. The ferociousness of seeking is powerful enough to burn away laziness, tiredness, and boredom - anything that needs to be removed from within you can be burned and cleared by seeking. How long would it take for negativity to disappear in front of Kālabhairava's ferociousness? Not even a micromillisecond! In the same way, seeking - deciding to seek your true home, a place of eternal rest, eternal peace, and eternal bliss—is powerful enough to give you the freedom to reorganize yourself.

Imagine you have ten rods made of copper, and you need to create a deity of Śiva by tying the rods together and carving here and there. You will never achieve the desired deity that way. Instead, melt the rods and pour them into a mold, and you will have the deity of Śiva. In the same way, self-development will never lead you to the realization of the self. The term "self-development" is a misnomer—the self cannot be developed; it must be discarded. What can be developed is the mind. When people speak of "self-development," they are merely referring to mind development.

The greatest ability you must develop - your very first priority - is the ability to reorganize yourself. Seeking and Living Enlightenment are not about "developing" yourself, but about reorganizing yourself.

What is development? Suppose today you have enough compassion to donate ten rupees to charity. Tomorrow, you give twenty. The next day, thirty. Gradually, you build more compassion and love - that is development. But reorganizing is different. It means changing your very cognition. Until now, your charity may have been done with a self-centered attitude - "me, me, me!" That is a wrong cognition. From today, your actions must arise from the truth of enriching others. That shift in cognition is seeking. That is real transformation.

Seeking gives you the energy to melt yourself and mold yourself as you desire. Seeking means changing your cognition about yourself, the world, and God. Everything must be aligned with reality. Nothing else should take priority—seeking is the first priority. From morning until night, examine the ideas that drive you. Are they ideas of pleasure, pain, right and wrong, self-respect, or self-denial? Are all of them aligned with reality? If not, align them with reality, that's all! That's what seeking is about. Again and again, from the moment you wake up until the moment you fall asleep, see that everything is aligned with reality, Oneness, and the purpose of eternal bliss.

Morning and Night Practice for Seeking

Make this a lifestyle. When you wake up early in the morning, don't jump out of bed immediately. Instead, sit or lean back and look around. In a relaxed manner, ask yourself: "Where was I? Where am I now? Where am I going to enter? What is happening?" Ask these questions as if it is the first day you are waking up. Because, in a way, every day is the first day—you wake up in a different space each time. Spend a few minutes pondering these basic questions: "Where was I? Where am I now? Where am I heading as soon as I get out of this bed?"

The same reflection should occur before you fall asleep. Avoid the distraction of television or the "idiot box." Instead, spend a little time sitting or lying on your bed, contemplating: "Are the things that drive me aligned with reality?" Just take a moment to align everything.

Keeping the Seeking Alive

Mahādeva gives only two instructions to an Incarnation or a Jīvanmukta. If the Incarnation is sitting in some remote corner of the Himalayas, away from society, the only command is: keep the body comfortable and healthy. If he is working with people, helping them live enlightenment, the command is: keep the seeking alive in disciples. These are the only two instructions - maintain the body, and maintain the fire of seeking.

Every morning, spend time asking yourself: Where am I heading? Are my thoughts and actions aligned with the truth of life? What happens after death? Will I exist when this body stops? Where have I come from? Keep these questions alive until experience becomes realization.

For some, the Guru's answer resonates so deeply that their heart rests completely satisfied. Then, live that answer - that is Living Enlightenment. If your Guru says, "After death, you will be with me in Kailāsa," and this strikes your being as truth, drop the question and live the answer. If your Guru says, "You will merge with the Cosmos," and it resonates in you, live that. But if the answer does not reverberate in you, do not drop the question. Hold onto it - there is nothing wrong. Eventually, Guru-bhakti will ripen, and the answer will become truth in you.

Dropping the question before the answer becomes alive in you leads only to boredom. That is what I call sannyās middle-age boredom. For householders it comes by forty-five; for sannyāsīs, by thirty. Magazines that promise to make midlife "exciting" with tips and tricks - romantic dinners, candles, flowers - cannot solve this. They decorate the cage, but they do not free the bird. Only seeking infuses real life. No medicine, no therapy, no psychiatric industry can do what seeking does.

After fifteen years of marriage, or five years of sannyās, middle-age crisis strikes. In both cases, the cure is the same: seeking. A sannyāsī is blessed - he does not need to drag bogies behind him; he can soar like a jet. A householder has to keep pulling bogie number two, three, and four - children, parents, responsibilities. That is the difference in energy.

Whether you face a householder crisis, a sannyās crisis, or the most dangerous of all - an identity crisis - the only solution is seeking. The identity crisis comes when one is neither committed to gṛhasta nor to sannyās, drifting like a vagabond, following whoever speaks last. That rootless life is confusion, not seeking.

So decide. If you are not married, do not get married - take sannyās. If you are married, at least choose a seeker as your partner, so when you rise, they rise with you. Living with a non-seeker is worse than hell - it is hell itself.

Facing the Questions of Life

Whatever makes you feel powerless is a fundamental question you are unable to face. That is the seed of seeking. Whatever makes you feel powerless is the question you cannot face; deciding to confront those questions is seeking. Whatever makes you powerless - "What will happen after death?" "Will I be alone when I die?" "On my deathbed, can I endure all the pain?" "If poverty suddenly strikes or I lose something or someone, what will happen?" - are the kinds of questions that make you powerless.

If you decide not to face them, you push yourself into delusion again and again. If you decide to face them, that is seeking. Return to the basic questions of life: What is life? What is death? Before you assumed this body, what did your face look like? After this body stops functioning, how will you exist and face that? These are the basic questions of life. Simply because you pushed them under the carpet does not mean they disappear. And just because these questions have been asked many times - by others or by yourself - do not assume you know the answers.

Sometimes because we are familiar with some problems, we assume that we have found the solution for that problem. No! Being familiar with that problem does not mean you found the solution for that problem. Being familiar with the problem for quite a long time due to familiarity and assuming you know the solution for that problem is delusion. Just because you have known a question for the last twenty-five years, you assume you know the solution is delusion. Or if you push it under the carpet, you think – 'Ah tsk! Arrey, this question Ramaṇa Maharṣi has spoken about it. I read it when I was a seven year old boy.' Familiarity with the problem should not give you the delusion you know the solution. When you are all alone in your bed and not sleeping, ask these questions to yourself – 'If death comes tonight, am I prepared to face it? What is life? What is it that gives me such a strong confidence that I am not going to die, and I am going to exist eternally?' I am not saying your belief about you existing eternally is a lie. No. There is a component in you which is eternally going to exist. Unfortunately, you do not associate yourself with that component permanently. You are going to exist eternally, but please decide to associate yourself with that permanently. It is like just by the smell of the fish, you imagine you ate the fish. Just by having the confidence which is the smell of eternal consciousness, you start deluding yourself you experienced the eternal consciousness. Smell is not eating. Sometimes if you plan to eat just for the sake of taste, not because of hunger, even if you enjoy the smell of the hotel, you will feel like you ate already. You will not feel like eating.

Seeking has the Power to Lead You to the Experience

There is a part of you which never dies and is eternally alive – your consciousness, your bio energy. There is part of you which dies. Unfortunately, you associate yourself with the part which dies, and you draw the confidence from the part which does not die. It is like by just smelling food, you feel that you have eaten and you are fulfilled. Smell can never fill your stomach. Only if you eat, it can fill your stomach. Same way, just having the confidence of bio energy that you are never going to die, will not make you enlightened or solve the issue once and for all. The confidence of bio energy you are never going to die will be there till your nail gets broken or you face a small fracture. A hairline crack is enough to take away your confidence that you are eternal and not going to die, that confidence is only the smell of your bio energy, not the experience of your bio energy. Making it as an experience or deciding to make it as an experience is what is seeking.

Just nurture the desire to experience that space strongly, and the fear of whether you will experience it or not will dissolve. In that very moment, you will experience the space. Seeking is powerful enough to merge the seeker into that which is sought. Whatever you are seeking, hold it deeply within you. It is intelligent enough to break the fear of whether you will achieve it or not and to lead you into the very space you are seeking. This is the Master key.

Seeking is powerful enough to make the seeker merge with what is sought. You do not need anything else, nor do you need to worry or entertain fears like, "Will I achieve what I am seeking?" Your seeking is complete and powerful enough to place you in the very space you are seeking external support since it is inherently intelligent to make you experience what you are seeking.

There is a word, "dvandva vighna." It means that anything you start doing, you fail to continue by the second or third day. For example: you begin Haṭha Yoga with great excitement and inspiration on the first day, but by the second day, you are already practicing Jada Yoga!

This dvandva vighna arises from thoughts such as: "It may be impractical for me." "I may not be capable enough." "How will I know I am going to achieve it?" "I don't think this is going to work for me. Maybe it works for him, but not for me." Doubt and the idea of impossibility create dvandva vighna which is faced by most of you. You may not know the word, but you certainly know the experience. Look within, and you will see that dvandva vighna has been your closest companion.

When Dwanda Vigna is taken away, you will experience so much excitement and joy making the whole path seem very short. The path is long only when you create hurdles for yourself.

From the food you eat, if you produce only energy, life is exciting. But if you start producing gas, life becomes tiring. Similarly, if from your thought currents you produce only energy and excitement, then sādhana is always great, exciting, enjoyable, and beautiful. But from the same thought currents, if you repeatedly produce impossibility and SDHD, then spiritual practice becomes tiresome.

"Who knows what is happening?" "Who knows what is true?" "What is wrong and what is right?" "Will I have it? Will I get it?" "Maybe it worked for him in those days when his body was without toxins. But now, who knows? My body is full of toxins - will the same process work for me?"

You will have a thousand such foolish questions that convince you it is not possible - at least not for you. That is dvandva vighna. By the second day, it is over - a break-up happens, with your spiritual practice..

It is like this: if you fight with your girlfriend and do not pick up her calls for one night, she may break up with you 40 times, and yet return to you the 41st time. If she is very emotional, she may break up 80 times! But if you are smiling, it still clicks and your smiling, That is exactly how you deal with spiritual practice. You create a thousand doubts that make you feel it is impossible. For three or four days you may stay convinced, but then suddenly you feel, "This is not for me." Over.

Your seeking is powerful enough to make you experience the space you are seeking. With that confidence, you will simply start realizing every technique given to you without killing the seed. The moment you decide – 'No question of impossibility. My seeking is powerful enough to make me experience the space I am seeking without any external support and intelligent input. I do not need any intel help or mental help. I can achieve it.' This one click will make your sādhana exciting, inspiring and there will be no impossibilities. You will go forward and straight ahead.

If this one truth clicks with you, you will not have any other worries in life. Consider yourself liberated and enlightened already, because this one click is so powerful, it destroys any obstacle cooked up by you or inserted into you by your spouse. Even your spouse cannot take away your confidence.

Some people find a problem for every solution. Just as the Guru has a solution for every problem, Your seeking is powerful enough to bring you whatever you are seeking; it is independent of any external help or support. Your seeking can make you experience the space you seek. Meditate on this one truth. If it resonates with you, that is enough. Any question about the universe that you cannot yet perceive - God, Self, and Nature (prakṛiti), can provoke and invoke seeking in you. Delve deeply into that question, and decide to align your life with the answer you discover.

Having deep questions is seeking. Going into the answers is courage. Aligning your life to those answers by dropping the unnecessary is vairāgya. Don't worry about courage or vairāgya now - invoke seeking, that is enough. Seeking itself is intelligent and powerful enough to lead you into the space you seek. With this clarity, stop pushing life's basic questions under the carpet. Face them, even if they make you feel powerless. Rekindle that fire of seeking in your life.

Decide that any truths your Master utters and if it clicks with you, start living them. Align your thinking and lifestyle to that truth even when your seeking becomes intense. For example: you are thinking about death. If you are thinking on your own and trying to find out what will happen, that is also seeking. Your Master says, 'Once you die, you will be with me in Kailāsa, don't worry.' If that answer clicks with you and you start aligning yourself, thinking, cherishing and enjoying that answer, planning for that space in your inner space, that will intensify your seeking.

Either seeking on your own or through the answers your Master gave – cherishing, entertaining, enjoying, enriching and encouraging them in your system will intensify your seeking. Then naturally you will start thinking – 'How will Kailash look? Will I have a western toilet or eastern toilet there? Will I have pain and pleasure or only pleasure and no pain or only pain and no pleasure?' Even if these are the questions, it will invoke seeking in you. 'Then how or what is the best way which I can prepare myself to go there? Should I be slim so that I can be flown there immediately? Should I become a heavy weight so that I can be carried by Nandi? What will be the transport? How should I be?' Even though these questions look very playful but when you sit and talk it out internally within you, they will all start provoking many internal corners of you which you have not attended. Many internal corners of you which you have not attended will be provoked. That is what is seeking. That will just melt you. That will bring intensity in you. You will not be inauthentic in any of your actions. Before doing every action, you will ask yourself, 'Is this going to intensify my seeking and help me to reach where I want to go?' Intensify the seeking. Authenticity means all your actions are aligned to seeking.

Look and meditate on this one truth – your seeking is independently intelligent and capable enough to make you experience what you are seeking without any external help, support, assistance or whatsoever. Meditate on this. Let this one truth click with you.

Seeking – The Grand Narrative of Hinduism

Seeking reorganizes, rejuvenates your inner image. It beautifully evolves a very powerful inner image, very powerful outer image and very powerful life image. Living with people whose seeking is awakened is Kailayai, Tiru Kailai and that is Kailāsa. Living with those whose seeking is awakened is Kailāsa. Create more and more people whose pratyagātma caitanya (individual consciousness), inner image is aligned to seeking, whose inner image is grown out of seeking.

Seeking is the Hindu grand narrative.

First, you need to catch the word 'grand narrative.' It means every civilization has a collective identity. Sometimes it is artificially created with integrity and sometimes it is artificially created without integrity. Please understand artificially created with integrity and artificially created without integrity. For example: Kṛṣṇa is a grand narrative. ISKCON has created it beautifully with integrity. They have worked properly with integrity to create in a very organized way Kṛṣṇa as a grand narrative for their organization.

Grand narrative is the collective inner image each civilization creates and adopts as their own grand narrative. Sometimes the grand narratives just evolve spontaneously and are followed. Sometimes the grand narratives are organized, propagated and followed. Spontaneously evolved grand narrative is Shirdi Sai Baba's grand narrative. With no organized effort, the grand narrative just started spontaneously and it has spread all over the world as the Shirdi Sai movement. Bhagavān Svāmināràyan's grand narrative was created with integrity and in an organized way. Grand narrative of Kṛṣṇa as per ISKCON is done in an organized way. Whatever ISKCON declares and claims about Kṛṣṇa is completely true, including their idea of He is the Supreme. Anyone who experiences the ultimate through a window, he feels his window is also Supreme. If you see the sky through the window, by and by you will feel that the window frame is also the sky. Through any window you experience the sky, you are given the freedom to declare that window as Supreme. You are not given freedom to say 'there is no other window.' But you are given the freedom to say 'that window is the most Supreme.' As that freedom is already available in Hindu tradition and they declare that Kṛṣṇa is God, the ultimate God, they are integrated. Only they do not have a right to say 'there is no other door.' They are not saying there is no other door. They are saying, 'Kṛṣṇa is the Supreme Door.' That is perfectly alright.

In Hindu tradition, we are very clear, in the level of praising and promoting, exclusivity is allowed. Only you do not have the right to deny that there is no other possibility. Hindu tradition does not give that right and does not accept that. Hindu tradition is very clear that you have no right to say 'no other door exists,' or 'no other possibility exists.' You have no right to say that there is no other supreme possibility. Many supreme superlative degrees one can add, or the infinity of superlatives that one can add for their Iṣṭa (one's chosen deity); that is the beauty of our Hindu tradition. So with that organized integrity, the grand narratives of ISKCON and Bhagavān Svāmināràyan movement were created.

Each civilization has their own grand narratives. Based on each generation's vested interest, they evolve, develop, alter, expand, shrink and edit their own grand narratives. You need to understand this. Fighters can use Kṛṣṇa as a grand narrative from a different context. A lover can use Kṛṣṇa as a grand narrative from a different context. So, different contexts are set as the requirement of the time. The living visionaries of the society in the field of spirituality or politics, like the decision makers and rulers, will evolve their own grand narratives. Then the grand narratives that exist in the society are also altered and given a different context.

For example: Jñānasambandar is the grand narrative of whole Śaivism in Tamil Nadu. In course of time and during each era, people have given a different context to Jñānasambandar's grand narrative. At some point, his devotion was the grand narrative because he demonstrated courage and strength of his devotion. So the same way, Jñānasambandar's grand narrative is celebrated from a different context.

Sanātana Hindu Dharma has multiple grand narratives. Each of the sampradāyas in Sanātana Hindu Dharma is independent, complete and equipped to make an individual enlightened. Each sampradāya in Sanātana Hindu Dharma is completely equipped with its own grand narrative, technique and method. Actually, you cannot call Hinduism a religion not because it lacks something; every sampradāya of Hinduism is a religion. In the West, what you define as a religion and all that they have, each tradition of Hinduism has all of that too; it is an Encyclopedia of Religions. All major countries have their own grand narrative. All major civilizations have their own grand narrative based on their needs in each era. Some grand narratives are built with integrity and some are built without integrity.

Even atheists in Tamil Nadu tried to build a grand narrative of Tiruvalluvar. One good thing though is that we have tons and tons of documentation that Tiruvalluvar is one of the Śaiva saints, even though they tried to distort his identity and tried to take him out of Śaivism. The moment these atheists who are trying to take away the identity from Valluvar are gone, he will get his identity back. All the monuments built for him will be useful for us to recreate the real grand narrative of Tiruvalluvar.

Tiruvalluvar was born and brought up in Mylapore in the Śaiva Vellalar family. He always lived the life of bhasma and rudrākṣa because he was initiated by the founder of Thondaimandala Aadheenam – Adinatha Jñānaprakasha Desika Paramacharya Swamigal who is the incarnation of Mahādeva himself. In his first verse, he salutes Ādi Bhagavān and the Aadheenam, means the Guru Pīṭha of the Valluvar community which is Thondaimandala Aadheenam and that Aadheenam's Guru mudhalvar who is the founder – Adinatha Swamigal. Till this date, worshiping is done with the same name and the oldest palm leaf of Tirukural was also discovered in that Aadheenam. It is kept and owned by the Aadheenam. Soon, we will reclaim his identity and his grand narrative.

So the grand narrative is one of the most important things to guide an existing civilization or to bring any form of revolution in a civilization or to guide the flow of a civilization and even to revive a civilization. For everything, you need a clear-cut grand narrative so that your inner image can be beautifully aligned.

You need a grand narrative, only then you can align your inner image to it. Need of a Guru itself is nothing but a need for a grand narrative. Your need for a Guru is nothing but your need for a grand narrative. This is the way the grand narratives get built. We have thousands of grand narratives in each locality. For example: for the whole of Maharashtra, Sant Jnaneshwar was the grand narrative. For the whole of Karnataka, Bhagavān Basavanna was the grand narrative. For the whole of Tamil Nadu, Jñānasambandar and few more saints who came after Jñānasambandar; they were the grand narrative.

What can be the grand narrative of Hinduism? It cannot be just a concept. It has to be a person who is physically down to Earth with whom people can perceive at their level, play with their visualization and use it to align themselves. If a concept can be a grand narrative of Hinduism, then seeking is the grand narrative of Hinduism. We will have to demonstrate and show the grand narrative which can be cherished, enjoyed, visualized, played with through your visualization, inspire you to align your inner image, and remind you again and again the highest purpose of your existence. Seeking can raise you to the space of seeking again and again.

Hindus have denied the need for a grand narrative for at least the last 200 years. We have not realized that we need a grand narrative that will be the collective identity for all of us. We have not realized that not having a grand narrative is something wrong. We are trying to push this problem under the carpet, saying, 'No, no, no, if you create a grand narrative of Kṛṣṇa, all the Śaivites will drop out. If you create a grand narrative of Śiva, all the Vaiṣṇavites will drop out. If you create a grand narrative of Devī, all the other traditions will drop out.' Hindus are intelligent enough to move from one Iṣṭadevatā (chosen deity) to another Iṣṭadevatā if they have chosen a wrong one. If you have not had at least 6 to 7 Iṣṭadevatās, you are not a seeker. If you are a seeker, you would have had at least 6-7 Iṣṭadevatās. Every time you evolve, you will connect with the next level of definition and grand narrative you receive.

If you receive Mahādeva as the embodiment of Enlightenment as a description about Him at the age of 7, you may not have felt connected with Him. At the age of 7, you need a Gaṇeśa who eats nicely, who roams and jumps around. The grand narrative of Gaṇeśa may be more appealing for you. At the age of 14, the grand narrative of Subrahmaṇya would have been more appealing for you with His youth, beauty, valor and vigor. After you have had 2 to3 girlfriends, then maybe you will need Mahādeva as the grand narrative of Enlightenment and you will simply feel connected. So at different times when you are evolving, you will feel connected to different grand narratives. That is the reason why the number of atheists in Hinduism is very low compared to other religions. In other religions, there is only one grand narrative. If it does not match you or you don't feel connected, you simply will become an atheist. For Hinduism, it is not the case. We have 2000 grand narratives. If you have a Guru, he will make-to-order and give it to you. He may even make a new one for you.

Hindus not bothered about the need to have a grand narrative is not right. This is the biggest problem. The Hindu leaders are not even realizing we need a grand narrative. We need to spend a lot of time and energy on it and we need to evolve it. It is unfortunate that Hindu visionaries and leaders are in self-denial and they are trying to push the problem of Hindu Grand Narrative under the carpet. Not having a grand narrative is not right.

It is time we spell out the Hindu Grand Narrative. Actually, if we can make 10,000 people with a Hindu Grand Narrative, we will be able to easily make 100,000 people enlightened, because that takes away people's depression, fatigue and boredom. Human beings live in the intoxication of grand narrative. Intoxication of grand narrative is required to go through forced depression by the stupid social narratives. Society gives you some narratives. As a mother you should be this. As a father you should be this. As a brother you should be this. These are all forced on you and your bio memory is made to believe that when you face some difficulty, problems, these social narratives about you and the intoxication of grand narrative takes away the depression. Grand narrative is the antidote for all the sufferings you created based on your social narratives. It is such a powerful inspiration to remove your mental fatigue, tiredness and boredom.

Functioning Out of Reality Vs Irrational Rational Logic

पूषन्न्-एकर्षे यम सूर्य प्राजाप्त्य। व्यूह रश्मिन् समूह।
तेजो यत् ते रूपं कल्याण-तमं तत् ते पश्यामि यो'सावसौ पुरुषः सो' हम् अस्मि ॥ १६॥ pūṣann-ekarṣe yama sūrya prājāptya। vyūha raśmin samūha। tejo yat te rūpaṁ kalyāṇa-tamaṁ tat te paśyāmi yo'sāvasau puruṣaḥ so' ham asmi ॥ 16 ॥

Translation: 'O Puṣan, Consciousness, who is the nourisher, sustainer of all, the primeval solitary traveller, the disciplining principle of all, is like the bright, effulgent Sun, and is the Lord of entire creation, which is His subject. Please remove all Your rays of this radiating, brilliant golden light, which had blinded me, so that by Your grace, I can have the Divine vision of that most auspicious, graceful, beautiful form of Yours. That which is there, the glorious Sun, is the mirror of the Supreme Being, who is all-pervading, pure Consciousness of the Cosmos. Indeed, I am He, So'ham Asmi.'

The key phrase here is "I am He - So'ham Asmi." If you realize So'ham Asmi, life is bliss; otherwise So'ham becomes sokam - life is sadness. Understand the key word in this verse. The first few lines sound like a prayer to something far away, but the last lines deliver the punch: what seems distant is actually 'within me'.

Hindus do not only look upward; they also look inward. They do both. This can happen only through Third Eye awakening. Ordinary eyes can look in one direction; only the Third Eye can look both ways - into height and into depth. The opening lines of the verse show him praying to God above, beyond the sun in the cosmos: "Oh God, remove the sun's rays that blind my eyes and allow me to see You beyond this radiance." Then the verse twists: 'the divine is inside me'. Not only do they look up, they also look in.

There are two kinds of logic. Take this example: the first statement is, "This hall has two doors." The second is, "One door is open." Immediately, you assume the third statement - that the other door must be closed. This is human logic, full of flaws. In truth, the other door may be open or closed; only by checking can you know. Yet 99% of the time you assume. This is what I call irrationally rational logic: what we consider rational is often, in fact, irrational.

This same flawed logic operates in how you use your body. If your eyes can see outward, you assume they cannot see inward. But in the Āgamas, Mahādeva clearly reveals: your eyes have the capacity to roll 360 degrees, to see both inside your body and outside, to scan within and to perceive the farthest reaches of the sky. It is possible. Yet, because you believe in only one capacity - seeing outward - you automatically deny the other. This is the irrational rational logic at work.

Please understand that the logic you believe in your life is the same logic with which you handle your body. That is where your body's capabilities and abilities are developed. If you believe you can see upwards and inwards, then from the beginning your body will develop that capability. If you believe you can only see upwards and not inwards, then you will only have that power. Your beliefs about life will naturally impact strongly your beliefs about your body. Your beliefs about your body will impact the abilities and capabilities of what your body can experience and express. If you believe you can only see externally, you will be praying – 'Oh God, where are you? Show me where you are.' Only if you understand that you can see internally and externally, you will declare: 'Yes, Oh Lord, where you are, you will reveal who is in me.'

Fortunately, the Upaniṣad Ṛṣis are not functioning out of irrational logic. They are functioning out of reality. They are very clear they can see internally and externally. This verse is a solid proof when it says, 'Oh Lord, reveal your auspicious, graceful and beautiful form which is me. Indeed I am He, So'ham Asmi.' Yet an irrational rational logical man can never understand this truth. A man who decides if the first door is open and the second door will be closed is atheist. A man who says, 'Let me check and decide whether the second is open or closed' is a seeker. A man who has realized not only the second door is open, even the first door will open the moment he touches it is enlightened. The man who can see whether the door is closed or open is an Incarnation.

What you call rational logic is not reality. It is stupidity dressed up as intelligence. Anything that limits your belief about life is nothing but a rotten theory born out of incompletion. Look at the fraud: the definition of money by materialists, the definition of health by pharmacists, the definition of law-abiding citizens by lawyers - every one of them is rooted in vested interest. A lawyer will never declare, "You are free." A pharmaceutical company will never say, "You are healthy, you don't need us." Why? Because a cured patient is their worst loss - a dead customer.

Drug addiction "treatments" in so-called developed countries are the biggest scam. Their diagnostic and healing methods are not about curing but about cashing in. In a nation where prisons and rehabilitation centers are for-profit industries, do you really expect justice? Do you really expect a cure? Forget it. Religion invented hell to control and terrorize you. Psychiatrists invented the subconscious and unconscious mind to enslave you. Both are chains to keep you under control.

Most so-called addictions are not even addictions. They are made dangerous only by the poisonous beliefs drilled into you. In reality, many of them can be dropped effortlessly - just like that - if you are given the right method and the right thought-current. But you will never be allowed that freedom. Real solutions from living traditions are deliberately buried, because the industry thrives on your sickness, your dependency, your weakness.

Wake up. A cured patient is a lost customer. Which greedy industry will spend billions to lose customers? Which research will be funded to destroy the very business that keeps it alive? None. That is why psychiatric drugs, de-addiction therapies, and psychoanalysis don't cure you. They keep you dangling on the border - never fully sick, never fully free. Just trapped, controlled, milked, and managed.

Simply if your beliefs about life are re-cognized, you can just walk out from tons of problems. You will start expressing extraordinary powers and capabilities. The solution is reorganizing your beliefs and restrategizing your understandings; restrategizing your life based on new understandings and reinventing yourself.

Science of Prayer

Usually, the mind always operates from duality. If you utter the words 'he is not good,' it means you have already come to the conclusion that he is bad. You are not able to take a stand that 'he is not good' does not necessarily mean 'he is bad.' You never take that stand. As a natural flow, your logic is always taught to take extreme positions. The moment you hear that he is not good, immediately you decide that he is bad. Duality keeps the mind alive. Duality keeps the dilemmas alive. Your mind is so brilliant, it can even use religion to keep itself alive. Prayer is one of the most misunderstood and abused concepts. The moment you are asked to pray and put God on a high pedestal, you always decide to put yourself on a low pedestal.

In some traditions, this is even celebrated as humbleness. No. Humbleness is not thinking less of yourself; it is thinking less about yourself. It has nothing to do with the image you hold of yourself - it is about how rarely you are preoccupied with yourself. One of humanity's greatest mistakes is believing that to put God on a pedestal, you must first lower yourself. No! Elevating God does not require diminishing you.

This is a truth you must deeply understand. The Hindu Hindu traditions reveal the science of prayer with extraordinary clarity. In fact, this verse forms the foundation of many Hindu celebrations. Even while you pray, you do not need to put yourself down or cultivate a low self-image. You do not need to be a sinner to make God a saint. God can be a saint, and you can continue to pray to Him without assuming the role of a sinner.

On every level, consciously embracing powerlessness leads only to bondage - be it during studying, the assimilation of truths, professional practice, building relationships, or pursuing your career. In prayer, meditation, or any aspect of life, entertaining powerlessness brings only suffering and limitation. Even before God, you do not need to feel powerless while praying or asking. True prayer is not self-deprecation - it is alignment, awareness, and connection without diminishing yourself.

Duality keeps your mind alive even while you are praying. Do not entertain duality, which is the source of dilemmas. Even while you are praying and feeling that you do not have something or miss something, do not entertain powerlessness. Most of your concepts about God are so foolish that they affect the concept you carry about yourself. If you have no business with God and have a foolish concept, that is okay. But when you are doing business with Him and have a foolish concept, then something is seriously wrong. Especially when you have a concept like: if you must put Him on a high pedestal, you need to lower yourself. This is the greatest sin you are bringing upon yourself, which will be very difficult to complete, liberate yourself from, or get out of.

Even when you pray, even when you have not experienced Oneness, even when you have not understood experientially that you are in Oneness and you are one, So'ham Asmi. Even while you are praying and He is on the pedestal, you do not need to be on a low pedestal. This duality and entertaining it will make you so powerless, and you will never be able to get out of it because you will always feel guilty that if you become powerful by raising yourself, you are doing something against God, which is not true.

Most of you are committing one of the worst sins. You are building a self-torturing pattern in the name of prayer, because you are always taught that lowering yourself down means elevating God which is not true. Once you learn this belief pattern of elevating God means lowering yourself means even by mistake if you feel good about yourself once in a while, you will feel that something is wrong. You get into guilt – 'Oh, I am feeling so good about myself. Am I putting God down? I am supposed to be shivering inside and praying 'Oh God, oh God, oh God, oh God." That is the most dangerous belief system you have built in the name of religion. Slavery was never abolished; you are only made to think so. The reigns have gone from one hand to a different hand. The different hand is brilliant enough to make you believe slavery has been abolished. Whether it is through religion, food industries or pharmaceutical industries, slavery continues to be maintained. People will go through any extremes for the sake of power.

The 16th verse of Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad sets you free from all possible slavery-related mental games. There are many traditions where lowering yourself more and more is appreciated, respected, and worshipped. The lower the inner image you build, the more you are respected, worshipped, and recognized. If that is what you want, go get a pig or a buffalo, put it on the throne, and worship it. It has the lowest inner image because without any shyness, it can put its mouth on anything. It is such a stupid concept! To put God above, you don't need to put yourself down, because prayer itself is a technique to break non-duality, non-dual perception, and non-dual existence. Understand the lower inner image—the lower inner image is the worst sin if you are consciously asking to build it. It is like you build your own cage where you will be locked in. Can there be more stupidity than this?!

The verse is very clear, the sūtra is very clear, the Ṛṣis are very clear: "Even when I pray, I am You." Even when I pray, I am You, So'ham Asmi. It is not that only after realization but even while I have not experienced or realized my Oneness with You, and as a devotee praying to You, I know the truth that I am one with You. This is the definition of prayer. When you pray, remember God is above and it is true. You don't have to be below by lowering yourself. You don't need to be below for God to be above.

So'ham asmi

So many of the stupid attitudes, aptitudes, cognitions you built thinking that it is necessary to get the grace of God, put yourself in guilt, powerlessness which in no way supports or helps you to experience Enlightenment or the higher consciousness. Remember the right context and bring prayer in your life. Prayer itself will lead to Enlightenment. Prayerfulness itself will lead to Enlightenment.

So'ham Asmi, even while you are praying, you are one with Him. Let that Advaitic cognition be brought even during the prayer. The superstitiousness you bring in the name of religion will disappear. So'ham Asmi.

'O Pūṣan, Consciousness, who is the nourisher, sustainer of all, the primeval solitary traveller, the disciplining principle of all, is like the bright, effulgent Sun, and is the Lord of entire creation, which is His subject. Please remove all Your rays of this radiating, brilliant golden light, which had blinded me, so that by Your grace, I can have the Divine vision of that most auspicious, graceful, beautiful form of Yours. That which is there, the glorious Sun, is the mirror of the Supreme Being, who is all-pervading, pure Consciousness of the Cosmos. Indeed, I am He.'

The Grand Narrative of Hinduism – So'ham Asmi

This is the Grand Narrative of Hinduism – So'ham Asmi.

It means: 'I am That' - Jīvātman, the ultimate identity of the individual self with Paramātman the Supreme .

The lofty height of Suddhādvaita and the grounded reality of Āgama.

Many times, you feel that the moment you have wings, you must forget the roots. You start believing that having roots is somehow against having wings. This is where incompletion arises within you – as an inner conflict between the root and the wings. Constantly, you are caught in the dilemma: "Should I choose the root or the wings? The wings or the root?"

The same confusion extends into every dimension of life. "Upaniṣad or Āgama? Āgama or Upaniṣad?" In today's world, the question becomes: "Traditional lifestyle or so-called modern lifestyle?" You assume that modern lifestyle represents wings, while traditional lifestyle represents the root.

The more your mind raises, the more you will see everything in the form of solution. You will see everything is moving properly as it is supposed to be. The questions, doubt and everything will disappear. When your mind is becoming smaller and smaller, you will have more and more stupid questions. You will have more and more confusion and complications. Even if the solution is given, you will not be able to imbibe, incorporate and make it as part of you. You will continue to suffer with the same question again and again. If you are finding the same solution for the same problem a few hundred times in your life, you have a small mind. That is the definition. If you are finding more and more jigsaw puzzles, paradoxes falling in place, more and more paradoxes settling into place, then you are expanding; you are growing.

You never need to choose between modern life and traditional life. You never need to choose between the Upaniṣads and the Āgamas. You never need to choose between roots and wings. No! The only real choice before you is between a small mind and a larger vision.

A small mind finds a problem for every solution. A larger vision finds a solution for every problem. When you have internally solved everything , you will naturally go on discovering solutions but when you have not internally solved you will go on finding and reinventing problems.

One of the most is the sacred secret revealed in this verse: you do not need to choose between the root and the wing. They are not opposites, but complements. The original Pure Science is the Upaniṣads. The Applied Science is the Āgama. And the experiential laboratory where both come alive is KAILASA.

The essence of the Master key as shared in this verse is So'ham Asmi.

यो'सावसौ पुरुषः सो' हम् अस्मि
तेजो यत् ते रूपम् कल्याण-तमम् तत् ते पश्यामि यो'सावसौ पुरुषः सो' हम् अस्मि | yo'sāvasau puruṣaḥ so'ham asmi
tejo yat te rūpaṁ kalyāṇa-tamaṁ tat te paśyāmi yo'sāvasau puruṣaḥ so' ham asmi |

'Even when I am relating with You, I am You. I may be having love towards You, I may be praying to You, sometimes I may even have incompletions with You, I may even be fighting with You, I may even be negotiating with You, I may even be bargaining with You, I may even be getting trained by You, whatever may be, I just know – I am You. So'ham Asmi.'

This is the most important breakthrough Hindu tradition can give to the world. All different religious traditional Masters and Gurus have experienced different states of consciousness. Dvaita: experiencing duality. Viśiṣṭādvaita: experiencing a commonality and an underlying connection with everything. Advaita: experiencing Oneness. Unfortunately, many of these different traditions' Gurus, Masters, Saints, Sages, when they were experiencing duality, they deny the existence and possibility of Oneness. Once they experienced Dvaita, they did not believe Viśiṣṭādvaita exists. When they go through the Viśiṣṭādvaita, they do not believe Advaita is possible. When they go through Advaita, they do not think Dvaita was reality. The intoxication of Oneness is such, you just forget that there was a time when duality was your reality. During the space of duality, you cannot even imagine that Oneness can become reality. That is why prayer has become such a divisive technique in some religions just to put you in depression. In some religions, prayer is used to create sick people so that they will have business.

One fellow went around every house in a city asking, 'Do you want to hire me to clean your windows? Do you want to hire me to clean your windows?' Nobody wanted him. Next day, he got hold of a friend and told him, 'Please make all the windows dirty. I will give you a hundred dollars.' This fellow went and did it. You know what happened? On the third day when this fellow goes, he gets the job.

In some religions, prayer is used as a method to create sick people so they will have customers. It is like an indirect understanding. Nowadays there is a direct understanding between pharmaceutical industry and food industry. Food is the most abused drug in modern society. It is like a secret understanding between the food and pharmaceutical industries. Food industry sends you to the pharmaceutical industry. Pharmaceutical industry is supported by the food industry. That is why most of the time you see the same guy owning both the industries. Through one, he creates patients and through the other, he cures or maintains. Praying is used as a technique in some religions to create mentally sick people so that they can have patients forever. This one verse will finish their business.

Just this one verse: So'ham Asmi, I am Him: "Even when I am worshiping, bowing down, praying to Him, I am Him -So'ham Asmi, I am Him."

What does prayer mean? Sometimes requesting, asking, at times bargaining, negotiating, sometimes even shouting, fighting, screaming. It is all based on your mood, and on how the other side responds based on how you relate to Him, and how He relates to you. Sometimes it is gratitude, sometimes it is love. Sometimes it is playful, even flirting like gopas and gopikas did. Sometimes it is a sweet reminder. Sometimes a little nagging, sometimes strong nagging. Sometimes a small quarrel, sometimes a loud fight. Depending on your mood swings, prayer can shift anywhere between gentle love talk and loud argument.

Whether it is love talk or loud talk, gentle prayer or nagging, soft or hard, sweet or bitter, small fight or big fight, even violence, whatever it may be, you are Him

So'ham Asmi, I am Him.

This is the Hindu way of prayer: even when you pray, you are Him. If this understanding flows as the undercurrent, the very quality of your prayer will be transformed. You will see that every prayer manifests into reality, effortlessly.

Awakening the God Particle

That is why awakening the God particle is so important for every human being. Once the God particle is awakened, you will know that even while you are praying, you are Him, you simply know it.

Whenever you pray, remember: you are not praying to the Deity merely before you, or to the Guru who stands in front of you. You are praying to the Source where the Guru and you become one.

Whether externally or internally, hold this understanding: "I am talking to You at the center where You and I are one. I do not know whether that center is there or here, but I am praying to that center, where You and I become one."

When you stand before God, a Deity, or the Guru, simply remember: "I am praying to the Source where You and I are one and the same. Oh, Source, please awaken within me, and make this space my reality."

With this, you will know So'ham Asmi I am Him, forever.

Mahādeva teaches Sarvajñanottarāgama to Subrahmaṇya. Why is it called Sarvajñanottarāgama? Mahādeva's seat is called Sarvajñapīṭha, so it is the essence of everything He taught through the five faces – Satyojātam, Tatpuruṣam, Vāmadevam, Aghoram, Īśānam. He revealed the four Vedas through the four faces and all the Āgamas through the fifth face. The essence of all these is Sarvajñanottarāgama which is to remind Subrahmaṇya the experience of Śivoham. Once Subrahmaṇya experiences it, He was made to sit on the seat of Sarvajñapīṭha. That is why the Āgama is called Sarvajñanottarāgama.

You learn only 25% from the teacher. When you discuss among your friends, you learn the next 25%. When you ask questions and get the clarifications from your friends, you learn the next 25%. Only when you start teaching, you learn the last 25%. So the first 75% of learning is already done. Mahādeva taught 25% to Subrahmaṇya. When Subrahmaṇya discussed it with his friends, He learnt 25%. When Subrahmaṇya asked those questions to Mahādeva, He learnt another 25%. Now, Subrahmaṇya has to teach and learn the last 25%. Mahādeva says, 'Don't waste Your time in looking for a student; come and sit. I will listen and learn from you, then you will get that next 25% also.' That is why in Swamimalai, Bhagavān becomes a disciple and a student so that Subrahmaṇya can learn to teach and receive that last 25%. After that Subrahmaṇya becomes a perfect Jñāna Skandagurunathan.

Mahādeva sat on the Sarvajñapīṭha and He made Subrahmaṇya sit on the Sarvajñapīṭha too. Now, Mahādeva decided that He is going to be a teacher and a student, and have Subrahmaṇya as a student and as a teacher too. With that, all four of them assume one body and fill the same Sarvajñapīṭha.

Beautifully, the Āgama describes that Mahādeva had Subrahmaṇya on His right shoulder. As Subrahmaṇya was teaching, suddenly Mahādeva moved Subrahmaṇya to His left shoulder. Subrahmaṇya asked, 'Why? Am I heavy?' He said, 'No. I want your Mother to listen to You too. This side belongs to Her, and I have heard enough. Now, I want your Mother to know how beautifully you are teaching.' As the left side belongs to Devī, He moved Subrahmaṇya to the left shoulder. That way, He was able to make Subrahmaṇya into a perfect Master. In Sarvajñanottarāgama, He beautifully describes: 'Subrahmaṇya, not only after the experience, even before starting the practice, you are Me, I am You.' And He uses the words 'if someone believes at one point duality will be there and at some point Oneness will be there, they are fools and they will never reach Oneness. Only the ones who understand even while they practice, Oneness is the reality, they achieve Oneness and experience Oneness.'

Mahādeva perfected Subrahmaṇya as a Master not only through teaching but also by making Him speak and listen by becoming His own student. So in this whole training process, the essence of what He taught in Sarvajñanottarāgama is – even when you have not experienced, the truth is the truth is the truth. That is Śivoham, So'ham Asmi. Even when you experience duality, the truth is Oneness; the reality is Oneness.

The Importance of Prayer

Prayer is an important component of life, especially for a seeker. Just like breathing, prayer becomes a vital part of you - prayer becomes you. Prayer is important as part of your being, meaning that one part of you should itself become prayer. Therefore, you must always hold the right context and understanding during prayer.

When you pray to a deity or a Guru, have this context: "I am praying to the Source where You and I are one and the same. I do not know whether that Source is here or there."

Initially, when you are overwhelmed internally, the Source appears outside you. But as you become lighter through completion, the Source moves within you.

Pray with this intention: "Oh Source, where you and I are one and the same, I pray to you, please make this into reality." In this way, you will never feel disappointed. If the Guru does not give you what you want, your mind may try to make you feel that you have been let down.

When someone feels they lack something, negative sources use that feeling to present themselves as heroes. Therefore, always pray to the Source with this understanding: "Oh Source, you and I are one and the same" where So'ham Asmi is reality.'

If you feel unsure whether the Source is centered within you or in the Guru, it depends on the level of completion within you. When you have less completion, the Source will feel external. As you achieve more completion, the Source moves toward you. When you become fully complete, the Source will be centered on you. Don't worry about where the Source is. Simply say, "Oh Source, where you and I are one and the same, please make this into reality." You can also add, "If something I am asking for is not right for me, give me the intelligence to evolve." Or you can say, "Even if it is not right for me, I still want this." You have the right to ask.

Whether or not we fully understand, the reality remains: So'ham Asmi – I am He. That is what the Upaniṣad means with the word 'indeed.' Whether you get it or not yet get it – 'So'ham Asmi, I am He.' Whether you stand in front of Gaṇeśa, Veṅkaṭeśvara, Mahādeva, Kālabhairava, or your Guru, pray, "Whatever is the Source, you and I are one and the same. I pray to you for that realization. Please make this as a reality." This way, every moment of your prayer becomes a journey toward Oneness, Living Enlightenment, Advaita. Keep praying, even if you don't receive what you asked for – because instead, you will receive what He wants for you. This is why the right context for prayer is essential.

Your life should be a long prayer from the context of So'ham Asmi. If your context is incorrect, prayer can be painful. With the right context, prayer becomes a powerful process for Oneness, a source of completion. If you are tired of other practices, prayer can immediately replace them. Prayer can be a profound spiritual process for experiencing Oneness.

You can even pray, "Oh Source! I am tired of doing all this completion. I know you are intelligent and capable of creating completion within me. Please make it happen." Prayer uttered from the right context never goes to waste. You can move mountains, shake the Sun, or even shift the Moon. You are not merely an evolved version of a monkey – you have the power to influence the universe. Prayer from the right context will lead directly to Enlightenment without any feeling of having been cheated. If you use the wrong context for prayer, only then will you feel let down, 'Oh, I prayed for 10 years for this and He did not give it to me.' When you pray from the correct context, He may not have given what you asked, He would have given Himself to you.

Prayer from the right context leads you to receive not just what you ask for, but what you truly need. If what you ask for is not beneficial, you will be given the intelligence and energy to handle it. Ultimately, He will be there for you, and He will give Himself to you. The beauty of So'ham Asmi is that it is the very context of your prayer, the foundation of your love affair with God, including the ups and downs.

You are never too old to cry out in love, in a prayerful mood. You are never too old or too grown up to be lost in love and in the space of prayer.

There is a beautiful song in Tamil: "I asked you for a few flowers, but you gave the whole forest to me." When He gives, He does not give based on your standards; He gives based on His standards. He doesn't think, "Oh, for his standard, this is enough." No, He gives as He sees fit. In Tamil, the next line goes: "I asked for water to quench my thirst, and you gave nectar itself to quench all my thirst." After that, there is no possibility of further thirst. Just a little breast milk from Mahādevī Pārvatī was enough for Jñānasambandar, and he became a Nirāhārī for the rest of his life. From then on, he opened his mouth only to sing the glory of Mahādeva. Once you have tasted that nectar, nothing else is there to eat or drink. All your thirst is quenched. "I asked for water, and you gave me nectar." Then, "What more should I ask? How should I ask for you to give yourself to me?" So'ham Asmi is the answer to this whole song.

The next line says, "What should I ask in order for you to give yourself to me?" The following stanza goes: "I was lost in the wild forest, and you appeared as the way out. I was lost in darkness, but you came as the light. Tell me, where should I get lost so that you come directly to me? I was lost in the wild forest, and you came as a way out. I was lost in utter darkness, and you came as the light. Where should I get lost, how should I get lost, so that you come directly to me?"

And the next stanza is: "I fell into the ditch, into the pit, and you raised me to the peak. I fell into the flood, and you brought me to the bank, to the shore. I fell into the ditch, and you raised me to the peak. I fell into the flood, and you brought me to shore." The next line is: "Where should I fall for you to help me reach you? Tell me where I should fall, so that I may reach you."

The solution and answer to this question – "Where should I lose myself for You to give Yourself to me? Where should I get lost for You to appear? What should I ask, and how should I ask for You to give Yourself to me?" The answer is to be lost in that space of So'ham Asmi. Remember the right context of prayer and pray, and He will give Himself to you.

The words you utter during prayer get bolted into your muscle memory, and the context you hold gets bolted into your bio memory. Whatever gets bolted into your bio memory becomes reality.

Eternal Life Process

ॐ क्रतो स्मर कृतम् स्मर क्रतो स्मर कृतम् स्मर || १७ ||
vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ bhasmāntagṁ śarīram |

Translation: 'Let the vital life energy 'wind' present in the body now merge into the all-pervading, eternal cosmic life energy 'air' and now let this gross body (along with subtle body) disintegrate into its basic elements and be reduced to the sacred ashes. O Supreme Consciousness, known by the sacred syllable 'Oṃ,' remember all that has been done to attain Oneness with You. O mind, remember the Supreme Consciousness, the Lord of all enriching sacrifices, whom you have been always remembering in your actions.'

I can say in this verse, one of the most powerful spiritual practices is given. This process should be called the 'Eternal Life Process.' Anyone who does this process while he is alive will master this process to practice during the time he leaves the body. That will naturally make him enlightened and live eternal life in the Cosmic space.

Let the vital energy – wind (vāyu), present in the body now merge into the all-pervading eternal consciousness. vayur-anilam amṛtam (the eternal cosmic life energy) – vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ. Understand the great truth revealed in this verse – whatever you call as life can merge with eternal life; the body can go back to the basic elements and you relax into that eternal Cosmic life. Every night when you fall asleep, if you practice this technique, it will become part of you and your very being, so when you fall into eternal sleep, you will fall into eternal life.

The whole sūtra, the 17th verse of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad is a technique. When you fall asleep, remember the vital life energy – vāyu, and relax into the Cosmic life energy. 'Let this body go back to its elements, the Source, basic elements. Let this consciousness become one with the eternal consciousness – Oneness. Let me remember krato smara kṛtagṁ smara krato smara kṛtagṁ smara.'

Upaniṣadic Masters may be poets but they never utter a single extra word. Here, they are uttering 'krato smara kṛtagṁ smara' twice. One, they are asking the Cosmic energy, the Cosmos – 'Please remember all that I have done to experience Oneness with You.' Second, they are reminding themselves – 'Please remember whatever you have done to achieve Oneness with the Cosmos.' So, the first 'auṁ krato smara kṛtagṁ smara' means 'Oh God, please remember all that I have done to become one with You, and shower your grace on me.' Second 'krato smara kṛtagṁ smara' is to tell yourself – 'Hey, please remember how much you have struggled to achieve Oneness and now is the moment, don't miss it.' One, 'krato smara kṛtagṁ smara' is the prayer, the request. Second, 'krato smara kṛtagṁ smara' is the decision to be ferocious with yourself. You have struggled and did so much to achieve Oneness. Now, don't be diverted by anything else, any desire, any greed. Nothing else should touch you!

Only an enlightened being who has achieved Enlightenment will know what the problem of the last moment will be. Don't ever think that at the last moment, you will have a huge desire like lust, or a huge greed like ruling a kingdom. It will just be a cheap desire which costs less than a coca cola or a pizza. All the last moment problems will just be a simple coca cola or a piece of pizza which you think is cute.

Huge desires always awaken your intelligence and you will say – 'No. This will divert me from Enlightenment.' But these small desires, you think – 'Ayee... such a cute desire. Why not have it?' Even if you are a seeker your whole life, it is these small desires which you will not say 'no' to. You have not built the habit of saying 'no.' You have not built a defense against a cup of coca cola or a pizza. Small desires which you consider cute and did not build a defense for, only those desires will attack you when you leave the body.

During the time of leaving the body, the bigger desires will never attack you because you would have already built a defense from them. However, stupidly you will have some small desires like 'I just want to smoke a village beedi once' or 'I want to have a jalebi, hot jalebi and khichdi' or 'I want the bhang milk from Calcutta.'

Neither sex nor money or name and fame or greed to rule kingdoms will come to you during the last moments, because you would have already built a defense for them. For a seeker, the last moment distraction will be just a cup of thick curd or a slice of pizza. It will not be anything more than that. Only those small desires which you think are cute, you will encourage it and forget to build a defense against them. So when you leave the body, only they will attack you, nothing else. Do not allow even one incompletion without completing it.

When you leave the body, your ability to remember the need for Enlightenment, merging into the Cosmos and ability to provoke the Cosmos to absorb you into It will be awakened if you lived your whole life with a deep prayerful experience. The prayer will become reality immediately. Praying to yourself is completion. Completion with the Cosmos is prayer. You telling yourself – 'Ayy, ayy, ayy, remember what all you did just for this moment. Do not look here and there.

krato smara kṛtagṁ smara |

When the pain of death starts, all your name and fame, greed to rule the kingdom, sex, lust, everything will lose its meaning for you and it will lose power over you. Only the last one or two things which you did not build defense for which you did not complete, which you left in a casual and unattended way will create issues for you. The casual desires will create issues because you did not build any defense against it. You have not intranalysed it and you have not completed with it.

वायुर्-अनिलम् अमृतम् अथेदम् भस्मान्तम् शरीरम् |

auṁ krato smara kṛtagṁ smara krato smara kṛtagṁ smara || 17 ||

Let the life in the body merge with the Cosmic life. Let the body go back to its basic elements and be reduced to ashes. Oh Cosmos, please remember what all I have done to achieve Oneness with You. Oh being, please remember what all you have done to achieve Oneness with Him.

The verse reminds both sides and makes Oneness happen.

The first auṁ krato smara kṛtagṁ smara is awakening your bio energy. The second krato smara kṛtagṁ smara is completion of your muscle memory and bio memory. The second krato smara kṛtagṁ smara is completion.

Reminding the Cosmos about your goal is prayer. Reminding yourself about your goal is completion. Reminding yourself is completion. Reminding the Cosmos is prayer. The first auṁ krato smara kṛtagṁ smara is prayer. Second krato smara kṛtagṁ smara is completion. Prayer and completion both lead you to Enlightenment.

Song of Prayer

Here is the Tamil song from the space of the Giver which is the answer.

'Malargal ketten vanamey thandanai, thanneer ketten amirtham thandanai, ninaivai kettaai Nirivai thanden, agamatu kettai sugamatu thanden, ninaivai kettai Niraivai thanden, agamathu kettai sugamathu thanden, ninaivai kettai Niraivai thanden, agamathu kettai sugamathu thanden, ethai nan ketpeeeen , ethai nan ketpeeeen unnaiey tharuvai, nanee endrida enaiye tharuven, malargal ketten vanname thandanai, thanneer kettan Amirtham thandanai, ninaivai kettai Niraivai thanden, agamathu kettai sugamathu thanden, ethai nan ketpeeeen ethai nan ketpeen unnaiey tharuvai, nanee endrida enaiye tharuven, malargal ketten vanname thandanai, thanneer kettan amirtam thandanai, kanavil tholaindai nanavai vanden, vinavil tholaindai vidayai vanden, kanavil tholaindai Nanavai vanden, vinavil tholaindai vidayai vanden, ethanil tholainthaaaaal ethanil tholainthaaal neeye varuvai, ennil tholaindal naane varuven, ninaivai kettai niraivai thanden, agamathu kettai sugamathu thanden, degam veelndthai bodham serthen, manadhil veelndthai ennaethuil serthen, degam veelndthai bodham serthen, manadhil veelndthai ennaethuil serthen, ethanil veelndthaal unnidam serpai, Ullathil veelndthida ullathil serpen, Ninaivai kettai Niraivai thanden, Agamathu kettai Sugamathu thanden, Nanee endridaaa, , Nanee endrida enaiye tharuven, Ninaivai kettai Niraivai thanden,

Agamathu kettai Sugamathu thanden.'

'Ninaivai kettai niraivai thanden'

Actually when you see the Master and start having the feeling connection, you fall in love in a normal way only. It is where you cherish the memories. You always ask only for memories from a relationship, but I gave you completion from our relationship. In relationships where memories are given, if only the memories are left out from the relationship, then it is an ordinary binding relationship which will one day lead to pain and suffering. Here, you might have asked for memories only, because you know that comes only from a relationship, but I gave you completion from our relationship. If you ask only for the inner space, I will give bliss and joy in your inner space.

And the next question is, what should I ask to get You to give You to me? The answer is, if you decide you-Me or Me-you, I will give Me to you. If you get something by asking, it can be taken away from you. If you get something by deciding, it can never be taken away from you. Even I cannot take Myself away from you. When I cannot take Myself away from you, only then you really have Me. That is why here there is no question of asking Me and getting Me. Just by deciding you-Me or Me-you, simply I am there in you and you are there in Me. Neither you can take you away from Me, nor I can take Me away from you. If you ask and you get it, there is always a possibility it can be taken away from you one day or you may lose it. If you declare and have it, it can never be taken away from you means which is not given cannot be taken away. So, courage to declare gets Me to you irrevocably.

'Kanavil tholaindai Nanavai vanden'

You were lost in the dream. The only help I can give to you when you are lost in the dream is coming as a waking state to you. Not attending to the details of your dream is, for example – you are dreaming the whole house in which you are sleeping is burning, coming up with the fire engine or trying to put out the fire is not going to help you. Just by you waking up is the only help. So, when you were lost in the dream, I came as a waking state.

'Vinavil tholaindai vidayai vanden'

When you are lost in the questions, doubts and dilemmas, I came as the solution. This word here 'vinavil tolaindai vidayai vanden' has two meanings. Vinavil tolaindai means you are lost in questions. When you give meaning as a question with the word 'vinavu,' the word 'vidai' means answer. When you give meaning as a doubt with the word 'vinavu,' 'vidai' means Nandi. 'Vidai' the word can be used in Tamil for answer and Nandi. That is why 'vidaieriya perumane.'

If you are lost in doubt, the only antidote is having faith, trust and serve like Nandi. So this word 'vinavil tolaindai,' if you give the meaning as a question, 'vidai' means answer. When you are lost in question, I come as an answer. When you are lost in doubts and confusion I come as Nandi, the embodiment of trust and take you to Mahādeva. Nandi is supposed to be the first Guru of Śaiva Sampradāya.

The next line: 'ethanil tholainthaaal neeye varuvai'

The question is, in which I should get lost for you to come? The answer is 'ennil tholaindal naane varuven' means when you are lost in Me, I Myself will come.

The next line: 'degam veelndthai bodham serthen' means you fell into bodham which is the greatest state you can experience in the body. I raised you into bodham means the intoxication of Enlightenment. 'Degam veelndthai bodham serthen' means Enlightenment. If it is tasted by every muscle, it is called bodham.

And, 'degam veelndthai bodham serthen. Manadhil veelndthai ennaethuil serthen' – when you fell into your mind, I raised you. 'Ennathu' means My inner space. 'Eil' means the house. 'Enathu Eil' means you fell into the mind and I raised you to My inner space.

Then the question comes 'ethanil veelundthaal unnidam serpai' means where should I fall to raise me to You, take me to You. The answer is 'ullathil veelundthida ullathil serpen.' Here, the word 'Ullam' means Ānanda Gandha. 'Ullathil veelunthida' because Rāmana Maharṣi uses the word 'Ullam' for Ānanda Gandha. 'Ullathil veelunthida ullathil serpen' means if you fall into the Ānanda Gandha, I will make you reach reality.

You fell into the body, I raised you to the intoxication of Enlightenment. You fell into the mind, I raised you to My inner space. If you fall into Ānanda Gandha, I will raise you to reality.

So with this understanding, you can start listening to the question song and answer song.

How to Approach Death as per Hinduism

This verse holds so many unsaid and deeper levels of understanding. Let the vital life energy (wind) present in the body, now merge into the all-pervading, eternal cosmic life energy; and now let this gross body along with the subtle body, disintegrate into its basic elements and be reduced to the sacred ashes.

Each of these verses is very important. The way Sanātana Dharma approaches death is, it is very clear that the body has nothing useful. It has no use after death. That is why they say, let it disintegrate – bhasmāntaguṁ śareeram. This verse declares the need for cremation for Hindus. Why cremation in Hinduism? This verse shows the way why cremation in Hindu tradition – vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ. Let the prāṇa merge with the Cosmic prāṇa. bhasmāntaguṁ śareeram – let the body go back to its basic elements. After you leave the body, it has no use. You do not need this body after death. If you need it, you will have one more body. You will take a new body.

ॐ क्रतो स्मर कृतगुम् स्मर क्रतो स्मर कृतगुम् स्मर || १७ ||
vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ bhasmāntagṁ śarīram |
auṁ krato smara kṛtaguṁ smara krato smara kṛtaguṁ smara || 17 ||

The sacred secrets, truths about life and death our Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis know is clearly presented in this verse. The body assumes its form and goes back to its basic elements. The whole verse here says very clearly – Let the prāṇa (vāyu) relax, merge into the Cosmic life (anilam); and let the body retire to its basic elements by becoming ashes. But you remember what all you did to become One with the Cosmos. 'Oh Cosmos, please remember what all I did to reach you.'

It means, there is something beyond your life force (prāṇa) and body which is inside you, and whatever it did during its life, only that matters. There is something beyond your breath and your body. Whatever happens during its existence, during its stay inside the body, only that matters. What context the individual consciousness held, the actions it was performing does not matter. Only the context the individual consciousness was holding matters.

The Sūtra did not say, 'Oh body, please remember all the charity you did. Oh body, you lived a sinless life other than the 10 nights. Please remember that. Oh body, how much merit and good actions you did, and how much charity you gave to God's organization, please remember that.' No. No! You are not asked to remember how many good things you did. You are not asked to repent for the bad things you did. God saved you. You are not asked to do any confession. You are only asked to remember what all you did to achieve Oneness. God has been requested to remember what all you did to achieve Oneness.

Prayer and Remembrance of Oneness at the Time of Death

Auṁ krato smara kṛtaṁ smara) - "O Lord, please remember all I have done to achieve Oneness with You. O my being, remember all you have done to achieve Oneness with Him."

This remembrance alone is worthy at the last moment of life.

Do not fall into the trap of thinking, "I must repent for all the sins I have committed, or donate to charity based on my wrongdoings." No. This is not the time for such thoughts. We are not concerned with the money of someone who is about to die; we are concerned with their liberation.

A true Hindu priest will not stand beside a dying person, trying to capitalize on their property by saying, "If you donate all of this to charity, your sins will be forgiven." A Hindu Guru is not a negotiator.

The Upaniṣads do not ask us to remember our sins or merits during our final moments. They ask us only to remember everything we did to achieve Oneness with Him: "O God, remember all this being has done to achieve Oneness with You." Both the individual and the Divine are asked to remember all that was done to move toward Oneness.

This remembrance is entirely about the steps taken toward union with the Divine. The concept of death, what happens during and after death, and what to do before dying - all of it is contained in this single verse.

Nobody is asking you to remember your sins and repent. Nobody is asking you to recall your charitable deeds and feel proud, as if they were your visa to heaven. You are not even asked to remember to do completion. No. You are simply asked to remember: "Remember everything you did to achieve Oneness."

"O Lord, remember all I have done to reach Oneness with You."

The remembrance of the goal is the only thing required at the time of death. All obstacles have already lost their significance. If you had wealth, relationships, or other ties that prevented you from achieving Oneness, they are now irrelevant. When obstacles become immaterial, all that remains is remembering the ultimate goal -nothing else.

The first prayer, ॐ (Oṁ), is for addressing the Supreme Consciousness (Īśa). In this Upaniṣad, the word Īśa is used to denote the Supreme Consciousness. Oṁ serves both as an invocation to the Supreme Consciousness and as a prayer: "Remember all I did to become One with You." It is also a reminder to your own being: "Remember all you did to become One with Him."

At the time of death, all obstacles such as ahaṅkāra (ego), body, mind, wealth, and possessions are no longer useful. They will not even allow you to enter your own car; they will only carry you in an ambulance. You cannot sign a cheque. No! Everything that once distracted you from the space of Oneness has now become useless.

At this moment, you do not need to remember your struggles. You only need to remember the goal. Repentance and guilt will only bring back memories of struggles. While problems are present, one may remember the struggles. But when those problems have no power over you, what remains is only the remembrance of the goal.

The moment the pain of death begins in your system, everything else becomes irrelevant. What is the point of thinking about or focusing on things that are no longer part of you? The only thing you need to remember is the goal - Oneness.

At the time of death, you become a being beyond anything you could have imagined. It is not that you feel either completion or incompletion about your relationships; they simply become irrelevant. Even the closest relationships may appear unfamiliar. You may think, "Who is this person? I do not remember them!" Relationships lose their importance. At most, you may perceive the form of your Guru - not as you relate externally, but as you relate internally, through your Ātmamūrti (the inner form of the Self). That relationship alone becomes reality at that moment. All other relationships, people, places, and objects fade into irrelevance. You will neither feel complete nor incomplete about them.

For example, imagine someone living in the U.S. If you ask them, "Are you complete or incomplete with the planet Jupiter and those who live there?" they would respond, "They are neither complete nor incomplete; they are irrelevant." In the same way, when the pain of death begins and you start leaving the body, all the people you lived with and all the memories you carried become irrelevant.

The only memory worthy of remembrance during death is everything you did to experience Oneness with the Cosmos.

krato smara kṛtagṁ smara

The mantra "krato smara kṛtaṁ smara" contains the essence of the Hindu approach to death. It reveals how a Sanātana Hindu Dharmī perceives death and what it truly means. This single verse provides an introduction to understanding death in its deepest sense.

वायुर्-अनिलम् अमृतम् अथेदम् भस्मान्तग्म् शरीरम् |

vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ bhasmāntagṁ śarīram |

The phrase "vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ" emphasizes the profound link between your breathing and your inner thought-currents. Your breath shifts with every emotion, reflecting the movements of your inner being. When you experience guilt, your breath takes a particular pattern, similarly experiences of fear, suffering, anger etc take different patterns. Thus, every moment, the breathing within you mirrors the thought-currents moving inside you.

Aspects of Breath Science

This science has two parts. When someone comes to you with their problem, simply observing and studying their breathing pattern allows you to diagnose the root of the problem. Often, what is expressed through the breath conveys far more than what has been said in words.

Your breathing pattern is your life. It changes depending on whether you are experiencing incompletion, suffering, or a sense of completion. One of the great Siddhas beautifully said, "Once you fall into the space of completion and study your breathing pattern during that state, you do not even need to practice completion anymore. Simply practicing that breathing pattern is enough to bring you back to completion repeatedly." Your breathing pattern is you, your identity. It is powerful enough to lead you to the space of completion.

Vallalār, another Siddha, sings, "Vasi nadathi tharuvandi oru vasiyil vandhu nirupandi." The gummi song about Subrahmaṇya was from Vallalār. Subrahmaṇya is considered the first raw Siddha produced by Mahādeva. Mahādeva initiated the disciples of the Subrahmaṇya Sampradāya and the Kaumara Sampradāya. He passed on this knowledge to Agastya, who then taught Tholgoppiar, who in turn taught Nakkirar, Matsya Muni, Bhoga Muni, Pulipani, and the entire Guru Paramparā. From there, the Siddha Sampradāya continued and spread.

Breathing is an indicator of your internal state, and through it, the Siddhas could diagnose, influence, and even heal. Understanding and mastering your own breathing pattern can lead to profound transformations and a sense of completion.

You can listen to a few lines of the verse on your breathing pattern.

Actually, this verse means 'vaasi nadathi tharuvaandi' – just through the breathing pattern, he can lead you to Enlightenment. 'Oru vaasiyil vandhu nirpaandi' – within the time of one breath, He will appear in front of you. Actually, using the breathing pattern, achieving extraordinary powers and Enlightenment is one of the important sciences of Hindu tradition.

This verse 'vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedam means: "Let my breathing pattern dissolve into the Cosmic breathing pattern."

Practice this especially when you fall asleep. Decide: "Now that I am going to sleep, I cannot keep my inner image, outer image, others' image, or life's image alive."

All of you are constantly holding on to your outer image, like a heavy flex board or signboard. Others' expectations are like the wind blowing on it. This board wavers, yet you insist: "No, I am holding on!" But when you fall asleep, you know you cannot hold it anymore. At that moment, nothing more can be done. So instead of struggling to hold on or planning "How can I maintain my outer image, face others' expectations, endure the wind, snowfall, cyclone, tornado?" - just decide to let go.

Expectations are no small matter. Expectations from a girlfriend are like a gentle wind. Once she becomes your wife, her expectations are like a tornado. Once you have a child, those expectations become the wind, tornado, forest fire, snowfall - all put together, and something more! This is not only in family life - even in the office, the whole day you go on planning how to hold on to that flex board.

Every night, if you consciously decide to drop this, within 21 days it will become your bio-memory and your cognition. For just 21 days, decide: "I do not want anything else. Let my breathing pattern become the Cosmic breathing pattern."

When you wake up in the morning, decide again: "Let the Cosmic breathing pattern continue as my breathing pattern." That's all. Decide consciously.

For the first few days, keep reminding yourself: vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedam - "Let my breathing pattern dissolve into the Cosmic breathing pattern, because now I must fall asleep. I cannot go on carrying the pressure of holding onto others' expectations through my outer image."

Your outer image itself is stupidity, constantly pushed and pulled by others' expectations. It is like a monkey that drank village liquor and was bitten by a scorpion at the same time - what will happen to that monkey?! That is exactly the state of your outer image!

The pressure of others' expectations, the weakness of your inner image, and the heaviness of your life's image all create the innate tiredness and boredom you suffer from. But when you go to sleep, you cannot carry any of this. So tell yourself: "For the next few hours, I do not know what is happening internally or externally. Nothing is under my control. So let my breathing pattern dissolve into the Cosmic breathing pattern."

A man who prepares rightly for sleep prepares rightly for death. If you create the right context for sleep, you create the right context for death.

Death is nothing but long sleep. Sleep is nothing but short death. If you "die" for a few hours and return, it is called sleep. If you sleep and do not return, it is called death. Actually, it is the coming back that decides whether it was sleep or death. Falling is not the deciding factor; returning is.

वायुर्-अनिलम् अमृतम् अथेदम् |
vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ |

Tell yourself: 'Let my breathing pattern become the Cosmic breathing pattern, and I am relaxing into it.'

Practice this: vāyur-anilam amṛtam means let my breathing merge with the Cosmic breathing. The moment that you decide, suddenly your breathing pattern will become so beautiful. The entire throat will feel like it is soaked in honey. It will feel like it is soaked in honey. In Siddha tradition, there is a technique. After brushing the teeth, just apply a little honey on the gum. It is very good for health, digestion, everything. One more verse describes that if you produce the honey internally by aligning your breathing to Cosmic breathing, it is called nectar.

वायुर्-अनिलम् अमृतम् अथेदम् |
vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ |

Decide: 'Let my breathing pattern become the Cosmic breathing pattern.' Actually, what happens is you are surrendering every night into Mahādeva. You are surrendering yourself onto Mahādeva's lap. So, you are telling Him: 'Tomorrow if I have to wake up, you please wake me up. Let me wake up with all the qualities you need me to have.' When you wake up in the morning, decide: 'Let this Cosmic breathing continue to be my breathing.' Any conscious decision made before you fall asleep or immediately after you wake up, gets into your bio memory within 20 days, because that is the moment the doors for all the 3 states open and close. The door for waking, dream, deep sleep opens when you fall asleep and when you wake up. So during those moments, any thought consciously inserted, gets into your bio memory and your system deeply.

वायुर्-अनिलम् अमृतम् अथेदम् |
vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ |

Let the vital life energy present in my body merge into all-pervading eternal Cosmic life energy. vāyu-anilam – vāyu is individual prāṇa. Anilam is Cosmic prāṇa. Just remember this one thing tonight and fall asleep. Follow the Guruvāk very sincerely and immediately.

Decide: Let my breathing pattern become the Cosmic breathing pattern. Let the Cosmic breathing pattern become my breathing pattern – vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ.

When you declare: 'Let my prāṇa become the prāṇa of the Cosmos; let my breathing pattern become one with the breathing pattern of the Cosmos,' your bio memory will rest in the space of completion. All incompletion is tension and stress. All completion is relaxation and restfulness. All completion is relaxation. All incompletion is stress.

If you are stressed at work, you are not truly going to do the work, because being in a relaxed state is the basic condition for effective action. Freedom is the foundation for growth. Restful awareness is the essential condition for anything to happen. Stress means you are confused; you are unclear about what you are supposed to do. Completion is restful awareness, and restful awareness is completion. Remember: restfulness is not laziness.

Bhasmāntagṁ Śarīram Technique

The next powerful technique is bhasmāntaṁ śarīram - "the body ends in ashes".

Lie down on your bed and, before falling asleep, declare: "Let my breathing pattern become one with the Cosmic breathing pattern." That declaration is enough. The second part of bhasmāntaṁ śarīram is visualization: see everything burning - your body, the bed, the room, everything you can perceive. All is returning to its original source, Mother Nature.

With this practice, your muscle memory becomes purified and rests in completion. Since muscle memory is stored in your very muscles, you need to include everything your eye muscles can recall. That is why you should visualize not only your body, but also your bed, your room, the surroundings, even the Moon and Sun - everything you can remember.

Visualize it all burning, reducing to ashes. Fall asleep with this awareness. You will find that your muscle memory becomes clear, pure, and complete.

Guru is more powerful than any distraction which is possible above the Sun, below the Sun, under the Sun, in the Sun. Remember, when you are initiated by a Living Incarnation and start practicing, it is directly Samādhi.

First declare: 'Let me and my breathing pattern become one with the Cosmic breathing pattern.' The moment you declare, your whole awareness goes to the next level; then you start falling into Samādhi.

भस्मान्तग्म् शरीरम् |
bhasmāntagṁ śarīram |

Here, the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis are using the word 'śarīram,' not deham. Deham means body. Śarīram means experience of the body. If the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis say, 'bhasmāntagṁ deham,' 'means anything you can remember through this body; visualize all that is also burning. The experience through the body can be as simple as a piece of pizza, intense pain from multiple fractures, anything you experience as good or bad, pain or gain, pleasure or suffering, anything – all that put together is called śarīram.

Bhasmāntaṁ śarīram,"the body-experience ends in ashes." Visualize: This body is burning, the cot on which you lie is burning, room, the house, the garden, the stars, the Earth, the Moon, the Sun, the clouds, all of it is burning. Anything you can recall, or any experience you had from, through, by, or upon the body, all of it, when put together, is called śarīram. At night, visualize everything dissolving into ashes. In the morning, wake up gently with the awareness: "All has turned to ashes." Then, apply bhasma as the prasād of Mahādeva, honoring that purification.

First: when you feel like sleeping, lie down and remember vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ, vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ. It means, 'Let my breathing pattern become one with the Cosmic breathing pattern.' This is a declaration. Second: bhasmāntagṁ śarīram means whatever is experienced as the body and through the body. It means this body and everything that I can remember through this body, let everything go back to its original elements by becoming ashes. Visualize that everything is burning. Just go on visualizing. If you remember the bed you are sleeping on, visualize that it is burning. If you remember the room you are sleeping in, visualize that it is burning. If you remember the garden and outside your room, visualize that it is burning. If you remember the city you are sleeping in, visualize that it is burning. If you remember the planet Earth you are sleeping in, visualize that it is burning. If you remember the Sun, Moon, stars and the sky, visualize that it is burning. Visualize that everything is burning to ashes.

Slowly you will see that automatically you are falling deeply into your restful awareness. When you fall into that space, just ask the Cosmos:

ॐ क्रतो स्मर कृतग्म् स्मर क्रतो स्मर कृतग्म् स्मर |
auṁ krato smara kṛtagṁ smara krato smara kṛtagṁ smara |

'Mahadeva, remember whatever I have done to become one with you,' and tell yourself, 'Hey, remember whatever you have done to become one with Mahādeva.' That's all.

Because in that moment, all obstacles that once stopped you from experiencing Oneness become powerless over you. You do not need to remember them. You only need to remember: "Whatever I have done to become one with You - O Mahādeva, You remember it, and let me also remember it." That's all. With this remembrance, fall asleep. In truth, you will not fall into sleep; you will fall into restful awareness.

When you wake up the next morning, you will carry the bhasma-prasād, the blessing and effect of the whole night's process. Take a little bhasma and apply it, praying: "Mahādeva, let me wake up as You wish. Let the Cosmic breathing pattern be my breathing pattern. Let me function as You desire, carrying and radiating the qualities You want in me."

In this way, even your sleep becomes an Enlightenment practice. Before you fall asleep each night, say:

"Mahādeva, remember whatever I have done for Oneness with You." And tell yourself: "O my being, remember whatever you have done for Oneness with Mahādeva."

The one sacred truth revealed in this Upaniṣadic verse.

वायुर्-अनिलम् अमृतम् अथेदम् भस्मान्तम् शरीरम् |
ॐ क्रतो स्मर कृतम् स्मर क्रतो स्मर कृतम् स्मर || १७ ||
vāyur-anilam amṛtam athedaṁ bhasmāntagṁ śarīram |
auṁ krato smara kṛtagṁ smara krato smara kṛtagṁ smara || 17 ||

Just this one verse is enough. You should practice this whole process by lying down. The best way to lie down is with your left hand under your head, turn towards the left side and right hand on your body. Keep your head in the east direction and stretch your leg towards the west, so that when the Sun rises in the morning, He can wake you up. Once you have mastered this science, you may not even feel like stretching your body fully to sleep.

Here, the Ultimate is called upon using the sacred syllable – Oṃ. You can also use specific words, if you feel like Mahādeva, or if you feel connected to Mahādeva, or if you feel connected to your Guru's name. This specific name does not exclude other things which you cannot visualize along with this specific name. When you utter the word 'Mahādeva' and you cannot visualize Viṣṇu and Brahmā, do not think that they are excluded when you address Lord as Mahādeva. This is an important thing that you need to remember. When you call on God as Mahādeva, and you are not remembering Devī or Viṣṇu or Brahma during the moment of addressing, remembering and praying, do not think that you have excluded them. No. The moment you remember something from the context of Ultimate, you already included everything. In Hindu tradition, Sanātana Hindu Dharma – Oneness is God, not one. God is Oneness, not one. In reality God is Oneness, not one. God is Oneness, not one.

Many times if you remember the Ultimate, 'Oh Cosmic energy,' what you remember, avoid remembering, avoid getting grounded or having incompletion on remembering something clearly, that just pushes you into vagueness. In broadness, immediacy can be lost. In immediacy, broadness can never be lost because when you start, you are progressing and you are getting on with it.

Only thing you need to remember is, when you utter the word 'Mahādeva,' you remember Śiva with four hands as Dakṣiṇāmūrti. Do not think that you have excluded Viṣṇu or Devī. No. From the context of the Ultimate, the moment you remember Mahādeva or your Guru, you have included everybody. You have included the right things and remembered the right things.

So, before going to sleep, lie down, declare to yourself – 'Let my breathing pattern become one with the Cosmic breathing pattern.' Visualize everything you experience as the body and remember through the body everything is burning. Visualize that everything is burning to ashes and returning to its original basic elements. When you are about to slip into restful awareness, remember 'Oh God, my Guru, remember whatever I have done to achieve Oneness with You.' With that remembrance, fall into the restful awareness. Next morning when you wake up, say to yourself – 'Let the Cosmic breathing pattern continue to be my breathing pattern. Mahādeva, let me wake up and live as You want with the qualities You want.'

Maturity and Enlightenment

Your very bio memory vibrates and actively functions only with some basic questions about life like 'What is pleasure?' 'How can I have more?' 'What is pain?' 'How can I avoid that?' 'What is life?' 'Is this understanding going to help me?' 'What is joy?' All these basic truths and basic understandings about life only continue to make you function and act. Entertaining these basic questions – 'What is pain? How can I avoid it?' 'What is joy? How can I have more?' 'What is life?' How many times you may have listened to an answer for these questions from your father, mother, uncle, society, teacher, and finally from Guru, listening to better answers for these questions and clicking with them is maturity. Listening to your own answer and experiencing it ultimately is Enlightenment. 'What is life?' 'What is death?' 'Why suffering?' 'Why pain?' 'What is bliss?' 'What is joy?' 'How can I have more joy?' 'How can I have less pain?' 'What is living inside me?' 'What is changing inside me?' 'What does not change inside me?' 'What is making me move?' 'What is making me tired?' 'What makes me excited?' 'What makes me feel bored?' For these basic questions, if you are getting better answers and clicking with it, that is called maturity. Naturally, the answer your friend gave when you were 5 years old will be different from your mother who gave it when you were 6 years old, or when your father gave it when you were 14 years old. When you finally reach your Guru, the answer He gives will be different. So, clicking with the better answers is maturity. Ultimately, clicking with your own answer, experience, and the questions disappearing completely is Enlightenment.

Seeking is nothing but coming back to the basics. Seeking is nothing but taking up life without vacation. Vacation is nothing but the questions you do not want to face, which is pushing you to live the life you are not living. The questions you pushed under the carpet are jumping from below the carpet. Sometimes, it even bites you in the wrong places. That is the nagging you feel for the need of vacation. If you are living in the right space, the very idea of vacation disappears, meaning you have clearly ironed out your life. You do not need to stand anywhere waiting for something. What is vacation? Vacation means just waiting to get out of the life you are living in to go somewhere and expecting to get something else.

If you are thinking you have to go somewhere for some joy or for something to happen to you, you are just pushing all your basic questions under the carpet. No! Catching it and understanding life where boredom becomes meaningless. The word 'vacation' will become meaningless. When life itself becomes vacation, you are continuously doing something which you are enjoying, cherishing, and feeling blessed constantly. So, come back to the basic questions. Stop cheating yourself with the answers with which you have not clicked. Sometimes, you talk big and say stupid things to others.

You can do all this cheating to others. What about yourself? So, do not hide and escape with the answers with which you have not clicked, the answers which have not become your bio memory and cognitive shift. Do not try to use those answers to attack others or hide and lie to yourself. No! That stupidity will only push you into hell. Any answers you give should become your bio memory and click with you by becoming your cognition. It has to become your cognition. Come back to the basic questions. Make this as seeking and the matured answers as part of your cognition. Come back to the basic questions, grow more and more matured answers, and click with more and more matured answers.

Importance of Fire in Hindu Tradition

Translation: 'O Agne, the Fire God! Knower of all our actions and all that is worth knowing, You must take us along the righteous and auspicious path of completion, leading us to experience the supreme consciousness, the original space of complete completion. O God, consciousness! You may remove all our incompletions that are obstacles on our good path of completion; beyond coming and going, birth and death. Onto You we surrender with many reverential words, bowing down again and again.'

You need to understand that in the Hindu tradition, Agni is considered the bridge to the original God - the experience of Oneness, also called Sadāśiva, or by any name you may choose. Agni is regarded as the bridge to Oneness because anything that has a form, when offered into Agni, is transformed into the formless.

Incompletion is form. Completion is formlessness. When you are complete, you feel light because there is no heaviness of forms or visualizations sitting inside you. Anything that assumes form is an expression of incompletion. When you are incomplete, countless forms clash and fight within you. But in the space of completion, there is only formlessness. No inner forms - only pure formlessness - and that is true completion. In fact, in the state of completion, you will not even remember your own form.

When you do not remember your own form, it is called grace, anugraha.

If you remember your form and constantly attempt to change it - fitting spare parts, removing, painting, tinkering, puncturing, adding, deleting - what you create after all that is called beauty, saundarya.

When you do not even remember your own form in your inner space, that is grace.

But remembering and then de-membering your body is beauty.

When you constantly think: "I wish my nose were a little sharper." "These ears are too small; they could have been better." "This part should be bigger, that part smaller. Then I would look much better." this constant remembrance and desire to alter is incompletion When no form is remembered at all, when the very need to alter disappears, that is completion.

Whatever is offered into the fire (Agni) fire moves them from form to formlessness, name to namelessness. Among the five elements, two are with form and two have no form. Earth and water have form. Air and space have no form. Agni is the bridge which has form and no form. You cannot say Agni is a form. You cannot say Agni is formless. He is the bridge where forms merge and become formless. He is the bridge where incompletions merge and become complete. He is the bridge where sins merge and become merit. He is the bridge where everything disappears and goes back to its Source.

agne naya supathā rāye – Agni is considered the door to Gods. When the Gods land, the fire loses its quality to hurt. In ordinary fire where you did not invoke God, it can hurt, but when God has been invoked, it is no longer fire. It is only the body where God is manifesting internally.

Agni is considered as the bridge in Hindu tradition to relate with God. All of you should learn to relate with God in these three forms – one, in the form of Guru and Deity in the temple. Second, your own Ānanda Gandha. Third, in the fire. First, learn to relate through the Guru and the Deities. Second, by relating through your own Ānanda Gandha, you will learn by meditation.

Third, relating to God through the fire is a very important aspect of Hindu tradition.

The Completion Homa Mantra

अग्ने नय सुपथा राये अस्मान् विश्वानि देव वयुनानि विद्वान् |
युयोध्य् अस्मज् जुहुराणम् एनो भूयिष्ठाम् ते नम-उक्तिम् विधेम || १८ ||
agne naya supathā rāye asmān viśvāni deva vayunāni vidvān |
yuyodhy asmaj juhurāṇam eno bhūyiṣṭhāṁ te nama-uktiṁ vidhema || 18 ||

Agni, the Fire God, is one of the most important deities to be worshipped, and offering into Him is a sacred science. This verse reveals the entire science.

By simply chanting this mantra 1008 times and offering Āhuti or the sacred oblation of ghee or any offering of your choice into Agni, it directly reaches Sadāśiva. This practice naturally leads you into completion.

This mantra is known as the Completion Homa Mantra. Anyone who seeks completion can chant this mantra 1008 times and offer Āhuti to Agni. You will attain completion, because the mantra itself is a direct prayer to Parabrahman, Sadāśiva or Mahādeva, or whichever deity you are worshipping.

Through Agni worship, you are invoking Sadāśiva, Mahādeva, or Parabrahman to bless you with completion.

'O Agne, the Fire God! Knower of all our actions and all that is worth knowing, You must take us along the righteous and auspicious path of completion, leading us to experience the Supreme Consciousness, the original space of Complete Completion. O God, Consciousness! May you remove all our incompletions that are obstacles on our good path of completion; beyond coming and going, birth and death. Onto You we surrender with many reverential words, bowing down again and again.'

'O Agni, the Fire God! Knower of all our actions and all that is worth knowing.'

What a beautiful mantra: agne naya supathā rāye. It means: "O Fire God, lead me along the righteous and auspicious path."

It also conveys: "You know all my actions, and whatever is worth knowing in the Universe, You will reveal to me."

See how this mantra sets the context for God and how He is remembered. Even if you sit before a stone and say, "O stone, representative of the Cosmos," immediately, it is no longer a stone – it becomes God. The very moment you declare, "O stone, representative of God," it transforms into a Deity. From then on, whatever you do – offering or prayer – is done directly to God. Similarly, the moment you say, "O Fire God, You know all my actions, and whatever is worth knowing in the Universe, You will reveal to me," immediately Agni represents knowledge and Enlightenment to you. From then on, whenever you pray to Him, you are relating to Enlightenment itself.

So, when you pray: "Lead me along the righteous and auspicious path of completion", you are invoking the very energy of Enlightenment. You are saying: "O God, lead me to experience Supreme Consciousness, the original space of complete pūrṇatā (completion). May You remove all my incompletions that obstruct the path to Oneness, beyond birth and death. I surrender to You with reverential words, bowing down again and again."

So much innocent devotion flows through this verse. There is no intellectual analysis of who God is. The prayer is simple: "Whoever You are, I am praying to You. I surrender to You. Please accept my surrender." This innocence and surrender radiates through the beauty of this mantra.

Significance of Upaniṣads and Rāmanagaram

The number 18 is very significant in Hindu tradition. Bhagavad Gītā has 18 chapters. Mahābhārata War was 18 days. All the major temples like Śabarimala Temple, Kallazhagar Temple in Madurai or the Engoi Malai always have 18 steps. The 18 akroni senā fought the Mahābhārata War. 18 is a very significant number, but all the 18s come after Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad's 18 verses. This is the first 18 because Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad is the first Upaniṣad.

When Rāma lived in Rāmanagaram, He received all the 108 Upaniṣads at the same time from Mahādeva under our Banyan Tree. When He came back after the victory, Rāma had His Paṭṭābhiṣekam. Rāma showed Hanumān all the places He had travelled to. They had a vacation tour. Hanumān also came to sit in Rāmanagaram Hill. Rāma put together the whole 108

Upaniṣads which He received from Mahādeva and repeated it to Hanumān, and that is called Muktikopaniṣad.

So, Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad is the first Upaniṣad as per Rāmacandra Prabhu. He heard them from Mahādeva. Due to various reasons, nobody has organized all the 108 names together. From Mahādeva, Devī, Saptaṛṣis, Kapila, Nandī, Subrahmaṇya and Rāma heard the entire 108 Upaniṣads. Those who have heard it, nobody chronologically recorded it or chronicled the whole thing and organized the 108 names in a list other than Rāma. Rāma had the habit of staying only in places where there is Jyotirliṅga. Wherever He stayed, He stayed only with Jyotirliṅga like in Nāsik, Trimbakeshwar.

The first Rāmaliṅgam, Rāmeśvara installed by Rāma is this Rāmanagaram Temple. Ours is Svayambhū. The Nityānandeśvara or Mahādeva who is here is a Svayambhū. That is why Rāma stayed here, so that he can have pūjā here every day. But after killing Kākāsura and to remove that sin, He installed a liṅgam in Rāmanagaram Temple. That Rāmeśvara Deity was installed by Him. After that, He goes South after Sītā who was kidnapped. He went to Śrī Laṅkā and you all know the story of Rāmāyaṇam.

When He was here staying with Sītā and Lakṣmaṇa, having beautiful vacation, that was the time He was worshiping Mahādeva under our Banyan Tree, the same Svayambhūliṅga. Please be very clear, the same Svayambhūliṅga under the Banyan Tree, all three of them including the Saptaṛṣis received the 108 Upaniṣads from Mahādeva. Mainly the teaching was given for the sake of Rāma, because Devī, Nandī, Saptaṛṣis, all of them have already received it. The Saptaṛṣis were already staying in Rāmanagara Hill when Rāma came to stay here. So, they inspired Rāma to hear the Upaniṣads from Mahādeva directly. That is the reason He came and worshipped here. In the presence of Devī, Nandī and the Saptaṛṣis, Mahādeva revealed the Upaniṣads to Rāmacandra Prabhu, Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā Birati.

For all three, the Upaniṣads were given. Then the Kākāsura vadh (killing) happened. Subsequently He left to continue His journey and then Sītā was kidnapped. So, He went to conquer Laṅkā in order to bring Sītā back. When He came back, He flew directly to Ayodhyā for Paṭṭābhiṣekam. After the Paṭṭābhiṣekam, along with Hanumān, Sītā, Lakṣmaṇa, Bhārat, Śatrughna, the whole family came for a vacation. When they came here, Rāma showed this Kṣetra to all His family members and once again they went and stayed in Rāmanagar Hill. There Rāma teaches to Hanumān what He heard from Mahādeva. The whole sequence, Rāma recorded it in Muktikopaniṣad. So this sequence is delivered by Mahādeva under this Banyan Tree and recorded by Rāma to Hanumān. We are following the same sequence. That sequence is the oldest recording which we were able to get for this 108 Upaniṣads. Śrī Rāmacandra Prabhu recorded all the 108 names. As per the 108 names, this is the first Upaniṣad – Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad.

Awakening the Fire by Integrity

अग्ने नय सुपथा राये अस्मान् विश्वानि देव वयुनानि विद्वान् |
युयोध्य् अस्मज् जुहुराणम् एनो भूयिष्ठाम् ते नम-उक्तिम् विधेम || १८ ||
agne naya supathā rāye asmān viśvāni deva vayunāni vidvān |
yuyodhy asmaj juhurāṇam eno bhūyiṣṭhāṁ te nama-uktiṁ vidhema || 18 ||
‘O Agni, the Fire God! Knower of all our actions, and all that is worth knowing, you must take us along the righteous and auspicious path of completion.’

You need to understand this first line – ‘O Agni, the Fire God! Knower of all our actions and all that is worth knowing.’ It means, modern science even proves that when your brain knows something, that area lights up. The knowing action happens when the Fire moves into a certain part of the brain. Everything may be there externally, but you will not know if the Fire did not move in your brain. If the Fire moves in your brain, only then you will know what is happening. So, Fire is responsible for the knowledge of knowing what is happening in you.

The Fire gets fully awakened in you by integrity. Just follow integrity intensely, and in twelve months you will have the Fire through which you will be able to know anything you want to know. Anything which comes in front of you and if you want to know about it, you will be able to know about it. That Fire is called Dhī in Sanskrit. In all the ancient languages like Sanskṛt and Tamil, Fire is addressed as Dhī. Dhī comes as a gift to you because of your integrity. Just for twelve months, decide: ‘I will live in the space of integrity only.’ It is just practicing awareness. Nothing else. The Dhī will be awakened in your brain. The Dhī will give you the intelligence to know everything you want to know.

Here, the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis are addressing Agni – the Fire God – as the knower of all our actions.

It means: only when the fire is active in different parts of your brain, knowing (jñāna) happens in you. Without the presence of fire, true knowing cannot occur. Knowing is inseparably connected with fire.

Fire is also deeply related to integrity. Integrity is one of the most powerful practices to awaken higher powers in you.

Integrity itself is like fire.

For example, any coconut kept near fire need not be forcefully broken. With just a gentle knock, it will open easily. In the same way, when fire burns within you, integrity, knowing, and awareness naturally blossom.

Thus, fire, knowing, and integrity are one and the same.

A beautiful Incident from the Life of THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM BHAGAVĀN NITHYĀNANDA PARAMAŚIVAM:

Bhagavān's gurus, Mātā Vibhudānanda Purī and Isakki Svāmī, received their kāṣāya (kavi) when Hamsānanda Svāmī was travelling south on foot towards Rāmeśvaram. They asked Bhagavān to go and meet him. However, during their lifetime, Bhagavān was not able to meet him. Only after His gurus left the body, Bhagavān went to have the darśan of Hamsānanda Svāmī and stayed with him for some time.

Hamsānanda Svāmī lived in great simplicity. A few devotees who came daily would bring potatoes and salt. He would accept only a little rice and potatoes, which he mixed with ghṛta (ghee) and salt. He would boil the potatoes, add ghee and salt, make them into a ball, and mix it into the rice before consuming.

Those who brought rice, potatoes, and ghee would often request him: "Bābājī, give us some upadeśa (teaching)." In Bengali they would plead, "Kuch bolo, give us some upadeśa." Hamsānanda Svāmī, with innocence, would make fun of them, saying, "Hey, I have not read anything." Pointing towards Bhagavān, he would add, "He is a bahut bade bābā (a great saint). He is a Bālasant who has learned all the Upaniṣads and Śāstra."

Then Hamsānanda Svāmī would request Bhagavān, "You say something to them." Bhagavān, who could speak a little Bengali, would explain the Upaniṣads in his simple, broken Bengali.

The Moment of Transmission

Once, when Bhagavān was explaining the 18th mantra of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, He suddenly felt someone gazing at Him intensely. It was like that strange sensation when you know someone is staring at you from behind, and you turn instinctively.

At that time, Bhagavān was sitting on the banks of the Gaṅgā in Calcutta, where the river is at its most powerful. To truly experience Gaṅgā in Calcutta is to witness her as Kālabhairava and Kālī Herself - fierce and vast, sometimes two kilometers wide, constantly changing direction during the tides. Unlike Haridwar, where Gaṅgā feels like a gentle maiden, here she roars with immense power.

So powerful is Gaṅgā here that when the ocean flows inward, she still pushes against it, transforming seven kilometers of ocean water into drinkable sweetness before finally merging. Only after seven kilometers does the water turn salty.

On those sacred banks stood a small temple with deities of Gaṇeśa and Durgā, and nearby was a modest room where a Nāga Bābā lived. He wore no clothes, sat on a simple gunny sack, and was occasionally provided with rice, potatoes, and roti by wealthy Jain devotees. This place was known as Tel Ghāṭ.

The Divine Glance

As Bhagavān was explaining the 18th mantra, He felt that intense gaze. Turning around, He saw that Hamsānanda Svāmī was staring directly at Him. Bhagavān asked, "Why are you looking at me like this, Bābā?"

Hamsānanda Svāmī replied:

"When you were explaining so intensely, I realized that everything you were sharing comes directly from your own experience. So I wanted to look into your inner space and grasp it. When I looked within, I saw the opening of the whole Cosmos. I got frightened because you turned towards me. But I can see very clearly - everything you are saying is directly from your experience. These people who are listening are truly blessed."

अग्ने नय सुपथा राये अस्मान् विश्वानि देव वयुनानि विद्वान् |
युयोध्य् अस्मज् जुहुराणम् एनो भूयिष्ठाम् ते नम-उक्तिम् विधेम || १८ ||
agne naya supathā rāye asmān viśvāni deva vayunāni vidvān |
yuyodhy asmaj juhurāṇam eno bhūyiṣṭhāṁ te nama-uktiṁ vidhema || 18 ||

Agni is the knower of all of our actions and all that is worth knowing in the Universe. Anywhere knowledge is happening, Agni has to be there. Without Agni knowledge cannot happen. All the spaces, planets where Agni is not possible, then knowledge is not possible. The modern day scientists are saying if there is a place with water, human beings and aliens will be there. It is not true. If there is a place where Agni can happen, then life and knowledge can happen. Agni is the knower of all our actions and everything worth knowing. Whatever is worth knowing on the planet Earth, only Agni knows it.

Constant Prayer for Enlightenment

The Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis are addressing Agni as knower of all our actions and all that is worth knowing. Then they pray – 'You must take us along the righteous and auspicious path of completion.' The prayer is not casual. It is very deep and specific when they say, 'You must take us along a righteous and auspicious path of completion.'

सुपथा राये अस्मान् विश्वानि देव वयुनानि विद्वान् |

supathā rāye asmān viśvāni deva vayunāni vidvān |

'You must take us along the righteous and auspicious path of completion which leads us to experience the Supreme Consciousness, the original space of complete completion.' This is the best prayer you can offer to God when you meet Him personally. 'Please take me along the righteous and auspicious path of completion which leads us to experience the Supreme Consciousness.'

Praying for Enlightenment is the greatest thing that can happen to you. Intensely seek for Enlightenment and pray for Enlightenment. The more and more you pray for Enlightenment, the more and more your routine will become integrated. Laziness will never be part of you. Boredom will never be part of you. Boredom and laziness is nothing but you not wanting to hold onto your ideals. That's all. You do not want to hold onto what is life for you and what life holds for you. You do not need to poison a man who has become lazy and bored because he is already poisoned.

If you want to destroy someone, teach them laziness. Make them tired and bored. That destroys them. Laziness and boredom grow when you forget the purpose of your existence.

Seeking truth and praying for Enlightenment kindles the inner fire intensely and the system begins to reinvent itself, rapid healing and transformation happen.. You awaken yourself. It is like amṛta, nectar. in old age: drink it and you feel sixteen years old again.

If you have wheezing, digestive troubles, or common colds, pray for Enlightenment. For sleeplessness, tiredness, boredom, or daydreaming: pray constantly and intensely for Enlightenment. As daytime daydreaming drops, night dreaming also subsides, you become fully alive. Constant, intense prayer awakens joy and the Fire-energy within you and keeps it alive.

Pray with this context always: even while you are praying, you are He So'ham Asmi. Pray intensely and constantly for Enlightenment), holding the awareness as you pray.

Innocent surrender Vs Ignorant Surrender

The best prayer you can do is 'lead us and take us along the righteous and auspicious path of Completion, the original space of Complete Completion.' The next line is 'O God, Consciousness. May you remove all of our incompletions that are obstacles on our good path, and completion beyond coming and going, birth and death.'

There are two important sacred secrets to understand in this verse.The first is innocent surrender.

Second being ignorant surrender which happens when you do not truly know what surrender is. You do not know to whom you are surrendering, what will happen after you surrender, what will happen if you do not surrender, or even the original purpose of surrender itself. If, in the name of surrender, you are only trying to throw away your responsibility, that is ignorant surrender.

Innocent surrender, on the other hand, means you are fully aware. You understand everything clearly, yet you do not carry any inner insecurity about walking this path. That is the sacred beauty of innocent surrender.

Innocent surrender means you have a complete understanding of what surrender is to whom you are surrendering, what will happen after surrendering, what will happen if you do not surrender, and the right context of surrender. You know everything. And yet, you are not shaken by fear of transformation or the inner changes it may bring. Ask yourself: What are you really afraid of? With surrender, your very taste for life may shift. Suddenly, you may start liking something entirely new. Then comes the fear: What about the things I have worked for the last ten years? What will happen to the house I designed and built? What about the car I bought? What will happen to all of it if my desires, fears, and very thinking begin to change? This fear of losing your old self is what keeps you from the freedom of true, innocent surrender.

When you mature, your desires mature along with you. If you insist that your desires should never change, you stop your own growth. The natural maturing of desires and fears is renunciation. Renunciation is not denunciation. In the Hindu tradition, vairāgya is not arāgya.True renunciation simply means your desires and fears evolve with maturity. You may have heard thousands of conspiracy theories, but the greatest conspiracy against humanity is this:

People have been made to fear the very possibility of their desires maturing.

There is a caterpillar sitting inside a small cocoon and you frighten it by saying, 'Hey, if you become a butterfly, how are you going to eat? Here at least your food is guaranteed. Inside this cocoon, you have food and nobody can attack you. If you become a butterfly, how are you going to save yourself? What are you going to eat?'

Trying to suppress human beings without letting them taste off the grid life is the greatest conspiracy. All the best things Bharat has and Sanātana Hindu Dharma has is through the rebels who have learned to live off the grid when they were young. If you are young, learn to live off the grid. The powerfulness it brings in you! Even if you are hooked to the grid later on, the grid will be at your feet. You will not be at the feet of the grid. From then on, nothing can bind you.

All the traditions in Hinduism need to be revived, re-lived, enjoyed, cherished, spread, enriched because this tradition taught the world to live off the grid. No society in the world is more compassionate than Bharat's society which loves, respects and reveres people who decided to live off the grid. In any other country, if you decide to live off the grid, it is illegal. In this country, if you decide to live off the grid, people will wash your feet and give you food.

Fear of your desires maturing will stop you from maturing. Any society that frightens its people about maturity is bound to destroy itself. Let us add more and more maturity. Let your desires and fears ripen. If you are afraid of death and the karmas that may strike you after death, understand: you are no longer in the same state, you have already matured. You are not afraid of death itself, but only of the karmas that may or may not come after it. But, when you fear death, you spend your life building bigger walls and stronger locks. But when you fear karma, you start planning for completion. Fear of death keeps you imprisoned. Fear of karma moves you toward liberation. Even fear, when it matures, is growth.

With surrender, the first transformation you will notice is this: your desires and fears begin to mature. In the end, they completely disappear, that is the ultimate experience. But the very moment you start practicing surrender, your desires and fears will start maturing. Your anxieties, fears, emotions, and incompletions, all of them will begin to mature. You may not have incompletion with the people around you or with day-to-day life, but you may still carry an incompletion with incompletion itself. This is not the same as feeling incomplete because someone did not smile at you, or because they ignored you, or even because they poured water on you. Those are external triggers. But incompletion with incompletion itself is much deeper. It cannot be compared to the small frictions you face with people. It is the root that surrender works on.

Even your incompletion and anxiety will become more mature. Ultimately, this incompletion will disappear. That is experience. But, even maturity shows growth. The moment you start practicing surrender, the first thing that will happen to you is maturity in your desires, anxieties, fears, greed, everything. Live with people who have matured, you will love life. This whole prayer is such a matured prayer and surrender! If you are surrendering to someone to save your life, or to have two square meals, it is stupid surrender. You are becoming a slave. If you are surrendering to someone to ask for Enlightenment and to lead you beyond birth and death, that is matured surrender. Even in surrender there is maturity. Understand the context.

The moment you start practicing surrender, your surrender itself, your fears, your anxieties, and your desires - all begin to mature. Surrender smokes out all your hypocrisy and burns it. Suddenly, you know what hypocrisy is. You know why you are a hypocrite. The very first root of hypocrisy is this: the fear society implants in you about your desires maturing.

Renunciation does not mean solving your old problems - it means making them redundant, irrelevant in your life. The more you practice surrender, the more it smokes out the hypocrisy you keep hugging. And remember: cuddling hypocrisy is not cute. Hypocrisy is not a cuddly bear, it is a cut-y bear, the kind that will bite you. So, don't cuddle your hypocrisy. Drop it.

Celebrate your desires maturing. your fears maturing, your anxieties maturing, your decisions maturing, your vision maturing. Then, you will naturally celebrate surrender - because in true spiritual surrender, the caterpillar becomes the butterfly.

On Mahādeva's form, every detail represents a profound truth. The snake, symbolizing Kuṇḍalinī Śakti, denotes surrender, the ultimate offering of power to the Divine. There are two kinds of surrender: Innocent surrender - you know what surrender is, you understand it deeply, and you are free from fear. Ignorant surrender is where you do not know anything about surrender, and you use the word only for bargaining. On Mahādeva's form, the snake reveals innocent surrender—what a mature prayer!

'Oh God, Consciousness, may you remove all our incompletions that are obstacles on our good path of completion; beyond coming and going, birth and death. Onto you we surrender, with many reverential words, because we do not know any other words. We only know the reverence we carry in our heart and we do not know how to verbalize it, so we offer that as it is. Bowing down again and again. Bowing down again and again.'

When money gets added, your taste in life changes. When power gets added, your taste in life changes. When name and fame gets added, your taste in life changes. When surrender gets added, maturity happens in you. The biggest change you can have in your life is maturity.

When money is added, you get new desires, new ways of thinking, new fears - but it does not mean your old desires have dissolved or become redundant. Similarly, when name and fame or power get added, You accumulate more desires and more fears - but the old ones continue to exist. But when maturity gets added, something very different happens. Your old desires and fears start becoming redundant. This process, where old desires and fears are constantly made redundant, is maturity. And that is renunciation. Renunciation is not denunciation. It is not hatred or rejection. It is simply the natural redundancy of what no longer belongs to you.

Ability to make old desires and fears redundant is the ability to keep life alive. If you have that ability, you can make disease redundant in your body, boredom redundant in your mind, suffering redundant in your emotions, pain redundant in your relationships. Ultimately, you will become redundant. That is Enlightenment. Make things, places, people redundant in your life. When you mature, those people who constantly talk about shares, clothes, cars, bank balances and their net worth will become redundant to you.

Innocent surrender means you know about everything and you are not afraid of it. The fear of maturity is the worst fear taught to humanity. This is the biggest conspiracy done against humanity. Chemical agriculture and allopathic medicines are the attack on your body. Overly sexed and violence-based entertainment is an attack on your mind. Fear of maturity is an attack on humanity

With this prayer, the Upaniṣad leads you from impersonal relationships to personal feeling connection. You can always cheat yourself with some good ideas, concepts and never connecting with the Source. This verse does not allow you to do that. This verse awakens your feeling connection.

Essence of Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad - Intense Seeking

Seeking is the way the God in you awakens. Just as in the early morning you sometimes realize you are dreaming and that very awareness wakes you up. Seeking is what wakes you up to your own reality. Do not fall back asleep when seeking arises in you. Do not turn away from it. After knowing you are dreaming, if you simply pull the blanket over yourself and continue to sleep, what a waste! Same way, after having found seeking, after experiencing seeking and after tasting seeking in your life, if you just turn around and lose that intensity in seeking, that is the most stupid thing that can happen to you in life.

Anything can be lost but not seeking. Anything lost, you can get it back. Money, you can get it within 24 hours. Health, you can get it in a few weeks, if you lose it. There is nothing called character. It is just your understanding and ideas. If you alter it, you can get it back immediately. Anything lost, you can get it back but not seeking. Seeking is not something to do with mind. It is something to do with your very consciousness.

Seeking is the love letter from your Beloved who is eternally living in your heart. If you miss that, you may have to wait forever and ever to get the second letter. It is a message from your Beloved who is eternally residing in your heart. Anything can be lost but not seeking. Body can be lost because immediately you can have another one. There are billions of bodies on planet Earth. Mind can be lost because immediately you can produce another one. Anything can be lost and you can get it back but not seeking.

Constantly keep your inner quest and basic questions alive until they become experiential answers and not intellectual answers. What am I doing everyday? What I am doing now is it moving and pushing me towards where I am supposed to reach?

Where am I going? Where am I heading?

If you function from seeking, you will be fueled by the right Source. Fear and greed should not fuel you. Do not mistake this to mean you should not work. Many stupid people say, "If I should not work out of fear and greed, then I should not work at all." No. Drop the fear and greed, but not the work. Let seeking be your energy source and fuel. When you utilize seeking as the energy source all day for your thinking and planning, you will not fall asleep at night, you will fall into Turīya, the fourth state of Consciousness, and wake up.

The essence of the whole Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, the lesson you need to learn from the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad is, intense seeking. Intense seeking. The 18th verse emphasizes on praying and surrendering. Ultimately, man cannot make it. Only God has to make it. Only He has to make it for you, so that is why – 'Oh God, Consciousness may you remove all our incompletions that are obstacles on our good path of completion, beyond coming and going, birth and death. Onto You, we surrender with many reverential words, bowing down again and again, bowing down again and again.'

Surrender and devotion: when your bio energy is kindled and awakened, devotion and surrender will be the first thing that happens in your bio memory. Your whole body and mind will start tasting devotion and surrender.

When the gratitude overflows, that is the only thing you will do. Nothing else can be done. You do not know what to do. pranamāmi muhur muhur means bowing down again and again. When your bio energy, God particle, Kuṇḍalinī Śakti is awakened, you will feel heightened seeking in your bio memory. When the seeking happens in your life, you should be micromanaging and planning 10 times more. Only real seeking starts filling your bio memory and shaking your bio memory for that seeking. Normally if you are managing only one shop, if the seeking awakens in you, you would be able to manage 10 shops. That is the fire of seeking. Only then your seeking has penetrated into your bio memory.

When the God particle, Kuṇḍalinī Śakti, the primal bio-energy awakens within you, the very first thing that happens is that your bio-memory is shaken with seeking. Everything in your old cognition begins to tremble and dissolve. Old patterns, beliefs, and limitations explode and collapse, making way for new cognitions. These new cognitions are unshakable; like a huge rock, impervious to collapse. The first manifestation in your bio-memory is seeking exploding in your muscle memory, releasing a tremendous surge of energy. Suddenly, you notice your tiredness disappearing. You experience an overflow of energy, and a deep, vibrant joy permeates your day-to-day life.

The devotion and surrender expressed in this verse can be a powerful source of energy for you even by contemplating on it. Essence of this whole Upaniṣad is seeking, seeking. Seek the basic truths of 'Who am I? Who am I? What am I? Who am I? What am I? Who am I? What am I? Where am I heading? What am I doing? How is life happening?' Keep these basic questions alive and aligning your every breath to these basic questions.

Integrating every breath with these fundamental questions and aligning yourself fully to them is seeking. Integrating yourself with both the questions and the answers received from the Master is Living Enlightenment. Integrating yourself to understand the source of these questions and answers is surrender. Integrating yourself with all the questions is seeking. Integrating yourself with the answers received from the Master is Living Enlightenment. Integrating yourself with the truth that He is the source of all questions and answers is surrender.

The Upaniṣad starts with the declarations which will start the seeking in you, and it will end with a tremendous surrender.

पूर्णमदः पूर्णमिदं पूर्णात् पूर्णमुदच्यते ।
पूर्णस्य पूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते ॥
aum pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidaṃ pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate ।
pūrṇasya pūrṇamādāya pūrṇamevāvaśiṣyate ॥

ईशावास्यम् इदग्म् सर्वम् यत् किञ्च जगत्याम् जगत् |
īśāvāsyam idagṁ sarvam yat kiñca jagatyām jagat |

It ends with a tremendously powerful surrender note. The essence of Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad is seeking.

Kenopaniṣad

Introduction: Seeking the Source - 'By Whom Am I'

Brief technical introduction: the word 'kena' means 'whom.' The Upaniṣad appears as the 9th chapter of the Talavakāra Brāhmaṇa of the Sāmaveda, and also known as Talavakāra Upaniṣad or Jaiminī Brāhmaṇa. It consists of 35 verses and Śānti Mantra. It is one of the very important Upaniṣads. As per the Muktikopaniṣad, it is the second Upaniṣad in the whole order.

Kena means whom, by whom. Keneṣitaṃ – 'by whom willed or directed.' Directing the enquiry of the truth to its very Source, is the seed of Kenopaniṣad. Please understand, this Upaniṣad directs your seeking to the Source. Let's start with the Śānti Mantra (peace invocation chant)

Understand the subject matter of the Kenopaniṣad. The essence of Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad is seeking. The essence of Kenopaniṣad is seeking into the very Source, not just 'Who am I?,' 'By whom am I?' Understand, 'Who am I' starts and ends inside your body. 'By whom am I' starts and ends in Cosmos. There is a big difference between: 'Who am I?' and 'By whom am I?' Enquiring into you is seeking. Enquiring into the Source is seeking the very Source.

The subject matter of Kenopaniṣad deals with multiple important sacred secrets and sacred truths of which the essence is 'Whom am I? By whom am I? By whom, by whose will everything came to existence. Whom am I?'

Some of the greatest minds produced on Earth were Ṛṣis. Some of the finest beings who have ever lived on this planet were Ṛṣis. Please understand: if someone explains to you who Śiva is - "All-pervasive, akhilāṇḍa-koṭi-brahmāṇḍa-nāyaka sacchidānanda parabrahmā, the creator, sustainer, and destroyer; the one who deludes and liberates souls" - and if you are able to visualize it and enjoy it, be very clear: you are blessed.

Only if your brain has developed subtle grooves capable of enjoying such higher truths can you truly understand them. Understanding and enjoyment are intertwined: if you understand it, you will enjoy it; if you enjoy it, you will understand it.

A rough, gross, and dull mind can never comprehend this. For such a person, life is limited to: "What can I grab today and shove behind my seat?" He will not even worry if someone else steals it from behind the seat. He does not even have the time to check whether what he has hidden behind the seat is still there.

A gross, power-hungry, lazy, tired, and bored individual cannot comprehend these subtle truths. His brain cannot capture such visualizations, and because he cannot capture them, he cannot enjoy them. And because he cannot enjoy them, he cannot apprehend them - it is a vicious circle. Even regarding the Guru, the same principle applies: if you are able to enjoy His qualities, you will understand them; if you understand them, you will be able to enjoy them. If you are able to enjoy them, know with certainty that you are blessed.

Power of the Brain to Cognize and Live Higher Truths

An ignorant, tired, agitated, and dull person can never apprehend subtle truths or subtle qualities. Because he cannot imagine, he cannot enjoy; and because he does not enjoy, he cannot visualize. The brain's ability to perceive the subtlest visualizations develops through extended practice of internal silence - unclutching or meditation. Understand that through profound internal silence, your brain develops the capacity to apprehend the subtlest visualizations. The ability to apprehend the most subtle visualizations is awakened intelligence. Those who can grasp the subtlest truths become Ṛṣis. The Ṛṣis' brains evolve and develop such refined grooves that they begin reflecting and capturing cosmic truths, becoming like a pure, silent pond in which the moon reflects as if it has descended to Earth.

Practices such as surrender, unclutching, Ānanda Gaṇḍha Dhyāna, or Complete Completion not only bring peace to the heart but also enhance the subtlety of the brain's grooves and its capacity to apprehend higher truths. Your brain's ability to apprehend higher truths, and to embody them, creates a record that becomes the foundation for cognition and the goal of life. Even if only once, if you are able to understand and apprehend the word sacchidānanda (sat-cit-ānanda) - existence, consciousness, bliss - or any subtle experience, imagination, or visualization, and your brain can capture it, it establishes that as the foundation for its functioning.

Science of Hindu Astronomy and Astrology

The sophistication with which the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis were able to reflect the whole of reality is astonishing! The detail with which they described the stars and planets in the Vedas and Āgamas will leave you shocked. Unless one is able to see with inner vision, one cannot record such detail.

The greatest conspiracy against Bhārat is that Hindu astronomy and astrology were denied due respect and legitimacy; they have been dismissed in the name of myth and mythology. If you study it carefully, you will understand that the oldest and the most far-reaching predictions can be made only through our calendar, the Pañcikā. The science is extraordinarily precise.

You may wonder: what telescopes did they use? What satellites did they employ? How did they record such precise details? One Ṛṣi would sit in Samādhi and reflect the entire cosmos in his inner space. Another Ṛṣi would observe this inner space and, like fast-forwarding an iPad, record it meticulously. That is how it was done.

The first Ṛṣi, through purity and Complete Completion, would reflect the entire Milky Way and cosmos within his inner space, while the second Ṛṣi would manipulate this vision - pushing, pulling, fast-forwarding, rewinding, zooming in and out - and pen it down. The more your inner space reaches completion, the more you can perceive the sacred secrets of the Source and the cosmos.

Role of Completion in Reflecting the Higher Truths

This question, "By whom?" – keneṣitaṃ – is the essence of the Kena Upaniṣad. You can experience this essence if your inner space is completely complete. When you are ready with completion, it can reveal the exact reflection of keneṣitaṃ("By whom?").

In this Upaniṣad, Devī is the Guru. Understand that it is directly from Devī. For the first time in this Upaniṣad, the word Uma appears; Devī is addressed as Uma here. The words Īśvara and Īśā are used for Mahādeva in the first Upaniṣad. With even a little internal completion, you can reflect, capture, and visualize the exact and most subtle experiences.

Consider this example: if a child of 7 or 8 years is repeatedly exposed to pornography, the age of physical maturity accelerates by more than 70%. This means that physical maturity, which is naturally supposed to occur around the age of 14, is drastically brought forward. By the age of 8, the body may already be physically mature. When the body repeatedly visualizes sexual activity, whether through pornography or other reminders, the brain prepares the body to experience it in reality. The brain effectively converts these visualizations into actual experience.

If we want the next generation to be sexually healthy, pornography must be banned. There is a common misconception that exposure to pornography will help the next generation enjoy sex. This is not true; it leads to serious consequences. To ensure a healthy sexual life for the next generation, pornography must be prohibited, as it accelerates physical maturity and severely damages overall health.

Anything that your brain can capture and enjoy, your life will manifest into reality. If your brain can capture and enjoy the subtlest understandings of cosmic sacred secrets and spiritual powers, you will naturally become a Yogī or Divya Śarīrī. If you enjoy pornography, your body will become physically mature prematurely. Conversely, if you enjoy these subtle powers and understandings, your body will naturally become Divya Śarīrī; you will become a Yogī, Bāla Yogī, or Bālasant.

A Bālasant is a person whose brain captures the highest conscious truths and the subtlest truths while still young. The way your brain absorbs these subtle truths directly influences the manifestation in your body; you become a Yogī, a Divya Śarīrī, an embodiment of Mahādeva, a Bālasant.

Understand that the ability to reflect the subtlest truths, the sacred understandings, the most profound bliss, and the powerfulness of Consciousness, as well as the ability to perceive the source of the cosmos, arises only with tremendous completion and peace in your inner space. The essence of the Kena Upaniṣad is seeking the Source, the Cosmos. You can experience it by developing the subtle grooves of the brain and evolving through complete inner completion.

The Thought Current Of Seeking

People often ask: "Human beings are just developed monkeys, so how are we able to perceive so much about the universe, planets, and space? How can we understand so much about all of this? Why are other animals, even our closest relatives – chimpanzees - not able to comprehend or understand the universe in the same way? Why are human beings able to understand, perceive, and even manipulate reality as we wish? We already have space stations. If a large asteroid were to approach Earth, we could blast it or redirect it from there itself. We are already capable of manipulating movements in space. How is this possible?"

Please understand: only human beings began asking the question keneṣitaṃ – "By whom?" The Kena Upaniṣad is responsible for preserving one of the most important and powerful thought currents that underpin human intelligence. Certain thought currents shape why human beings are the way they are.

The first thought current: "Who am I?"

The second thought current: "What happens after death?"

The third thought current, the most subtle, precious, and significant: "What is the source of all this?"

Humanity has kept the question of what happens after death alive, and this Upaniṣad has preserved the subtle currents of thought that allow us to explore the source of everything.

Upaniṣads: Thought Currents, Not Conclusions

Please understand, no Upaniṣad is a conclusion. Neither the Īśā, Kena, Kaṭha, Muṇḍaka, nor Māṇḍūkya - no Upaniṣad presents conclusions. That is their beauty. The Upaniṣads are consolidated streams of seeking and thought-currents, meant for further research and exploration. They are not final answers. In the entire Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, you will not find a single definitive answer. Instead, you find theses, living thought-currents meant to be cherished, pondered upon, and reflected upon. These thought-currents may give rise to a thousand questions and two thousand answers. When preserved and carried forward to the next generation, they may inspire ten thousand questions and twenty thousand answers. This is their purpose - to keep the flame of seeking alive.

Understand: the Upaniṣadic Masters were never interested in controlling society in the name of religion. No. Religion protecting the state and the state protecting religion was never their concern. That is why, on the whole planet Earth, there has never been a country created for Hinduism. We never sought such a thing. As long as human life exists, Hinduism will be practiced. If its practice disappears within us, know for certain that humanity itself has come to an end. For as long as life remains on Earth, the truths of the Upaniṣads will continue to be lived.

We were never focused on creating rigid systems that psychologically control or manipulate human beings. If we had wanted that kind of system, we would have set strict rules: How many times should you marry? How many times must you pray? In what way must you pray? But such concerns never interested us.

The Upaniṣads exist to preserve and present valuable thought-currents that humanity must cherish, enjoy, and explore - taking them deeper and deeper, higher and higher, into the realms of possibility.

For example, the Kaṭhopaniṣad records the thought-current of death. Why does death happen? What is it? What comes after? Understand clearly: it does not provide answers. It is not a collection of fixed doctrines. The so-called "Hindu Book of the Dead" is not a set of rigid conclusions about death; it is a living thought-current of seeking about death.

If you simply read the Upaniṣads, you will not find any conclusions to practice. When an enlightened being expands upon them, he may give you answers - but even those answers are meant for you to cherish, contemplate, and think through. Understand this truth: this is one of the major differences between the Upaniṣads and other religious scriptures. The Upaniṣads are not about rules of dos and don'ts (vidhi–niṣedha). No. They are about thought-currents that you must cherish, enjoy, and entertain so that higher intelligence may awaken in you.

The Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad captures the thought-current of seeking. Throughout the entire Upaniṣad, there are no conclusions. As you continue to think and contemplate, you awaken the thought-current of seeking, which may give you ten thousand answers and twenty thousand questions - or ten thousand questions and twenty thousand answers.

That is why we have a beautiful word in the Hindu tradition describing the Upaniṣads: kalpalatā. It means "the creeper from which great imaginations blossom, open, and flower." Latā means creeper- on which great kalpanās (visualizations, contemplations, higher understandings) flower. The Upaniṣads are not a set of answers. They are more like the seed of a creeper from which profound understandings continuously blossom. If you go on contemplating the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, you may arrive at thousands of questions and thousands of answers. The Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad itself is not an answer—it is a thought-current. When you cherish that thought-current, your higher intelligence awakens.

īśāvāsyam idaṃ sarvaṃ means "Whatever existed, exists, or will exist is pervaded by energy and intelligence." This is not an answer - it is a seed for contemplation. If everything that exists is energy and intelligence, then how about my mother-in-law? What about the problems I face? What about the diseases in my body? What about my boss- is he also God? It is a seed meant to awaken in you a powerful thought-current that may yield thousands of experiences, questions, and answers. This very thought-current will upgrade the way you exist.

Understand: it is like taking vitamins and proteins - the very way you work out and exercise gets upgraded. In the same way, when you cherish the thought-currents stored in each Upaniṣad, your very way of living is uplifted. Cherish them, enjoy them, and spend pleasant time with them as you would at the banks of the Gaṅgā, the peaks of Aruṇācala, or the valleys of the Himalayas - for these are the sacred spaces where one romances with the Upaniṣads. Ultimately, the highest space to romance with the Upaniṣads is in the presence of the Master, where everything merges. His words are the flowing Gaṅgā. The way He raises your consciousness is the peak of Aruṇācala. The depths of your being that He reveals to you are the valleys of the Himalayas. That is the true space to romance with the Upaniṣads.

Romancing With Upaniṣads

Understand: these are the exact and right words - "romancing with the Upaniṣads." It means sitting and contemplating on them, spending time with those thought-currents. It is not about mechanically memorizing or mechanically trying to read the Śaṅkara Bhāṣya, Rāmānuja Bhāṣya, Madhva Bhāṣya, Nimbārka Bhāṣya, Bāmatī Bhāṣya, Śrīkaṇṭha Bhāṣya, or any other Bhāṣyas (commentaries). Merely reading commentaries for the sake of repetition or examination is mechanical. No; romance with the thought-current of the Upaniṣads.

With the Kaṭhopaniṣad, you must romance with the thought-current of death. When you romance with death, he does not appear with a big moustache; instead, he comes with a clean-shaven face as Mahādeva! He does not come to take things away from you; he comes to upgrade your very frequency.

Just romance with the thought-current of the Kaṭhopaniṣad for twenty days. Sit with its concepts, ideas, and thought-currents. You will see - you will naturally attract wealth. Please understand: romancing with the thought-current of death removes powerlessness within you. The moment powerlessness is removed, two things manifest in your life- health and wealth.

Romancing with the thought-currents of the Kaṭhopaniṣad is the highest Lakṣmī Pūjā you can perform.

Death is the greatest giver, because he has taken from everyone. He is the richest, for his treasury is too vast. He can shower abundance on you. His treasury is even greater than Kubera's, because he has taken even from Kubera. Even Kubera is under the sway of death. Till Brahmā himself, all are subject to death. So understand that entertaining and romancing with the thought-currents expressed in the Upaniṣads upgrades the very way you exist. Your inner chattering itself transforms into a long, beautiful seeking and prayer.

All day long, the thought-current with which you are romancing determines your frequency. If you romance with the thought-current of worrying, naturally you will attract worry. If you romance with the thought-currents of the Upaniṣads, your very frequency becomes elevated.

The Kenopaniṣad is not a bundle of answers. No. Only when you become more and more unconscious do you need to be controlled by rules of dos and don'ts.

Seeking The Source of The Whole

The Kenopaniṣad preserves the thought-current of seeking the Source of the Whole. Seeking the Source of the Whole - that is the current kept alive by the Kenopaniṣad. When you read this Upaniṣad, romance with that thought-current.

The Upaniṣad is divided into four parts. The first two are presented as a dialogue between Guru and disciple. Interestingly, the Guru's name is not recorded, in order to retain its apaurūṣeyatva (authorlessness). The truths expressed here are so powerful that they stand on their own authority. They require no author's name for validation; their authenticity is self-established. The last two parts are composed in prose.

The Kenopaniṣad contains beautiful ingredients. Not only does it preserve the thought-current of seeking the Source of the Whole, it also guides you toward the ultimate experience you are meant to reach. Until that experience manifests, continue your journey of romancing with this thought-current. Each thought-current expressed, recorded, and preserved in the Upaniṣads is a priceless treasure for humanity, meant to upgrade the very way we exist.

Cherish the Kenopaniṣad - your very frequency will transform.

Cherish the Kaṭhopaniṣad - your very existence itself will be elevated.

Cherish the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad - your way of being will shift into a higher dimension.

Whoever cherishes these Upaniṣads, their frequency rises from śava (lifeless body) to Śiva. Their very frequency rises to Mahādeva.

Thought Currents of Upaniṣads Lead to Solutions by Experience

The essence of the Kenopaniṣad is seeking the Source of the Whole. Understand: seeking the source of yourself is the essence of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad. Seeking the Source of the Whole is the essence of the Kenopaniṣad. Seeking what happens after death is the essence of the Kaṭhopaniṣad.

Each Upaniṣad offers a thought-current, not direct answers. If you read the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, you will not find the ready-made answer to "Who am I?" No. If you read the Kenopaniṣad, you will not be handed the answer to "What is the source of all this?"

If you read the Kaṭhopaniṣad, you will not discover a straightforward answer to "What happens after death?" No. But if you contemplate (manana), if you engage, entertain, and cherish the thought-current, the Upaniṣad will open itself within you, revealing insights. Then you will discover answers, you will gain experience, and you will arrive at experiential solutions.

If you engage with the thought-current of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, you will naturally find resolution for the question "Who am I?" The identity crisis will dissolve. The pratyakātma-caitanya-jāgratam - the awakening of individual consciousness - will simply happen within your system.

The Upaniṣads are penned in such a way that, when you begin to cherish, celebrate, and contemplate them, they open up direct experiences in you. You cannot turn them into a shop; you cannot "sell" the ideas of the Upaniṣads. They do not provide conclusions in the form of dos and don'ts: "Do this, don't do that." No. Vidhi–niṣedha - prescriptive rules - are not their purpose.

The Hindu tradition is so pure that it transmits only thought-currents. If you enjoy and celebrate these thought-currents, you will naturally find solutions for your life. This is the strength of Hinduism. We are not a religion to be spread. We are religiousness itself - the essence from which all religions emerge. Hinduism does not give dos and don'ts; it gives thought-currents.

The whole Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad should be cherished continuously - thinking about it, contemplating on it, and engaging in Vākyārtha Sadas with it. The more Vākyārtha Sadas happen, the more the thought-currents get engaged. When you entertain these thought-currents, you develop a new method of cognizing, a new way of existing, a new way of perceiving, a new way of experiencing. This is what manifests the Divya Śarīra - the divine body. With that divine body, you perceive, cognize, respond, react, and celebrate the whole universe. When you entertain the thought-currents of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, you will not be bound by any dos and don'ts; your identity crisis will be resolved once and for all.

If you entertain the thought-current of the Kenopaniṣad, you will not be given a direct answer. "Who created this world?" If you enter into the thought-current of the Kenopaniṣad, you will directly know from where this whole existence arises, how you are related to That, how That is related to you, and how the Whole can exist and coexist in the space of completion. You will see how everything can manifest and sustain itself in that very same space of completion.

If you read the Kaṭhopaniṣad, you will receive a thought-current that transforms your very nervous system. Suddenly, the fear of death will disappear, and the mysteries of death will be revealed before you - before death, during death, and after death. You will simply know the whole process, and you will be ready. Experientially, you will be liberated from fear, from the fear of death, and from every form of powerlessness connected to death. The Kaṭhopaniṣad will not tell you, "After you die, such and such deity will come, take you somewhere, and then such and such will happen." No! It will only tell you to entertain certain thought-currents. When you do that, your entire being becomes powerful, and you gain the ability to see through death itself.

Overcome Your Powerlessness

The beauty of these Upaniṣads is precisely this: they awaken the thought-current and guide you through all forms of powerlessness. Death brings so much powerlessness - questions, the unknown, mystery, pain, and nameless fear. The Kaṭhopaniṣad alone is enough! If you simply grasp the thought-currents that the Kaṭhopaniṣad reveals, you can sail through every form of powerlessness, transcend it completely, and win over the whole experience of death. It will carry you safely across the ocean of weakness and land you on the shore of powerfulness, liberating you once and for all.

Mahādeva's very breathing is the Upaniṣads; His words are the Āgamas. Each breath of Mahādeva is a thought-current He wishes to awaken in you.

The thought-currents that the Upaniṣads generate in you are experientially liberating. Sit with this context and understand. The Upaniṣads are not to be consumed like rasgullā or mysore-pāk - just pop them in, chew, and swallow. No! The Upaniṣads are to be relished like sugarcane - slowly, chewing, savoring, enjoying in between conversations and contemplation. They are to be lived, not swallowed.

Major Thought Currents Through Inner Awakening

There are two types of religious books. In some, you can simply swallow the content. In others, you must sit with them, celebrate them, chew them, chew them again - discard what is unnecessary, and then continue chewing. You extract only the juice and throw away what is not needed. It is the thought-current you must celebrate and enjoy.

Each of these Upaniṣads and their thought-currents transform not only your psychology but also your very biology - your muscle-memory and bio-memory. When you entertain, cherish, and celebrate these thought-currents, your very biology changes. Understand, if your suffering is self-created - through confusion, wrong analysis, or depression - then simply picking up some do's and don'ts is enough to free you from that depression. But if your depression is inherited, if your suffering comes from your mother and your father, then the do's and don'ts will not solve the issue. In that case, you must cherish the thought-currents of the Upaniṣads.

Hindu Education Vs Modern Education

In the Hindu tradition, examinations were never conducted through a question-and-answer method. No. That is Macaulay's method—designed for creating clerks. In the Hindu tradition, all examinations were based on the thought-currents one carried. Please understand, if someone had to be tested on whether he had mastered Nyāya, Vaiśeṣika, Yoga, Pūrva Mīmāṃsā, Uttara Mīmāṃsā, or the Āgamas, he would be asked to speak in the presence of the paṇḍits who had themselves mastered those thought-currents. They would observe whether he was able to spontaneously express the truths of that thought-current. Only then would he be declared "passed" - not through any written or oral question-answer test.

In modern education, however, it is possible to be a so-called paṇḍit of Yoga philosophy and yet be unable to bend your neck enough to touch your own belly - forget the legs! This is because, today, knowledge need not become your thought-current. All that is required is memorization - just repeating "yogaḥ citta vṛtti nirodhaḥ."

Education means making students master a thought-current so thoroughly that it becomes their lifestyle, their style of cognition, their very being. That is the Hindu examination method. Those who had already mastered the thought-current would gather together, and the one being examined would be asked to speak for hours. Understand, for hours you cannot speak on a subject unless that subject has become your very thought-current - your way of cognizing life.

Change of thought-current, transformation of thought-current - that is the success of education. Failure or success should be measured only by the transformation of thought-currents, not by the memorizing of information. Each Upaniṣad adds a new thought-current into you. Transformation of thought-current is true success.

Your Thought Currents Are Not You

One of the most important thought-currents the Kenopaniṣad seeks to infuse in us is the remembrance that your being is not in any way disturbed by your thought-currents. "Who am I?" is the thought-current of the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad. "By whom is everything?" - keneṣitaṃ - is the thought-current of the Kenopaniṣad.

Only when your day-to-day thought-currents do not disturb you will you be able to explore the Source of the Universe. Before entering the Kenopaniṣad, you must understand that your thought-currents are not you. They do not affect your essential being.

Anyone who tries to enter spiritual life first attempts to control their thought-currents—trying to be thoughtless or to reduce thoughts. Those efforts are fine at the initial level. But sooner or later you realize two things: not only can you not permanently control your thoughts, you also do not need to. Thoughts are simply the food you consume. Change the food, and the thoughts will change. Stop the intake of spices, and the spiciness in your words will subside. Thought-currents neither need nor can be ultimately controlled; it is not worthy to expend your life force trying to force them away.

Being in the Source means remembering the core of your being. All of us are Śivoham - we are Mahādeva. Contemplate this inwardly. Let the understanding Śivoham grow ever stronger within you. Apart from that understanding, everything else - mood swings, ups and downs, good and bad, right and wrong - has no power over you; it has no influence on your essential being.

Realize deeply that your thought-currents have no ultimate say over you. Put all your energy and attention into strengthening the understanding Śivoham, not into killing, reducing, or diverting your thoughts. If you spend all your energy trying to suppress or control your thought-currents, you are only fooling yourself.

Make Your Depression Irrelevant

There is not a single being in the Universe who has conquered depression. There are only beings who have made depression irrelevant and redundant to themselves. Understand this: depression should become irrelevant to you. Make it redundant.You cannot conquer it. You cannot conquer your thought currents. Because the very act of trying to kill them is what recreates them. You think: yesterday I was depressed, and today I must be stronger, angrier at myself, more disciplined, and in control to escape depression. But by the time you generate that anger, energy, fire, and steam, you have already created an enemy that wasn't there before. You have invoked it, called it into existence for a fight—and then feel defeated.

Thought currents have no continuity. If they did, by now you would be established in some thought or continuous current for which you've been struggling for years. Everyone seeks to establish themselves in a smooth, sweet, soft, graceful, beautiful thought current. You always lament that the thought current you wish to establish isn't happening, while the one you wish to eliminate is growing ever more intense. But thought currents are irrelevant.

Allow the intra-analysis of Śivoham to happen. Allow the intra-analysis of Śuddhādvaitam to happen. Thought currents are irrelevant. If you understand that feeling excited or depressed, high or low, is irrelevant - and instead cultivate the thought current of Śivoham - then you will create the inner space to explore: "from whom everything, by whom everything" – keneṣitaṃ. The Kena Upaniṣad's essential one-liner is keneṣitaṃ: "From whom everything, by whom everything."

You can only make depression irrelevant to yourself. You can never truly conquer it. You can only make it redundant. Understand this truth. Contemplate on this thought current today.

The first step in preparing your being to receive the experience of Śuddhādvaita is to make your thought-currents irrelevant to you. In fact, to bring someone out of depression, all that is needed is a little Kaḍukkai powder (Harītakī), nothing more. The entire phenomenon of depression, which the West is struggling against with tooth and nail, through drugs and alcohol, can be dissolved simply with a little Harītakī. The toxins will leave the system, and you will find yourself wondering, "What is this? Even depression has been taken away from me!" Depression becomes irrelevant and redundant. That is the first step. Only then can the thought-current of Śivoham - the process of intra-analyzing Śivoham - begin to unfold within you. This ensures that the inner space and powers of Mahādeva start expressing themselves in you.

The Upaniṣads set the context, while the Āgamas provide the applied science. The Upaniṣads are like pure science; the Āgamas are like applied science. It is as though the Upaniṣads describe the greatness of Vārāṇasī, while the Āgamas function as the GPS that guides you into Vārāṇasī and helps you experience it fully. The Upaniṣads reveal the glory through great principles, and the Āgamas give you the exact science.

Importance of Peace in Hindu Education

Please understand the beauty of the Hindu education system. Education always begins with peace and ends with peace, because education is the most powerful weapon. It can be used either for peace or for violence. The Hindu tradition emphasizes that becoming prosperous through education should always be directed toward establishing peace in the universe. Education should raise the frequency of peace, not the frequency of violence.

Future wars will not have winners, because humanity has used education and knowledge to the extreme end of violence. We have accumulated enough weapons not only to demolish all buildings but to destroy planet Earth itself more than eight hundred times. The stockpile of weapons is so vast that we could blow up the Earth repeatedly. In the past, nations spoke about chemical weapons as tools to eradicate human beings; now the trend is simply to threaten the destruction of the entire planet.

Understand, when knowledge and education are used for violence, nothing remains. The Hindu tradition is very clear: the thought-current called jñāna (knowledge) must always begin with peace and end with peace.

All the 108 Upaniṣads share only one common feature. They do not teach about a single God, nor do they expound only one philosophy. At times, they even contradict one another, sometimes being directly opposite. Yet all 108 Upaniṣads declare one truth in unison: "Begin with peace and end with peace." Other than this, there is nothing else universally common to them.

We follow the original Hindu tradition, which accepts the list and definitions described in the Muktikopaniṣad as the authentic 108 Upaniṣads. Within the broader Hindu tradition, there are various sampradāyas (lineages or schools) that hold slightly different compilations of 108 Upaniṣads as primary Hindu literature. We follow the Śuddha Hindu Sampradāya (Pure Hindu Tradition), wherein the Muktikopaniṣad was revealed by Bhagavān Śrī Rāmacandra to Hanumān. In that Upaniṣad, Śrī Rāmacandra enumerates the 108 Upaniṣads, and it is His authority that we accept. Some sampradāyas add or remove certain Upaniṣads, thereby forming their own lists of 108. However, we adhere only to the 108 Upaniṣads described by Śrī Rāmacandra to Hanumān in the Muktikopaniṣad. This is the foundation of the Śuddha Hindu Sampradāya we follow.

All the 108 Upaniṣads begin with the thought-current of peace and end with the thought-current of peace. This shows that our ancestors and founding seers were very clear: peace is the first priority. Peace is the fundamental reason for our existence. Please understand, bliss follows peace. Peace is the basic condition for existence; bliss is the basic condition for growth. Without peace, existence itself is shaken. Without bliss, growth is stunted. Peace forms the foundation; bliss builds upon it. The Śānti Mantra of the Kena Upaniṣad demonstrates this truth. This mantra sets the lens and context through which the entire Upaniṣad must be perceived. That is why it is chanted both at the beginning and at the end.

May they manifest and radiate in me. Auṁ. Let there be peace, peace, peace.

Power of Words to Manifest Your Reality

It is literally an introduction to the power of your own existence. One of the basic truths is this: anything you continuously express through your words, you will eventually start believing. And anything you believe in, you will manifest as reality.

Your words hold power over your inner space. For example, if you believe you are a liar because you have spoken twenty lies, then by uttering a new statement twenty-one times - one more than the number of lies - you will stop identifying yourself as a liar and begin to believe the words you are speaking. This is the science of Vāksiddhi: the manifestation of the power of speech, the power of integrity, even if you previously considered yourself a liar. If, however, you do not believe you are a liar - if you see yourself as a truthful person - then even a single utterance such as, "I think I have the love of Sadāśiva. I think my God loves me. I think my Guru loves me. I think the people around me love me" will start becoming a reality in your life.

Sometimes, just uttering something once may not make it real. The reason is that you still hold the belief that you are a liar. In such cases, the solution is to overpower that belief by crossing the frequency of lies with the frequency of your new declaration. If you have told twenty lies, and therefore believe yourself to be a liar, then by uttering your new reality twenty-one times, you will see it becoming your lived reality and direct experience.

Begin to identify and complete all the non-integrity statements you have made since the earliest memory of yourself. Why? Because only then will the new declarations you make have enough free inner space to manifest as reality.

If you are constantly uttering, "I am depressed, I am depressed, I am depressed," you will indeed be depressed. But if you are constantly uttering, "I am successful. I am alive. I am creating. I am manifesting," you will manifest exactly that.

Understand, this is a science: you are nothing but your words. Only consciously generated words manifest in you.

Science of Blessing

The frequency of Paramashiva represents the highest truth, the highest integrity. This is the science of blessing. A blessing is nothing but the insertion of what you ask for into your very being at the level of ultimate integrity. What happens then? All the other ideas and concepts you carry that are not aligned with the blessing you sought begin to wither away.

For example, if you pray, "Let me have Oneness, Advaita with You," then all the other patterns you carry - such as the sense of distance, feelings of disconnectedness, unnecessary doubts, and other forms of confusion - will start losing their hold over you. They will gradually dissolve, and you will be surprised to discover the "new you."

Helping you discover this "new you" through the right words is satsaṅg. Helping you discover the "new you" through powers is initiation. Whether through blessing or through satsaṅg, the Guru enables you to discover the "new you" with words.

The more you identify your non-integrity statements and complete with them, the more vast and powerful your inner space becomes. In that purified space, the new words you utter about yourself can begin to manifest as reality.

Power of Will

The words you utter have power over you. The non-integrity words you have spoken in the past must be identified and completed. As you complete them, vast inner space will open up within you, making room for the new words you create to manifest as reality. Through the right words, you can literally give birth to yourself. If you find yourself in a situation where you are unable to generate new words about yourself, and you feel stuck, then change your environment. Do not continue living in that place, or with those people, anymore. Give yourself a break. Understand: if you are stuck in a situation, with certain people, or in a particular place where you cannot generate new words about yourself - internally or externally - take the risk of changing your surroundings. Move to a new place, a new city, or a new circle of people. It is worth the risk.

The right words you utter about yourself truly matter. They are deeper and more powerful than any prayer. In prayer, you ask and wait for it to be fulfilled. But the words you utter as declarations directly shape your reality. With the right words and your will, your declaration is not a request - it is creation itself.

Declaring is the most powerful tapas (austerity). That is why in the Hindu Purāṇas, if a Ṛṣi sits and declares something, even the Devaloka (abode of the gods) begins to shake. Indra must come. Brahmā must come. Viṣṇu must awaken from His sleep. Śiva must pause His cosmic dance and appear. Read the Purāṇas - the cosmic histories. You will see: when an ordinary ascetic in the forest makes a declaration, the Devaloka trembles. Indra cannot withstand the fire of that will, and he runs. Such is the power of your declaration. That is how deeply you are connected to existence. Your declaration is the umbilical cord that links you to the whole cosmos - something no one can sever or deny.

When you declare, the power of your declaration cannot be denied. It must manifest as reality, because declaration is the way your will expresses itself. And your will is the very channel that connects you to the universe. Even in death, only the body can be taken away - never your will.

In this way, the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis teach the science of will. In the very first verse of the Śānti Mantra, called the Śāntipāṭha, they reveal this wisdom. Śāntipāṭha means the "lesson of peace" or "method of peace." In this mantra, our Ṛṣis teach two principles: first, everything must begin in peace, be used for peace, and proceed in the context of peace; second, the science of will and the supreme power of declaration.

The Science of Peace and the Art of Declaration

Education can be the best tool or the worst weapon. That is why the Ṛṣis insist on bringing the context of peace into education - through the Śāntipāṭha, the Śānti Mantra. Before beginning anything - Śānti Mantra. After completing anything - Śānti Mantra. The entire process of education must be conducted only in the context of Śānti (peace). The Śāntipāṭha, the Śānti Mantra, means: understand everything from the context of generating peace, and use everything for the purpose of generating peace.

In modern times, one of the greatest tragedies is that education is no longer used for peace. The most beautiful civilizations that arose on planet Earth - the Indus–Gaṅgā civilization and the Sarasvatī–Gaṅgā civilization - began and ended each day's learning with peace. These were peace-based traditions. Even when torn to pieces, they continued to stand for peace. The strength shown in the face of swords, the peace demonstrated in the face of violence - this is the true pride of Hindu civilization.

Sanātana Dharma can never be destroyed, because every matured soul inevitably returns to it. If there are 7 billion people on this planet, at least 2 billion are matured souls. And if ever that number decreases, an Incarnation will manifest again to mature more souls. Matured souls always exist, and the natural way of life for matured souls is Sanātana Dharma.

The problems we face today come from losing the original context of peace. What we now call "peace" is often nothing more than an attempt to avoid conflict. But avoiding conflict is not peace - it is escapism. True peace comes from conflict resolution, not from running away from it.

When we attempt to avoid conflict in the name of peace, the other side immediately recognizes it as weakness. And weakness does not bring peace. The greatest challenges Sanātana Hindu Dharma faces today arise because, in the name of preserving peace, we are merely avoiding conflicts. This is wrong. You must be willing to look conflict in the eye and resolve it - not avoid it.

Avoiding the Nakkīrar will never solve the issue. If needed, burn him and then give him back his life. That is the true resolution of conflicts. Burn him and restore his life—if he understands his arrogance, resolves it, and is ready to live in peace. This is the methodology of Sadāśiva: explain logically, give enough space for understanding; if not, burn the ignorance. When Nakkīrar realized his arrogance and sought transformation, Sadāśiva returned his life - his life minus the arrogance. Resolution, not avoidance, is the method of Sadāśiva.

The Śāntipāṭha - the peace resolution, the peace declaration - of the Kenopaniṣad is the most powerful teaching of declaration. Understand clearly: this is not a prayer to any deity. It is the integration of your whole being, declaring peace, and taking responsibility for your declaration. Decide to bring peace into your life not by avoiding conflicts, but by choosing to resolve them.

You need to grasp two essential truths. First, the Hindu way of life begins with peace and ends with peace. Please understand: all the knowledge generated in the Hindu tradition surpasses even what modern science has produced. Whether in the form of jet planes, rockets, missiles, nuclear or chemical weapons - we had everything, and more, in the Hindu age. Yet, we were absolutely clear: all this knowledge would be used only for peace.

Understand, in the Hindu lifestyle, everything begins with peace and ends with peace - whether in rituals, ceremonies, teachings, or transmissions of knowledge. Knowledge exists only for peace.

One of the greatest mistakes modern Hindus have made is believing that peace comes from avoiding conflicts. No! Avoiding conflict will never bring peace. If you try to achieve peace by avoidance, other forces will continually push you into a corner until you cease to exist. Avoiding conflicts is not the methodology of peace. The correct method is to face conflicts and resolve them.

Peace is the ultimate purpose, but that does not mean we are afraid of conflicts, nor does it imply that we are powerless to handle them. One of the gravest errors of modern Hindus is thinking that avoiding conflicts will secure peace. That is why they have lost their backbone. Peace is the goal, but it is achieved not by avoidance, but by confronting and resolving challenges. We begin with peace and end with peace. Living in peace does not signify weakness.

The first point to understand is that peace is your goal, but not in the limited way the middle class interprets it. The middle-class approach misunderstands the context of truth and tries to construct its own theories. For them, peace means avoiding conflicts. No. Facing conflicts and resolving them is the royal path to peace. The Upaniṣads teach royal science, not middle-class science. They teach the science of the noble, the royal approach.

The Śānti Mantra teaches that peace should always be the purpose and the goal: peace of the individual, peace in the family, peace in society, peace in the community, peace in the country, peace in the world, peace in the universe. This peace is not achieved through avoidance, but through facing and resolving conflicts.

Trying to escape from conflict is not peace; it is the middle-class mindset. Facing and resolving conflict is the royal mindset. Even while confronting and resolving challenges, remaining in peace requires an enlightened mind. The goal is peace, but peace is attained not by avoiding conflicts, and not by fearing them, but by facing them and resolving them.

Power of Declaration - Ability to Will

The second thing you need to understand is the power of declaration. In the last Upaniṣad, the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad, the Ṛṣis introduced the science of prayer to us - So'ham Asmi. Even when I pray, you and I are one and the same. A beautiful introduction to prayer. Now, the Ṛṣis are guiding us to the next level.

Declaration represents the peak of prayer. It is the highest possibility of prayer. In ordinary prayer, a trace of the lower inner image is always retained. Many of us engage in the practice of lowering ourselves to elevate God, which is unnecessary. To exalt God, you do not need to diminish yourself. Yet, this has become a common trend. In unconscious prayer, the lower self - the limited idea of yourself - remains as the one praying to the highest expression, which is God.

The Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad elevates prayer to the next level with So'ham Asmi. Even while praying, you understand that you and the Divine are from the same Source. "O Source, make what I desire a reality."

The Kena Upaniṣad takes this further. It introduces declaration, not prayer - focused on you and your ability to will. Understand that just as you have various abilities - the ability to see, to use your hands, to move your legs, to hear, to think - you also possess the ability to will. The ability to will integrates all your faculties.

The ability to will is the spiritual umbilical cord connecting you to the cosmos. Understand: aside from God, no one can truly will. When it is said that only God has will, it means that no one else can exercise this power independently. If you possess the power to will, you are connected to God; you are part of God; you are Him. Your power to will is your direct umbilical connection to God.

If you will, no one can deny it. Even God cannot deny it, because your will is bestowed upon you by God. The Upaniṣads do not say, "O Brahman, let all my energies be awakened." No! They do not say, "O Sadāśiva, let all my energies be awakened." No. They declare: "May my limbs, speech, vital energy, and all senses be fully matured and enriched with strength and energy" - auṃ āpyāyāṅtū mamāṇgāni.

The Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis possess vast realizations and zero tendency to exploit. In modern times, people believe that the more you exploit, the more successful you are. What great, unselfish, dedicated, and empowering consciousness the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis embody! For their purity alone, they are worthy of being worshiped as Gods. They are only interested in empowering you, awakening the stronger powers within you. They are not concerned with reminding you of your weaknesses, labeling you a sinner, or keeping you under their control.

The first verse begins: "May my limbs, vital life energy…" - auṃ āpyāyāṅtū mamāṇgāni vākprāṇaścakṣur-śrotram-athobalamindriyāṇi ca śārvāṇi. It does not say, "O God, let my limbs, speech, life, and vital energy become strong."

āpyāyāṅtū mamāṇgāni - I declare: "May my limbs, speech, life, vital energy, eyes, ears, and all senses be fully matured and enriched with strength and energy" - because "My will is God's will" (Mama saṅkalpa Śiva saṅkalpa astu). My will is the umbilical connection with the cosmos. If I will something, it must shake the cosmos. The cosmos must manifest it as reality, because I am connected to It. Without the power to will, I am disconnected. As long as I possess the power to will, I hold authority and am fully authorized to exercise it.

Understand: only strong beings become beautiful beings. Only strong beings maintain order in life. Some might say, "If all of us can will, our wills might crisscross and create chaos." No. Strong people create order. Only weak people create chaos. Strong people never create chaos- they create order. Only weak people create chaos.

Manifest Powers Through Your Will

The Upaniṣads are speaking about the first verse, and this is the same truth used for manifesting all powers. To manifest any power, you need only to declare it and will it. Will means Ājñā. Ājñā means the Third Eye. The Third Eye represents Vārāṇasī. Vārāṇasī has two meanings: the place between the eyebrows and the nose, and the place between Varuṇa and Asi. The spot between the eyebrows and nose is the Third Eye. The place between Varuṇa and Asi is Vārāṇasī. Your will resides in the Ājñā Cakra (Third Eye). Your will powerfully integrates you with the Whole—Brahman or Sadāśiva.

The word Sadāśiva seems more vibrant, more dynamic, because it is not only the Source of everything, but also manifests both experiences and powers. Brahman seems more like pure experience, whereas Sadāśiva represents both experience and expression together. Brahman is like a young boy with a clean-shaven face; Sadāśiva is mature and manifesting. Regardless of whether it is Brahman or Sadāśiva, will is the umbilical cord through which manifestation occurs. Will connects you with Sadāśiva, with Brahman, and with the Universe.

As long as you possess the power to will, you have the right to Enlightenment. Power to will is the key to Enlightenment. If you have the key to treasures but do not enjoy the treasures, you are a fool. Similarly, if you have the power to will - the key to Enlightenment and the manifestation of all powers - and you do not use it, you are foolish. Do not waste your will. Even if unused, do not take it for granted. If unused, Sadāśiva may consider, "He does not need it,"and it may be withdrawn. Before that happens, use it. The ability to will is the peak of human consciousness you can experience.

The ability to will is the pinnacle of consciousness. Use it to manifest the Universe within yourself. Will is the umbilical cord connecting you to the Universe. Do not waste it. Will it - and it will manifest. Use your power of declaration. Practice using it for at least the next 24 hours and observe the power of your will.

In Sanskrit, Ājñā is present tense. There is a subtle cultural nuance here: translating it into English as "will" loses some of its essence. Will in English implies the future, but Ājñā is always present. For the next 24 hours, create a few declarations. Observe how they start manifesting in your life. You will not fail; you will only gain confidence. Try to generate some will in your life. It could be as simple as changing a traffic light to green, or as significant as influencing someone to listen to you. Create a will and watch it manifest. Once you understand the science of will, you can manifest immense order, love, and life within yourself.

Sadāśiva is waiting for each one of you to manifest Him. The more of you who manifest Him, the more joy will arise on planet Earth. The more of you who manifest Sadāśiva's powers, the greater the bliss in life. The more of you who manifest His powers, the higher the consciousness in the world. This is the greatest service you can do for yourself and others. Do not ever think, "I am trying to manifest, but God is placing obstacles in my path." No. He is not creating obstacles. He is helping you remove them. Change your understanding: He is not obstructing you - you are creating the obstacles. He is assisting you in overcoming them.

Will, will, will. Will is the umbilical cord connecting you to the Universe. When you generate this will according to the Śāntipāṭha, it will inevitably manifest as reality.

The Science of Will

Each part of you is independently intelligent. Only when you integrate all of them and will does it become reality. If you create a will that truly integrates all parts, it will manifest. If your ears are willing one thing, your eyes another, your lungs something else, and your kidneys something different, what will become reality? Confusion will. When all wills are in conflict, confusion is the outcome. Either your will is so powerful that it integrates all aspects of you, or you must consciously integrate all parts of yourself to create a unified will.

Integrating all parts of yourself and creating a unified will is the path of Yoga. First, you integrate your body through Yoga; then your mind through Pratyāhāra; then your emotions through Dhāraṇā; then all your emotional currents through Dhyāna; then you create a unified will; and finally, you enter into Samādhi. That is the traditional path of Yoga. Creating a will directly, with such power that it enters you like a cyclone or tsunami and integrates all parts of you, is the path of Śaiva.

Pure Love Exposes Your Blindspots

Anything intense scares you. Anything intense scares people. That is how pseudo middle-class morality is designed: it makes you believe that all good things cannot be intense, that love is soft. You have not yet experienced the love of Sadāśiva. That is why you think love is soft. All false or shallow love is soft - it only gives a feel-good sensation. Nothing transformative happens. No real benefit occurs. True love, however, exposes all your blind spots.

Whoever exposes your blind spots is doing the greatest service for you. Sometimes this happens out of their love for you, and sometimes out of their anger - but in both cases, it is for your highest good. Focus only on what is being done for you, and from that, decide whether the person is doing good for you or not. Do not concern yourself with their intention - you will never truly know it.

Observe what is happening on your end, and start from there. If you decide, "I must first discover their intention to know whether they love me or not," you will remain in doubt forever. All doubts in relationships arise from your failure to trust what is being done for you. You are attempting to uncover a secret intention that exists only in your imagination.

Being light means trusting what is being done for you, not speculating on the source's intention. You will not find it. A salt doll cannot measure the depth of the Pacific Ocean and return to report it. Similarly, you cannot penetrate Sadāśiva's inner space to discover the reason behind actions. Be reasonable: base your judgment only on what is being done to you. Do not waste time chasing intentions.

Anything that exposes your blind spots is love. True love, when it enters your life, reveals all your blind spots. That is the first effect of love: it shows you what you do not yet know about yourself. If you fear your unknown dimensions, you will naturally fear the unknown dimensions of your Guru and God.

Love exposes your blind spots. When the true tsunami of love hits you, your "Whole" gets integrated. Similarly, when the true tsunami of fear hits you, your "Whole" also gets integrated. This is why, in survival situations, your energy output - whether in fight, flight, or both - is extraordinary. The speed and intensity with which you respond in survival mode integrates you completely.

Similarly, when you are in love, it integrates you completely. Both emotions - fear and love - have the power to integrate you. If you use your love to integrate yourself and manifest your declarations, you are a bhakta, a devotee. You are walking the path of devotion. If you use your fear to integrate yourself and manifest your declarations, you are walking the path of renunciation. Always use your love to integrate yourself. That will be the sweetest and safest path. Declarations are sweet, vibrant, and powerful when love forms their foundation. When love acts as the lubricant, your will becomes immensely powerful.

Power Manifestation Through Entanglement

Even when you are trying to manifest powers, keep your son, daughter, or someone who has already begun manifesting powers near you, even on your lap. Let them sit around you. This will enhance your own ability to manifest powers. Similarly, if you keep your father, mother, father-in-law, or mother-in-law with you in their old age, you will experience the best possible old age yourself. Your bio-memory will learn to navigate aging peacefully. By taking care of elderly parents or in-laws, you train your bio-memory to face your own old age without shock, surprise, or fear.

Taking care of parents is an expression of living true Hindu culture. If you are not a sannyāsī, you are naturally responsible for your elderly parents and in-laws. Through this care, your bio-memory becomes trained to face your own later years gracefully. Similarly, sādhus who care for elderly sādhus experience a beautiful, smooth, and peaceful old age. Their lives demonstrate the profound benefits of service and training through care.

Oṃ - The Universal Symbol of Hindu Tradition

Oṃ: The sound with which this mantra begins. Not only this mantra, but all mantras in the Hindu tradition begin with Oṃ, because it is the Cosmic sound. There are only one or two things on which all Hindu sampradāyas agree. Hinduism is such a vast tradition, a vast collection of religions. We have so much freedom, so much research and development. Agreement is rare, because within Hinduism, agreeing often appears weak. Very rarely do all of us agree. Yet, on this one truth – Oṃ – all Hindu sampradāyas are united. Whether it is Śaiva, Vaiṣṇava, Śākta, Kaumāra, Saura, or even Avaidika traditions such as Bauddha and Jaina, whether Āstikya, Nāstika, Tattva, or Darśana – all sampradāyas agree on one thing: Oṃ.

All of us accept that Oṃ is the primary, primordial, original sound of the Cosmos and the symbol of the Universe. That is why Oṃ has become a non-controversial and universally accepted symbol of the Hindu tradition. Along with Oṃ, the sanctity of the cow (Gau Seva) is also accepted by all – Śaiva, Śākta, Vaiṣṇava, and others. Beyond these, we rarely agree. In everything else, each sampradāya follows its own methodology. Śaivites have their own, Vaiṣṇavites their own, Śāktas their own, Sauras their own, Kaumāras their own, and Gāṇapatyas their own. Hinduism is like a vast, universal mall – wide, beautiful, and rich. When you enter into Hinduism, you encounter countless varieties and possibilities for Enlightenment and Jīvanmukti.

Oṃ is the one sound upon which all agree. All sampradāyas – Śaiva, Vaiṣṇava, Śākta, Saura, Kaumāra, Gāṇapatya – and all Darśanas – Uttara Mīmāṃsā, Pūrva Mīmāṃsā, Yoga, Nyāya, and Vaiśeṣika – unanimously uphold this one truth: Oṃ is the symbol of the Universe. Mantras begin with Oṃ.

There was once an article on the internet describing how NASA scientists, when attempting to record the sound of the Sun and condense it to human frequency, discovered that the sound is Oṃ – the very vibration of the Sun. Whether discovered today, tomorrow, or after a thousand years, it matters little. What our Hindu Ṛṣis declared is the eternal truth. The more humanity evolves, the more it rediscovers that the Ṛṣis were right. Those who rediscover the truths declared in the Upaniṣads and the Hindu tradition are, in truth, evolving.

Integrity to Your Will is Maturity

The first will, the first declaration of the Ṛṣis, is about the limbs – the external parts of our being such as the hands and legs. These are the most outward aspects of ourselves. The declaration is: "Let my limbs, speech, vital life energy (prāṇa), eyes, ears, and all the senses be fully matured." The word "matured" must be understood here. Matured means integrated with one's goal.

When Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam was six years old, His Guru asked Him, "Do you want to live as a Sannyāsī or as a Gṛhastha?" He replied, "Sannyāsī." The Guru then placed His hand on young Nithyananda's head and made His will into His declaration by integrating His entire physiology, psychology, and system with that decision. From that moment onward, His body, mind, physiology, and psychology became matured to that choice.

Thus, when the Ṛṣis declare "May all the senses be fully matured," it means being integrated, aligned, and in tune with one's decision. The instant the Guru blessed young Nithyananda, His whole being aligned with the Sannyās lifestyle. Anything outside of that lifestyle became irrelevant and redundant. The word "matured" signifies being fully integrated with one's will.

"May my limbs, speech, vital life energy (prāṇa), eyes, ears, and all the senses be fully matured and enriched with strength and energy." Maturity does not mean becoming handicapped or limited. It means being filled with strength, vitality, and energy, aligned to one's chosen goal.

आप्यायन्तु ममाण्गानि वाक्प्राणश्चक्शुः

āpyāyāṅtū mamāṇgāni vākprāṇaścakśuḥ śrotram-athobalam-indriyāṇi ca śāṛvāṇī |
May my limbs, speech, vital life energy – prāna, eyes, ears, and all the senses be fully matured and be enriched with strength and energy.

Make this your declaration today. With intensity and full commitment, make it your firm resolve - and you will see your whole being become integrated, radiating strength and energy. Experience this transformation step by step. Make this declaration aloud or silently: "May my limbs, speech, vital life-energy (prāṇa), eyes, ears, and all the senses be fully matured and enriched with strength and energy." When practiced consciously, you will witness disease and ill health wither away. Make this declaration today - consciously and with full intent. This is the first step toward manifesting all powers.

Everything Exists is Consciousness

The first thing Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis are teaching you is strengthening your limbs, listening, seeing, body, mind, vital life energy, creating a will to mature and strengthen your body-mind.

सर्वम् ब्रह्मोपनिषदम् |
sarvaṁ brahmopaniṣadam |

Understand: whatever exists is consciousness, including the things you may not like in life. People often say, "Everything is okay," but then ask, "Who invented examinations and offices?" When you are a child, you feel, "Everything is okay," yet the moment you encounter responsibilities, you wonder who created them. Even the aspects of life that seem unpleasant or disconnected from you are, in reality, part of consciousness. Sarvaṁ brahmopaniṣadam - everything is consciousness - means that you yourself have created everything in your life. This truth is not to be understood as philosophy or morality. These words are simple facts that you need to recognize - truths you must be informed about before you begin to strategize for your future existence. Life is all about strategizing for the future. You exist in order to shape and align your future existence. For the right strategy to emerge within you, you first need to be informed of these fundamental truths.

Surrendering to Guruvāk

A powerful incident from the life of Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam: When Bhagavān was about eight or nine years old, He was sitting with two of His Gurus when the temple bell rang. The lifestyle of Aruṇācala is so beautiful - you know it is already morning when you hear the ringing of the temple bell. You know it is breakfast time when you hear the sound of crackers at the temple. Every pūjā is accompanied by temple crackers, and all six daily pūjās are marked in this way. For the people of Aruṇācala, time itself was known through these sacred sounds. The ringing of the temple bell signaled naivedyam - the offering of food to Sadāśiva. Both of Bhagavān's Gurus immediately looked at Him and said, "Go and bring the prasādam." After the naivedyam is offered, it is distributed among the devotees. The Gurus, sitting in a corner, instructed young Nithyananda to bring it.

Bhagavān went to the place where the prasādam was being distributed and waited until the pūjā was completed. When the serving began, He stretched out His hand and the priest gave Him one portion - nearly half a kilogram of rice on a large leaf. Then, recalling that before the pūjā he had seen young Nithyananda sitting with His Gurus, the Pūjārī, who was deeply devoted to them, said: "Take two more. They are sitting there. Take one for yourself and two more for them."

Bhagavān hesitated. One of His classmates, a boy and a girl, were also standing in the queue nearby. They would often tease Him, saying, "You sit in the temple all day only to get more food. That's why you take so much!" Anticipating their ridicule, He felt reluctant. Coming from a respected family, He had been told repeatedly to behave properly in public. So, He told the Pūjārī, "No, no need. This is enough." He then carried the prasādam back to His Gurus.

The Gurus asked, "Hey, where is our share? Did the Pūjārī not give it?" In reality, they seldom ate. Rarely would they take a few grains into their mouths, offering the rest to those seated with them. Bhagavān replied, "No, you do not eat. You rarely eat. This much is more than enough for the three of us." They pressed Him further, "Did the Pūjārī give it or not?" Bhagavān admitted, "Yes, he wanted to give. He asked Me to take two more for both the Swāmīs." They asked, "Then why did you refuse?" Bhagavān explained, "Behind me, my classmates were standing. They would have made fun of Me for taking so much, accusing Me of sitting in the temple just for food. I didn't want to be teased by them, so I brought only my portion."

Until that moment, they were very casual, laughing and smiling. Suddenly, Bhagavān saw Kuppammal staring directly into His eyes and instructing, "Go to the street shops, beg, and bring back food."These words struck deeply. Bhagavān's father owned a shop on that very street, and the entire street was literally run by His grandfather, who was the head of the local association. Bhagavān would always walk there with pride, for every shop belonged either to family or to close friends. Whenever His family entered a shop or partook of anything - be it jaggery, dal, or any other item - it was always given freely. But now, in that very street, Bhagavān was commanded to beg.

All the shopkeepers began making fun of Him: "What happened to your grandfather and all his wealth?" They ridiculed Him and even asked His grandfather, "Your grandson is begging in the street. Why are you not giving him food?"

Bhagavān later revealed: "The greatest boon I received from Sadāśiva is the quality of absolute obedience to the Guruvāk. That is the greatest wealth I brought with Me. In the future, people may describe My contributions in various ways - some may say My Gurukul is My greatest gift, others may point to the science of manifesting powers or the science of Enlightenment. But I tell you, the greatest gift I brought, which was truly useful to Me, is surrender to Guruvāk. If you feel that I have accomplished so much at such a young age and wish to know the secret, it is this: completely surrender to the Guruvāk, with letter and spirit. That alone saves immense time and prevents unnecessary waste."

The moment His Guru commanded, "Go and beg on that very street, in those same shops, and bring food," Bhagavān knew it was a serious instruction, not casual and not playful. It meant that He had done something out of alignment with His pattern, and His Masters were correcting Him.

Without hesitation, Bhagavān stood up, went straight to the street, begged, and collected whatever was offered. Naturally, His family and friends gave Him an abundance of items. He received so much that He had to hire a small hand-pulled cart - since in villages there were no rickshaws, only such carts - to carry all the bhikṣā back to His Gurus.

One of the greatest realizations He received in that moment was this: one should never be disturbed by the imaginary opinions of others. The liberation He experienced then was profound and incomparable.

The next day, Bhagavān had a chance to speak with both His friends. They asked Him, "Hey, why were you going for bhikṣā in all the shops? Did you make any prayer or some divine commitment?"In the villages, there is a tradition: if someone is sick, the family prays to Vṛṁkaṭṛṁśvara or to their Kuladevatā, promising to go for bhikṣā and later offer it in the hundi. This practice continues even today. Every Purattāsi month, all Vaiṣṇavas go for bhikṣā and offer it to the Viṣṇu temple; every Mārgaśīrṣa, Śaivites go for bhikṣā and offer it to the Śiva temple.

So when His friends asked, "Did you make some prayer? Why were you begging?" Bhagavān thought within Himself: "Only you fellows were responsible for my begging! And only now I understand that you didn't even have the idea which I was imagining you had."

Understand this one truth: if you grasp it, 80% of the time you waste in life without moving toward your goal will be saved. Bhagavān realized that His assumption - "This is what they are thinking about Me" - even though it was not true, or even if it was true, should never delay or obstruct His decisions and actions.

Please understand, this is one of the most powerful and deeply sickening patterns in which all of us are trapped. When Bhagavān was sent for bhikṣā, He recognized that a certain pattern was operating. That was the real reason why He had refused to take the prasād and returned empty-handed. Not taking temple prasād and coming back is too small an act to matter in itself. Had His Gurus simply called out from where they were sitting, the priest himself would have gladly brought and offered it to them. Bhagavān was within audible distance, and the Gurus were right inside the temple. The action itself was trivial - but the reason behind it was wrong. That pattern could not be allowed to survive in Bhagavān.

Guru is the sweetest Being, who sacrifices everything solely to liberate you from the exact patterns in which you are stuck. The first and foremost responsibility of Sadāśiva, when He assumes the human form, is sacrifice. He is Tyāgarāja - the king of sacrifices. He sacrifices anything and everything, only to pull His disciples out of their binding patterns.

Immature Ideas and Cognitions Lead to Agnosticism

That one Completion, Bhagavān says, is responsible for His svatantratva - the absolute freedom He carries from public opinion. The only reason for this freedom is that His Gurus completely liberated Him from one of the most binding patterns: the need to care about imaginary opinions of others, and the judgments they imposed upon us about life, right, wrong, living, and consciousness.

Even regarding your own life and death, you carry countless distorted ideas - given by people who are themselves deluded. Unfortunately, the immature opinions they vomited on you are still carried in your head. Imagine being given a beautiful golden bowl, and instead of using it for nectar, you balance it on your head to carry their vomit. Wash the bowl.

This is the conclusion: the immature ideas and cognitions you carry - given to you by immature people, accepted due to your own immaturity - are what make you feel that something in existence is "not God." Whenever you feel that there is something in life that is not divine, sit with yourself and inquire deeply. You will always discover that the root of this feeling is some immature cognition, planted in you by others, who themselves were caught in suffering. Since these people are many in number, you too want to conform to the populist belief.

Understand, life is not democracy. Your government may be democratic, but life does not function by democracy. It is not that if all of us vote together and declare, "Let fire not burn because we have voted so," the fire will stop burning. If all of us vote together saying, "Let Gaṅgā not drown people," will Gaṅgā obey?

Understand, populist beliefs do not make them right. Democracy is wonderful for running a government, for making laws and policies for a country. But the laws of nature, the laws of existence, the laws of life are different. In the realm of life, there is no democracy - there is only understanding. It may seem like a small act - Bhagavān not taking extra prasādam because a boy and girl were standing nearby and He thought they would laugh at Him. He walked away with only one share. The act itself was small, but the reason behind it was dangerous.

Understand, all the great things in life are missed not because of great mistakes, but because of small, stupid patterns. No one misses greatness due to monumental blunders; greatness is always lost to small, unconscious choices. In truth, all mistakes are small mistakes.

Every seeker, whether child or adult, should be taught this principle: whenever you feel something is not part of God in life, whenever you feel uneasy, disconnected, or uncomfortable, you must dig into the core of that feeling. Ask yourself: Why do I feel disconnected? You will always discover that it is because of immature cognitions, swallowed unconsciously, inserted into you by immature people.

Knowing Everything is Consciousness Removes Suffering

Be completely comfortable, flowing with everything and in tune with the existential flow - the law, yama, and niyama. Knowing the flow does not mean you will try to break it, even though you may have the power to do so. True beauty lies in flowing effortlessly with life.

The first and foremost principle to adopt is sarvaṁ brahmopaniṣadam - everything is Consciousness, everything is God. Whenever you feel uncomfortable with something, dig within and ask, "Why?" The root will always be immature cognitions, inserted into you in childhood by immature people. Bring them out, at least know them. Even if you don't drop them immediately, the clarity will prepare you for the day when life's experiences torture you enough to awaken the wealth of surrender to Guruvāk - the words of the Guru. On that day, you will finally be free from these patterns.

The greatest wealth in life is surrender to the Guru's words. This surrender arises only after life has beaten you enough. It is never for the Guru's benefit. The benefit is entirely yours: you save time and stop wasting your life behind stupid patterns.

When Bhagavān's Gurus told Him to go and beg in the same street where His classmates lived, He could not understand how that act would impact multiple dimensions of His life. Yet, when He obeyed and begged, the Completion happened in just half an hour. Only then did He realize. If He had argued - "Why should I beg? How can I stand before my classmates? I always show myself as a hero, the pride of a big family, the disciple of great Gurus, respected even by my peers!" - He might have postponed dropping those patterns. Perhaps He would have completed them only after facing enough suffering at fifty. But that would have been a huge mistake.

Wasting life because of patterns is the greatest mistake. You are not just wasting time - you are wasting life itself. If you take fifty years to drop one pattern, then what about the second? And the third at ninety? Implicit surrender to the Guru's words saves tremendous life-energy. Just as money saved is money earned, time saved is time earned, and life saved is life earned.

That one incident, that Completion, gave Bhagavān the gift of acalatva – steadiness - from His Gurus. It liberated Him from the immature cognition of being bothered by the imaginary opinions of immature people. Most of the time, we are haunted not by real problems but by ghosts—fears of "what someone may think" or "what someone may say." These are nothing but immature cognitions we absorbed due to our own immaturity.

Sit quietly and analyze. Make a list of anything that makes you uncomfortable - situations, people, thought currents, beliefs - anything that stirs unease within you. When you dig deep and understand them, you will see that they are all immature cognitions of immature people that you swallowed due to your own immaturity. The moment you recognize and disrespect these incompletions, they lose their power over you. Sarvaṁ brahmopaniṣadam - everything that exists is Consciousness, God, Sadāśiva, Guru. Everything that exists is God Himself. Anything that disturbs you arises only from the immature cognitions of immature people, absorbed by you during your own immature phase.

Inspiration for Living in Completion

The kind of inner space you carry defines who you are. The inner space you carry is you. That inner space determines the lifestyle you attract, the people you draw into your life, the kind of life you live, and the way others respect and relate to you.

Your inner space is your life; it is the blueprint of your existence. Whether knowingly or unknowingly, whether you wish it or not, you will build your life according to the blueprint you carry.

If, from morning till night, your inner space is consumed by physical pleasures - having or not having - you will only find yourself among people who are similarly bound, struggling over the same desires. If your inner space is constantly occupied with others' opinions, you will live in the frequency of people chasing rewards, fame, recognition, or accolades. You will attract those kinds of people and live amidst them.

Blessed are those who carry Completion in their inner space - or are striving toward it. Even if you are struggling and working toward Completion, do not worry. You are carrying the right blueprint. You will achieve it. You will attract those kinds of people. You will live among those kinds of people. You will manifest those kinds of situations in your life.

You may miss many things, but never the company of those living in Completion - or those who inspire you toward Completion. Even if they are speaking as if they have achieved it, while still struggling themselves, do not worry. Their inspiration is real. They are striving to live in Completion. Being "yet to be good" does not mean being bad.

Whenever someone inspires you to live in Completion, the first question is: are they living it? If they are living it and sharing it with you, they have abundance. If they are not living it but are still giving it to you despite not having it themselves, they are collecting from wherever they can - they are a tyāgī (renouncer). See it this way: when someone who has not yet fully realized Completion is inspiring you toward it, remember - they are not a bad person; they are yet to be good. They are also struggling, aware of what is right, and working toward it. While on this path, they are still offering inspiration. Consider it like a beggar trying to give dāna: even if they have little, they are sharing what they can.

When someone not yet living in Completion tries to help you live in Completion, recognize their effort—they are trying to share something valuable. Do not disrespect them. Even without fully possessing it, they are inspiring you and doing good for you. You can lose many things in life, but never lose the company of people who inspire you toward Completion. That company is invaluable. Even the great Masters and enlightened Beings maintain satsaṅga - the company of those striving toward higher consciousness. They create environments where the right company is kept, where higher dimensions of life are spoken about, analyzed, researched, and practiced. Being in such a company nurtures your growth and helps you move steadily toward Completion.

Ṣaṣṭāṅga Yoga Vs Aṣṭāṅga Yoga

In Ṣaṣṭāṅga Yoga - the sixfold Yoga described by Sadāśiva - you must understand that the original Yoga comprises only six parts. Later, Patanjali developed it into Aṣṭāṅga Yoga, with eight parts, but Sadāśiva's teaching remains sixfold.In Ṣaṣṭāṅga Yoga, tarka is one of the most important components - the fifth part.

Sadāśiva describes tarka as the process of analyzing, either individually or collectively, the great truths until they become your own cognition and the foundation for your decision-making.

Understand the difference between argument and debate:

Argument seeks to determine who is right.

Debate seeks to determine what is right.

When dealing with higher truths, both are necessary. Through individual reflection or collective discussion, through argument and debate, you internalize the higher truths. When these truths become your cognition, they form the foundation for your action. Much later, during the Hindu period, this practice came to be known as Vākyārtha Sadas, the term we use today.

The Vedas are eternal. They were penned down by the Ṛṣis after Sadāśiva revealed the Āgamas. Understand that the Vedas have no age; they are eternal. Apaurūṣeyatva means they are not originated by any puruṣa (human being); they have no human origin.

The Vedas, though penned after the revelation of the Āgamas, reflect the influence of the Āgamas in their structure. The verbosity of the Vedas does not influence the Āgamas; rather, the Āgamas shape the Vedas. Phonetically, linguistically, and in the meticulous arrangement of words like jewels, the texture and structure of the Vedas show the imprint of the Āgamas.

Satsaṅga: Prerequisite for Growth and Success in Life

Intranalyzing, arguing, and debating - either with yourself or with a group - the great truths of life until they become your very cognition and the foundation for your thinking and action is tarka.

In Ṣaṣṭāṅga Yoga, the sixfold Yoga described by Sadāśiva in the Āgamas, tarka is the fifth step. Understand, true tarka happens only with satsaṅgīs - those who live in the right company of higher truths. With others, you will have only kutarka - false logic. Those who awaken kutarka in you are dusangi (bad company). Run from them as fast as possible. Tarka is possible only with satsaṅgīs, and Vākyārtha Sadas - the debate and analysis of higher truths - can only be done with satsaṅgīs.

If you have satsaṅga around you, even on the Moon or Mars you can become enlightened. Do not live in a place where there is no satsaṅga. You will never realize its power until you experience it. Community is the most powerful and essential prerequisite for growth of any kind. Whether in Yoga, Tantra, bodybuilding, science, or research - community makes you excel. A community of scientists makes you a scientist. A community of yogis makes you a yogi. A community of satsaṅgīs makes you enlightened.

Never live with tired, bored, or mentally sick people. Physical sickness is not dangerous - only a few diseases are contagious. But mental sickness is always infectious. The moment you see such people, or even hear of them, it affects you – 'kandu muttu kettu muttu'. Never live around drunkards. They inspire you to commit slow suicide.

Therefore, choosing your satsaṅga - your companions, friends, family, team - matters immensely. The inner space you carry attracts the same kind of people, and you will cherish only those things that resonate with your inner space.

Never give up the company of great sādhus who remind you of Completion. Never give up the company of devotees who inspire you to live in Completion. Never give up the company of those who remind you of your higher possibility. The space you carry attracts the situations of your life, and the situations you live in create your inner space. It is always mutual. Carry Completion, and you will attract those who deepen your Completion. Live with people who radiate Completion, and you will begin to carry the same space yourself. The inner space you carry is you.

With this clarity, know: by working out, you can change the structure of your body. By practicing Completion, you can change the structure of your inner space.

Morning Yoga, night Completion - this is the royal road. These two will lead you to higher and higher levels of Yoga and deeper and deeper states of Completion. All else is ornament. Completion alone decides the quality of space you carry throughout the day.

Mental Setup of Denial

This verse is one of the supreme thought currents, and it can awaken Completion in you and create the Satsaṅga around you.

mā'hम् ब्रह्म नराकुर्याम् मा मा ब्रह्म नराकरोद् |

ṃā'hāṃ brahma nirākuryām mā mā brahma nirākarod |

May I never deny the existence of Brahman. May I never have incompletion with Brahman. May Brahman never deny me or withdraw Its grace from me.

Some of the worst and most foolish things human beings do occur when they experience incompletion. Suddenly, they deny the very existence of God. When they pass an exam, they break a coconut in front of Gaṇeśa. When they fail in the exam, they break Gaṇeśa Himself. As God, only you can protest that there is no God. Understand, only Existence can deny Existence.

Actually, we always carry an insecurity that He may deny us; so before that happens, we try to deny Him. In this urgency to defend ourselves, we create many enemies in our lives. The urgency to defend yourself is the first and foremost original enemy within you. Without patience and powerfulness, powerlessness always pushes you into a state of urgency where you feel the need to assert yourself: "Oh! If He is going to say no to me, let me say no to Him first."

If you look into your life, countless times you have intensified your own suffering by rushing to deny another person - simply out of the imagination that he may deny you. When this same incompletion arises with Brahman, the Cosmic Consciousness, you think: "Oh! He may deny me. Let me deny Him first."

The mental set-up of "He may deny me, so let me deny Him first" is the mind-set of an atheist. The mental set-up of a devotee or a seeker is: "May Brahman never deny me or withdraw Its grace from me."

Today declare:

मा'हम् ब्रह्म निराकुर्याम् मा मा ब्रह्म निराकरोद्

ṃā'hāṃ brahma nirākuryām mā mā brahma nirākarod

May I never have incompletion with Brahman, consciousness. May Brahman never deny me or withdraw Its grace from me.

Declare this and carry this space inside you throughout. You will see how many wonderful things are happening around you.

Declare Completion with Brahman, Consciousness

Understand, just because your father did not give you pocket money, you cannot say, "My father does not exist" or "You are no longer my father." Yet usually, we all behave like this in many of our relationships. When you look at a relationship as merely utility-based, if your utility is not fulfilled, you go to the extreme - not just denying the relationship, but even denying the very existence of the other person. If your father refuses to give you pocket money for the right reason, he is being a good father. If it is for the wrong reason, he may be a bad father. But in either case, you cannot say he is not your father.

Denying existence is the height of stupidity. It is the illogical stand atheists have chosen to take. The tendency of "Be useful to me exactly as I want, or I will deny you to your very core" is born from deep violence, and it is itself the expression of intense violence.

"You deny something for me, I deny something for you" is the equal-fight mentality of a Kṣatriya (warrior).

"If you deny something, I will find out why, and I will try to work with you, do some bargaining, and get it from you" is the mentality of a Vaiśya (businessman).

"Even if you deny me, I will work with you, complete with you, and make you part of me" is the approach of a Brāhmaṇa (seeker of knowledge).

"If you deny something for me, I will deny your very existence" is the approach of a Caṇḍāla (one steeped in life-negating ignorance).

When you deny the very existence of another person simply because some of your utility is denied or even because you imagine it is denied, that is the life-denying approach towards existence.

The Upaniṣad declared here:

मा ऽहम् ब्रह्म निराकुर्याम् |

ṃā'hāṃ brahma nirākuryām |

The people of the book can never understand that a book can exist without people. But the people of dhamma know that dhamma exists even if there are no people to follow it. Understand, people of the book cannot grasp that a book can come into existence without people, whereas people of dhamma know that dhamma remains even if no one follows it.

Just because you tried with one girlfriend or boyfriend and failed, you cannot deny the very existence of relationship itself. You cannot deny the entire system of education simply because you failed in one examination. If, after understanding and becoming enlightened, you then come to a conclusion, that is different.

Exams are like girlfriends: too many questions, difficult to understand, always require more explanation and the result is usually failure!

Denial of the Whole just because one part was not useful to you is Caṇḍālatva - stupidity at its peak, cunningness at its extreme.

People even gamble with God. They declare: "Today You have to do this; otherwise, You do not exist." People try such games with Gaṇapati, Hanumān, Śirḍi Sai Bābā, even with Mahādeva. "If You exist, do this for me; if not, I know You do not exist." But Kālabhairava has a clear policy: if someone approaches with a life-positive attitude, He showers them with blessings. If someone approaches with genuine seeking, He grants them Completion.

Never deny the existence of Brahman: mā 'haṃ brahma nirākuryām. Never carry incompletion with Existence or Consciousness: mā mā brahma nirākarot. May Brahman never deny me or withdraw Its grace from me.

Understand, by not denying the existence of Consciousness, you also create a will within you: "Let Brahman not deny me. Let Brahman not withdraw Its grace from me." In truth, He never withdraws. It is only that you either stop or do not stop. He never withholds His grace; you either allow its flow or block it yourself.

Declaring Your Will is The Most Powerful Completion Process

Let there be no separation. Let me have Complete Completion with Brahman, the Consciousness - and let Brahman be complete with me. So be it. Understand: the most powerful Completion process is your will and your declaration. You willing with a single, integrated power and declaring it - this is the ultimate Completion technique.

Paramashiva has given at least two hundred techniques for Completion to resolve different incompletions. There are varied methods, processes, procedures and systems - tailored for different backgrounds and genders. Still, the most powerful technique of all is the willful declaration. If you learn this and, through your willful declaration, you bring Completion, you will have mastered the Science of Completion - and no suffering can reach you anymore. You will have entered a space where suffering is redundant and irrelevant. It's not difficult. That is the good news.

You always think: "I can't even lift five kilograms. How can I lift a hundred? Only if I lift a hundred will my body look like those models in the photos!" This comparison is toxic thinking. Begin where you are. Lift the two kilograms that your system presently supports; with that strength you will lift five. With the strength your system builds, you can raise it to ten. Do not compare where you are now with some imagined end-point - that is not the right way.

Declare: "One victory will add more will and strength in me." That declaration itself propels you to the next level of will, to a more powerful declaration, and onward. "Oh, we can never reach where You are. Where are You? Where am I?" - this is the most cunning pattern you can develop. Recognize it and drop it.

Grow up. Be a mature adult. When you recognize that pattern, break it. Decide to drop it. By your will alone you can have Completion; you are a grown, matured being. By your will you can infuse love or withdraw it from time, space, action, or person - that is the ultimate maturity of emotion.

By your will you can complete hatred; by your will you can manifest love; by your will you can withdraw yourself; by your will you can throw yourself completely into something.

Let your will be decisive. Let your declaration be whole. Completion is born from that single, integrated act.

Declaration - A Mature Way to Connect With God

All techniques are nothing but trying to make your will catch this truth. Your will is the most powerful Completion technique.

Here Upaniṣad declares:

Let there be no separation. Let me have Completion with Brahman, the Consciousness; and let Brahman be complete with me. So be it.

अनिराकरणमस्त्व-निराकरणम् मे'स्तु |
aṅīṛākāṛāṇāṃstva-ṅīṛākāṛāṇāṃ me'stu |
तदात्मनि निरते य उपनिषत्सु धर्मास्ते मयि सन्तु ते मयि सन्तु ||
ṭādāṭṃāṅī nirate ya ūpāṅīṣāṭśū dharmāste mayi santu te mayi santu ||

May all dhaṛṃa, the sacred truths declared by Upaniṣads be fully manifest and radiate in me, who, am integrated and authentically devoted to knowing and experiencing that truth, Ātma (the Self). May they manifest and radiate in me.

Declaration as basic necessity is the right inner image. Only a person who has the right inner image can declare: "Me, who is integrated and authentic, devoted to knowing and experiencing the truth." If you think you are a sinner, you can never have this inner image; you have to be praying forever. Only a person who knows he is integrated, he is able to declare. And a person who builds himself through declarations, only he can have that inner image – he is integrated and authentic.

Yoga is Hinduism

Constantly people try to say: "Yoga is not Hindu." The truth is: the moment you start Sūrya Namaskār, you are Hindu. You are living Hinduism. You are practicing Hinduism. The prerequisite of Yoga is the belief that you are a soul, and that you must unite with it. The idea that "you are a sinner and need salvation" cannot be the foundation of Yoga. To practice Yoga, the fundamental necessity is to believe: I am Consciousness, I must unite with Consciousness. Not "I am a sinner." Not "I need forgiveness." No! The moment you bend your body for Yoga, you are a practicing Hindu. Whether you feel blessed or hurt is up to you, but truth is truth.

Yoga cannot be separated from its great foundations: Yama and Niyama. Yama is lifestyle. Niyama is thought-current.

They are not cultural frills. They are not optional. They are integral. Yoga is Aṣṭāṅga - eight parts, not eight steps. Aṅga means part, not step. When you fall in love with Yoga, the first thing you will want is to read the original Sūtras. But if you are only doing business with Yoga, you will avoid Saṃskṛt. Why? Because those who know Saṃskṛt inevitably turn to the scriptures.

Languages like Saṃskṛt and Tamil are extraordinarily rich. For every emotion, they have hundreds, even thousands of subtle words. When you think in such a language: You can identify every nuance of your inner state with precision; you gain deeper insight into yourself; you build an amazing inner image.

Think in Saṃskṛt - you will become enlightened. Think in Tamil - you will become enlightened.

Both are divine languages, carrying the vibration of the Ṛṣis and Siddhas. Study the original works in Tamil - the teachings of Agastya, the 18 Siddhas, the great Śaiva and Vaiṣṇava saints. Dive into the Sūtras in Saṃskṛt. When you do, you will not just practice Yoga - you will live Enlightenment.

Act of Declaring and Manifesting Develops Amazing Inner Image

Start practicing declaring and manifesting. Even from one or two incidents, you will begin to develop an amazing inner image. If you only pray and manifest what you want, you may indeed receive it - but you will not necessarily build a powerful inner image.

But when you declare and then manifest: you not only get what you want, but you also create an extraordinary inner image and inner space.

This is the secret: prayer may give you results; declaration gives you results and transforms you.

तदात्मनि निरते य उपनिषत्सु धर्मास्ते मयि सन्तु |
ṭādāṭmāṅī nirate ya ūpāṅīṣāṭśū dharmāste mayi santu |

The courage with which the Upaniṣad is declaring: "Let all the sacred truths manifest in me because I am integrated and authentic, devoted to knowing and experiencing the truth."

My very authenticity of wanting to know the truth, truth has to manifest through me. Otherwise, what for it exists? I want to experience Sadāśiva, so He has to manifest through me. Otherwise, what for is He there? He is there only to manifest through whoever wants to experience Him.

Let this line be your declaration today.

अनिराकरणम्स्त्व-निराकरणम् मे'स्तु |
तदात्मनि निरते य उपनिषत्सु धर्मास्ते मयि सन्तु ते मयि सन्तु ||
aṅīṛākāṛāṇāṃstva-ṅīṛākāṛāṇāṃ me'stu |
ṭādāṭmāṅī nirate ya ūpāṅīṣāṭśū dharmāste mayi santu te mayi santu ||

Let me have Completion with Brahman, the consciousness; and let Brahman be complete with me. May all dhaṛṃa, the sacred truths declared by Upaniṣads be fully manifest and radiate in me, who, am integrated and authentically devoted to knowing and experiencing that truth, Ātma (the Self).

Humbleness is Not Powerlessness

This verse - the Śāntipāṭha of Kena Upaniṣad - begins with a declaration. Even prayer becomes a true spiritual practice when you carry the right inner image. The one who holds the right inner image finds his prayers always answered. The more he prays, the more he becomes part of the Whole, part of the Cosmos.

Two Sacred Secrets: Humbleness is not powerlessness. To be humble, you do not need to be powerless. For God to be great, you do not need to be low. The idea "If someone is great, you must be small" is a political mindset, not a religious truth. He can be great and you can be great - because both of you arise from the same Source, and both are ultimately One.

If you carry a low inner image, sometimes your prayers may be answered, but you will never be free from suffering. If you carry the right inner image, not only will your prayers manifest - you will also experience Oneness with Reality.

Understand: experiencing Oneness is not only your ambition - it is also the ambition of the Whole. Sadāśiva is waiting for you to declare, "I am Śiva." Sadāśiva does not feel anger, jealousy, or exclusivity when you declare "Śivoham."

Even if you declare it half-heartedly, with self-doubt, self-hatred, and self-denial — "Me? I think I am Śivoham… but what about my wife, my disease, my poverty…? Maybe if all that was gone, could be Śiva…" - even then, Sadāśiva feels tremendous joy. He does not reject you. He only looks for the corners of your inner space where He can enter and make Śivoham a permanent reality in you. Jealousy, competition, exclusivity - these are not the qualities of Sadāśiva. His space is pure inclusiveness. Even if you struggle and declare "Śivoham," He only works to expand that declaration until it becomes your lived reality.

Sacred Secrets of Paramashivaa

Every human being has three lives:

1. Public Life – your social life, friends, relatives, acquaintances.

2. Private Life – your family or very close circle, usually one or two people.

3. Secret Life – the most intimate space within you. At most, one or two people may be part of it, and very rarely will it include someone from your family.

Now, understand how this relates to Sadāśiva. When you pray with a low self-image or low inner image - "Oh God, You are great, but I am a sinner. I am powerless." - you can only enter into Sadāśiva's public life. When you declare "Śivoham" from the right inner image, you step into Sadāśiva's private life. When you realize that Sadāśiva is neither jealous nor threatened by you declaring oneness with Him - when you understand that He actually celebrates you, and eagerly works to make your declaration reality, even amidst your self-doubts, self-hatred, and self-denial - when you declare "Śivoham" as your reality, then you are welcomed into Sadāśiva's secret life.

God is Oneness, Not One

Understand: God is not One; God is Oneness. If God were One, He would have to be jealous, protective of His throne, authority, and seat. But Sadāśiva knows the truth - Oneness is God, not One. That is why He waits for each of us to celebrate Oneness, to celebrate His very existence. This is the most important secret you need to know.

When you try to declare, when you strive to raise yourself, when you seek the experience of Śivoham - you are Śiva, in the space of Sadāśiva - He is never jealous of you, never angry with you, never disturbed by you. He only welcomes you. He celebrates you.

Sadāśiva's public life is what you read in the Purāṇas - He kills a demon, blesses a devotee, and reveals Himself to the world. Sadāśiva's private life is what He personally shared in the Āgamas - the original secrets of Enlightenment given to Devī, Subrahmaṇya, Nāndī, and rare beings able to grasp the truth. But the secret of the secret is this: just as you yearn for Him, Sadāśiva yearns for you.

This is the Secret of the Secret. When you grasp this truth - "When I decide to be Him, He is already waiting to have me as Him. Just as I was waiting, He was also waiting" - and when you declare Śivoham, you enter into Sadāśiva's secret life.

A powerful declaration integrates your body, mind, and consciousness. With tremendous Completion with Sadāśiva, you experience His inner space and begin to manifest His powers. Do not even be concerned about powers. When you become part of His secret life, He simply manifests through you. He is waiting for more bodies, more beings, through which He can radiate Himself. If your eyes carry deep yearning and seeking, when He looks at you, His eyes will mirror that same yearning and seeking - for you.

You Are Amṛtasya Putrāḥ

You are not a poor orphan or a sinner. You are amṛtasya putrāḥ - born of His very DNA. When you want Him, He must want you. If that truth doesn't click, you will remain only in His public life.

Bhakti (devotional practice) places you in Sadāśiva's public life.

Sādhana done as per the Āgamas places you in His private life.

But there is a deeper secret: when you truly understand that He planted the very seed of your wanting, everything changes.

You catch the secret of the secret when you feel and celebrate your own seeking - the inner voice that whispers, "Maybe He wants me; that is why He put the Seeking in me." When that recognition arises and you declare from your being - "Śivoham! Sadāśivoham! I am He; He is me. He awaits my 'yes' to manifest through me; I await His manifestation through me." - you pierce the illusion of separation. You see the absurdity of waiting when both of you already want each other. That realization - that simultaneous wanting - dissolves the stupidity of separation. Declare Sadāśivoham from your being. Live it. The moment you do, you enter Sadāśiva's secret life.

Mahādeva Rahasya - Seeking Itself is a Signal He Wants to Manifest through You

You may have heard of many Deva Rahasya - divine secrets. When Yama Dharma speaks about death, it is Deva Rahasya. What Śrī Kṛṣṇa reveals to Arjuna in the Gītā is Rājavidyā Rājaguhyaṃ - the royal knowledge and royal secret. What Yama Dharma taught to Naciketā was a divine secret. Now, listen: this is Mahādeva Rahasya.

Jīvātma means the individual self. The moment the individual begins to yearn and seek Oneness with Paramātma, with Sadāśiva - know this: the call never starts from the individual. The individual has no power to initiate. Jīvātma has no outgoing facility - only incoming. The outgoing call always comes from Sadāśiva. He alone can initiate seeking in you.

When the bell of seeking rings in your heart, understand - He has called. Do not think you are calling Him. He is calling you. Your only responsibility is to pick up. Seeking itself is the signal that He wants you. Seeking itself is the proof that He wants to manifest through you. Seeking itself is the note that He wants Oneness with you. You may go on believing your self-doubt, self-hatred, and self-denial - or you can believe this secret. The choice is yours. When this clicks, you begin to grasp Mahādeva Rahasya. Declare with clarity: "The seeking in me is the signal that Sadāśiva has a secret crush on me."

Your seeking is not your weakness. It is His hidden love-note. Only one who has already tasted honey seeks honey. Only one who has touched Oneness, knowingly or unknowingly, seeks Oneness again. Your very seeking is the proof that Sadāśiva has chosen you. What Sadāśiva Wants

The moment seeking starts, know He is calling. And don't be a fool to think He needs something from you. No. He just needs you. He wants to manifest through you. He wants to expand into you. He wants the you in Him to experience the He in you.

The Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad declares the truth: So'ham Asmi - I am He. Sadāśiva is waiting to explode in you, to fill you, to overflow through you. He is not a jealous God. He is a joyful God.

Remember: Jīvātma has no outgoing facility - only incoming. If you are seeking, it means the call has already come from the other side. Answer it with your whole being. Declare with all your will: "Sadāśivoham. Sadāśivoham. Sadāśivoham."

With every declaration, however much your self-doubt, self-hatred, or self-denial may be filling you, He does not care. Sadāśiva will come closer and closer to you each time you declare, making it more and more real for you. Understand this Mahādeva Rahasya. With this understanding, when you declare Sadāśivoham, you become part of His secret life. Nothing more needs to be said. Let Mahādeva Rahasya be an open secret today. Live it.

Your attitude towards a person decides whether you are going to be part of his public life, private life, or secret life. The same applies to your attitude towards the Cosmos. It determines whether you are part of the Cosmos' public life, private life, or secret life. If you are part of the Cosmos' public life, you will be a great devotee.

Whatever you seek will be showered, nurtured, and nourished. If you are part of the Cosmos' private life, you will be an enlightened being. Whenever you wish, He will manifest through you and bless those around you. If you are part of the Cosmos' secret life, you will know the very nuances of how the Brahmāṇḍa functions. Neither law nor logic defines its ways. In Sadāśiva's functioning there is no law, no logic - only tremendous love and integrity to that love. Once you recognize this love and His integrity to it, you will understand: that is the way He functions.

Until you become part of His secret life, questions will haunt you - why some are rich, why some are poor, why some live long, why some die within days of birth, why some fall sick, why others remain healthy. You may push them aside, but they will linger. Only when you become part of His secret life - when you are He and He is you - will you understand. That is Incarnation. Whoever becomes part of Sadāśiva's or the Cosmos' secret life becomes an Incarnation.

If you think the Cosmos is great and you are low, that is only a half-truth. The Cosmos is great - that is truth. But believing you are low is foolishness. For God to be great, you do not need to be small. In the human kingdom, if someone is king, others must be subjects. If someone is boss, others must be subordinates. If someone is leader, others must follow. But not in the divine kingdom. In the divine kingdom, the Head is not one - it is Oneness. It is not led by one - it is led by Oneness.

Understand these vital truths. The right understanding can transform the very way you exist and function. If you continue with the idea that God is all-powerful and you are powerless, sometimes He may grant what you ask, but you will never find solution. The problem will not end. You will go on asking, and He will go on giving. And when you ask for too much and He does not give, you will begin to blame Him. The tug-of-war continues.

In the modern day, people divorce even Gods. You stop going to one temple and start going to another. You try, and then declare: "No, I think it is not working out for me. I am divorcing Him." People divorce even Gods in the modern era. If your approach comes from powerlessness or a low inner image - questioning whether He gives or not - the situation will never end; the problem will never be solved. There is no end to this folly. It will continue endlessly.

If you understand this, you must also take responsibility for what you desire. You should begin to take charge of what you want to manifest and start spiritual practices - you become part of Sadāśiva's private life. As long as you retain a low inner image - praying, performing rituals, or whatever you do - if your attitude toward yourself is powerless and diminished, you will only be part of Sadāśiva's public life. Like in the Purāṇas, where devotees beg and He appears occasionally to grant darśana, rarely fulfilling their requests, you will be part of His public life. That is acceptable, as there are millions who are not even part of His public life. Something is better than nothing.

When you understand the laws of life and take responsibility for what He showers or what you ask from Him, your inner image develops and reaches a certain maturity. It matures as you begin practicing the Āgama, which contains His teachings. Āgama means "taught by Sadāśiva, heard by Devī, adopted as a lifestyle to maintain the Cosmos by Viṣṇu."

Delivered by Sadāśiva, received by Devī, and adopted as the Cosmic Constitution by the maintainer (Viṣṇu), this is Āgama By practicing it, you become part of His private life, where He appears whenever you want. He grants whatever you desire. He even responds to requests for others and considers your recommendations. He gives and shares, but at this stage, you are a matured being, not yet fully ripened.

The next level is becoming part of His secret life by understanding the secret from which He functions - the sūkṣma, the subtle methodology of His operation. If you comprehend the secret methodology - the way your boss functions - you can function as a boss yourself. With an ordinary boss, the problem is that only one can be the boss. Here, the moment you understand the way Sadāśiva functions, you can become like Sadāśiva without threatening His existence. Since you do not threaten His existence, He is not jealous of you, nor does He stop you. He welcomes you and waits for you.

Human beings need to remember one crucial point: when the Cosmos rushes toward you, when Sadāśiva overwhelms you with His love, when He overflows within you - do not foolishly harbor doubts. First, do not doubt. "Am I qualified for this?" The moment self-doubt, self-hatred, or self-denial arises - "Am I qualified?" - you begin to doubt Him. "Perhaps He wants something from me; that is why He is showering Himself on me."

Understand the truth: He has nothing to achieve through you. Neither your money, beauty, age, wealth, nor possessions - whatever you consider most valuable in life - are of any use to Him. He is not looking at you for utility. He sees you only as a conscious value. He flows toward you solely to manifest through you.

Even if you offer all your wealth, life, beauty, cars, bank balances, and houses, it is like a lion cub offering grass to a lion. The cub may have been habituated to eating it, but the lion is not. The lion neither enjoys nor consumes your grass. He may appear to accept it just to please you. Perhaps He collects it for future lion cubs to eat as they grow. But it is of no use to Him.

Stop the self-doubt of "Am I qualified?" Once you stop this self-doubt, you will also drop the doubt that Sadāśiva has some vested interest. No. His only interest is to manifest through you. Neither your wealth, skill sets, life, nor beauty is useful or helpful to Him. All of that is like the grass brought by a lion cub to the lion. The lion never eats it. The lion never enjoys it. Sometimes He stocks the grass so that when future cubs arrive, they may need it for a few days until they become lions. When you understand that He has no vested interest, you will allow His love and grace to flow freely into you.

The second serious challenge every seeker faces is being overwhelmed when they comprehend the logic with which Sadāśiva functions. Do not be caught in middle-class mentalities, cozy understandings, or limited ideas about the Cosmos as being too big or too much. When you decide to become comfortable with the way It functions, you become part of His secret life - Sadāśiva's secret life. In becoming part of His secret life, He manifests Oneness through you. He manifests all experiences and powers through you.

One of the Mahādeva Rahasya you need to know is that the moment you start seeking, eternal love and bliss stay with you. You have received an incoming call. Understand that the individual soul (Jīvātma) can only receive incoming calls; it cannot make outgoing calls. If there is seeking within you, understand that Sadāśiva has called you, and you have every right to declare Sadāśivoham. When He calls, it is always Śivatvamasi. This means He is initiating you into Śivatvamasi - You are Śiva. You are Śiva. Now you have the right to declare Śivoham, Sadāśivoham. You need not feel shy: "If I declare myself as Sadāśiva, will He get angry? Will He check my qualifications?" No. The moment seeking begins, you have received the incoming call; pick up and respond. You do not have to feel shy about initiating communication. He has called you. You have the right to respond. You are programmed only for incoming calls. If you feel the bell ringing in your heart, if you feel the seeking, drop the ego that you are a seeker.

Seeking is a secret invitation sent by Sadāśiva for you to become part of His secret life because He has a secret affection for you. He has no use for you personally, but He desires to manifest through you. The ordinary human mind always interprets interactions in terms of business: "If He wants this, then He must gain something from me." Relax! Whatever you consider valuable is not even useful to you - how could it be useful to Him? Do not be foolish enough to think otherwise. He is not looking for anything from you. He is looking at your consciousness, through which He can manifest Himself, celebrate Himself, and experience expression.

The more you manifest Oneness, the more powers manifest through you, and the more He celebrates Himself in you. You become the ground in which He celebrates. You become the ambala in which He dances. You become the shoulder on which He rests. You become the lap on which He places His foot. You become the Ādiśeṣa where He performs Yoga Nidrā. He is not seeking any utility; He is seeking your consciousness, which has the potential to mirror Him, the potential through which He can manifest.

Seeking - Sadāśiva's Incoming Call Declaring Śivatvamasi

Understand this Mahādeva Rahasya. Do not shy away with the thought: "Am I qualified?" Only if Sadāśiva were seeking certain skill sets should you wonder, "Am I qualified or not?" But He is not looking for any skill sets. He is looking for consciousness

- and that you already possess. That is why you received the incoming call. Your seeking itself is the incoming call, never an outgoing one.

Every time you feel that seeking, understand that He is declaring Śivatvamasi. His declaration is not superficial, insensitive, or automated. It is not an automatic message. You are not His spouse for your call to be answered by voicemail. You are His secret crush. He is waiting for your response.

Śivatvamasi, Śivatvamasi, Śivatvamasi - you are Śiva, you are Śiva, you are Śiva.

The more and more you declare Sadāśivoham and manifest what you want in your life, the more and more you become part of His secret life. By the power of the Sadāśivoham declaration, you can shape your body as you wish. By the power of the Sadāśivoham declaration, you can direct your mind as you wish. By the power of the Sadāśivoham declaration, you can manifest your life as you wish. The more you declare and manifest, the more you enter into His secret life, where He reveals to you the innermost truths of how the Cosmos functions.

Declare with all your will: "Sadāśivoham" - and manifest what you want in your life. Say within: "If I am Sadāśiva, this is the way I want my life; let me manifest it." Suddenly, you will see the secrets of how things manifest, why they manifest, when they manifest, and why they sometimes do not, being revealed to you. You become part of His secret life only when you declare and manifest without blaming anyone, without placing responsibility on somebody else. Then the secrets by which the Cosmos functions are unveiled to you. When you realize why He does what He does, you simply fall in love with Him to the extreme, dissolving into Oneness with Him.

This is the secret of secrets - Mahādeva Rahasya. The very moment seeking awakens in you, you are authorized to declare Sadāśivoham and to manifest Oneness - all the experiences and powers of Oneness with Sadāśiva. Begin manifesting it. Do not take your seeking for granted. Among billions, fewer than millions receive that call. Among those millions, only thousands pick up the call. You are one of those few who have answered.

The moment seeking arises within you, you receive the incoming call: Śivatvamasi. Now you have the authority, the adhikāra, to declare Sadāśivoham. Begin manifesting those powers, experiences, and the life you desire. Your declaration is powerful enough - and Sadāśiva is waiting to fulfill it. He is waiting to manifest through you. So, do it.

If you desire a house to be built, declare: "I am Sadāśiva. This is the way I want my life to be. Let this house manifest." You will see it manifest. Along with it, you will gain a profound understanding of the sacred secrets of how the Cosmos functions. Sadāśiva is waiting to manifest your declarations.

Mahādeva Rahasya - Address Me As Aruṇācala, Your Request Will Be Granted

Rāmana Maharṣi says beautifully: "Just as human beings associate themselves with the body - even though they know they are not the body - they use the body to relate and to do what they wish. In the same way, Sadāśiva associates Himself with Aruṇācala. He says: 'Sadāśiva feels Aruṇācala is His body even though He knows He is beyond the body; He uses that body to do what He wishes.'"

One more secret: what Rāmana Maharṣi revealed is one of the Mahādeva Rahasya.

Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam now gives you another Mahādeva Rahasya that will be directly useful in your life. Every time you declare "Sadāśivoham," Mahādeva, Sadāśiva, rushes toward you to manifest through you, because the Whole wants to manifest through every part. By its nature, the Whole desires to manifest and celebrate Its existence through every part.

Just as Rāmana Maharṣi revealed one Mahādeva Rahasya, here is another from Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam: "Anyone who addresses Me as 'Aruṇācala' and requests anything - I will give it. That is the secret password I enjoy; that is the secret passcode. If you call Me 'Aruṇācala' and ask, I will never say no, for I must prove and establish that I am Aruṇācala." Likewise, if you declare, "Sadāśivoham (I am Sadāśiva). This is the way I want my life to manifest," Sadāśiva becomes mesmerized by you, enters into you, and manifests through you exactly as you desire.

Understand this secret code. Use it to your fullest advantage - maximise it. Overuse it, not merely use it. He delights in being overused. He celebrates when you overuse Him. He is a limitless resource and fears no overuse. He waits for you to overuse Him. Limited resources fear overuse; He does not. He celebrates it.

Learn this Mahādeva Rahasya. As long as your secret crush can hide their secret crush from you, the drama and dilly-dallying continue. The moment you discover - or the other reveals - their secret crush on you, the drama ends. In the same way, once you understand that Sadāśiva has a secret crush on you, all the sufferings and dramas - "Am I accepted or rejected? Am I right or wrong? Am I a sinner or a saint?" - cease. The stupidity and hesitation end. You become His secret life partner. You are no longer merely a secret crush; you are His intimate companion. Now that you know the truth - that He has a secret crush on you - nothing more can be hidden. No more drama. Become part of His secret life. Become Sadāśiva's secret life partner. Celebrate life.

Other than your will, your intention to be, and your declaration, nothing else is real. All other psychological, physiological, and neurological ups and downs are not ultimately real. They cannot touch you. Apply that truth here and now, from this sacred secret. Hinduism is a Tradition of Peace

One of the worst crimes against humanity is translating Hindu scriptures without context and then willfully misrepresenting, manipulating, and using them to attack, abuse, and instill a false inner image about us. This is not a peace prayer - this is a peace declaration.

Hinduism is authentically a tradition of peace. Our concept of generating wealth is peace-based. Even our methods of conflict resolution are rooted in peace. Even our wars followed strict rules and regulations, where only valor was tested and established. Wasting human life or committing brutal massacres was never permitted. Hinduism is a tradition deeply centered on peace. Because it is authentically peace-centered, it knows the great secret: peace begins by gathering together all your pieces with integrity. Assembling all the scattered parts of yourself into Oneness is the very first step toward true peace.

So it starts with:

ॐ आप्यायन्तु ममाण्गानि वाक्प्राणश्चक्शुः
श्रोत्रम्-अथोबलम्-इन्द्रियाणि च सर्वाणि |
सर्वम् ब्रह्मोप्निषदम्
मा'हम् ब्रह्म निराकुर्याम् मा मा ब्रह्म
नरिाकरोद्-अनरिाकरणम्स्त्व-नरिाकरणम् मे'स्तु |
तदात्मनि निरते य उपनिषत्सु धर्मास्ते मयि सन्तु ते मयि सन्तु ||
ॐ शान्तिः शान्तिः शान्तिः ||

auṁ āpyāyāṅtū mamāṇgāni vākprāṇaścakśuḥ śrotram-athobalam-indriyāṇi ca śārvāṇī |
sarvaṁ bṛāhmṃopṅīṣādāṃ ṃā'hāṃ brahma nirākuryām mā mā brahma snirākarod-aṅīṛākāṛāṇāṃstva-ṅīṛākāṛāṇāṃ me'stu |
ṭādāṭṃāṅī nirate ya ūpāṅīṣāṭśū dharmāste mayi santu te mayi santu ||
auṁ śāṅṭīḥ śāṅṭīḥ śāṅṭīḥ ||

If you look at the whole declaration together, you can see that integrating yourself is the first thing you need to do.

I am Sadāśiva. Let my limbs, speech, prāṇa, eyes, hearing, everything be fully matured and enriched. All is Brahman, consciousness that is revealed in the Upaniṣads – sarvaṁ bṛāhmṃopṅīṣādāṃ.

May I never deny the existence of Brahman, Sadāśiva. May I never have incompletion with Brahman - Sadāśiva, the consciousness that is Sadāśiva. May Brahman never deny me or withdraw Its grace from me. Let there be no separation. Let me have completion with the ultimate consciousness, Sadāśiva. Let Brahman be complete with me. So be it.

This is not only truth; it is power as well. Sacred truths, sacred experiences, sacred sentiments, sacred powers: when sacred truths manifest through the intellect and the head, they become sacred experiences. When sacred truths manifest through the heart and the emotional current, they become sacred sentiments. When sacred truths manifest through your being, they become sacred powers.

Let the sacred truths manifest as sacred experiences, sacred sentiments, and sacred powers - fully manifest and radiate in me, who am integrated and authentically devoted to knowing and experiencing that truth, Ātmā (the Self). tad ātmani nirate ya upaniṣatsu dharmāste. May they manifest and radiate in me - mayi santu te mayi santu.

Keep this as your declaration today. This is one of the most powerful declarations to manifest all the experiences, sentiments, and powers of Oneness. The experience of Oneness is expressed as Śāstra. Sentiments arising from Oneness are expressed as Stotra. Powers of Oneness are described as Sūtra. Experiences of Oneness are conveyed as Śāstra; sentiments of Oneness as Stotras; powers of Oneness as Sūtras. This declaration is supremely potent - make it your daily practice to manifest powers.

Power of Feeling Connection

The feeling connection you cherish has a tremendous impact on you. Please understand: if you feel connected to a Yoga teacher, naturally he will have a profound influence on you, and you will gain health. He will somehow make you do Yoga. He will make you bend again and again. He will make you practice Yoga, and as a result, you will enjoy good health.

If you have a feeling connection with a teacher who teaches you stotras, bhajans, kīrtans, he will somehow awaken devotion in you, because he constantly shares his thought currents. Therefore, with whom you entertain the feeling connection matters greatly.

Be careful with whom you open your heart. When you find the right person, do not delay in opening your being. The moment you know the right person is in front of you, do not merely grasp - just grab! Grasping is too decent a word. When the right person is before you, do not be overly decent; be raw, just grab. Otherwise, you may waste your life in the name of decency.

To whom you open your being and with whom you feel connected is extremely important. The moment you decide to be Bhagavān Nithyananda Paramaśivam's disciple, and choose to cherish the feeling connection with Him while nurturing your bhakti towards Him, He plants the whole Science of Oneness in its complete seed form inside you. You do not need any other spiritual practice to achieve this. You simply need to declare and allow it to manifest in your life, in every situation, every day, again and again.

When you declare and begin manifesting, even the intelligence required for further manifestations will be sent by Him. You do not need to worry: "To build twenty-four-inch biceps, I must lift twenty kilograms. But in each hand I can only lift two kilograms. How will I ever lift twenty kilograms and build my biceps?" No. Start with two kilograms. The strength you develop with two will prepare you to lift five. The strength you gain from five will prepare you to lift ten. Step by step, He ensures the manifestation.

Declare and Manifest

Start declaring Sadāśivoham and manifest, whichever state or stage you are in. When you begin declaring and manifesting, you will naturally receive the intelligence to manifest higher and higher realities. Start even with your tears - declare to stop your tears. When that begins to happen and becomes reality, you will gain strength, knowledge, and more secrets will be revealed to you. Then you will be able to move to the next level.

Declare and manifest. This is not merely a royal secret or a divine secret; it is Mahādeva Rahasya. There is nothing standing between you and Sadāśiva except your own foolish self-doubt. Declaration is the most powerful way to burn self-doubt. Anything else will only strengthen your self-doubt, self-hatred, and self-denial. Declare and manifest - tell yourself and the Universe, which is your own extension: "I am Sadāśiva. This is the way I want my life to be. Let it manifest."

Understand, when you declare this, the Universe responds with tremendous sincerity. Do not think the Universe laughs at you or makes fun of you. No - that is what you constantly do to yourself. One part of you aspires to be a hero, while another part mocks: "Ayy, with that face you are a hero?! You cannot even be a villain or a comedian!" You entertain this tug of war because you feel your identity exists only within this struggle. But this is false. Any education, any thought current, any influence that strengthens your self-doubt - burn it. Burn it as early as possible. There is nothing between you and Sadāśiva other than self-doubt. Declare to yourself again and again, and manifest: "I am Sadāśiva. This is the way I want my life to be."

Declare again, again, and again - stand by it. Other than your pure intention to be, nothing else is reality. You are just your intention to be. Any psychological, physiological, or neurological ups and downs are not you. They are not reality. Declare powerfully. Everything else - those fluctuations of body and mind - will not only disappear from your existence, they will vanish from existence itself. The first and foremost lesson you must know is this: declaration of your will is the straight method to manifest powers.

This whole Śāntipāṭha is the declaration of Sadāśiva manifesting Himself through you. Make this declaration and begin manifesting. This is the one and only way you will manifest all the powers into which Sadāśiva has initiated you in Śuddhādvaita. In the Ādiśaiva tradition - the original Śaiva tradition, the very source of Śaivism - no spiritual practice is given greater importance than declaration. Declaring and manifesting. Initiation by an enlightened Guru, followed by direct manifestation. Begin with the declaration, and manifestation will follow.

Sit with this tremendous declaration: "The Cosmic Source from which everything is living - let It manifest here. Let It accept these offerings. Let You manifest in my life continuously, with all Your experiences, powers, and glory." The mentality you carry is who you are. Therefore, hold this supreme thought-current even while doing Yoga. Tell yourself clearly:

"The powers and the seed are inside me. Let them begin to manifest. Let them manifest supreme powers, supreme experiences, and the highest Oneness."

Understand - whether in thinking, speaking, walking, or living - go on manifesting, manifesting, manifesting. Whatever spiritual practices you do, do them only for manifesting. If you believe they are merely spiritual practices, then do not do them. Practice only from the context of manifesting and understanding manifestation. Everything in your life should be done for the purpose of manifesting extraordinary powers and experiences.

The thought-current of the Śāntipāṭha reveals: "May the sacred truths declared in the Upaniṣads fully manifest and radiate in me as sacred experiences, sacred powers, and sacred sentiments - I, who am integrated and authentically devoted to knowing and experiencing that truth, the Ātman (the Self). Ṭādātmāṅī nirate ya ūpāniṣatsu dharmāste mayi santu te mayi santu."

The thought-current this Śāntipāṭha shares with us is simple yet profound: "Declare through your will to integrate yourself and manifest the Supreme Consciousness, Brahman. Manifest all the sacred experiences, sacred sentiments, and sacred powers."

With this Śānti Mantra, with this peace declaration, let us now enter into the first verse of the Upaniṣad. The Śānti Mantra is generally regarded as an introduction. In fact, some Upaniṣads use the same Śānti Mantra, the same Śāntipāṭha. Thus, this verse is considered primarily as an invocation and an introduction.

Now, the first verse:

केनेषितं पतति प्रेषितं मनः केन प्राणः प्रथमः प्रैति युक्तः ।
केनेषितां वाचमिमां वदन्ति चक्षुः श्रोत्रं क उ देवो युनक्ति ॥ १ ॥
keneṣitaṃ patati preṣitaṃ manaḥ kena prāṇaḥ prathamaḥ praiti yuktaḥ |
keneṣitāṃ vācamimāṃ vadanti cakṣuḥ śrotraṃ ka u devo yunakti || 1 ||

Translation: "By whom willed and caused does the mind go towards it; its object, by whom willed and caused and directed and united with which does the first vital life energy the chief cause, comes forth towards its activities, at whose will does this speech gets activated and speaks, enlivened and directed by what luminous divine power indeed do the eyes and the ears engage in their functions."

Spiritual Practice Starts With Seeking, Ends With Initiation From Right Guru

First and foremost, the sacred action: Seeking. It is only when you start seeking the truth, your spiritual journey starts. Till then whatever you are doing can be called good entertainment, not spirituality. With Seeking, spiritual practice starts. With the right Guru's initiation, spiritual practices end. The moment Guru initiates you, whatever you do after that is only manifesting, not practices.

केनेषितं पतति प्रेषितं मनः केन प्राणः प्रथमः प्रैति युक्तः ।
केनेषितां वाचमिमां वदन्ति चक्षुः श्रोत्रं क उ देवो युनक्ति ॥ १ ॥
keneṣitaṃ patati preṣitaṃ manaḥ kena prāṇaḥ prathamaḥ praiti yuktaḥ |
keneṣitāṃ vācamimāṃ vadanti cakṣuḥ śrotraṃ ka u devo yunakti || 1 ||

Seeking. "By whom willed and caused does the mind go towards its object, by whom directed and united, with which does the first vital life energy, the chief cause, comes forth towards it; its activities, at whose will does the speech gets activated and speaks enlivened and directed by what luminous divine power, indeed do the eyes and the ears engage in their functions."

Seeking Starts Questioning the Fundamentals Of Life

Seeking means returning to the fundamental, basic questions. Whenever something in your life fails, whenever you are not manifesting what you want, the first thing you must do is question the fundamentals. Start there. Superficial adjustments will never solve real issues. Makeup may make it appear to others that you have succeeded, but making it look like you made it is very different from actually making it. Ask yourself honestly: Are you interested in others feeling that you have made it, or are you truly interested in making it?

Whenever things fail or do not work out, never be afraid to ask the fundamental questions. If you do, some of the skill sets you acquired, some of the plans you laid out, and even the roads you travelled may become redundant and irrelevant. You may need to undo them, remove them from your life. It may even cost you, but that is all right. The ability to repeatedly question the fundamentals and abide by seeking - that is renunciation.

Whenever you fail, return to the fundamentals. Reorganize yourself. Reinvent yourself. Rejuvenate yourself without fear of burning some part of you, dropping some part of you, or removing some part of you. That guts, that courage is what is called Rudra. The ability to reinvent yourself is Rudra.

Usually, during the phase of maintenance, you forget your original goal and begin to accumulate luxurious frills - layers of inauthenticity. Again and again, or at the very least whenever you face failure, ask the fundamental questions. Doing so removes the inauthenticity that has gathered around you. It burns away the inauthenticities you have created. The ability to keep on removing inauthenticities as they accumulate is Rudra.

Among Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and Rudra: Brahmā creates, Viṣṇu maintains, Rudra rejuvenates.

Rejuvenation means the ability to reinvent yourself by returning to the fundamental questions of life - seeking. Coming back again and again to the basic questions of life is seeking.

For any problem, the solution is never found by asking superficial questions. Superficial questions only lead to temporary fixes - breakdown maintenance or crisis management. You will remain stuck in crisis management unless you ask the fundamentals.

By asking the fundamental questions, you can reinvent yourself, rejuvenate yourself, reactivate yourself, and rededicate yourself to the truth. That is when problems are solved from the core. All solutions that emerge from the core are eternal.

For example: if your business is not working, do not merely ask, "What is happening to my business?" Instead, ask: "What is happening to me? Am I truly interested in what I am doing? Am I passionate about it? Am I fully invested in it?"

केनेषितं पतति प्रेषितं मनः
केन प्राणः प्रथमः प्रैति युक्तः |
keneṣitaṃ patati preṣitaṃ manaḥ
kena prāṇaḥ prathamaḥ praiti yuktaḥ |

The Upaniṣads begin with the fundamental questions. If something in your life is not working, start by asking the fundamental questions. Raise the fundamental questions.

Look into your life, twenty-four hours a day, and observe which part is not working. Do not try to fix only that part. You cannot retain two diseases and heal one. You cannot retain two problems and solve one. Life does not work that way. Perhaps psychiatrists or doctors may work in that manner, but life does not. Life is whole.

Solutions arise only when you ask the fundamental questions of life. Whenever something fails, ask yourself:

What am I?

Who am I?

What am I truly interested in?

What makes me alive?

What gives me inspiration?

What makes me active?

What raises me to my peak?

Ask the fundamental questions. Only then will your problems be solved permanently and eternally. The more you ask these fundamental questions, the more you will build a powerful foundation for life - a foundation for Sadāśiva to manifest through you, a foundation for the divine to express itself through you. Keep asking the fundamental questions. That alone will both solve your problems and create the strong base from which you can continue to manifest and grow.

Pure Questioning Without Assumptions

Each Upaniṣad enriches you, enlightens you with a certain thought current. Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad enriches you with amazing

Each Upaniṣad enriches and enlightens you with a certain thought current. The Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad enriches you with profound conclusions. Seeking, spiritual practice, analysis, developing understanding, manifesting powers, experiencing Oneness - all of these, when practiced, naturally lead to the conclusions beautifully described in the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad. If you simply read the Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad and allow it to become part of your very cognition, you are done. You are complete. For this life - and even for many lives - nothing more needs to be done. You are a Jīvanmukta.

Unfortunately, human beings are not so simple. When conclusions are given, you demand the methods. When methods are given, you feel bored to follow them. When conclusions are offered, you ask for the path. When the path is given, you feel it is too long to walk. It is like this: when you are young, you feel all this is needed only when you grow old.

Especially today's youth think spirituality is meant only for people who have already aged. But understand - when you become old, not only your external situations, even your inner space will no longer be under your control. You will not be able to handle yourself. By then, you will have built unbreakable patterns, incompletable loops, and deep-rooted diseases which cannot be dissolved. With a broken body, a broken mind, and a powerless being, is that the time you want to start living spirituality? Whom are you trying to cheat?

At least decide clearly. If you choose not to live a spiritual life, acknowledge it to yourself honestly. Do not hide behind excuses. People often say: "I will read the Upaniṣads, I will read the Bhagavad Gītā when I am old." And when old age comes, they lament: "All this, I should have done when I was young." This is the game of the human mind.

When conclusions are given, you ask for the method. When methods are given, you ask for the gist. When the gist is given, you say, "Can you give me the method?" And when the method is given, you say, "Oh, this is too long." Such is the restless, ever-escaping nature of the mind.

Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad gave all the conclusions.

ॐ ईशावास्यम् इदगं् सर्वं यत् किञ्च जगत्यां जगत् ।
तेन त्यक्तेन भुञ्जीथा मा गृधः कस्य स्विद् धनम् ॥ १॥
īśāvāsyam idaṃ sarvaṃ yat kiñca jagatyāṃ jagat ।
tena tyaktena bhuñjīthā mā gṛdhaḥ kasya svid dhanam ॥1 ॥

All conclusions - īśāvāsyam idaṃ sarvaṃ - this is the conclusion about the Universe. The second statement reveals the conclusion about the relationship you need to have with the Universe: everything is part of you; you are part of it. Do not hold on to an individual sense of "I" and "mine." Celebrate the Whole. The entire Īśāvāsya Upaniṣad is about conclusions. That's all - conclusions. If you simply take these conclusions, live them, and make them your very cognition, you are done. Nothing more needs to be done. You are a Jīvanmukta.

But you don't do it that simply. You ask for a method: "How? How is everything God? How?" Then comes the Kenopaniṣad, which introduces more powerful thought currents. The very first thought current presented in the Kenopaniṣad is Seeking.

By whom willed and caused does the mind go towards its object? What a question! By the sheer strength of such a question, you can tell whether the person in front of you is a seeker, a poker, or just an empty cooker.

The Kenopaniṣad continues: By whom willed and caused does the mind go towards its object? By whom directed, and united with which, does the first vital life-energy, the chief cause, come forth towards its activities? At whose will does this speech get activated and speak? Enlivened and directed by what luminous divine power do the eyes and ears engage in their functions?

The moment you remember yourself and all that you perceive as "you," begin to question them. Questioning - placing questions on these very fundamentals - is seeking. Do not assume anything. The more you assume, the more your ignorance is exposed.

People who merely ask for answers are fools. Because whenever you ask a question, you already carry some conclusions behind it. You already have certain answers, and based on those, you ask your question. Instead, question your conclusions. Question the very answers you carry.

Seeking means having questions that are not built upon assumptions. Non-assuming questions are seeking. When you hold questions without any assumptions as their foundation, you are asking the real, basic questions. Every assumption itself must be questioned. Seeking, then, is nothing but questioning without assumptions.

And this is exactly what Hindu philosophy is: a specific methodology of questioning, a foolproof system of investigation, a foolproof way of acid-washing every discovery, and a foolproof method of reinventing yourself based only on the purest truths you uncover.

Just these four sets of thought currents - if you apply them to economy, that becomes Hindu economy. If you apply them to architecture, that becomes Hindu architecture. If you apply them to logic, that becomes Hindu logic. Whatever the field, when you apply these four thought Hindu, you discover the Hindu structure of thought in that field.

Philosophy itself means a thinking structure. The translation of the word darśana is "experiential reality thought construct." In the Hindu tradition, there are many such experiential reality thought constructs: Nyāya, Vaiśeṣika, Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Pūrva Mīmāṃsā, Uttara Mīmāṃsā. Then there are Avedica thought currents like Nāstikya, Bauddha(with three to four subdivisions), and Jaina.

If you simply adopt these four currents in your life, you already hold the essence of the Vedas, Upaniṣads, and Purāṇas.

The first of these four is assumption-less questioning. This is a powerful tool even for your day-to-day life. Whatever problem arises before you, sit with it and engage in questioning without assumptions.

When you begin with assumptions, you protect your vested interests. It is like this: you are already married, have a child, built a house, and then you start questioning the source of your suffering. Naturally, you do not want to question your past acts. You invested all your money in a big house in Mumbai, and now you feel empty. You keep asking: "Why am I poor? I have worked for ten years, why am I still poor?" The truth is, you do not want to ask whether buying that house fulfilled you or not. You avoid questioning that very decision, because you fear it will shake the foundations of your life - the decisions you already made, the energy you invested, the positions you committed to. You do not want those zones to be touched.

That is why unassuming questioning rarely happens later in life. Seeking has to begin early, when you are still a child, when you are not yet invested in anything. At that time, pure questioning is possible. When nothing is tied down, when you have not built heavy structures around you, you are naturally ready for authentic seeking.

Young are those who are ready for un-assumption questioning in life. Young are those who are prepared to question without assumptions. If you can question yourself without assumptions, you are truly young. When you carry multiple assumptions, your questioning is not seeking - it is only searching for consolation and support for what you are already doing. "No, don't touch all this; leave it. Answer only this." What does that mean? It means you are expecting life to respond: "Oh my dear, don't worry. You are not suffering because of yourself. You are suffering because everyone else around you is making your life hell. You are surrounded by demons and devils. Anyone else in your place would have committed suicide. At least you survived, withstood, and waged this war. What a great personality you are!" If you imagine you are going to get such an answer from life, you are a fool. And if you actually receive this answer from life, you are being cheated.

Be informed from the very beginning: un-assumption questioning means questioning without conclusions. It means questioning the very basics, enquiring into the fundamentals, investigating into the roots. No other thought current is as pure a questioning as this. Every ordinary question carries assumptions. For example, when you ask: "Who am I?" - there is already the assumption that you exist. Even this question carries assumptions.

केनेषितं पतति प्रेषितं मनः केन प्राणः प्रथमः प्रैति युक्तः ।
केनेषितां वाचमिमां वदन्ति चक्षुः श्रोत्रं क उ देवो युनक्ति ॥ १ ॥

keneṣitaṃ patati preṣitaṃ manaḥ kena prāṇaḥ prathamaḥ praiti yuktaḥ |
keneṣitāṃ vācamimāṃ vadanti cakṣuḥ śrotraṃ ka u devo yunakti || 1 ||

The whole verse carries no assumption. When you wake up and begin to see, perceive, and experience who you are, start questioning whatever you perceive. In truth, this verse is the antidote to the root pattern. Whenever you become aware of yourself, you always have two possibilities: either the root pattern will begin, or this verse will begin. If you choose to go with assumptions, the root pattern starts. If you choose to question the root itself, this thought current awakens in you.

The Ṛṣi asked: "By whom willed and caused does the mind go towards its object? By whom directed and united with which does the first vital life energy, the chief cause, come forth towards its activities? At whose will does this speech get activated?"

When you first become aware of yourself, whatever begins to function or whatever you perceive, start questioning even that perception. Even the question "Who am I?" is 99% pure questioning, not 100%. This thought current, however, is 100% pure questioning.

A Brāhmaṇa is one who lives in pure questioning. A person who questions everything except wealth is a Vaiśya. A person who questions everything except the authority of power is a Kṣatriya. A person who never develops pure, unassuming questioning, and spends his whole life merely taking orders, is a Śūdra. In any field, if you perform an acid wash with pure questioning, you will emerge as a leader in that field.

Assumptions are nothing but vomit from the elders. Even if certain conclusions are correct, you must arrive at them through questioning. Pure questioning itself is consciousness. Pure questioning is success. Pure questioning is energy. If your thinking is washed with the acid of pure questioning, you will be successful in everything. Whether you wish to be a doctor, an engineer, a lawyer, an architect, a realtor, a builder, a bulldozer, a politician, a celebrity, or a social leader - whatever you wish to be - adopt pure questioning. Wash yourself with the acid of pure questioning.

Pure questioning without assumptions is God Himself. Completion is nothing but destroying all conclusions and assumptions, taking you back to the source, and leaving you there as you are. Teaching you to stand without conclusions is Completion. Teaching you to face everything without conclusions is Completion.

The Guru demolishes all your conclusions and leaves you in the space of pure questioning, where there is no conclusion - where you simply stand without any conclusion. When you can stand powerfully in pure questioning without conclusion, you live an enlightened life. When you feel powerless in pure questioning, you begin to eat others' vomit, which is incompletion. Do not eat others' vomit.

When you lack the strength to stand in your own pure questioning, you fall into others' conclusions, and that becomes incompletion within you. Empowering you to stand in pure questioning is Completion, and living from Completion.

When you are at 100% question mark, you receive a 100% answer from the Universe. Pure questioning is the master key that opens all doors. Acid wash all your assumptions. Not even the question "Who am I?" is fully pure, because even there, the existence of 'I' is assumed. The Upaniṣad does not assume even this - it questions everything perceived, without assumption. That is why "Who am I?" is only 99.9% pure questioning, not 100%.

Tulsi, Kabīr, Kīnārām, Trailanga Svāmī - many of the great spiritual giants - their foundational thought current was pure questioning. Even Tulsi's Rāma-bhakti begins not from assumptions, but from pure questioning.

Whichever zone of your life feels incomplete, sit with pure assumption-less questioning. If you discover assumptions even within this questioning - then question those assumptions! If you feel this very verse carries assumptions - question that too. There is nothing wrong.

In the spirit of pure questioning, even atheism is acceptable, provided it arises from authentic pure questioning. The unique greatness of human beings lies in the fact that your brain is developed with subtle grooves and faculties through which you can experience pure questioning. Therefore, entertain this thought current of questioning without assumptions. In every zone of life, you face problems, complications, difficulties, and incompletions. In each of those zones, apply pure questioning.

For example, if you wish to become a politician but are not successful, begin with pure questioning: "What is politics?" Without assuming answers given by others, ask yourself: "Why do I want to become a politician?" You must be very clear - why do you want it? Similarly, if you want to become an engineer, question: "Why do I want to be an engineer?" If you want to become a doctor, ask: "Why do I want to be a doctor?" Making money as a doctor is not wrong, but becoming a doctor only to make money is something seriously wrong.

Pure Questioning Awakens Your Third Eye

Pure questioning brings immense clarity about life. It reveals where you have invested your interest and energy. The very zones you resist questioning are the real source of your problems. There are always certain areas within where you say: "No, no, no, don't touch that. Leave it. Give a discount for it." Those very zones you guard from questioning are the causes of your losses and failures.

Pure questioning awakens the Third Eye. Pure questioning manifests Oneness within you. Pure questioning makes Paramashiva manifest in you. Pure questioning transforms anything you desire into reality. Indeed, pure questioning is the supreme method to manifest all the best things in your life.

Question everything with which you struggle - even those things you may have settled into comfortably. People sometimes say: "I am ninety-four years old. I have already lived seventy-four years with my wife. Do you still want me to question my marriage?" Yes. At the very least, by questioning, you can decide for your next janma. Hindus enjoy the great privilege of multiple lives and an inexhaustible amount of time - something others do not have.

What You believe, You Manifest

Whatever you believe, you manifest as reality. If you are born into the Hindu tradition and raised to believe in multiple lives, you are blessed - you truly have multiple lives before you. People ask: "Then are multiple lives not for everyone?" The answer is no. Because what you believe is precisely what you will manifest in the Cosmos. If, from a young age, you are taught that you have multiple lives, thank your parents, your Gurus, everyone who instilled this in you. Even that belief must eventually be questioned, but through questioning, you will arrive at understanding. When this thought current is given in childhood, your whole system settles into that very groove of the Cosmos where you manifest multiple lives. You can take many births, complete yourself, and ultimately achieve enlightenment.

If, however, you are taught you have only one life, you are doomed - you truly have only one life. That is what you will believe at the moment of death, and that belief will dictate your manifestation. Even if multiple lives exist, you will deny them, bury your head under the pillow, and turn your back on the Cosmos.

To be born and brought up in a tradition where the thought current of multiple lives is alive is an immense fortune. Your very DNA carries multiple possibilities. It develops to a far higher frequency than in traditions which condition you to believe in only one life.

All sampradāyas of Hinduism agree on two great truths. The first, Oṃ - the primordial sound - as the supreme symbol. The second is the reality of multiple lives. The belief system you inherit must be such that it constantly leads you towards pure questioning. At the same time, even pure questioning should not damage your inner space so much that you lose the capacity for it altogether. A true belief system encourages and protects your ability to remain a pure questioning virgin, undefiled by blind conclusions.

The Guru is the living current of realization. The Liṅga is the symbol of the entire heritage. Paramashiva is the source of experiences, powers, and the ultimate reality itself. The Saṅgha is the living community where you enrich, cause, and support each other until the realization becomes your own. Yet, even Guru, Liṅga, and Saṅgha must be questioned - everything must be questioned - with pure questioning.

Masculine and Feminine Dimensions

Pure questioning in the form of poetry is the very beauty of the Upaniṣads. Pure questioning does not mean it is dry or lifeless - the Upaniṣads are pure questioning expressed as poetry, where amazing renunciation shines with extraordinary romance.

Another powerful lie taught to you, which makes you powerless, is the belief that logic and rationality cannot coexist with poetic flow. That if you are masculine, you cannot be feminine; and if you are feminine, you cannot be masculine. This lie disempowers you.

keneṣitaṃ patati preṣitaṃ manaḥ kena prāṇaḥ prathamaḥ praiti yuktaḥ |
keneṣitāṃ vācamimāṃ vadanti cakṣuḥ śrotraṃ ka u devo yunakti || 1 ||

This verse is the union of pure questioning - powerful, unassuming questioning - logic, rationality, and beautiful poetry. It is like Ānandeśvara, Sadāśiva, and Ādi Śakti together: masculine and feminine in perfect union.

Any muscle you may carry, the moment you identify it as “male” or “masculine” and begin to dictate certain ideas into it, it loses its natural ability to flow. The moment you force identification, you deny the other part within you. Then you will crave that missing part forever and eventually die in incompletion.

Do not brand your body as male or female and constantly program it with ideas. By its very natural physiology, it will function as it is meant to. If the body is male, it will naturally express certain masculine qualities; if it is female, it will naturally express certain feminine qualities. Physiological masculine–feminine principles are one thing; artificially imposed psychological thought-currents about masculine and feminine are another. When you force upon yourself the social concepts of gender - when you let those artificial ideas become part of your identity - you suppress the free flow of your very muscle memory.

Whatever muscle memory you pick up from your own lifestyle, such as feeling sleepy because of overeating, can be easily completed. But the muscle memories you absorb from society - its definitions, fantasies, and false understandings - when taken in from unenlightened sources, create deep complications from which it is nearly impossible to free yourself.

That is why the natural physiological principles of gender should be lived as they are, while the psychological projections of society about gender should never be allowed to enter your system. Do not let them become part of your muscle memory or bio-memory. The suppression, repercussions, and incompletions they create can weigh on your consciousness for many births and obstruct your growth.

The ideas from unenlightened resources should be denied access to your inner space. Let your muscle memory and bio-memory grow out of your own experiments, trials, errors, rights and wrongs - by celebrating you. A child should not be burdened with the so-called ideas of “masculine” and “feminine.” Let him or her grow naturally. They will, in time, understand their own physiology and the natural principles of their body. What they need is only the subtle intelligence to watch themselves and to micromanage themselves. Then they will know what brings hurt, pleasure, joy, peace, health, and what makes them feel sick.

Through this awareness, they will grasp the natural physiological principles of their gender.

Feeding misunderstandings from unenlightened sources is one of the main reasons humanity remains stuck. Even at ninety, people continue to crave pornography. What does that mean? It means their next janma (birth) is going to be hell. When the body can no longer act, but the mind still craves, such a person enters the next body with restless desires. Even before the new body matures, the mind begins craving, leading to drastically reduced physical maturity age. This directly affects physical health, mental health, one's ability to handle oneself, and even longevity. It impacts everything.

A small story: In a class, one student asked, "What gender is a computer?" The teacher thought it would be a good exercise to have the students decide. She divided the class into two groups - appropriately enough, by gender. Both groups were asked to give at least four reasons for their recommendation.

The men's group decided that computers should be female. Their reasons were:

1.No one but their creator understands their internal logic.

2.The native language they use to communicate with other computers is incomprehensible to everyone else.

3.Even the smallest mistakes are stored in long-term memory for possible later review.

4.As soon as you commit to one, you find yourself spending more money on accessories.

The women's group, however, concluded that computers should be male. Their reasons were:

1.To do anything with them, you first have to turn them on.

2.They have a lot of data but still can't think for themselves.

3.They are supposed to help solve problems, but half the time they are the problem.

4.As soon as you commit to one, you realize that if you had waited a little longer, you could have gotten a better model.

The social concepts and definitions of gender - if taken as a joke, they are harmless. But if you record them seriously into your muscle memory and bio-memory, and allow them to shape your cognition, they become dangerous.

When a male body is made to believe certain societal concepts of masculinity, the muscles, muscle memory, and bio-memory undergo enormous tension and suppression. That suppression creates expectations of the other gender, and incompletions that leave one craving the denied aspects. This is nothing but hell - a lifelong punishment.

The worst part is that whatever you suppress within yourself by declaring, "I am male" and denying anything beyond the so-called masculine, you will search for it in another. You will never find it there. This seeking endlessly tortures the person who has chosen to live with you, who has committed her life to you. She too has her own suppressions, her own conditioning from unenlightened sources. She has suppressed countless aspects in the name of being female, and she, too, is searching for them in you.

Searching in others for the suppressed component of your muscle is the most frustrating thing that can happen to anyone in life. Even if you are a couch potato, if it is the result of your own trial and error, it is easy to pull you out of it. But the patterns you pick up from others, believe to be your own muscle memory, and install into your bio-memory - those take a long and intense Completion. Only a strong Completion process can free you from them.

Again and again, such borrowed patterns trigger violence, dissatisfaction, incompletion, resistance, and wrong principles about sex. When different parts of the body trigger different ideas, concepts, or patterns in your system, it shows how societies are sinking to lower and lower levels, and how our common agreements are decaying, sinking deeper and deeper, stinking. Our common understandings do matter. Whether you know it or not, even if you grasp higher principles, in daily life you are forced to live within the framework of common understanding.

The first verse manifests and demonstrates the inner space of the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣi through whom it was sung and revealed. It embodies pure questioning, rationality at its peak, poetry in its depth - masculine and feminine radiating together in the space of Completion.

Muscles that are complete, muscles that radiate Completion, demonstrate the true grace of the masculine and feminine principles. Children should be allowed to grow naturally, guided only by the physiological principles of their bodies. They should not be abused with concepts from unenlightened sources about masculine and feminine roles. Such false ideas cripple their psychology, suppress them, and insert suppression into their muscle memory and bio-memory. That makes them incomplete, forever running around searching for the "other part" in life - something they will never find.

The natural principles of sex do not require any part of you to be suppressed. Yet, modern society has planted a stupid idea: unless you have a need, you will not act. It is like the concept of currency - unless you are kept in poverty, you will not work. Otherwise, for whose sake do we work? Nobody knows! The entire planet Earth, with all its countries together, carries a debt of 1.33 trillion dollars. To whom? The whole structure of money is a falsehood generated by the common misunderstanding that only if people are kept poor will they continue to work. This is unnecessary. It is a wrong common understanding.

In the same way, one of the most abusive common understandings is this: if a part of you is suppressed, only then will you start searching for it; only then will you marry; only then will life continue on Earth. No! Grain-based civilizations never required poverty to make people work. Consciousness-based civilizations never required suppression of masculine and feminine principles for humanity to function and reproduce.

The natural physiological principles are powerful enough to run life as Sadāśiva intends on this planet and to keep humanity alive. Artificial concepts about "male" and "female" need not be inserted into your psychology, nor should they poison your muscle memory and bio-memory. Life will go on, humanity will flourish, thrive, and survive on Earth simply by living in alignment with natural principles.

Meditate today on the pure inner space where masculine and feminine principles exist - not the social conditionings about masculine and feminine. Natural principles are one thing; social conditioning is another. Whether a computer is "male" or "female" - all such eight points of reasoning are nothing but social conditioning. Reflect on them deeply. It is not a joke; it is the truth.

For Complete Completion, social conditioning about male and female must be renounced. Renunciation of such conditioning gives birth to the most beautiful beings on Earth - beings like Kṛṣṇa, Sadāśiva, Sundareśvara, and Mīnākṣī. In more recent times, Ramakrishna, Ramana Maharshi, Ānandamayī, Paramahansa Yogananda - all of these radiant beings renounced the social conditioning of gender. They held firmly to the natural principles of masculine and feminine energies. That is why their presence was so graceful, so complete, so divine.

Root of Inner Image

The sacred truths revealed in this verse: "By whom willed and caused does the mind go towards its object."

This means that even before cognizing the illusory "you," you question even the parts of the illusory "you." The question "Who am I?" carries a certain level of presumptions and assumptions. You assume that you are whole and that you need to find out who you are. Even before that assumption, the Upaniṣad asks you to enter into pure questioning.

The first time you begin experiencing the inner image, outer image, and life image - the first time you begin encountering the root pattern, root incident, and root image - if you hold false presumptions that you are a whole entity, you will allow the root pattern to occur. If you engage in pure questioning, you will allow enlightenment to unfold.

For the last few generations, pure questioning throughout life has not been possible. They lost the ability to engage in pure questioning consistently. That is why, today, it seems very difficult to practice pure questioning before the age of seven. However, in this generation, when you begin pure questioning even during a portion of your life, your next generation - your DNA, your extension - will naturally manifest pure questioning before the age of seven.

Pure questioning is connected to the level of Kundalinī Śakti, the level of mitochondrial cellular energy transmitted to the baby from the father and mother. If the parents are seekers, that DNA imprints itself in the child, ensuring that the child will never manifest the root pattern. Even if the child experiences powerlessness for the first time, he will not assume his own existence in a false sense; he will not create the inner image, outer image, or life image based on his illusory sense of "I."

Instead, he will begin contemplating: "By whom willed and caused does the mind go towards its object?" This translates to questions such as: "Who is creating the inner image within me?" or "By whom, directed and united with which, does the first vital life energy and chief cause emerge towards its activities?" In essence, it is asking: "Who is creating my outer image?"

The first line describes the action of creating the inner image. If you do not inquire into this first line, your inner image will be automatically created. If you do question the first line, you become aware of the action that generates the inner image. The inner image is willed and caused by something that empowers the mind to move toward its object. The first time in your body that the mind moves toward an object, that movement is called the inner image; it will create an inner image within you. If you allow that movement to occur without awareness, you will unconsciously form the inner image. At its very root, if you question it, you catch the inner image before it is fully formed.

When you do not realize that it is the first object, you mistake it for the subject. The object, misconstrued as the subject, becomes the focus of your entire life, which you spend protecting it. For a normal person, life passes in the delusion of safeguarding a misconstrued subject.

The inner image is actually an object but pretends to be a subject - a ghost. It is not part of you, yet it deceives you into believing it is the source of your being. You continue living to protect this illusory entity. It is as if you sell all your wealth, time, and energy for it. The inner image is an object, not the subject. The first inner image is the movement of your mind toward its first object. This occurs so quickly and so intensely in a pivotal moment of your life, even before you become aware of the various "spare parts" you carry within you.

After birth, even before you recognize all the spare parts you possess, when powerlessness arises, the first movement of your mind is directed toward the first object. The inner image is immediately misconstrued as the subject. Observe the speed with which you gravitate toward the inner image and the sense of powerlessness you exhibit in relation to it. To anyone you display powerlessness, they will attempt to dominate you.

Only the Guru desires to see you always powerful. The Guru neither wants you to experience powerlessness nor to display it to Him. Everyone else, except the Guru, seeks to witness your powerlessness so they can take control. With the Guru, however, only when you are powerful can He manifest through you. There is no "taking over" in a Guru–Disciple relationship. There is only manifestation.

Do not have anyone around you who entertains your powerlessness or who desires to see you powerless. Even if you enjoy their attention, love, or care, all of it is like giving Coca-Cola to a diabetic patient. Yes, it may taste good, but it is poisonous. Even if you are offered neem juice, which is bitter, go to the person who provides medicine. If you are diabetic, even bitter neem juice is beneficial - go to the one who gives you medicine, not to the one who gives you tastiness that is, in reality, poison.

In life, if you decide not to entertain anyone who wishes you to remain powerless, who supports your powerlessness, or who directly or indirectly enjoys your powerlessness, and if you cut all such relationships, you will solve 90% of your problems. These people continually engage with the powerless aspect of you. A vegetarian consumes only milk from the cow, engaging solely in the milking process. A non-vegetarian consumes the blood, muscles, and meat of the cow. Similarly, those who are engaged with your powerlessness - directly or indirectly - are like meat-eaters, life-eaters, human "meat-eaters." They will consume you, even if their behavior seems sweet. This is how they destroy people.

Shakuni appeared so sweet to the Kauravas, yet he was actively working against them. He vowed to destroy the entire Kaurava vamsa because his sister was kidnapped, married to a blind man, and forced to live her life blindfolded. He took revenge and destroyed the Kauravas. Everyone, from Duryodhana to the last, all one hundred and one, believed he was the sweetest uncle.

In your life, you will encounter many such "uncles" who engage only with your powerlessness, who expect you to remain powerless. The more powerless you are, the more they can dominate, overpower, and occupy you. The misconstrued subject - the object falsely perceived as subject, believed to be your identity - when approached by the mind with tremendous powerlessness, says: "Don't worry, I will take care of you." Then suddenly, it declares: "I am you, I am everything, come on."

The tragic part is that throughout life, you may never discover this. You continue serving this fool who has illegally occupied you - cosmically illegally - and declared illegitimate authority over you as your inner image. Understand: the sooner you realize that your inner image is not truly you, the better it is for you.

The Biggest Suffering – Root Pattern

keneṣitaṃ patati preṣitaṃ manaḥ kena prāṇaḥ prathamaḥ praiti yuktaḥ |
keneṣitāṃ vācamimāṃ vadanti cakṣuḥ śrotraṃ ka u devo yunakti || 1 ||

If you ask the question: "By whom willed and caused does the mind go towards its object?" - you will not create another image. "By whom directed and united with which does the first vital life energy, the chief cause, come forth towards its activities?" refers to the first outer image you declare. If you do not ask this question and remain in slumber, you will create the outer image unconsciously.

If you ask this question, you will create a graceful being. The inner image is the root cause of all your pains. The outer image is the root cause of all your sufferings and failures. All your suffering and pain arise when you are failing inside; failure manifests when you are struggling with everything outside. If you experience suffocation within, it is pain. If you experience it around you, it is failure or suffering.

The inner image generates pain; the outer image generates suffering. Ask this question: keneṣitāṃ vācamimāṃ vadanti - at whose will does this speech get activated and speak? The first inner image, outer image, and life image arise when speech and verbalization are activated. This verse addresses the root pattern.

If you catch it as the root pattern develops, you will rise as an enlightened being. At the very least, bring yourself to pure questioning. You can manifest Sadāśiva instead of Sadā śava. Instead of always being "dead," you can continuously manifest being Śiva.

At whose will does this speech get activated and speak, enlivened and directed by what luminous divine power, indeed do the eyes and ears engage in their functions? This explains how the life image manifests. Life image truly begins to manifest only when the outer image starts appearing. If these questions are asked at the right time, you are an incarnation. If you start asking these questions now, you will become an enlightened being.

The good news is: once the root pattern is created, you always function based on the root pattern. Do not think that additional suffering is imposed upon you afterward. If you believe, "Oh, the greatest suffering in my life began at age eleven," you are mistaken. The root pattern is the greatest suffering.

Introduction to Hinduism: Initiation into Root Pattern Completion

Anyone who completely understands and internalizes this verse will gain the power to complete their root pattern and to help others complete theirs. This should be the true introduction to Hinduism. Completing the root pattern is the first initiation that should be offered by the Hindu tradition, because Hindus attend to first things first. Understand, this question is not merely asking "Who am I?" It is asking, "Who am I who is asking, 'Who am I?'"

At whose will does this speech get activated and speak? Enlivened and directed by what luminous divine power do the eyes and ears engage in their functions? This verse points to the life image - who forms the life image, who permits the inner verbalization, the very first verbalization, to begin. A man caught in his inner image spends his whole life in prison. There is no punishment worse than being trapped in the inner image.

Men often think lust is the greatest suffering. Even a womanizer believes lust is the most painful bondage. But it is not lust itself - it is the idea of male and female, and the suppression carried in your very muscles, that is the true suffering. Even the belief that "as a male, you must conquer" becomes a constant torment. Most womanizers do not even have many women in their lives for genuine pleasure. They eventually realize that pleasure does not arise or get sustained by constantly changing external partners. Yet the foolish idea - "if you are male, you must conquer" - keeps torturing, punishing, and pushing life deeper and deeper into hell.

Pure Questioning Evolves Right Strategy

When you ask the question, "How is my mind moving towards its object?" the inner image - the root pattern you generated - will begin to lose its power over you. It will gradually lose its grip on your thinking. If you internalize this verse and begin pure questioning, it should function like a boardroom meeting. A boardroom meeting is not a ritual; it is not just a technique. The decisions you make there are meant to be executed.

In the same way, let your seeking be a strategy meeting, not a ritual. Most people treat their seeking as though it were a Las Vegas trip - "Whatever happens in Las Vegas, stays in Las Vegas." But a boardroom meeting does not work that way. Whatever is decided there becomes reality. Unfortunately, your seeking often remains like a Las Vegas trip - it never translates into your real life.

Your seeking should be like a boardroom strategy meeting. Once you conclude, you must execute. Take this pure questioning as a sincere strategy board meeting. Whatever conclusions you arrive at, begin executing them. Do not fear that you may forget your strategies and collapse.

If you can discover the truth once, you can always rediscover it again. If you forget, reinvent. Hold another board meeting. Develop new strategies and start living them. When you ask this question deeply, the right strategies for life will naturally evolve. Pure questioning itself generates the right strategy.

Power of Completion

Infuse completion into your every action, thought, and word. Make this your project for the next six months - completion with others and completion with yourself. In every step, bring completion. Completion will awaken integrity, authenticity, and responsibility within you.

Completion brings tremendous integrity, tremendous authenticity, and tremendous responsibility. All of these are powers.

Life lived with a deep sense of responsibility is itself a power. There are countless donkeys living in human bodies, but without any feeling of responsibility. If you want to live like that, you too can choose to exist without responsibility. But understand, responsibility is not a burden - it is a power. Enriching is not a sacrifice - it is a power.

Through completion, all four powers awaken in you: Vāk Śakti, Mano Śakti, Buddhi Śakti, and Jīva Śakti.

Vāk Śakti (the power of words) is experienced through integrity.

Mano Śakti (the power of mind) is experienced through authenticity.

Buddhi Śakti (tremendous strength of intelligence) is experienced through responsibility.

Jīva Śakti (the power of life itself) is experienced through enriching.

Vāk Śakti, Mano Śakti, Buddhi Śakti, and Jīva Śakti -these are the four fundamental powers to manifest. Learn to manifest them through pure questioning.

Anyone who wants to look truly beautiful and graceful should begin chewing on Upaniṣadic thought-currents every day. They make you an amazing being - radiant, light, sweet, and graceful. When you engage in pure questioning, you become incredibly integrated, incredibly sweet, incredibly energized, and incredibly straightforward. People chew gum to keep their mouth free of bad smells. In the same way, you should chew Upaniṣadic thought-currents to free yourself from the bad smells of the mind.

Pure Questioning is Science of Leadership Making

With the thought-current of pure questioning, the more you cherish it, the more joyful you will become. You will be blissful, radiating energy and strength. It will make you so powerful that you will neither feel lonely in life nor experience the need for support from any external force. This is the very science of leadership.

Whether you wish to be a social leader, political leader, religious leader, or leader in any sphere of life, you must have the courage to be established in Oneness. When misunderstood, Oneness becomes aloneness. If you approach Oneness with powerlessness, it turns into aloneness. When you approach Oneness with power, it becomes Śuddhādvaita - pure all-Oneness. Pure questioning cleanses all the toxins you have accumulated in your mind. It restores you to your original state of all-Oneness, never aloneness.

It is very rare for pure questioning to be expressed in verbal form. Pure questioning removes all your assumptions and presumptions - all your ifs, buts, what-ifs, and why-nots - from your inner space. Pure questioning continually makes you reinvent yourself. It goes on shaping you into a leader. Pure questioning itself is leadership. In every field, pure questioning brings Completion and Advaita. Understand: Advaita is not something of the past, not something dead. It is the living present - as old as the sun, and as new as the sunrise.

This verse can lead one into the experience of pure all-Oneness. You can become a secret life-partner with the Cosmos itself. Society has its laws, nature has its laws - but the pure all-Oneness of the Cosmos has no laws; there is only integrity to love. This verse points directly to that very space: integrity to love. Pure questioning dissolves all toxic mental thought-currents. It continuously revives you, keeping you alive, vibrant, and ever-renewed with greater joy, excitement, and inspiration. With pure questioning, every zone of your life will rise to its peak of success.

Pure Questioning Leads To Inspiration Manifesting From Will

Pure questioning makes you realize that your past is redundant and irrelevant. It gives you the courage to create and manifest your life. It leads you to recognize the purity of your will and your ability to generate inspiration directly from that will. The space where will and inspiration are one and the same - where inspiration explodes effortlessly - is Ānanda Spūraṇa. At the beginning, will may appear as the cause and inspiration as the effect. But at a certain point, the distinction disappears.

Cause and effect merge, and will itself becomes inspiration. That space is Ānanda Spūraṇa, Ānandamaya Kośa. Experiencing this space becomes possible only through pure questioning. Pure questioning brings you to the state where your will naturally manifests as inspiration.

Pure questioning removes tons of incompletions from you. It makes you fall in love with yourself. It makes you feel blessed to be alive. You will experience life itself as a blessing, filled with beauty and grace. Constant frustration, irritation, and endless demands - from life, people, or situations - will no longer affect you.

Pure questioning makes you experience an eternal romance with the Cosmos. To romance a man, you must know how to keep him happy. To romance a woman, you must be an open book. But to romance the Cosmos, all you need is pure questioning. With pure questioning, not only can you reach enlightenment, you can also enter the very space from which powers manifest. Pure questioning aligns your ambition with the vision of the Cosmos itself.

Anything Mind Can Grasp is Not Truth

श्रोत्रस्य श्रोत्रं मनसो मनो यद् वाचो ह वाचं स उ प्राणस्य प्राणः ।
चक्षुषश्-चक्षुर्-अतिमुच्य धीराः प्रेत्यास्माल्लोकादमृताः भवन्ति ॥ २ ॥
śrotrasya śrotraṁ manaso mano yad vāco ha vācaṁ sa u prāṇasya prāṇaḥ |
cakṣuṣaś-cakṣur-atimucya dhīrāḥ pretyāsmāllokād-amṛtā bhavanti || 2 ||

Translation: It is the ear of the ear, that by which one hears, the mind of the mind, the faculty of thinking and intellect, the speech of the speech, vāk that which creates sound vibration, it indeed is the vital life of the life energy, the power of sustaining life, and it also is the eye of the eye, the power of sight, the wise enlightened beings having liberated themselves from the senses and identifying with the subtle, inexhaustible source, on leaving and rising beyond this ephemeral world, become immortal and eternal.

The whole verse is declaring the answer for the pure questioning. The first verse was pure questioning.

keneṣitaṁ patati preṣitaṁ |

It is pure questioning. Now comes the answer - but there is a danger in the answer. Anything your mind can grasp is not Truth. Anything your mind can grasp, it can also deny as ultimate. Whatever is known is already dead for the mind. Existence cannot be dead; only the mind must die into Existence. Therefore, the declaration of Truth has to be such that the mind cannot succeed in "knowing." Instead, it must be drowned in the process and become knowing itself. If your mind succeeds in knowing something and still retains its separate existence, that is mere knowledge. But if your mind is dissolved and disappears in the process of knowing, that is experience - Reality, Truth, Existence, Brahman, Sadāśiva, Paramporuḷ.

Upaniṣadic Truths: Pure, Uncorrupted By Any Human Elements

Upaniṣad is declaring the Truth without even getting polluted by the saliva of the tongue through which it comes. Just as Mīnākṣī had an immaculate birth. She was never conceived in the woman's womb or given birth as usual. She just appeared in chidagni kuṇḍa sambhūtā, in chidagni kuṇḍa. That is why she is called as Śrī Mātā Śrī Mahārāgni chidagni kuṇḍa sambhūtā in Lalitā Sahasranāmam. She was born out of consciousness, agnikuṇḍa, conscious fire pit – pure and untouched by any human components or elements.

This verse is pure, as pure as Mīnākṣī, untouched by the mind or the tongue through which it came. That is why when we declare the Upaniṣads are Apaurūṣeya, not by any human being, they can't understand how such beautiful pure poetry can exist without a poet. It is possible.

śrotrasya śrotraṁ manaso mano yad vāco ha vācaṁ sa u prāṇasya prāṇaḥ |

The whole verse is not pointing towards anything in particular. It simply states: "It is the ear of the ear, by which one hears; the mind of the mind, through which one thinks; the speech of the speech, which creates sound vibrations. It indeed is the vital life of life energy, the power of sustaining life. It is also the eye of the eye, the power of sight. The wise Enlightened Beings, having liberated themselves from the senses and identified with the subtle, inexhaustible source, upon leaving and rising beyond this ephemeral world, become immortal and eternal - amṛtā bhavanti."

Nowhere in the verse is it pointing to or equating itself with "consciousness." The word consciousness is not used here. Some alien translators and alien historians have tried to impose this interpretation by translating the verse using the word consciousness. But in reality, the term consciousness does not occur anywhere in the verse.

cakṣuṣaś-cakṣur-atimucya dhīrāḥ pretyāsmāllokād-amṛtā bhavanti || 2 ||

Alien translators, alien historians try to corrupt this verse by using the word 'consciousness', Ātman, Soul. The original Upaniṣad does not mention or point the finger toward this. It just says – It is ear of the ear. Contemplate. Discover.

Pure Questioning Heals

The answer for pure questioning is anubhūti (experience), not knowledge. Any verbal or intellectual answer will only create conflicts. Experience alone liberates you. Pure questioning heals you completely and brings tremendous Completion. It is not pure questioning that creates confusion; rather, it is too many answers that create conflict. Pure questioning never divides - it integrates, it liberates.

cakṣuṣaś-cakṣur-atimucya dhīrāḥ pretyāsmāllokād-amṛtā bhavanti || 2 ||

The pure Truth in its original, untouched, virgin form! These words probably never even rolled through the mind and tongue of the human Ṛṣis. If it had rolled through the mind and the tongue, it would already carry the touch of saliva. Here, there is only the touch of nectar. Even a single word used as a pointer makes the Truth slip away. It ceases to be an answer to pure questioning. Then begins the search for dictionary meaning, for Nighaṇṭu explanations of the word "Ātman." That would reduce it to another intellectual exercise, a brain-candy play. But the Upaniṣads are not interested in giving you intellectual entertainment or mental gymnastics.

They declare authentic Truths by their own authority - authority for authenticity. I can go on savoring this verse, repeating it, rejoicing in it.

cakṣuṣaś-cakṣur-atimucya dhīrāḥ pretyāsmāllokād-amṛtā bhavanti || 2 ||

The purity of the unborn, yet the reality of Existence. There are things that remain unborn, pure, but without existence. Here, however, something exists while retaining the purity of the unborn - the purity of ajātā - uncorrupted by its very coming into Existence. Neither the mind nor the tongue, through which the Truth has rolled forth, was able to corrupt it. The Truth retains its virginity, its original purity, its Sadāśivatva - untouched, unadulterated, unabused, uncompromised.

The Divine Principles

The whole Upaniṣad verse does not pinpoint anything. It declares: it is the ear of the ears, that by which one hears; the mind of the mind; the speech of the speech; the prāṇa of prāṇa; the cakṣuḥ - the eye of the eye.

Enlightened beings understand this, experience this, and liberate themselves. Here, the Upaniṣad uses the word dhīrāḥ.

A vīra is one who can place the knife at the right spot on the enemy and kill him.

A dhīra is one who can place the right understanding in the mind, conquer himself, and achieve enlightenment.

Vīra is external; dhīra is internal.

Vīra is the micromanagement of actions; dhīra is the micromanagement of being.

dhīrāḥ pretyāsmāllokād amṛtā bhavanti |

When you try to define God with ordinary human logic, you mess up badly. You end up giving birth to demonic ideologies. Demonic ideologies kill millions of people, whether they accept or reject them. That is what makes them demonic.

Daivik tattvas - divine philosophies - even when practiced a little, do immense good. They bring you to Completion, and they bring Completion to those around you. You become a celebration for others, and others become a celebration for you. That is the nature of the divine principle.

In the Gita, Kṛṣṇa says:

svalpamapyasya dharṃasya trāyate mahato bhayāt (2.40, Gita verse)

Even a little practice yields immense benefit. People become increasingly complete, joyful, blissful, and happy. Everyone around you feels you are a reason to celebrate; you feel everyone around you is a reason for you to celebrate. These are daivik tattvas - divine principles. When a person applies these principles, the practitioner benefits and, in turn, brings joy and completion to others.

The level of existence that is concerned only with food and survival is the domain of animals. For human beings, existence is about identity - about who we are. This identity was attacked in the most terrible ways by powerful, cunning strategic plans. These are human-level tattvas. With demonic tattvas and demonic ideologies, practice becomes a matter of eliminating others; the scale of your practice is measured by how much you eliminate.

Listen to these three ideologies:

Daivik (divine) ideologies: Those who practice them feel others are reasons for celebration, and others feel you are a reason for celebration - even with a little practice.

svalpamapyasya dharṃāsya trāyate mahato bhayāt.

Human ideologies: Practitioners feel good, but they do not include others. Such practices can be manipulated and misused; they can be turned into weapons - like a Brahmāstra.

Note: Brahmāstra itself is morally neutral; its ethical valence depends on the person who uses it.

Demonic ideologies: The moment you begin practicing, you must begin killing, excluding, and eliminating. First, you kill all who oppose you. Then you kill those who do not oppose but do not fully accept the ideology. Finally, even among those who accepted, you eliminate anyone who is not actively killing alongside you. This layering - first kill opponents, then non-acceptors, then the merely lukewarm - is the logic of demonic ideology.

Understand these layers of killing: first those who oppose, then those who do not oppose but do not accept completely, then even those who accept but do not actively participate in the violence. Layer after layer of killing - this is the demonic ideology.

Unfortunately, those who followed daivik philosophy often remained superficial. What is required is complete integration with daivik philosophy and active engagement with it. Much of the harm in the world has not happened only because bad people or those aligned with demonic ideologies were active; it has also happened because those aligned with daivik, divine ideologies, remained inactive.

Swami Vivekānanda says very beautifully that devotion should become responsibility. He even goes to an extreme to emphasize this point: “People who only jump, sing, dance, roll in the name of Hare Kṛṣṇa, Rādhā Kṛṣṇa, but do not uphold Kṛṣṇa’s ideologies and keep them alive - beat them.” His intention was not violence but to shock people awake with the message: you must act with responsibility, not just sentiment.

The inactiveness of beings who hold divine philosophies, the passivity of good people, is equally responsible for the world’s suffering, not only the activity of bad people. This is why Saṅgha is divine. To be active about what you believe in, to hold integrity towards what you believe, and to feel responsible for what you believe is absolutely essential to bring balance to the planet.

Bad people are highly active, while good people often sit and fantasize about being active. Bad people are able to motivate thousands of youngsters to commit suicide, to kill others, and to kill themselves.

Yet we, the so-called good people, are not even able to inspire a handful of youngsters to offer annadāna (free food), free medicine, free yoga, or meditation. Good people are giving up ambition, while bad people are filled with it.

What we need is goodness with ambition: tremendous goodness combined with tremendous ambition. Ambition rooted in goodness, activism infused with authenticity - that is what brings transformation.

Always Choose Good, Not Pleasant

Do not remain in the company of toxic people. Be in the company of those who constantly make you powerful.

Never choose the pleasant over the good; always choose the good over the pleasant. At times, people may be pleasant to you, but not truly good for you. Always choose the company of those who make you more authentic, more responsible, more integrated, more enriching, and more powerful at your very core. Choosing the pleasant will eventually cheat you, while choosing the good will ensure that you are always growing.

The good empowers you with authenticity, responsibility, enriching, and awakening - it makes you more and more powerful. The pleasant is only a short-term strategy. The good is a life strategy.

Choose good, and your life will be successful. Choose pleasant, and only your day will be successful.

Pleasant may make a day happy; good makes a life happy.

The Kaṭhopaniṣad states very clearly - always choose the right (śreyaḥ) rather than the pleasant (preyaḥ):

anyac chreyo anyad utaiva preyaste ubhe nānārthe puruṣaṃ sinītaḥ |
tayoḥ śreya ādadānasya sādhu bhavati hīyateʼrthād ya u preyo vṛṇīte || 1.2.1 ||

Between śreyaḥ (the good) and preyaḥ (the pleasant), always choose the good, never the pleasant. Those who choose the good succeed in the true strategy of life.

The moment you recognize that your family or close circle is toxic, step away from them. Stay for some time with those who empower you, who make you strong. Grow to a level where no one can pull you down. Only then return to your family, not to be dragged down by them, but to bring them up with you. Until then, give yourself the space to become strong and to grow.

Dhīra vs Vīra

śrotrasya śrotraṁ manaso mano yad vāco ha vācaṁ sa u prāṇasya prāṇaḥ |
cakṣuṣaś-cakṣur-atimucya dhīrāḥ pretyāsmāllokād-amṛtā bhavanti || 2 ||

The most sophisticated way of answering a question is giving you a methodology through which you will find the experience.

śrotrasya śrotraṁ manaso mano yad |

The whole verse does not give you any point to hang onto, any visualization, or any possibility for imagination. It is very clear: your pure questioning is directed inward, towards you. Pure questioning is one of the most powerful ways of integrating yourself - your intellect, mind, emotions, thought currents, body, everything.

Those who micromanage their inner space are dhīras. A dhīra is one who is not stuck in any inner pattern.

If you lose a fight outwardly and then deliver a ten-day lecture on why you lost, you cannot be called a vīra. Nobody will respect your excuses - "It was too hot. I always feel energetic in A/C. But in the heat, I lose my sense and control." Who cares! Even if you give a ten-day lecture explaining your loss, you will not be honored as a dhīra, nor as a vīra.

Dhīra means one who has conquered the inner space, one who micromanages it, who observes and addresses every thought current and thought pattern.

Problems persist because you are unwilling to micromanage certain thought currents or certain patterns within you. Even the body requires healing. If your body does not cooperate with you in waking up in the morning, it is sick - it is entertaining blind spots. Do not allow that to happen. You must address it, heal it, cure it.

The most subtle patterns do not reveal themselves as patterns. They try to convince you that they are you - your character, your beauty, your colors. Any sympathy towards your patterns, in any form, is a crime against yourself - ātmahatyā.

Sometimes you may say, "Everyone suffers with certain patterns, why not me too? Let me have this - it is my character." But the fact that everyone suffers cannot justify your own stupidity.

When your pattern convinces you that it is your character, your quality, and thus secures your sympathy, you have committed suicide. The worst suffering comes from failing to recognize the source of your suffering as your own pattern. Justifications and elaborate philosophies will never bring you results.

Blessed are those who do not compromise in their inner space, who preserve it as carefully as their chastity. Such are the dhīras.

A sannyāsī, who has declared the 5 vows of ahiṁsā, satya, asteya, brahmacharya and aparigraha, even if he cherishes mentally something which is not integrated to these 5 vows, it becomes crime against himself, ātmahatyā. It is not socially a crime, but it is cosmically a crime because it is ātmahatyā. It is against his integrity. He becomes patita.

Dhīra: Master in Micromanaging Thought Current

The most powerful form of micromanagement is the micromanagement of your thought currents. Only a person who has mastered this can be called a dhīra. Only such a person can be a pure and real sannyāsī. The level of integrity with which you micromanage your inner space is what makes you a dhīra.

Here the Upaniṣad declares: Dhīras are those who discover "the ear of the ear, the mind of the mind, the speech of the speech, the prāṇa of the prāṇa." Realizing this, they attain the immortal, the eternal - amṛta bhavanti.

Contemplate: where are your blind spots? You are secretly cherishing a second thought current. Unless you penetrate and break that thought current, you will not liberate yourself. You will not become a dhīra. Life is worth living only when you become a dhīra.

Go on micromanaging your inner space. The moment you diagnose the thought current, the pattern will melt. If it does not melt, then that thought current is not the real problem. For example, when people cannot wake up in the early morning, they try all sorts of external methods - setting more alarms, pouring cold water, going to bed earlier. None of this works. The actual issue may be gastric imbalance or stomach ulcers. The problem lies there.

The moment you place your hand on the real source of the problem, the right thought current, the issue dissolves. Most of your problems are not as straightforward as you think. If you cannot wake up in the morning, you may assume laziness is the problem, but the reality may be different. Healing may require Kadukkai Podi (Harītakī herb).

Yet your very patterns will resist even this simple solution. Even swallowing a few pills will feel like a burden; forget about taking the powder. Your mind will generate endless excuses: "It's not in the shop." "It's not in my bedroom." "It's not next to my bed." "I forgot." "I will take it tomorrow." All these excuses are blind spots. When you heal your blind spots, even your fingertips will begin to act like eyes.

Translation: Where the eye goes not, the speech goes not, nor the mind and the intellect, we do not know, we do not understand how That Reality, Consciousness can be taught. It is distinct from the known as it is far beyond man's finite 'objective' nature. That is what the mind, eyes, ears or speech, the senses can perceive. It is beyond the unknown, as it can be known by man's Divine infinitive 'subjective' nature. Thus, we have heard from the ancient masters who revealed and explained That to us.

A beautiful and profound incident from the life of THE SUPREME PONTIFF OF HINDUISM BHAGAVĀN NITHYANANDA PĀRAMASHIVAM:

One evening, Bhagavān heard the news that Swami Vairāgyānanda, the direct disciple of Śāradā Devī, the ardhāṅginī of Rāmakṛṣṇa, was gravely ill. Śāradā Devī should not merely be called dharma-patnī (righteous wife); that term is too small. She must be called dharma-saṃvatinī - the one who set into motion the wheel of dharma (dharma-cakra) of Rāmakṛṣṇa.

Her initiated disciple, Swami Vairāgyānanda, was admitted in a hospital in Kankhal. The land for that hospital had been given by the Mahānirvāṇī Akhāḍā to the Rāmakṛṣṇa Mission, which later built and maintained the hospital. In fact, in 17 places - including Kāśī, Haridvāra, and other major centers across Bharat - the Mahānirvāṇī Akhāḍā has given land to the Rāmakṛṣṇa Mission.

As soon as Bhagavān heard the news, He immediately ran to the hospital to serve Swami Vairāgyānanda. Bhagavān always cherished the opportunity to serve elderly sādhus, especially when they were sick. He never hesitated even in cleaning them when they were unable to use the restroom, and He joyfully took care of them in every possible way.

By the time Bhagavān reached and began attending to Swami Vairāgyānanda, Swami had already lost control of his bodily functions and was bedridden. Bhagavān lovingly cleaned and served him, even attending to the bedsores that had developed. Serving elderly sādhus was not merely a duty for Bhagavān - it was His passion, the greatest joy of His life.

When Guru-mātā Vibhūdananda Purī gave Him the daṇḍa (staff) for His parivrājaka yātrā (wandering journey), she blessed Him saying: "You will never be in want of anything needed for survival and existence. Your life will never be under threat - you will always be protected. But always remember: serve elderly sādhus. That will be a great puṇya (merit)."

Bhagavān had replied, "Yes." And He always kept that word, continuously serving elderly sādhus whenever He had the opportunity.

Bhagavān had the fortune of attending to Swami Vairāgyānanda for several days continuously. Swami was deeply touched and overjoyed with the way Bhagavān cared for him. He was indeed a Mahātma. Even while he could clearly see that his internal organs were failing, the beaming joy never left his face. Even at that critical time, Swami refused to lie flat. He would say, "Hey!

Only bhogīs (pleasure-seekers) lie flat. Never yogīs!"

Though his body was deteriorating and he was expected to live only 24 to 48 hours more, he remained radiant. Out of deep affection, he would lovingly call Bhagavān, "Koka Mahārāj" (koka being a Bengali word to affectionately address a child). He would request: "Koka Mahārāj, make me sit." Bhagavān would then lift and adjust him to a slanting position. Bhagavān once asked, "Maharaj, why do you want to sit? Just lie down and relax." To this, Swami replied with firm conviction:

"Nay! Only bhogīs lie down. Yogīs can never lie down."

He used to say that the royal-bred horses can never sit, lie down, or sleep flat. In the royal courts, there was a tradition: if ever a royal horse sat or lay down even once, it would be killed. Only the middle-class horses were allowed to sit or lie down. But the royal horses never once lay flat throughout their lives. Until the very end, Swami Vairāgyānanda lived like that royal horse. Lying flat was never his lifestyle. He would always remain seated, simply stretching his legs.

Bhagavān personally served him, cleaning his bedsores with His own hands. Swami had developed sores on his back and hips, and Bhagavān lovingly attended to him, wiping away the pus and keeping him comfortable. Again, Swami sat with legs stretched, the way he had lived his entire life - as a great sādhu, a mahāpuruṣa.

Truly, Ādi Śakti, Parāśakti Herself came as Śāradā Devī. She was so young when She was married to Rāmakṛṣṇa. Rāmakṛṣṇa, having no physical guru, had to connect directly with the deity of Kālī and proceed in his spiritual journey. To that Śāradā Devī, Swami Vairāgyānanda was a direct disciple.

What was the essence of his life? After he left the body, the only property he had was a small brass or copper tumbler. In the north, the tradition is that whoever attends to a sadhu in his old age or illness becomes the legitimate successor to his belongings. After Swami attained jīva samādhi, the pañcāyat gathered and asked, "Who attended to Swami Vairāgyānanda?" They said, "Koka was attending." Then they declared, "Whatever property belonged to Vairāgyānanda, give it to him."

Bhagavān was taken to the small room where Swami had lived his entire life. The room was completely empty, except for that one tumbler. That was all he owned. Nothing had been stolen - it was simply the only thing he ever had. What an amazing life! He also had a small bundle with which he worshiped his Iṣṭa-devatā - Śāradā Devī. In that bundle, he kept the pāda-dhūli (dust from the feet) of Śāradā Devī. This he personally handed over to Bhagavān, while still in the body, just before leaving. At that moment, Swami opened his eyes and shared a deep truth with Bhagavān:

"Koka, listen. If you enjoyed only the pleasures of the five senses, then when the senses no longer function, you will fall into depression. Life will feel empty. If you enjoyed only intellectual pleasures, like scientists, mathematicians, logicians - then when the sharpness of logic fails, you will fall into depression. If you are addicted to TV, when the eyes fail, you will fall into depression. If you are attached to music, when the ears fail, you will fall into depression. If you are hooked on taste, when the tongue fails, you will fall into depression. If you are attached to physical pleasures, when the body fails, you will fall into depression. Even if you are all the time engaged in intellectual debates and brain candy, when that fails, depression will come. Even if you have developed only the power of japa (repetition of God's name), when your logic weakens and you are unable to do japa, you will fall into depression. If you only visualized God and meditated upon that form, when your visualization becomes weak, you will fall into depression. Nothing will sustain you."

Śāradā Devī said, "It's okay. I am Jagaddhātrī. I will sit directly and you may do pūjā."

She herself sat alive upon the pīṭha, on the āsana, and the pūjāris began the worship. She accepted the pūjā and afterwards gave him initiation. When he touched her feet, he suddenly saw that they were not human feet but the divine feet of Devī, adorned with ornaments. Stunned, he slowly raised his eyes and beheld Jagaddhātrī herself seated before him.

The dust from her feet - the kumkum offered during the pūjā - came into his hand as prasāda. He carefully collected it, kept it in a small packet, and worshipped it throughout his life as the living blessing of that vision. Before leaving his body, he handed this to Bhagavān.

Because he was a great sādhū, all of Haridwar gathered to honor him. As per his request, his body was given Jala Samādhi. Traditionally, a sādhū's body is never cremated in fire; it is offered either to Gaṅgā in Jala Samādhi or interred in Bhū Samādhi. For him, Jala Samādhi was performed. The rest is history.

The essence of what he embodied is reflected in this Upaniṣadic verse:

na tatra cakṣur gacchati na vāg gacchati no manaḥ |

"There the eyes do not go, nor speech, nor even the mind."

If you have spent your life merely visualizing and enjoying pleasures of imagination, you will miss the essence. At some point the eyes will fail, visualization will collapse. Speech will fail, the ability to verbalize will collapse. Even the mind and intellect will collapse. A little imbalance in sugar, and your visualization fails. A little imbalance in salt, and your speech fails. All these are not consciousness.

What we truly learned from Swami Vairāgyānanda is the living essence of this verse. And that essence cannot be "taught." The only teaching is that it cannot be taught.

The only true spiritual practice is this: build the ability to rest in Nirvikalpa Samādhi - the unclutched space, Complete Completion, Sahaja Samādhi, perpetual Completion. That alone will carry you. When your eyes stop perceiving, when the ears no longer connect, when the tongue collapses, when the mind loses the ability to visualize, when all these faculties fail, only one doorway remains - the unclutched space. If while alive you have cultivated that opening, you will fall through it into your integrity with the Guru. Then the Guru simply holds you. You relax into Enlightenment.

Never compromise on integrity with the Guru. That alone will protect you everywhere. If you have developed the unclutched space and integrity with Guru, your life insurance is complete. Everything else you do in life is a bonus. If you have not yet developed it, make that your first and highest priority. Pour all your energy and intelligence into it. Do not wait until old age. Do it now. That is the most important step for your life.

Anything Perceived and Visualized is Not Ultimate

Where the eyes goes not, the speech goes not, nor the mind and intellect, we do not know, we do not understand, how that Reality, Consciousness can be taught, it is distinct from the known, as it is far beyond man's finite objective nature, that is, what the mind, eyes, ears or speech, the senses can perceive and it is beyond the unknown as it can be known by man's divine infinite subjective nature. Thus we have heard from the ancient masters who revealed and explained that to us.

To understand this whole verse, you need only one thing - purity. Not great tapas, not severe austerities - just the simple purity of grasping its truth. Anything you can see, visualize, or imagine is not the Ultimate. Anything you can speak, express, or even verbalize internally is not the Ultimate. Anything you can conceptually explain, debate, analyze, or think through is not the Ultimate.

The human mind has a deep greed to grasp and frame everything. But when it comes to the Ultimate, that very greed must be sacrificed. Only then does authentic experience happen. The moment something can be grasped, visualized, or verbalized, it is already short of the Ultimate.

You must develop within yourself something that will hold you, support you, nourish you, and keep you alive even after your eyes fail, your speech fails, your mind fails, and your logic fails.

A small drop in sugar levels, and your capacity to visualize will collapse. An imbalance in insulin, and your fantasies will take over - you won't know what is real and what is imaginary. A dip in salt levels, and your power of verbalization will fail.

When you are leaving the body, or even after leaving the body, none of these faculties will be available or useful to you. At that time, only one thing will matter: whether you have developed that space which transcends senses, speech, and mind.

That alone is the goal of life - Nirvikalpa Samādhi, the space of Sadāshivoham.

Imbibe Upaniṣads Only From Enlightened Sources

The Upaniṣad must be heard only from an Enlightened Being. Only then, the purity of transmission is retained. The unique beauty of the Upaniṣad is this: if the speaker is rooted in purity, and the listener retains the purity of listening, nothing more is needed. Śravaṇa itself becomes nididhyāsana - listening itself becomes living and radiating.

In the modern day, many attempt to provide "alternative readings." Some even try to safeguard these alternatives as though they add value. Understand: the Upaniṣad is not a text for alternate readings or speculative commentaries. It is śruti - the very sound-current of Existence. No one has the right to twist it into styles of their own. This is the core of life, not a subject for academic alternatives.

Consider atomic energy. There are two ways to release it: one is by fusing atoms, another by splitting one atom. The methods, the systems, the effects, and even the side effects are totally different.

In the same way, there are yogic methods that attempt to fuse, to unite. Advaitic methods - the Upaniṣadic revelation - are not that. They are like breaking the atom itself: direct, explosive, irreversible. Therefore, the pure Advaitic śruti should never be handled through alternate readings.

Do not allow thought currents or speculative interpretations to contaminate these truths. And above all, never read the Upaniṣads from unenlightened sources.

śrotrasya śrotraṁ manaso mano yad
vāco ha vācaṁ sa u prāṇasya prāṇaḥ |
cakṣuṣaś-cakṣur-atimucya dhīrāḥ
pretyāsmāllokād-amṛtā bhavanti || 2 ||

This whole verse does not point to somebody or something outside you. It only intensifies your pure questioning. It is the method of breaking open a single atom and releasing the energy hidden within. It is not the method of forcing two atoms together, colliding them, and then manifesting energy. If something is defined and you are asked to move towards it, that is like putting two atoms together and creating energy - the method of Yoga. But when one atom itself is broken open, and the pure energy is revealed, that is Śuddhādvaita, pure Advaita.

When it comes to Avatāras - Rāma, Kṛṣṇa - their lives and līlās have naturally been narrated in countless ways. We have nearly 100,000 versions of the Rāmāyaṇa. That variety is the way the world cherishes and celebrates Rāma. Such diversity of storytelling belongs to Smṛti, to the realm of traditions and remembrances. But the modern alternative-reading interpreters are making a dangerous mistake. They try to apply this same approach to Śruti - to the Upaniṣads, the pure source-texts. This is unacceptable. Śruti is revelation itself; Smṛti is remembrance. To tamper with Smṛti is one thing; but to tamper with Śruti, to play with the very source-current, is to destroy the foundation of Hinduism. That is where the whole problem begins.

Nowhere in the second verse is there any word which can be remotely translated as Consciousness.

śrotrasya śrotraṁ manaso mano yad
vāco ha vācaṁ sa u prāṇasya prāṇaḥ |
cakṣuṣaś-cakṣur-atimucya dhīrāḥ
pretyāsmāllokād-amṛtā bhavanti || 2 ||

No word exists in this verse that can be remotely translated as "consciousness." Yet modern interpreters keep inserting that word into their translations. They say "consciousness is the ear of the ear" - and then they add whatever serves their agenda. This is unacceptable.

English offers only singular and plural. Sanskrit has singular, dual, and plural. Notice the grammar in this verse: for śrotra (ear) the dual is used; for manaḥ (mind) the singular is used; for vācā (speech) the singular is used; for cakṣu(eye) the plural is used - implying three eyes, not two.

Our ācāryas lived in a very high frequency of awareness. Even in their poetry they did not miss the precision they intended. If the verse does not contain any word that can be translated as "consciousness," inserting that term collapses the entire meaning. Do not read these great truths from people whose aim is to subvert rather than to uphold. Protecting your purity of reception is essential.

Build a Safe Chamber in Your Inner Space Through Unclutching

Fortunately, I had that deeply personal moment of listening to Vairagyananda Swami when he said, "Hey Koka, my eyes have failed, but I do not have a problem - because I never built myself on something my eyes can see, or on what can be cherished through visualization."

If you meditate your whole life on a form through visualization, when your eyes fail you will inevitably fall into depression. What you meditated on will slip away; you will no longer be able to hold it in your inner space. Never meditate on anything that can be seen or visualized through the eyes.

All visualizing meditations may serve as initial entertainment, theology lite - a little celebration, some inspiration to start the journey: "Wow, this deity looks so beautiful." But anything that can be seen and visualized will collapse at one point, either before you leave the body or as you are leaving it. And when it fails, you will fall into depression, into emptiness, into an abyss.

All your visualizations are built only upon what you have already seen. For example, if you have seen an elephant with one trunk, you can imagine an elephant with a thousand trunks. But even that is just an expansion of what your eyes already perceived.

If you build your personality on verbalization - even the repetition of great mantras - when verbalization fails, you will fall into depression.

If you build your personality on cherished concepts - sat-cit-ānanda parabrahma, pure consciousness, light, intelligence, bliss - when the intellect fails, you will again fall into depression. And intellect will surely fail before the moment of death.

The only space that does not fail, even when everything else fails, is the space of Unclutching, Nirvikalpa Samādhi.Start building only that. Every individual should spend more and more time and energy cultivating this safe chamber in the inner space - where Unclutching is experienced, where Complete Completion, Perpetual Completion, Sahaja Samādhi is experienced, where Nirvikalpa Samādhi becomes your living reality.

Only the space that cannot be visualized, cannot be remembered, cannot be verbalized, is your true safe chamber. That alone is the essence of life. It is not what you leave behind that matters - it is how you leave that matters.

Ramakrishna explains it beautifully: "If you are going to a new place, first find a lodge and put all your luggage there. Then go around and enjoy the whole place, because you know you can always come back. You have a safe place for the night." In the same way, first establish the chamber of Nirvikalpa Samādhi within you. Place all your luggage there. Then move through life, experience everything, enjoy everything - because you know you can always come back to that safe chamber, especially when the time comes to leave planet earth, to leave life.

The moment you add the word Consciousness into this verse, the corruption begins. The purity of questioning is lost. Immediately the mind starts visualizing: "Consciousness means shining like a thousand suns. But a thousand suns is too hot; let me add some coolness - a thousand moons along with the thousand suns." And thus begins the slippery slide into a visualization exercise.

But this verse is not about visualization. It is about pure questioning. That purity must be retained, especially when building the space of Nirvikalpa Samādhi in your system. When you live from this truth of Nirvikalpa Samādhi, the powers that manifest in you are Śaktis - like the explosion of energy when an atom is broken. By contrast, in the Yogic method there is a defined visualization and a defined identity. Both are brought together, merged, and when they collide the energy expressed is Siddhis. That is a completely different science.

This is why the verse must be understood without manipulation, without interpolation, without the "alternative style of reading." Do not insert the idea of Consciousness into it. Nowhere does the verse even remotely contain a word that can be translated as Consciousness.

śrotrasya śrotraṁ manaso mano yad
vāco ha vācaṁ sa u prāṇasya prāṇaḥ |
cakṣuṣaś-cakṣur-atimucya dhīrāḥ
pretyāsmāllokād-amṛtā bhavanti || 2 ||

If you retain the purity of this verse, you will understand the answer which Upaniṣad is trying to give through this verse - it is pure questioning itself - the ongoing, uninterrupted process of Unclutching.

Pure Questioning Leads to Nirvikalpa Samādhi

Nirvikalpa Samādhi is not a verb; it is a noun. It is a space, a state of being. The action that leads to Nirvikalpa Samādhi is pure questioning - the continuous movement of unclutching and inquiry. Any visualization, any effort to hold, maintain, or support an experience is an action, and therefore, by definition, cannot be Nirvikalpa Samādhi. The most important factor in understanding this pure science is retaining the purity of your listening - from whom you are receiving the teaching. Your energy, your attention, your life should be invested in building the inner chamber where Nirvikalpa Samādhi can exist.

Nirvikalpa Samādhi is not as difficult as Yogīs make it appear. For Yogīs, it is hard work, because they approach it as an achievement. For Advaitis, it is a smart decision. It is not something to struggle for; it is a choice to remain unclutched, complete, and aligned with the Source.

If you do not make this smart decision, life becomes hard work - effort, struggle, and suffering. Practical training can begin simply. Fast for a day or two. As your body experiences dehydration, hold the decision to remain unclutched - to let go of all attachments, desires, and clinging.

When your Ishtadevatā or Guru's form appears, do not grasp or retain; continue unclutching, unclutching, unclutching. Continue choosing Completion, over and over, without holding onto anything.

In two to three days, this practice reveals how the organs and senses fail as the body reaches its limits. Witnessing this prepares you to make the smart decision of Advaita - to remain unclutched even when all support from the body and mind disappears.

Yoga is hard work; Advaita is smart work. By consciously practicing Unclutching while withdrawing from the body's comforts, you experience the essence of Nirvikalpa Samādhi. It is in this space of unclutching that the Śaktis begin to manifest naturally, without effort, without struggle - arising from your alignment with the Source itself.

Paramashiva's Techniques Are Smart Decisions

Paramashiva says beautifully, "When you sneeze, just remain in the space of Unclutching. You will manifest the power related to air." Sneezing, seemingly ordinary, is actually one of the profound techniques given in the Vijñāna Bhairava Tantra, one of the most powerful Āgamas.

There are ten major Āgamas - including Śiva Sūtra, Vijñāna Bhairava Tantra, Mrigendra Āgama, Mahānirvāṇa Tantra, and others. If, in the act of sneezing, you simply remain unclutched, the entire circuit of air energy (prāṇa) becomes accessible to you. You catch the "software's password", the key to the whole energetic network. All techniques of Sadāśiva are smart decisions, effortless and precise. All techniques of ordinary Yoga, if approached without understanding, become hard work. That is why learning Yoga Pāda from Sadāśiva is essential - even Yoga is seen through the lens of smart decision, not struggle.

Major Āgamas - Rudrayāmala, Mahānirvāṇa, Kularṇava, Kāmikā, Mṛgendra, Vijñāna Bhairava - all emphasize smart decisions taken at the right moments. The foundational cognition from which you act - the pūrvapakṣa - is critical. Without understanding and clarifying your cognition first, your actions will always be hard work. Everyone wants to jump-start immediately, but rushing into action without the proper cognitive foundation leads only to struggle. The primary effort must always be developing Nirvikalpa Samādhi - the space of Sadāshivoham, Sahaja Samādhi, Complete Completion, and Perpetual Completion.

Catch The Reality Through Pure Questioning

Nirvikalpa Samādhi can never be taught, but it can be picked up. You cannot learn it through instruction; it is awakened when pure questioning arises in you. When the mind, visualization, and verbalization are unable to go further, pure questioning naturally takes you to that space. This is the essence encouraged by the verse - awaken the pure questioning in yourself.

Through pure questioning, you encounter spaces that cannot be approached by the ordinary senses:

When you understand there is a space where the two eyes are of no use, your Third Eye awakens.

When you realize there is a place where verbalization is useless, your Vāk awakens.

When you see a realm where the mind (Mana) cannot help, your Unclutching opens up.

When you discover a space where the individual soul (Jīva) cannot assist you, your Shivatva - the Cosmic Soul - awakens.

It is the recognition of redundancy and irrelevance that drives the awakening of deeper dimensions within you.

Consider the paradox of luxury: the upper middle class, having all comfort and infrastructure, often suffers from "luxury diseases" - blood pressure, diabetes, heart problems, depression. They possess everything, yet their bodies fail them. By contrast, a poor person, lacking infrastructure, often has a healthy and strong body. The need dictates function.

When you realize there is a space you must traverse where the eyes cannot go - na tatra cakṣurgacchati - you naturally turn to your Third Eye.

When the ears fail, the Vāk opens; when the mind becomes redundant, Unclutching awakens; when the Jīva is insufficient, Shivatva manifests.

If what you see and visualize is ultimately useless, your Third Eye draws your attention.

If verbalizations, internal or external, are futile, your Vāk activates.

If all cunning games, profit-loss calculations, right-wrong manipulations are meaningless, your Unclutching space opens.

When your entire Jīva - what you identify as yourself - cannot accompany you in the journey, Shivatva awakens.

Luxury, paradoxically, abuses the body and mind. It softens the system, making it weak and dependent. The survival need, on the other hand, awakens your system's full capacity. The craving for luxury alone shapes a person into dependence, subtle laziness, and weakness.

The moment you see through the redundancy of your senses, your verbalization, your mind, and even your personal identity, the deeper dimensions - Third Eye, Vāk, Unclutching, and Shivatva - naturally awaken within you. This is the real science of liberation, the intelligence of the inner system responding to necessity, not indulgence.

Go to a space where everything you carry now - your identity, your possessions, even your very being - becomes redundant. Tell your being this truth with clarity. Contemplate deeply: "Where I am going, my eyes and visualizations will not accompany me; my speech and verbalizations will not come with me; my mind and intellect will not follow; my cunning games, strategies, and even what I think of as my soul will not come along. How will I exist in that space? How will I reach that place?"

Anyone who sincerely contemplates this will experience rejuvenation - a return to youth and beauty. True old age is not determined by the body or mind; it is the result of being frozen in old concepts. Clinging to outdated beliefs and assumptions makes one old. Seeking truth, however, awakens vitality and freshness.

When you turn your attention to the space where all current faculties and identifications become redundant, your deeper dimensions awaken naturally: Your Third Eye opens, perceiving beyond ordinary vision. Your Vāk awakens, the power of subtle expression beyond speech. Your Mana (mind) activates in its highest clarity. Your emotions become free from attachment. Your Unclutching - the capacity to release completely - becomes real. Your Shivatva - your connection to the Cosmic Soul - shines forth. Become young and beautiful through this contemplation.

Perceiving and Experiencing Kāraṇa Will Merge into Kāraṇa

Let me decode some more sacred truths. Recite along with Me.

na tatra cakṣurgacchati na vāg gacchati no manaḥ

Where the eyes go not, the speech goes not, nor the mind and intellect, we do not know, we do not understand, how That can be taught. It is distinct from the known. It is far beyond man's finite objective nature that is what the mind, eyes, ears or speech, the senses can perceive. It is beyond the unknown, as it can be known by the man's divine, infinite, subjective nature.

We have heard this directly from the ancient masters, who revealed and explained it to us. In Sanskrit, cakṣu - the eyes - includes both the eyes that can see and the eyes that can visualize. Yet neither visualization nor verbalization can reach it. Brahma is verbalization, Vāk, the Vedas. Vishnu is visualization, celebration, and energy. Lakṣmī is wealth. But none of these can find Śiva. One goes down, the other goes up - together they still cannot reach Śiva.

This reality is distinct from the known; it is beyond both the known and the unknown. The ancient masters emphasized this again and again: the truth cannot be fully commented on or interpreted. It is Sadāśiva revealing the truth to us, demonstrating that the ultimate reality is far older than the one spelling it out. The understanding of this Upaniṣad arises only in the minds of those vibrating at the same frequency, attuned to the subtle reality being conveyed.

These truths are more ancient than the person through whom they are revealed, vibrated, or manifested. To establish authority, the Upaniṣad declares: "We heard it from the ancients, who revealed and explained That to us." This is a transmission beyond time, beyond individual identity - a truth that belongs to the consciousness of the cosmos itself.

यद्वाचानभ्युदितं येन वागभ्युद्यते।
तदेव ब्रह्म त्वं विद्धि नेदं यदिदमुपासते ॥ ५ ॥
yad-vācānabhyuditaṁ yena vāgabhyudyate
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 5 ||

Translation: That which speech does not illumine or reveal, but by which the speech is illumined or revealed and expressed, you must know That alone as Brahman, the Absolute Existence, and not what people worship and cherish here as this finite, limited object.

If you read the 3rd, 4th and 5th verses together, certain sacred truths can be decoded. The Source gives life to visualization and verbalization, not the words that describe it. It cannot be revealed by visualization and verbalization, but what is That reveals even visualization and verbalization to your perception. This is the most important truth. You need to meditate. This is the subject for Manana, to embody the state of Nirvikalpa Samādhi.

There is a beautiful verse by Thirumoolar:

ponnai maraithathu ponnani booshanam, ponnil marainthana ponnani booshanam;

thannai maraithathu than karanangale; thannil marainthathu than karanangale;

marathai maraithathu mamatha yaanai, marathil marainthathu Mamatha Yaanai;

parathai maraithathu paar-muthal-bootham; parathil marainthathu par-muthal-bootham

The senses (jnanendriya and karmendriya) cannot show you the Self. If you start looking, what makes you experience your senses, that Source is Self.

ponnai maraithathu ponnani booshanam, ponnil marainthana ponnani booshanam

If you see the beauty of the jewelry, you will miss it. When you name it gold for a second, the visual presentation of the jewelry will be lost. If you see the visual beauty of the jewelry, when you are enjoying the beauty of the jewelry, you will forget it is gold. If you remember the beauty of the gold, you will forget the form it is in. Seller sees the gold, buyer sees the jewelry.

ponnai maraithathu ponnani booshanam, ponnil marainthathu ponnani booshanam;

thannai maraithathu than karanangale; thannil marainthathu than karanangale

Jnanendriya, karmendriya, and mana together are called kāraṇa.Your eyes see and have the ability to visualize. Your ears listen and process what they hear. You can combine, cut, paste, and edit the impressions of sound over time. Your Vāk can create words, spell them out, or internalize them. All these faculties together are called kāraṇa.

Mana is the base on which all these faculties dance. As long as you are absorbed in the dance of the senses, you miss that which empowers all these karaṇas. The moment you turn toward the Source - the power that allows you to experience through the karaṇas - the individual karaṇas themselves dissolve back into kāraṇa.

It is like jewelry and gold. Jewelry is made of gold. The moment you see it as gold, it is no longer jewelry. The moment you see it as jewelry, it is no longer gold. The seller sees it as gold, because he has many pieces of jewelry. The buyer sees it as jewelry, because he intends to wear it. If the buyer sees it as gold, he wins the bargain. If the seller sees it as jewelry, he loses.

In dance, if your eyes carry lust, you cannot enjoy pure dance. When you enjoy pure dance, your eyes become beautiful - free of lust. Similarly, when you perceive the senses only, you see the world. When you perceive the kāraṇa, the kāraṇa itself merges into the Source.

marathai maraithathu mamatha yaanai, marathil marainthathu Mamatha Yaanai;

parathai maraithathu paar-muthal-bootham; parathil marainthathu par-muthal-bootham

If there is a beautiful elephant carved on a sandalwood tree, a person who sees it only as a sandalwood tree will miss the beauty of the elephant. If he sees it only as an elephant, he will forget it is a sandalwood tree.

This verse is teaching the same principle: Enlightenment is not difficult. The energy you use to perceive forms and names in the world - that very same energy, if redirected, allows you to perceive the Formless, Nameless, Subjective Truth. It is only a change in direction, not a change in effort. Ask yourself: are you awakened to the outer world, or have you awakened to the inner world? The whole verse is about changing the direction of your perception. In everyday life, whenever your emotions make you perceive something as "my world", break that identification and perceive it as "the world". When you do this, you begin to see:

thannai maraithathu than karanangalam; thannil marainthana than karanangale;

kaaranam kanda karai karanangale; karanangal karaithal kaaranam thannile

Karanangal - (the karaṇas, jñānendriyas, karmendriyas, and mana) - are the organs, intra organs through which you perceive tiredness, excitement, good, bad, right, and wrong. Whatever you perceive through the karaṇas makes you forget the kāraṇa - the underlying cause. When you consciously turn toward the kāraṇa, you begin to perceive the source itself.

Ask yourself: What is it that makes me experience and perceive all this? What is it that illuminates this entire experience? What is it that makes my kāraṇa shine? Through this inquiry - through Vākyārtha Sadas (reflective discussion) and manana (contemplative practice) — you can directly experience the kāraṇa, the root of all perception.

ponnai maraithathu ponnani booshanam, ponnil marainthathu ponnani booshanam;

thannai maraithathu than karanangalam thannil marainthathu than karanangale;

It's all about making a U-Turn. The man who stands and shows you the U-Turn board is the Guru. The Guru speaks in a way that all your karaṇas start listening. He has mastered all his own karaṇas, so he can command all your karaṇas.

Only a person who has mastered his karaṇas can say: "Turn. About-turn. Make a U-Turn. Your turn is the U-Turn."

The sacred truth encoded in this verse is simple: Enlightenment is not difficult. It is not about adding effort, rituals, or austerities. It is just a change of direction - a U-Turn.

Do Not Keep Finite Limited Objects as a Goal in Life

"That which speech does not illumine or reveal, but by which speech itself is illumined, revealed, and expressed - that alone is Brahman, the Absolute Existence. It is not what people worship and cherish here as finite, limited objects."

The so-called atheists and agnostics often misinterpret the latter part of this verse, claiming: "The Upaniṣad says, not what people worship and cherish here as finite limited objects, so don't worship idols or forms."

Fools who try to imagine the unimaginable, without guidance, fall into depression, tiredness, and boredom - and sometimes even become terrorists out of frustration.

The Upaniṣad actually says: "viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate." This does not mean "don't worship deities" or "don't worship the forms of Gods and Goddesses." It means: do not keep those limited objects as the ultimate goal of your life.

What is the meaning of worship? It is that which you run behind, that which enchants you, that which attracts you, that which your whole being longs for. So, when the Upaniṣad says "viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate", it means: do not make finite, limited objects the goal of your existence. Do not fall in love with them.

You may be worshiping deities, bowing down to Gaṇeśa or any other God, yet in reality, you may still be in love with wealth, name, and fame. Many people lose their peace in pursuit of the Nobel Peace Prize - it has taken away more peace and left more people in pieces. You may bow down before God, yet if you are in love with money, recognition, or ambition, those are what you are truly worshiping. The Upaniṣads declare: do not make finite, limited objects your ultimate aim.

Pure questioning and pure ambition are, in essence, the same - because their Source is you. If you stay with pure questioning, you will fall into you, and only pure ambition will radiate from you. Here is a simple example of misunderstanding:

A man was driving down a country road when he saw a farmer standing in the middle of a vast field of grass. Curious, the man pulled over, walked out to him, and asked, "Excuse me, sir, but what are you doing?" The farmer replied, "I am trying to win a Nobel Prize." Puzzled, the man asked, "How?" The farmer responded, "Well, I heard they give the Nobel Prize to people who are outstanding in their field."

In the same way, "viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate" is often misunderstood - just like the farmer being "outstanding in his field." Sometimes both this verse and the earlier one are misunderstood by the same person. Once misunderstanding takes root, it colors everything. If it becomes a habit, then misunderstanding itself becomes the regular pattern.

yad-vācānabhyuditaṁ yena vāgabhyudyate tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 5 ||
Speech cannot illumine Brahman, Sadāśiva. Mind cannot illumine Sadāśiva. Vāk cannot illumine Sadāśiva.

Visualizations cannot illumine Paramashiva. You may ask: "Then, why Vāk? Why visualization? Why mind?" If you start seeing the source of Vāk, of mind, of visualization—what illumines Vāk, what illumines visualization, what illumines the mind

- you will find Paramashiva. You will find Brahman.

Do not merely look at where Vāk is pointing; look at where it is arising from. Do not be diverted by what visualization is showing; look at the Source from which it is revealed. That is the Truth. Mana, Vāk, and visualization are created by Sadāśiva not because they can show you the Truth, but because through them you can discover the Truth. They cannot reveal the Truth directly, but if you trace them back to where they are being revealed from, you will catch the Truth.

Let Work-ship And Worship Objects Be Infinite

yad-vācānabhyuditaṁ yena vāgabhyudyate tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 5 ||
"That which speech does not illumine or reveal, but by which speech itself is illumined, revealed, and expressed - know That alone as Brahman, the Absolute. Not what people here worship and cherish as finite, limited objects."

Here, the word upāsate should not simply be translated as worship, but as what one keeps as one's goal. What you "worship" may not actually be your goal. What you "work-ship" - what you work towards - may not be what you worship. The Upaniṣad is pointing to this subtle distinction: do not keep finite, limited objects as your goal of life. This is the correct understanding. Whatever actions you are engaged in, let them ultimately lead you towards the Infinite, Brahman. Function with this clarity. Ask yourself: What do I worship, and what do I work-ship? In both, is there anything finite - or are both aligned with the Infinite? That decision is crucial. When both your worship and your work-ship are directed only towards the Infinite, you are already the favorite inheritor of the Cosmos - King and Queen of the Cosmos.

Experience Reality By Turning Towards Source

यन्मनसा न मनुते येनाहुर्मनो मतम् ।
तदेव ब्रह्म त्वं विद्धि नेदं यदिदमुपासते ॥ ६॥
yanmanasā na manute yenāhur-mano matam
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate ||6||
Translation: That which cannot be thought of by the mind, that which is modified functions of intellect, intelligence, contemplation and cognition, but by which they say, the mind is able to think and cognize, being illumined by the light of Infinite Cosmic Intelligence – you must know that very Source of Mind, the Reality alone as Brahman, the Absolute Existence and not this which is worshipped and cherished here as a finite, limited object.

The Upaniṣad repeats itself here - signaling that this truth is of utmost importance. Let both your work-ship and your worship be directed only to the Infinite. Even in the middle of deep sleep, if someone were to wake you and ask, "Why are you working?" your immediate, spontaneous response should never be money, power, name, fame, or any finite object. Instead, it should arise from the core of your being: "I am enriching, for enriching leads me into the space of Sadāśiva." This should not just be an answer but your very cognition.

The work you do, the quality you embody, the life you live - everything must be aligned towards the Infinite. Iron out your whole existence with the Truth of the Infinite. Let the Infinite be the source of your life. Let the Infinite be the source of your very Existence. Let the Infinite be the source of your joy.

tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 6 ||
That which cannot be thought of by the mind, with its modified functions of intellect, intelligence, contemplation, cognition but by which they say the mind is able to think and cognize. Being illumined by the light of the Infinite Cosmic Intelligence you must know that very source of mind, that reality alone as Brahman.

If the Upaniṣad repeats itself, it means the concept - the sacred secret, the truth being delivered - is of the highest importance. Sometimes you feel that what you truly want to convey has not yet been fully said. The whole truth has not yet been delivered. At such times, words feel like a tiny tube trying to drain an entire dam. When words appear too small for the vastness of the truth, you are forced to repeat. The Ṛṣis of the Upaniṣads knew this. Their inner space experienced the truths as a vast flood. For them, words were too small a stream to carry the full force of the Ganga. So, when the message was too great, they repeated it. That is why the Upaniṣad repeats itself.

yanmanasā na manute yenāhur-mano matam
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 6 ||

The Upaniṣad repeats itself to give you one more chance to listen. It knows human beings are fools who miss again and again, so it keeps opening the door. Don't look at what your mind shows you - look at what shows your mind to you. Don't get trapped. Don't say yes, don't say no. Just be unclutched. Unclutching is the only way to save yourself from any trap. Always look at who is showing you the mind, not at what the mind is showing.

Your mind may show you hopes of the future or the hopelessness of the past. It may tempt you with the possibility of victory or torment you with the memory of failure. Whatever it shows - don't get caught.

Understand: sad-faced victims are the biggest criminals. The moment someone says, "I am innocent, life is tormenting me," they are already carrying a poison far more dangerous than terrorism. That cunning victimhood will only be exhausted if they live many lifetimes as terrorists.

Any energy you pile up inside, any pressure you build, will have to be exhausted by taking more and more births. Many think that victimhood is the safest, coziest corner to hide in. In reality, every victim mentality you indulge in is building the mental setup of a terrorist.

So don't be tricked by your mind - whether it is playing the victory of the future or the victimhood of the past. Both are traps. Don't say yes, don't say no. Look only at the Source: why do you perceive your mind the way you do? The deeper you go into the Source, the more roots you see. The more roots you see, the more you are freed. This is enlightenment.

If finite objects are your worship and work-ship, you are caught. Let the goal of both always be the Source. You may wonder: "How will I run my regular life if I am always looking at the Source?"

Understand, this is the most practical instruction. When your cognition is turned to the Source, you can go on living your day-to-day life - without tiredness, without boredom, without friction. Looking in does not mean losing fuel; it means gaining immense lubrication for your system. Turning towards the Source does not slow life down - it makes life flow effortlessly. It removes the friction. When you turn to the Source, the Infinite becomes your reality. This is why the Upaniṣad repeats the same truth again and again - in the 7th, 8th, and 9th verses.

nedaṁ yadidamupāsate | nedaṁ yadidamupāsate | nedaṁ yadidamupāsate | nedaṁ yadidamupāsate | nedaṁ yadidamupāsate

Five times.

The good news is you will be given a chance to come back five times. The bad news is, if you make this missing as a pattern, you will miss even the fifth time.

nedaṁ yadidamupāsate |

Finite objects are not Absolute. They are not Ultimate.

nedaṁ yadidamupāsate |

What is such an important sacred secret that Upaniṣad has to repeat itself five times? Upaniṣad are revealed to high frequency people, not to the uncommitted, accidental onlookers. It is revealed to committed, responsible individuals. It is literally like impregnating. Why does Kenopanishad repeat itself five times?

Never Be Diverted By What is Seen, See Who is Showing

yanmanasā na manute yenāhur-mano matam
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 6 ||

The next verses also have the same meaning.

यच्चक्षुषा न पश्यति येन चक्षूँषि पश्यति ।
तदेव ब्रह्म त्वं विद्धि नेदं यदिदमुपासते ॥ ७॥

yaccakṣuṣā na paśyati yena cakṣūṁṣi paśyati

तदेव ब्रह्म त्वं विद्धि नेदं यदिदमुपासते ॥ ९॥
yatprāṇena na prāṇiti yena prāṇaḥ praṇīyate
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 9 ||

From the 4th to the 9th verse, the Upaniṣad repeats again and again: brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate.

In all the 108 Upaniṣads, this is the most repeated line. No other line is uttered five times.

Translation: That which is not seen by the eye (cakṣu), but because of which the eye, the organ of sight, is able to see and perceive the seen - you must know That reality alone as Brahman, and not this which is worshiped and cherished here as a finite, limited object.

Do not be diverted by what even the most beautiful expression instigates in you. Instead, concentrate on the Source from which you perceive. Paramashiva, in the Āgamas, describes beauty not in terms of man or woman - our tradition recognizes eleven genders - but simply as a beautiful being. He gives three qualifications: The very sight should leave you stunned, eyes widening in awe. Grace should flow in every action, from waking to falling asleep. Every bhāvanā - whether dress, attitude, aspiration, or visualization - should radiate beauty.

Even if all these qualities are present, do not be diverted by the expression. Look into who is expressing it. When you turn inwards to the one expressing, you become a Jīvanmukta.

The same applies to the most beautiful experiences of the world: the Sun, Moon, oceans, Himalayas, rivers, nature's splendor, extraordinary beings, powers, and visions. Do not be caught in what is shown - see the Source that is showing it.

Understand clearly the distinction between The World and My World. The mountain you see is The World. The peace or mood it creates in you is My World. Whether it is The World or My World, do not be distracted by what is seen or perceived. See who is perceiving in 'My World,' and you will realize Ātman, the Super Consciousness. See who is showing 'The World,' and you will attain Paramashivatva. This is the direct path to the Ultimate: Śivoham Anubhūti, Ātmajñāna, Brahmajñāna. This is Enlightenment.

Enjoy both - the beauty of the outer world and the richness of your inner world - but do not be distracted. Enjoy powerfully, but remember: it is the Source that matters, not the experience. If your attention is on the superficial, both your eyes will enjoy. If your attention is on the Source, your Third Eye will enjoy. External or internal, let the Third Eye be awakened.

After defining beauty, He says: look at the Source - Who is showing? That is too beautiful to be described. If the expression itself is this beautiful, then imagine how the experience will be! If the statement can be so poetic, how poetic will the state be! Let all the glory, visualization, and beauty you see in The World or My World remind you of the Source.

It is not that which is seen by the eyes, but that because of which the eyes - the organ of sight - are able to see and perceive. That alone is Reality. This truth has to be drilled into you again and again. Not by what is seen through the eyes, but because of which the eyes are able to see and perceive.

tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 7 ||

Go on contemplating this. However beautiful and graceful the seen may be, however handsome or radiant the being may be - always look at the Source. When you look at the Source, you will reach a space, a taste, an experience that is far deeper, sweeter, and more beautiful than anything expressed. Any enjoyment of expression will, at some point, lead to boredom. Only if you look at the Source will boredom and tiredness become redundant in your life.

Seer Who Sees The Source Becomes The Seer

Upaniṣad says, anybody who can express always tries to make people a slave through his or her expression. That's what the actors do. They want people to become their slaves just by the way they look, the way they carry themselves gracefully, the way they portray themselves. See the authenticity of the Upaniṣads. The Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis looked more handsome than any superstars because they are real stars. The Sapta Ṛṣis are the real stars. With all their beauty, grace and handsomeness, they remind you to look at the Source, which is expressing, not the seen which is perceived. If you turn towards the Source, that is the most extraordinary, eternal experience of beauty, bliss, joy and Consciousness.

If you can see, begin directing your attention to the Source. Even in day-to-day life, if you turn towards the Source, your family and relationships will become deeply stable. Whenever you operate only on the basis of what is seen, your relationships will always remain unstable. Anything new will appear stunning for a while, but nothing - except the presence of an enlightened being - remains graceful from morning till night once you start living with it.

In your ordinary life, if you train yourself not just to see what is seen, but to look behind what is seen, your life itself will gain stability. The one who sees the Source becomes the Seer. The one who invests in the seen becomes the seen—the mere object.

Breathe The Prāṇa of Enlightened Being

yaccakṣuṣā na paśyati yena cakṣūṁṣi paśyati
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 7 ||
yacchrotreṇa na śṛṇoti yena śrotramidaṁ śrutam

yatprāṇena na prāṇiti yena prāṇaḥ praṇīyate
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 9 ||

The 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th – all these 5 verses are a powerful repetition, especially 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th. These 5 verses are the same words. The entire line "tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate" is repeated 5 times and is the most repeated verse in all the 108 Upaniṣads.

The 9th verse:

yatprāṇena na prāṇiti yena prāṇaḥ praṇīyate
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 9 ||

Translation: That which one breathes, not with the breathing but by which the breath, in-breathes vital life energy, prāṇa, being impelled by that Source of life, you must know that alone as Brahman.

Some of the anti-Hindu elements and pseudo Hindu elements translate this verse, translate this thought current of prāṇa as the organ of smelling. Breathing has multiple purposes. If you try to translate prāṇa as smelling, the whole sacred secret is lost. The first principle of breath, prāṇa, is life energy. It is not just smelling, it is experiencing. If you breathe a hill, an ocean or a river just by yourself, you will breathe peace. The same place, same hill, same river, same ocean, if you breathe with the people with whom you have Complete Completion, you will breathe bliss.

Whenever the ideological relationship does not exist and only biological or blood relationship exists, those people become a burden on you. Blessed are the families who have a common ideology as their source of inspiration. Blessed are the son and father, mother and daughter, brother and sister, husband and wife of whom Guru is the connecting point.

When ideological Completion exists, you have endless reasons to be together. You have endless things to talk about, endless reasons to celebrate one another's presence. That shared ideology is Completion.

Until enlightenment happens, there can never be absolute Completion. But even then, your Completion can be far stronger than your small incompletions. Completion means your small incompletions become irrelevant. This is the Completion you can achieve - by thinking of it, imagining it, waiting for it, and aspiring for it.

Breathing is not smelling. Breathing means absorbing the very life energy around you. When you breathe on a beautiful beach, by a hill, or near a river, alone, you breathe peace. When you breathe in that same space with people with whom you have Completion, you breathe bliss and joy. But if you breathe in that same place with people with whom you carry incompletion, you breathe hell.

Whenever you go to an energy field where the great Beings lived like Kali Temple of Dakshineshwar, Srirangam Ranganatha Swami, Arunachaleswara, Meenakshi, Viswanatha – breathe that place. They are still alive in those places. Their prāṇa is alive in those places.

Smelling is one of the side effects of breathing. Breathing means being alive, living that place, tasting that place, experiencing that place. A person with whom you have Completion, friendliness, even breathing in that person's space gives you so much life. That is why you always want to hang around not with the right people, but with the people with whom you have Completion. Understand, everyone is trying to hang around with the people with whom they have Completion.

Under the Adi Kailasa Banyan Tree, you can live the prāṇa of Sadāśiva. He is there. Sapta Ṛṣis lived in Ramanagara because Sadāśiva, Devi and Nandi lived there. To this day, all the Saptarishis are in the form of a huge seven hillock, single stone in Ramanagara. They heard Āgamas from Mahādeva under this Banyan Tree. If you read the Kāmika Āgama description where Sadāśiva was sitting and teaching, everything fits with our Banyan Tree. After Sadāśiva taught the Āgamas, the Ṛṣis were living in Ramanagara and practicing.

Rāma came when He heard the Sapta Ṛṣis are living here. He came and heard not only the Āgamas, but the Upaniṣads also from Mahādeva directly. After Rāma wins the war, after the Paṭṭābhiṣekam, he brings Hanuman, Sita, Laxmana, Bharata, Shatrughna, the whole battalion to show them where He had lived – the Rāma līlā sthānas. At that time, at the same place, Rāma sits and describes to Hanuman what he heard from Paramashiva. Hanuman is the incarnation of Nandi. Nandi came to support Rāma in His Avataric mission as Rāma is the great devotee of Paramashiva. Rāma taught whatever He heard from Paramashiva to Hanuman. That is what is recorded in Muktikopanishad as the 108 Upaniṣads. Under the Adi Kailasa Bidadi Banyan Tree, you can breathe Paramashiva.

If you sit in a dark room and go on breathing, you will only be in hell. People who are interested in being in hell, you go to hell; don't put others in hell. Not relating with people, constantly sitting in a dark room is a disease as per Hindu psychology, and sleeping when this is being told is a disease.

One important truth: the more people want to hang around you, the more success in everything you do. You carry that kind of prāṇa where people feel rejuvenated, refreshed by breathing your prāṇa. It is not necessary that you have to be completely complete with everyone for people to enjoy your prāṇa. If you are completely complete with you, and go on encouraging Completion with everyone, that itself will rejuvenate everyone's prāṇa.

Breathe Out Joy And Completion

Understand the importance of breathing. It is not smelling. You are breathing life. It is very important. You need to constantly be aware and be alert of whom you are breathing. Just like whose food you are eating and with whom you are eating matters, with whom you are breathing matters. If many people feel rejuvenated and happy by breathing your space, you will be blissful. Naturally you will be loved, you will be wanted. You become more and more blissful, more and more loving. What you breathe out becomes your character. Whatever you deny becomes your weakness, pattern.

Whatever you breathe out becomes your character. Breathe out love. Breathe out Completion. It becomes your character. Whatever you deny: "I cannot do. He will talk. Who knows, only I know. All this is not working for me. One day I have these ambitions and activism and the next day I don't know where it goes." It will become your pattern. Whatever you breathe out which everyone around you enjoys becomes your character. Breathe out joy and let everyone around you breathe the joy. Let everyone around you breathe the Completion you radiate, the ecstasy you radiate, the excitement you radiate.

Whether in business, personal fulfillment, joy, love, relationships, contentment, health, in everything, if you can breathe out joy and Completion, more and more people will love to be around you. You will feel rejuvenated, overflowing with love, energy and Completion. That is success. Not cunning, not technical, not strategic planning - but radiating joy and Completion.

Ramakrishna never had a strategy. When He was alive, He had only a small number of disciples. When He left the body, the number of people that gathered was less than fifty. For those fifty people, He created such an amazing powerful Completion space. Everyone who came into their breathing space, breathed Ramakrishna. That did the job. If more and more people are able to hang around you, feel rejuvenation around you, feel the Completion with you, that's all that matters. Beings whose breathing itself brings thousands' joy, make them feel more Completion, more rejuvenation, more excitement, more joy, more bliss, more fulfillment - that is life, that is success.

The more and more people enjoy your breathing space, the more and more they will want you. When you feel you are wanted, you will start expressing more and more of this. That will become your character. That is the virtuous cycle for Completion, fulfillment and success. When you start living this, it becomes your character and believing in it leads you to enlightenment itself.

यत्प्राणेन न प्राणिति येन प्राणः प्रणी यते ।
तदेव ब्रह्म त्वं विद्धि नेदं यदिदमुपासते ॥ ९ ॥
yatprāṇena na prāṇiti yena prāṇaḥ praṇīyate
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 9 ||

That which man does not live by prāṇa, but by which prāṇa itself is sustained - know That to be Brahman, not what people here worship.

Health is not ultimate but to experience the Ultimate, health is required. The moment you hear health is not ultimate, you stop caring about the body and allow it to collapse. That is withdrawal from life without understanding the full statement – health is not ultimate. To experience the Ultimate in the body, the body needs to be healthy. Only to a healthy person you can utter the word "health is not ultimate" and not to anybody else.

You need to understand what breathing is. Have complete breathing and only then you can say breathing is not the ultimate reality. Breathing is beyond that. You need to know what listening is and you need to have complete listening. Only then ultimate is beyond listening. You should have complete vision and only then ultimate is beyond seeing. Half of your eyes are not seeing. With that, if you hear, "Oh, listening is not God," you will be very happy. In your mind, you think "Okay. I think I am in the God state." Breathing is experiencing everything in your eyesight.

Science of Breathing

Instead of having a small room with windows and sleeping there, if you have a larger space even without windows or windows closed, you will be more healthy. You do not breathe the space even if the windows are open. Open windows means the air circulation will be good. Breathing is not all about air circulation. It is all about the space.

If you are going to build your home, let your bedroom be as big as possible. You are breathing space, not just air. You are breathing people who are in that space. You are breathing things which are in that space. You are breathing memories which are kindled by the things, the persons and the photographs in that space.

First thing is to manage the space inside you. Always decide to be in the space of Completion. Make sure you go on encouraging and helping others to be complete, excited and informed. Excitement is not a psychiatric disorder. If some system declares excitement as a disorder, that system is a disorder. Collapse the psychiatric system; don't be collapsed by it.

tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 9 ||

First, learn the science of breathing. It is not about blowing your nose. It is about experiencing life. If you don't know breathing, you cannot say breathing is not ultimate. If you don't know seeing, you cannot say seeing is not ultimate. If you don't know listening, you cannot say listening is not ultimate.

Śrī Vidyā: Looking For The Source

yad-vācānabhyuditaṁ yena vāgabhyudyate
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 5 ||
yanmanasā na manute yenāhur-mano matam
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 6 ||
yaccakṣuṣā na paśyati yena cakṣūṁṣi paśyati
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 7 ||
yacchrotreṇa na śṛṇoti yena śrotramidaṁ śrutam
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 8 ||
yatprāṇena na prāṇiti yena prāṇaḥ praṇīyate
tadeva brahma tvaṁ viddhi nedaṁ yadidamupāsate || 9 ||

The essence of all these verses is this: not that which is seen, but that through which everything is seen.

This verse has two dimensions. For example, you are looking at a great mountain range covered with snow. That is the World. When that mountain is perceived, the perception and the experience you go through is my world. In your world, neither of these is ultimate. Look inside - who is perceiving within my world? Look outside - who is showing as the World? In both, if you begin to trace the Source, you will discover Sadāśiva.

If you start looking at who is showing my world and our world, you will directly experience Sadāśiva. If you start looking at who is manifesting the World, you will directly experience Ādiśakti. Both are one and the same - Ādiśakti and Sadāśiva.

The essence is this: see from depth, listen from depth, breathe from depth. The moment you turn towards the Source, depth awakens. All human suffering exists because of superficiality. Depth brings powerfulness and joy.

Anything that happens from the Source, from depth, is parāvidyā. Anything that happens superficially is aparāvidyā. The Science of Enlightenment - discovering the Source - is Śrī Vidyā. Śrī Vidyā is the science of finding: who is seeing, who is listening, who is breathing, and who is cognizing.

Kenopanishad Verses: Powerful Method For Sahaja Samādhi

The 5th verse. yat vācānabhyuditaṁ yena vāgabhyudyate – which cannot be described by words but which is the source of the vāk, the speech does not illumine, reveal but which makes the speech happen.

The 6th verse: yanmanasā na manute yenāhur-mano matam – cannot be cognized by the mana, but which makes mana cognize, which makes mana operate.

yat cakṣuṣā na paśyati – not which can be seen, but through which the organ of seeing is lit, functions.

yat chrotreṇa na śṛṇoti – not by the listening, but through which the listening happens in you.

yat prāṇena na prāṇiti yena prāṇaḥ praṇīyate – not which can be breathed, but by which the breathing happens.

The most powerful Sahaja Samādhi technique is constantly trying to remember – Who is making me see? What is the energy in me which makes me listen? What is the Source which makes me cognize and think? What is the Source which makes me breathe in and breathe out?

Suddenly, your eyes will be open, yet you will sit like a hatching mother bird - her eyes are open, but she is not looking outside. Your eyes will be open, but you will not be seeing, because you are seeing the Seer.

Whenever you find time, even if only for a few minutes, sit in this space - you will naturally enter Sahaja Samādhi. Your eyes are open, but you are not seeing. Your ears are open, but you are not hearing. You are not asleep, yet you are not engaged. Your cognition is alive, but you are not cognizing. This is the state called Sahaja Samādhi.

With practice, even while cognizing, you will not move out of that state. That is the perfection of Sahaja Samādhi. These five verses of the Kenopanishad are the most powerful method to experience Sahaja Samādhi.

Gummi Song: Powerful Method to Create Right Bio Memory and Muscle Memory

The Gummi song is from the great Siddha Puruṣa, Mahasiddha Konganavar. He is Devi upāsaka, śakta. Tradition says Konganavar's Jīva Samādhi is there in the Tirumala Temple. All the great Incarnations were worshiped with the name of Siddha Puruṣas in the South. Of the 18 great incarnations in the South, one of them is Konganavar. The word 'Konganavar' means Lord of Hills. Konga means hill. Anavar means the Lord. He was supposedly a śakta (worshiper of Śakti, Devi) when he was in the body. It matches because in the Venkateshwara Temple, in the main garbha griha vimāna, you will not see Garuda (divine bird, vehicle of Lord Vishnu). You will see Simha (lion vehicle of Devi). The traditional information available proves very clearly that he lived in Tirumala and has Mahā Samādhi, Jīva Samadhi in Tirumala. In his song, beautifully he describes the same truth of the Upaniṣads in at least 10 verses.

The unique style of dancing for that song, the Gummi Song churns your whole bio memory and muscle memory. The way you need to turn around and rotate your body – whirling - in Siddha tradition, it is used as a technique. When you are whirling again and again, the sounds which are created directly get into your guts. When you are whirling, the pitha will open up and your guts will record the verses sung. It will just become your bio memory and muscle memory. It is one of the most powerful spiritual techniques. Even if you miss kīrtans, don't miss Gummi songs. It is one of the ancient methods of creating right bio memories and muscle memories.

The Konganavar songs are called Valai Gummi. There are actually 16 Gummi songs on Paramashiva which are well-known. One is from Kalangi, one is from Sattanathar, Sattamuni and one recently from Vallalar just a few 100 years ago. These are some of the most traditional and powerful mantras. These words came from the great enlightened Masters, Incarnations. When you whirl with that Gummi and these words enter into your system; they work as a mantra. They manifest in your bio memory and muscle memory.

Sahaja Samādhi: Answer to Pure Questioning

Through these five verses, the Upaniṣads are urging you to go into depth. Do not remain superficial. Superficial living will never allow you to experience life. Somewhere, you need to break the ice. Somewhere, you need to evolve. Decide today is the day you begin practicing Sahaja Samādhi, Sahaja Sthiti.

Throughout the day, whenever you find time, ask yourself: What is it in me that allows me to cognize myself and everything around me? What is it in me that lets me see what I see? What is it in me that makes me hear what I hear? What is it in me that allows me to breathe in and breathe out?

Start this pure questioning, and you will see - automatically your attention will center on something beyond words. These questions do not lead to answers; they lead to an experience - an embodied state. Sahaja Samādhi is the response to pure questioning. Start the pure questioning, and return to it again and again.

|| iti prathamaḥ khanḍah ||

This brings us to the end of the first chapter of Kenopanishad.

Cultivate Will Power, Not Will Arrogance

Dvitiyaḥ Khanḍah, the 2nd chapter of the Kenopanishad.

यदि मन्यसे सुवेदेति दभ्रमेवापि नूनं त्वं वेत्थ ब्रह्मणो रूपम् ।
यदस्य त्वं यदस्य देवेष्वथ नु मीमाँस्यमेव ते मन्ये विदितम् ॥ १॥

yadi manyase suvedeti dabhramevāpi nūnaṁ tvaṁ vettha brahmaṇo rūpam |
yadasya tvaṁ yadasya deveṣvatha nu mīmāṁsyameva te manye viditam || 1||

"If you think, I know It very well, then you certainly have known only very little expression of Brahman's true nature and form. What you know is conditioned by your limited perception of Brahman's expression, in yourself and its expression among the Gods too. Therefore, Brahman the Absolute Truth is still, to be sincerely inquired into, contemplated and intranalyzed by you."

This is like a conversation between Guru and the disciple. Guru says, "If you think, I know It very well, then you certainly have known only very little expression of Brahman's true nature and form. What you know is conditioned by your limited perception of Brahman's expression in yourself and it's expression among the Gods too, therefore, Brahman the Absolute Truth is still, to be sincerely inquired into, contemplated and intranalyzed by you."

Tiredness and self-inflicted boredom make you feel, "I know It - that's all there is to know." You give up on yourself and convince yourself that everything is okay. During the manifestation of powers, people actually fight with what they call willpower. But it is not willpower - it is will-arrogance. The idea that, "If I will it now, it has to happen now. If it doesn't happen, then it's not for me, so leave it." What you think of as willpower is nothing but will-arrogance.

Real willpower arises from persistent will. When you are bitten by the snake called will-arrogance, that poison spreads within you as tiredness and self-inflicted boredom. Whoever has transformed their excitement and devotion into responsibility will never be bitten by tiredness or self-inflicted boredom. Tiredness may come from external causes, but boredom is always internal. When these two attack you, you arrive at a decision. When you say, "That's enough - leave me," your life, in effect, has ended.

All of you know the story of Brahma who went to find the head of Paramashiva. Viṣṇu went to find the feet of Paramashiva. Brahma was inflicted by tiredness and self-inflicted boredom. When you are tired and bored, not only are you a dead weight to yourself, you even become cunning to cheat others. Brahma looked around and he did not want to accept his failure. He tried to show he was successful. So he caught one flower that was falling from Sadāśiva's head and asked the flower, "Hey, from where are you coming?" The flower said, "I am coming from Paramashiva's head." The next question was, "How long have you been traveling?" The answer was, "Oh, I am traveling for four Brahma's ages." Brahma was shaken, "What? Four Brahma's ages you have been coming down and…"

Then that flower asked, "Who are you?" He replied, "I am the Brahma of this age." The flower then said, "Oh, I have seen four, your father, grandfather and great-grandfather. For four of your fathers, I am coming down. The flower asked, "Why are you coming here?" Brahma said, "I wanted to reach Paramashiva's head, so I am coming up." The flower laughed and said, "Fool! I have not been kept on top of the head. I have been kept on the ears. Paramashiva's put me on His ears. From there I slipped and I am landing for four Brahma's ages." Brahma said, "Can you do one favor for me? Can you be a witness for me that I reached Paramashiva's head and brought you from there?" The flower replied, "After all, I am going there. What is there? Let me support."

This disciple–disciple relationship is a crime. You support and are a witness with a lot of sympathy for the crime that fellow is trying to commit. That is why both of you are cursed. Paramashiva cursed that flower, "You will never ever again be used in My pūjā. You can never have My sparśa (touch)." That's the worst curse. Even Brahma did not have that worst curse. Brahma was told, "You will never be worshiped." Then Brahma did some prāyaścitta and fell at the feet of Sadāśiva. Paramashiva said, "Alright, at least in all My temples, the Vāmabhāga, I'll give to you."

In all Śiva's temples, where the gaumukha, the water, the abhiṣeka tīrtha comes out, Brahma will be standing to fill his kamaṇḍalu and do the Creation. It is from the pāda tīrtha caraṇāmṛta (feet-washed sacred nectarine) water of Sadāśiva, Brahma creates Brahmāṇḍas (universes). Brahma at least got some blessings and a place at the feet of Sadāśiva's caraṇāmṛta. For the false witness, the supported fellow, the curse is in place. That flower (Thazhampu, Ketaki) is never used. It is the best-smelling flower and has a lot of herbal qualities. It's a medicine. If Paramashiva had accepted, that flower would have been the best flower for His pūjā. No Śiva temples use it. It is the most auspicious-smelling flower but useless just because of this one crime. Never ever support somebody's tiredness and self-inflicted boredom.

Never Give Up Seeking Due to Tiredness and Boredom

yadi manyase suvedeti dabhramevāpi nūnaṁ tvaṁ vettha brahmaṇo rūpam |
yadasya tvaṁ yadasya deveṣvatha nu mīmāṁsyameva te manye viditam || 1 ||

If you think, I know It very well, then you certainly have known only very little expression of Brahman's true nature and form. What you know is conditioned by your limited perception of Brahman's expression in yourself and Its expression among the Gods too. Therefore, Brahman, the Absolute Truth is still to be sincerely inquired into, contemplated and analyzed by you.

Whenever you feel bored or tired, you may start thinking, "I already know everything," or "This is all I can ever know." Both attitudes are dangerous. What truly matters is keeping the spark of pure questioning alive. As the Guru says: "Brahman, the Absolute Truth, still needs to be sincerely inquired into, contemplated, and realized by you." Pure questioning takes you deeper. The answers you cling to without questioning become the frozen parts of you - and those frozen parts are your pain. When you let go of rigid answers and remain open in questioning, you experience Brāhmaṇyaṃ Bahuputratām. But the moment you insist on fixed answers and resist openness, suffering begins.

yadasya tvaṁ yadasya deveṣvatha nu mīmāṁsyameva te manye viditam || 2.1 ||

"If you think, I know It very well, then you certainly have known only very little expression of Brahman's true nature and form. What you know is conditioned by your limited perception of Brahman's expression, in yourself and its expression among the Gods too. Therefore, Brahman, the Absolute Truth, is still to be sincerely inquired into, contemplated and intranalyzed by you."

The important sacred secret you need to know from this verse is – when you are hit by tiredness, when you allow boredom, do not give up on your seeking. Do not give up your pure questioning. Keep your pure questioning alive. Anybody who keeps pure questioning alive, never gets tired of manifesting powers. Will is built by persistence, not by egoistic arrogant attitude of "I'll try a few times, if not I'll give up" or " I'll conclude this is as far as I can go."

Pure questioning and manifestations, manifestation of powers, is one and the same. Bring yourself to the pure questioning. Sincerely inquire into the inner space of Sadāśiva. Meditate on it. Intra-analyze it.

Definition of True Disciple

नाहं मन्ये सुवेदेति नो न वेदेति वेद च।
यो नस्तद्वेद तद्वेद नो न वेदेति वेद च ॥ २ ॥
nāhaṁ manye suvedeti no na vedeti veda ca |

yo nastadveda tadveda no na vedeti veda ca || 2||

Translation: I do not think that I know it well and not that I do not know it. I know and I do not know as well. One, who amongst us, subjectively cognises and knows that to be as – not that I do not know it and also I know it not – truly knows it.

The definition of a disciple in this verse is this: he neither completely knows, nor is he completely ignorant. Understand - knowing what you know is knowledge, and knowing what you don't know is also knowledge. But not knowing that you don't know is ignorance. Not knowing, in itself, is not ignorance.

Beautifully the disciple says, "I do not think I know it well." He is very clear, he is not completely enlightened. He also knows "it's not that I don't know at all and not that I do not know it."

नाहं मन्ये सुवेदेति नो न वेदेति वेद च।

nāhaṁ manye suvedeti no na vedeti veda ca |

I do not think I know it well. That does not mean I do not know. I know and I do not know as well. There are some parts of the truth I do get into that embodied state but there are some parts of the truth still not revealing itself to me.

Upaniṣads are basically helping you to embody the consciousness they are describing. The last verse Kenopanishad described about the pure questioning:

यदि मन्यसे सुवेदेति दभ्रमेवापि नूनं त्वं वेत्थ ब्रह्मणो रूपम्।
यदस्य त्वं यदस्य देवेष्वथ नु मीमांस्यमेव ते मन्ये विदितम् ॥ १ ॥

yadi manyase suvedeti dabhramevāpi nūnaṁ tvaṁ vettha brahmaṇo rūpam |
yadasya tvaṁ yadasya deveṣvatha nu mīmāṁsyameva te manye viditam || 1 ||

"If you think, I know it very well then you certainly have known only very little expression of Brahman's true nature and form. What you know is conditioned by your limited perception of Brahman's expression in yourself and its expression among the Gods too. Therefore Brahman, the absolute Truth, is still to be sincerely inquired into, contemplated and intranalized by you".

See this whole verse. Start thinking, contemplating and intranalyzing. Whenever you find time, even while cooking, while lifting stones, while making calls, while serving, all those moments ask yourself: "What is it in me which is making me breathe? What is it in me which is making me hear?

Understand, even this simple question will suddenly turn your attention inward and make you experience an 'Embodied State of Consciousness.' In Sanskrit, we have a beautiful word: Bhāva Samādhi. Whatever becomes your Bhāva Samādhi is truly known to you; whatever has not become your Bhāva Samādhi is still unknown to you. Make your whole life a lifestyle of Bhāva Samādhi.

What is Rudrābhiṣekam is for? Early morning, 04:30, get up and pour cold water on yourself and do the Pancha Kriya. Then go and sit in front of that Shiva Linga. Sit and connect with Paramashivaa wherever you may be, whoever you may be, "Whatever form you may be, something I may know, something I may not know. Oh Paramashiva, I know you are the Source of everything. You are everything. You are in this Linga. You are in this body. You are the Source for both. Let me connect with you. Let you reveal yourself to me. Let me be in the Bhāva Samādhi of you, Śivoham". When you sit in that Bhāva and do the action of Rudrābhiṣekam, the Embodied States of Consciousness becomes your reality. Bhāva Samādhi becomes a possibility.

It is these Bhāva Samādhis that are the juiciest moments of life. Until you experience Bhāva Samādhi, the juiciest point in life will only be sex - the highest experience you know - and you will keep running behind it. But only Bhāva Samādhis can give you the higher taste of life: higher joy, higher fulfillment, higher consciousness.

Once you experience that, whether or not you choose to enjoy physical pleasures becomes your decision. Without Bhāva Samādhi, if you rely only on physical pleasures, it becomes suffocating. Too many things have to be maintained, and most of the time, it ends in disappointment. As a result, you begin to develop incompletions with everything related to physical pleasures, and eventually, you start hating them.

Kīrtan: technique for Bhāva Samādhi

Second verse:

नाहं मन्ये सुवेदेति नो न वेदेति वेद च।
यो नस्तद्वेद तद्वेद नो न वेदेति वेद च ॥ २ ॥

nāhaṁ manye suvedeti no na vedeti veda ca |
yo nastadveda tadveda no na vedeti veda ca ||2||

Bhāva Samādhi, the Embodied States of Consciousness opens amazing doors in life. That is why Rudrābhiṣekam is recommended, within that half hour you can enter the Bhāva Samādhi of Śivoham. Kīrtan is also a technique for Bhāva Samādhi. When your stomach churns repeatedly, it releases pitta and cleanses toxins. Suddenly your stomach may feel so joyful—as if you had swallowed a 'joy pillow' resting there; before practice the same can feel like an 'pillow of acid .' If you perform the Kīrtan fully, with the body rotations and steps, you will suddenly feel the whole stomach become like a light, sweet joy pillow.

Embodying different states of consciousness, Bhāva Samādhi is the purpose of all spiritual practices: Pure Questioning, Unclutching, Complete Completion, Morning Yoga during Brahma-muhurta, Rudrābhiṣekam, Guru Pūjā, Kīrtan, or Satsang, whatever becomes your Bhāva Samādhi is known to you; whatever has not yet become your Bhāva Samādhi remains unknown. If you know both - what has become your Bhāva Samādhi and what is yet to become, you possess complete self-knowledge. Constantly work to transform your intellectual understandings into Bhāva Samādhi.The greatest wealth you can acquire in the human body is Bhāva Samādhi.

You may embody consciousness as bhakti (devotion), as Śivoham, or as Śuddhādvaita Anubhūti. To embody consciousness means your length, breadth, and depth are filled with that one Bhāva; your whole being radiates and vibrates with that one Consciousness. When you embody Consciousness, it becomes your reality.

Experience Chit Gaṇa Anubhava

Embodying Consciousness. Becoming Shiva Gaṇa, Chit Gaṇa. Consciousness means Chit. Embodying means Gaṇa, Chit Gaṇa Anubhava. During the morning yoga, the experience which is expected is, feeling the whole body is nectar. Yoga is all about experiencing tremendous ecstasy, orgasm in the very body without any other body, just in the air. The whole body vibrating that joy, Amrita Sharira is the conscious embodiment, Chit Gaṇa Anubhava, that is supposed to happen during Yoga. The purpose of Yoga is that only. Do Mallakhamba or hang on the rope, or roll on the ground, do upside down. Use all the accessories required, whatever you want, you have full freedom. The goal, the context is embodying Amṛta Śarīra. Embodying the ecstatic body without external touch, just by the air.

Pañca Kriyā is embodying purification. Once you complete the Pañca Kriyā, you should feel your whole body is pure. During pūjā, embodying Bhakti, Consciousness, Chit Gaṇa Anubhava of Bhakti, Bhāva Samādhi of Bhakti, surrender, devotion, dropping all the unnecessary things from the head. In the Pañca Kriyā, you clean. Whatever is unnecessary you drop. During pūjā, above the head you clean. Whatever is unnecessarily accumulated, you drop. During the satsang, you sit in Nirvikalpa Samādhi just to reverberate, vibrate, entangle Sadāśivoham, Śuddhādvaita Satya. The whole morning routine is designed to allow embodying states of consciousness, Chit Gaṇa Anubhava. It is all about Bhāva Samādhi. Whatever has become your Bhāva Samādhi, Chit Gaṇa Anubhava, you know it. Whatever has not become your Chit Gaṇa Anubhava, you don't know it.

Pratyāhāra, Dhāraṇā, Dhyāna, Samādhi

nāhaṁ manye suvedeti no na vedeti veda ca |
yo nastadveda tadveda no na vedeti veda ca || 2 ||

I do not think I know It well, and not that I don't know It, I know and I do not know as well, one, who amongst us subjectively cognizes and knows That to be as – not that I do not know it, and also I know It not, truly knows It.

Anything you imagine, visualize, listen to, or it starts revealing itself to you, or if you put your energy and life into it, you will start understanding. An example, if you are constantly working with gold and you give only your time to gold, you will learn only the simple basic business things. When you put your energy and life into it, you will start understanding why people have so much interest in gold, why it goes on increasing in value or why the appreciation value of gold is so much but why no one becomes rich by storing gold. There is a secret. Even in India gold appreciates faster than land, but no one becomes rich by investing in gold. People become rich by investing in land. Why? If you give your energy, life and time to the business, you will learn all the secrets. The gold itself will reveal its secrets to you.

In every field, if you truly learn everything about that field or product, its secrets will reveal themselves to you. It may be making a pot, crafting gold jewelry, or even creating concepts and selling them to the world.

Take life insurance, for example. Life insurance is nothing but a concept. Many times, a husband takes life insurance just to tell his wife, "See, I love you. Even if I die, you will have this money. With this you can live." But what does that really mean? Is he telling her, "You will have this money so you can marry again," or "Don't marry again, because I am leaving this money for you"? Even if you are not personally convinced about the ideas and concepts sold in the name of insurance, you feel it creates a perception - that it proves you love them, that you have made some security for them, that you have done everything possible to take care of them. So, you also buy into it. This is buying something just to sell. You buy certain concepts even though you are not fully convinced of them, only to sell them as ideas of love and caring.

Understand the nitty-gritties of a concept business, nitty-gritties of the gold business, nitty-gritties of the land business, nitty-gritties of even making pots. Everything gets revealed to you when you put your time, life, energy into it. Good, bad, right, wrong, everything is revealed. Put your time, life and energy on Ādiśakti, Śrī Vidyā. She will reveal Her secrets about running this Cosmos, running this Māyā, running this whole Brahmāṇḍa, Bhuvana. Anything you put your time, life and energy to will reveal its secrets to you. That is Bhāva Samādhi. paramashivva describes Samādhi beautifully in Yoga Pāda.

When Pratyāhāra, the withdrawl happens, you withdraw your life and energy from everything else and center it on one point. Pratyāhāra naturally becomes Dhāraṇā the centering, which is flowing towards something some truth. When Dhāraṇā happens, that trutg begins to reveal itself to you, which is Dhyāna. Remaining in that revealed state continuously is Samādhi. So:

Pratyāhāra means withdrawing from everything else.

Dhāraṇā means flowing into somethin, some truth.

Dhyāna means the truth towards which you flow reveals itself.

Samādhi means remaining in that revealed state continuously.

Will Persistence vs Will Power

Bringing Pure Questioning back into your life is Completion. It happens only through Will Persistence, not through Will Power or better yet can be called as Will Arrogance. Sometimes people say, "Oh, for ten years I had persistence and I am so tired and bored." No. What you had was will power or will arrogance not Will Persistance. Persistence never brings tiredness or boredom. If you are tired and bored, you never had persistence. It was only will arrogance—fighting and failing. You need to have the right understanding about your past. Only then will you make the right decisions about your future.

Many times, the tug-of-war you continue to have with your will arrogance, you mistakenly call will persistence. With will arrogance, you fall into powerlessness and keep repeating the same stupid cycle. With will persistence, you are one step ahead, you will never be bored, you will never be tired. Tiredness and boredom are qualities of will arrogance. Will persistence never brings powerlessness. Will arrogance always brings tiredness and anger - towards yourself and towards others.

nāhaṁ manye suvedeti no na vedeti veda ca |
yo nastadveda tadveda no na vedeti veda ca || 2 ||

The disciple says: "I know but I also know I do not know." Means there are some things which have become embodied. There are some things which you have not yet embodied. In this whole thing, you can see will persistence, not will arrogance. He is not tired of it. He says: "I know something and I also don't know something, and I know what I don't know."

Not knowing does not bring tiredness or boredom, powerlessness or will arrogance. It only brings will persistence. Will arrogance is different. Will persistence is different. Will persistence becomes willpower not will arrogance.Will arrogance becomes only will failure which makes you old. But, Will persistence suddenly makes you young, you start afresh, from the beginning. Will arrogance makes you feel tired even about things you never actually practiced but only imagined you tried.

You may know something. You may not know something. But knowing what you know, and knowing what you don't know in itself is knowledge. Nothing else needs to be done in life. Just will persistence. It will awaken you to you, raise you to you, and make you realize you to you. The more truths you embody, the more you will know, and the more will persistence will happen. Will arrogance will get completed. That is the essence of life.

Bhāva Samādhi - Answer for Pure Questioning

The 3rd verse of Kenopanishad. It's a very powerful Upaniṣad. Recite along with Me.

यस्यामतं तस्य मतं मतं यस्य न वेद सः ।
अविज्ञातं विजानतां विज्ञातमविजानताम् ॥ ३||
yasyāmataṃ tasya mataṃ mataṃ yasya na veda saḥ ।
avijñātaṃ vijānatāṃ vijñātamavijānatām ॥3||

Translation: He, by whom, it is not known, to him it is known and experienced. He, by whom it is known to him, it is not known or perceived. It is unknown to those who think they know it well, and known to those who know it not.

This sacred truth is in Bhāva Samādhi. Joy remains, not the arrogance you know. As long as the idea you know is there, but not the joy of the Bhāva Samādhi, you don't know. The scale to know whether you know it or not is the oozing Bhāva Samādhi, not dead peace.

Peace cannot be the branding of Hinduism. Fools are those who don't know Hinduism. Only exuberant bliss can be the brand of Hinduism. Hinduism has already branded itself through the Upaniṣads, neither love nor peace. The one and only brand of Hinduism is exuberant bliss. If you have it, teach Hinduism, otherwise get out. Don't try to rebrand Hinduism because you don't have bliss.

This verse is very clear. Only one who has experienced the embodied state of Super Consciousness can decode it. Oozing bliss is the only answer for pure questioning. If bliss is overflowing in you, and there is neither the idea that you know nor the idea that you don't know, you are in the right space. In that state, you neither conclude "I know" nor "I don't know." Nothing remains in your inner space other than that exploding, oozing bliss. It becomes so intense and heavy, that even as you walk, people will feel your very presence. You will appear as though you are "not here but there." You will be utterly light, yet beyond balance.

If you are heavy and unbalanced, it means your Pitta is high. You will always find cracks on your feet. Heaviness is the root cause of cracked feet. But if there are no cracks in the feet, and yet you are not balanced, then it is not heaviness—it is the light, oozing-bliss imbalance. These are subtle physiological indicators to verify a person's inner state. These are the practical tips handed down by great Yogis.

A drunken man is imbalanced because of intoxication. A heavy man is imbalanced because his own weight becomes a burden since his knees cannot carry him. Such people usually have high Pitta and visible cracks in their feet. But if there are no cracks in the feet, and the body is light, then why does imbalance happen? It is because too much bliss is oozing out of the system.

The essence of this verse is simple yet profound: Embodied states of consciousness, Bhāva Samādhi, are the only true answer to pure questioning. No verbal answer will ever suffice. If you think you know it, you are a fool. If you think you don't know it, you are ignorant. If you pretend to know it, you are cunning. All three are merely different levels of stupidity. The oozing ecstatic bliss is the real answer. The power of Bhāva Samādhi is the response existence gives to Pure Questioning. Wherever there is pure questioning, the only authentic answer is Bhāva Samādhi.

Bhāva Samādhi - Build Muscle Memory and Bio Memory

With Bhāva Samādhi, your muscle memory and bio-memory should be developed. If you are an adult, this can be built in six months through a simple, conscious practice. If you are a child, the maximum time required is just one month. Every day, practicing Bhāva Samādhi with Sadāśiva and strengthening your muscles, muscle memory, and bio-memory is the best way to grow up and exist. Bhāva Samādhi is the space where you embody the state of consciousness described in the Sūtras, the state shown in the Sūtras, and the state expected to be achieved according to the Upaniṣads. It is not about ideas of known or unknown, or thinking "I know" or "I don't know." It is about living and being that state itself.

He, by whom it is not known, to him it is known and experienced. He, by whom it is known to him, it is not known or perceived. It is unknown to those who think they know it well and known to those who know it not.

Bhāva Samādhi is the purpose, the ultimate goal, but it can flower only by pure questioning. You can't completely neglect pure questioning. You have to have pure questioning even knowing there is not going to be any answer. There is only going to be Bhāva Samādhi. Questions are just going to disappear. Pure questioning has no answer. Only Bhāva Samādhi is the response.

Deep Sleep State, Dream State, Waking State

He by whom It is not known, to him, It is known and experienced; he by whom, it is Known, to him, It is not known or perceived. It is unknown to those, who think they know It well and known to those, who know It not.

It is truly known, when the Self is consciously cognized and subjectively known to oneself in each state of Consciousness. With every modification of the mind and intellect, through such complete, matured cognition of the Pure Self is immortality, amṛtatvam, existence in one's own Self attained. By Ātman, the Pure Self attains real strength, the space of powerfulness. And by Vidyā, Complete Knowledge of the Self experiences immortality, which is the true nature of Ātman.

It is truly known, when the Self is consciously cognized and subjectively known to oneself, pratibodha, in each state of consciousness with every modification of the mind and intellect, through such complete matured cognition of Pure Self is attained immortality – existence in one's own Self.

You have to cultivate very deep listening. In the deep sleep state, you experience a vast darkness covered by darkness, a peace that is layered within peace itself. In the waking state, you experience the solid world - the Universe and everything within it. In the dream state, you experience a world that is an addition, deletion, or modification of what you experienced in the waking state. The Shaivite tradition describes twenty-five states of consciousness in great detail, but for now, it is essential to understand these three basic states.

Deep sleep state is where you experience extraordinary silence and peace, darkness covered by the darkness. What you perceive in the deep sleep state; what you perceive and manifest in the dream state; what you perceive and manifest in the waking state – the whole thing is made out of the same material. It is just a modification of your Consciousness.

If you wear it on the head, it is called a crown. If you wear it on the ears, it is earrings. If you wear it on the neck, it is a chain. If you wear it on the hand, it is a bracelet. If you wear it on the hip, udayanam. All of them are made out of the same material – gold. In the same way, what you experience in the deep sleep state, what you experience in the dream state and manifest in the dream state, what you experience in the waking state and manifest in the waking state are all made out of the same material.

Now comes the confusion. "What I see in the dream is not staying, and what I see in the waking is staying." Now come tons of questions. What I go through in the waking state does so much for me. What I do in the dream state does not do that to me." They are perceptional experience based questions.

Existential Reality or Perceptional Reality

There are two kinds of experiences in life: existential experience and perceptional experience. Your character belongs to existential experience - it is what you truly are. Your reputation belongs to perceptional experience - it is how others see you. The reputation often has nothing to do with your character. In fact, most of the time, it is the exact opposite.Most of your questioning arises from observing, "What I see in the dream does not stay, but what I see in the waking state remains. The waking state is more stable, solid, permanent, and vivid, while the dream is fleeting and insubstantial."Do you ask the same question while dreaming? No. In the dream, everything appears solid and real. In that state, experiences feel more existential than perceptional.

Similarly, in the waking state, the waking world itself appears as an existential experience, while the dream state now looks like a perceptional experience - something constructed, modified, and external to your grounded reality.

Only if you move a step further will you understand this is also perceptional experience, not existential experience. If you just internalize this thought current, you will experientially experience how all these are modifications of your own Ātman (Self).

Your own existential experience is only one - your Ātman. Everything else is a perceptional experience.

Take gold, for example. In its pure metallic form - the biscuit form at 99.999% purity - that is existential reality, the existential experience. Everything crafted from it - the crown, the earrings, the chain, the udayanam, or the ring - everything is perceptional reality, not existential reality.

Similarly, your Ātman in its pure space is the only existential reality; everything else is perceptional. This truth must be deeply drilled into your system. Once it is, even in the dream, you will recognize: "Is this perceptional reality or existential reality?" - and you will wake up. In the waking state, if you constantly ask yourself, "Is this perceptional reality or existential reality?", you will be awakened.

In the dream, if you remember and question, "Is this existential reality or perceptional reality?", you will wake up to the waking state. In the waking state, if you question, "Is this perceptional reality or existential reality?", you will come to the awakened state. Dreaming to wake up, waking up to awakening.

This verse needs to be chewed and chewed and some more chewed. If you have chewed a betel leaf or chewing gum, you know what real chewing is. Just like that, it must be chewed in your inner space. Ask yourself: What do I experience in the deep sleep state? What do I perceive and project in the dream state? What do I perceive and project in the waking state? These three states are what you should start drilling into your awareness.

The first thought is, "Things here feel solid - if I hit the wall, I feel pain; if someone touches me with love, I feel cared for; if I put something in my mouth, there is taste. Waking life seems more real than the dream. "Yet even in the dream, everything feels solid. If you dream of falling, you experience the fracture - just as real within the dream as it would be in waking life. Only upon waking do you realize the fracture doesn't exist. The next thought arises, "In waking state, time feels consistent - forty, fifty, sixty, eighty, ninety - but in the dream, everything changes. Each dream is different, fluid, and unpredictable."

How many of you have dreamt in one night that you are writing an exam, getting married, or living years in a few hours - and felt no inconsistency? Who is to say this hundred years of life isn't just one long dream? Perhaps all your experiences - exam, marriage, children, meeting the Master - are part of it. Then suddenly you wake up and realize, "The whole thing was a dream."

Perception of time, perception of stability is not existential, it is perception. How you think time looks very solid in this waking state, you feel the same way in the dream state. When you wake up, you understand it was not true. When you are out of the dream state, you can see the whole dream. You can see that you saw yourself as twenty, as thirty, as forty, as fifty.

Not Letting Consciousness Evolve is a Pattern

When you are awakened, you can see the entire waking state. Suddenly, fear arises: "Oh God, what about all the plans I made, all my ambitions? I have so much energy and intelligence, I fought for everything. What is this? Is the whole thing a dream?" Even if it is a dream, you might still say, "It's okay, I want to live here, because I have invested so much energy in it." This is a pattern. Patterns like this prevent your consciousness from evolving naturally in the flow of existence.

Life is hardwired to remind you, through continuous subtle shocks, of the true existential experience of life - through change. Every time you lose a relationship, or lose a loved one, or even their love, you are reminded of impermanence.

All of this belongs to perceptional existence, not existential existence. This is perceptional reality, not existential reality. Quickly, your mind wants to return to the comfort of the thought: "No, no, no, all is well. This is existential reality." No! Confusion and depression arise not when you are moving toward the Truth, but when you misunderstand the nature of reality.

Not letting the natural evolution of Consciousness happen within you is a pattern - and it is deeply frightening. Some people build careers, money, businesses, homes, relationships. Others do not build these things and spend their lives criticizing or abusing those who have, justifying to themselves why they did not achieve it. That is communism - in its psychological form. Whether you have built what you desire, or whether you have built justifications for why you didn't, both are expressions of vested interest. Neither allows you to truly wake up, nor to be awakened to reality.

Awakened State - Play With Third Eye Power

The Third Eye is all about the awakened state. Any practice you do with the Third Eye - whether blindfold reading or other powers - ultimately leads you toward awakening. The rules of perceptional reality do not apply in existential reality. Similarly, the rules that govern the dream state do not govern the waking state. In the waking state, you experience a slightly higher frequency of freedom, so many dream rules no longer apply. In the awakened state, even more rules fall away. Here, you can never truly believe you can see through your back or neck - because the awakened state functions beyond perceptional limitations.

The higher frequencies of existence are not bound by the rules and limitations of lower perceptional reality. You have two ways to reach the awakened state: either manifest the powers of the Third Eye, or deeply drill yourself with the truths of deep sleep, dream, waking, and awakened states.

Either path leads to the other. By internalizing these truths, you awaken. By awakening, you manifest the powers of the Third Eye. Buddhi and Śakti (powers) both arise from the awakened state. As you manifest more Third Eye powers, your buddhi expands - you gain understanding of the perceptional realities of dream, deep sleep, waking, and awakened states. Conversely, by deeply drilling yourself with these truths, you awaken—and naturally manifest all the powers (śaktis).

Power of Raw Will

"He by whom it is not known, to him, it is known and experienced. He by whom it is known, to him, it is not known or perceived. It is unknown to those who think they know it well and known to those, who know it not."

"It is truly known, when the Self is consciously cognised and subjectively known to oneself in each state of consciousness with every modification of the mind and intellect. Through such complete cognition of the pure Self is immortality attained. Existence in one's own Self, by Ātman, the pure Self obtains real strength, the space of powerfulness (vīryam). By vidyā, complete knowledge of the Self is experienced, immortality, amrita, which is the true nature of Ātman."

The sacred secret from the fourth verse is, raw will is required to achieve vīryam. The word is roughly translated as powerfulness. The powerfulness meaning of the word 'vīryam' will be like a power of Brahmacharya, celibacy. If somebody can be powerful in front of their sexual needs, he cannot be powerless in front of anything. If your sexual needs cannot make you powerless, nothing can make you powerless. Even death cannot make you powerless. When you go through death, the imbalance, the chaos you will go through is less than 10% of what you will go through when there is a gush of hormones and sexual hormones inside you. If you can be powerful in front of the gush of sexual hormones, death will be nothing.

ātmanā vindate vīryam vidyayā vindate amṛtam

There are many techniques to become a successful Brahmacārī - a celibate - but before any technique can work, you must have raw will. Your raw will must directly confront the gush of hormones in your system. Face the hormonal surge without any technique. Simply with your will, withstand the way hormones twist your logic and perception. You may reason, "Paramashiva Himself has Devi, but they never had a physical relationship." Yet the hormones will still try to convince you otherwise, bending your reasoning, perverting your perception of life, God, and yourself. The first step in spiritual life is the ability to confront this hormonal surge and sexual urges with raw will alone. This is the foundational requirement to build powerfulness (vīryam) in your system.

When you face the gush of hormones with raw will, with pure will, without relying on any external technique, something extraordinary happens. It forges capabilities in your nervous system, your muscle memory, and your bio-memory. The very struggle becomes power. If you collapse when bulldozed by the surge of hormones, it leaves behind patterns. But if you stand tall, refusing to give in, the same surge transforms into pure strength. Sadāśiva is very clear: every seeker must first be given the chance to deal with this inner storm using nothing but will—no technique, no method, no external support. Only then does the foundation of true powerfulness begin.

There are five types of help Paramashiva prescribes – Maṇi, Mantra, Auṣadha, Siddhi and Bhāvana.

Maṇi is supporting your body with the right temperature and the right chemistry. This means giving you organic food and certain things like neem juice in the morning. At night, a pinch of camphor with pure cow's milk. These are all the simple Maṇi for developing the Brahmacharya chemistry in the system. When you develop in this way, whether you get married and live the life of physical relationship, or you become a Brahmachari – with both you will be powerful. These are methodologies of building a right temperature and chemistry. Even if somebody wants to get married, if they practice this during Bautika Brahmacharya, they will have so much power. Their life of physical relationship will be so fulfilling, and they will bring high energy souls into the body. Paramashiva explains this beautiful science of Maṇi by creating the right chemistry, by balancing the temperature and building the body. A very beautiful, natural methodology.

Mantra techniques: there are specific techniques to achieve Brahmacharya. Maṇi explains more than 200 techniques elaborately in Āgamas.

Then, Auṣadha. The literal word for Auṣadha means medicine. If you have already damaged your system by using, abusing or misusing, Auṣadha supports you to heal your body and revive it to the powerfulness of Brahmacharya.

Siddhi means helping you to manifest certain powers. When you manifest those powers, simply you will become Brahmachari.

Bhāvana is the attitude you develop about yourself, about others, the world and everyone around you. With Bhāvana, I always tell people: "No question of boyfriend-girlfriend culture. Only Guru Bhai, Guru Behen culture. Bhāvana matters in a big way. So, these are the five methods and techniques for Brahmacharya. The Virya (powerfulness), which is achieved by Brahmacharya is the goal. Paramashiva is very clear in the Upaniṣads. He says before all these five, the individual should be allowed to face the gush of hormones just by his will power. Paramashiva is not saying, don't use any of these five. Use all the five but before that, wage the war with your pure will and see how things happen. Wage the war with pure will, then take the help of the army. Mṛga Śarīra Vāsa is one of the most powerful techniques to achieve Brahmacharya. Before any of that, first and foremost is a bare, raw, crude fight with your hormonal gush, with your bare will. That makes your whole system totally different.

pratibodhaviditam matam amṛtatvam hi vindate |
ātmanā vindate vīryam vidyayā vindate amṛtam || 4 ||

"Consciously cognised and subjectively known to oneself, it's truly known, when the self is consciously cognised and subjectively known to oneself, in each state of consciousness with every modification of the mind and intellect, through such complete cognition and pure self is attained immortality, existence in one's own self, by Ātman, the pure self is attained real strength, the space of powerfulness (Viryam). The word 'Viryam' should be translated as space of powerfulness achieved through celibacy and Brahmacharya – and by Vidyā, complete knowledge of the Self is experienced, immortality, amrita, which is the true nature of Ātman."

How our logic is convinced by the gush of the hormones, when the hormones are released, with the same logic, how it tumbles down, collapses and pokes you in different ways, see the ups and downs. Fight with pure will and see how the logic is convinced when the gush of hormones happens in your system. This will help you to understand many things.

Amritatva (Immortality) is The Way of Existence

It is truly known, when the Self is consciously cognized and subjectively known to oneself, pratibodha in each state of Consciousness with every modification of the mind and intellect. Through such complete cognition of the Pure Self is attained immortality, amṛtatvam – existence in one's own Self. By Ātman, the Pure Self is attained real strength, the space of powerfulness achieved by celibacy and brahmacharya. And by Vidyā, complete knowledge of the Self is experienced Immortality, amṛtatva, which is the true nature of Ātman.

One key word here is Amritatva (immortality). It is something in you which does not die, which does not go through illusion, which does not go through losing its existence.

All your depression, all the feeling of suffocation, all the feeling of torture, all the pain you have physically, all the pain you have mentally, everything boils down to fear of losing what you think of as you. It is the fear of losing your existence, fear of losing your experience as you. You think this is the way you should exist and if anything threatens that existence, immediately fear is invoked. When the fear is invoked, you become a cunning fox. You start doing all the third rate strategies in which you think you can cheat life. The moment you become the cunning fox, you do not cheat others, you are cheating yourself.

Immortality is the way of existing. Nothing can touch the way you exist. Find that existence of you which gives you a complete feeling that it cannot be changed, it cannot be questioned, it cannot be taken away from you.

For selfish human beings, it is all about 'me, me, me, me' in them and that stupid 'me' which they are carrying is so insecure and wounded, full of pus and pain. They go on protecting that, cherishing that. It is as if you have somebody who came to your house as an orphan, who is paralyzed, mentally deranged, nothing in them works other than arrogance. You fall in sympathy for that person and that person is like "oh, if you don't take care of me, I will die." You give your whole life literally to take care of that person. Why? "If I don't take care of that person, who will take care of them?" At the end of life, you did not get married, you did not have children, you did not do whatever you wanted to do in your life just to take care of that person. You did not even go to the Guru to take care of that person. At the end of life, the person just kicks you in the face and disappears in thin air. You are here sitting, wasting your whole life to protect somebody. Finally you realize that person is not there, he is a delusion, ghost. That is exactly what you are doing. Who you are trying to protect, the identity you are trying to protect with that 'me, me, me, me, me, me' will suddenly disappear in thin air after sucking your whole life. Then you realized the 'me, me, me, me, me' in you is the worst exploiter and cheater. By its very constitution it cannot exist eternally, but makes you believe it is going to exist eternally. You cheat yourself.

You need to understand the word 'Amritatvam.' There is something in you which does not lose itself even while you go through the dream, while you go through the waking state, while you go through deep state. Relaxing into that something is Amritatva (immortality). Start finding that something which does not lose its existence while you go through a dream state or deep sleep state or waking state. That in which, when you relax, you don't feel threatened, you don't feel you have something to lose, you don't feel something is going to be taken away from you, you don't feel something is going to change in you.

Amṛtatva - Immortality: Whether you are a 2-year-old child, a 20-year-old, an 80-year-old elder, or a 99-year-old preparing to leave the body, your first priority must be to recognize that immortal part of you. It exists in you like bone marrow. Just as the body has skin, blood, bone, and finally marrow, your being too has layers: ordinary confusions, ordinary attachments, ordinary fears. If you dig past these layers to the core of your existence, there sits Amṛtatva - immortality - untouched by any physical or mental pain you imagine. The truth is, you keep imagining pain because of the hidden payoffs and immature cognitions you carry. But the marrow of your existence is never lost. That immortal space is you.

Just like inside your bone, the bone marrow is there, in the same way, inside your identity, that immortality is there in the form of pure light and pure consciousness. Recognizing that part is the first priority. The first lesson is to spend some time recognizing the connecting thread – just like the bone marrow is inside your bone, inside your identity this component is there. It is that which keeps you alive while you are in deep sleep, which holds you when you are dreaming and in this waking state. It holds you when you are young, when you are in middle age, when you are cunning, when you are depressed, when you are blissful. That which holds you, recognizing its existence in you and catching it, is Amritatva (immortality).

Amritatva is in the form of pure light. It does not change when you have a body. It does not change when you don't have a body. It is there with you forever, from the time you remember you to the time you disappear as you. Even before you remember you, it exists and supports you. Even after you forget to remember you, it is going to continue to support and hold you. It does not get worked up. It does not get messed up. The increase and decrease of your vāta, pitta, kapha or the hormones does not affect its existence and its clarity. When the vāta, pitta, kapha gets imbalanced, you go through some crankiness. That is why when you catch a cold, everybody is afraid of the crankiness which comes to you along with the cold.

How Vāta, Pitta, Kapha Doṣa Affects The Body System

Try this very simple technique. Just make yourself catch a cold. Go in the rain for 1 hour and you will catch a cold. Before catching the cold, make this will, decide: "Today I will realize my Amritatva; for that I will make myself catch a cold." With a little cold you are not going to die. Make the sankalpa I am going to catch my Amritatva. With that, catch a cold and see how the cold is influencing your logic, influencing your thinking pattern. In the same way, drink half a litre of coffee, because coffee will affect your mood. Coffee puts you in a certain high; cold puts you in a certain low.

One day work with the cold and catch your original state which is not going up or down. After you recover, after 2-3 days, play with coffee; have half a litre of coffee. It will put you in some high which is an imbalance, not your immortality. If you experiment with this vāta, pitta, kapha, the highs and lows, it will really help you. With coffee, just see how you feel the high which is not your immortality, not your Amritatva. Look at the simple things. Certain foods will put you in depression. You should eat that food and see how it is affecting your existence, and what is it which can be beyond this.

Then for one week, without missing, at night, take Kadukkai Podi (Haritaki herb). In the morning, take neem juice and do Pañca Kriyā. In that one week, see how the core of you is shining. See how you are feeling when the core cannot be imbalanced. Taste that core. That is immortality. One day, play with the cold and see. One day, play with coffee and see. One day, play with some food which puts you in depression.

Every one of you try to play with coffee. Then you will understand how dangerous it is. The decisions you make after coffee you will never be able to maintain because that is not you who made that decision. It is not the core which made the decision.

Garlic is an amazing medicine when you have issues related to fat or the heart, but it is not meant to be a regular food. If you experiment by eating onion, green chili, and garlic together, you will notice your mood dipping, your energy curving low, even depression setting in. This shows you how much the body and mind can be affected by vāta, pitta, kapha imbalances, by hormonal urges and hormonal fluctuations.

Yet, when you observe closely, you will also discover that there is a core within you that remains untouched by all these ups and downs. Just as bone marrow lies hidden within the bone, within your very identity there exists a sweet, pure light. To recognize and taste that inner sweetness is an amazing experience.

If you are untouched by vāta, pitta, kapha, or hormonal swings - without running any cunning strategy to protect yourself - the light in you is Amṛtatva, immortality. When that Amṛtatva penetrates your daily life, even in dreams you will see: "I became the tiger, I was chasing, I created the forest I couldn't escape. What a game!" Then you know - life itself is a video game you created and you are playing.

Power of Ability to Withstand Imbalances

The second key word is vīryam. Life is both your energy and the vessel that holds it. Energy may be vast like an ocean, but if the vessel is a leaky mud pot, it's wasted. Even a strong brass vessel with limited water is incomplete. True fulfillment is ocean-like energy held in a perfect, unbreakable golden vessel.

Your body and mind are the vessel, and the energy available is your lifestyle. If you struggle alone, it's like drawing water from a dry well - slow and limited. But if you live next to the Ganga, energy flows abundantly, effortlessly, without your effort. Choice is yours.

The vessel you carry - your body and mind - is made of pure will. Its strength is tested by how you handle the surge of hormones without any external support. Energy is always abundant; you are already in the ocean of Amritatva. What matters is the capacity of your vessel. Paramashiva offers five methods - Maṇi, Mantra, Auṣadha, Siddhi, and Bhāvana - to strengthen it, but ultimately, it is your raw will that decides whether you manifest weakness or radiate power.

If you lean on external supports, your vessel is only aluminum. But if you face the gush of hormones and urges with nothing but raw will, you forge yourself into a gold vessel. The energy is the same for all, but only the gold vessel can truly hold, radiate, and manifest it.

Having energy is not enough - radiating it is the goal. By facing your Vāta, Pitta, Kapha imbalances and the gush of hormones with raw will - without any external methods or techniques - you not only embody enlightenment energy but also manifest all the powers of Paramashiva. Vīrya, true powerfulness, arises only from handling these imbalances with your pure will alone and without the help and assistance of any method, technique like Maṇi, Mantra, Auṣadha, Siddhi, Bhāvana.

Maṇi, Mantra, Auṣadha, Siddhi, and Bhāvana are just tools. It is pure will that makes the vessel truly powerful, not only to hold but to radiate Enlightenment. If brahmacharya was made possible through technique, it is like a wooden piece reflecting the Sun. Instead, pure will alone was used to master it, it is like a mirror reflecting the Sun - useful for oneself and the whole world. Pure will is the mercury applied on glass. Your capacity to withstand dosha imbalances and hormonal gushes, urges, and torture is Vīrya - that raw, unassisted powerfulness.

Pure will is the mercury applied on the glass. Your ability to stand the dosha imbalances and the hormonal urge, gush, torture is called Vīrya. That powerfulness is Vīrya.

|| iti kenopaniṣadi dvitīyaḥ khaṇḍaḥ ||

The verse says "iha ced avedīd atha satyam asti" - if one realizes the Self in this very life, the purpose of human existence is fulfilled. The truth of who you really are, your oneness with Paramaśiva, must be experienced while living in this body. Human life is a rare opportunity to realize the highest truth, and experiencing it now fulfills the ultimate purpose of existence.

Na ced ihāvedīn mahatī vinaṣṭiḥ - if one fails to realize this truth in this life, it is a great loss. Missing this chance means remaining trapped in the cycle of birth and death, bound by the mind and senses. The human body is the perfect vehicle for Self-realization, and not using it for this purpose is a profound tragedy.

Bhūteṣu bhūteṣu vicitya dhīrāḥ - the wise ones (dhīrāḥ), who perceive the essence in every being, realize the Self within themselves and in all beings. They see beyond the external differences of forms, names, and labels. By seeing this oneness in all, they move beyond the limitations of the ego and individuality.

Pretya asmāl lokāt amṛtā bhavanti - Realized beings become immortal (amṛtā), remaining established in the Ultimate, free from death and the cycle of samsāra.

Now the 3rd part of the Kenopaniṣad

ब्रह्म ह देवेभ्यो विजिग्ये तस्य ह ब्रह्मणोविजये देवा अमहीयन्त ॥ १॥

brahma ha devebhyo vijigye tasya ha brahmaṇo vijaye devā amahīyanta ||1||

The verse says, brahma ha devebhyaḥ vijigye - Brahman, the supreme reality, attained victory on behalf of the devas (gods). In this story, the devas, the divine beings, are portrayed as having fought a great battle, and they were victorious because of Brahman's grace and power. However, they were not aware that their victory was not their own achievement but was entirely due to Brahman, the all-pervading consciousness.

Tasya ha brahmaṇo vijaye devā amahīyanta - Brahman achieved the victory on behalf of the devas, the divine beings. The devas fought a great battle and celebrated their success, believing it was entirely their own achievement. However, they failed to recognize what the real source of their power and that their victory was.

This verse conveys a very important teaching about the relationship between the individual ego and the supreme reality. The devas, who represent the divine faculties and powers within all of us, became proud, forgetting that the true power behind everything is Brahman, the supreme consciousness - Paramashiva. This is what happens when the ego takes credit for achievements, forgetting the source of all strength, intelligence, and power.

त ऐक्षन्तास्माकमेवायं विजयोऽस्माकमेवायं महिमेति ।
तद्धैषां विजज्ञौ तेभ्यो ह प्रादुर्बभूव तन्न व्यजानत किमिदं यक्षमिति ॥ २॥
ta aikṣantāsmākamevāyaṃ vijayo'smākamevāyaṃ mahimeti |
taddhaiṣāṃ vijajñau tebhyo ha prādurbabhūva tanna vyajānata kimidaṃ yakṣamiti ||2||
ta aikṣanta asmākam evāyaṃ vijayaḥ asmākam evāyaṃ mahimeti

The devas thought to themselves, "This victory belongs to us; this glory is ours." After achieving victory, they became proud and claimed full credit for their success. They believed that the victory and the greatness they experienced were due to their own abilities, forgetting that it was something beyond their individual capacities - beyond the ego - that was truly behind it all.

This delusion of the devas symbolizes the state in which the ego dominates, making one believe that achievements and successes arise solely from personal effort. Whenever we accomplish something, there is often a tendency to think, "I did this; this is my success." This identification with the ego creates separation from the truth, the Oneness. The ego convinces us that we are the doer, and this is where the illusion begins.

Tad dhaiṣāṃ vijajñau tebhyo ha prādurbabhūva –To dispel their delusion, the Ultimate manifested as a mysterious divine being, called a yakṣa, before the devas. This yakṣa appeared to remind the devas of their true place, to help them understand that their victory was not their own but was due to something more.

Tanna vyajānata kim idaṃ yakṣam iti—but the devas could not understand who or what this yakṣa was. They were perplexed, unable to comprehend the nature of this divine presence. The yakṣa was an embodiment of the Supreme in a manifested form, appearing to the devas as something beyond their comprehension, beyond the limited understanding of their ego.

तेऽग्निमब्रुवञ्जातवेद एतद्विजानीहि किमिदं यक्षमिति तथेति ॥ ३॥
te'gnimabruvañjātaveda etadvijānīhi kimidaṃ yakṣamiti tatheti ||3||

The devas said to Agni, the god of fire, also called Jātaveda, "O Agni, find out who this yakṣa is." The devas approached Agni because they thought that his power, his ability to see and know all things, would help them understand the nature of the mysterious being standing before them. Agni represents knowledge, fire, and the energy that brings light. He is the one who is supposed to "know everything," which is why he is referred to as Jātaveda, meaning "the knower of all births."

The devas, still caught in their pride and their belief that they could understand everything with their own abilities, thought that Agni could reveal the true nature of this yakṣa. They asked him to find out who or what this divine being was.

Agni responded, tatheti - "So be it." He agreed to go forward to investigate the nature of the mysterious being. The story here represents the idea that the ego always seeks to understand everything through its own faculties and knowledge. The devas sent Agni, believing in his capacity to know everything, not realizing that this yakṣa was beyond ordinary comprehension. They were still relying on their pride and sense of superiority, believing that they could solve this mystery through their own powers.

This part of the story teaches us that even the highest forms of knowledge, the brightest flames of intelligence, have their limitations when it comes to realizing the ultimate truth. The supreme reality cannot be comprehended merely through intellect or knowledge. Even the powerful Agni, representing knowledge and the element of fire, will soon find that his abilities fall short when trying to understand the yakṣa.

तदभ्यद्रवत्तमभ्यवदत्कोऽसीत्यग्निर्वा अहमस्मीत्यब्रवीज्जातवेदा वा अहमस्मीति ॥ ४॥ tadabhyadravattamabhyavadatko'sītyagnirvā ahamasmītyabravījjātavedā vā ahamasmīti ||4||
tad abhyadravat tam abhyavadat ko'sītiagniḥ vā aham asmīti abravīt jātaveda vā aham asmīti

The verse describes tad abhyadravat - Agni approached the yakṣa with the intention of finding out who or what it was. The devas had sent Agni because of his great power and knowledge, believing that he could reveal the mystery of this divine being.

Tam abhyavadat ko'sīti - as Agni approached the yakṣa, the yakṣa asked him, "Who are you?" The mysterious being, which represents Brahman, the supreme consciousness, questioned Agni about his identity. This question - "Who are you?" - is not just a simple inquiry but a deeper challenge to the very foundation of Agni's sense of identity, his ego.

Agni responded with pride, "I am Agni." He said it with confidence, emphasizing his identity as Jātaveda, the one who knows everything. Agni was asserting himself, his power, and his role as the fire god, believing that his abilities were sufficient to understand the nature of the yakṣa.

Jātaveda vā aham asmīti—Jātaveda means "the knower of all that is born," referring to Agni's great knowledge and his all-pervading nature. He was stating his pride in being the powerful, all-knowing fire god. This response reveals Agni's sense of self-importance, his belief that his identity and powers made him capable of understanding anything and everything.

This teaches us an important lesson about the limitations of ego and pride. Agni, who represents the power of knowledge and illumination, believed that his abilities were enough to uncover the truth about the yakṣa. However, the supreme reality, Paramaśiva, cannot be understood through pride or the assertion of individuality. The moment we cling to our identities and pride, we create a barrier between ourselves and the realization of the ultimate truth.

The yakṣa, which represents the supreme reality, challenges this notion. It stands as a reminder that the true nature of Brahman cannot be approached with pride or ego. It is only through humility, surrender, and the willingness to drop all false identifications that one can experience the Ultimate.

तस्मिस्त्वयि किं वीर्यमित्यपीदꣳसर्वं दहेयं यदिदं पृथिव्यामिति ॥ ५॥

tasmigstvayi kiṃ vīryamityapīdag sarvaṃ daheyaṃ yadidaṃ pṛthivyāmiti ||5||

The verse continues with the dialogue between Agni and the mysterious yakṣa. Tasmigstvayi kiṃ vīryam iti - the yakṣa asked Agni, "What is your power?" The yakṣa was questioning the extent of Agni's strength. It was as if the Supreme was challenging the confidence and pride of Agni to make him reflect on his own limitations.

Agni responded with pride, apīdam sarvaṃ daheyaṃ yad idaṃ pṛthivyām iti - "I can burn everything that is here on earth." Agni was proud of his power, his ability to burn and destroy all that exists on earth. He was confident in his own strength, believing that his power to consume and transform was the ultimate expression of his greatness.

This verse demonstrates how the ego often exaggerates its abilities, becoming deluded into believing that it is independent and all-powerful. Agni represents not only the element of fire but also knowledge, brilliance, and energy. He believed that his capacity to destroy was his greatness, and he expressed his confidence in front of the yakṣa, not realizing that the yakṣa was beyond anything he could comprehend or influence.

The yakṣa questioning Agni represents the supreme consciousness questioning each of us: "What is your true power?" The only true power is the power that flows through all of existence in Oneness. Without realizing this, any assertion of individual power is incomplete, bound by ego and delusion.

तस्मै तृणं निदधावेतद्दहेति ।

तदुपप्रेयाय सर्वजवेन तन्न शशाक दग्धुं स तत एव निववृते नैतदशकं विज्ञातुं यदेतद्यक्षमिति ॥ ६॥

tasmai tṛṇaṃ nidadhāvetaddaheti |

tadupapreyāya sarvajavena tanna śaśāka dagdhuṃ sa tata eva nivavṛte naitadaśakaṃ vijñātuṃ yadetadyakṣamiti ||6||

tasmai tṛṇaṃ nidadhāvetad daheti - the yakṣa, the mysterious divine being representing Brahman, placed a piece of straw in front of Agni and said, "Burn this." The piece of straw represents a simple challenge, something that Agni, the god of fire, should be able to consume effortlessly. The Ultimate, personified by the yakṣa, was not interested in boasting or proving anything - it simply offered Agni a chance to demonstrate his strength.

Tad upapreyāya sarvajavena tanna śaśāka dagdhuṃ - Agni rushed towards the straw with all his power, with all his intensity, but he could not burn it. Despite his best efforts, the great Agni, who had previously claimed the ability to burn everything on earth, found himself unable to burn even a simple blade of grass placed by the yakṣa.

This represents the humbling of the ego when it comes into contact with the supreme reality. The same Agni who boasted of his limitless power was rendered helpless before this mystery. His inability to burn even a small piece of straw highlights the truth that no individual power is independent.

Agni then withdrew, acknowledging his inability. He could not understand the true nature of the yakṣa, nor could he comprehend the source of its power. Agni, who previously saw himself as all-powerful, was brought to humility when faced with the reality that there is a higher power beyond his comprehension. The mysterious yakṣa was beyond the reach of his understanding, beyond the grasp of his abilities.

Surrender to the divine will, live in humility, and allow the supreme consciousness to work through you. In this surrender lies the key to realizing one's true nature, beyond all limitations of ego and individuality.

अथ वायुमब्रुवन्वायवेतद्विजानीहि किमेतद्यक्षमिति तथेति ॥ ७॥

atha vāyumabruvanvāyavetadvijānīhi kimetadyakṣamiti tatheti ||7||

atha vāyum abruvan vāyu etad vijānīhi kim etad yakṣam iti - after Agni failed to determine the nature of the yakṣa, the devas turned to Vāyu, the god of wind. They asked him, "O Vāyu, find out who this yakṣa is." The devas, even after Agni's inability to comprehend the divine being, still believed in their ability to understand it through their faculties, now turning to the power of Vāyu.

Vāyu is the deity of wind, representing prāṇa, the life force, and the power of movement. The devas thought that perhaps Vāyu, with his immense power to move everything and his all-pervading nature, could successfully uncover the identity of this mysterious yakṣa. The choice to send Vāyu represents the shift from trying to understand the divine mystery through the faculty of fire (knowledge, energy) to the faculty of wind (movement, life force).

After Agni's failure, the devas did not immediately recognize that the mysterious yakṣa was beyond their comprehension. Instead, they persisted, now relying on another power, another strength they possessed, thinking that perhaps Vāyu, with his great abilities, could solve the mystery.

That cannot be comprehended through the powers and abilities of the ego. Whether it is the power of knowledge, energy, or movement, none of these can fully grasp the nature of Brahman. The ego always wants to believe it can understand, conquer, and encompass everything. When one means fails, it simply shifts to another, unwilling to acknowledge its limitations.

तदभ्यद्रवत्तमभ्यवदत्कोऽसीति वायुर्वा अहमस्मीत्यब्रवीन्मातरश्वा वा अहमस्मीति ॥ ८ ॥

tadabhyadravattamabhyavadatko'sīti vāyurvā ahamasmītyabravīnmātariśvā vā ahamasmīti ||8||

Vāyu, the god of wind, approached the yakṣa confidently and came close to it. The yakṣa questioned him, "Who are you?" The question is direct and challenges Vāyu's understanding of his own identity. This question is not merely about his name; it is a challenge to his sense of self, his ego, and his pride.

Vāyu replied with confidence, "I am Vāyu." He identified himself with pride, asserting his power and role. He saw himself as a powerful deity, the force behind movement and life, and he was proud of his strength.

He further said, "I am Mātariśvā." Mātariśvā is another name for Vāyu, meaning "the one who moves in space" or "the one who moves in the mother" (where 'mother' refers to the vastness of the universe). It signifies Vāyu's all-pervasive nature and his ability to move freely in all realms, carrying prāṇa (life force) and energy.

This response by Vāyu reveals his sense of pride and his identification with his own power. He believed that his ability to move everywhere, to be present in all beings as prāṇa, made him capable of understanding and confronting the mysterious yakṣa. Like Agni, Vāyu also approached with the belief that his power was sufficient to comprehend the supreme being before him.

तस्मिँस्त्वयि किं वीर्यमित्यपीदँसर्वमाददीय यदिदं पृथिव्यामिति ॥ ९॥

Tasmimstvayi kiṃ vīryamityapīdam sarvamādadīya yadidaṃ pṛthivyāmiti ||9||

tasmimstvayi kiṃ vīryam iti - the yakṣa asked Vāyu, "What is your power?" The yakṣa, representing the supreme consciousness, challenged Vāyu to explain the extent of his strength. This question is to make Vāyu reflect on his abilities and to see whether he understands the true source of his power. The Ultimate challenges us all to reflect on our sense of capability and realize that all power comes from the divine.

Apīdam sarvam ādadīya yad idaṃ pṛthivyām iti - Vāyu responded with pride, "I can carry away everything on this earth." He was referring to his ability to lift and move anything, to be present everywhere, to blow across the entire earth, and to carry all elements. Vāyu's answer was filled with confidence in his power, his ability to be all-pervading, to move things with force, and to be an essential element in sustaining life.

This verse symbolizes the assertion of individual power, and how the ego becomes attached to the abilities it perceives in itself. Vāyu, the god of wind, represents the life force, prāṇa, which is indeed a mighty power. Without prāṇa, there is no life, no movement, no breath. It is easy for the ego to become proud when it feels that it holds such a fundamental power. Vāyu identified himself with his capacity to move and carry, believing that he had control over all that is material.

तस्मै तृणं निदधावेतदादत्स्वेति तदुपप्रेयाय सर्वजवेन तन्न शशाकादातुं स तत एव निववृते नैतदशकं विज्ञातुं यदेतद्यक्षमिति ॥ १०॥

tasmai tṛṇaṃ nidadhāvetadādatsveti tadupapreyāya sarvajavena tanna śaśākādātuṃ sa tata eva nivavṛte naitadaśakaṃ vijñātuṃ yadetadyakṣamiti ||10||

The yakṣa placed a small blade of grass in front of Vāyu and said, "Take this up." The yakṣa, symbolizing Brahman, gave Vāyu a simple task to demonstrate his strength. The piece of grass represents a simple challenge, just as it did for Agni. It was meant to test Vāyu's belief in his abilities.

Vāyu approached the straw with all his speed, with all his energy. He was determined to demonstrate his power, his ability to move anything, including this small, insignificant blade of grass.

But Vāyu was unable to move the grass. Despite all his power, he found himself powerless before the yakṣa. He could not lift the blade of grass, which symbolized his inability to comprehend or overcome the mystery of the supreme reality.

Realizing his inability, Vāyu withdrew. He acknowledged that he could not understand who or what this yakṣa was. Even though he possessed great power and was the life force (prāṇa) that moved through all beings, he could not understand the nature of the yakṣa. The divine being was beyond his comprehension, beyond the reach of his individual abilities.

When you realize your ego, your small identity is not the doer, you begin to experience the infinite power of the Ultimate flowing through you.

अथेन्द्रमब्रुवन्मघवन्नेतद्विजानीहि किमेतद्यक्षमिति तथेति तदभ्यद्रवत्तस्मात्तिरोदधे ॥ ११॥

athendramabruvanmaghavannetadvijānīhi kimetadyakṣamiti tatheti tadabhyadravattasmāttirodadhe ||11||

After both Agni and Vāyu failed to determine the nature of the yakṣa, the devas decided to send Indra, their king. They said, "O Maghavan"- another name for Indra – "find out who or what this yakṣa is." Indra is the leader of the devas, representing power, authority, and control. They thought that perhaps Indra, with his supreme position and greater strength, would be able to comprehend the mystery of the yakṣa.

Indra responded, "So be it." He agreed to go and investigate the nature of the yakṣa. With confidence in his position and power, he approached the mysterious being. This illustrates how, even after the failures of Agni and Vāyu, the ego of the devas continued to believe that their powers could uncover the supreme reality. They thought that Indra, being their leader and the one with authority over all the other gods, might succeed where the others had failed.

But as Indra approached, the yakṣa disappeared. The supreme reality, represented by the yakṣa, vanished from Indra's sight. It was as if the divine presence chose not to reveal itself to the one who approached with the intent of conquering, understanding, or categorizing it. Indra, the king of the devas, found himself face to face with nothing - he was left with no answers.

The story of Indra's approach teaches us that true realization does not come from power or authority. The moment we approach the divine with the belief that we can comprehend it with our limited identity, it eludes us. The Ultimate cannot be captured, defined, or understood through the faculties of ego and power. It requires complete surrender and the dropping of all attachments to one's identity. The disappearance of the yakṣa also represents the mysterious and elusive nature of Brahman. The divine cannot be confined to any form or concept; it is beyond all limitations. To experience the Self, one must approach with a heart full of surrender, free from pride, and with the willingness to dissolve completely into the unknown.

स तस्मिन्नेवाकाशे स्त्रियमाजगाम बहुशोभमानामुमाँ हैमवतीं ताँहोवाच किमेतद्यक्षमिति ॥ १२॥

|| iti kenopaniṣadi tṛtīyaḥ khaṇḍaḥ ||

In the same space where the yakṣa had disappeared, Indra encountered a divine woman, Umā Haimavatī. Umā, also known as Pārvatī, is the daughter of the Himalayas (Haimavatī), and She is radiant, full of beauty and grace. She embodies divine wisdom and is the consort of Paramaśiva. Her presence signifies the arrival of true knowledge and grace in the life of a sincere seeker.

Indra approached Her and asked, "Who was that yakṣa?" In his humility, Indra realized that his individual power and authority were insufficient to comprehend the supreme reality. He sought the guidance of Umā, recognizing that only through divine wisdom could the mystery of the yakṣa be understood.

Umā, Parāśakti, represents the inner awakening that happens when you surrender and open yourself to the Consciousness.

It is through Her guidance that the mystery of the yakṣa can be understood.

Umā is also symbolic of the feminine energy, the nurturing aspect of consciousness that brings illumination and guides the seeker toward the truth. The divine feminine is essential in the spiritual journey, as it represents the compassion, wisdom, and grace needed to transcend the ego and experience the Ultimate.

Now the 4th Part of Kenopaniṣad

सा ब्रह्मेति होवाच ब्रह्मणो वा एतद्विजये महीयध्वमिततो हैव विदाञ्चकार ब्रह्मेति ॥ १॥

sā brahmeti hovāca brahmaṇo vā etadvijaye mahīyadhvamiti tato haiva vidāñcakāra brahmeti ||1||

Umā said to Indra, "That was Brahman." The divine being that appeared to the devas was none other than Brahman, the supreme reality. Umā, the embodiment of divine knowledge, revealed to Indra that the mysterious yakṣa they were unable to comprehend was indeed Brahman. This revelation signifies that true understanding of the supreme reality can only come through the grace of the divine and the guidance of higher wisdom.

Umā explained, "It was through Brahman's victory that you should feel honored." She was telling the devas that the victory they had celebrated was not theirs alone; it was the victory of Brahman, the supreme consciousness, working through them. The success of the devas in their endeavors was not due to their individual power or abilities, but was possible only because of the grace of the Brahman manifesting through them. The devas should feel honored and humbled by the fact that it was Brahman, the supreme consciousness, that worked through them, granting them victory.

Upon hearing these words from Umā, Indra understood that it was indeed Brahman. It was only after letting go of their pride, their attempts to understand Brahman through ego-driven means, that the devas could truly realize that the mysterious yakṣa was none other than the supreme consciousness.

तस्माद्वा एते देवा अतितरामिवान्यान्देवान्यदग्निर्वायुरिन्द्रस्ते ह्येनन्नेदिष्ठं पस्पर्शुस्ते ह्येनत्प्रथमो विदाञ्चकार ब्रह्मेति ॥ २॥

tasmādvā ete deva atitarāmivānyāndevānyadagnirvāyurindraste hyenannediṣṭhaṃ pasparśuste hyenatprathamo vidāñcakāra brahmeti ||2||

Thus, these gods, namely Agni, Vāyu, and Indra, are considered to have surpassed other gods. This verse highlights the significance of these three deities among all the other devas because of their encounter with Brahman, the mysterious yakṣa. They came closer to understanding the supreme reality, and through this direct experience, they transcended their earlier state of ignorance and moved beyond the rest of the gods.

Among them, Indra was the first to come to the understanding that the mysterious yakṣa was indeed Brahman. While Agni and Vāyu approached with their sense of pride and identity, Indra moved beyond that, seeking knowledge from Umā, who embodied divine wisdom. It was through Umā's grace that Indra was able to realize that it was Brahman, the supreme consciousness, who had appeared before them.

तस्माद्वा इन्द्रोऽतितरामिवान्यान्देवान्स ह्येनन्नेदिष्ठं पस्पर्श स ह्येनत्प्रथमो विदाञ्चकार ब्रह्मेति ॥ ३॥

tasmādvā indro'titarāmivānyāndevānsa hyenannediṣṭhaṃ pasparśa sa hyenatprathamo vidāñcakāra brahmeti ||3||

Among all the devas, Indra is considered to be the one who went beyond the others in his efforts to understand the supreme reality. He is recognized for his sincerity in seeking the truth and his willingness to let go of his ego.

Indra came the closest to comprehending the yakṣa. Unlike Agni and Vāyu, who tried to understand the supreme reality through their own powers and abilities, Indra approached with a sense of humility and openness to receive divine wisdom. This humility allowed him to come closer to realizing Brahman, the supreme consciousness. Indra's encounter with the yakṣa represents the turning point where the ego begins to dissolve, allowing the seeker to experience the truth.

तस्यैष आदेशो यदेतद्विद्युतो व्यद्युतदा इतीन् न्यमीमिषदा इत्यधिदैवतम् ॥ ४॥

tasyaiṣa ādeśo yadetadvidyuto vyadyutadā itīn nyamīmiṣadā ityadhidaivatam ||4||

The Upaniṣad uses analogies to convey the nature of Brahman. The experience of Brahman is sudden and instantaneous, like a flash of lightning. Just as lightning illuminates the entire sky for a brief moment before vanishing, so too is the experience of Brahman - brilliant, instantaneous, and all-encompassing. Another analogy is the blinking of an eye, which is similarly fleeting and momentary. In the same way, these moments provide a glimpse of the infinite, a taste of the true nature of existence, but they are not something that can be controlled or held onto by the ego. The blinking of an eye represents how brief and subtle the experience of Brahman can be. It is not something that you can hold onto with effort; it is a spontaneous revelation, one that requires complete openness and receptivity. The supreme consciousness reveals itself when there is no resistance, no expectation, and no attachment—just pure being.

Understand that the realization of Brahman is not something that can be controlled or possessed by the ego. It comes in moments of grace, like a flash of lightning or the blink of an eye. Be ready, be open, and let go of all attachments. In those moments of surrender, you will experience the true nature of Paramaśiva, beyond time, beyond thought, and beyond all limitations.

अथाध्यात्मं यद्देतद्गच्छतीव च मनोऽनेन चैतदुपस्मरत्यभीक्ष्णँ सङ्कल्पः ॥ ५॥

athādhyātmaṃ yaddetadgacchatīva ca mano'nena caitadupasmaratyabhīkṣṇam saṅkalpaḥ ||5||

As for the adhyātma, the individual aspect, Brahman is like the mind that appears to move swiftly. The verse gives an analogy for the nature of Brahman as experienced internally. It is like the mind that moves rapidly from one thought to another, from one experience to the next. The mind is quick, subtle, and has the ability to move effortlessly between different states. This movement of the mind represents the presence of Brahman within each of us - constantly moving, constantly present, yet beyond grasp.

By this mind, one remembers continuously. The nature of Brahman is such that it exists as the very substratum of the mind, allowing one to continually contemplate and experience the divine.

It is the saṅkalpa, the intention or resolve, that plays a significant role here. The power of saṅkalpa is what drives the mind toward different goals and aspirations. In the context of Brahman, it is the inner resolve, the unwavering intention to know the truth, that helps the seeker stay connected to the supreme consciousness. When the mind is directed towards Brahman with the intention to realize the Self, it moves toward the ultimate goal of enlightenment.

तद्ध तद्वनं नाम तद्वनमित्युपासितव्यं स य एतदेवं वेदाभि हैनꣳसर्वाणि भूतानि संवाञ्छन्ति ॥ ६॥

taddha tadvanaṃ nāma tadvanamityupāsitavyaṃ sa ya etadevaṃ vedābhi hainag sarvāṇi bhūtāni saṃvāñchanti ||6||

That indeed is called the "object of adoration." The word vana here means something to be adored, loved, or sought after. Brahman, the supreme consciousness, is the ultimate goal, the highest truth that is worthy of being meditated upon and adored.

Brahman should be meditated upon as "that which is to be loved and adored." The verse instructs us that one should practice upāsana, the act of meditative worship, on Brahman with the feeling that it is the most beloved, the ultimate essence. The term tadvanam signifies not just the greatness of Brahman but also the loving relationship that one should cultivate towards the supreme consciousness. It is not enough to know about Brahman intellectually; one must develop a deep, loving connection with it, recognizing it as the source of all love and existence.

He who knows this truth in this way, who understands that Brahman is the ultimate object of love and adoration, and meditates on it with devotion, achieves a special state. The realization of Brahman is not merely an intellectual exercise; it is a deep, experiential understanding that arises from devotion, surrender, and love.

All beings desire to be in the presence of such a realized soul. When someone understands and experiences Brahman in this way, all beings are naturally drawn to them. This is because the person who realizes Brahman embodies the essence of pure love, bliss, and oneness with all of creation. Such a person radiates peace, harmony, and compassion, and all beings feel a natural attraction towards that energy.

उपनिषदं भो ब्रूहीत्युक्ता त उपनिषद्ब्राह्मीं वाव त उपनिषदमब्रूमेति ॥ ७॥

upaniṣadaṃ bho brūhītyuktā ta upaniṣadbrāhmīṃ vāva ta upaniṣadamabrūmeti ||7||

The disciples request, "Please, teach us the secret knowledge (Upaniṣad) of Brahman."

It is knowledge that is imparted from the teacher to the disciple, and it leads to the dissolution of ignorance and the awakening to the truth of Consciousness. The disciples are humbly asking for this sacred knowledge that will guide them to enlightenment.

The guru, having been asked, conveys the sacred teachings of the Upaniṣad, which are related to Brahman. The guru imparts the essential truth about Brahman, which is the core knowledge of the Upaniṣads. This knowledge is not merely intellectual but is a transmission from guru to disciple as an experiential transfer through initiation.

The Upaniṣads are not just texts to be read but are meant to be lived and experienced through guidance, practice, and deep contemplation. The true Upaniṣad is realized when the seeker, through practice, contemplation, and surrender, transcends the ego and experiences the ultimate Oneness with the Whole. This is the sacred knowledge that liberates, the knowledge that dissolves all ignorance and reveals the true nature of the Self.

For the realization of Brahman, the foundations are austerity (tapas), self-restraint (dama), and righteous actions (karma).

the Vedas, all their limbs, and truth (satyam) are the abode of That.

Realizing Brahman leads to the dissolution of all negative tendencies, karmic burdens, and impurities of the mind. The word pāpmānam refers to the limitations and ignorance that bind the soul to the cycle of birth and death. When one attains the knowledge of Brahman, they become free from these limitations, as all ignorance is dispelled by the light of truth.

Katha Upaniṣad - The First And Foremost Document About Death

Kathopaniṣad is the last 8 sections of Taittirīya Saṃhitā, Kṛṣṇa Yajurveda. It has 119 verses. When Śrī Rāmacandra lists all the 108 Upaniṣads in Muktikopaniṣad to Hanumān, Rāma lists this Upaniṣad as the third Upaniṣad.

The main subject of the Upaniṣad is death. This Upaniṣad is not a commandment of someone who realized God. No! Even if you realized God, a little bit of it will come from your Enlightenment experience and your brain masala. There is a possibility for corruption, misrepresentation, manipulation or missing it.

So understand, this Upaniṣad contains the direct words from a being who is the Lord of Death. Understand, it is directly from Him. Do not even have doubts about the authenticity of the Upaniṣads, especially this Upaniṣad. This is the first and foremost document about death.

Yama means the natural flow of existence. Dharma means the natural law of existence. Yama–Dharma is the embodiment of natural flow and natural law. Understand: flow is spontaneous; law is systematic. He is the Lord of both - that is why He is called Yama–Dharma Rāja. How everything flows by its very nature - that is yama. The law that governs that flow in life -that is dharma. The Lord of natural flow and natural law (Yama–Dharma Rāja) directly speaks to a brāhmaṇa boy, Nachiketa, the hero of this Upaniṣad. One of the remarkable facts about this teaching is that the Upaniṣad is preserved and kept alive in the Śaiva tradition. Consider the subtle communal nuance: a Śaivite teaching a brāhmaṇa is almost like Kālābhairava removing the head of Brahmā or Vīrabhadra confronting Dakṣa - yet the Upaniṣad survived beyond ancient sectarian conflicts.

This Upaniṣad is taught by one who is at once most mysterious and most constantly available. Understand the paradox: what is continuously experienced cannot be merely mysterious; what is merely mysterious cannot be continuously experienced. He is simultaneously continuously available, continuously perceived, and yet remains a profound mystery - that is Death. Who is constantly perceived cannot remain a mystery; who is a great mystery cannot be perceived continuously. Here stands the greatest paradox - constant availability and mystery. Any moment, anywhere, anyone can perceive Him. Anyone who perceives becomes "body."

The largest cremation ground in the world is Maṇikārṇikā Ghaṭ. On average it burns about 350 bodies every day; on special days the number rises to 500. In Vārāṇasī, if you casually walk a street and see anything larger than a suitcase being carried, covered with cloth, be certain: it is a dead body.

Even though death is an everyday occurrence and something we repeatedly witness, it remains a profound mystery. Seeing the bodies of those we love after their passing reminds us of death's mysterious nature. This very mystery often diverts our attention and prevents deep contemplation - and that diversion is one of humanity's greatest delusions.

Indeed, many devote enormous energy to exploring outer space and the cosmos, yet they may avoid delving into the deepest mystery that walks among us: Death - the greatest magician. He is ever-present, choosing and taking people, playing through our lives and even our intellects; yet most of us cannot look into His face.

We have penetrated planets, stars, and galaxies; we have explored so much - but this Death, who constantly moves among us, remains unfathomable. He does not allow most of us to gaze into His eyes. The few who dare to look - who refuse to be distracted by His spectacle and drama - become the great ones: Buddha and Śiva.

Buddha did one thing: when He saw the death of someone, He decided to look straight into the eyes of Death and asked, "Who are you? Until I know, I will not move away. This is my first priority." But notice something interesting. He had three questions: Why old age? Why sickness? Why death? He found the solution, but all three still exist in the world. Even now, there is old age, sickness, and death! Then why do we say He discovered the solution? Perhaps He found the solution for Himself. Which means, each one of us has to look into the eyes of Death for ourselves.

And here lies the secret: look into His eyes when He is staring at someone else. Don't wait to look into His eyes only when He stares at you directly. When He is staring at another, it is easier to stare back into His eyes. Yama–Dharma was staring at the old man, and Buddha seized that moment to stare into His eyes. So, jump into Death, dive into Death, and discover the secrets of Death when He is staring at someone else. Don't wait until He fixes His gaze on you. At that moment, you may not have the strength to stare back. Fools are those who wait until Death looks at them and then plan to look back.

Stare into His eyes now. Demystify Him, decode Him, understand Him while He is busy with another. For when you take the first step, when you stare into His eyes before He turns towards you, then when He finally does look at you, His eyes will be most compassionate. If you wait until He looks at you first and only then dare to stare back, it will be terrorizing.

So the question is: Who takes the first step? Will you stare into His eyes first, or will you wait until He stares into yours?

His gaze - whether compassionate or terrorizing - depends entirely on who stares first. Kāla decides the quality of His look. If you take the first step and look into His eyes, His response will be compassion. If you wait for Him to stare at you first, His response will be terror. Never wait. It is foolish to let Death look at you before you dare to look back.

In this Upaniṣad, Yama–Dharma reveals His most compassionate teacher-dimension. And it is astonishing: this is the first recorded instance in history where Death grants the boon of life - completely opposite to His very profession.

Think of it this way: for a man whose only livelihood is his cow shed, if you take away his savings, he may not weep. But if you take away two liters of milk, he will pour two liters of tears. For a farmer, the loss of a few sacks of paddy can feel like his very life is destroyed. Whatever one constantly lives with, one becomes deeply attached to - that becomes the highest value.

Here stands the Lord who always takes and never gives: the Lord of Death. Only when His duty itself was challenged did He bend - for Mārkaṇḍeya and for Sāvitrī. Those are rare exceptions. But here, no one threatens Him. Out of sheer compassion alone, He gives life back to Naciketa. This time, He is not terrorizing; He appears as a loving and compassionate teacher.

In all of human history, this is the only scripture where Death is shown listening - where Naciketa makes Death respect him. Death becomes uncompromising Yama, the embodiment of the natural flow (yama) and natural law (dharma), yet also descends as Guru, as compassionate God, blessing a Brahmin child.

This Upaniṣad is more than philosophy - it is the Book of Death for Hindus and all who follow the Hindu way. If you want to know Death, here is the text. It is not just about dying; it is about understanding Death itself through Veda.

The beauty of Death is this: you must look into His eyes yourself. No one else can do it for you. And this is the great freedom - because no one else can, you are utterly free. With no bondage, no crutches, no dependence, you are completely naked, utterly liberated, in nirvāṇa with Yama Dharma.

The first taste of liberation comes the moment you dare to stare into His eyes. And the secret is simple: it is easier to look into His eyes while He is looking elsewhere. When you stare at Him first, His attention will naturally shift toward you. Then His gaze will be compassionate. He will ask you softly, "What is it you want?" But if you wait for Him to stare at you first and only then dare to stare back, His answer will be hard: "Shut up."

When your time has not yet come, even Death cannot close your eyes. But once your time has arrived and He fixes His gaze upon you, if you try then to stare back, He will simply say, "Shut." For at that moment, the decision rests entirely in His hands. That is why you must not wait for His time - choose your time. Look into His eyes before He looks into yours. The very act of daring to look into the eyes of Death awakens His hidden dimension as Teacher, as Master.

The story of this Upaniṣad gives us a profound context to understand the deeper truths of life and death. To explore Death through the Kaṭhopaniṣad is to discover a sweetness, a depth, an enlightenment that is at once transformative and liberating.

Thou Shalt Not Die!

Understanding the mystery of death is declared the first and foremost quality for a Hindu. The Kaṭhopaniṣad insists that even an intellectual grasp of this truth is enough to dissolve all fears around death. The first commandment for Hindus can be said in one line: "Thou shall not die!" It is a reminder that those who refuse to contemplate death while alive are denying themselves the most essential part of life's journey.

Death is beyond the words of frustrated poets, beyond the speculations of constipated philosophers, beyond the formulas of brain-dead intellectuals. It stands untouched by all of these. That is why the Lord of Death Himself takes the questions on Death directly from a child. The very fact that He can explain it to a child shows that this truth does not rely on propositions and suppositions. Understand this clearly: anything that is realized without the support of propositions or suppositions is universal truth.

Modern mathematicians and scientists in the West have invented constants, infinities, formulas, and theories. But what do they really mean? Their truths always hide behind an undefined "constant" or an indescribable "infinity." Such truths are only masks - appearances of truth - sustained by assumptions.

But in the Hindu tradition, truth needs no assumptions. Incarnations appear again and again to strip away the propositions and suppositions that creep into spiritual knowledge over time. Their work is to burn away these coverings and reveal the naked reality as it is. The truths of the Upaniṣads do not lean on assumptions. They stand by themselves, self-luminous. That is why even a child can ask, and a child can understand.

Yama was stripped naked by the questions of Naciketa. Naciketa pulled down the very identity of Yama, forcing Him to stand without refuge, without the option of retreating into any green room. When something can be questioned, analyzed, and presented without propositions or suppositions, that alone is reality.

Here, Yama Dharma - the Lord of Death - stands naked before Naciketa, without the coverings of His inner image, outer image, others' image, or life image. He stands exactly as He is. Through this encounter, Yama removes all the layers of assumptions and coverings draped over the idea of Death and reveals the naked truth, the reality of existence, as presented in this Upaniṣad.

Go Beyond Death And Dying

The Kathopaniṣad is one of the most revered scriptures of the Hindu tradition, a dialogue between Naciketa, the young seeker, and Yama, the Lord of Death.

Interestingly, the Kathopaniṣad is considered authorless. Even though Yama imparts the knowledge to Naciketa, he himself is reading from the Akashic Records—the cosmic library that holds all truths of existence. These teachings are not personal words, but eternal revelations flowing through him. Because of this, the wisdom of the Kathopaniṣad transcends any single author and stands forever as a guide to those who seek to understand the mysteries of life and death.

Death is the very subject of this Upaniṣad. Understand: death terrifies because it signals the end of the known. All that you cling to - people, wealth, good, bad, identity - everything known comes to a standstill at death. That is why you fear it. But pause and reflect: are you really fulfilled with what is known? Are you ready to give it up and move beyond into rejuvenation? Neither happy with the known nor courageous enough to transcend it, you are stuck in a painful Catch-22. This state is not living - it is suspended animation. Understanding death liberates you from this trap.

In truth, you know only two states: death and dying. Death is where the perception of the known ends. Dying is where the same perception continues to torture you.

Here lies the secret: when Death is staring at someone else, dare to stare into His eyes. Even if His attention is elsewhere, your gaze will pull His eyes toward you. That meeting of vision will be the most beautiful moment - slow, spacious, intimate. You will have time to breathe, to align, to settle into the presence of the One you are facing. But if you wait for Him to stare at you first, the intensity will be unbearable. You will not be able to meet His gaze.

Therefore, before Death decides to look into your eyes, decide to look into His. His staring at you is death. You staring at Him, while He looks elsewhere, is dying.

The process of dying and rebirthing is more available to your awareness. Your very bio-memory cherishes and carries those transitions, allowing deep transformation. Enlightenment is nothing but transcending the known while still alive - entering the ultimate truth without waiting for physical death. It is not about a change of location at the moment of death, but a radical shift of perception here and now.

While you are living, you must go through birth, death, and rebirth. Your bio-memory should enjoy this transformation, your muscle-memory should enjoy this transformation. Only then will you taste Enlightenment, only then will you taste Jīvanmukti. Yes, if you die in Vārāṇasī, you will attain liberation. But remember: the one who receives liberation at the moment of death in Vārāṇasī was always liberated. You are Consciousness.

The one bound in suffering - whose bio-memory, mind, and body are caught in bondage - will simply be destroyed. Liberation is not given to bondage. Liberation is the fragrance of freedom that was already alive in you. Understand: the goal of Hinduism is not Videhamukti (liberation after death). That is too small a goal. Too easy to achieve. Just live in Vārāṇasī and when you die there, liberation happens. But even that is not so simple. Kālabhairava does not allow people to die in Vārāṇasī casually. People who live their entire life in Vārāṇasī may step outside the boundary for a small ailment, die there, and miss it. At the same time, someone who has never set foot in Vārāṇasī may take their very first flight, and the moment the plane enters the boundary of Kāśī, they drop the body and attain liberation.

This shows: death itself is not a straight and simple game. There is a powerful energy intelligence – Kālabhairava - that decides who dies within the sacred geography. Viśvanātha does not allow anyone and everyone to die in Vārāṇasī. Therefore, understand: it is not about geography, but about the readiness of your consciousness. The true lakṣya - the goal of human life - is not Videhamukti, but Jīvanmukti: liberation while you are alive.

To live Jīvanmukti is to stare at Death and see that dying is happening in you every moment. What you cling to is leaving you. What you fear is approaching you. What was close moves away. What you resisted comes near. This is the everyday dance of dying. Anyone who consciously embraces this process sees that Kāla is working on you every single moment.

Embrace this transformation. Let every death be conscious. Let every rebirth be conscious. That is when you realize: true liberation is not at the grave, but in the gaze. Not at the funeral pyre, but in the fire of awareness while you are still alive.

The goal is Jīvanmukti. To live Enlightenment, here and now.

There is so much powerlessness and powerlessness-based focus on Death. But if you turn your attention to dying, the powerlessness is removed from Death. If you are waiting for Death to stare at you, you are waiting for powerlessness to overpower you. If you dare to stare at Him while He is staring at somebody else, you strip Death of powerlessness.

By consciously engaging with the process of dying—by letting go of attachments, by facing your fears - you transform your relationship with Death. You reclaim your power. You step into Jīvanmukti, Living Enlightenment. “Thou Shall Not Die” - that is the first and foremost commandment for Hindus. Embrace life fully, enter the process of inner transformation, and strive for Jīvanmukti. This is the true essence and goal of human existence.

Fools are those who die. Stupid are those who plan for liberation after death. Hypocrites are those who never look into the eyes of Death while alive. And criminals are those who distract others from Death with shallow, shady lifestyles. Any lifestyle that diverts your attention away from Death and the possibility of transcending it is shallow, stupid, hypocritical, and blind. Criminals are those who promote such lifestyles, keeping you away from the only real need of life - the ability to look into the eyes of Death and go beyond.

The Upaniṣad itself warns: the blind leading the blind both fall into the ditch. Blindly following without clarity or awareness is a guaranteed fall. Seek vision. Seek wisdom. Seek Truth. Do not be led by the blind. Do not be distracted by shallow theologies and cheap lifestyles that pull you away from the soul's original need. The true need of your being is to face Death - to stare at Death before He stares at you. If you wait until He looks at you, you will only be terrified. If you look into His eyes first, you will be liberated.

This is the courageous path. This is the only real path. Confront Death, transcend Death, and claim Jīvanmukti - Living Enlightenment. Only then is the purpose of your existence fulfilled.

The Upaniṣad uses the potent word dhīraḥ - one who has the courage to stare at Death before Death stares at him. A dhīraḥ is the one who confronts Kāla with open eyes and does not wait to be terrorized. If you wait for Death to fix his gaze on you and then try to stare back, you will only close your eyes and give up. Closing your eyes at that moment is surrendering to cowardice. Do not be a coward. Be a dhīraḥ.

Embrace the courage of a dhīraḥ: face Death with openness and a steady heart. In doing so you transcend fear and move toward jīvanmukti - living liberation - the highest aim the Upaniṣad repeatedly insists upon. This Upaniṣad is unusually fierce about courage and boldness. Other Upaniṣads speak in tones of maṅgala, cinmaya, chidambaram, and īśa - soft, luminous terms. The Kāṭhopaniṣad is different: it speaks insistently of courage, boldness, authenticity.

Words like śraddhā, viveka, and dhīrāḥ appear prominently here; some of these emphases are first recorded in Sanskrit literature in this very Upaniṣad. Perhaps that blunt insistence on courage comes because Yama is portrayed with a Śaiva intensity rather than a purely Brahmanical coolness. It took a Śaivite voice to speak so directly about daring, about standing naked before Reality.

The narrative also shows Yama's extraordinary integrity. When he attempted to take Mārkaṇḍeya's life, Mahādeva intervened. Yama's response is a model of utter surrender and fidelity to duty. He says, in essence: "O Prabhu, You ordained me to maintain the flow and law of life. If You intervene, who am I to question? I surrender even my own life at Your feet." That surrender is not weakness; it is the highest form of commitment - courage married to authenticity.

Mahādeva receives that surrender, reprograms the situation, and restores Yama with a subtle exception: Yama will continue to uphold the natural flow and law of life, except for those devotees specially protected by Mahādeva. Observe Yama's sincerity: even when Mahādeva intervenes, he does not resist; he simply bows to the higher will and offers his life back in obedience to the law he was given.

This episode reveals the Upaniṣad's core teaching: courage, integrity, and surrender are not contradictory. The dhīraḥ is simultaneously brave and utterly surrendered - brave enough to stare Death in the face, surrendered enough to let the higher Truth decide. That is the measure of true spiritual maturity this text celebrates.

So, Death was killed once in Thirukadaiyur. Death was killed (Yama was killed), then Mahādeva reprograms and gives Him life saying, "Yes, You will maintain the flow of life (Yama) and law of life (Dharma) by exempting My devotees."

Understand the profound significance here: even Death surrenders to the supreme will of Mahādeva. This exemplifies ultimate dedication and authenticity in fulfilling one's cosmic role while honoring divine intervention.

न मे भक्त प्रणश्यति

na me bhakta praṇaśyati

"My devotees never perish"

Understand, this profound truth assures that those who surrender to the Divine and live in alignment with cosmic principles are eternally protected. Mahādeva's grace ensures that His devotees transcend the cycle of birth and death, attaining liberation and eternal bliss. Embrace this assurance with deep faith and devotion, knowing that true surrender leads to ultimate protection and enlightenment.

This same vow, which Kṛṣṇa repeats in the Gītā, arises from the very space of Śivoham. Whatever Kṛṣṇa declared in that state became the Gītā itself. Viṣṇu, as per the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, took twenty-four incarnations, and in every one of them He worshipped Mahādeva. In all those incarnations He performed Śiva pūjā, and the Śivālayas He established remain even today.

As Kapila, He installed Śivaliṅgas in at least three places: one at the Mahānirvāṇī Pīṭha, one at Tirupati, and another in Madhya Pradesh. In Tirumala–Tirupati, which was one of His tapas-sthalīs, there is a temple below the hills dedicated to Kapileśvara Svāmī. That Śivaliṅga was installed and worshipped by Him. Nearby flows Kapila Tīrtha, a waterfall where He bathed. Kapila lived in Tirumala–Tirupati and consecrated that space with His worship of Mahādeva.

Across incarnations, Viṣṇu lived as a Śiva-bhakta. Even the great akhāḍās, though founded by Viṣṇu's incarnations, remain Śaivite in their devotion. The founders may be of Viṣṇu's line, but the deity they worship is Śiva.

For example:

Jūnā Akhāḍā: Founded by Dattātreya, considered a Viṣṇu incarnation as per the Bhāgavata Purāṇa, yet the deity worshipped is Śiva.

Mahānirvāṇī Akhāḍā: Founded by Kapila Ṛṣi, also an intense devotee of Śiva.

Thus, many akhāḍās may trace their origin to Viṣṇu's manifestations, but the current of worship flows always toward Śiva.

As Śrī Rāma, He consecrated Śivaliṅgas at Rāmanagara, Bidadi, and Rāmeśvaram. When He lived in Rāmanagara with Sītā, He encountered Kākāsura—the demon who came as a crow to disturb Sītā. Rāma slew him, but to cleanse that karma He installed and worshipped a Śivaliṅga there. Thus arose the temple of Rāmeśvara Svāmī in Rāmanagara. Even today, no crows fly over that place. A vast forest thrives there with countless birds, yet not a single crow is seen. Such is the impact of divine action - that nature itself bends to the sanctity of dharma. The presence of Rāmeśvara Svāmī stands as testimony to Rāma's devotion and the sanctity of that land.

Yama Dharma - Lord of the flow of life and the law of life, Yama-Niyama, Yama and Dharma. Whoever dares to stare at Death before He stares at them is a Śiva-bhakta. To be a devotee of Śiva is not merely ritual - it means doing what He does, living what His very being is. Śaivism trains you to stare into Death while you are alive. You are never allowed to turn away or be distracted from Death until you are liberated.

Embracing the principles of Yama and Niyama prepares you to face the ultimate truth – death - with courage and awareness. By living in alignment with these principles, you embody the essence of Śiva, transcending fear and moving towards liberation. This unwavering focus on confronting and transcending death leads to Jīvanmukti - living enlightenment - and fulfills the highest purpose of human existence.

That is why the sacred ash (bhasma) is given such importance. Sacred ash is the symbol of death, the symbol of dying, the reminder that everything ultimately becomes this. From the time you wake up until you go to bed, before eating, after eating, before drinking, after drinking, before sneezing, after sneezing - at every turn of life - you are asked to apply bhasma. Why? So that you never forget: this is where everything ends.

Let your attention remain on death until you are liberated. The good news is, if you put your attention on death, you will be liberated. The great news is, you don't have to do it your whole life. Just a few days of uncluttered, undiverted attention on death is enough to awaken you into liberation. This is the power of the practice. By applying sacred ash, by constantly reminding yourself of impermanence, you dissolve attachment to the temporary and awaken to the eternal. This focused contemplation naturally leads to Mukti - ultimate liberation.

The first and foremost commandment for human beings - not only Hindus but all humanity - is: "Thou shall not die."And even before that: "Thou shall not be born." If the mistake of birth has already happened, at least make sure you do not die, so that you are not caught in being reborn.

If you stare at death while you are still living, your bio-memory and muscle-memory begin to transform. They stop resisting life and start celebrating life. Transformation is not a burden; it is like sipping a cup of fine tea or coffee. Transformation, enlightenment, liberation - all these are meant to be tasted, enjoyed, celebrated while you are still in the body.

Celebrate this journey with trust and dedication. Know that every moment of sincere turning towards death is a step toward enlightenment and liberation. But it is the nature of human beings today - especially in the modern day, raised with arrogance and ego as survival tools - to resist receiving. When something is given, or even when you are told it is given, the ego immediately protests: "What, I can't earn it? Who are you to give me?" That false sense of humiliation turns into anger, and anger into violence.

People are even ready to die for their beliefs - not for reality, but for what they believe as reality. Understand, this resistance is not strength; it comes from deep-seated patterns of insecurity and self-doubt. Grace is offered, but instead of embracing it, the ego feels challenged and lashes out, just to prove it does not need to receive.

Recognize this pattern within yourself. Break free from it. Receive with humility, without resistance. Embrace the gifts of transformation and enlightenment with openness. Grace does not humiliate - it liberates. The willingness to receive with gratitude is the beginning of transcending limiting beliefs and aligning with the higher truth.

Understand this: your reluctance to change does not come from the outside world; it comes from deep-rooted patterns and beliefs that you cling to tightly. Instead of choosing transformation and liberation, you hold on to your limited perceptions, your borrowed truths, your imagined securities. This is the very prison of your being. Break free from this. Embrace the possibility of change. Open yourself to new realities through spiritual practices and inner work. Only then does true growth happen. Only then does the fragrance of enlightenment begin to flower within you.

The teachings of the Kathopaniṣad are not just philosophy; they are a mirror. They guide you to face death directly, to stand naked in front of it without fear, without pretense. When you confront and comprehend the reality of death, all illusions drop. Fear dissolves. You move into ultimate freedom. This confrontation with death is not destruction; it is transformation. It is the doorway to a deeper understanding of life itself. By passing through this profound process, you begin to see both life and death as they are - not as threats, but as truths. When you allow this process, you align yourself with the ultimate truths of the Kathopaniṣad. And that alignment leads you naturally to liberation, to enlightenment.

Embrace this opportunity with an open heart and open mind. Do not hold back. Let the words of Yama, the courage of Naciketa, and the vision of the ṛṣis enter into your very bio-memory. Allow yourself to fully experience and integrate these powerful teachings. By understanding and embracing these dimensions within yourself, you too can realize the secrets of life and death.

Flow And Law Of Your Life

Constant dying is happening to all of us. Every moment, something that you thought was "you" is leaving you. If you approach this constant dying violently, arrogantly, or negatively, it becomes pain and suffering. But if you approach it with passive listening, with openness, with receptivity, then every dying becomes a doorway to transformation. By your very nature, you are Living Consciousness. Yet, for the sake of convenience in your day-to-day life, you frame yourself into certain ideas, identities, and ideologies. These frames are useful only in the external world.

If there is a fire in this hall, you must run out. That framework is perfect. If there is an earthquake, you must go to open space. That framework is perfect. These frameworks, rules, and understandings are useful in the outer world. But the tragedy begins when you start building such frameworks for your inner self. At the age of seven, the first time you felt powerless, the way you responded to that powerlessness becomes your internal framework. Then, until the age of seventy-nine, every time you feel powerless, you respond in the same way. That is a bad framework, an unconscious bondage.

Understand the difference. External frameworks are good - because matter functions by law. Matter has no freedom, no flow. It is already dead. It functions only based on certain rules, on Dharma - the law of life.

But you are not just matter. You are a junction of consciousness and matter (cit-jaḍa-granthi). You carry both Dharma - the law of life, and Yama - the flow of life.

For example: if you drink poison, your body will die. That is Dharma, the law. But Yama-the flow of life-is your ability to excite yourself, enthuse yourself, awaken joy in yourself at any moment. That flow is freedom. That flow is Consciousness.

Dead matter has only Dharma-the law of life. Conscious beings, human beings, can play in both: the law and the flow. But unfortunately, most people collapse into Dharma alone. They mistake themselves for dead matter, binding themselves in rules, structures, patterns, forgetting the flow of life.

The truth of Yama Dharma is this: Yama is the flow of life, the spontaneous joy, the unbound expansion. Dharma is the law of life, the necessary framework by which matter exists. Human life is the meeting point of both. The greatness of being human is that you can choose. You can live only by Dharma, like dead matter. Or you can awaken Yama-the flow of life-and allow Consciousness to shine.

All your pain, all your suffering, comes from one fundamental mistake: you think the flow of life has to be forced into the law of life. You confuse Yama with Dharma. You always feel that the law of life is boring - because it is boring when applied where it doesn't belong. Dharma, the law of life, exists to deal with matter. There is a part of you which is matter, and for that, Dharma is useful. But Consciousness is not matter. Consciousness needs to be lived, remembered, and celebrated in the flow of life, in Yama.

Even food, the sweetest joy, becomes boring when cognized only through the law of life. Many wealthy youth, born with silver spoons, destroy themselves in middle age for this very reason. They have flown across the world for food, drunk the rarest liquors, taken drugs, had countless relationships. They exhaust everything material and then collapse into boredom. Finally, they feel suicide is the only "new" thing left to do.

Understand this clearly: the law of life is good as long as you deal with matter. But if you project it onto Consciousness, life becomes a dull repetition. No work is the same, no day is the same. Yet society conditions you to believe that every Monday to Friday is the same. Systems reduce you into numbers. Schools, offices, governments - all of them try to push you into Dharma alone, the law of life, making you forget Yama, the flow of life. That is why office feels boring, why work feels tiring. Not because of the work, but because of your cognition. You are trained to see it as repetitive law, instead of flowing life.

Celebration comes only from Yama, the flow of life. Understanding Dharma is useful; it makes external life easier. But celebration, freshness, and enthusiasm come only from Yama. It is the unconsciousness of society that makes you feel your very life is governed only by Dharma. No! Life is Yama. Life is flow. Life is Consciousness.

Look into where you have frozen yourself. Break all those frozen parts - this is what it means to stare at Death. Thou shall not freeze your life by mistaking Yama for Dharma. Thou shall not make your life boring by imposing law where flow is needed.

Yama is like the flowing of the river. Dharma is like water guided through a canal. Both have their place, both have their intelligence, but they are not the same. The canal water may or may not reach the ocean; the river water always reaches. Yama, the flow of life, guarantees fulfillment.

Society feels threatened by people who flow with life. The individual feels threatened when society frames him into law. Both are wrong. The orthodox cling to frames; the rebels try to smash the whole system. Neither succeeds. At best they conquer each other temporarily, but no true victory happens.

The real understanding is this:

Your matter component needs Dharma - the law of life.

Your conscious component needs Yama - the flow of life.

The flow of life brings beauty, grace, and joy. Śiva in you is that very flow. You don't need a warrior's sword to reclaim it. To chase away a cockroach, you just need light. The same way, just a little awareness is enough - look into where you are frozen, where boredom and tiredness have taken root.

One more great commandment for humanity, especially Hindus:

Thou shall not feel bored.

Thou shall not be tired.

Tiredness and boredom are crimes.

Why? Because they happen only when you apply Dharma - the law of life - onto your Consciousness, which is meant to live in Yama, the flow of life. What belongs to the right hand should be done with the right hand. What belongs to the left hand should be done with the left hand. What needs Dharma must be handled with Dharma. What needs Yama must be handled with Yama. When law invades flow, life collapses.

The one who understands Dharma deeply will never mistake it as superior to Yama. He knows his flow of life cannot be touched by the laws of life. He knows the matter part of him is not his essence. The conscious part of you - that is you. Matter is only your instrument. Matter needs Dharma, the law of life. Consciousness needs Yama, the flow of life. Whenever dead rules are forced on living parts of your being, love gets reduced to marriage, and life itself becomes boring. The spirit needs spirit to stay spirited.

Understand, boredom is one of the biggest crimes against individual Consciousness. It is the worst crime society commits against you. And the most dangerous crime is the so-called "solution" it offers—the entertainment industry. Foolish answers to a foolishly created problem.

Look at the root. Imagine you are dreaming that ten tigers are chasing you, eleven lions are attacking you, and an anaconda is slithering behind you. In the dream, you are running, screaming: "Save me! The tiger is coming! The anaconda is coming!" Someone, instead of waking you up, gives you an AK-47 and says: "Come on, defend yourself." What stupidity! You don't even know whom you will shoot. The problem doesn't need an AK-47. It just needs a gentle tap: "Hey! Wake up."

That's exactly what society does. Instead of waking you from the root of your boredom, it supplies the AK-47 of entertainment. Instead of curing, it only drugs the symptom. Don't live in a country where the entertainment industry is booming. Don't live in a village without a temple. Don't live in a place drowned in entertainment. If there is too much entertainment, know for sure:

people there are deeply violent, and entertainment exists only to divert that violence.

Entertainment industries are not antidotes to boredom; they are antidotes to violence. The real antidote to violence is only one thing: understanding the source of boredom and going beyond it. But because industries thrive on diversion, they have to get more and more creative. And where do they lead you? Into fantasies, into illusions, into manufactured violence. Instead of healing, they push you deeper into fantasy and keep your boredom suppressed - never resolved.

Understand this: boredom breeds violence. When life feels stuck, when there is no fresh flow of energy, boredom arises. From boredom comes frustration. From frustration comes violence. Anyone who sees the possibility of a new flow of life - who lives in Yama, the flow of Consciousness—never becomes violent, never becomes a terrorist.

Sanātana Hindu Dharma constantly teaches the possibility of a new energy flow in life. It is a living religion; it is life-based. Its first and foremost teaching is to discern which part of you is matter and which part is consciousness - what needs to be handled by the law of life (dharma) and what needs to be handled by the flow of life (yama).

The same cat's teeth work differently when it catches a rat and when it lifts its kitten. The instrument is the same, but the cognition and context are different, so the action must be different. Catch the matter like a rat; catch the consciousness like a kitten - because consciousness is your own.

Dharma and Yama are distinct. When you know their difference, your whole life will look like the flow of life. When you don't, your life will look like the law of life. Even fresh new food will not satisfy you for long if you are stuck in Dharma only: after a hundred days the novelty fails, and boredom creeps in. Boredom spreads fast - at the speed of death. That is the speed with which poison spreads. Boredom rises when you confuse the law of life with the flow of life.

If you approach yourself with curiosity and passivity - "Let me see what is dead matter in me and what is living consciousness in me; what is the cit-jaḍa-granthi, the knot of consciousness and matter?" - then you will begin to know yourself. You will feel fulfilled when you remember and cognize yourself as the flow of life. That is the primary insight. When you are a combination of matter and consciousness, deal with matter using dharma and deal with consciousness using yama.

There is another category of human beings: those fully awakened, in whom matter no longer determines perception. Though some matter exists in them, they function entirely as pure consciousness. For them there is only Yama, no Dharma. These are the jīvanmuktas - beyond dharma in the ordinary sense; their life itself becomes dharma, and their actions embody dharma. They are the living embodiments of the law.

Whenever you force the game of matter onto the game of consciousness, or vice versa, pain and suffering appear — not as enemies but as alarm reminders. They tell you, "You are confused; you are overlapping." No pain is merely punitive. Suffering signals that you have been applying dead rules to living spaces or vice versa. It is a correction, not condemnation.

Understand the definitions: dharma - the law of life for matter; yama - the flow of life for consciousness. Sit with yourself. Notice where you have applied the rules of matter to the spirit, where you pushed dharma onto yama, where yama was deprived of its rightful domain. The moment you look inward with honesty, vast problems will reduce to ashes. You will learn how to die constantly and to be reborn - and in that continuous death–rebirth, you will taste liberation.

All the laws of life that suffocate the flow of life must be destroyed. In every space where the flow is disturbed by the law, death must happen to you. Wherever your living stream is blocked by rigid rules, you must be reborn. Keep the flow of life alive - love, excitement, enthusiasm, laughter, living itself - keep it alive.

Do not do any spiritual or religious practice - kriyā, yoga, prāṇāyāma, or anything - unless it opens extraordinary powers (siddhis) in you within a few days. Powers are not the ultimate purpose of practice, but they are the measuring scale: the test of authenticity, whether the practice is truly mandated by Mahādeva, or whether it is only the madness and confusion of some guru.

Anything ordained by Mahādeva begins to open Mahādeva in you. The first signs are always miraculous - extraordinary powers, experiences, happenings. If a practice is authentic, within days it will reveal powers and breakthroughs. Only then can you be sure it is from Mahādeva. And anything from Mahādeva has no expiry date.

Never do practices out of pride or stubborn loyalty. If you cling to techniques that bear no fruit, you are caught in the chaos of the teacher's branding, not in the mandate of Mahādeva. Do not waste your life in the madness of men. Let only the command of Mahādeva guide your practice.

Remember: Yama Dharma is the ṛṣi and reciter of this Upaniṣad, not its author. The first listener is Naciketa. Even Yama appears pale in front of Naciketa. Yama is only the second hero. Until Naciketa enters, Yama stands as the hero. But when Naciketa appears, he becomes the unquestionable, uncontested hero.

Though he is only a disciple, a listener, he rises above even the teacher. Only the true calf knows how to draw milk from the cow. Only the true seeker knows how to draw truth from the master. Naciketa knew how to make Yama release the milk of wisdom. It is because of Naciketa that the nectar of the Kathopaniṣad reached humanity. That is why Naciketa stands as the superhero of this Upaniṣad.

Let Śiva Sculpt You From Death To Divine

Every moment that is happening in you is your life. You may be marching towards a goal in the outer world, or you may be working to achieve something in the inner world, or you may simply feel confused and stuck. Whatever it is - life is happening to you.

Understand, even being confused or feeling stuck is still life happening. For example, a ship is most safe and secure in the port when it is docked. But was a ship created just to stay in the port? No. The purpose of a ship is to sail, to explore, to move. Similarly, if you always decide only by the law of life, you may remain secure, but you will miss the adventure, the excitement, the possibility of the flow of life. The law of life teaches security and structure. The flow of life brings adventure, innovation, new openings.

First statement: Life is happening to you every moment - even when you feel stuck. Second statement: When you confuse the games of law and flow - when you push law into flow or flow into law - what you experience is pain. Whenever the flow of life is restrained by a rigid misunderstanding of law, pain arises. And whenever you recklessly break the laws of matter because of over-enthusiastic flow, suffering arises. Third statement: The constant life happening in you is a process of purification. When you approach it with agitation, purification feels like pain. What is purification? It is the growing clarity about what belongs to law and what belongs to flow. Dharma is to protect. Yama is to enjoy. Let law protect, and let flow be.

Bringing more and more clarity about Yama (the flow of life) and Dharma (the law of life) is what life itself is. That process is constant death and constant rebirth. Many things in you will constantly die. Many things will constantly be reborn. But when you hold on with attachment or arrogance, refusing to let things move, you clash with the law of life.

For example: If you try to bind or possess the person you love, the love will die. This is the law of life. But your denial says, “No, no, the flow was so powerful - how can it be destroyed?” Understand: however powerful the flow, it cannot break certain fundamental laws.

Delusion blinds you. You say, “We were in love, we romanced, we enjoyed so much together - how can that end?” Yes, you did enjoy the flow. But the moment you try to possess or suffocate the other, the love loses its power. That is the law of life. And yet, you overlook it. You argue, “No, no, that’s not how it should be.” But life does not wait for your approval. The laws of life move on, indifferent to your denial. That is why He is called Dharma — because He simply moves. Your inability to see reality does not stop reality. Fortunately so. Otherwise, you would be stuck forever.

Understand, this is one of the most important prayers you should carry in your heart: “Mahādeva, even if I don’t understand, whatever needs to be removed from me, please remove it — even by force. Whatever purification I need to go through, let me experience it - even by force - because if You are waiting for my ‘yes,’ it will never happen. If You wait for my consent, it will never happen.”

This is surrender and bhakti in its essence. It is giving the GPA, the General Power of Attorney, to Mahādeva, saying: “Whether I understand and appreciate or not, whether I am ready or not, let what my life needs to experience - the flow of life and law of life in Your ultimate intelligence - happen through Your third eye. Let it become reality, whether I understand or accept it or not. I give You the full authority now. Do it.” That is surrender. And when He enacts His intelligence in your life, enjoying it is bhakti.

Understand: the constant death that is meant to happen in you, if cherished with bhakti, transforms into celebration and liberation. The very process that could be painful becomes a space for joy, awakening, and freedom.

Carry this Truth in your heart as the context of life. Each of us is like a stone in the Ganga, rolling in the flow of life that emerges from His head and washes His devotee’s feet. This is what enriches life. The Sahasrāra, the space of Enlightenment in Mahādeva, is where the Ganga originates - a space from which His grace flows, releasing people from sin, lifting them into consciousness, and granting Enlightenment. Ganga comes there to wash the feet of Kapila, Śiva’s devotee, and release people from sins and give them Enlightenment. This is the journey of Ganga Mata.

First, rise into the head of Mahādeva, into the Sahasrāra - the ultimate space of Enlightenment. From there, flow into the world. Understand, the Purāṇas do not depict Ganga as simply flowing away; She flows intimately across His body, enjoying the very flow of Mahādeva. She is very romantic. She merges with the divine, delighting in the sacred current that nourishes and transforms all beings.

The Gomukh is the space where Gaṅgā touches Planet Earth, and Har-ki-pauri is the space of Śiva's feet. Up to that point, the whole expanse is Śiva's body on the physical plane. Then She descends to Gangasāgar to release the sins of Bhāgīratha's ancestors and wash the feet of Kapila, Śiva's devotee.

Kapila is older than Gaṅgā because it is due to Kapila's curse and as a śāp vimocana (atonement from sin) that Gaṅgā was brought to Planet Earth by Bhāgīratha.

Understand: just as the stones in Gaṅgā roll, all of us are like stones moving in the flow of life, the flow of Gaṅgā. Many unnecessary parts of us are chipped away, and we are polished. In this flow, if you appreciate what life is doing to you, you will experience constant rebirth. If you do not, you will continuously experience death.

When a stone rolls in Gaṅgā, it is gradually shaped and polished and eventually becomes a Śiva Liṅga, left on the banks for people to worship. A stone that allows itself to flow with Gaṅgā becomes God and is worshipped by everyone. In the flow of life, we are also like stones moving and rotating in Gaṅgā. Many corners that need to be chiseled get chiseled; parts that need to be removed are removed; areas that require polishing are polished. Understand: cleaning, chiseling, polishing; cleaning, chiseling, polishing.

The stone can perceive this cleaning, chiseling, and polishing either as death or as rebirth. You have the freedom to choose. You can approach life every moment as death, saying: "Oh God, life never gives me what I want. I am always tortured, deprived, depressed. No matter how much I struggle, it never gives me what I want. It never supports me. I am the only one tortured every time by life. Why me? Why me? Why me?" The "why me?" perspective views life as death. If you see life this way, you will constantly feel that only you are dying. Understand the most dangerous thing: perceiving life constantly as death. You will identify with the small pieces of stone that get chipped off and never be worshipped.

Instead, associate yourself with the main part, the portion that will be worshipped as Śiva. That part experiences: "Wow! I did not do anything; life simply moved me in its flow. I am polished, cleared, and now I am worshipped as God."

This is what is called Brahmanyam Bahuputratām - the favorite inheritor of the Cosmos.

If you view life as constant rebirth, you will identify with the main stone, the portion destined to become a Śiva Liṅga and be worshipped. If you cling to the "why me?" mentality, you will be like the small corner, the chip, the fragment removed in the flow of life. The danger is that you will never become a Śiva Liṅga; you will merely lie there in depression.

A cunning person is essentially a powerless criminal - a criminal without the courage or power to commit crimes. He has potential but lacks the strength or audacity. He is cunning, not innocent, but he does not have the guts or power to act. The broken parts of the Śiva Liṅga - the chiseled parts - remain stuck in cunningness. They do not even have the power to act.

Constantly appreciate, enjoy, and celebrate life, even when it forcefully removes some part of "you" - whether it is a person, a pleasure, wealth, or part of your mind, desired or undesired. Even if forcibly removed, celebrate life and understand that life is a constant rebirth.

Anyone who carries the understanding that life is bliss is constantly reborn. Understand: this is the greatest gift any Guru can give to a disciple. Take this understanding, this appreciation of life, even when you feel something is being forcibly removed from you, even when you cannot perceive the larger vision that life has for you. Sometimes, you may not be able to see the grander vision life holds.

Do not be like a tantrum-throwing manager who needs constant reassurance about the entire vision of a company just to move one file from one table to another. If a CEO has to sit with you and all the Directors repeatedly to explain the entire vision of a company for such small tasks, then you are behaving like a tantrum-throwing fool. Perhaps once or twice this can be tolerated; after a few days, they will proceed without you. You are forcing that situation upon yourself.

Similarly, with life, do not repeatedly drop the context and throw tantrums. Do not miss the larger vision of life again and again by indulging in tantrums. Life will not respond to your tantrums. Instead, rise above, retain, and remain aligned with the larger vision of life, and appreciate what is happening to you every moment.

Many things that you yourself may not renounce are being renounced, forcibly taken away. Many polishing processes that you may not undertake on your own are happening naturally. All of this is ultimately for you to be worshipped as a Śiva Liṅga.

The recipient of the worship is you.

A person who celebrates life is worshipped. A person who constantly complains is worshipping his complaints. Whoever constantly asks, "Why me? Why me? Why me?" and sees life as a series of deaths suffocates himself and perceives only death. Whoever understands that life is constant rebirth celebrates life and feels like the favorite inheritor of the Cosmos: Brahmanyam Bahuputratām.

A sannyāsī declares this to the Cosmos during the Virija Homa, to the whole world: "I retain the context of brahmanyam bahuputratām in my heart." This means you must constantly keep yourself in bliss and carry the understanding that life is a constant rebirth, not death. You have no right to feel suffering. You are not the small part being chiseled; you are the larger part being polished.

You are not the fragment being chipped away—you are the main portion being refined. If you identify with the small part that is being chipped - asking, "Why me? Why me? Why me?" - you will suffer. But if you identify with the larger part that is being polished - saying, "Wow! Wow, me! Wow, me! Wow, it's me! Wow, it's me!" - you will celebrate life.

Life is essentially a movement from "Why me?" to "Wow, me!" Understand: life is supremely compassionate - only the minimum chipping is done, and maximum polishing occurs. It removes only what is absolutely necessary.

You may feel, "No, others get chipped only a little, but I am being chipped so much!" No! You are in the hands of the most compassionate sculptor, Mahādeva, especially when He Himself comes as Guru.

Understand: some people receive His land, His property, His gold, His organizations - whatever they desire, they take for themselves. But those who stand empty-handed, with folded hands or holding His feet, He lifts onto His shoulders.

Blessed are those who receive Him as Guru. Those who grasp everything with both hands will not have Him as Guru; that is the greatest punishment. They need no other punishment than being deprived of Him as Guru throughout their life. The best thing that can happen to you has already happened - having Him as Guru. Whoever harbors negativity toward life perceives constant death. Whoever looks at life with understanding and reverence perceives constant birth.

Awaken The Ability to Reinvent Yourself

The constant unfolding of life can be perceived as either constant rebirth or constant death. If you perceive it as constant rebirth, you will experience the beauty of life. If you perceive it as constant death, the perception does not change the reality. Please understand: reality does not wait for your acceptance.

Whatever needs to be taken away from you will be taken away, regardless of your hue and cry, non-acceptance, screaming, shouting, or cursing. These reactions will neither stop nor slow the process. Similarly, whatever is meant to be showered upon you - blessings, grace, or gifts - will not multiply simply because of your praise or gratitude. Praising God, Life, or Guru is not meant to please them but to keep yourself in a pleasant space. Be very clear: praising God, Guru, or life is for your own pleasantness, not to bribe Mahādeva. If you are in the mood of praising, you remain in a space of joy and contentment. That is the result; that is the fruit of chanting Sahasranāma (the thousand names of Gods), performing ārcana, vandana, bhajana, pūjā, seva, or any act of worship, chanting, service, or praise - it is all for you to remain in a space of pleasantness.

Bribing Mahādeva is impossible. No bribery works. You cannot manipulate Him.

Sit with yourself and observe all aspects of your life where you feel rebirth and all aspects where you feel death. In terms of health, ask yourself and record: Am I experiencing rebirth every day, or am I dying every day? In my relationships - my relationship with my mother - am I reborn every day or dying every day? With my father - reborn or dying? With my spouse - reborn or dying?

Reflect deeply and honestly on these questions. Even this simple awareness shift is powerful. Observe your body, your movements: Are you experiencing rebirth every day, or are you dying every day?

Consider how you handle the shocks of life: even if it is a small tremor, do you magnify it into an earthquake? Or even if it is an earthquake, do you stand firm like Pāśupatināth?

Hindu temples are constructed in harmony with the pañcabhūtas (five primal life-sustaining elements), so these elements do not destroy the temples. The sixth element, human ignorance, is what can damage temples. Yet even this cannot destroy South Indian temples. Take the Kailāsaṇātha temple in central Bharat as an example. Aurangzeb deployed a huge army, and after working on it for almost two years, they could only damage it, not destroy it. Around 10,000 people labored for two years, and finally, exhausted, they left. They were unable to demolish it, only partially damage it. This resilience demonstrates the strength and divine protection of our sacred structures.

In every aspect of your life - whether it is health, wealth, joy, bliss, contentment, completion, relationships, or Enlightenment - life itself is the science of reinventing yourself. If you know how to reinvent yourself in the same body, you will know how to reinvent yourself when you leave the body.

The essence of the Kaṭhopaniṣad is awakening your ability to be reborn and to reinvent yourself. This simple shift in awareness naturally inclines you toward rebirth. You will notice the areas where you are unconscious and dying, and automatically, you will plan for constant rebirth.

Constantly reinventing yourself means letting the past remain in the past and embracing each moment with fresh awareness and consciousness. This conscious planning for rebirth in every moment leads to Enlightenment while in the body and Conscious Birth when leaving it. This understanding and practice form the path to true transformation and liberation, as taught in the Kaṭhopaniṣad.

The past has no power over you. The past has no place in your life. Do not desire to learn from the past. Do not believe that brooding over your past can produce anything good. Do not imagine that your future can grow from the past. Completely discarding the past creates far more space and possibility within you than attempting to extract lessons from it. It is like a village scene where hens and chickens run around in the dustbin, trying to pick up worms and scraps. Just as the hens play in the dirt, do not play with your past—it is like a dustbin. No matter how much you try to pick something up from it, the only meaningful action is to dump it and go live your life. That is all the past can give. The ultimate lesson your past can give you is: Leave me and go live. The ability to discard the past is crucial. When you let go of the past, life becomes possibility itself - the greatest possibility.

The moment when enlightened sages decided and declared that they would reinvent themselves is considered their Enlightenment moment. That single moment is attributed as the instant when God gave darśan (vision) to them - when they were awakened or had a spiritual enlightenment experience. It is simply the moment they decided to reinvent themselves.

Please understand: the decision to reinvent yourself is the essence of the Kaṭhopaniṣad. When you leave the past behind, your life becomes a feast, not merely fast-paced. A fast-paced life implies restlessness. When you truly drop the past, life becomes a grand celebration - a feast of endless possibilities and joy. The ultimate lesson your past can give you is: Leave me and go live. The ability to discard the past is crucial. When you drop the past, life becomes pure possibility - the greatest possibility.

Constantly reinvent yourself. The first requirement for reinvention is the ability to let the past remain in the past. The past has no meaning other than to teach you that it has no meaning. The decision to reinvent yourself is the essence of the Kaṭhopaniṣad.

The first step is dropping the burden of the past. The second step is having the courage to keep your possibility alive in the face of any impossibility perceived by you due to your SDHD (self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial). It is not necessary to live with the same current of thoughts or patterns throughout your life simply because you created them once accidentally. The good news is that patterns are matter - they can be conquered. They are not more powerful than you.

Look closely at your life. In many instances, matter is given far more importance than consciousness. Often, your entire problem in life arises from something as simple as early morning laziness in bed.

All your suffering, ignorance, and SDHD - self-doubt, self-hatred, self-denial - stem from the illusion of freedom. A disease, accident, breakup, or other severe shock can wake you up and force you to decide to reinvent yourself. Most people make this decision only when confronted by a rude shock. Rude shocks do not give you time to ponder; you must immediately decide to reinvent yourself.

All the problems in your life often originate from cherishing that early morning laziness in bed. This same attitude is reflected in other aspects of life. For example, in alcohol consumption, when one thinks, “I have to stop drinking,” the mind often justifies having a single glass for the day, questioning whether it will cause any harm.

After consuming one glass, control begins to slip as subsequent glasses seem to drink themselves. The first glass is consumed by you, but thereafter, you lose control. Reflect on how alcohol and poetry share similarities. While alcohol can cause harm, poetry has a healing effect. Although their outcomes differ significantly, their flow is akin: just as with alcohol, where the first glass leads to loss of control, in poetry, the first verse sets the tone for the subsequent ones.

The simple laziness that you cherish, thinking things are not urgent, must be broken to reinvent yourself. It is urgent! The moment you are born, looking into death, every moment is urgent, because anything can happen at any time. The good news is that your consciousness is more powerful than any patterns or matter. The greater news is that all you need is to feel the urge to act urgently. The key lies in awakening this sense of urgency within yourself. Do not delay by questioning whether a small action - like smoking one cigarette after years - will harm you. Embrace the urgency to transform and break free from limiting patterns and beliefs.

The urge to reinvent yourself must become urgent. It is crucial to recognize that delaying this reinvention is akin to perpetuating harmful patterns, starting from simple habits like smoking and extending to the deepest patterns of innate violence within oneself.

The urge to reinvent oneself is inherent in all conscious human beings, which is indeed good news. However, it is crucial for this urge to transform into a sense of urgency. Repeatedly reinventing yourself with urgency is essential for personal growth and evolution. This continuous process of self-reinvention aligns with the essence of the Kaṭhopaniṣad, emphasizing the importance of transformation and renewal in one's life journey.

In the Hindu tradition, individuals aspiring to be Enlightened Beings are encouraged to undertake the Parivrajaka Yātrā, which involves changing locations every three days and traveling. This practice is designed to facilitate the process of reinventing oneself by exposing individuals to new environments and experiences.

Whether one chooses the path of Gṛhastha (householder) or Sannyāsī (renunciate), spending time in Parivrajaka Yātrā during the period of Brahmacarya is seen as a valuable opportunity for self-reinvention. It allows individuals to break free from familiar surroundings and routines, opening new possibilities for personal growth and transformation. The essence lies in the ability to reinvent yourself - that is all.

Gurukul - The Future Of Education

Śānti mantra of Kaṭhopaniṣad:

oṃ saha nāvavatu |
saha nau bhunaktu |
saha vīryaṃ karavāvahai |
tejasvināvadhītamastu mā vidviṣāvahai ||
oṃ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ ||

The concept of the Śānti Mantra is unique to the Hindu education system before the influence of Macaulay. Anything post-Macaulay is not part of the original Hindu education system. British colonial rule led to cultural genocide, where Hindu traditions were disrespected, destroyed, and deemed unworthy. This instilled deep-seated self-doubt within us - a condition from which we have yet to fully recover. The impact has been profound, deeply ingrained within our societal structure. The self-doubt, self-hatred, and self-denial imposed upon us continue to affect us even today.

The beauty of the Śānti Mantra lies in its practice, where both student and teacher come together, sit in harmony, and recite it:

"Let there be no enmity between us."

The Śānti Mantra embodies the principle of harmony between student and teacher. By reciting, "Let there be no enmity between us," both parties express mutual respect and a shared commitment to the pursuit of knowledge and spiritual growth.

Why do the student and teacher pray to Lord in this manner? Understand: often, a student denies the possibility of his own ignorance and clings to what he believes is right. The Master's role is to guide the student towards self-awareness. The Master must expose the student to himself, a process that can create pain and shake deeply held incompletions.

In the student–teacher dynamic, it is essential for both to come together and pray for harmony through the Śānti Mantra. Students may struggle to acknowledge their ignorance and may cling to their perceived knowledge as truth. In such instances, the Master guides the student toward self-awareness, which can be challenging and may bring up pain, insecurities, and subtle anger.

This journey of self-exploration can lead the student to perceive the teacher's corrections or guidance as a personal attack or an attempt to undermine them. Students who are not yet mature in their learning may react with resistance or defiance, repeating words without understanding their depth.

It is part of the Master's responsibility to break down these barriers and misconceptions, even if it challenges the student's preconceived notions about the Master. This process of breaking down barriers and addressing misunderstandings is an integral part of the spiritual journey for both teacher and student.

In the Hindu tradition, the educational process is designed to awaken individuals rather than merely impart knowledge in the form of words, ideas, concepts, theories, or theologies. It serves as a transformative journey toward self-realization and Enlightenment.

Sometimes, you may hold certain facts to be true, but if the context in which you perceive these facts is incorrect, even those facts lose their validity. It is crucial to understand that while the facts themselves may be accurate, if they are viewed within an incorrect context, their relevance diminishes. Therefore, it becomes essential to reevaluate and, if necessary, adjust your context for the facts to hold true significance and utility in your life.

Until you address and align your context with truth and clarity, the factual knowledge you possess may not serve its intended purpose effectively. Take time to reflect on your understanding and perspective before revisiting the facts for deeper realization and application in your life's journey.

In the Upaniṣads, the Master often gives seemingly simple tasks to the disciple to cultivate patience, perseverance, and deeper understanding. For example, the Master may give the disciple two cows and instruct him: "Go, and come back after they become 1,000 cows." When the disciple returns after achieving this, the Master still tells him: "No, go and come back."

This process is not about the task itself but about the transformation and growth that occur within the disciple during the journey. It teaches the disciple to develop qualities such as patience, dedication, and the ability to transcend superficial achievements, ultimately leading to profound inner awakening and realization.

The disciple, puzzled by the Master's instruction, wonders: "It has already become 1,000 cows; why is he not accepting me?" In his confusion, he sits in deep meditation. As he meditates, his mind begins to dissolve, and he experiences a profound inner transformation, realizing the deeper context of the Master's words. He himself becomes one with the cows, transcending his limited understanding.

When he returns with the 1,000 cows, having grasped the true essence of the Master's teaching, the Master acknowledges his realization and says: "Come on, receive the 1,001 cows." This signifies the disciple's attainment of a higher state of consciousness and the Master's recognition of his spiritual growth and awakening.

When the context is incorrect, even correct facts lose their relevance and value. In the process of spiritual awakening, immense patience is required from the student. The student must cultivate a deep understanding and willingness to embrace the journey, recognizing that true growth often comes through overcoming inner challenges and aligning one's context with the higher truths imparted by the Master.

The Śānti Mantra encapsulates the essence of the Hindu education system, where there is no hierarchy of superiority or inferiority between teacher and student. In this system, the teacher is not considered higher than the student, nor is the student regarded as lower than the teacher. Both teacher and student engage in a mutual process of learning and enrichment through their interactions.

If a teacher is not enriched by his teachings, do not listen to him. If the teacher has been prescribing the same meditation, kriyā, prāṇāyāma, or yoga practices for the last twenty-five years without evolving, save yourself. It is essential for a teacher to be enriched by his teachings. A teacher who continuously evolves and shares new truths, techniques, and methods - tailored to various groups and levels of students - demonstrates true enrichment and commitment to growth. Stagnation in teaching practices over an extended period may indicate a lack of personal enrichment and innovation, urging individuals to seek teachers who embody continuous evolution and fresh insights in their teachings.

The whole context of the Hindu education system is beautifully introduced in this one Śānti Mantra. In the Hindu education system, the foundational principle set at the outset of education is mutual respect and harmony between teacher and student. This ensures that both teacher and student engage in a process of mutual enrichment, learning, and growth. Education is not merely the transmission of knowledge; it is the awakening and transformation of both parties involved.

In the Hindu education system, the first context set about education is: "Let both of us be together and be protected. Let us not hurt each other. Let us not cherish enmity towards each other. Let us not cherish anger towards each other."

Understand that the Master cannot harbor any anger toward the disciple. So why does the Śānti Mantra include the line, "Let both of us not cherish anger"? It signifies the possibility that the disciple may harbor self-doubt. The disciple might think: "Maybe my ignorance is being exposed. Maybe because I am ignorant, the Master is not only teaching me but also constantly pulling me down."

The presence of ignorance is always accompanied by pain. When the Master sheds light on the disciple's ignorance, it can create discomfort and a sense of vulnerability. The disciple may feel criticized or belittled, even though the Master's intention is purely to guide and elevate.

The Śānti Mantra, therefore, seeks to dissolve potential misunderstandings and foster a space of mutual trust and respect, ensuring that the process of learning and awakening is smooth and harmonious.

Pain serves as a method to measure the presence of ignorance. Pain indicates the existence of ignorance, as ignorance inherently leads to suffering. It can be viewed as a scale: anything that does not cause pain is not rooted in ignorance, while anything stemming from ignorance inevitably leads to pain.

When one is confronted with internal or external wounds caused by ignorance, even if the Master advises applying the medicine for healing, there may be resistance or hurt felt by the individual. This reaction often arises from a sense of vulnerability or discomfort in acknowledging and addressing one's wounds, leading to a perceived focus on shortcomings rather than genuine guidance toward healing and growth.

The Master's job is the most difficult job - He must cut your ego without causing you unnecessary pain. First, He helps you discern which part of you is the tumor and which part is the muscle. This means identifying the aspects of your being that are rooted in ignorance and causing suffering, versus the aspects that are healthy and essential for your growth.

This delicate process of guiding you through self-awareness and transformation requires immense patience, compassion, and precision. It involves not only exposing areas of ignorance but also nurturing the parts of you that are ready for enlightenment and expansion. The aim is to dissolve ego and ignorance without creating unnecessary suffering, leading you toward holistic well-being and spiritual awakening.

In the journey of spiritual growth, individuals often struggle to identify their inner "tumors" - areas of ignorance that they mistakenly perceive as strengths or essential aspects of themselves. This attachment to a false identity can hinder progress toward enlightenment.

Understanding the distinction between what is a "tumor" and what truly embodies your strength or "muscle" is a profound task in the spiritual journey. Arrogance tends to hold onto memories of pain caused by others while overlooking the benefits bestowed by the Guru. This imbalance can impede growth and the realization of the Guru's teachings.

The role of a teacher is indeed challenging, as they navigate their students' conflicts, controversies, and confusions on the path to enlightenment. The fluctuations in a student's surrender and commitment can be testing for both teacher and student. It is essential for individuals to cultivate genuine surrender, patience, and trust in the transformative process guided by the Guru, allowing true growth and awakening to unfold over time.

In the profound Hindu education system, teaching is not merely about imparting information without concern for the individual. It is a deeply transformative and powerful system designed for awakening. This awakening entails a high level of involvement between Guru and disciple. Traditionally, the Guru and disciple were expected to live together, fostering an environment where the disciple continuously absorbs the teachings of the Guru - not merely observing but fully integrating the Guru's presence and wisdom.

Unlike the modern-day scholar method, which often lacks deep involvement and personal transformation, the original Hindu education system emphasizes a holistic approach to learning that requires constant absorption and internalization of spiritual truths. By immersing oneself in the sacred relationship between Guru and disciple, one can experience profound growth, awakening, and evolution on the spiritual path.

The concept of non-involvement in education - where interaction between teacher and students is minimal - can lead to a lack of deep engagement and personal transformation. In contrast, the original Hindu education system upheld the Gurukul model, where the Guru and disciples shared a close bond, living together and engaging in continuous learning and observation.

This immersive approach fostered a profound connection between teacher and student, allowing for holistic growth and awakening. As we move forward, it is essential to recognize the limitations of non-involvement systems that have prevailed for extended periods. Embracing the Gurukul model can pave the way for a more enriching and transformative educational experience, one that aligns with the deeper principles of traditional Hindu education.

The Gurukul system is the future. The future of education envisions a setting where teachers, students, and even parents reside together in one place. It is understood that children primarily emulate the actions of their role models rather than simply following verbal instructions. They mirror what they observe, not merely what they are told. Therefore, the Gurukul system - where learning happens through immersive living and direct example-setting by teachers and mentors - is not only the future of the Hindu education system but also the future of any intelligent education system worldwide.

Embracing the traditional Gurukul model holds immense potential for transforming how knowledge is imparted and received. Its immersive learning environment can pave the way for a holistic and profound educational journey that nurtures both intellectual growth and spiritual development.

In the Gurukul education system, complete involvement is required from both teacher and student. The student is encouraged to study the teacher, while the teacher also studies the student. Through this mutual observation and understanding, the teacher identifies the right subject in which the student will excel. While certain foundational teachings - such as the science of Completion and Enlightenment - are essential for all, beyond these universal principles the teacher selects specific subjects tailored to each student's strengths and interests. The training provided thus becomes individualized, while always rooted in the overarching context of Enlightenment as the foundation of true learning and growth.

Understand, in the Gurukul education system, the context of Enlightenment permeates every field of study. Whether it is archery, administration, business, plumbing, house-building, or sculpting, Enlightenment remains the underlying foundation. This system emphasizes the transmission of knowledge rather than the mere transfer of information. It is about experiential learning and deep realization.

Modern educational institutions attempting to teach Hindu knowledge systems - such as sculpting or Sthāpatya Veda - within the framework of contemporary schools and colleges often fail. A student with multiple degrees in sculpting may still struggle to create even a small Gaṇeśa, whereas a child growing up under the guidance of a Guru, like his own father, can create wonders in stone by the age of six. This is the power of the traditional Gurukul system, where learning is immersive, hands-on, and rooted in living transmission.

Understand, the Western education system is based on updating. The longer you wait to purchase an IT product, the cheaper and better it becomes, because it follows a constant updating model. In contrast, the Gurukul education system is based on specialization. The more years you dedicate to a craft - whether weaving, carving, agriculture, or building - the more specialized and perfected your skill becomes.

This is why, in our traditional education and social systems, it was emphasized that sons would follow in their fathers' footsteps. Unfortunately, this system was questioned, criticized, and eventually dismantled. As a result, we have lost both our sense of identity and our self-sustainability, leading to societal instability.

Earlier, we had a stable societal framework where it was possible to predict how many engineers, agriculturists, and other professionals would emerge each year. This predictability ensured a self-sustaining society. Understand, the stability of society directly influences the value of its currency. It is not merely economic factors, but also the societal framework and its stability, that determine the true strength and value of a nation's currency.

In a very cunning and systematic way, under the guise of destroying untouchability - misrepresented in ways far from its original context—the traditional Gurukul system was dismantled. For example, in an incident from the Upaniṣads, a boy approached a Guru and said, "I want to join your Gurukul." The Guru asked, "What is your community?" The boy replied, "I do not know. My mother is a dancer in the court, and I do not know who fathered me. I do not know my father's name, so I cannot say my community." Immediately, the Guru said, "This level of integrity means you are a Brāhmaṇa. Come, join the Gurukul - you are of the highest order of society."

Understand, the societal order was not fixed, nor was the ladder based solely on birth. One could always rise to the next level by one's integrity and authenticity. The true spirit of the system was to achieve equality by uplifting those on the lower rungs, not by pulling down those at the top.

Unfortunately, Hinduism has faced a cultural attack in which the caste system has been deliberately misrepresented. Instead of being seen as a dynamic framework for upliftment and specialization, it has been weaponized as a tool for division and destruction. It is essential to distinguish between those who misuse the concept of caste to perpetuate harm and those who sincerely strive to elevate individuals based on their inner qualities and contributions to society. The distortion of this system has created unnecessary strife and conflict within communities, diverting it from its original purpose of fostering harmony, cooperation, and growth among all sections of society.

Understand, Hinduism has a rich history of valuing human dignity and never engaged in the practice of slave trade. The notion of untouchability has been greatly exaggerated and misunderstood, often used as a tool to attack and undermine our cultural and social systems.

The true essence of our society emphasizes integrity, authenticity, and the upliftment of individuals based on their inner qualities and merits, not on superficial factors such as skin color or birth. It is extreme hypocrisy and ignorance for those who have historically engaged in practices like slavery to criticize and misrepresent our traditions.

Our focus should be on reclaiming and celebrating the true values of our culture, ensuring equality, respect, and growth for all individuals based on their inner potential and contributions. Human beings naturally form small groups and societies; we are social animals who create our own structures of belonging. Classification and division exist everywhere—even in the West, where they are primarily based on money. In Hinduism, however, classification was traditionally based on knowledge and skills.

This system allowed for a beautifully balanced society in which different roles and responsibilities were respected and valued. Each group contributed uniquely to the whole, creating a harmonious and stable social structure. The focus was on specialization and the transmission of knowledge, ensuring that wisdom and skills were preserved and passed down through generations. Recognizing and reviving this balance is essential to maintaining the stability and richness of our culture.

Understand, the ancient Hindu society was structured around four major powers: knowledge, weapons, wealth/treasury and land. These were distributed among four distinct groups, creating a balanced and interdependent social framework. One group was empowered with knowledge, another with weapons, another with wealth, and yet another with land. This thoughtful distribution ensured that all aspects of society were managed efficiently, harmoniously, and without the concentration of power in a single group.

Untouchability, as it is often portrayed, is a misrepresentation and exaggeration propagated by anti-Hindu theologists. It is an invention aimed at distorting and undermining the true essence of our social structure. The Vedās, far from being a recent invention, are ancient and timeless scriptures that have guided our society for millennia.

The balance and interdependence created by the distribution of powers in traditional Hindu society enabled stability and flourishing. Each group played a vital role in the overall harmony and prosperity of the community. It is crucial to recognize and honor this balance, understanding that the structure was designed to ensure sustainability and cooperation.

It is important to discern truth from misinformation when it comes to historical narratives. The misinterpretation and distortion of ancient texts like the Vedās and the Manusmṛti have often been used to support false claims regarding the origins of untouchability in Hinduism. To prevent such misconceptions, it is essential to approach these scriptures with discernment, respect, and critical thinking, ensuring that their true essence and context are accurately understood.

It is unfortunate that the Hindu tradition has been abused and misrepresented by those who lack understanding and authenticity. Such actions only serve to spread misinformation and disrespect towards a profound and ancient spiritual heritage. Discussions about the Hindu tradition must be approached with integrity and a genuine desire to understand its true teachings and significance.

The Hindu civilization is one of the world's most ancient and sophisticated, with a remarkable education system. It is disheartening to see modern historians express guilt or remorse over the supposed inadequacy in recording history or maintaining a perfect calendar. The truth is that our civilization has meticulously preserved its history for at least the last 100,000 years, safeguarding it with unparalleled precision and care.

Unfortunately, there has been a growing trend of discarding and undermining the wealth of wisdom present in the Hindu education system. This disregard leads to the selective appropriation and misuse of certain aspects, while neglecting the holistic depth of our traditions. It is essential to recognize, honor, and revive the profound contributions of the Hindu tradition to humanity's collective knowledge, well-being, and spiritual evolution.

Our ancient education system, if revived in its true authenticity, has the potential to once again make Hinduism the Jagatguru - the Guru of the world. In the past, we held this esteemed position as the guiding light of knowledge and wisdom, and now we have the opportunity to reclaim this role on a global scale. Let us revive our authentic traditions and knowledge systems so that we may once again shine as the beacon of enlightenment for all humanity. Understand: we were the Guru of the world, and we will once again become the Guru of the world.

The context set by the Śānti Mantra regarding the Hindu education system is truly remarkable and holds immense potential for dispelling misconceptions. It is essential to keep sharing this context in order to educate and enlighten others about the profound wisdom and authenticity of our system of learning.

Removing misconceptions about the Hindu education system is a noble endeavor that requires dedication and perseverance. By laying a strong foundation of understanding, you pave the way for deeper exploration - first into the Śānti Mantra, and eventually into the Upaniṣads themselves. The journey may take time, but your commitment to this cause will bring greater clarity and insight. Stay steadfast in your efforts, for every day spent spreading awareness brings us closer to unveiling the timeless truths embedded in our ancient traditions.

The Great Hindu Way of Education

oṃ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ ||

Education, in its true essence, is the process of awakening your inherent potential and manifesting it into reality. It is about realizing and actualizing the possibilities within you. The Hindu education system emphasizes this transformative approach, where learning goes beyond mere theoretical knowledge and becomes a way of living - integrated into one's daily life.

Unlike the non-involvement narrative style of education, where students passively receive information, the Hindu way of education encourages active participation and real-life application of teachings. It calls for living boldly and courageously, embodying the values and principles taught - not just in words, but by example.

By integrating theory with practice and instilling courage, discipline, and boldness in students, the Hindu education system empowers individuals to manifest their fullest potential and contribute meaningfully to society. This holistic approach fosters not just intellectual growth but also personal development, character building, and ultimately, spiritual awakening.

The non-involvement narrative method, in contrast, is responsible for students developing phobias, psychological disorders, insecurity, and a deep sense of insecurity about life. Since teachers in such systems lack the maturity, energy, and stamina to live with their students and demonstrate what they teach, they cannot serve as true role models or "24-hour heroes." This method was never designed for enlightenment or transformation, but merely for superficial and utilitarian aspects of human life.

Understand, the original Hindu education system was rooted in the Gurukul tradition, where students and teachers lived together under the same roof. This immersive environment ensured that education was not merely about theoretical knowledge but about practical life science.

Take the example of Vaśiṣṭha, the Guru of Lord Rāma. He did not simply teach archery from morning to evening and then hide when danger approached. No! If a demon or a wild animal attacked in the middle of the night, Vaśiṣṭha would be the first to stand with bow and arrow in hand, ready to protect his students. This kind of living example instilled courage, fearlessness, and practical wisdom in the students.

When students and teachers live together, education transcends theory and becomes a holistic life science. The teacher is compelled to address real-life problems, demonstrating solutions and embodying the teachings in daily actions. This creates a powerful and transformative learning experience, where knowledge is not only learned but lived.

A teacher in such a system cannot say, "I don't know about this" in front of students. That is why the Hindu education system - the Gurukul - was designed to provide everything necessary for life. Teachers were expected to impart a comprehensive education that encompassed all aspects of living: basic knowledge of Āyurveda for health, archery for self-defense, business skills for administration, critical thinking and decision-making abilities, and ultimately the essential truths about enlightenment and life.

The holistic approach of the Gurukul system ensured that students received a well-rounded education that prepared them for every aspect of life. If someone wished to specialize or master a particular subject, they had the freedom to do so within the framework of this comprehensive education.

Reviving the Hindu education system is a noble endeavor aimed at reinstating this holistic approach to learning and knowledge transmission. By reintroducing these ancient principles and practices, we can create a balanced and enriching educational experience for individuals seeking both personal growth and academic excellence.

The non-involving narrative style of education is sheer stupidity, as it is limiting and ineffective. It is essential for teachers to embody the teachings they impart by living in a state of completion and enlightenment. When teachers serve as role models of authenticity and inner fulfillment, they naturally inspire students to expand their possibilities and strive for excellence.

Creating a nurturing environment where children see parent-teachers living in completion has a profound impact on their growth and development. When students are consistently supported, encouraged, and guided by individuals who embody enlightenment, they flourish - academically, emotionally, and spiritually. This immersive experience not only fosters holistic growth but also strengthens family bonds, creating a supportive environment for lifelong learning and transformation.

Understand, true education extends far beyond the confines of traditional schooling. Those who are educated only within the four walls of schools remain, in truth, uneducated - for real learning encompasses life experiences, practical knowledge, and inner growth. The essence of education is not merely the acquisition of information but the transformation of that knowledge into wisdom through application and self-realization. The Gurukul system epitomizes this holistic approach, where learning is seamlessly integrated with living, and students are nurtured to develop their full potential in every dimension of life.

By embracing this comprehensive vision of education, we can cultivate individuals who are not only intellectually capable but also emotionally resilient, spiritually enriched, and practically skilled. True education prepares one for the entirety of life's journey, making them truly educated in the fullest sense.

Education, in its true essence, is about providing the tools to awaken one's inherent possibilities and encouraging individuals to explore and unlock their full potential. Through self-discovery and sustained practice, students gradually uncover the multitude of talents and capabilities that lie within them.

By focusing on mastering one tool at a time and delving deeply into its practice, students in the Gurukul not only acquire a specific skill but also develop a broader understanding of how to refine and apply their abilities in multiple ways. This approach fosters holistic growth, empowering individuals to awaken different facets of themselves through dedicated exploration, practice, and inner awakening.

For example, in KAILASA's Nithyananda Gurukul, the science of Completion was taught to the Gurukul kids. They began playing with it and taking it to the next level. There was a mango tree outside the Gurukul where many kids would fight and jump to pluck mangoes. When Bhagavān was walking by, He said, "Hey, you are not beggars. You are kings. Just tell the tree to give more mangoes, and whoever wants, go and eat." Immediately, the tree began yielding at least four times more mangoes. When the children wished to climb the tree, they would first go and speak to the red ants living on it: "See, we want to have mangoes, please move aside." The ants would move away, giving them space. This is the power of just one tool of Completion that Bhagavān gifted them. They used it for needs as simple as a mango and as profound as enlightenment - for mango and enlightenment mango!

Creating a laboratory where children can explore and experiment with ancient Hindu knowledge such as flying machines and batteries described by sages like Agastya, made with Āyurvedic herbs is a noble vision. By providing tools and resources for research and development in these areas, we can empower young minds to rediscover and build upon the rich heritage of our civilization.

Through hands-on projects and demonstrations, children in the Gurukul gain the opportunity to engage with this wisdom in a practical, experiential way. This approach not only nurtures creativity and critical thinking but also instills in them a deep reverence for our Hindu tradition.

By establishing a large laboratory equipped with the necessary knowledge and technical support, we can inspire a new generation of innovators who remain deeply rooted in their cultural heritage while also exploring cutting-edge technologies. Such an initiative will not only enrich their educational experience but also contribute to the revival of the Hindu tradition in a modern context.

Understand, the revival of the Hindu education system goes far beyond awakening the science of Enlightenment or the science of Completion. While these are vital components, they represent only one part of the larger vision of holistic education.

In the true essence of Hindu learning, students are encouraged to explore and manifest extraordinary possibilities. Demonstrating abilities such as blindfold reading, communicating with plants to alter their behavior, or increasing the yield of a mango tree are not mere spectacles, but natural manifestations of one's inner potential and profound connection with existence.

The ancient Masters of our tradition harnessed both inner powers and outer technologies to bring immense comfort, prosperity, and luxury to humanity. By reviving teachings such as the science of sound and its application in advanced weaponry like Nāgāstra, Agneyāstra, and Varuṇāstra, we can empower the next generation with unique knowledge and skills that seamlessly integrate timeless wisdom with modern innovation.

The essence of true education lies in the transmission of knowledge from bio-memory to bio-memory, rather than merely from muscle memory to muscle memory. This deeper connection between teacher and student - at the level of fundamental cognition and lived experience, rather than just external action and words - creates a space for profound transformation.

When teachers embody the truths they impart and live in alignment with their core beliefs, students are naturally inspired to learn authentically and absorb knowledge at the deepest level. This approach transcends superficial learning based on imitation or repetition, which often reduces education to manipulation and mechanical conditioning.

The Gurukul system exemplified this holistic approach to education. Teachers and students lived together in an immersive, harmonious environment where knowledge was transmitted experientially. By living with their Gurus, students like Arjuna and Rāma absorbed vast wisdom in a remarkably short span of time through the direct transmission of bio-memory.

How did Arjuna, who stayed with Droṇa for no more than ten years, master everything Droṇa had acquired over a lifetime? How did Rāma, who entered Gurukul at the age of seven and was prepared for coronation by eighteen, absorb all that Vaśiṣṭha had to offer within just eleven years? Such mastery was possible only because their education was not limited to word-to-word or action-to-action transmission. It was a direct transfer from bio-memory to bio-memory.

This level of education can be revived only when teachers and students live together, with the teacher embodying and radiating the very truths they seek to impart. Only then can true transmission take place - not just of skills, but of consciousness itself.

It is time we establish Gurukuls where students and teachers live together, reviving the ancient centers of learning such as Sarvajñapīṭha, Śāradā Pīṭha, Nālandā, Takṣaśilā, and Naimiśāraṇya, and bringing forth a transformative vision of education. In such sacred spaces, knowledge is not merely transferred through words and actions but flows directly from the bio-memory of the teacher to the bio-memory of the student.

This deeper level of transmission ensures that wisdom is imbibed at the very core of the student's being, shaping not just intellect but consciousness itself. By creating an environment where teachers embody eternal principles and students experience those truths firsthand, the sacred connection between Guru and disciple is revived - one that transcends intellectual learning and awakens the inner potential of the seeker.

Embracing this holistic approach can usher in a new era of authentic learning and personal transformation - living embodiments of timeless truths, capable of radiating wisdom in every aspect of life.

Astrology, Vāstu, the various aspects of the Vedās, Jyotiṣa, Āyurveda, and more will be thoroughly studied, simplified for easy understanding, and experientially demonstrated to the world. The essence of the authentic Hindu education system lies in practical demonstration and experiential living, where breathing life into matter is the very process of Prāṇapratishṭhā.

Prāṇapratishṭhā goes beyond mere consecration; it is the infusion of life into inert matter, the recognition and reverence of the divinity inherent in all of existence. When a stone is transformed into a deity through Prāṇapratishṭhā, it is the honoring of sacredness in creation. Understand; when life is reduced into matter, it becomes pattern, engram, incompletion. But when life is breathed into matter, it is Prāṇapratishṭhā. When you make a stone into God, it is called Prāṇapratishṭhā. When you make God - which is you - into stone, it is called incompletion.

By embracing the profound science of Prāṇapratishṭhā and realizing the sacred interconnectedness of all existence, we awaken to the divine presence within ourselves and in everything around us. This holistic approach cultivates reverence, harmony, and oneness with the cosmos, ultimately leading to inner transformation and spiritual fulfillment.

Understand, the revival of the great Hindu way of educating is essential for manifesting the true essence of the Śānti mantra in our lives. Let us delve into the profound meaning of the Śānti mantra:

"Om Saha Navavatu
Saha Nau Bhunaktu
Saha Viryam Karavavahai
Tejasvi Navadhitamastu Ma Vidvishavahai
Om Śānti Śānti Śāntihi"

May we be protected together.
May we be nourished together.
May we work together with great energy.
May our intellect be sharpened.
Let there be no animosity amongst us.
Om, peace, peace, peace.

This sacred mantra invokes blessings for unity, protection, nourishment, collaboration, intellectual growth, and harmony among all beings. By reviving the ancient Hindu educational system rooted in holistic learning and experiential wisdom, we can pave the way for a harmonious existence where peace and prosperity prevail for all.

The Śānti mantra says:

Aum may we both (the guru and disciples) together be protected. May we both be nourished and enriched. May we both bring our hands together and work with great energy, strength and enthusiasm from the space of powerfulness. May our study and learning together illuminate both with a sharp, absolute light of higher intelligence. So be it.

May we both not have enmity or incompletion with each other – that is mā vidviṣāvahai. May we both not have enmity or incompletion with each other.

This shows the kind of space the student was given by the teacher. Once education is complete, the Guru does not withhold anything for himself; he gives everything to the student. Therefore, he prays in advance: "Do not turn your arrows against me, because I am going to teach you everything. I will not keep anything reserved for myself."

Only if we understand this Śānti Mantra and the context of the Kaṭhopaniṣad can we even begin to enter into the Upaniṣadic truth. Here, the student is not just requesting but demanding knowledge - from whom? From Death itself, the most terrifying and awe-inspiring figure in the world!

Understand, Naciketā declares: "Because I am established in authenticity, I have the right to your knowledge. Therefore, teach me!" The story of Naciketā exemplifies the extraordinary power of authenticity and trust in the Guru-śiṣya relationship.

Naciketā proclaims: "I trust my authenticity, my ability, my inspiration, my śraddhā as a student. On the strength of that, I demand and command you to be my teacher." With this language of unwavering faith and authenticity, Naciketā demands, and Yama Dharma responds.

By embodying authenticity, ability, inspiration, and śraddhā , Naciketā was able to stand before Yama Dharma and command him to be his teacher.

When the teacher expresses, "Let both of us be illumined," it does not imply that the Guru lacks knowledge or illumination. Instead, it reveals a profound truth: illumination is ultimate but never final - it eternally expands, deepens, and evolves.

By recognizing that enlightenment is ultimate yet ever-expanding, both teacher and student enter into a dynamic exchange of wisdom, creating a sacred space for learning and transformation. This reflects the very essence of Hinduism, where the pursuit of knowledge is inseparably woven with spiritual evolution and self-realization.

Understand, when you open your enlightenment to a disciple and seek to transmit it, the process not only benefits the disciple but also refines, sharpens, and enriches your own enlightenment. Transmission is not a one-way act; it is a living, breathing exchange.

When you share your inner space and lived realizations with a disciple, the very act of giving deepens your own understanding. In this sacred dialogue, both teacher and student grow together. The disciple is elevated by receiving, and the teacher is elevated by the very act of giving. Thus, the consciousness of both is continuously expanded and polished through this divine exchange.

Education Based Ganges-Sarasvati Civilization

auṁ saha nāvavatu |
saha nau bhunaktu |
saha vīryam karvāvahai |
tejasvi nāvadhītamastu mā vidviṣāvahai ||
auṁ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ ||

Aum. May we both together be protected, may we both be nourished and enriched, may we both bring our hands together and work with great strength, energy and enthusiasm. May our study and learning together illumine us both with the sharp absolute light of higher intelligence. So be it. May we both not have enmity or incompletion with each other. Let there be peace, peace, peace. Let there be peace in my inner space, peace in nature, peace in divine forces.

Only when education is producing the human beings of higher Consciousness, can it be called education. Just some set of skills and talent does not make you educated.

Please understand, in any civilization, culture, country, or society, where there is peace, there is tremendous research and development. Fortunately, our civilization was naturally protected on all sides: three sides by the ocean and the fourth by the great mountains, which could never be crossed by ordinary human effort. This natural protection provided immense peace to the Ganga–Sarasvatī civilization - the civilization between the Sarasvatī and the Ganga. That is why war was never a mainstream activity in this land. Please understand, in every civilization, whatever people consider their greatest achievement - the essence of their lifestyle - they build monuments to commemorate it. If they believe waging war and conquering others is the highest purpose, they build monuments for victorious kings or for soldiers who died in battle. War memorials and statues of conquerors stand as their pride. Whatever human beings believe to be the peak of their civilization, they immortalize through monuments, so that the future remembers them by it.

Please understand, waging war was never the mainstream activity of the Ganga–Sarasvatī civilization, the Indus Valley civilization, or the Hindu civilization. War was only for defense and self-protection. Look at the monuments across our country: not even 2 percent are war memorials or symbols of military victory. Nearly 95 percent are dedicated to education, and the remaining to great teachers and educators who shaped the civilization.

Understand, our temples are not monuments of war victories; they are centers of education built in memory of great teachers and educators. They are samādhis of siddhas, not memorials of kings. Only about 2 percent of temples can be considered monuments of victorious kings or war memorials, while nearly 98 percent were dedicated to education and great educators.

In the Gaṅgā–Sarasvatī civilization, the Indus Valley civilization, and the broader Hindu civilization, waging war was never a mainstream activity. It was always reserved for defense and self-protection. This truth becomes evident when we look at the monuments across the land: around 95 percent were dedicated to education, and another 3 percent to great teachers and educators.

Temples in these civilizations were never erected to glorify conquests; they served as living universities, places where knowledge was transmitted and preserved. They were dedicated to revered teachers and siddhas, embodying the civilizational focus on wisdom and spiritual growth. This emphasis on education is also reflected in the Āgama Śāstras, which prescribe that villages and cities must be designed around centers of learning and the pivotal role of teachers.

While wars were not absent in these civilizations, they were never the central focus of daily life. Instead, the culture placed its highest value on peace, research, development, knowledge creation, and exploration in every field of existence. Educators were deeply revered, and knowledge dissemination was considered the noblest contribution to society.

It is important to recognize that these observations are not rooted in ego or pride but are factual reflections of the values and priorities upheld by our ancient civilizations. By understanding their emphasis on education and reverence for teachers, we gain profound insight into their societal structure, aspirations, and enduring legacy - a legacy that continues to inspire humanity even today.

There was so much peace, so much exploration: of the skies and space, of the oceans, of the depths of the earth, and even of the mysteries of fire. So much knowledge was created, preserved, and shared. Even after centuries of destruction and plundering by invaders and colonizers, what remains today is still unimaginable and unmatched. Humanity may need at least 5,000 years to catch up with this vastHindu knowledge, and perhaps 10,000 years to fully grasp the depth of the Hindu education system.

We often highlight how Arjuna emerged as the greatest warrior from the Gurukul, but we overlook the fact that Sahadeva became the greatest astrologer in the very same Gurukul. The entire department of astrology was flourishing there. Yet, our attention remains captivated by Arjuna's mastery in archery and Bhima's strength as the greatest wrestler, while forgetting Sahadeva's brilliance in astrology. Understand, even to excel as the greatest archer, one required knowledge from multiple disciplines - strategy, astronomy, psychology, and more. The Gurukul system provided this integrated learning, where diverse fields of knowledge complemented each other.

When we look at the monuments of our civilization, we realize they reflect what we built, what we revered, what we respected, what we aspired to be, and how we wished to be remembered by future generations. All of these aspirations were centered on the Gurukul system of education. Our culture valued not only warriors but also astrologers, physicians, philosophers, and seers. The knowledge preserved and transmitted through the Gurukul covered physical health, mental health, consciousness, and the extraordinary powers of consciousness. Above all, it focused on making human beings complete. This Gurukul system must once again become the mainstream education system, so humanity can rediscover the wholeness and balance that made our civilization thrive.

Please listen, when I read this Śānti Mantra, I can see very clearly the context of the Hindu education system which was always towards higher and higher intelligence.

auṁ saha nāvavatu |
saha nau bhunaktu |
saha vīryam karvāvahai |
tejasvi nāvadhītamastu mā vidviṣāvahai ||
auṁ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ ||

"May we both be protected together. May we both be nourished and enriched. May we both bring our hands together and work with great strength, energy, and enthusiasm. May our study and learning together illuminate us both with the sharp, absolute light of higher intelligence. So be it. May we both not have enmity or incompletion with each other. Let there be peace, peace, peace."

Nowhere in this mantra does the Guru claim, "I am going to teach you; you are the student." Nowhere does He demand obedience from the disciple. Nowhere is the disciple made to feel that he is a newcomer. In fact, there is no psychological ragging here at all. In most modern educational systems and institutions, ragging originates with the teachers themselves. It is the teachers who, feeling insecure about the fresh, vital energy of new students, create the first divide. By their behavior they send the message: "You are down there; we are up here." This very attitude sets the trend, influencing senior students to imitate their professors, teachers, and principals. Thus, ragging becomes institutionalized.

Not even one iota of ragging exists here. Yama beautifully declares: "May our study and learning happen together." Even if a teacher has been teaching the Vedās for fifty years, in the fifty-first year when he opens the manuscripts - when he opens the palm leaves and reads the very same line - he may suddenly click with a new meaning. Why? Because he knows it is from the Akāśic records.

So the teacher teaches with that humbleness: "May our study and learning together illumine us both - please understand, illumine us both - with the sharp, absolute light of higher intelligence." This is the context the teacher should hold, this is the space from which he should teach. Each line of this mantra introduces the essence of our education system and the sacred context in which it evolved. The next statement is: "May we both not have enmity or incompletion with each other." This is vital because Guru and disciple are going to live together. When you live together, not having incompletion is essential. In modern, non-involving narrative education systems, there is no such living together, no involvement, so the very possibility of incompletion does not arise. But in the Gurukul system, where teacher and disciple share their lives, the absence of incompletion is indispensable.

Understand, a teacher may try to establish superiority so that the disciple does not feel incompletion. But know this clearly: by authority you can never make another complete. Only by your authenticity can you bring about completion in others - never by authority. Whether it takes months or years, it is only when the disciple realizes the Guru's authenticity that true completion happens. Completion cannot be forced through authority; it can only blossom through authenticity.

How Enlightenment is Delivered

Understand, all you need to do in life - all you need to do to make what you want into reality - is to look at the right past. That gives you the courage and hope to relive it and recreate the real future. Here, the word past should not be understood in the context of your personal past, but in the context of our collective past.

You have nothing to learn from your personal past other than this: nothing needs to be learnt from it. The only lesson your personal past gives is that nothing needs to be learnt from it. What we are speaking of here is the glorious past created by our civilization of Ṛṣis.

How the Hindu education system was, and how it should be - the entire context is set in this one Śānti Mantra. The very subject that is about to be taught in this Upaniṣad is the essence of the Hindu education system.

Please understand, the Hindu education system prepares you for death. Using those very same principles, it also prepares you for life. First, it prepares you for death, and then, from that same context, it prepares you for life. Because life is an option, but death is not. Life is a possibility, but death is not. Death alone is a fact, a truth, a reality. Therefore, the Hindu tradition first educates you to face death. And from that space, with those principles, it prepares you to live life.

Yama Dharma, the Master who read the Akāśic Records about death in this Upaniṣad, and Naciketā, one of the greatest disciples ever to be born on this Planet. Please understand, such was the power and authenticity of the disciple that the Master Himself chose to serve him, grant him boons, and bestow upon him this sacred knowledge. Nowhere in this Upaniṣad is there a reference that Naciketā served Yama Dharma. On the contrary, there are clear references that Yama Dharma and even his attendants served Naciketā. It is recorded in this very Upaniṣad that Yama's staff attended to him.

Understand, the authenticity of the disciple is so profound that the Master feels compelled to serve the disciple, to teach, and to share the highest knowledge.

By taking away countless lives and carrying out his cosmic responsibility with absolute precision, Yama had lost sensitivity to the ordinary foolishness of human beings. He was untouched by their tears, emotions, struggles of acceptance, or inability to accept. He was no longer concerned with these fleeting responses. Yet, one of the essential requirements of a true teacher, a genuine Master, is to ensure that the disciple's very being becomes reality. Sometimes, in the process of transformation, the disciple may scream in pain, unable to accept or immediately realize the truth. But still, the Master stands committed - to see the disciple through, until realization dawns.

There is a beautiful story in the Śiva Purāṇa. Viṣṇu took the Varāha Avatar - the body of a pig - to retrieve the Vedās. Once the purpose was fulfilled, instead of returning to Vaikuṇṭha and his original form, he chose to remain in the pig body. He married another female pig, had offspring, and fully immersed himself in the joys of pig life - playing with his children, running around, and enjoying a cozy, simple existence. As the Yuga passed, Viṣṇu still did not return to Vaikuṇṭha.

The Devatās, perplexed, ran to Kailāsa and asked Mahādeva, "Oh Mahādeva, what is happening?" Mahādeva replied, "Go and remind him - he is Viṣṇu, not a pig." The Devatās went, but Viṣṇu, in the pig body, simply drove them away. Despite being in a pig body, he possessed all the powers of Viṣṇu and used them to keep everyone at a distance, wanting to remain in that cozy, mundane life without realizing his true identity.

Finally, Mahādeva sent Devi to intervene. Yet even she could not succeed. She returned, reporting, "He is not recognizing me. He is not even willing to look into my eyes." Seeing the seriousness of the situation, Mahādeva personally intervened. Without any negotiation or warning, He lifted the Varāha Avatar by the neck and kills him.

The moment the consciousness emerged from the form, Viṣṇu realized, "I am Viṣṇu! I am Paraṁdhamā Viṣṇu! I must return to Vaikuṇṭha." Standing before Mahādeva, he humbly said, "I am truly sorry that You had to come down from Kailāsa to free me."

Please understand: when Śiva was tearing the body, it seemed that the pig was crying, calling out every name. But if Mahādeva cared for the pain of the pig, would Viṣṇu have manifested? At some point, the Master must make the disciple stand.

Here, the entire subject is Death. Death Himself is speaking about Himself. He has already become insensitive to the stupidity of human beings. He simply stands tall before the truth of human beings - their possibilities and realities - because he has already attained insensitivity to human folly through his intensity.

The Kaṭhopaniṣad presents such a direct and uncompromising revelation about one of the most important realities of human existence: death. Because of the disciple's authenticity, Yama Dharma does not need to compromise. The authenticity of Yama Dharma, the intensity of Yama Dharma, and the sincerity of Naciketa together created a space for the delivery of reality, for the transmission of Enlightenment.

Gurukul - The Education Centric Family of Guru

auṁ saha nāvavatu |
saha nau bhunaktu |
saha vīryam karvāvahai |
tejasvi nāvadhītamastu mā vidviṣāvahai ||
auṁ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ śāntiḥ ||

This verse explains the context of the Gurukul. Gurukul literally means the "Guru's home." Please understand: in the Hindu tradition, the family is the nucleus. You can demolish thousands of temples or burn countless scriptures, but as long as the family system remains alive, we will endure. We will return. This is because the values of Sanātana Hindu Dharma are transmitted and preserved through the family tradition.

One may either become a Sannyāsi (renunciate) and reside in the Gurukul - which is essentially a large joint family of the Guru's home - or live within a large joint family to the fullest extent possible. It depends on your heart: how many people can it accommodate without judgment.

Wherever you live within a large joint family, dharma thrives. Sanātana Hindu Dharma continues to exist. It is in large joint families that these values can be practiced repeatedly. Each of you will be guided and supported to live according to these Hindu Sanātana Hindu Dharma values.

Gurukul means the Guru's home, the Guru's family. Even if you wish to become a Sannyāsī, you must become part of the Guru's family, which may include Grihastas (householders). Many great sadhus (holy men), monks, monastic members, and Sannyāsīs have studied under Grihastas. Even if you aspire to become a great sādhu or Sannyāsī, you need to be in the Gurukul.

Even the great incarnations, such as Rāma and Kṛṣṇa, studied in Gurukul. In the Hindu tradition, even incarnations like Rāma or Kṛṣṇa attend Gurukul. You cannot say, "What? I am a great incarnation; why should I go to Gurukul?" No. Even if you are consciously born, even if you are endowed with all experiences and spiritual powers, you must study the shāstrās (scriptures) to validate your experiences. This is especially necessary when you wish to reproduce those experiences and powers in others - when you wish to share them. In such cases, Gurukul is essential.

Gurukul is a crucial factor that makes incarnations complete. Without it, you can never fully know the authenticity of your experiences. You will never be able to reproduce the same experiences in others as science. Gurukul is compulsory for anyone within the Hindu tradition. The context for Gurukul is set clearly in this verse.

Our Gurukuls are not teacher-centric; they are education-centric. Please understand: our Gurukuls focus on education, not on the teacher. Students are encouraged to develop and invent things that even their Guru may not know. They are given that freedom. Only the basic formulas and the fundamental tools to awaken knowledge are taught; beyond that, the student is left free to explore independently.

Gurukuls do not operate with rigid rules or fixed frameworks; they exist to support people in exploring their highest creative potential. Gurukuls are not like dams that block the flow of your inspiration and energy - they are more like embankments for a wild river. An embankment guides the river, but unlike a dam, it does not block or restrict it.

This is why many disciples of Advaita (non-dualism) Gurus were Viśiṣṭādvaitis (qualified non-dualists) or Dvaitis (dualists), and many disciples of Viśiṣṭādvaiti or Dvaiti Gurus were Advaitis. This illustrates that only the basic analytical tools were given, yet the student was free to analyze on their own. They were provided with a spoon, but not spoon-fed. You are given the means, not the answers.

You were given complete freedom. Otherwise, you would be surprised to learn that Rāmanuja's Guru was a great Advaiti. Despite being an Advaiti, Rāmanuja was able to think in the language of Viśiṣṭādvaita, which demonstrates the freedom available in the Gurukul. Similarly, many Advaitis studied at the feet of Dvaitis or Viśiṣṭādvaitis.

Chaitanya comes from the school of Nyāyāyikā, the Nyāya Śāstra, which emphasizes logic. He is regarded as the greatest devotee ever to appear on the planet. Chaitanya's origin in the school of Nyāyāyikā - the school of logic from Mayapur. Mayapur was the greatest university for the Nyāyāyikā thought current, which encompasses Nyāya, Vedānta, and Vaiśeṣika. Nyāya is one of the shad-darśanas, and Vaiśeṣika is a furtherance of Nyāya.

Sanātana Hindu Dharma provides only the tools to explore; it imposes no rigid frames, restrictions, or dams. When you read the Śānti Mantra, you will see that it is education-centric, not teacher-centric. Unfortunately, in modern times, because teachers have not fully embraced being education-centric, education has often become more teacher-centric. The verse states: "may we both together be protected," showing that the teacher is praying alongside the student. It is because of this education-centric approach that students are able to explore and reach new heights in their pursuit of knowledge. This is also where the concept of Iśṭa Devatā has emerged. The Guru encourages disciples to travel, discover, reinvent, and invent their own paths and methodologies. The Guru inspires disciples to explore independently, providing support and guidance without being overbearing. The uniqueness of our Gurukuls lies in the freedom they offer to explore and create - they foster constructive freedom.

Pure Seeking of Hindu Tradition

Upaniṣads are the essence of Vedās. Among the Upaniṣads, Kaṭhopaniṣad is Upaniṣad śiromaṇi means it's one of the best Upaniṣads because the subject it deals with is Death.

Please understand: with the right understanding, death can become a source of rejuvenating energy - an energy that revitalizes you. Do not think of death as always a curse; it becomes a curse only when it is misunderstood. In fact, even Cirañjīvatva, or eternal life, can be a curse when it is not understood.

Do you know about the Cirañjīvis of the world, such as Prahlāda, Mārkaṇḍeya, Hanumān, and Aśvatthāmā? Among these Cirañjīvis, Aśvatthāmā was cursed to be immortal. It is important to note that Aśvatthāmā's Cirañjīvatva was not a boon; the fact that he will never die is a curse, not a blessing. Just imagine never dying: if you do not understand life, you would likely end up overwhelmed by boredom and despair.

When life is not understood, life itself becomes a curse. Similarly, when death is not understood, death becomes a curse. However, if both life and death are understood, every encounter with death presents an opportunity to rejuvenate and inhabit a new body. The Kaṭhopaniṣad discusses death in depth and reveals many secrets about it, guiding one on how to live so as to understand death and attain liberation at the time of natural death.

Understand Yama Dharma's unique way of radiating both fear and compassion - how he instills trembling in those who do not comprehend death, yet showers compassion upon those who seek to understand it. Yama Dharma must have been the loneliest being, with no friends, no one willing to converse with him, and no one desiring to understand or listen to him. Perhaps Naciketa was the first person genuinely interested in speaking to him, listening to him, and understanding death firsthand.

We, as Hindus, should have taken the Kaṭhopaniṣad more seriously. It is unfortunate that it is not integrated into our daily lives; it is often recited only at the time of death rather than studied as a guide for living. If the Kaṭhopaniṣad were treated as a book for everyday life, the understanding of death it imparts would profoundly transform one's energy, consciousness, and way of living. A person who truly comprehends death experiences an unending, inexhaustible excitement and enthusiasm for life.

Three characters appear in this Upaniṣad: Naciketa's father, Vājaśravas; Naciketa himself - the hero of the Upaniṣad; and Yama Dharma, the Rishi of the Upaniṣad whose words form the major portion of this text. Understand that Rajas, Tamas, and Sattva are the three guṇas (qualities) inherent in human beings. Everything in the world is composed of these three qualities: Sattva, Rajas, and Tamas. Sattva represents pure seeking; Rajas is powerful but often confused, complicated, and contradictory; Tamas symbolizes inertia or death.

Naciketa embodies pure seeking (Sattva), while his father, the king, represents Rajas - powerful yet confused. Observing Vājaśravas in this Upaniṣad, one sees a wealthy, rich king who seemingly possesses everything. Yet, he still does not feel complete or fulfilled. The absence of fulfillment is one challenge, but not understanding why one feels incomplete is an even greater problem.

Vājaśravas, Naciketa's father, not only lacks completeness but also fails to comprehend the reason for his incompleteness. This is a significant issue faced by many wealthy individuals. Unless one is spiritually rich, one may feel incomplete without understanding the cause. This lack of insight can lead to confusion and disturb one's life. When the root cause of incompleteness is unrecognized, one may mistakenly label it as insecurity. Insecurity arises when the reasons for one's incompleteness and the patterns sustaining it remain unidentified.

Naciketa's father makes a similar mistake - Vājaśravas embodies Rajas and confusion. He realizes that he is incomplete but fails to comprehend the reasons for his incompleteness because he lacks an understanding of the science of completion. He mistakenly believes that his fear of losing pleasures and status is the cause of his incompleteness. Consequently, he attempts to retain all his pleasures even after death, projecting the idea of heaven.

Heaven, in this context, is nothing but a simple and illusory construct of an incomplete mind, compounded by confusion and complications. Understand the concept of heaven: it is your confused mind attempting to extend whatever you perceive as important in life due to insecurity. Because of this insecurity, you try to preserve what you consider security even beyond death, creating the notion of heaven. True heaven, however, is completion, which can be experienced here and now.

Vājaśravas, embodying Rajas, is unable to guide Sattva toward enlightenment because he himself is confused. How can one guide others when one is lost? Driven by his desire for heaven, he gives away his possessions. He fears that in the future, all his wealth and possessions might be taken away. Therefore, he wishes for everything to remain permanently with him. When the Vedās instruct him to give away what he has in charity, promising that he will receive everything in heaven, it signifies that by letting go and giving generously, his insecurity will dissolve. Through this process, he attains completion, and only then can he reside eternally and permanently in heaven.

However, without understanding the context behind why the Vedās prescribe charity, Vājaśravas mistakenly views charity and heaven as a transaction or bargain. It is crucial to realize that it is not a bargain. Often, your insecurity and inauthentic identity are rooted in what you perceive as "I" and "Mine." These two concepts lie at the core of all your incompletions. People commonly believe that "I" comes first, followed by "Mine," but in reality, "Mine" comes first and shapes your sense of self - who you think you are is based on what you consider yours.

Many times, that "Yours" and "Mine" become the source of "I." Therefore, if you give away all of them, the incompletions will also disappear. You will evolve a new "I" that can be reinvented and rebuilt from a place of completion. A poor man is someone who has never truly faced poverty. If you have never experienced poverty even once, you will lack the inner space needed to reinvent yourself.

This is why, in the science of enlightenment, at some point, you must break free and renounce everything. You need to be on the streets empty-handed, until you do not own anything; nothing should influence your sense of "I." Your "I" should depend solely on "I"; the mind cannot serve as the foundation of your sense of self. To truly grasp this concept, one should spend at least one year in life empty-handed - without possessions, without relationships, without friends, without money - just nothing. That one year provides the strength to reinvent yourself and rebuild a new "I" from a space of completion.

Fasting can rekindle and awaken your entire immune system. Many Jain monks fast and live only on hot water for an entire year. They do not die unless they consciously decide to give up the body. Jain sadhus are among the healthiest and longest-living monastic Sannyāsīs. Whether in terms of longevity or the quality of their activism, they are incomparable. The secret lies in fasting: it rejuvenates the immune system because, when there is no load on the body, the system gains space to reinvent itself.

Sometimes, wealth becomes a stinking burden on your consciousness. It prevents you from reinventing yourself. In such moments, charity is the best solution. At least for one year in your life, step away from everything - friends, family, contacts, wealth, anything that weighs you down. Suddenly, you will witness natural, spontaneous completions occurring within you. You will intuitively know how to reinvent yourself.

If you are feeling stuck, confused, or disturbed like Vājaśravas, remove yourself from all that is familiar for one year. Your very sense of "I" will be altered. Because of "Mine," you built "I." When that "Mine" is removed, the "I" can be rebuilt. Many wealthy individuals have shared: "There was a time I declared bankruptcy; I had nothing. No food, no friends, no support. I was homeless and begging on the streets." That period of life is a blessing, whether they recognize it or not. It is the time when "Mine" is taken away, the "I" melts down, and all incompletions vanish. You will gain an inner space from which you can reinvent and rebuild yourself from a place of completion.

Blessed are those who have experienced utter poverty at least once in life. Such an experience creates a space within you to reinvent yourself. This is the context for which charity has been prescribed by the Upaniṣads and the Vedās. They clearly state: whatever you truly value, give it away; whatever you consider your wealth, offer it in charity. Unfortunately, Vājaśravas is thoroughly confused and does not understand this context. He believes that if he gives now, he will earn puṇya (merit), which he can then use as a form of currency in heaven to acquire luxuries - such as a suite room, spa access, swimming pool access, or the food he desires. Because he is confused and lacks the patience to look within and grasp the true reason why the Upaniṣads prescribe charity, he regards giving as merely a moral lesson.

When the context is missed, life is inevitably mismanaged. Vājaśravas misses the context entirely and performs charity as if it were a transaction. In any kind of bargaining, naturally, the one who cheats is considered brilliant or successful. Thus, when he loses sight of the context, he begins "cheating." He gives away cows that have already borne calves, drunk sufficient water, eaten enough grass, and produced all the milk they can offer - essentially, cows that are no longer fully useful except for cow dung and urine. He engages in charity with what is no longer valuable to him, giving away only things that are no longer useful.

Even though Rajas gives birth to Sattva, when Rajas can no longer guide Sattva, Sattva turns to the Master, Yama Dharma. Yama Dharma is not the embodiment of Tamas; he is the embodiment of the Master. Please understand: if you do not comprehend the Master, he may seem like the embodiment of Tamas. When misunderstood, he may appear as Tamas, but when truly understood, you will realize that he is the embodiment of Tapas.

The first rebel in this Upaniṣad is Naciketa, who perceives his father's lack of understanding. Observing that his father cannot guide him, Naciketa does not simply rebel; he does not hesitate to stand up or begin seeking on his own. In the Upaniṣads, Naciketa is the first hero we encounter. Even in the Bhagavad Gītā, many lines are repeated from the Kaṭhopaniṣad - not only the concepts but the actual expressions. This shows that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was profoundly imbued with the Kaṭhopaniṣad in His inner space.

Remember: whatever resides in your inner space naturally manifests when you speak. For instance, when advising or counseling someone, the words you speak reflect the fullness of your inner understanding. Similarly, by repeating lines verbatim from the Kaṭhopaniṣad, Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa demonstrates that He is entirely full of the Kaṭhopaniṣad.

The Kaṭhopaniṣad is an earlier literature than the Bhāgavatam, predating Kṛṣṇa's time. Naciketa is senior to Rāma, Kṛṣṇa, and all other known incarnations and heroes.

There was a time when aliens were not considered aliens by us. Please understand: when the mind divides and fragments, even people from other countries are labeled as aliens. This is extreme foolishness. Some so-called developed countries refer to foreign citizens as aliens, reflecting an abusive and arrogant mindset. In the past, however, our hearts were vast and expansive. In the Satya Yuga, even aliens were not seen as outsiders; they could move freely, and we could visit their space and return without difficulty. It was during this time that the story of Naciketa unfolded - a seven-year-old child who could walk directly to Yama's abode, where Yama appeared clearly in his form.

This story begins with Vājaśravas, a king who had grown very old. He had a son named Naciketa, a child of only seven years or perhaps even younger. Driven by insecurity about life and desiring heavenly pleasures after his passing, the king consulted a Hindu priest who recommended a certain ritual from the Vedās to attain heaven. Unfortunately, this greedy king, unable to comprehend the context of the ritual, began performing it as if it were a mere business transaction. Instead of offering the best of what he had, he started giving away cows that were practically useless to the recipients - they could no longer produce milk or bear calves and had become very old.

In Hindu tradition, cows are never killed, even when they become old; they are maintained and cared for. Yet Vājaśravas gave away cows that were truly aged and in need of care. The Upaniṣad poetically describes this: "The cows have drunk enough water and have no more power to drink; they have finished eating grass and thus have aged; they cannot eat anymore, their milk has been extracted, and they cannot yield any more; they have lost the power of their senses and organs to give birth." Without understanding the context, the king attempted to perform the ritual by giving away such cows.

Naciketa, his son, who fortunately had not yet developed any deep-rooted patterns, approached his father and questioned him about this entire situation. This is the scene described in the Upaniṣad. The space in which the Upaniṣad narrates this story is profoundly beautiful. Even though human society has deeply divided itself and moved far away from Advaita, the notion that people from other planets are "aliens" reflects a significant departure from the space of Oneness. Similarly, considering people from other countries as aliens constitutes another major deviation. Furthermore, labeling members of other communities or religions as aliens deepens this separation. This progression leads humanity toward lower and lower states of existence. Despite humanity's distance from the original Advaitic space, the story of Naciketa remains profoundly relevant to us.

First, Naciketa, the hero of the Upaniṣad, filled with Sattva and pure seeking, is a child of less than seven years who has not yet developed any deep-rooted patterns. Vājaśravas, the king, on the other hand, has mastered all the tactics of rulership, conquered many smaller kingdoms, and understands the nuances of governance and business. A king is meant to establish authority through power, not through business practices that exploit citizens or drain wealth from them. When these two aspects overlap, it constitutes an abuse of power. The Hindu tradition clearly defines four major powers of human society: knowledge, weapons, wealth (money), and land. These four powers were deliberately kept separate in different groups to ensure the decentralization of authority. There was no centralization or autocratic governance; rather, a democratic approach was maintained. Even a king had to be a benevolent ruler, exercising authority without autocracy. He could not act solely based on personal desires, because knowledge belonged to one group, wealth to another, weapons to a third, and land to yet another.

However, when a king attempts to play the role of a businessman, he not only compromises his own life but also the lives of his citizens. Vājaśravas, in this story, develops a foolish business mentality. Perhaps, despite his position, he still feels empty inside and unfulfilled. In attempting to encroach upon the space of wealth, he cultivates this misguided business mindset. One must look deeply within to discern whether knowledge, wealth, weapons (power), or land can provide true fulfillment. A clear decision is required.

But Vājaśravas is a typical king who is confused. He himself is uncertain about what will truly fulfill him. He is not clear about what brings real satisfaction. A king developing a business mentality is the cheapest form of error. He should understand that he "owns" people who, in turn, own wealth, land, and political power. When one is fulfilled with knowledge, one naturally understands that one has authority over those who possess wealth, land, and political influence. This is the true power of knowledge. Similarly, when one is fulfilled with the power of weapons and political authority, one naturally recognizes dominion over those who possess knowledge, wealth, and land.

When one feels empty inside and insecure, thoughts arise such as: "Who controls these individuals with wealth? I am not sure they will heed me. I am not sure I truly own them. Perhaps I should take ownership of the wealth directly." This is when the mixing of castes occurs, as Kṛṣṇa mentions in the Gītā - when insecurity drives an individual to appropriate domains that belong to others' mental setups.

Varnāśrama Dharma is one of the most misunderstood and abused concepts in Hinduism. Many anti-Hindu forces have exploited this and other principles - such as Sati, the practice of widows committing suicide to protect themselves from barbaric Islamic invaders who would rape them even after death- to attack Hinduism and distort its teachings. However, a careful examination of history shows that there is no record of a Hindu king, even after conquering another kingdom, disrespecting women, raping them, imprisoning them, abusing them, or using them.

Our women carried the finest DNA, carefully cultivated by our Ṛṣis. The Gotra system is essentially a code for these special DNA layers. Our Ṛṣis mastered the science of embedding specific bio-memory into these genetic layers. When a child is born into a certain Gotra, this knowledge is inherently present - they merely need an appropriate environment to recover and express it fully.

Stealing our women was the worst crime committed. That is the worst conspiracy against Hinduism because it targeted the best DNA that our ancestors built with so much sacrifice. This is what is described in the Bhagavad Gītā:

adharmābhibhavāt kṛṣṇa praduṣyanti kula-striyaḥ |
strīṣu duṣṭāsu vārṣṇeya jāyate varṇa-saṅkaraḥ || 1.40 ||

By prevalence of impiety, O Kṛṣṇa, the women of the family become corrupt, and women becoming corrupted, O Vārṣṇeya, there arises intermingling of castes.

saṅkaro narakāyaiva kula-ghnānāṁ kulasya ca |
patanti pitaro hy eṣāṁ lupta-piṇḍodaka-kriyāḥ || 1.41 ||

Confusion of caste leads to hell of the slayers of the family, for their forefathers fall, deprived of the offerings of the Piṇḍa, the rice ball and water.

There are many verses in the Gītā addressing this concept. Although these words are uttered by Arjuna to Kṛṣṇa, they reflect the common understanding prevalent in those times. Please understand: we need to examine the entire community system with an attitude of investigation, not with judgment or abuse. Be very clear - our civilization was created for Enlightenment. When an individual is not complete in this janma (birth), they will take birth in the next janma within the same family and environment, resuming their journey from where they left off. This is the fundamental purpose of our civilization. Those invaders who do not believe in the concept of next janma - who are they to critique our civilization? Anti-Hindu forces are among the most dangerous on the planet because they lack knowledge and have no interest in investigation. Their only tools are brute force and weapons, used to suppress those who contemplate and seek understanding.

However, when human society broadly begins to seek and investigate, it is the age of knowledge for humanity. The era of controlling people through weapons is coming to an end, thanks to a new generation that seeks knowledge. Today, even a middle-class person can easily access information on topics as simple as where to buy organic vegetables or as profound as awakening the third eye, all through the Internet. Humanity has begun moving toward investigation, inquiry, and understanding. This is the most promising development for the future of human civilization.

Please understand: this discrimination within the community system was imposed upon us by invaders. Consider the Gāyatri Mantra, chanted by all Brahmins - it was revealed by a Kṣatriya, Viśvāmitra. Vyāsa, who is revered by all Brahmins, was born to a fisherwoman, a Śūdra.

If there had been any intent to establish Brahminical superiority, we had more than enough intelligence to alter history. Instead of stating that Vyāsa was born to a fisherwoman, we could have simply said, "A great Brahmin lady, a Brahmin virgin, was sitting in the boat; Vyāsa was born to her." How quickly could history have been rewritten in just two lines? We were not interested in Brahminical supremacy. Understand, our intention was never to establish authority or superiority; we were straightforward and truthful.

Please understand that in every temple, Ādi Śaivas are required to perform worship. Ādi Śaivas are considered the purest Brahmins and are respected even by Brahmins as higher than Brahmins. The Ādi Śaiva Brahmins are esteemed by the entire Brahmin community because they take care of and maintain the temple, performing seva to the gods and goddesses directly. In this sense, Ādi Śaivas hold a status higher than the Brahmins - they are a step above within the Brahmin hierarchy. Every day, they worship the saints of Hindu tradition, among whom at least twenty are Dalits.

Dalit brothers and sisters need to understand that Hinduism never alienated you. You have been taught distorted history and poisoned with false narratives. This entire issue needs to be revisited with clarity. The practice of Sati was not our tradition; it was forced upon us. Why would a Rājput queen - who until yesterday lived as a respected and revered queen, honored even by the king - suddenly choose to burn herself? In the saptapadī (the seven steps that represent the seven vows in a Hindu wedding), the fourth vow is: "You will not force yourself on the other person, physically or psychologically, whenever the other is not ready." This is the very fourth vow of marriage. When she had been living with such dignity, treated with sacred respect even within marriage, why would she suddenly choose a life of being brutally tortured, raped, abused, and tormented by a fully drunk invader? For her, burning herself was the only option left to escape a lifetime of humiliation. Sati was imposed upon our women by rapist invaders.

Hindu women are embodiments of grace. In Rājput history, there is a clear reason why they chose burning themselves over drinking poison, which could have been a less painful death. Burning is one of the most excruciating forms of death, yet they embraced it so that even after death, no one could violate their bodies. Rājput women knew these invaders, driven by lust and uncontrollable violence, would go to any extent - even desecrating the dead. Therefore, they chose to burn themselves, ensuring that their dignity remained untouchable even in death.

Please understand: Sati was forced upon us. Caste discrimination too was forced upon us. The Gotra system, in its original form, was never meant for discrimination. It was created to properly preserve and protect the Y-chromosome, to prevent genetic disorders, and above all, to safeguard the transmission of major branches of knowledge. Much of this knowledge was carefully preserved in our very DNA, carried forward through generations.

It is now time for us to cultivate a new humanity, a new generation, by offering all the best practices and knowledge that we possess. Only then will the world truly understand the significance of our community system, the purpose of the Gotra system, and the reason why marriages traditionally occur within certain Gotras and not across others.

These matters are not separate from the subject of the Kaṭhopaniṣad. On the contrary, this is precisely the context in which the Kaṭhopaniṣad unfolded. This is the stage upon which this līlā took place, because only when the stage is set can the līlā itself be understood. Without the context, the depth of the Upaniṣad will be missed.

In truth, many foreign invaders came to Bhārata not merely for gold or material wealth—those were secondary. They were drawn by our DNA, particularly preserved through our women, who serve as the custodians and repositories of our most refined genetic memory. They sought the best-developed, most advanced DNA, and this became one of the deeper reasons behind the repeated invasions of our civilization.

In this story of Vājaśravas, he is a king who, feeling insecure, was advised to perform a fire ritual from the Vedās. However, he began without understanding the context. His son, Naciketa, questioned him. Firstly, the king immersing himself in the mindset of business or bargaining reflects a deep identity crisis. Please understand, a king is expected to embody power and generosity, to give constantly and contribute abundantly. If he fails in this, he risks faltering and fading away. A king is not meant to be eternal, but while he reigns, he must wield authority and power with clarity. He cannot afford to adopt the mental framework of a Vaiśya, a businessman. In the same way, a person of knowledge is not expected to give charity in the worldly sense; rather, they are expected to embody and uphold the highest standard of consciousness. Their responsibility is to live, remember, and share spiritual wisdom continuously. Even a small mistake in this role cannot be afforded.

During times of war, a king may inevitably cause harm to innocents not directly involved in the conflict. Because of the nature of war, such casualties do not bring the same weight of sin. But for a Brahmaṇa - a person of knowledge - even the harming of an ant is unacceptable. Their very dharma is ahiṃsā, non-violence in thought, word, and deed. Thus, each role within society carries distinct expectations and responsibilities. When one strays from this authenticity, collapse of identity occurs. This is what the Gītā refers to as jāti-naṣṭa - the intermingling of castes, the confusion of roles, leading to impurity.

It is crucial to understand that in ancient times, jāti was determined by one's mental disposition, not merely by birth. For instance, Viśvāmitra, though classified as a Kṣatriya(warrior) by jāti, is revered as the highest Brāhmaṇa - honored as Brahma Ṛṣi by none other than Vaśiṣṭha. This shows clearly that it is the mental state that define one's role, not mere lineage. Each individual must authentically uphold the role expected of them within society.

Here lies the first misstep - the initial plunge into collapse: Vājaśravas, instead of standing tall in the strength of a Kṣatriya, slips into powerlessness and adopts the mentality of a Vaiśya, a businessman. For a Kṣatriya, this fall is catastrophic. If a Śūdra falters, the damage is largely limited to himself or, at most, his family. If a Vaiśya falters, his collapse affects him and his community - those who depend on his wealth and livelihood. But when a Kṣatriya falters, the entire society, the whole nation, is shaken. The weight of collective stability rests on his shoulders. Therefore, if a Kṣatriya abandons his rightful mental state and slips into transactional thinking, society faces collapse. Such a Kṣatriya, in truth, forfeits his very right to exist.

Likewise, if a Brāhmaṇa falters, the consequences are also grave - the loss of knowledge, the corruption of wisdom. A Brāhmaṇa cannot afford even a minor lapse. In this case, Vājaśravas abandoned the essence of Kṣatriya-dharma and embraced the mentality of a merchant, rooted in bargaining and give-and-take transactions. From this fall was born his deep insecurity. That insecurity dragged him further down, and the further he fell, the more insecure he became. Thus, he was caught in a vicious cycle of collapse.

One of the greatest dangers is not the act of falling itself, but the inability to rise again. Falling is not as detrimental as refusing to investigate the cause of the fall. Vājaśravas not only stumbled but also failed to look into why he stumbled; instead, he hastily drew the wrong conclusion. If he was truly feeling insecure, the right step would have been to seek guidance from his Guru, not to attempt a self-diagnosis. Trying to resolve such a fundamental issue on one's own is like relying on over-the-counter medication without a proper diagnosis. It is like saying, "I have a headache; let me just pick up some tablets from the pharmacy," without investigating the root cause. After two years, one may suddenly discover it was not a simple headache but a brain tumor. Such is the risk of prescribing solutions for oneself without proper guidance.

Vājaśravas made precisely this mistake - he diagnosed his problem superficially, without delving deeper into its roots. A Guru would never deny guidance to a receptive seeker. The only reason a Guru withholds is when the disciple lacks receptivity. Whether Vājaśravas lacked receptivity, or whether he neglected to approach his Rājaguru altogether, is uncertain. What is clear is that he chose to resolve his sense of incompleteness independently. He assumed his insecurity was merely due to aging and uncertainty - whether his pleasures and joys would remain with him for the rest of his life. Based on this shallow diagnosis, he devised his own misguided solution.

Please understand, in any field, having more than what is required - an opulent or luxurious lifestyle - diminishes your strength. It is vital to grasp that possessing more than what is necessary to sustain life, whether you are a Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya, Śūdra, or belong to any other category, inevitably destroys your power, intelligence, and capacity to reinvent yourself.

Imposed poverty or minimal living awakens many of your hidden possibilities and capacities to experience life in its fullest potential. Self-imposed poverty, or minimal living - the lifestyle of aparigraha - is, in fact, the most luxurious life you can live. In such a state, nothing external is needed to entertain, excite, or sustain you. Your very breathing will be sufficient for you to enjoy your existence and celebrate your being.

The lifestyle of aparigraha, which means living with the least, is the most profound luxury available to a human being. It constantly keeps you alive, alert, and active at your peak potential, with both mind and body vibrant. The sannyāsis from two traditions in particular - the Jains and the Madhwa Sampradāya - demonstrate this truth by embracing simplicity, living with minimal possessions, yet radiating the most active, energetic lifestyles.

Here, Vājaśravas was, unfortunately, burdened with excessive luxuries. He lost the knowledge and sense of how to remain truly alive and active. When luxury becomes a lifestyle, it inevitably diminishes your possibilities. It erodes your inner strength, weakening both body and mind, and crippling your ability to adapt and evolve with the flow of life. Living a life of luxury for as long as twelve years can extinguish every positive quality within you. You become heavy - not only in body but also in mind. Heaviness makes it difficult to accommodate others in your inner space, and gradually all avenues for expansion - whether in business, career, profession, or even personal life - begin to shrink.

On the other hand, individuals who share their wealth through giving and charity remain light, active, and expansive. This is why many modern multinational companies encourage their employees to give, even matching their donations. Though it may look like generosity, these companies are actually nurturing themselves - because giving keeps their people active, engaged, and in the space of growth.

A person who truly gives up is the most active individual. The rigidity and heaviness born of a luxurious lifestyle can completely suffocate your ability to reinvent yourself. Vājaśravas must have been immersed in luxury and alcohol for forty to fifty years, occasionally seeking pleasure with women, yet always circling back into the same cycle of indulgence. In this endless loop, he lost the originality and the power of reinvention that are essential for a king's role.

Please understand, luxury should be reserved only for rare occasions - moments of celebration or festivals. Indulging once in a while is acceptable, but when luxury hardens into a way of life, you begin to lose the very qualities necessary for your dharma. By this stage, Vājaśravas may have already lost the ability to engage in warfare, make sound decisions, preside over court proceedings, or even wield a sword with strength. When a king begins to adopt the mindset of a businessman, it does not happen overnight - it signals a slow decline that has been eroding him for years.

It is important to understand that all collapses unfold gradually over time, never in a single moment or a single day. Collapse happens only after a prolonged gap - when one is not reminded of one's true identity, not encouraged to remain authentic. Unfortunately, Vājaśravas collapsed; otherwise, he would never have engaged in such a cheap act. A king, whether in a sacrifice, a yājña, a spiritual or religious ritual, or even in ordinary acts of giving, should ensure that neither his hand nor the receiver's hand can hold onto what is given. That is true giving. Real giving means that both the giver and the receiver cannot cling to what is given - it transcends mere material exchange. A king should give in such a manner, on such a scale.

In truth, to be a giver you require only one thing: powerfulness - not material objects. It is this inner powerfulness that forms the essence of true giving. Consider the Mahābhārata: Karṇa, the greatest giver, was only the king of a small kingdom, Aṅga Deśa - a fraction of the vast empires of Duryodhana or the Pāṇḍavas. Yet, Karṇa was able to give abundantly because he grasped the sacred secret of giving. Giving itself keeps you active and alive; it ignites a fire in you to create more. And when you are active and driven to create more, your creativity flows endlessly.

Creativity is an infinite resource; it unfolds without limit in the life of one who gives generously rather than hoards. This is how human beings are meant to live - rich not because of the zeros in a bank account, but because they have tapped into the inexhaustible reservoir of creativity. True richness comes from this boundless resource, not from wealth that sits dead in numbers. If you think of yourself as a hero simply because of the zeros in your bank balance, then understand: you are nothing more than a Vājaśravas. You are just a Vājaśravas. Without the spirit of Naciketa within you, your path will inevitably lead to Yama.

Vājaśravas became numb and desensitized by the self-imposed punishment of luxury. A luxurious lifestyle is a prison you build for yourself, and within it you slowly lose your sensitivity. The ability to confront a crisis, to respond sharply, to adapt with flexibility, to rise to new circumstances - all of this is eroded by the slow poison of continuous luxury.

Please understand: if you are wealthy, do not punish yourself with luxury. That is the greatest punishment you can inflict upon yourself. Do not destroy yourself simply because you are rich. Once your muscle memory and bio-memory are trained into luxury, they lose the very power to reinvent themselves. They become inactive, fragile, incapable of crisis management, unable to expand.

Those who have punished themselves with their wealth, as opposed to those who have not punished themselves with a luxurious lifestyle, belong to two distinct groups. Only the latter group can sustain their spontaneity, crisis-management skills, and creativity. Their muscle memory and bio-memory remain active, enabling them to sustain their lives, manage their affairs, and expand the empires they have built.

If you wish to harm someone, simply lead them into an addiction to a luxurious lifestyle; thereafter, they will self-destruct. By glamorizing luxury for them, you effectively rid yourself of adversaries. Anyone ensnared in the mental trap of luxury need not instill fear in you, for they will ultimately bring about their own downfall. You must understand this fundamental truth: your very identity begins to crumble the moment you abandon a lifestyle of minimalism (aparigraha).

In the Āgamas, Mahādeva extols the aparigraha lifestyle. The essence of aparigraha lies in living with minimal possessions so as to remain vibrant, active, and to preserve brilliant muscle memory and bio-memory. Conversely, a life of luxury desensitizes individuals and gradually draws them toward negativity. It impairs metabolism, diminishes one's capacity for joy, and distorts their overall approach to life. Luxurious individuals often find themselves among the most frustrated people on Earth.

The primary issue in developed countries is not depression, but frustration - a frustration born of self-inflicted torture through indulgence in luxury. Possessing wealth in itself is not wrong, but tormenting oneself with an extravagant lifestyle is a grave mistake. It is crucial not to punish yourself with luxury; such a lifestyle is obsolete and no longer aligned with the spirit of modern living.

Embracing Mahādeva's lifestyle is truly fashionable, modern, and cool. The contemporary world should recognize and adopt Mahādeva's way of living as the very epitome of coolness. To create as one desires and to celebrate freely - without punishing oneself through luxury - must be prioritized over outdated practices that inevitably lead to self-destruction.

Returning to Mahādeva's fashionable lifestyle includes embracing arranged marriages facilitated by mature parents who possess balanced judgment. This approach allows for a more successful and stable selection process compared to outdated methods driven by hormonal imbalances, which often result in dating mishaps, depression, and divorce. Choosing a life partner through parental guidance, far from being old-fashioned, is in fact a more fashionable, modern, and reliable approach.

Luxury kills you while you are still alive. It makes you insensitive and pushes you into an identity crisis. Luxury is the breeding ground for Self-Doubt, Self-Hatred, and Self-Denial (SDHD). A continuous indulgence in luxury creates deep-rooted SDHD. Worse still, it develops into SSDHD - Strong Self-Doubt, Self-Hatred, and Self-Denial. Having wealth is not a problem, but because you possess wealth, you need not abuse yourself with a luxurious lifestyle. Remain as simple as possible so that you retain the freedom to reinvent yourself. Individuals who chase after luxury are, in truth, the weakest and most insecure, lacking strength and trust in their own lives. Luxury kills you even as you live.

You can easily be put into pain if you are of a business nature. Please understand: if you are a business-natured person, even the attack on one of your shops is enough to make you withdraw from politics or power games. Always try to understand your nature based on your root pattern and fulfill that. This alone will bring a tremendous sense of having truly lived. Please understand: the feeling that you lived, the fulfillment that you lived, is the very first step toward Enlightenment. There are extraordinary Paramahaṃsās who do not even need to enter into life; they can simply exhaust all their patterns internally and directly attain Enlightenment. But 99% of us are not like that. We step into regular life, experience its ups and downs, and work through our root patterns. It is about the fulfillment of having lived.

Self-actualization is the first step toward Self-realization. The feeling of having lived is a basic requirement. In the Hindu tradition, this is called Pratyakātma Caitanya Jāgrat - the awakening of Individual Consciousness in the body. The Individual Consciousness, which you perceive as ultimately conscious, is not truly individual; it is Cosmic. Yet, the Individual Consciousness that you perceive as individual, when awakened within your body, is the very first step. When this awakening happens, you will experience a profound sense of fulfillment. A Vaiśya should live as a Vaiśya, a Brāhmaṇa as a Brāhmaṇa, and a Kṣatriya as a Kṣatriya.

It is not that the Hindu tradition does not allow the growth of the individual. It certainly does, but through inner transformation. When you transform within, you can evolve. There are countless examples of those born as Śūdras who came to be worshipped as Brāhmaṇas by brāhmaṇottamas. Kāśī stands as a living testimony to this. Ādi Śaṅkara, the greatest architect of modern-day Hinduism and the establisher of all the Brāhmaṇical sampradāyas, fell at the feet of a Caṇḍāla - not even a Śūdra, but one considered lower than a Śūdra. Later, his disciples, unable to digest the fact that he bowed to a Caṇḍāla, portrayed that Caṇḍāla as none other than an incarnation of Viśvanātha. That is a different matter. But the truth remains: Ādi Śaṅkara bowed at the feet of a Caṇḍāla, and that is a fact.

What does this signify? The Hindu tradition never blocks growth; it insists that true growth must arise from within - propelled, initiated, and ignited from inner space. You cannot seek to ascend for the sake of external comforts while merely pretending to climb the next rung of the ladder.

Take the case of Vājaśravas. He was not even rising; he was falling. A Kṣatriya - a ruler, a king - is meant to be constantly giving. Please understand: in the Hindu tradition, only two communities are permitted to hold wealth. Vaiśyas are allowed to hold. Śūdras are allowed to possess and hold. A Kṣatriya may only control resources on behalf of the country but cannot personally hoard them. A Brāhmaṇa, even more so, cannot do so at all.

The definition of Artha - wealth and possession - is very clear in the Hindu tradition. Vaiśyas and Śūdras alone are permitted to have personal wealth. A Kṣatriya may protect and administer wealth, but only on behalf of the country, the community, or the society he rules. He has no right to personally own or possess it. At most, until his coronation as king, the prince or princess may retain some wealth - gifts received from parents or elders. This is why, in the Mahābhārata, you see that Duryodhana had a small amount of personal wealth - a few lakh gold coins, which is insignificant - but Dhṛtarāṣṭra, as king, could not possess any. Until coronation, a royal heir may have a little, but once enthroned as king or queen, personal wealth is no longer permitted. From then onward, they may only manage resources on behalf of the kingdom or the community, never as their own personal property.

A Brāhmaṇa, even more strictly, is forbidden not only from personal possession but also from administering wealth on behalf of the state. Here, Vājaśravas falls into the cheap mentality of personal possession. Understand: the very moment you develop the mentality of personal ownership, the seed of business arises within you. That is the beginning of a "business mentality." In this fall, Vājaśravas descends from the level of a Kṣatriya to that of a Vaiśya. Worse still, by committing fraud in the act of giving - offering useless cows - he falls below even the Vaiśya level. His authenticity collapses in what can only be described as a free fall.

Understand: most of the time, simply recognising the problem is enough to solve it. Ask yourself: what authentic identity do you want to inhabit? That is your goal - the way you wish to exist. It may be Brāhmaṇa, Vaiśya, Kṣatriya, or Śūdra - any is acceptable. From that authentic identity, assess how many steps you have fallen. See the free fall. The moment you perceive it, you will awaken.

The free fall continues as long as you remain unaware of it; it stops the instant you know it is happening to you. It is unfortunate that you are not reminded that the free fall is occurring - the entertainment industry organises distractions so you do not engage with life intensely or live authentically.

Please understand: anything great can be achieved only by keeping the entertainment industry largely out of your life. The common claim - "you will be stressed if you don't get a little entertainment" - is misleading. You indulge, and does it relieve stress? No; you become more stressed. While the constant free fall continues, you are not allowed to recognise it, to examine it, or to understand it. Take this seriously: in the first week of withdrawing from such distractions you may feel something is missing; that feeling is temporary. Use the internet to read necessary news and information, but restrict it to words - avoid sound and visuals when possible. Treat this as a powerful mental fasting. The Hindu tradition states: āhāra śuddhau smṛti śuddhiḥ - the purity of food leads to the purity of memory. Remember: it is not only the food you eat physically; it is the food you take in through all five senses.

Of course, you must know what is happening in the world; you need information to run your life. Gather everything you need from the internet, but keep it in plain, text-only form - a Word-style document or simple text. Do not allow sound or visuals. Sound and visuals blunt your access to reality; they prevent you from seeing things as they are. Gradually, even in ordinary life you carry cinematic background music in your imagination. You approach situations with imagined editing and soundtrack. Only when human beings begin to see reality without the need for imaginary background music, editing, or embellishment will Satya Yuga truly begin.

You do not realise the damage this does to your system: the imagined soundtrack and the mental editing you apply to every incident distort how you cherish life. All the time you run flashbacks that cast yourself as a victim. Worse, you try to change the facts of your own life and convince yourself of the altered story. Many facts you already know, you nonetheless wish to rewrite and believe the rewritten version.

Can you imagine the absurdity? It's like owning a handkerchief and insisting you don't own it. You tell others, "I don't own this," while trying to force yourself to believe it: "I don't own any of this. Someone else kept it - who knows who will take it away?" You invent justifications for your mistaken beliefs and cast yourself as either life's victim or its villain. The next time you feel intense self-hatred or ask why you are the way you are, remember: your survival and sense of self have often relied on lies and self-deception - words and narratives that your SDHD will feed you. In those moments, simply observe the imaginary background music and the film-editing happening in your mind. You'll then see how much the entertainment-industry way of experiencing life has taken hold.

Avoid altered sounds and visuals, because they become the basis for false memories. Manipulated audio and images that get encoded into your muscle memory are harmful to both a joyful life and conscious awakening. Take this seriously, even if it sounds drastic. You don't need to disconnect from the world - stay informed - but choose your sources wisely. Prefer simple, straightforward formats (a plain newspaper-style feed, for example) and outlets without sensational sound or altered visuals, so you can receive information without being bombarded.

Understand: this tendency to respond to real life with agitation is a curse placed on you by the mixture of altered visuals and sounds that have been infused into your system. Such agitated reactions have become normalized because of the foolish cognitions the entertainment industry constantly pours into you. You no longer care about good or bad; you only seek something that feels spicy or important, and you ignore the larger picture - the side effects and the aftereffects.

Living by Contributing

Your existence is proven by your contribution, not by throwing a tantrum. Understand that people who are unable to contribute often try to prove their existence through dramatic outbursts. As a species, using tantrums to claim being is one of the most foolish mentalities we have accumulated.A free fall from your authentic identity is hell. Wake up to the reality of that free fall inside you - once you see it, you will know you must take decisive action to stop it.

Establish your identity through contribution and enrichment; then you will be a being of light. Do not accept the false theory that "you must throw your weight around to establish yourself." It is wrong. Always establish yourself by giving and creating, not by making a scene. That pattern - proving yourself with theatrics - is one of the most damaging habits you can develop. Just as the body cannot digest raw, uncooked meat, your system cannot assimilate what the entertainment industry feeds you. Violent, sensational films and many television serials are like raw meat for your mind - they do harm rather than nourish. Why consume them?

Agitated decisions, attempts to establish your identity by throwing tantrums, the constant imaginary background music, and the replay of edited flashbacks - all of these are interconnected. They are directly linked to the entertainment industry and the ideas it pours into your head.

In earlier times, only ghost movies carried such background noise and eerie music. Today, it has become standard in nearly every so-called entertainment show. Avoid watching crime dramas and television serials that pollute your cognition and distort your thought process; they push you into approaching life with illogical information.

Consider the difference between reading three lines in a newspaper - "A bomb blast occurred; these many people were killed" - and watching the visual of the same scene with dead bodies on display. The image imprints suffering in you for the next four or five days. But are you the decision-maker in such situations? No. You should receive information relevant to areas where you are the decision-maker. Yet, foolishly, we waste our time on things over which we have no influence. Understand: your time is not money. That is a false idea. Your time is your life. The notion that "time is money" is a deceitful concept propagated by corporations. Vaiśyas make you believe "time is money," Kṣatriyas convince you that "time is power," but Brāhmaṇas reveal the truth: time is your life.

Time is neither money nor power; it is your life. Contemplate this truth of the "free fall from your authentic identity." See how Vājaśravas undergoes such a fall. A Kṣatriya who once lived as a king, by the time he aged, should have ripened into a Brāhmaṇa like King Janaka - an enlightened being. Yet this foolish man not only failed to attain enlightenment, but also fell from his authentic identity. From Kṣatriya he declined to Vaiśya, from Vaiśya to Śūdra, and finally, by cursing Naciketā, his own son, he degraded himself to a Caṇḍāla. In his blindness, he cursed the very son who was striving to make him authentic, declaring, "I give you to Death." Reflect on the free fall of Vājaśravas and recognize how such a fall happens within you - from your authentic identity. Simply becoming aware of it is enough to stop it, for you are intelligent and capable; just knowing the truth will halt the fall.

It is indeed strange: a king, educated and resourceful, with wealth and people under his command, ends up in utter foolishness. Meanwhile, his child - not even seven years old, still in school, with no money or followers - emerges as a hero. Such is the strange drama of the Cosmos. The deeper truth is that what society or a nation respects may be completely different from what the Cosmos values and honors.

Naciketā - a real child, not merely portrayed as one - became the source of enlightenment for billions across time. The Kaṭhopaniṣad is truly the Hindu "Book of the Dead and Death."

If you have read the Tibetan Book of the Dead, you will see that every idea expressed there originates from this source. This is the Source Book. Any research, insight, intuition, sacred secret, or revelation about death ultimately traces back here. Many conclusions humanity has yet to reach are already revealed within it. It is the Book.

In the Kaṭhopaniṣad, for the first time, the power of innocence is so profoundly revealed through the authenticity of Naciketā. Innocence is not ignorance. Innocence means staying with the simple truth to the very end. Ignorance, on the other hand, is learning how to manipulate truth for one's vested interest. Vājaśravas had learned the truths, but, sadly, he began using them for manipulation.

Innocence means to remain with the truth, to stand with the simple, straightforward reality forever. The ability to remain established in truth is authenticity. Truths themselves are never complicated; the real achievement is the strength to stay and root yourself in them. Innocence becomes truly fearless only when it turns ferocious. Understand: innocence that is weak can be easily bullied, manipulated, or absorbed by vested interests. But innocence that stands ferociously becomes an extraordinary quality - especially before one enters the pressures of society. It is the ability to uphold your innocence even when the only source of your life - your own father, the king - denies you.

When a father plays multiple roles, the child often becomes the most abused, for there is no one else with whom the child can share feelings or experiences. If the child develops incompletion with him in his role as a father, that incompletion persists. If incompletion arises with him as a teacher, it remains in the dimension of the teacher. The result is suffocation. This becomes especially intense when the father is a king. Then it turns into the worst punishment for the child, because he absorbs every dimension the father carries, with no alternative source of support. The father becomes everything - food, knowledge, moral guidance, strength, protection, and more. He is Annadātā (the giver of food), Jñānadātā (the giver of knowledge), and the provider of every essential fulfillment.

In the case of Naciketā, even his mother's name is unknown; it is not mentioned anywhere in the Upaniṣad. All truly great books focus less on the author and more on the central theme, and this tradition was set by the Hindu scriptures like the Upaniṣads. The theme so thoroughly occupies the text that not even two or three words are given to introduce Naciketā's mother. We do not know how many queens Vājaśravas had, nor to which queen Naciketā was born. From what we can understand, it is safe to conclude that the father was Naciketā's only source for everything - food, protection, love, and education, since he had not yet gone to school. Everything he learned up to that point came solely through his father's guidance. This means the father was quite literally the source of all fulfillment for him: physical nourishment, mental clarity, emotional support, and psychological stability.

Even before the very source of all his fulfillment, Naciketā stood for the truth. Remember, your source of fulfillment is your very source of life. Yet, even in front of his source of life - his father - he stood uncompromisingly for truth. He lived his innocence ferociously. Hindus, unfortunately, missed one essential point: they preserved innocence but forgot that innocence must be coupled with ferociousness. Because of this, vested interests were able to bully and terrorize them. Naciketā, however, combined innocence with ferocity. Even in front of his only source of life, his father, he stood his ground, staring directly into his eyes.

What power of innocence! Truly, his ability to stare into the eyes of death makes him only the second hero. His ability to stare into the eyes of the source of life - that makes him the first hero. The ability to stare at death is not extraordinary; once death comes, you are gone. But the ability to live while holding on firmly to truth - in that stands Naciketā as a hero.

Here, Naciketā does not merely rebel; he gazes directly into the eyes of the source of his life. Understand: if you only know how to stare into someone's eyes, you are not a hero - you are a tantrum-throwing child, rebelling against everything. Everyone carries that tantrum-throwing child inside and mistakes its defiance for heroism. But that is just stupidity wrapped in more stupidity. True heroism is not throwing tantrums. And Naciketā was not throwing tantrums.

In the entire Upaniṣadic story, not once is Naciketā shown as hurt. His father - the king, the Annadātā, the source of his food, life, protection, and political authority - declares, "I am giving you unto Death," yet Naciketā is neither shaken nor depressed. Immediately, the Upaniṣad presents an extraordinary verse: śraddhā-viveca.

Authenticity fills Naciketā; he is completely possessed by it. His father, Vājaśravas, however, out of greed, does not perform genuine charity aimed at attaining svarga and higher fulfillment. Svarga means being in completion with oneself. Sva-arga - to be settled within oneself, established in the Source of one's being. Instead of responsible charity, Vājaśravas simply discards unwanted things under the guise of giving.

Understand this distinction: discarding what is useless to you and passing it to someone who can make use of it may be a charitable act, but it is not true charity. Vājaśravas was, in reality, cleaning his garage in the name of yajña. In a vast kingdom, unused or unmaintainable items inevitably accumulate. Unable to care for them, he decided to hand them away, pretending it was sacred giving.

When Naciketā witnessed this inauthenticity, he did not remain silent. Most of us, in such a situation, would keep quiet because our vested interests outweigh our integrity. But Naciketā questioned his own father - not rudely, not with tantrums, but with authenticity. He neither sought to hurt his father nor was capable of being hurt himself. Grasp this clearly: when you do not hurt the world, the world cannot hurt you. This is a law of life. Only when you inflict hurt upon others do you grant them the right to hurt you.

Only when you criticize do you give others the right to criticize you back. This is the Kālabhairava Rakṣā: never hurt others. That is the greatest protection. By the very law of life, when you do not hurt others, you cannot be hurt; no power can touch you. This is Kālabhairava's commitment.

Now look at this child - barely seven years old, without the slightest vested interest. He stands before his father, the sole source of his life, and looks straight into his eyes - without hurting him. He does not confront his father with aggression, saying, "Hey! What are you doing? You are wrong!" No. Instead, he gently reminds him. Understand: the Ājñā cakra, the third eye, is also the seat of ego. Any harsh word only ignites the ego; it will never listen. The beauty of Naciketā's innocence lies precisely here.

His innocence is so extraordinary that no improvement is possible upon what the Upaniṣad records. He approaches his father and asks, "Father, to whom will you give me?" This question is not rebellion; it is a gentle reminder of the original instructions of the Vedas. The injunction of the Yajña is: all the best things you have, all that you most deeply love, must be given away. And Vājaśravas did love Naciketā.

Anyone who desires svarga naturally cherishes their children, for through them they seek continuity after death. Heaven itself is only an effort to extend one's existence, and the son or daughter is a physical extension of oneself. What one could not fulfill in life, one tries to complete through children and grandchildren. Naciketā was reminding his father, gently but firmly: "You are supposed to give away not what you don't want, but what you love most - the best things you have."

Understand how beautifully the Upaniṣad presents this: whatever society considers your best, and whatever you yourself regard as your most precious possession - both must be given away. Naciketā is reminding his father of this original principle, but without tantrum, without arrogance, and without a sense of being holier-than-thou - śraddhayā deyam. The Taittirīya Upaniṣad, Śikṣā Valli (11), declares: "Whenever you give, give with authenticity. Give with immense love and with sweet words.

Give before a second thought intervenes and makes you feel poor and insecure." This is the true science of giving. The moment your heart feels expansion and joy, the thought of giving arises. Immediately, the Svādhiṣṭhāna cakra, the center of insecurity, jumps up and says, "But what will happen to me? What about my safety?" Before that insecurity from the Svādhiṣṭhāna steps in front of the Anāhata cakra (the heart), stretch out your hand and give. Do it immediately. Finish it. This is śraddhayā deyam. See, inauthenticity is so powerless that even a gentle reminder makes it tremble.

Vājaśravas, before his own son, is shivering. Old age, calculation, exhaustion, powerlessness, insecurity - all of these qualities combine to make him cunning as well. That is the stupidity of inauthenticity: it never grasps the mathematics of life. The arithmetic of the macrocosm cannot be understood by inauthenticity. Vājaśravas loves continuity - both in heaven and on earth. The extension of heaven and the extension on earth is through his children, his progeny. He loves them deeply and performs sacrifices, rituals, and acts of giving for their sake. Yet, in his blindness, he goes mad and virtually commits suicide by uttering the words to Naciketā: "I give you unto Death." The beauty is this: you cannot kill innocence or truth. You can attempt to bury truth in death, but it will rise again, untouched, immortal.

The child who throws tantrums does not hesitate to hurt others, for he is filled with vested interests. Naciketā, however, is not a tantrum-throwing child. He personifies authenticity - authentically authentic. He dares to look straight into his father's eyes, the very source of his life. Everything he knows about himself, his identity, and his future is at stake in that gaze. Yet he chooses not to hurt his father. Instead, he is intent on raising him to authenticity. His only concern is to support, not to wound.

Authenticity never hurts others. Rather, it makes you authoritative without violence. It transforms you into a non-violent authority. This is a profound paradox, because authority is usually associated with power over others. But when you have true power over yourself, any authority you hold over others will never harm them. For Naciketā, his father was also his teacher. The Upaniṣad clearly states that among the disciples, Naciketā stood first. This indicates that he was a student under Vājaśravas as well. Thus, his father embodied both king and teacher for him. Yet even in this dual relationship, Naciketā stood tall with the authority of authenticity.

Naciketa – Embodiment of Śraddhā

Naciketā is the ultimate embodiment and expression of Śraddhā ever recorded in human history. Please understand - authenticity, Śraddhā, is what will take humanity to its next level of existence.

There are books that speak about heroes, celebrating and glorifying them. There are books that speak only of principles. And there are books that become poetry on heroes. But understand: having poetry or stories written about you is not significant; even politicians around the world manage to have that done. What is truly significant is when a scripture that speaks only of principles - the Upaniṣads - records your very name. That is a recognition reserved for the undeniable.

Across all 108 Upaniṣads, not even a hundred individual names are mentioned. Think about this. Among them, we see names like Sadāśiva, Viṣṇu, Devī, Hanumān (as a listener in the Muktikopaniṣad), and a few Ṛṣis such as Yājñavalkya, Maitreyī, and Gārgī. In the Kenopaniṣad, even Devī Pārvatī is mentioned. In such a space of great restraint, where the Ṛṣis are careful to remain Dharma-centric - centered on spiritual truths rather than personalities - Naciketā finds a place. This shows the magnitude of his presence and the authenticity he radiated.

What made him so? His simple authenticity, his ferocious innocence. Innocence that is unwilling to compromise or collapse into ignorance becomes authenticity. Innocence, when bullied by vested interests and reduced to silence, becomes ignorance. But innocence that stands tall, refusing to be crushed, transforms into authenticity.

Understand this subtle distinction: Innocence can be bullied by ignorance. If you protect it, it evolves into authenticity.

And this is Naciketā. The way he stood before his father - not uttering a single unnecessary word, not withholding a single word that needed to be said - he embodied the very definition of a true Upaniṣadic Ṛṣi: neither more, nor less.

Naciketā is not even telling his father, "Dad, what you are doing is wrong. You are not giving away what is truly valuable and precious." He is not accusing, "Dad, you are inauthentic." No! He is far beyond that. He is not just a good son - he is the best son one could ever have. Subtle, graceful, and uncompromisingly authentic. He simply stands as authenticity itself. See, the moment an inauthentic person encounters someone living authenticity, a deep wound opens within. Why? Because their inauthenticity suddenly comes to the surface. All the missing links of their life flash before them. It is not that the authentic person accuses them or points fingers - their very presence is enough to make the inauthentic shiver. When you see someone embodying what you always wanted to become, it hurts. Not because they hurt you, but because you are reminded of your own failure to live that ideal. Inauthenticity always hurts. Nothing external is needed to provoke an inauthentic person; the presence of authenticity is more than enough.

Look at Carl Jung, the famous psychiatrist. He once came to Chennai intending to meet Ramana Maharishi in Tiruvannamalai. He had traveled all the way from his own country, reached Chennai, and even began the drive toward Arunachala. But midway, he began to suffocate. Sweat poured from his body, and he suddenly said to the driver, "Stop, let's go back to Chennai." He turned around without ever seeing Ramana! Imagine - if that one meeting had taken place, if Jung had unburdened all his junk in the presence of Maharishi, the very course of human psychology and the history of humanity itself might have shifted. But he could not face authenticity. He knew he was about to meet someone who lives the field itself, someone unshakable. And that is terrifying for the inauthentic mind: "Who knows what he will ask? Who knows how he will respond?" An inauthentic person automatically shivers before an authentic presence. And in that fear, they start blurting out - exposing their own stupidity, their incompletions. The danger is, when they blurt out, others can see their foolishness clearly. This is why authenticity is so powerful: it does not need to attack; it only needs to stand.

Naciketa is not hurting Vājaśravas. Vājaśravas is his Guru, Ācharya, Pitā, and Rājā. He is the source of his food, source of his knowledge, source of his home, source of his very life. He is not hurting Vājaśravas. He is only reminding Vājaśravas, "You are supposed to give everything you love, and I know you love me deeply. To whom are you going to give me?" Authenticity is such, it will never hurt, and even if somebody hurts, it'll never get hurt. Understand, it'll never hurt. Even if somebody tries to hurt, it will never get hurt.

Power of Authenticity

See the power of authenticity. The moment Naciketa asks this question, "Dad, to whom are you going to give me?" Immediately the inauthenticity in Vājaśravas is shivering. He is falling into powerlessness and he just wants to avoid answering. It is too much for Vājaśravas and it is coming from unexpected quarters. See, if a Brahmin who receives the Dana, if he had raised the question, "Come on, you are doing something against the Shastras", then Vājaśravas knows how to justify, "Hey! A person who receives the Dhana should not see the quality of the product he receives!" He would have quoted another one Shastra and shut him down. If the opposition is from a minister, he would have said "Follow Raja Dharma! A minister should listen to the Raja." He would have quoted some other Sūtra or Shastra and shut him down.

If the resistance came from any side, he was prepared to handle it. But it came from the most unexpected quarters and the person whom he loves, for whose sake he is doing everything, including protecting all the best things. Vājaśravas knows he is going to leave the body. Then why is he protecting all the things instead of letting them go? He could have lived like, "Let my last cheque bounce." No, he is keeping everything close. Why? For Naciketa! And Naciketa is questioning him. He is not even questioning; he is reminding him. Understand, the moment you don't know how to react, you have lost the game. Be very clear, simply surrender. Don't try to continue the fight; it'll be stupid. If you don't know how to react, it means your inauthenticity has been questioned and you are shivering inside. But it is too much for Vājaśravas.

By now, the eyes of Vājaśravas would have been moving from powerlessness to shivering to non-listening. Please understand, that is one of the most stupid weapons inauthenticity uses to escape from authenticity: non-listening, shutting down. It's too much, too many things are at stake. With inauthenticity, the first response to protect itself from authenticity is non-listening.

Authenticity even when dealing with inauthenticity does not hurt it; it only tries to remind. But inauthenticity straightaway tries to hurt authenticity. Naciketa is not trying to hurt Vājaśravas, but Vājaśravas straightaway is trying to hurt Naciketa. Vājaśravas is acting as if he is not listening. But one funny thing is, when authenticity utters something, inauthenticity even if it tries to cover the ears, it'll be ringing inside. The Upaniṣad beautifully records - Naciketa asks only once, but it echoes in the heart of Vājaśravas three times. Whenever you try to avoid the questions of authenticity and even if you tightly close your ears, the internal echoing goes on.

It's so beautiful, the way the Upaniṣad puts it. Naciketa asked once, "Dad, to whom are you going to give me?" See the dedication, the power of authenticity; just to remind his father about his authenticity; he is ready to be given away as charity. If he was given away to some Brāhmaṇa, he knows for the whole life he has to be a servant for that Brāhmaṇa, serving him and taking care of him. If he was given to some Kṣatriya, he knows his whole life he has to be a soldier for that Kṣatriya. If he was given away to a Vaiśya, he knows he has to be a shop assistant, accountant for that Vaiśya. If he was given away to a Shudhra, he knows for his whole life he has to be a servant of the Sudhra. He is ready even to be given away in charity to remind his father about his inauthenticity.

All the qualities of authenticity are beautifully described - how an authentic man will think, how an authentic man will talk, how an authentic man will cognize, how an authentic man will act, react, ponder over, and respond. Everything is so beautifully described in these few verses of the Upaniṣad.

A seven-year-old boy is ready to be given away in charity as a slave for a Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya, or Śūdra, just to remind his father about his inauthenticity. What dedication! In front of Naciketa 's dedication, nothing, nobody else's dedication can even stand. He could have straight away asked, "Dad, do you remember the verse you taught me? That you are supposed to give away all the best things you have and all the best things you like?"

Many times, what you think is best may not be exactly what society thinks is best. But a king will have both - what society thinks is best and what he thinks is best. A king will have both.

Naciketa could have just said, "Father, you are supposed to give away all the best things you have and the best things you like." That would have solved the issue. He could have been satisfied that he had done his job authentically. But he is not here, doing it just to justify. Many times, your work is just to justify that you have done it, not to get the result. Look in. Whenever you are working just to justify that you did it without bothering about the result, it is inauthenticity. Naciketa is not interested in that game. "What can I do? I just told my father. I reminded him. After that, what can I do?" Then he would have never become Naciketa and the whole Upaniṣad would not have been singing his glory.

Renouncing wealth, renouncing comforts, renouncing luxuries, renouncing relationships, all that is very easy. But renouncing the recognition and the desire to be described as a hero is literally renouncing life itself. Renouncing the Puruṣartha (the pursuit of goals), renouncing being the center of action, renouncing being described as a hero is hard. These great Ṛṣis renounced even the desire to be portrayed as heroes. Naciketa's renunciation was too much to be denied, to be avoided! Even these Ṛṣis were not able to control themselves; they just sang a Stotra (hymn) on Naciketa. They tried to pen down Shastra (scriptures); but they were so enamored and captivated. They lost themselves in the glory of Naciketa and sang a beautiful song on Naciketa, poetry on Naciketa. Every line described here is subtle but so beautiful, describing Naciketa and his glory.

Naciketa being ready to go and do anything his Master wants, being a slave for his whole life under somebody, just to remind his father about authenticity, seems to be too big a sacrifice for a too small, but important need. When you think something is too important, even if it is too small, you'll be ready to sacrifice yourself. Naciketa's Śraddhā (faith) was non-violent, non-hurting, but able to remind his father about his inauthenticity.

Even the Upaniṣadic Ṛṣis who declared that they will not sing anybody's glory, that they will not make anybody a hero including themselves, were not able to stop singing the glory of Naciketa. They were just enamored, floored by Naciketa and singing his glory in so many verses.

Authenticity does not necessarily have to be egocentric or violent. Not only does it not necessarily be egocentric and violent, actually it should not be egocentric or violent. Our authenticity can be expressed, and help everyone to become authentic without being egocentric or violent.

The Upaniṣad says, Naciketa, a young boy, was given to the Lord of Death as a gift by his father. He was depressed because of his father's curse. Father says, 'Just let you die.' He was depressed. But, suddenly he was possessed with a sincerity, Śraddhā vivecha. He was filled with sincerity, and he says, 'I will face this death. I will go through this process. I will take my father's curse as my life and go into it.'

Understand, whatever you think as a curse happens in your life, be ready, be sincere; you will get into the second level of understanding. When life slaps you with what you think is a curse, you have two options: depression or expression. If you are sincere, it can just lead you to higher consciousness.

Naciketa, fortunately, had a mental set-up that was so sincere that he was able to face, handle, and live through the curse. Suddenly, he opened himself up, and because of his sincerity and openness to the cosmos, he reached the doorway of Yama, the gateway to Yama, Yamadharma, the Lord of Death. For three nights, he sat there with deep patience without sleeping. On the third day, Yama appeared and asked, "What do you want? You came as a guest; what do you want?"

Naciketa asked for the boon of the science of Enlightenment. Yama granted him three boons: first, that when he returned, his parents would accept him; second, a special method of reaching heaven; and third, the science of Enlightenment. This is the story.

If you understand this whole story, you will grasp some deep truths. First, Naciketa is in depression. However, he adds sincerity to his depression; he does not let the depression depress him. By adding sincerity, his sleep disorder is converted into tapas. For three nights, he did not sleep while sitting at Yama's doorway. His sleep disorder, insomnia, was transformed into tapas.

Sincerity is having deep patience and passion to know the truth. Naciketa had deep patience and passion. Because of his passion, he waited for three days for Yama to come. If he didn't have passion, he would have said, "Oh, he is not there. Let me go back. It's okay. Maybe after a week, I will come back. Or, I will take an appointment and come." No! He sat there, fasting, without sleeping. He had both the patience and the passion to wait.

Sincerity means having deep patience and passion to know the truth. Naciketa was waiting, and his sleep disorder became tapas. Then, the Lord of Death gave him the science of anti-aging, leading to aging reversal. Naciketa is one of the great Chiranjīvīs. Understand that all these three problems - depression, sleep disorder, and aging - were solved by one technique: sitting patiently with patience and passion. This is the technique Naciketa used to move from depression.

When you add this technique - sitting with deep passion and patience to depression, it transforms into yearning. When you apply this technique to a sleep disorder, which is an outcome of depression, it becomes tapas.

Kṛṣṇa says very beautifully, "Yogis do not sleep when normal men sleep." There are three types of people who do not sleep at night: yogis, bhogis, and rogīs. Yogis do not sleep at night because they meditate. Bhogis do not sleep at night because that is the time for them to enjoy themselves. Rogis do not sleep at night because they can't due to their ailments. All three cannot sleep at night.

Kṛṣṇa says very clearly in the Gītā, "Yogis do not sleep when common men sleep." This means that a sleep disorder can become tapas. Similarly, when the same patience and sincerity are applied to facing death, it leads to the science of Enlightenment.

Sitting with patience and passion is a technique to awaken the ājñā cakra, which is responsible for producing the chemical melatonin. What Naciketa experienced was the effect of melatonin. When his sincerity was added to depression, it became yearning. When it was added to his sleep disorder, insomnia, it became tapas. When it was added to facing death, it became a technique for anti-aging.

So, all three are directly connected to the ājñā cakra and to the chemical melatonin. Another important point is that this chemical's color is black, representing darkness and the color of death, the Lord of Death. Once light comes, this chemical evaporates; this hormone evaporates. Therefore, death, the Lord of Death, Yama, never appears in light. If light is brought into your system, he will not be there.

What Naciketa went through is a solution for all these three problems. All three are directly interconnected. Depression brings insomnia, and insomnia makes you age quickly. If you want to engage in the process of anti-aging, live without sleep disorders, and overcome depression, learn the science of creating melatonin by awakening the ājñā cakra. Awakening the ājñā cakra addresses all these issues. It is a direct solution from the Upaniṣads, a direct solution from the Hindu tradition for modern-day problems. When we delve into the inner meanings and deeper significance of each Upaniṣad, we can directly address all our modern-day problems.

Avidyā, which is the source of all these problems, is ignorance. Avidyā is the source of abhiniveśa, the clinging to life. Clinging to life is directly responsible for aging quickly. When you don't take risks, when new opportunities are not happening in your life, when you are not learning the lessons from significant events in your life, and when you want all the laser beams that create illusions in the air to be under your control, aging happens very quickly. Not taking risks and not engaging with life, not allowing life to present itself to you in all its dimensions, accelerates aging.

Not taking any risks, not making any significant changes or shifts in thinking style, lifestyle, or the way in which they exist - that is the mental setup of a safety-based, saving-based civilization. Of course, this attitude of saving does a lot of good for the country; that is different. But saving with intelligence is okay; saving with deep insecurity brings both savings and diseases that require spending those savings.

Clinging to life makes you grow old quickly and takes away the joy of life. The big problem is that the biggest problem human beings face is not knowing that they don't know. The biggest problem with avidyā is that it will not let you know you are in avidyā. It will constantly ensure that you do not feel you are missing something. That is the quality of avidyā.

The Sūtra states, "Ignorance is the field where all problems start growing." Avidyā is the source where all problems are created.

Please understand, the structure and architecture of the cosmos - the macrocosm and microcosm - are one and the same. The architect who created this cosmos also created your body. The same science, same technology, same method, same formula.

When a critical mass is reached, cells become molecules; then on the molecules, the Super Consciousness starts reflecting. Many molecules gathering together become an organ; and different organs put together become a body. The most important thing is that each molecule is independently intelligent. Each organ is independently intelligent. Each part of your body is independently intelligent.

Understand, to every thought you have, all the molecules respond. For example, when you have a thought of anger, all the molecules will have a quick election. Some parts of your organs will say, "No, this anger should not be expressed!" Some will say it should be expressed. Some will say it should be suppressed. But finally, your decision happens. Your decision cannot satisfy all organs or all molecules. So naturally, those whose voices are not heard are a little hurt.

Just like an election, just like democracy, if your voice is not heard, if you are not successful, if you or your person is not sitting in the seat, you will have that dissatisfaction, grudging, and grumbling. That dissatisfaction is suppressed by the person who makes decisions for you. Your ignorance makes the decision. Avidyā makes the decision. That decision-making authority not only makes decisions but also executes them and tries to suppress all the opposing voices.

If some organs' voices and opinions are constantly not heard, they will eventually decide to go on a non-cooperation movement; that is what disease is. For every thought, each molecule in your body responds, each organ responds. When your ignorance makes decisions, naturally, some parts of the organs' voices are rejected, suppressed, and sometimes condemned.

So, the suppressed and condemned organs and molecules - how long will they put up with it? After some time, they will raise their voices. In any form of abuse, how long will people put up with it? They will eventually raise their voices or at least respond. Even after they respond, if some parts are not attended to by your decision-making authority - which is usually avidyā in all human beings - then they decide to go on a non-cooperation movement or attack back. If they decide to go on a non-cooperation movement, that is the failure of those organs. If they decide to attack you back, that is what cancer is.

Understand, there are certain thoughts. When you make decisions based on avidyā, many of your own organs and molecules do not support, do not respond, and strongly resist. But because of your ignorance and arrogance, you continue with your decision. Persisting with your decision even if your organs are not in agreement means you are heading towards hell. That is what I call "acquiring karma."

What is the solution? Because with any thought, some organ or some molecule will not accept it. Always having elections, always having democracy means chaos. How do we handle this? One important method, one secret, is to make all decisions from a state of unclutching. If you are continuously unclutching, all the organs are handled with friendliness. You see, with no vested interests, any leader can gather all parties together. If everyone knows that the leader doesn't have any vested interests, they will completely surrender all their opinions; they will not go for voting or protesting. They will simply surrender their opinions, knowing that whatever the leader decides will be good for them.

So let your consciousness give that guarantee to all the molecules and organs in your body. By deeply unclutching and infusing friendliness into your system, give that comfort, give that friendliness, give that loving zone to all your molecules and organs. Suddenly, you will see that all the parts have surrendered their votes at your feet and are asking you to make the decision. The decision becomes unanimous. Reaching a state where unanimous decisions are made within your system and making decisions from this state is Living Enlightenment.

Whenever you make decisions unanimously, without contradiction, with all your organs and molecules standing by you, you are living enlightenment. This means you have infused enough friendliness into your system, feeling safe and secure within it. As a result, every molecule and every organ responds the way you want, without opposing, resisting, protesting, or attacking you back.

A person who creates that kind of organism in their body is a Buddha, an Enlightened being. The one who teaches that science to the world is Dhamma; when that science is shared with the world, it is called Dhamma. The one who successfully creates that kind of organic community is Sangha.

Understand, creating a deep friendliness inside your molecules and between your organs makes you a Buddha. The ability to teach the truth, when the truth is expressed to others, is called Dhamma. When the truth is made into an experience for many people, and that kind of organic community is created, it is called Sangha.

All you need to do for all these three is to keep making decisions from the zone of unclutching. As long as there is contradiction within you, unclutch. Let the decision pop up by itself within you; you will see it happens. You are intelligent enough to deliver decisions, to devise strategies, and to express clear understandings. All you need is the passion and patience to unclutch and be in the vidyā zone.

Avidyā is the kṣetra for all conflicts, whether they are dormant or active. This is what Patanjali says. For example, sometimes some of the molecules or organs in your body have dormant resistance because they are afraid to raise their voices. Even if they are able to raise their voices, it may be weak and feeble. He says, "thanu" – feeble - or it may be scattered; the voices and opinions may be scattered.

When the voices are weak, they need amplification. When they are scattered, they need friendliness. Sometimes, even strongly active voices create conflicts within you and become cancer. That is why you need to make all decisions by infusing deep friendliness into your system. Even if you are defending yourself, you will not have internal conflict and you will not create disease. The decision will be unanimous.

Understand, Kṛṣṇa infused deep friendliness into Arjuna. Even his fight was a unanimous decision of all his molecules and organs. It was a unanimous decision; he did not have internal conflict. Kṛṣṇa cleared everything. Then, anything you do will be good for the world.

Infuse deep friendliness into yourself. Infuse deep energy into yourself. Infuse a feeling of safety and security into yourself. Then, anything you do will be good for the world. You will not be abusive or violent with anything. It is a very powerful truth.

You see, your body is like a mirror reflecting the Super Consciousness. If some part of the mirror decides to separate from the whole, if it breaks away from the main part, then you will have many reflections of the same light. For example, if the mirror breaks in different corners, the same reflection will appear in many places; many reflections will appear in that mirror. Many reflections in one mirror are ugly. Many decisions in one body are dangerous. For example, if your negative karma gathers too much momentum, that part will start taking decisions and doing things independently. That is what is being caught by brahmarākṣas. Being caught by brahmarākṣas means you will think and decide in one way, while one part of you will be thinking and deciding in another way.

Abusing the Master is brahma hatyā doṣā. When you commit brahma hatyā, brahmarākṣas will catch you. This is the exact truth. When a part of you is not in tune with what you are doing, that part gathers momentum and naturally creates diseases, depression, sleep disorders, and, finally, aging, which means quickening the process of death.

Avidyā is the root of all these problems. Vidyā is the solution to all these problems. Continuously make decisions in an unclutched way; not only will your body be making unanimous decisions, but even the people who live around you will be making those unanimous decisions. Living with people who make unanimous decisions in sync with your body language, without you needing to tell them verbally, is heaven. That is what is Sangha.

Come out of avidyā, unclutch, and infuse friendliness and compassion into your being. Make your whole being take unanimous, peaceful, compassionate, and loving decisions with peace and restful awareness. Everything should be practiced, preached, enforced, and entrusted with authenticity. With authenticity, when you stretch the body in the morning, the whole body will become a yogic body. When you sit for Guru Pūjā with authenticity, your whole being will melt down. When you sit with integrity and authenticity, only then is unclutching possible. Otherwise, you will misuse unclutching in the wrong places, like hiding yourself from your own inauthenticities.

When you bring authenticity to yourself, all the five elements in you start expressing authenticity towards you. Vivekananda very beautifully puts it: if you know a handful of clay, you know the clay in the whole world. All of you understand that if you know the handful of clay - what it is, what it contains, what all its different qualities are - you can connect with different things made of any clay from this source.

Once you know something flows within you authentically, you will know anything that flows in the world. Everything aligns with you. It is dangerous to live without being authentic to things happening within you. When you bring authenticity into your eating and living habits, suddenly you may feel that certain beds do not let you sleep properly and bring back pain or certain foods do not let you be healthy and bring disturbance.

Bring authenticity into everything. With authenticity, a very powerful and strong new structure evolves within you. Internalize this truth. You have a certain structure for responding to your life: how you respond when something comes or gets added and how you respond when something is taken away from you. This whole thing is a certain structure. When you bring authenticity, the whole thing will become a new structure.

What is Authenticity?

Only with authenticity do Guru's words become initiation; only then does communion happen, not otherwise. The exact translation of the word "authenticity" in Sanskrit is "Śraddhā." The Kaṭhopaniṣad teaches the science of death and beyond death. Authenticity means being established in responding to life from who you believe yourself to be for others and from what others believe you to be for them.

Understand, even for what others believe you to be for them, you are responsible knowingly or unknowingly. It is your indirect commitment, indirect cooperation. Please understand, unless you also give them certain indirect signals through your body language, they do not believe what you are in their heart.

Authenticity has three layers. The first layer is what you believe about yourself for yourself. The second layer is who others believe you to be and how you present yourself to others. How you believe yourself for yourself is mamakāra; how you project yourself to others is ahamkāra. The third layer is very important - how others perceive you. Others may perceive you differently than how you project yourself. Even for that, you become responsible. How he perceives you whether you want it or not because you subtly cooperate with it, you become responsible.

Mamakāra means what you feel as yourself. Ahamkāra means what you show yourself to others. Anyakāra means what others believe about you independent of what you project as yourself.

Reflect on all that you consider good or bad that has happened in your life because of anyakāras - which are the ideas others carry about you independently of what you project to them as yourself. Completion with anyakāra is where people miss out. Completion with ahamkāra and mamakāra people always catch because both are in your control.

Reflect on what good and bad events have occurred in your life based on how others perceive you independently of how you see yourself and how you present yourself to others. The second part is understanding how responsible you are even for what others hold about you - their anyakāra.

It is the confusion between your ahamkāra and mamakāra which is responsible for anyakāra.

If you observe the art of making a deity in 5 metals, it is a beautiful symbolic art form. Initially, a wax model is created, followed by the application of mud or clay onto it. The wax model itself cannot be sustained eternally; however, without the wax model, creating the deity is not possible. Subsequently, after applying the clay, metal is poured inside. The wax melts away, and where the metal has been poured, it fills the space previously occupied by wax - thus transforming into a deity.

It's important to understand that while the wax itself cannot be kept alive forever, without it, the deity cannot be brought to life. Similarly, this physical body will not remain alive eternally. Yet by applying authenticity as clay and pouring consciousness as metal inside it - when the body eventually fades away - the settled consciousness will remain as Chinmaya Vigraha. This process mirrors how deities are crafted: starting with a wax model.

The process begins with creating a wax model followed by the application of clay. Only Kaveri clay is to be used; no other clay can form the mold. This is why this art flourishes only on the banks of Kaveri. Once the mould is made with Kaveri clay, the metal is poured. Naturally, the clay melts in the heat of the metal and comes out. The metal then fills the gap left by the melted clay. First, a wax model is created. Then clay is applied all over the wax model. Through a small hole, the metal is poured. As the wax melts away, the metal fills the gap - resulting in a completed deity. Without the wax model, creating the deity is impossible. However, the wax model itself cannot be preserved forever.

Similarly, without this body, one cannot learn the science of eternal life; yet this body itself cannot be sustained indefinitely. Therefore, authenticity is like the clay needed for moulding; it must be used to shape oneself authentically. Pouring consciousness means taking responsibility, pouring your consciousness into being authentic.

By taking responsibility for your authenticity through pouring consciousness into it, you will become alive forever independent of this body. Look at Naciketa 's life - just through authenticity, he transcended death and faced Yama Dharma fearlessly. His entire life was a beautiful expression of authenticity.

The story of Jnansambandar showcases the power of right clearance - he invoked the clearance of Mahādeva within himself. The ash he touched turned into medicine, the leaf he touched transformed into a boat that sailed against the river's current, and even a palm leaf he touched became a stone that remained unburnt by fire. Jnanasambandar embodies more than just authenticity; he is a living example of responsibility and enriching others' lives.

It's truly remarkable to consider the immense responsibility shouldered by a fourteen-year-old standing before a king who did not believe in him - especially amidst 10,000 elderly and highly intellectual Jain monks from a different religion. Despite facing such challenges, like his planetary alignment was not favorable at that time; he was experiencing Shani. Appar, Tirujñānakarasar advised him not to proceed due to this unfavorable alignment. Then he sings that for Śiva's devotees, planets only support and never disturb.

Here Now, let us return to Naciketa 's authenticity is truly remarkable. Initially, he could clearly see through his father's hypocrisy. Naciketa 's father was performing a ritual for longevity where one must give up all their best possessions. This act is considered a technique: when one is elderly and gives up all their best possessions, it triggers a powerful energy to create anew.

By unleashing this energy, one feels wanted, their body and mind become vibrant, leading to longer life spans.

Unfortunately, Vajaisravas failed to grasp the purpose and spirit of the ritual; he believed that giving away all good things would leave him with nothing, so he chose to offer only useless items. Naciketa, with his authenticity, could see through his father's inauthenticity. Naciketa 's authenticity shines through - he does not hurt his father by directly pointing out his inauthenticity. In Naciketa 's position, one might be tempted to confront their father directly and demand the best things; however, this approach may hurt one's parents by using their authenticity as a weapon. Some individuals mistakenly believe that hurting others is an expression of their authenticity when it is actually rooted in arrogance.

True authenticity mirrors Naciketa 's behavior - he does not harm his father even when witnessing inauthenticity. It is essential to understand that real authenticity does not involve causing harm or pain to others. Naciketa exemplifies super authenticity. When he approaches his father, his mere presence conveys authenticity, causing his father to feel inauthentic without a word being spoken.

Naciketa stands before his father with unwavering authenticity, not causing any harm even when witnessing inauthenticity. Naciketa simply stands before his father and gazes at him authentically. Upon seeing Naciketa 's genuine presence, his father would have immediately sensed his arrival and likely felt surprised or frustrated. Father would have thought in his mind that he is a prince I know, but he eats my life. Witness the power of Naciketa 's authenticity: he does not hurt his father in any way. He does not tell him that he is inauthentic. Instead, Naciketa takes responsibility for his father's inauthenticity. He asks his dad, "You are supposed to give all the best things of your life. To whom will you give me?" This shows that he is shouldering the responsibility. Naciketa does not accuse his father of wrongdoing; rather, he simply asks him who will take care of him.

This act exemplifies authenticity - taking responsibility even for others' inauthenticity. If you are authentic and do not take responsibility for your father's inauthenticity, you may feel powerless. You might think, "What can I do? I want to provide all good things, but my dad is not doing that; he is elderly and the scriptures say to respect elders." In such a situation, one may find ways to justify their actions.

You would have been very happy if he was not giving away all the valuable things in the palace. You might have thought, "I can have it after his death or even when he is alive as I am the prince." However, even if you are authentic, you may have felt powerless and thought, "I am just a powerless child; he is inauthentic. What can I do?" The scriptures say one should not disrespect elders, so you may have come up with various justifications.

Being responsible for feeling powerful over others' inauthenticity is crucial. When you witness others' inauthenticity, feeling responsible empowers you to transform them. To transform someone successfully, stand before them feeling authentically responsible for their inauthenticity. Feel that you are accountable for their lack of authenticity - this will empower you to enrich yourself and others naturally and effortlessly.

Enforcing enlightenment, Naciketa asks his dad, "Dad, to whom are you going to give me?" This implies that he takes the responsibility on his shoulders for Vajasravas's inauthenticity. He is prepared to sacrifice himself to bring authenticity to his dad; he is willing to go to any extreme to achieve this goal - not giving up on people! Naciketa 's story encapsulates all these great truths: integrity, authenticity, responsibility, not giving up on people, enriching others' lives - all these values are beautifully portrayed in this single story.

Naciketa does not give up on people even though he knows he cannot directly change his dad. His father is not a loving man who would warmly welcome him with questions like "Oh my son Naciketa, you have come! Please come; do you want to tell me anything?"

Naciketa asks his father, "To whom are you going to give me up?" because he must give up all the best things he has. Vajasravas does not respond because it hurts him. Even though Naciketa does not intend to hurt him, he takes responsibility for his father's inauthenticity without causing harm himself. On the other hand, Vajasravas feels hurt due to his own inauthenticity even though no one is intentionally hurting him.

Naciketa sacrifices himself without causing harm; however, Vajasravas feels hurt by the situation and reacts defensively with ego-driven thoughts like "Are you trying to teach me a lesson?" or "Do you think sacrificing yourself will teach me authenticity?" Inauthenticity breeds feelings of weakness; when one feels weak, one often tries to assert power or energy.

Vājaśravas may have gone through these thoughts due to his inauthenticity making him feel weak. When one truly embodies power, one naturally exudes energy and strength. Understand that when you are inauthentic, you feel weak. Only when you are weak, do you seek to display power. It is only the powerless who try to show they are powerful. Powerful individuals exhibit energy rather than overt displays of power. Vajasravas feels inauthentic and powerless, while Naciketa stands as a hero.

Many people falsely believe they are in silence by putting on a facade of being silent or claiming they are in silence. They may use this as an excuse to avoid responsibility and commitment - seeking solace in indulgence like eating, sleeping, or idling away time. True silence means there are no words within you that need expression; if there are words inside but remain unspoken, it does not constitute true silence. Vajasravas's silence was more like a subtle withdrawal that typically occurs before a storm erupts. The ocean withdraws slightly before a Tsunami. That silence was akin to Vajasravas's silence.

However, Naciketa now demonstrates his commitment to the next level by not giving up on people. Each one of you should strive to embody Naciketa 's qualities. By living authentically like Naciketa and immersing oneself in the teachings of the Kaṭhopaniṣad, one can transcend death.

The Upaniṣad beautifully describes this state as being "Śraddhā Vivecha - possessed by authenticity." Śraddhā has entered Naciketa as if possessed - his every thought, word, and action is imbued with authenticity. When one experiences Śraddhā Vivecha, one transcends death and becomes a great master. Witness the compassion, love, and authenticity of a 7-year-old child - truly divine! Naciketa 's unwavering commitment to his father despite challenges would have surely stirred Vājaśravas deeply.

Naciketa is a very authentic individual. When you embody authenticity, you can clearly perceive what is happening within others to whom you feel responsible. If you wish to learn the art of mind reading and understand what is truly transpiring in others' minds and hearts, simply take responsibility for them - this will grant you insight into their inner world.

Naciketa 's authenticity and sense of responsibility towards Vājaśravas were evident. Naciketa would have perceived a significant turmoil brewing within Vājaśravas, sensing an imminent explosion. Despite this, Naciketa bravely embraced the responsibility and was prepared to face the potential outburst.

If one is afraid of another person's reaction or explosion, it indicates a lack of authenticity. The story beautifully illustrates how Naciketa persisted by asking again and taking responsibility for his father's actions. "To whom are you going to give me up?" This gesture from Naciketa likely initiated a profound sense of authenticity within his father. The boiling inauthenticity eventually erupted through anger and violence as he exclaimed, "Let you die!"

The usual way inauthenticity expresses is as power but experiences as powerlessness. Inauthenticity expresses power and experiences as powerlessness. Authenticity is experienced and expressed as energy. Authenticity experiences energy and expresses as synergy. Synergy means feeling responsible even for others' inauthenticity.

Inauthenticity typically manifests as power. It's important to recognize that the quality of inauthenticity within you leads to feelings of powerlessness internally while projecting power externally. Anywhere you exert your power - whether at work or at home - if you display authority as the head of the family or team, it indicates inauthentic behavior.

When you are truly responsible, you will express energy rather than power, leading to transformation within yourself and others. In situations of inauthenticity, your Mamakāra (ego) will feel powerless, your Ahamkāra (individual identity) will assert itself as power, and your Anyakāra (collective identity) will manifest as violence.

Vajasravas says, "Let you die" to his own son! It is important to understand the psyche of Vajasravas. He is someone who desires to live long as he is engaged in a yājñā for longevity. Anyone seeking a long life naturally develops a strong attachment to their children because if they cannot live long themselves, they hope to continue living through their children. This explains why many communities have a deep affinity towards their biological offspring.

Even in tribes where individuals may not form strong attachments with their sexual partners, they still exhibit attachment towards their biological children. This attachment serves as a backup plan for extending one's life. While one may have a primary plan (Plan A) to live as long as possible, the existence of a backup plan (Plan B) through their children allows them to fulfill unmet aspirations and potentially prolong their legacy. By going beyond death, one can surpass the need for Plan A or Plan B - instead, embracing Plan E which involves stretching oneself beyond death itself.

Plan A involves trying to prolong one's life through the body, while Plan B aims to extend one's legacy through one's children. Plan C focuses on living on through memorials or charitable acts, such as building temples with statues and names inscribed. However, all four plans - A, B, C, and D - are ultimately ineffective in achieving eternal life. Only Plan E - living authentically - can lead to eternal life by stretching oneself beyond death.

Vajaisravas likely had Plan A in mind but may have also harbored thoughts of Plan B in his heart. In his final moments before passing away, he might have called his son Naciketa and entrusted everything to him. This act symbolizes a desire to continue living through his son by passing on his values and dharma. Vajaisravas may not have been as graceful as portrayed; he might have simply requested his son not to forget him and always remember their bond as father and son.

This individual, for whom his son is crucial as a backup plan (Plan B), callously says, "Let you die!" - a manifestation of unconsciousness. However, Naciketa demonstrates his authenticity not just through words but also through actions. He shows his readiness to sacrifice anything to enrich others by humbly bowing down and expressing his willingness to journey towards death.

It is unlikely that any child would respond in the same way as Naciketa did. In a similar situation, most children would likely react with anger or defiance rather than acceptance. Naciketa stretches himself to the ultimate authenticity of his father's Anyakāra by sacrificing his life. If your father expects you to burn yourself for his benefit, would you comply? Even if there is no benefit and he is angry with you, the situation changes drastically. If Vajasravas had been humble and silent, requesting Naciketa to sacrifice his life in a gentle manner for his own good, it would not be considered authenticity of Naciketa but rather a sacrifice.

In the Mahābharata, there are stories like that of Yayati where sons and grandsons sacrificed their lives for him. Yayati pleaded with his sons to give up their lives for him - it was seen as a sacrifice in that context. However, in Naciketa 's case, despite his father's violent and angry nature, he is willing to stretch himself to the Anyakāra of his inauthentic father by giving up his own life.

Naciketa, even in the face of his father's anger, was willing to sacrifice for his father's inauthenticity. Even if the father had not been angry and there were benefits involved, sacrificing one's life would have been justifiable. However, Naciketa recognized the anger in his father's words and took responsibility by stretching himself for his father's inauthenticity.

As Naciketa departs, his father feels the powerlessness of his mamakāra, realizing that Plan B is slipping away and worrying about what will happen if Plan A fails. Making a Plan B signifies preparing for the failure of Plan A; it serves as a backup strategy.

Now Vajasravas knows his Plan B is failing. His Plan B, Naciketa, is leaving him to die. He realizes that his Plan A may fail anytime. This realization causes him to feel powerless and shaken even if Plan A is not failing. He pleads with Naciketa not to go, expressing a mix of emotions due to his internal conflicts between ahamkāra (ego) and mamakāra (attachment). His ego asserts that Naciketa is not needed if he does not respect the ego, while his attachment feels powerless without Naciketa's presence.

Despite Vajaisravas' emotional turmoil and plea for Naciketa not to leave out of agitation and irritation, Naciketa remains authentic. He does not harbor anger or violence towards his father; instead, he seeks his father's goodwill and happiness. When Yama Dharma Raja grants three boons, Naciketa 's first request is for his father to have good feelings towards him and live happily together.

In the context of Naciketa from the Kaṭhopaniṣad, he exemplifies not giving up on people and stands for enriching others. His actions demonstrate integrity, authenticity, responsibility, and a commitment to enriching others. Naciketa 's first request upon meeting Yama was to ensure his father harbored good feelings towards him and to remove any ill feelings. This contrasts sharply with an inauthentic individual who may express anger and violence towards their own child. It prompts reflection on how one would respond in such a situation where a parent displays harmful behavior towards their child.

Naciketa walks towards death, leaving for the house of Death Lord Yama. His father is left feeling powerless as his Plan B is departing. The father does not perceive his son leaving; rather, he feels his Plan B is departing. Individuals like Vajasravas, who are inauthentic, will lack love. An inauthentic person may exhibit dependency but will never truly experience love. In contrast, an authentic individual will exude tremendous love without dependency.

Even if you lack authenticity, somehow connect with a person who embodies authenticity - whether it be a father, mother, guru, or god. Just like how a cub gets entangled with a lion and transforms into a lion itself, individuals like Vajasravas can find liberation by connecting with someone authentic.

Regardless of your authenticity level, try to get entangled with someone who embodies authenticity and hold on to them tightly. Whether you are in first class or hanging onto the luggage coach of life's journey, do not give up - keep holding on until you reach your destination.

Vajasravas experiences insecurity and powerlessness as his Plan B represented by his son is departing. He pleads with his son not to go, displaying emotions akin to a bison crying out for its offspring. After his father said, "I'll give you unto death; let you die," Naciketa thinks: "Among many, I stand first; among many, I stand in the middle. What will my father accomplish If I go to Yama on this day?" It was not conceit that led Naciketa to consider his own standing and importance. He was weighing his value as a son and as a person in order to judge whether or not he had merit enough to prove a worthy gift.

Although he realized that his father's harsh reply was only the expression of a momentary outburst of anger, he believed that greater harm might befall his father if his words were not kept. Therefore, he sought to strengthen his father's resolutions by reminding him of the transitory condition of life. He said, "Look back to those who lived before and look to those who live now. Like grain, the mortal decays and like grain, it springs up. All things perish; truth alone remains. Why then fear to sacrifice me also?" Thus, Naciketa convinced his father that he should remain true to his word and send him to Yama, the ruler of death.

Naciketa then went to the abode of death, but Yama was absent, and the boy waited without food or drink for three days. The whole scene is mystical. Naciketa, who is the embodiment of Śraddhā and authenticity, thinks to himself, "Among many, in many ways I am first. In many ways I am in the middle but never last." Please understand, this is the best mental setup an authentic being can have. When he says, "Among many, I am first," that is his mamakāra. When he says, "Among many, I am in the middle," that is his ahamkāra. When he says, "I am never the last. Then how am I going to prove myself to his words?" That is his anyakāra, his responsibility to Anyakāra.

Understand, in your case you say inside yourself, "Among many I am the last" - that is mamakāra. "Among many, I am the first" - that is ahankara. "Then why should I do anything?" - that is anyakāra.

The right ahankara, mamakāra and anyakāra are described just in these few words. Naciketa thought, "Among many, I stand first" - mamakāra. This means that in his heart he knows he is first; it signifies realization and strong trust in himself. He has not given up on himself, so it is a clear Mamakāra.

The second line, "Among many others, I stand in the middle," means that when he expresses his ahankara, he never puts himself first or last; he is with the whole.

As a team, a right leader will always project himself as part of the team, not as the head of the team. You should feel you are the head of the team but project yourself only as part of the team. Anybody who projects themselves as having the ahankara of being the head of the team is a failure because the greatest enemy of anyakāra is ahankara.

Understand, in this whole scene, only ahankara and anyakāra are fighting. Mamakāra is like a husband, ahankara is like a daughter-in-law, and anyakāra is the mother-in-law. The fight is always between the daughter-in-law and the mother-in-law. The husband is hiding in the bathroom, shutting the door, and turning on the shower as if he is not hearing any sound. He shuts the bathroom door and opens the shower; if you open the shower in the bathroom, you will not hear sounds from outside. Mamakāra shuts all the doors and opens his inner chatter - that's the shower - and acts as if he doesn't hear any sound.

If ahankara projects itself as the head, anyakāra will immediately reject it and escalate the conflict. So a right leader is someone who projects himself as part of the team. Understand that Naciketa's Ahankara says, "I stand in the middle," which means he sees himself as part of the team in many ways.

Now, the next statement: "What will my father accomplish if I go to Yama today?" This is anyakāra, responsibility for anyakāra. Naciketa thinks, "Yes, my father expects me to go to Yama. I should take the responsibility and reach the goal my father wanted to achieve by sending me to Yama. Not just doing what my father said, I'll have to fulfill what my father intended." Here, Naciketa is very clear. He says, "What will my father accomplish if I go to Yama today?" This means he is going to do what his father said, not just in letter but also in spirit. He will follow with the spirit.

With Anyakāra, when you take responsibility for anyakāra, you have to follow both the letter and the spirit. If you try to follow just the letter, it is cheating.

The next line: "It was not conceit which led Naciketa to consider his own standing and importance." Understand that Naciketa is not cunning or egoistic; he does not have conceit. These three statements show very clearly his authenticity in mamakāra, ahankara and anyakāra.

In your case, your mamakāra is always powerless; ahankara is powerful or appears powerful; anyakāra is violent, conflict-ridden. With Naciketa, it is entirely different: mamakāra is powerful; ahankara coexists harmoniously; anyakāra embodies responsibility.

Mamakāra is Satya; ahankara is Ahiṁsā; anyakāra is Brahmacarya, Asteya, and Aparigraha. This means what he feels inside as energy is integrated and empowered. How he projects himself to others shows the possibility for coexistence.

Wherever you stand and whatever you do - your ahankara should make a statement to everybody: 'I am a possibility for coexistence.' If your ahankara says, 'I am the top,' you are not a possibility for coexistence. If your ahankara says, 'I am the bottom,' you are not a possibility for coexistence. Who will want to live with a fool? Ahankara should make everyone understand: 'I am a possibility for coexistence.'

The Rishi of the Kato Upaniṣad is Yama Dharma himself. It was written by the Lord of Death, Yama himself. The Rishi records, 'He was weighing his value as a son and as a pupil, in order to be able to judge, whether or not he had merit, to prove a worthy gift'. Means, by this way of thinking, he was taking the responsibility and committing with his responsibility. Yama records, Lord of Death, Kala records as weighing. He means, 'Naciketa was weighing his value as a son and pupil; in order to be able to judge whether or not he had merit enough to prove a worthy gift. He realized that his father's harsh reply was only the expression of a momentary outburst of anger.' This line means, Naciketa is not foolishly following his anyakāra as morality or ethics of the society. He's doing it with authenticity.

There are ethics in society that say, 'Literally follow whatever your dad says'. He is not doing it in that way. That is why the Rishi records, Naciketa knows his father is angry and he shouted. It is a momentary angry reply. Naciketa is following authenticity, not ethics.

Understanding what you do and why you do it is also important. If Naciketa had gone to Kala, Yama, just because he had to obey his father's words, he could only be considered the best ethical man, a great person of morality. But the reason he is going to death is not just because his father said so. He is going because of his authenticity and responsibility for the inauthenticity of his father.

When Rāma went to the forest, he took responsibility for the integrity of his father. Just before he was leaving for the forest, even Kaikeyi changed her mind. She begged, "Forgive me Rāma, I made a mistake. Don't go." Kaikeyi was too strongly attached to Rāma. It was actually Kaikeyi who brought up Rāma, not Kauśalyā. So when she asked Daśaratha for those boons, her intellectual mind was convinced; her emotional being was not.

When she saw Rāma in ochre robes going to the forest with Sita and Lakṣmaṇa, she was deeply affected. Sita was very close to Kaikeyi; they had a relationship more like mother and daughter rather than mother-in-law and daughter-in-law.

Kaikeyi was more like a friend to Sita. There are many beautiful poetic renderings of the Rāmayana that record Kaikeyi coaching and educating Sita for life. She was a friend, mentor, and mother. But the moment Kaikeyi saw Rāma, Sita, and Lakṣmaṇa leaving, she couldn't handle it. She went and begged, "Don't go, please." Rāma replied, "No. I take responsibility for the integrity of my father."

Here, Naciketa takes responsibility even for the inauthenticity of his father.

And the next line, "Yet he believed that greater harm might befall his father if his word was not kept." Naciketa takes responsibility for the inauthenticity of his father. You see, his father is inauthentic; that is where he is based right now. He needs to be raised to the level of authenticity. Naciketa says, 'Now, if I don't keep up his word, he will also fall out of integrity. So, at least let me bring him to integrity by sacrificing my life so that he moves to the next step of authenticity.'

Therefore, Naciketa sought to strengthen his father's resolutions by reminding him of the transitory condition of life. Now the father has fallen back to Mamakāra. Only when he was bursting in anger was he in Ahankara.

Understand, whenever you deal with people, see whether they are standing on Mamakāra, Ahankara, or Anyakāra because there are three personalities in each one of you. Handle them based on that. When Vājaśravas said, "Let you die. I gave you to Yama," he was operating from Ahankara. Unfortunately, Ahankara does not get continuously fueled. When emotions burst, a person is naturally pushed back to Mamakāra, sucked into Mamakāra. Now, he is in Mamakāra, the powerless state. He says, "Don't go." Similarly with Kaikeyi, when she asked for the boon, she was working from Ahankara. Then suddenly, she fell back into Mamakāra and begged Rāma, "Don't go." A personality like Rāma would have been the life of the whole palace. A personality like Rāma leaving the palace means that literally the essence of the palace is moving out of it, leaving only palatial buildings behind. The palace moves out of itself when such a personality leaves; only palatial buildings remain.

Mahāvākyās are words that only make sense in context; otherwise, nothing can be understood from them. Thousands of people listen to the phrase "Tat tvam asi." Who can understand it? No one! Only from the right person, at the right time, in the right Muhurta do they make meaning. Life happens from life - not from buildings, not from bank balances, not from anything else. Life happens from life.

Naciketa takes responsibility for his father's inauthenticity and does not want his father to fall out of integrity. So, he decides to convince his father, who has now fallen into a space of powerlessness. The father has succumbed to Mamakāra and is feeling terrified, weak, and powerless at the thought of letting go of Naciketa. Naciketa teaches him by reminding him of the transitory nature of life.

When you become authentic, the first thing you will experience is fearlessness; all fear will disappear. You will understand the transitory condition of life and the temporary nature of all the prefixes and suffixes you attach to it. Prefixes represent preferences, while suffixes represent sufferings. All these prefixes and suffixes are temporary. Life itself is eternal; only the prefixes and suffixes are transitory.

Naciketa reminds his father about the transitory nature of the prefixes and suffixes we attach to life. A rich life is a prefix, while a life of suffering is a suffix. Life itself is eternal; neither the prefix nor the suffix is eternal - they are transitory.

He says, "Look back at those who lived before and look at those who have just lived now. Like grain, mortals decay and like grain, they spring up." He speaks to his father.

Understand, a seven-year-old child talks to his dad. The father represents Anubhava (experience), while Naciketa represents Anubhuti (realization).The father has seen thousands of people being born and dying like grains. However, Naciketa remembers thousands of people being born like grains and dying at the right time. Remembrance at the right time is Anubhuti; merely seeing without remembering is Anubhava.

Anubhava is fact, 'The World.' Anubhuti is knowledge, realization - 'My World.' The father has experience; Naciketa has realization. The son tells his father, "Dad, don't you see? Like grains, people die and come and go." How many deaths could Naciketa have seen in his seven years of existence? Maybe one or two at most, or perhaps he hasn't seen any but only heard about them. Yet he learned the lesson.

Anubhava means touching every type of fire and learning, "Oh, this fire also burns? Okay, other fires such as charcoal fire burns? Matchstick fire burns? Gas stove fire burns? Firewood fire burns? Kerosene fire burns? Okay." Touching almost every type of fire and learning the lesson that all types of fire burn—by the time you have learned this lesson, your body is ready to be burnt; you are dead. But the moment you touch one fire and it burns or you see someone else touch it and get burned, learning that all fires burn is realization - Anubhūti.

Vājaśravas is supposed to be saying these words to Naciketa : "Oh my son, people come and go. I have seen millions coming and going in my life." But see the irony; the opposite is happening. Naciketa convinces his father about the transitory condition of prefixes and suffixes in life and says, "Everything dies and is reborn; everything comes back. All things perish; truth alone remains. Truth alone remains. Truth alone remains." Then Naciketa says, "Dad, then why are you afraid to sacrifice me also?" He is going to sacrifice himself and is consoling his dad by saying, "Why are you afraid to sacrifice me?"

Courageous, authentic beings are not afraid even when they have to sacrifice themselves; inauthentic beings are afraid even when they have to sacrifice others for their words. Inauthentic beings create violence and then get frightened by the same violence. They shout and then get frightened by the very sound they created. They shout, scream, and get frightened; they start shivering from the same screaming and shouting they did. Naciketa is convincing his father, saying, "Don't be afraid to sacrifice me." With his authenticity, Naciketa takes responsibility for his father's inauthenticity and thus convinces him. This means he completed his responsibility; he did not give up on his father. He fulfilled his commitment to healing him, making him understand that he should remain true to his word, and sent him to Yama, the ruler of Death, Lord of Death. Then Naciketa went to the abode of Death.

See very clearly: Vājaśravas's Anyakāra was asking Naciketa to stay back. But neither did Naciketa stay back nor did he raise himself to fulfill his father's Anyakāra. He took responsibility and showed his father, made him understand about his inauthenticity and lack of integrity; convinced him that doing what he has to do is good for both of them.

Naciketa convinced his father that he should remain true to his word and send him to Yama, the ruler of Death. Then, Naciketa went to the abode of Death. But Yama was absent, and the boy waited without food or drink for three days. This is mystical. With that authenticity, "I want to face Death", he sat without food or water in pure Nirāhāra Samyama; just exhaling without even inhaling. Even if you inhale, it is Ahara (food). Only exhaling means all the collected life-energy from his seven years of life is being sent out; he is releasing it, waiting for death.

If you decide with authenticity, "I want to face Kala, the Lord of Death," then go on exhaling. With authenticity, if you decide this, you will not be inhaling, just exhaling, releasing all the life energy stored in your body and within you until now. You will release everything and not take in anything that is a source of life—food, water, or prāṇa. In three days, you will have a pure death experience. The pattern of inhaling and exhaling will be broken by authentic declaration. Naciketa 's authenticity - he broke the pattern of inhaling and exhaling in just three days.

On the third day, he broke the pattern. That is what they mean when they say he went to the Abode of Yama and Yama was absent for three days. It took three days for Naciketa to come face-to-face with Yama Dharma. Upon Yama's return, one of his assistants tells Yama, "Oh Lord, like a fire, a Brāhmaṇa has come to your house. If you don't do what needs to be done, it can burn and destroy your house. If you do what needs to be done, he can be available for you for cooking and all the enriching aspects of your life." When a righteous Brāhmaṇa comes, if you take care of him, he will enrich your life forever; if not, he can destroy it. So the assistant is telling Yama, "Take care of him; a Brāhmaṇa is here."

Understand this: with these words, the whole problem of the caste system is broken because Naciketa is Kṣatriya by birth - he is the son of a king. But the Upaniṣad records him as 'a Brāhmaṇa waiting.' Understand this: he is the son of a king. What does this mean? The title is based on the quality of a person, not just their birth.

The next verse says: "The foolish man in whose house a Brāhmaṇa guest remains without food—all his hopes and expectations, all the merit gained by his association with the holy through good words and deeds—all his sons and cattle are destroyed."

Please understand, each one of these words is very, very meaningful. If an authentic person comes into your life and you don't take care of him, whatever you have in your life will be destroyed very soon - you will lose it very soon. You will lose him and everything else in your life. It is very rare to see authentic beings in your life. Blessed are those who do not miss the opportunity when authentic beings come into our lives. Never ever fight with an authentic being because it will always be a losing battle for you. That is why even if you suspect someone is enlightened, do not abuse them.

The foolish man in whose house a Brāhmaṇa guest remains without food - meaning unattended, disrespected, not taken care of - all his hopes and expectations; 'all the merit gained by his association with the holy, by his good words and deeds, all his sons and cattle are destroyed,' meaning everything said and unsaid.

According to the ancient Hindu ideal, the guest is representative of God and should be received with due reverence and honor. Please understand that revering the guest and honoring the guest is not just a social, moral, or ethical responsibility; it is a spiritual responsibility. Whoever has made shelter for their body and food for their body should take responsibility for anybody who does not have shelter or food when they come into your breathing space.

Understand, if you have made provisions for food, shelter, and clothing for yourself, and anyone without these three essentials comes into your breathing space, you are responsible for providing all three to them. Only if there is a danger from the other person to your life or possessions are you allowed not to take responsibility for that person.

Anybody who is established in authenticity will never be a danger to your life. So if you see someone established in authenticity, you should take care of them.

What a beautiful verse: "The foolish man in whose house a Brāhmaṇa guest remains without food - all his hopes and expectations, meaning future plans, all the merit gained by his association with the holy - meaning the Punya he receives from Satsanga (the highest Punya a man can receive) - even that highest Punya is destroyed," declares the Upaniṣadic Rishi.

The merit that a man gains through good words and deeds, along with all his sons and cattle, is destroyed if an authentic person comes to his house as a guest and remains without food.

"The foolish man in whose house a Brāhmaṇa guest remains without food - all his hopes and expectations, all the merit gained by his association with the holy through his good words and deeds, and all his sons and cattle, are destroyed."

Sangatham means all the great things one receives by associating with holy and authentic people - all of that is destroyed if one is not authentic when such people come to their place and if they do not show hospitality. What a high place is given for being authentic! Authenticity has such high power. Just by taking care of them, they will give you boons. Take the example of Kunti. She was taking care of Durvasa; she must have been a small girl of 15 or 16, excitedly running around and washing his clothes. She was so thrilled to be with him. Before leaving, Durvasa asked her, "What do you want, oh my daughter?" She said, "Nothing but serving you." He then gave her a boon: any God she calls will come in front of her and grant her what she wants. She would experience communion with that God! This is not an ordinary power.

Durvasa told her she could summon any Deva and have a child by that Deva. When Kunti asked why he gave this boon, Durvasa said it would be useful in her later life. Although Durvasa is known for cursing, it is recorded that all his curses turn out to be auspicious.

The hospitality of Mangayakarasi to Jñānasambandar is a beautiful example, just like how he healed Goon Pandyan. The Pandya king had a hunchback, and through the hospitality of Mangayakarasi, the queen, Jñānasambandar healed the king's hunchback. Similarly, Sabari received enlightenment just by offering a few fruits! Receiving guests is a fundamental value in Hindu tradition.

"All hopes and expectations, all the merit gained by his association with the holy, by his good words and deeds, all his sons and cattle - everything is destroyed for a man of little understanding in whose house a Brāhmaṇa guest remains without food."

This 8th verse from Chapter 1 of the Katha Upaniṣad emphasizes the importance of hospitality and respect towards guests, particularly those who are holy or enlightened beings.

The Rishi of this Upaniṣad, Yama, the lord of death, starts speaking for the first time. This must have happened after he learned the lesson at Mahādeva's feet. When he was trying to take the life of Markandeya, he was integrated but not authentic. Mahādeva's feet taught him the lesson of authenticity, and he became enlightened. Now, he is both integrated and authentic, which is why he is teaching this lesson to Naciketa. He realized he cannot be just a mere timekeeper of death.

Yama says: "O Brāhmaṇa! Revered guest! My salutations to thee. See the power of authenticity; it is more powerful than devotion. Understand, Markandeya had deep devotion to Mahādeva, and Mahādeva himself was protecting him. Even then, Yama did not bow to Markandeya; he just left him and went away. But here, he bows down to Naciketa. Can you imagine? The lord of death himself bows down to you!

This scene must be very shocking where Yama says: 'O Brāhmaṇa!' What a beautiful way of receiving. Understand, Naciketa is a Kṣatriya by birth, not a Brāhmaṇa by birth. He is called a Brāhmaṇa because of his qualities; due to his authenticity, he has raised himself to the level of a Brāhmaṇa. Yama says 'revered guest – God!' If this is how Yama behaves, everyone would want to go to his house!

Understand that when you are established in authenticity, this is how Yama has to respond to you. Nobody is inherently bad or good; it is the way you approach that determines how people respond to you. If you approach with violence, you will receive violence; if you approach with authenticity, you will receive respect.

Yama is receiving: "O Brāhmaṇa! Revered guest! My salutations to thee. As thou hast remained three nights in my house without food, therefore choose three boons, O Brāhmaṇa!" It means, "You remained here for three nights without food, respect, or hospitality. Please accept my apologies and take three boons as a blessing. Choose three boons and bless me. I hope you do not hold any anger or curse towards me."

Usually, Yama chases you, death chases you, and you run trying to hide here and there. Anything you consider as security in your life is just a hole in which you are trying to hide from Yama. The simple naked truth standing in front of you is insecurity. Any security you create is merely a hole in which you hide. The money you store in the bank, the wealth you save for the future, and the relationships you build thinking they will take care of you - all these are just holes.

Understand that anything you think of as security is just a hole in your consciousness. Identify all the holes that you have and are building for yourself to go and hide. During war, people go and hide in what they call war shelters. You try to create death shelters without understanding that all death shelters are just useless; at best, they are maximum delay tactics or imaginary delay tactics.

All the death shelters you build in your life - ICUs, hospitals, medical insurances - having them physically is okay, but thinking they will protect you from death is wrong. Have medical insurance and health care so that until your karmas are exhausted, you will be protected in this body. Old age health care should be taken with this attitude: let me have this body protected so that the last pattern is exhausted and leaves my body.

There is nothing wrong with having insurance. but if you think it can delay death, there is something seriously wrong. Do not create death shelters in your mind. When you are living in your old age, have the right attitude. The attitude with which you give medical care to yourself in old age is very important. Context makes things right or wrong. You should provide medical care for your body with the mindset that it should be alive as long as possible. Make every effort to keep the body alive so that every single pattern is exhausted by the time you leave the body, allowing you to directly jump into super consciousness without assuming another body. This should be the reason for giving medical care to yourself in old age.

We should create places for graceful exits like hospices. We should be able to provide medical care, meditation care, and spiritual care not only for people who have become old but also for those suffering from fatal diseases and are nearing the end of their lives.

Usually, you create bomb shelters and death shelters, but death chases you regardless. It is immune to shelters. Jainism has the most thorough and systematic knowledge of graceful exits, so we should follow Jainism's principles in this regard. They have very systematic principles and understandings. Tantra has evolved the best way of giving birth, while Jainism has evolved the best way of graceful exit. Each tradition has concentrated on one science and worked on it extensively. The Hindu tradition has evolved the best way of educating beings towards living enlightenment - the Gurukul system. The power of authenticity is such that you stretch yourself beyond death.

Naciketa says: "May Gautama, my father, be free from anxious thoughts about me. May he lose all anger towards me and be pacified in heart. May he know and welcome me when I am sent back by thee. This, O Death, is the first of the three boons I choose."

The first thing Naciketa addresses is Gautama, meaning highly honored. The way he addresses his father tells Yama very clearly, "Don't think I am going to give up on my dad because he did this to me." Because Yama knows whatever has happened,

Naciketa says: "May Gautama, my father, be free from anxious thoughts."

First, understand that he attends to the mamakāra of his father - the sense of powerlessness. Let him be healed. Let him be authentic.

Second, he wants the ahamkāra to be healed, "May he lose all anger," meaning let him become non-violent; let his ahamkāra be healed.

Third, let his anyakāra - the purpose for which he sent me - be addressed so that he welcomes me when I return from you. Again, Naciketa is straight to the subject. Please understand, he knows his father is a three-piece being and wants to take responsibility for all three pieces of his father so that he has peace. He says:

"Let my father's mamakāra be healed, ahamkāra be healed, and let my father's anyakāra be fulfilled. Let him be free from powerless mamakāra and violent ahamkāra; let him be fulfilled with the anyakāra of me."

Gautama is the word used in our Upaniṣads to refer to someone as "His Highness" or "Holiness" – revered is the right translation. Gautama is the first rishi among the Sapta Ṛṣis. He is the senior-most rishi among the Sapta Ṛṣis and lived in Arunachala when Devi was asked to do tapas by Mahādeva. He sent her to Gautama for training and initiation. According to the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, it was Gautama's ashram where Uma, Parvati, was growing and doing tapas, exactly in the same area where KAILASA's Tiruvannamalai ashram is located. Still, Gautama's samādhi is there just opposite our ashram. You can see his Jīva samādhi. There is a very clear description in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa that he lived on the western side of Arunachala.

Gautama means revered. So, Naciketa says, "my revered father." This means that when you take responsibility for someone, you will not complain about them. If you are complaining about anybody, you are not taking responsibility for their inauthenticity. Take responsibility even for their inauthenticity. When you take responsibility for people's inauthenticity, you become an ideological family. A family happens only when you take responsibility even for the inauthenticity of the other person.

If you take responsibility for the inauthenticity of your blood relatives, a biological family happens. If you take responsibility for the inauthenticity of anybody and everybody, an ideological family happens. Anybody who wants to create a beautiful family should be able to take responsibility for the inauthenticity of the other person.

What a powerful boon Naciketa is asking! He stands by authenticity even after victory. Many times, you use authenticity to achieve a certain goal. The moment you achieve the goal, you throw everything into the air, thinking, "Now I have achieved my goal; I don't need to practice anything." No. When Yama asked what boon he wanted, the first thing Naciketa could have asked for was enlightenment. Who knows, by the time you ask for the first boon, he may take away the remaining two boons. It's like someone asking an attorney, "Sir, how much do you charge?" and the lawyer responds, "$100." When asked why that much, the lawyer asks, "What is your next question?" Who knows, the three boons may get exhausted just like this. It's better to be careful and ask for what you truly want first.

But Naciketa 's first request is for others. Naciketa stands for enriching others. The Kaṭhopaniṣad is the gift of Naciketa 's being dedicated to enriching others. Naciketa proves his authenticity by asking for the first boon to enrich his father, who feels that Naciketa is his enemy. Naciketa wants his father's mamakāra to be healed, ahamkāra to be healed, and anyakāra to be fulfilled. What a beautiful concept! He did not give up on his father even after his victory.

If we were in Naciketa's place, the first thing we would ask for is, "Give me this, this, and this," and then finally, "Take care of my dad because I have to go back and live with him." You might have asked only for your relationship with your dad to be healed, not for your dad himself to be healed. But here is Naciketa.

In the story of Markandeya, Yama looks like a villain, but here he looks like a hero. Yama was kicked by Śiva. Even for kicking, if Guru's feet touch you, the villain becomes a hero. But you have to be a real villain like Yama, who was truly integrated in his villainy.

Naciketa did not give up on his father or the world. The second boon will show that he not only did not give up on his father but also healed him and provided a remedy for the disease from which the world is suffering. He asks for healing for his father and for the science to cure those who are suffering with the same ailment. The next boon he asks for is the technique of transferring souls to higher consciousness.

Yama replies:

यथा पुरस्ताद् भविता प्रतीत औद्दालकिरारुणिर्मत्प्रसृष्टः ।
सुखँ रात्रीः शयिता वीतमन्युः त्वां दद्दशिवान्मृत्युमुखात् प्रमुक्तम् ॥ ११॥
yathā purastād bhavitā pratīta auddālakirāruṇirmatprasṛṣṭaḥ |

sukham rātrīḥ śayitā vītamanyuḥ tvāṃ dadṛśivānmṛtyumukhāt pramuktam ||11||

Actually, Yama surpasses the sweetness of Naciketa. After all, he is the Guru. He surpasses the sweetness of Naciketa because of the authenticity he learned from the sweet, tender kick by Śiva. Even when Śiva was kicking him, maybe in Śiva's eyes and body language, anger was shown, but what was transmitted was sweet energy. That energy would have immediately put Kālā into Mahā Samādhi, into beautiful Nirvikalpa Samādhi, making him authentic. So with that authenticity, he is pouring his sweetness when he gives the boon.

"Through my will Auddalaki Aruni will know you, and be again towards you as before. He will sleep in peace at night. He will be free from wrath when he sees thee released from the mouth of death."

Naciketa first asked for his father's mamakāra to be healed, ahamkāra to be healed, and anyakāra to be fulfilled. Now, Yama goes this way: first, his anyakāra will be fulfilled. He will know you are alive and will be happy and peaceful towards you, meaning his anyakāra is fulfilled. Second, he will sleep in peace, meaning his ahamkāra will be healed. When your ahamkāra is healed, the first thing that happens is you will sleep in peace.

Here, Kālā says he will sleep, which means a complete healing of ahamkāra. Understand that only if your ahamkāra is completely healed will you be able to sleep in peace. The third boon he gives is that he will be freed from wrath, meaning his mamakāra will also be healed. Yama gives the same boon: let his anyakāra be fulfilled, let his ahamkāra be fulfilled, and let his mamakāra be fulfilled.

What a beautiful concept! You see, he will sleep in peace without dreams. Understand that only when the roots of your ahamkāra are healed will you be able to sleep at night without dreams. Yama also makes a beautiful statement: when he sees you released from the mouth of death. Nobody is released from the mouth of a crocodile; once you are caught, you are caught. Similarly, nobody is released from death; once you are caught, you are caught. He says he will be very happy when he sees you released from death.

The next verse shows how Naciketa floors us with his commitment to the world. Not only is he bringing ready-made solutions to his father, but he also takes the formula to the whole world. Because he wants to take responsibility to the core, he takes responsibility for the whole world, not just one person.

Don't give up on you and others. Don't give up on you and the world. Don't give up on people.

The next sloka of Naciketa reminds us of his extreme authenticity and responsibility of not giving up on people. People are life, people are God. Anybody who comes in your space is Kalpataru, who comes to give you something. If you give up on Kalpataru, you are the loser. Don't give up on Kalpataru. Extreme authenticity and responsibility Naciketa is demonstrating in the next sloka, the next boon. Now, in the next sloka, Naciketa says:

स्वर्गे लोके न भयं किञ्चनास्ति न तत्र त्वं न जरया बिभेति।
उभे तीर्त्वाऽशनायापिपासे शोकातिगो मोदते स्वर्गलोके ॥ १२॥

svarge loke na bhayaṁ kiñcanāsti na tatra tvaṁ na jarayā bibheti |
ubhe tīrtvā'śanāyāpipāse śokātigo modate svargaloke ||12||

The translation:

In the realm of heaven there is no fear. Thou are not there, means: death. Yama, you are not there, nor is there fear of old age. Having crossed beyond both hunger and thirst and being above grief, they rejoice in heaven.

Please understand, with this boon, Naciketa goes to the extreme of finding the root cause, finding the solution for the root cause problem. It is not that his father was infected with HIV, goes to Yama and takes medicine only for his father, wishing for his father to survive and be cured while letting all others die. No. He first takes medicine for his father, then asks for the formula of the medicine to cure HIV in the whole world. One of the biggest diseases the whole world is suffering from is the desire to exist forever - longevity. It's unfortunate that people are very inauthentic with this desire. If you are authentic, there is a part of you that exists forever beyond death - if you realize that part, you can be like that. But that is a long route. People don't want that. They want a shortcut and they want the body and mind which they already know, very comfortable, to live forever with them.

The law of existence is simple: you will live forever, but your possessions cannot. Your body and mind are your possessions, not you. If you seek eternal life, know that you are already eternal. Do not cling to the idea that your possessions should be eternal too. In reality, you would feel bored if your possessions stayed with you forever.

svarge loke na bhayaṁ kiñcanāsti na tatra tvaṁ na jarayā bibheti |
ubhe tīrtvā'śanāyāpipāse śokātigo modate svargaloke ||

Naciketa said: In the realm of heaven there's no fear, thou death is not there. Nor is there fear of old age, having crossed beyond both hunger and thirst, above being grief, being above grief, they rejoice in heaven.

There is a solution for the root disease of the desire for longevity. Why was Naciketa 's father inauthentic? His desire for longevity made him inauthentic, as he wanted to perform the sacrifice but did not want to follow all the rules with integrity. If you decide that you will not give up even for hundreds of years, you will have the result in one moment. If you think you want the result in one moment, even in one hundred years, you will not achieve it.

Naciketa 's father had a deep desire to live forever and enjoy the pleasures of life. However, he was inauthentic towards the process through which he could achieve it. He was trying to keep his body alive. Even if he had performed that sacrifice with authenticity, his body would have only lived for a few hundred more years. But Naciketa wants to solve this issue once and for all for the whole of humanity. Only a personality like Naciketa can think of liberating the entire humanity from these kinds of problems.

He continues in the next verse

स त्वमग्निं स्वर्ग्यमध्येषि मृत्यो प्रब्रूहि त्वं श्रद्दधानाय मह्यम्।
स्वर्गलोका अमृतत्वं भजन्त एतद् द्वितीयेन वृणे वरेण ॥ १३॥
sa tvamagniṁ svargyamadhyeṣi mṛtyo prabrūhi tvaṁ śraddadhānāya mahyam |
svargalokā amṛtatvaṁ bhajanta etad dvitīyena vṛṇe vareṇa ||13||

Thou knowest oh death, the fire sacrifice that leads to heaven. Tell this to me, who am full of Śraddhā, they who live in the realm of heaven, enjoy freedom from death. This, I beg as my second Boon.

When you have Śraddhā, you will not feel egoistic when you say you have Śraddhā. In this verse, Naciketa says, "I am full of Śraddhā, tell me this." It means, I will not misuse this science. I am very authentic when I ask you to give me this knowledge and science.

He says, "You know, Oh death, the fire sacrifice that leads to heaven," which means where people live beyond death. The root cause of the desire to live is the fear of death. He is asking, "Give me the science of going beyond the fear once and for all, so that I can share this science with the whole world and liberate everyone from the problem my father was suffering from and behaving inauthentically."

He asks beautifully: "Oh Lord, tell me the science." He says beautifully: "Tell me the knowledge, the science of going to heaven, where there is no death, where people are beyond hunger and thirst, where people are beyond grief." That is why he describes heaven clearly. I want this kind of heaven, the sacrifice for this kind of heaven; not your own version of heaven. He's very conscious about what he wants. And he says, "I am full of Śraddhā, I want this to enrich the world, not for anything else."

So, he uses a very beautiful word, "This I beg as my second Boon." Beautifully, Naciketa floors the whole world with his second boon, his second request. At least, for his second request, he could have asked for enlightenment, and then he could have gone to the third.

"Thou knowest Oh death, the fire sacrifice that leads to heaven, tell this to me, who is full of Śraddhā, they who live in thee, live in the realm of heaven, enjoy freedom from death. This I beg as my second boon."

Yama is also listening. He replies:

प्र ते ब्रवीमि तदु मे निबोध स्वर्ग्यमग्निं नचिकेतः प्रजानन्।
अनन्तलोकाप्तिमथो प्रतिष्ठां विद्धि त्वमेतं निहितं गुहायाम् ॥ १४॥
pra te bravīmi tadu me nibodha svargyamagniṁ naciketaḥ prajānan |
anantalokāptimatho pratiṣṭhāṁ viddhi tvametaṁ nihitaṁ guhāyām ||14||

Yama replied: "I know well that fire which leads to the realm of heaven. I shall tell it to you, listen to me. Know, Oh Naciketa, that this is the means of attaining endless worlds and their support. It is hidden in the heart of all beings."

Yama gives this boon. He says: "I'll tell you, listen to me. I'll give you the science of endless worlds and receive their support." It is hidden in the hearts of all beings."

It means, there is a part of you - Akshara - that is imperishable. The part of you with which you associate yourself is perishable. Becoming the part of you that is imperishable, which resides in your heart, is the science. The more subtle you become, the more expansive the space in which you live will be.

If you are in the physical body, it's a hundred years.

If you are in the pranic body and established in it, your life will be a thousand years.

If you are established in the mental body, it will be ten thousand years.

If you are established in the subtle body, it will be twenty-five thousand years.

If you are established in the Kārana Sarira, it will be one Yuga.

If you are established in the ātma Sarira, your life will span one Brahmānda, Brahmakalpa.

If you are established in Nirvāna Sarira, you are eternal forever.

The subtler and subtler space you are established in, the less time deteriorates you. The grosser you are, the more deterioration occurs due to time. The more subtle you are, the less deterioration happens because of time. Time affects you if you are heavy, solid, and physical. It does not affect you as much when you become more and more subtle. The subtler you become, the less time affects you. Time does not work on you when you move into subtler spaces. Time works on you when you are in grosser spaces.

Time itself is teaching this science to Naciketa, as to how you can escape from him. It is like the police teaching you how to escape from them. It is like a thief teaching you how to protect your wealth from him. Kala is teaching you how to go beyond time.

Yama answers beautifully. He first very clearly says, "I know that fire which leads to the realm of heaven." He assures Naciketa : "Yes, I know exactly what you are asking." And the second statement he makes, "I shall tell it to you." Means, I'll give you that. Third, "Listen to me." Fourth, "Know, Oh Naciketa, that this is the means of attaining endless worlds and their support. It is hidden in the heart of all beings."

tvametaṁ nihitaṁ guhāyām

The next sloka,

लोकादिमग्निं तमुवाच तस्मै या इष्टका यावतीर्वा यथा वा।
स चापि तत्प्रत्यवदद्यथोक्तमथास्य मृत्युः पुनरेवाह तुष्टः ॥ १५॥
lokādimagniṁ tamuvāca tasmai yā iṣṭakā yāvatīrvā yathā vā |
sa cāpi tatpratyavadadyathoktamathāsya mṛtyuḥ punarevāha tuṣṭaḥ ||15||

From this verse the Chandas, the meter becomes different. Till this verse it is a story, this verse onwards, it is teaching. The meaning is:

Yama then told him that the fire sacrifice is the beginning of all worlds. Please understand the fire sacrifice, which is the beginning of all worlds, including what bricks to use, how many, and how to lay them for the altar. Naciketa repeated everything as it was told to him. Then death, being pleased with him, said again."

This whole verse has so much meaning. Understand, this is the way education is done in the Gurukul system. When a disciple or student goes to the teacher, the teacher should first give assurance, "I know what you want." Second, he should assure the disciple, "I will teach you." It is an authentic commitment so that the disciple does not waste time with the wrong Guru. The disciple goes, asking for what he wants, specifying his need. Then the teacher confirms with authenticity and integrity, "I know it, and I shall teach you."

Then he gives instructions on how to receive that knowledge. He says, "Listen to me." Next, he provides an introduction to knowledge and emphasizes the importance of knowledge. He says, "This is the means of attaining endless worlds and their support." The introduction itself is enchanting. The student is authentically inspired to learn. Then, he removes the fear in the student by saying, "It is not difficult; it is hidden in the heart of all beings." He first asserts, "I know it," and then adds, "I know it well."

pra te bravīmi tadu "I know well, that fire which leads to the realm of heaven, which you asked, as per your definition."

Second, "I shall tell it to you. Don't have any doubt, just because I know, I may hide a little bit, and not tell you." He assures, "I shall tell it to you. I shall teach you, I'll teach you. I am not going to keep that as a secret from you. I'll share it with you."

Then he introduces the knowledge that this is the means of attaining endless worlds and their support. And he removes the doubt from Naciketa 's heart, "It is not difficult, don't worry. It is hidden in the heart of all beings."

Then, the method of teaching. Yama then told him that fire sacrifice, the beginning of all the worlds, what bricks, how many and how laid for the altar. Naciketa repeated.

You need to understand this word. Yama then told him that fire sacrifice is the beginning of all the worlds. What is the meaning of "beginning of all the worlds"? Understand, only when you comprehend the beginning of all the worlds, you will know how to be endless in all the worlds. If you don't understand the beginning, you will not know how to be endless. He says, "To be endless, you have to know the beginning." You need to know the science of the beginning.

Please understand, anything which has a beginning, which you can calculate with your logic, will have an end also which you can calculate with your logic.

Please understand, your logic will take a quantum leap the moment your body is physically mature. Indeed, in our Gurukuls and Hindu tradition, we recognize the importance of physical maturity in the transformation of one's logic. The division into two sections, Bālak and Yuva, reflects this understanding. Bālaks are kids who are not physically mature, while Yuvas are kids who have reached physical maturity. This distinction acknowledges the quantum leap that occurs in one's logic with physical maturity. If a Bālak's logic can calculate, imagine, and visualize the beginning, it can also visualize the end. That will end within his visualization. If a Yuva can visualize the beginning, the end will also be within his visualization. For example, if you can visualize a hundred years and there is something that began a hundred years before, naturally its end will also be within your visualization. It will be at most two hundred or three hundred years, but it is in your realm of visualization.

Understand the science of beginnings. If you cannot imagine the beginning of something, you will not know its end, and it becomes endless. That is why Yama is saying, "Beginning of all the worlds," meaning he is teaching about the endless worlds. He is imparting the knowledge of which world will end when, by revealing the secret of the beginning of the world. Otherwise, a common man reading this line - "the beginning of all the worlds" - may wonder, "Why? Why teach about the beginning of all the worlds?" Ultimately, Naciketa is seeking deathlessness and endless worlds.

You will not know, something is endless, unless you know its beginning. And one more thing, even if Yama says, "Yes, this world is endless" Naciketa will not believe it. He has to be given logical understanding and proof. By Yama showing, "See, it began millions of years before, still it has not ended. This shows it is an endless world, learn this science." So, you have to transmit the knowledge, without leaving a single doubt in the student's heart. This is the science of teaching.

And now Yama teaches that fire sacrifice is the beginning of all the worlds - This world began ten thousand years before, this world began twenty thousand years before, this world began two lakh years before, this world began zillions of years before. So, naturally, these zillions of years before, the world which began is the most trustworthy. With this, we can be assured that the quality material out of which this world is made is so strong, it will be endless. So now, reach this world which is endless.

What bricks, how many, and how they are laid for the altar. This means that the cosmic airport to take off to those spaces is the fire altar. Understand that the fire altar is the cosmic airport from which you can take off. So, the direction of the airport, the way the altar needs to be built, everything was taught by Yama to Naciketa. The Upaniṣad says that Naciketa repeated everything as it was told to him. The Upaniṣad is not saying that Naciketa took notes; rather, Naciketa repeated everything as it was told to him.

Eka santha grāhi - One who can entirely grasp and recount whatever you tell him once. Yama is pleased with him. This means that because he does not need to repeat the process again, Yama is pleased.

Understand the science of fire sacrifice. All these endless worlds are at different frequencies. By chanting those specific mantras, using that specific fire altar, with that specific fire and sound, your body elevates to that frequency and you can exist in that frequency for as long as you desire. If your frequency drops, simply repeat the same technique to elevate it again. That is why the way the altar is arranged is crucial.

Naciketa has repeated everything as it was told to him. Then death, Yama, being pleased with him again said

तमब्रवीत्प्रीयमाणो महात्मा वरं तवेहाद्य ददामि भूयः ।
तवैव नाम्ना भविताऽयमग्निः सृङ्कां चेमामनेकरूपां गृहाण ॥ १६॥

tamabravītprīyamāṇo mahātmā varaṁ tavehādya dadāmi bhūyaḥ |
tavaiva nāmnā bhavitā'yamagniḥ sṛṅkāṁ cemāmanekarūpāṁ gṛhāṇa ||16||

The great soul Yama, the Mahātmā! The word Mahātmā has its oldest recording in the Kaṭhopaniṣad. Mahātmā Yama, being well pleased, said to Naciketa : "I now grant you another boon; this fire sacrifice shall be named after you. Take also this garland of many colors." This practice of naming an invention or discovery after its inventor or discoverer began with the Kaṭhopaniṣad. The tradition of naming discoveries after their discoverers, like Raman's effect or Ramanujam's theorems, originated from the Kaṭhopaniṣad. Since Naciketa was instrumental in bringing this science from Yama to the world, Yama said, "Let your name be associated with this ritual. Let this science be named after you."

Understand, if you are not receiving any bonus from the teacher, you are not a good student. It's not out of sympathy from the teacher, but due to your efficiency in learning.

The great soul, Yama Mahātmā, is referred to as a Mahātmā after he revealed this science to the world. A Mahātmā is a person who reveals whatever is in his Atma to the Mahat. If he enriches the Mahat with his Atma, he is a Mahātmā. Because he enriched the world with his Atma, he is a Mahātmā and, being well pleased, he said to Naciketa: "I give you now another boon; let this sacrifice be named after you and take also this garland of many colors." See, that shows his spontaneous joy, and he does not want to wait to find out what gift he should give you. He just gives something which he has.

Understand whenever you feel you have committed to big things, decide 'I won't give up on me.' That is the pillar with which you have to support your slagging mind, "Oh, I think I have committed too big a thing. It is too heavy on my shoulder." No! Give the strength to the shoulder, don't give up on you! Don't give up on yourself.

When a teacher is pleased with a student spontaneously out of joy, he gives something. He says, "Let you have this garland of many colours." It must be a Navaratna mālā, or something that Yama was wearing. There is also a record that during the churning of the milky ocean, the Navaratna mālā that emerged was given to Yama.

What does the Navaratna mālā have to do with Yama? Because Navaratnas live for generations; all nine ratnas don't perish, they don't get destroyed. That is why Navaratna jewelries, jewels made out of Navaratnas, stay for generations. So, almost like being deathless. Navaratna jewels are the symbol of deathlessness. The Navaratna mālā, which came from the ocean during the churning, was given to Yama. Yama gifts that Mālā to Naciketa now, just for being a beautiful student, a good student. Yama must have been a great teacher, enjoying teaching; that is why he is so overjoyed and celebrates the right student happening. If you are interested only in the money from the student, you will celebrate when you are given a large donation from the student. If you really enjoy teaching, you will celebrate when you have the right student. Here, Yama must have been a great teacher; that is why he celebrates an amazing student who has not given anything to him other than being a good student. There is no record of Naciketa bringing any Guru Dakṣiṇa offering to Yama.

Now the 17th verse

त्रिणाचिकेतस्त्रिभिरेत्य सन्धिं त्रिकर्मकृत्तरति जन्ममृत्यू ।
ब्रह्मजज्ञं देवमीड्यं विदित्वा निचाय्येमाँ शान्तिमत्यन्तमेति ॥ १७ ॥

triṇāciketastribhiretya sandhiṃ trikarmakṛttarati janmamṛtyū । brahmajajñaṃ devamīḍyaṃ viditvā nicāyyemāṁ śāntimatyantameti ॥ 17 ॥

The verse means,

He who performs this Naciketa 's fire sacrifice three times, being united with the three - mother, father and teacher - and who fulfills the threefold duty - study of the Vedās, sacrifice and almsgiving - crosses over the birth and death, knowing this worshipful shining fire born of Brahman and realizing him, he attains eternal peace.

Now Kāla is doing the job of KālaKāla: "He who performs this Naciketa fire sacrifice three times, being united with the three; mother, father and teacher and who fulfils the threefold duty; study of the Vedās, sacrifice and almsgiving, crosses over birth and death, knowing this worshipful shining fire born of Brahman and realizing him, he attains eternal peace". This verse has the secret of the whole process.

"He who performs this Naciketa fire sacrifice three times…" Why three times? The sacrifice is powerful enough; once is enough, so why three times? Because even if there are some mistakes once, some mistakes twice, by the third time, there will not be any mistakes. It's like a factor of safety, ensuring insurance and insurance for the insurance company. You insure in one company, you insure in another company if the first one goes bankrupt. This is like a three-layer insurance; that's why it's done three times so that nothing is missed. It's like ensuring your visa is proper. If there is no proper visa and you go to a country, they will send you back to your homeland. But with this yajña, if you think you have performed it and then go there and they say, "No, your account is not in our records," what will you do? You can't come back either. So, just to avoid these kinds of difficulties, you have been asked to perform it three times. Therefore, make sure it is properly recorded.

"Being united with the three..." This is very important; mother, father and teacher; why? Being united with the three means, you have completed with all the three. If you have completed with all the three, you restore your Integrity, you just restore your Integrity. If you are not complete with all the three, all three will not feel comfortable around you and you will not feel comfortable around them, they will not be able to spend time around you in the Yajña.

See the word, "Being united with the three…" not being accompanied by the three. The Upaniṣad is not using the word, "Being accompanied by the three…" It says, being united with the three. It means you should have completely completed with all three of them. You should be in integrity with all three of them. Integrity with the mother heals your Bio-Memory, Integrity with the father heals your Bio-Energy, Integrity with the teacher heals your Super Consciousness. Integrity with the teacher, with Ācārya, with the Master is ultimate.

If there is no Integrity with Ācārya, whatever you have learnt will not be useful for you, Whatever Karṇa learnt from Paraśurāma only became bad for him because not only did he forget when it was needed, he had a false confidence of that knowledge. Do not have a lack of Integrity with the Master. Without Integrity, without having Integrity with the Master, whatever you learn will not be useful for you. Do not be out of Integrity, don't lack Integrity with the teacher, that is very dangerous. Not only do you miss the Master, you will have a false confidence that you have learnt, like Karṇa.

In Karṇa's life, he had false confidence that he knew the Brahmāstra. He forgot about the curse, thinking he would remember it when he was about to use it. He was aware of the curse he received from Paraśurāma but thought, "How could I forget such important knowledge? It's almost like my own cell phone number or bank account password."

When you are out of integrity with the Master, it can make you forget what you have learned. Forgetting is not an ordinary phenomenon. If fat settles in your blood vessels, naturally blood flow reduces, so the heart has to pump with more pressure to reach blood to all parts of the body; that is what is called "Blood Pressure." Similarly, if there are too many blockages in your Kuṇḍalinī flow system, just like blood flow and blood vessels, Kuṇḍalinī vessels can get blocked. When there are too many blockages in Kuṇḍalinī vessels, Kuṇḍalinī energy gets blocked and has to pump fast to reach life energy to all parts of your body. Just like blood pressure, Kuṇḍalinī pressure manifests as forgetfulness.

Understand, if there are many blockages in your Kuṇḍalinī vessels, just like the heart has to pump with more pressure for blood to reach all parts of the body. Your root center, Mūlādhāra, has to pressure Kuṇḍalinī energy because only when the Kuṇḍalinī energy reaches all parts of the body, those parts will send you information, receive your information, and execute.

Understand, only if the blood flows to the tip of your fingers will it execute whatever you command. Similarly, only if the Kuṇḍalinī energy flows from the tip of your fingers to all edges of your body will you have sensation; you will process any touch and discern its nature. Just like blood flow, Kuṇḍalinī flow is also important. If there is a blockage in your Kuṇḍalinī vessels, naturally Kuṇḍalinī pressure has to increase; it has to send Kuṇḍalinī energy at high pressure. High blood pressure causes heart problems and heart attacks; similarly, high Kuṇḍalinī pressure can lead to stress, depression, and ultimately forgetfulness.

Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, high depression, and stress are all direct effects of high Kuṇḍalinī pressure. Inauthenticity and lack of integrity are the major fat settlements on your Kuṇḍalinī vessels. If you are out of integrity with your Master, understand that everything you have learnt is lost. When you are out of integrity with the Master, every line will be forgotten; not only will you be unable to remember, but you will also lack the intensity to make it an experience.

It is an automatic mechanism. You will only have false confidence like Karṇa and get into the war. When you are about to use the Brahmāstra, you will realize, "Oh god! It is not there with you." It is like earning millions by the Master's grace and having it in your bank. Suddenly, you have fallen out of integrity; one day, you go somewhere and spend left and right. When you pay by credit card, if you forget your password or account number, not only have you lost the money, but you also can't use it. Now, you will be charged for fraudulence.

When you are lacking integrity with the Master, nothing you have learnt from him can be used in your life. That is why the Upaniṣad insists on being united with the three: mother, father, and teacher. If you are out of integrity with your mother, your body will never be healthy. If you are out of integrity with your father, your mind will never be healthy. If you are out of integrity with your teacher, your consciousness will never be healthy.

Restore Integrity, Completion with your father for the health of the mind. Restore, complete, restore the Integrity and Completion with your mother for your body to be healthy. Restore the Integrity and Completion with your Master to keep your consciousness enlightened.

The Upaniṣad is very clear, "United with the three; mother, father and teacher and who fulfills the three-fold duty; study of the Vedās, sacrifice and almsgiving"; and almsgiving; understand that is very important, almsgiving.

Study of the Vedās, sacrifice and almsgiving. Study of the Vedās means listening, Śravaṇa. Sacrifice means practicing, almsgiving means enriching. Understand that almsgiving does not mean just giving little money, no. Giving the best things you have.

What is the best thing you have? It's knowledge, the spiritual truths, sharing that with everyone and enriching. So, here the sacrifice means living, ready to sacrifice anything by not giving up on you and not giving up on people and almsgiving, enriching yourself and others, crossing over birth and death, knowing this worshipful shining fire born of Brahman.

Please understand, when you know this science, you will have Brahmajnājña, knowledge of Brahman. Brahmajnājña and realizing him, you will attain eternal peace. You will attain the ultimate eternal peace.

निचाय्येमाँ शान्तिमत्यन्तमेति ||
nicāyyemāṁ śāntimatyantameti ||

This is the science of Completion. When you are complete, naturally you don't need to come back, you will just stay in the worlds which are almost endless.

Restore your Integrity with your mother, father and teacher. Restore your Completion with mother, father and teacher.

Threefold Process

The threefold duties are listening, responsibility and enriching. Sacrifice is nothing but responsibility. You cross over birth and death knowing this worshipful shining fire born of Brahman and realizing him, he attains eternal peace.

Next verse, 18th verse:

त्रिणाचिकेतस्त्रयमेतद्विदित्वा य एवं विद्वाँश्चिनुते नाचिकेतम् ।
स मृत्युपाशान्पुरतः प्रणोद्य शोकातिगो मोदते स्वर्गलोके ॥ १८ ॥
triṇāciketastrayametadviditvā ya evaṃ vidvāṁścinute Naciketam |
sa mṛtyupāśānpurataḥ praṇodya śokātigo modate svargaloke || 18 ||

He who knows the threefold Naciketa fire and performs the Naciketa fire sacrifice with threefold knowledge having cast off the fetters of death and beyond, being beyond grief, he rejoices in the realm of heaven.

What beautiful words! He who knows the threefold Naciketa fire and performs the Naciketa fire sacrifice with the threefold knowledge having cast off the fetters of death and being beyond grief, he rejoices in the realm of heaven.

Any process has three stages. First, completing it successfully. The second stage is about having the strength and maturity to remain in that space. Some may not be able to sustain it. That is why the third stage is essential. Third, having the tools to come back if you have fallen by accident.

At some point earlier, you may have felt you are bahuputra or bahuputri. The second part is the ability to stay in that space. Some may lack this. Third, if you fall back for some reason, you need the tools to get back to that space. For any process, you need all three.

In the same way, in the Naciketa Agni, you need to have a threefold process. In every process, you need to know all three stages: The first stage is like passing Quality Control. The second stage is like running operations in mechanical engineering. The third stage is like having the ability to repair and maintain.

When you perform the Naciketa fire-sacrifice with three-fold knowledge, you not only complete it successfully, but also live it successfully, and carry the tools to return if you ever fall. Kālā, after being kicked by Mahākālā, becomes Mahādeva.

The verse is so beautiful: "All powers of the cosmos are available to me, at my disposal, out of my free will." The cosmos offers three unique treasures: creativity - all the artistic abilities, intelligence, Saraswati; all the natural resources, Lakṣmī - abundance, which includes all natural resources, the forests, the oceans, the pearls, and everything that sustains life, Lakṣmī; and Kāli, which represents all extraordinary, metaphysical powers.

A person should feel that all these are at his or her disposal. "Aham me bahuputrāya," "I am the chosen one." Brahmaṇyam Bahuputratām! The mantra encompasses all the best things in the world - creativity, natural resources, extraordinary powers.

Kīrti means glory. What is the true glory of the universe? It is the manifestation of extraordinary metaphysical powers. Everything celebrates my presence. It is at my disposal. Brahmaṇyam Bahuputratām should not be fantasized; it should be experienced. It requires a great deal of completion within.

The 'Viraja Homa Mantra' the 1st verse:

Tilān-juhomi sarasāṁ sapiṣṭān gandhāra mama citte ramantu svāhā |
gāvo hiraṇyam dhanamannapānaṁ sarveṣāṁ śriyai svāhā |
śriyam ca Lakṣmīm ca puṣṭim ca kīrtim cariṇyatām | brahmanyam bahuputratām |
'Brahmayam bahuputratām'

In the commentary, this truth is expressed as poetry, but when translated into prose, it is written as: “Aham me bahuputrāya” - meaning, “I am the chosen son of the Cosmos.” Brahmaṇyam Bahuputratām! Again, “Aham me bahuputrāya.”

Prāṇa-apāna-vyāna-udāna-samānā me śudhyantām.

Only when you truly feel you are the Bahuputra or Bahuputri - the chosen one - will you naturally radiate love to the world. If you remain incomplete or unfulfilled within, how can you possibly love others?

He who knows the three fold Naciketa fire and performs the Naciketa fire sacrifice with threefold knowledge, having cast off the fetters of death and living beyond grief rejoices in the realm of heaven. Threefold knowledge means not only performing and completing the sacrifice successfully, but also remaining established in that state, and having the ability to return to it even if one happens to fall.

Next is threefold knowledge. What is threefold knowledge? Understand, it is the method of performing in body, mind, and context.

A child was complaining to his mother, “I am afraid of life, I am afraid of this, I am afraid of that.” The mother took a knife and placed it at the child’s neck and said, “Are you afraid now? The knife is at your neck; are you afraid you will be killed?” He said, “No, I’m not afraid.” She asked, “Why?” He replied, “Because the knife is in the hands of my mother. She won’t kill me.”

In the same way, my life is in the hands of the cosmos. It won’t kill. Understand, who is holding the trishul in front of you? Context is decisive. Who does it is decisive.

triṇāciketas trayam etad viditvā

Threefold knowledge involves understanding how actions are to be performed in three dimensions: physically, mentally, and contextually. This means knowing what needs to be done outwardly through the body, what needs to be cultivated inwardly in the mind, and what context you must hold steadily in your heart.

The same act of pouring ghee into the fire can serve very different purposes. It may simply be for creating heat to balance the weather. For example, on a cold morning, you often see people in villages sitting around a fire to keep themselves warm. In that case, it is merely physical. If it is done only at that level, the yajña is nothing more than a campfire. When the act is performed both physically and mentally, it becomes a technique. But when you also hold the right context - understanding why you are performing the action - it transforms into a complete spiritual process.

Understand, it can be washing the deity, bathing the deity, or giving a sacred bath to the deity. All three actions physically appear the same but are mentally different and contextually completely different. If you just do it physically, it is washing the deity. If you do it with the right mental understanding, it is bathing the deity. If you do it with the right context, it is giving a sacred bath to the deity.

Washing the deity means simply pouring water and cleaning. Bathing the deity means recognizing the divine presence and pouring water with that awareness. Giving a sacred bath to the deity means holding the right context: “Here is the cosmos as a whole; here is the individual who feels separate. Let Him pour Himself into it.” With that context, pouring water becomes giving a sacred bath.

Anything you pour literally represents you. Sacred bathing means you just pour your own self, your very being, in the form of milk, water, turmeric powder, or whatever you are pouring. You are pouring yourself into it, into Him. Holding the right context is decisive.

In the same way, merely holding the context without taking any action will not help. One may say, “I always visualize myself pouring into the cosmos; I don’t need to actually pour the milk.” But if the action is not completed and performed regularly, the context will eventually be forgotten.

Understand, exactly as Naciketa asked, Kālā grants the boon. Naciketa asked for heaven to be a place where people live beyond death and beyond grief. The very words Kālā uses while giving the boon show that He is listening intensely. It is not as though you ask for one thing and He gives something else. No; He declares that they “cast off the fetters of death.” Please understand, casting off the fetters of death and living beyond grief is nothing but being in the state of complete completion.

If you have done something wrong and still carry guilt about it, understand that you have not completed it, yet, Complete. Never make decisions in that grief or from depression. Being beyond grief means not only that you will not repeat the same action, but also that you are free from the suffering it caused. Decide to complete and complete.

Inauthenticity is depression. If you allow guilt and grief, the inauthentic self wins and you lose. That is why Kālā says, “beyond grief."

Heaven is the state of completion but it is not enlightenment, Kailasa is the state of Mokṣa or enlightenment, which is beyond completion. If heaven were ultimate, Naciketa would not have asked for the third boon. The pleasures of heaven are not wrong; what is wrong is forgetting the ideals of Kailāsa which are Mokṣacentric. Mahādeva, as Bholenāth, simply says "Yes" to whatever you ask.

Long, long ago, once upon a time in Kailāsa, suddenly one day some gaṇas asked, "Oh Mahādeva, it's been a long time since we had a feast with amṛta. Shall we order it?" Mahādeva, as Bholenāth, laughed and said, "Go ahead, get it." There were some gaṇas jumping and saying, "Yes, yes, yes, I want it! For me, big, big, big portions!"

Then Mahādeva asked, "Who is the gaṇa who asked?" One gaṇa raised his hand and said, "Yes, I did." Mahādeva then said, "Talk to the other gaṇas and order it in the best way." The order went to Svarga. In all different parts of Svarga, preparations of amṛta were made. Before it reached Kailāsa, these gaṇas who were fantasizing about amṛta jumped with excitement.

"Today we don't need to do anything else; we will just drink amṛta and lie down," one gaṇa said. Another gaṇa added, "Yes, yes! Unclutching is also not required; just amṛta is enough. Hey, amṛta is life; in Kailāsa we don't get any of that."Yet another gaṇa said, "Hey, that is much more than living in Kailāsa."then one gaṇa exclaimed, "Hey, enlightenment, jīvanmukti, sāmīpya-mukti—when will you get those? Now you are getting the amṛta; come on, let's drink and jump!"

Śiva was observing the whole scene. At the end of it, He simply closed His eyes and withdrew into samādhi, saying He was not going to participate in the party. Suddenly the party fell into silence.

Some bhūtas pondered, "Oh, I think we have done something wrong."Some bhūtas said, "What is wrong in what we said? After all, we were only playing. Why did Mahādeva become serious suddenly? He Himself placed the order for it. If He had said no, we wouldn't have even bothered about it."Some did not even think about anything.

Then Mahādeva opened His eyes and made only a few statements: "Amṛta is not ultimate. The moment you said, 'Amṛta is immediate, enlightenment is not - who knows when it will come,' you already created the context and clearance for enlightenment not to happen to you. When you say, 'Amṛta is more tangible, enlightenment is intangible,' you already distance yourself from the most tangible experience of enlightenment. Each comment shows the space in which you are operating. Whoever wants to drink, drink. I am not going to drink the nectar." Even after that, because Kubera was standing there and requesting, "All the way we brought the nectar from there," a few gaṇas went and drank the nectar, while a few did not.

Inauthenticity is represented by Rāhu. Covering up and justifying inauthenticity within you is Śani. Being reminded of your inauthenticity is Ketu. Taking responsibility for your inauthenticity and enriching yourself and others is Guru. Aligning with integrity and enriching directly, without considering authenticity, is Śukra - the Asura Guru. Asuras demonstrate a high level of integrity but lack authenticity. When they give their word, they will live and die by it, showing unwavering commitment. Yet, they are not authentic and do not take true responsibility.

When the collective "it's okay" feeling awakens, the buddhi, medhā - intelligence itself - leans toward inauthenticity. Understand, the words we speak and the comments we make in a casual mood reveal the true state of our mind. The words uttered casually are the foundation, not merely the paint. When the paint fades, it is the foundation that remains. Mahādeva knows that the unconsciousness of the cosmos is being exposed. He awakens and takes responsibility for that inauthenticity. From the deepest subconscious level, from the very depths of the ocean, He draws out the poison. If He does not take responsibility, who else will?

Śiva performs tapas for humanity to attain enlightenment. He takes responsibility and declares: "I will stay in the cremation ground. I will wear ordinary rudrākṣa as my adornment, sacred ash as my cosmetic, and use tiger skin or elephant skin as my blanket." By doing all this, He assumes responsibility for the inauthenticity of people. This means that whatever makes you inauthentic, He renounces it. True renunciation is not about abandoning the world - it is about giving up whatever causes your inauthenticity, and whatever your inauthenticity drives you toward. That alone is tapas.

The beginning and end of your inauthenticity are both rooted in pleasure. It is out of pleasure memories that inauthenticity arises, and it is towards pleasure that inauthenticity drives you. The journey of inauthenticity is from the memory of pleasure to pleasure.

If you end both ends - the memory of pleasure and the pursuit of pleasure - inauthenticity will disappear. Understand this: if you pull one end, which is the pleasure memory, the other end is also pleasure. From pleasure memory to pleasure, inauthenticity lives. If you remove the pressure from both the pleasure memory and the pursuit of pleasure, inauthenticity shrinks and disappears.

If you twist inauthenticity with justification, it becomes infinite. That is maya. Maya is anādi (beginningless) when twisted by justification; inauthenticity becomes infinite when twisted with justification. When you stop justifying your inauthenticity, the infinite will become zero! Infinite is not infinite if you can drop your justification for your inauthenticity.

Śiva simply sits in samādhi and says, "If you want, you can eat, dance, and live with Rambhā, Urvaśī, Menakā." He never commands the whole of heaven to sit in samādhi. But if you are a seeker, a devotee, or a disciple of Mahādeva, what should you do? When He renounces everything for samādhi, that is the highest message. Even if He does not tell you directly, you should catch it. Your response should be, "Let me follow Him, let me live it." That alone should be your next step.

Or you might say, "Once in a while, I can come and take blessings from Mahādeva because I need to go back and take care of heaven. I need to take care of Rambha and Urvashi. If I become a sadhu and sit here, what will happen? I must feed 5,000 families there."

When Buddha saw sickness, old age, and death, the alarm of "not okay" shook him awake. When you see the same, you slip into the drug of "it's okay." The awakened one inside you never rises because every time the alarm rings, you swallow that pill, snooze it, or toss it away saying 'its okay'.

Now Katha Upaniṣad 19th verse:

एष तेऽग्निर्नचिकेतः स्वग्र्यो यमवृणीथा द्वितीयेन वरेण ।
एतमग्निं तवैव प्रवक्ष्यन्ति जनासः तृतीयं वरं नचिकेतो वृणीष्व ॥ १९॥

eṣa te'gnirnaciketaḥ svargyoyamavṛṇīthā dvitīyena vareṇa |
etamagniṃ tavaiva pravakṣyanti janāsaḥ tṛtīyaṃ varaṃ naciketo vṛṇīṣva ||19||

"O Naciketa, this is thy fire that leads to heaven, which thou has chosen as thy second boon. People will call this fire after thy name. Ask the third boon, Naciketa."

Mahā Kālā, Yama Dharma, the lord of time, after being endowed with enlightenment by Mahakala Bhairava Śiva, talks to Naciketa. He says beautifully, "This is thy fire," meaning your sacrificial process leads to heaven. The word "heaven" is not a translation of "swarga." Because we do not have any other word, we are using that term. The concept of swarga is different from the concept described as heaven in various Abrahamic religions, whether it is Judaism, Islam, or Christianity. That description of heaven is totally different.

In Abrahamic traditions, actions alone decide heaven or hell - good actions take you up, bad actions drag you down. But in the Hindu vision, it is the state of completion or incompletion that decides. The same knife can open a stomach - when wielded by a robber, it is hell; when wielded by a doctor, it is heaven. If action alone were the scale, both should lead to the same result. What truly matters is the context - the source from which the action arises, the space from which the body is being used. It is not the knife, but the hand and the context behind it, that makes all the difference.

You may say, "No, no, in the case of a doctor, the patient recovers; in the case of a thief, the person dies". No! There is enough possibility in both scenarios.

In the Hindu tradition, swarga is entirely different. That is why a Buddhist monk who threw stones at a Śiva Linga every day is revered in Hindu temples as Sākhya Nayanar, while Rāvaṇa, who worshipped Śiva daily with elaborate offerings, is remembered as a villain. What matters is the context from which actions are performed.

Here, swarga does not mean a reward or punishment. It signifies the awareness of different planes of frequency to which one can elevate oneself through completion. If incompletion arises, you fall back; by restoring completion, you can rise again to that state.

Swarga is a conscious way of existing - a higher plane of existence accessible to every being. Yama blesses Naciketa, saying that this sacrificial process will elevate him to the higher plane he had chosen as his second boon. Because Yama was delighted by Naciketa's authenticity, he named the sacrifice after him. The receiver's authenticity matters most - when the receiver is authentic, Yama (and the cosmos) gives more than asked. The cosmos always showers blessings on the authentic. When the receiver is authentic, it always showers!

Naciketa, out of politeness, might have thought that having the fire named after him was enough and might not ask for the third boon. So Yama urges him to ask. Otherwise, why would Yama insist? Naciketa is overflowing with authenticity.

Here comes Yama - the one who usually snatches everything from everyone. Have you ever heard of Yama giving gifts? He only knows how to take; he stands with a rope, constantly claiming. Throughout his life, he has only been snatching. But here, in the presence of authenticity, he is giving.

Now next verse 20th verse:

येयं प्रेते विचिकित्सा मनुष्येऽस्तीत्येके नायमस्तीति चैके ।
एतद्विद्यामनुशिष्टस्त्वयाऽहं वराणामेष वरस्तृतीयः ॥ २०॥
yeyaṃ prete vicikitsā manuṣye ‘stītyeke nāyamastīti caike |
etadvidyāmanuśiṣṭastvayā’haṃ varāṇāmeṣa varastṛtīyaḥ ||20||

Naciketa said: “There is this doubt regarding what becomes of a man after death. Some say he exists, others say he does not exist. This knowledge I desire, being instructed by thee. Of the boons, this is the third boon.”

Other than Mahā Kālā Śiva and Kālā Yama, no one else knew the secret of death. Humanity had never been given this knowledge before the Kaṭhopaniṣad. Naciketa was responsible for bringing the science and understanding of death to humanity for the first time. It was therefore incomprehensible, unexpected, and even intolerable - neither morally right nor responsibly right for humans to access such knowledge until then.

Naciketa, because of his authenticity, takes the risk and fires the arrow. Yama is caught - he cannot refuse once he has given his word to grant a boon. Look at Naciketa’s words: “There is this doubt regarding what becomes of a man after death. Some say he exists, others say he does not exist. This knowledge I desire, being instructed by you. Of the boons, this is the third boon.” How beautifully he frames it! “There is this doubt regarding what becomes of a man after death” reflects mamakāra, his sense of self-identity. “Some say he exists” refers to what he learned from his teachers in the Gurukul. “Others say he does not exist” acknowledges the inevitable presence of skeptics and atheists who generate doubt.

Understand this: there will always be opposing thought currents, because they do not exist externally - they arise from your own internal incompletion. When you love, you also hate; when you hate, you also love. Until you align yourself with authenticity and integrity, love carries hatred, and hatred carries love. You cannot be authentic in your hatred if you cannot be authentic in your love. The other thought current always stems from the incompletion within.

Naciketa has reached the extreme of authenticity, yet he is not fully enlightened. That is why he says so clearly: “There is this doubt regarding what becomes of a man after death. Some say he exists, others say he does not exist. This knowledge I desire, being instructed by you. Of the boons, this is the third boon.” He humbly requests, “I want you, Lord of Death, to teach me. Please instruct me.”

etadvidyāmanuśiṣṭastvayā’haṃ varāṇāmeṣa varastṛtīyaḥ

Maha Kālā is shaken! Yama, the lord of death, is terrorized! For the first time, someone has managed to terrorize the greatest terrorizer. The one who can terrorize the whole world is terrorized by a small boy because of the power of authenticity.

When you are terrorized, what do you do? Some people resort to spontaneous lying, some run away from the situation, and some choose to fight. It’s either fight or flight or justifying. Here, Mahakala cannot take flight; he cannot run away. He cannot lie, and he cannot fight back because he gave the boon. He also cannot justify by saying, “I told you I would give three boons, but that does not mean you can ask for this as the third.” He cannot justify it, but he is trying.

Yama replied –

देवैरत्रापि विचिकित्सितं पुरा न हि सुविज्ञेयमणुरेष धर्मः ।
अन्यं वरं नचिकेतो वृणीष्व मा मोपरोत्सीरति मा सृजैनम् ॥ २१॥
devairatrāpi vicikitsitaṃ purā na hi suvijñeyamaṇureṣa dharmaḥ |
anyaṃ varaṃ naciketo vṛṇīṣva mā moparotsīrati mā sṛjainam ||21||

Yama was caught off guard. He replied, “Even the Devas of old doubted this. It is not easy to know; subtle indeed is this subject. O Naciketa, choose another boon. Do not press me. Ask not this boon of me.” Now Naciketa stands tall, unwavering. Yama tries to divert, saying, “Even very old Gods have doubts regarding this. It is a very subtle subject; you are a small boy, you will not be able to grasp it.” When you cannot take responsibility for others’ inauthenticity, you feel terrorized. Here, Naciketa’s authenticity towers over Yama’s. Yama is cornered, terrified. He pleads, “No, no, no, don’t ask for that. I cannot reveal this science,” shifting the burden onto Naciketa, claiming the subject is too subtle.

Yama says, “O Naciketa, choose another boon. Do not press me. Ask not this boon of me. Even those far senior to you do not know. It is a very subtle subject. Do not ask this and press me."

The tradition of wisdom moves forward step by step: Śaṅkara goes further than Śiva, Vidyāranya further than Śaṅkara, Nāgārjuna further than Vidyāranya, Rāmakṛṣṇa further than Nāgārjuna, Rāmanā further than Rāmakṛṣṇa, Jiddu Kṛṣṇamurti further than Rāmanā, and Osho further than Jiddu Kṛṣṇamurti.

This is how the science is kept alive - inspired and exciting - encouraging people to take it up as life, to live it fully. This is the most powerful truth, yet also the poorest logic: only when you cannot understand something yourself can you fail to make others understand. When that happens, you leave them with guilt.

Tattva means making something a part of you. Tat-va - making it yours; that is tat-va.

Yama is caught unaware. Three times he emphasizes the subtlety of this knowledge: "Please choose another boon; ask me for any other boon." In one verse alone, he gives multiple reasons: first, "No, even those far senior and greater than you do not know this." Second, "It is not easy to know." Third, "The subject is very subtle; you cannot understand; you are just a small kid." Fourth, "Choose another boon." Fifth, "Don't pressurize me." Sixth, "Please ask me for another boon."

This verse reveals Yama's continuous mood swings - Plan A, Plan B, Plan C, Plan D - all in one: he urges Naciketa to ask for anything else, but not this.

Naciketa says -

देवैरत्रापि विचिकित्सितं किल त्वं च मृत्यो यन्न सुज्ञेयमात्थ ।
वक्ता चास्य त्वादृगन्यो न लभ्यो नान्यो वरस्तुल्य एतस्य कश्चित् ॥ २२॥
devairatrāpi vicikitsitaṃ kila tvaṃ ca mṛtyo yanna sujñeyamāttha |
vaktā cāsya tvādṛganyo na labhyo nānyo varastulya etasya kaścit ||22||

Naciketa said: "O Death, you say that even the Devas have doubted this, and that it is not easy to know. Another teacher like you cannot be found. Therefore, no other boon can be equal to this one." Understand this: whenever a person gives you a reason, listen sincerely. The same reason only needs to be given back to him to make him do what you want. When you ask someone to do something and he gives reasons, just listen. Then return the same reason to him, and he will do what you want. The moment you give other reasons, you have lost the game. It is the art of negotiation First, listen. Next, do not change the reasons the other person gave. Thereafter, simply repeat the same reasons.

If you go to somebody and say, "Run in the Olympics," and he replies, "I don't have legs, so I cannot run," if you are truly listening, you will answer, "That is exactly the reason we want you to run." This may look impractical, but it is the art of negotiation.

Naciketa, because of his art of listening, simply repeats. If someone gives you six statements, you cannot repeat all six unless you are listening authentically. Just as Yama is literally repeating, Naciketa says, "You say even the Devas cannot understand. That is the very reason I want you to tell me; a teacher like you cannot be found."

Here, he is not attacking Yama with "If you cannot make me understand, what kind of teacher are you?" Instead, Naciketa takes responsibility for Yama's moment of inauthenticity and says, "I cannot find another teacher like you."

Yama, for a moment, fell into inauthenticity when he said, "Naciketa, your brain cannot internalize." If Yama had remained authentic, he would have said, "O my son, I will check if your mind is mature enough, and then I will reveal this science to you."

Naciketa, the embodiment of authenticity, is the key that can open anybody and any door. Authenticity is the master key - and the Master's key - that can open anyone and anything. He stands there in authenticity and says, "That is precisely the reason you have to teach. The gods don't know it, nobody knows it; therefore, I should be able to learn it. And only you can be the right teacher - nobody else. A teacher like you cannot be found; therefore, no other boon can equal this one."

In the last verse, Yama made six statements: Even the gods don't know this. It is very difficult. It is extremely subtle. Choose another boon - an attempt at diversion. Don't pressurize me; don't demand. After all, I am granting this as a boon. Do not ask me this - I am closing it now. The deal is done. But Yama is the one who lives by his word. Can he step back from the word he has already given?

शतायुषः पुत्रपौत्रान्वृणीष्वा बहून्पशून् हस्तिहिरण्यमश्वान् ।
भूमेर्महदायतनं वृणीष्व स्वयं च जीव शरदो यावदिच्छसि ॥ २३॥
śatāyuṣaḥ putrapautrānvṛṇīṣvā bahūnpaśūn hastihiraṇyamaśvān |
bhūmermahadāyatanaṃ vṛṇīṣva svayaṃ ca jīva śarado yāvadicchasi ||23||

In the next verse, Yama says: "Ask for sons and grandsons who shall live a hundred years, many cattle, elephants, gold, and horses. Ask for lands of vast extent, and live as many autumns as you desire." Autumn here means as many seasons as you wish to live.

The autumn season appears only in rich, fertile lands - not in barren deserts. Autumn happens in flourishing, abundant, and livable places. Yama is essentially saying, "I will give you enough children and grandchildren, a vast family, all the property you want, and elephants of every kind."

Now Yama is really trying to divert Naciketa's attention. Understand, to be successful in any negotiation, you must not lose your focus; you must not stop listening. Please understand, only when you keep listening will you realize that the other person is trying to divert your attention. Here, Mahākāla is attempting to distract Naciketa.

In any business or endeavor, you will not succeed unless you restore your integrity against the pattern of spontaneous lying. Spontaneous lying comes from weakness, from feeling powerless. Now Yama is experiencing that powerlessness; that is why he is resorting to this act of justification.

In front of authenticity, Yama is conquered. Naciketa conquered Yama. Yama became powerless in the face of Naciketa's authenticity.

Naciketa must have been standing tall with folded hands, and Yama too must have stood with folded hands, saying: "Naciketa, even the Devas do not know. It is very difficult, Naciketa. It is very subtle. Your mind cannot understand it. Ask for something else, Naciketa - ask for another boon. I cannot give this one. Don't press me."

But Naciketa is not pressing. He has already gone through all the chaos and mood swings within himself, and he is calmly responding to all of Yama's chaos.

It is like this: before your wife even starts a fight, you blurt out all the arguments you had prepared, so that she can begin her fight using the very arguments you handed her. She was not even in the mood to fight, but you arrived with a full script to end the fight - so you go in with the hope that you will win it.

Now, very rarely do you write a successful script and claim power in the house. Unfortunately, you write the script without knowing the other side's dialogue. You go on blurting everything out, while she waits calmly until you have poured out your entire case and every argument. At last, she simply says, "Over, are you done?" In that moment, you are left standing there, utterly exposed, feeling deep embarrassment.

That is where inauthenticity lands you - you have already lost the game. Then she begins, very coolly: "Let me come to the first statement you made; please repeat it." By now, you have already gone through all the emotions and chaos.

Understand: when you burn through chaos and extremes without the participation of the other person, you exhaust all your energy and fuel. You push yourself from one extreme to the other, without waiting for the other person to even move you there.

Violence, in essence, is the act of putting the other person into guilt. But if you do not wait for the other person to push you into that extreme, and instead push yourself there, then your vehicle's fuel is already over.

Understand, whether in a fight or a negotiation - be it the science of domestic disputes or the science of business dealings - this is the true science of conflict.

3-Step Negotiation Sūtra: Listen deeply.2. Absorb every word; don't just hear - catch the full script they came prepared with. Stay with their reasons.Never shift away from the exact reasons they give for non-performance.3. Turn their reasons into fuel. Use the same logic they offer as the very basis for performance.

If you truly listen, you will know the whole dialogue they have prepared - while your dialogue is not yet ready. If you don't listen and merely hear, they will even be prepared with your dialogue in advance. If you don't listen, you will miss the loop in their argument. But if you listen, you will not miss the loop, and you can return it to them in the same coin. If you fail to listen to the script they have brought, they will succeed.

If you don't listen, you will lose the science of negotiation. You yourself don't go to extremes. Here, unfortunately, Yama himself goes to all extremes. First, he says, "Even Devas had doubts regarding this." What is the emotion here? It is one of denial. "You are trying to catch my place" is the emotion of insecurity. "It is not easy to know" is trying to frighten the other person. "The subject is very subtle" is trying to put the other person into guilt. "Oh Naciketa, choose another boon" is trying to put the other person in greed. "Do not press me" is showing he is going to pressurize you - declaring war before he declares war. "Ask not this boon of me" is launching offense.

Understand the mood swings Yama goes through. Now you may have doubts: how can Yama know this knowledge? Even if you know this knowledge, you can have these mood swings until you achieve the mood of Mahādeva. Especially when Yama's very status is at stake. Of course, his state is not at stake, but his very status is at stake.

First wait; let the other person tire himself by his internal fights. All fights start with internal fights. This is the science of negotiation, domestic fight, and war: allow them to go through their internal extremes and tire themselves out.

Next verse -

एतत्तुल्यं यदि मन्यसे वरं वृणीष्व वित्तं चिरजीविकां च ।
महाभूमौ नचिकेतः त्वं एधि कामानां त्वा कामभाजं करोमि ॥ २४॥
etattulyaṃ yadi manyase varaṃ vṛṇīṣva vittaṃ cirajīvikāṃ ca |
mahābhūmau naciketastvamedhi kāmānāṃ tvā kāmabhājaṃ karomi ||24||

Translation: "If you think of any other boon equal to this, ask for wealth and long life; be ruler over the wide earth. O Naciketa, I shall make you enjoy all desires."

Yama is shaken! He offers everything else. He says, "Any other boon, ask, and I will give it to you. I will make you enjoy everything - wealth, long life, ruler of the world. I shall make you enjoy all desires, any desire you want." Understand, we forget and tend to forget until we understand the truth of death. Even during all desires, as an undercurrent, the fear is going to exist. And because of that, you are not going to enjoy it. You are going to just roll, roll, roll on the fear and get into death. It is like there is a huge river, and you are going in that by boat, and that huge river goes and becomes a waterfall. The huge river is the fear of death, and the falls represent death.

Whatever boat you may have, whatever pleasures you may have - you may have all types of food cooked or uncooked and all the people you want - but understand, the boat itself is floating on the river current called death. What is the use? It is going to fall into the falls called death. What is the use? First anchor yourself with the truth of the realization of death. Stop going along with the flow of the current. Instead, you are saying, "No, we can stop later on when we are about to fall into the falls." No, that is not the way it is going to work.

Don't be cheated by what is available inside your ship. Remember, the ship is floating, going along with the current of the river, which is very soon or a little later going to make a big fall as a waterfall. If you are in that kind of ship, will you be asking for a boon like, "Let me have a swimming pool in this ship", "Let me have one beautiful restaurant in this ship", "Let me have beautiful jewelry on this ship"? What will you ask if you are intelligent? You would ask, "Let me anchor and stop flowing with the current that is taking this ship."

Trying to negotiate with silliness is what Yama is trying to do. Even for negotiation, whatever he is offering is so silly. He is saying, "I will give you all the wealth and long life." What is the use? The ship is floating; sooner or later, the ship is going to fall. Anchor it. Stop the flow. Stop flowing with the river. Till then, don't be diverted; don't swim in the pool; don't eat while sitting in the restaurant until you have ensured you have anchored the ship and it is not flowing with the river. Anchoring the ship is the knowledge of death. Know death before life. Know about death; then you will have no death. If you know death there is no death.

Thinking of any other boon, asking for wealth and long life, being ruler of the wide earth - all of that would be like saying, "Oh Naciketa, I will paint your bedroom inside the cruise. I will give you the best restaurant, the best swimming pool on the cruise. See, I will change all taps into gold taps in your bathroom. Everything I will change into gold, including the basin. I will give you jewels. Wear everything all day. I will give you all the best things."

But you are on a cruise that is flowing in a river which is going to fall soon. Understand, this is the lesson you need to know: whatever is diverting you from the first priority of anchoring the ship is inauthenticity. All your inauthenticity is asking you to postpone and divert.

Ramakrishna says very beautifully, if a young princess is offered to you with the whole kingdom as a dowry, even then, if you don't even want to look at the face of the princess or consider the size of the kingdom, you can be given sannyāsa, not before that. When sannyāsa is about to be given, if suddenly a young princess with the whole kingdom is offered to you, it's not that you look at her face and the size of the kingdom and then say no. But if you don't even look up to see her face or consider the size of the kingdom and still say no, then you can be given sannyāsa. That is exactly what is being said here.

One more thing: when you completely complete and move on, the capability for pleasure drastically increases in your mind. There is a possibility you can get stuck with the pleasures. This is the danger.

ये ये कामा दुर्लभा मर्त्यलोके सर्वान् कामाँश्छन्दतः प्रार्थयस्व ।
इमा रामाः सरथाः सतूर्या न हीदृशा लम्भनीया मनुष्यैः ।
आभिर्मत्प्रत्ताभिः परिचारयस्व नचिकेतो मरणं माऽनुप्राक्षीः ॥ २५॥

ye ye kāmā durlabhā martyaloke sarvān kāmāṁśchandataḥ prārthayasva |
imā rāmāḥ sarathāḥ satūryā na hīdṛśā lambhanīyā manuṣyaiḥ |
ābhirmatprattābhiḥ paricārayasva naciketo maraṇaṃ mā'nuprākṣīḥ ||25||

"Whatsoever objects of desire are difficult to obtain in the realm of mortals, ask them all as thou desirest; these lovely maidens with their chariots and musical instruments, such as are not obtainable by mortals - be served by these whom I give to thee. O Naciketa, do not ask regarding death."

It is like "I will give you a bigger ship, a bigger ship, and an even bigger ship. And you can ask for the best things on that ship. You can have a beautiful theater, swimming pool, sauna, and steam room in that ship and whatever you want. I will give you a helipad. I will build a separate palace for you inside the ship. I will give you chariots so you can drive around inside the ship. I will provide you with all musical instruments so you can play them inside the ship. But don't ask me to anchor the ship!"

"It is okay" is what is moving your ship with the flow. When you say "it is not okay," that is the anchor. When you say "it is okay," the ship is moving with the current. See whether your life is running with "it is okay" or "it is not okay." "It is okay" is the most dangerous pattern; it can make even God into a human being. "It is not okay" will make even man into God.

Don't put anchoring as a second priority to the pleasures available inside the ship. All pleasures are inside the ship, which is floating in the current of death fear and is going to fall as the falls of death. And you are too busy enjoying all these things to get to any bank and save yourself.

Knowledge of death is anchoring; enlightenment is getting down onto the bank. Naciketa is being told by Yama: do not ask regarding death; anything else is okay.

See how he is describing visually - lovely maidens with chariots and musical instruments such as are not obtained by mortals will serve you. What does this mean? All over the ship, with beautiful maidens and great beds made out of gold, you lie down, and then I will push you into the falls! Take a bath in the swimming pool; I will apply all the sandalwood on you. Eat and be served by the maidens, then we will push you into the falls. Don't you understand? You will have a golden toilet in the ship, but don't ask about how to anchor it.

"It is okay" is flowing with the current. "It is not okay" is anchoring to protect yourself. The mahavakya you need to learn today is "It is not okay." Every time your inauthenticity comes up, don't be a past record of "it's okay". Instead be a possibility of "it is not okay". Then you become more and more authentic. Authenticity stabilizes your being. Authenticity is the only thing which can cross and not disturb your being towards enlightenment.

Understand Death to Start Living

Whatsoever objects of desire are difficult to obtain in the realm of mortals, ask them all as thou desirest; these lovely maidens with their chariots and musical instruments, such as are not obtainable by mortals - be served by these whom I give to thee. O Naciketa, do not ask regarding death.

Even if you have all these - thousands of lovely maidens, chariots, and musical instruments - everything, what can be done? You know every passing day you are moving towards death. One more thing: you can move towards death by moving or float towards death by forgetting. But the problem is, any floating you will do by forgetting problems inside will be from the space of incompletion. There will be a hangover inside.

श्वोभावा मर्त्यस्य यदन्तकैतत् सर्वेंद्रियाणां जरयंति तेजः ।
अपि सर्वं जीवितमल्पमेव तवैव वाहास्तव नृत्यगीते ॥ २६॥
śvobhāvā martyasya yadantakaitat sarvendriyāṇāṃ jarayaṃti tejaḥ |
api sarvaṃ jīvitamalpameva tavaiva vāhāstava nṛtyagīte ||26||

"Naciketa said: O Death, these are fleeting; they weaken the vigour of all the senses in man. Even the longest life is short. Keep thou thy chariots, dance and music."

Naciketa is saying, you keep these with you. He just said these are all useless. Now he is telling Yama not to play this silly game. The first word, these are fleeting, means unstable and impermanent. They weaken the vigor of all the senses of man. It means more and more incompletion stores in you, more and more your senses will be weakened. If more and more you are complete, more and more your senses become alive. All these joys added to you by forgetting death lead you to more and more death. See, you hid the fear of death inside the cupboard, under the carpet, and you go on dancing and jumping. So with every sense action, you are left more and more incomplete. Therefore, more and more incompletion weakens the senses. When you put your fear of death and non-understanding of death under your carpet, you hide it with that incompletion.

You go on adding different joys, sense pleasures; it creates more and more incompletion. For example, on the first day, just to avoid the fear of death, you drink a little alcohol. That leads to incompletion. The next day, because of the incompletion, senses lose their vigor and you have to take more alcohol to feel high. After a few days, because of more incompletion, your senses lose even more vigor and you have to take even more alcohol to feel high. This is the same way it happens whether with tea or alcohol or coffee or sex or food or any taste, even music. Music or touch or taste of sweet at every level, without completing the fear of death and death, you go on enjoying.

Means when more and more sense objects are enjoyed with the unfulfillment, incompletion, senses become duller and duller and duller. Senses loses the vigor. So beautifully Naciketa says when the senses lose their vigor, even the longest life is useless short - अपि सर्वं जीवतिं अल्पमेव - api sarvaṃ jīvitam alpameva.

So he is telling the jeevitam – whatever life, even if long, it is short, alpam. That is why in Buddhist monasteries, the moment a child becomes physically mature, which usually in Buddhist monasteries happens around 18 years of age, immediately the child is sent to the graveyard to meditate and understand about death for 3 months or 90 days. There should be a syllabus for all physically mature kids. They should go and stay in Vārāṇasī ashram for three months. One semester they can study there. Nothing wrong with that. Half of the time, they have to sit and gaze at the bodies that are being burnt, which means the whole night. During the daytime, they can sleep and study for a few hours.

Understand this – unless you anchor yourself with the clarity of death, the more and more pleasures you dump on death due to incompletion of the experience, senses become dull. When the vigor of all the senses in man is lost due to the incompletion of death and constant pleasures being put in the same incomplete mood, even the longest life is useless.

What is the incompletion of death? It means not having a clear idea of what death is going to do to you, not knowing what your relationship with death should be, and what death means for you. You should know what all death is going to do after you die, what it brings when it comes, what death will close or open, add or take away. You should have complete clarity.

You should have the visa, ticket to where you have to go after death. You should have a clear, crystal clear travel plan. When you do not have that, it is an incompletion with death. It is better to do this travel agent work for yourself the moment you become physically mature. Otherwise, in the course of time, with that incompletion inside, your eating will become overeating. That becomes a big pattern. Seeing becomes over-seeing, hearing becomes over-hearing.

Knowledge is getting into the world of completion of senses. When your senses, indriyas are complete, anything you do will become knowledge, anything you see will become knowledge, anything you taste will become knowledge, anything you listen will become knowledge. But when you are incomplete, anything you do will weaken the vigor.

Your consciousness should have romance with your senses, not nagging or arguing with your senses. When you are complete, your consciousness will have romance with your senses. Else, it will be nagging your senses.

Naciketa says they weaken the vigor of all the senses in man. Keep thou thy chariots, dance and music – तवैव वाहाः तव नृत्यगीते - tavaiva vāhāh tava nṛtyagīte - You keep it with you. Here is a famous verse of Bhartrihari, from the vairāgya śatakam, a hundred verses on dispassion where he says: In enjoyment, there is the fear of disease; in social position, the fear of falling off; in wealth, the fear of (hostile) government (a rule could confiscate excess wealth, or impose very high taxation); in honor, the fear of humiliation; in power, the fear of foemen; in beauty, the fear of old age; in scriptural erudition, the fear of opponents; in virtue, the fear of traducers; in body, the fear of death. All things of this world pertaining to man are attended with fear; renunciation alone stands for fearlessness.

So it is completion that brings fearlessness. Completion is vairagya. If there is completion in bhoga, roga bhaya will not be there. If there is completion in everything, other fears will not be there. Bring in completion.

Don't Work for Death

Breathe only AIRE: Authenticity, Integrity, Responsibility, EN-Riching. Breathe only the AIRE! When you breathe AIRE, AIRE breathes you. Authenticity, Responsibility, Integrity and eN-riching.

Naciketa said, "Oh Death, Oh Yama, these are fleeting; they weaken the vigor of all the senses in man." This means that Yama was promising certain pleasures. Naciketa says, "These are fleeting, they weaken the vigor of all the senses in man. Even the longest life is short. Keep thou thy chariots, dance, and music. You keep all of them with you!"

Naciketa does not want Yama to speak one more word in this line. Nothing is worthy of knowledge, enlightenment; everything can be sacrificed for that. And you should not sacrifice enlightenment for anything, including kids. So beautifully, Naciketa is standing up for the tattva, science of enlightenment.

न वित्तेन तर्पणीयो मनुष्यो लप्स्यामहे वित्तमद्राक्ष्म चेत्त्वा ।
जीविष्यामो यावदीशिष्यसि त्वं वरस्तु मे वरणीयः स एव ॥ २७॥
na vittena tarpaṇīyo manuṣyo lapsyāmahe vittamadrākṣma cettvā |
jīviṣyāmo yāvadīśiṣyasi tvaṃ varastu me varaṇīyaḥ sa eva ||27||

Man cannot be satisfied by wealth. Shall we possess wealth when we see you, Oh death ? Shall we continue to live as long as thou rulest? Therefore that boon alone is to be chosen by me.

Here stands Naciketa. He says, "How can man be satisfied by wealth? Man cannot be satisfied by wealth. Shall we possess wealth when we see you?" "When we see you, can we possess wealth?" he's asking. "When the ship is going to fall in the falls, is my golden toilet going to come with me? Is my golden restaurant going to save me?"

"Shall we continue to live as long as thou rulest? Can we live as long as you are ruling?" So it is impossible. Understand, he is beautifully putting it: man cannot be satisfied by wealth. Shall we possess wealth when we see death? No. Shall we continue to live as long as you rule? No. Therefore, that boon alone is chosen by me.

He is putting his foot down, saying, "No, nothing doing. I am very clear." Now Naciketa is tightening the noose around Yama. Usually, Yama only puts the pasha and takes people and their life. Now, Naciketa says, "Nothing doing; I'm clear."

Man cannot be satisfied by wealth. Please understand, now Naciketa is making definite statements. Man cannot be satisfied by wealth. Shall we possess wealth when we see you O death? When you come, when we see you, will we be able to possess anything? No! Shall we continue to live till when you rule? Can we continue to live as long as you are ruling? No. I am only the trustee; I'll multiply and hand over back to you when you come and take me away. So the more life you give me, the more I'm going to be working to hand over the whole thing back to you.

Don't work for death. Anything you are creating is like you are a slave. Death gives you something and you think 'Mine! Mine! Mine!' and jump around it. You work, work continuously and build tall towers. Finally when death comes, you hand over everything to him and go away. Somebody else who has life comes and starts ruling. So learn the science of life. That is the first priority.

Man cannot be satisfied by wealth. Don't plan that you will have satisfaction because of wealth. Change the context of wealth creation. Enriching is your life. So, you need certain infrastructure when you want to enrich more and more people. Let the money be there as a support for enriching more and more people, and to receive the services you may need in your life like medical care, a little food, and a few clothes; that's all. So the context, the understanding towards money, let it become right. Then any amount of money is okay, and you'll go on creating.

The problem is either you start believing that you will be satisfied by wealth, or you start hating wealth because of the responsibilities you need to take for wealth. Both are wrong patterns. The fellows who think they can be satisfied by wealth become materialistic - corporate people, capitalists, corporatists. But the fellow who hates money because of the responsibility it brings, becomes poor and lives in poverty. Both are wrong. Understand, have the right understanding about money, take the responsibility for having money. Don't hate it because of the responsibility it brings. Take responsibility and be very clear: money itself has no satisfying component in it.

Naciketa has a clear understanding that man cannot be satisfied by wealth. He says, "Can we possess wealth when we see you'? Can we have our wealth when you come? No, I cannot". When he comes, he takes away the whole thing. He does not say, "Alright, you pay 30% tax, you pay 70% tax and I'll give it back to you," or "You pay 70% tax I'll give you back 30%," or "You pay 99%, I'll give you 1%." Nothing back! Yama is not going to take 30% taxes or 50% taxes. You just open your mouth and he pulls the tongue and takes everything back, that's all. Hence Naciketa says, "Shall we continue to live as long as you rule? Until we don't know your secret, how can we continue to live? Everything else is just bogus."

If you are too busy creating wealth without knowing the secret of death, please be clear that you are continuously working for death who is going to take everything from you. It's like you accumulate and keep it for a fellow who is going to take away everything - including you. He's going to take it all. Just for his sake; you rob and keep everything. The whole life is nothing but: a small robber robs from a smaller robber and keeps, a little big robber robs everything from him and keeps, and bigger robbers they rob everything and keep, and the biggest robber he robs everything and keeps, and Yama comes and robs everything from him and takes it away. This is life.

Naciketa says: 'because of this reason that boon alone is to be chosen by me'. I choose only the Knowledge of Enlightenment, the Secret of Death. The amazing authenticity of Naciketa makes him really worthy of the word: Brahmaṇyam Bahuputratām!

'Shall we continue to live as long as thou rulest? Can we live as long as you are ruling?' So it is impossible. Understand, he is beautifully putting it: man cannot be satisfied by wealth. Shall we possess wealth when we see death? No. Shall we continue to live as long as you rule? No. Therefore, that boon alone is chosen by me.

अजीर्यतामममृतानामुपेत्यजीर्यन्मर्त्यः क्वधःस्थः प्रजानन् ।
अभिध्यायन् वर्णरतिप्रमोदान् अतिदीर्घे जीविते को रमेत ॥ २८॥

ajīryatāmamṛtānāmupetya jīryanmartyaḥ kvadhaḥsthaḥ prajānan |
abhidhyāyan varṇaratipramodān atidīrghe jīvite ko rameta || 28 ||

Naciketa says, "What man dwelling on the decaying mortal plane, having approached the un-decaying immortal one, and having reflected upon the nature of enjoyment through beauty and sense pleasures, would delight in long life?"

You are the immortal decaying one; I'm the mortal plane after I approached you. And when I have reflected on the nature of the enjoyments of beauty and sense pleasure, how will I be delighted in long life? What do you mean by long life?

I tell you, this is the most authentic way of approaching the Guru. When somebody is this authentic, Yama cannot deny him. And Yama is not able to deny Naciketa.

The words given to you by the Master to awaken certain realities in you is tattva. When you use that word and awaken the realities, they become satya.

The verse, "What man dwelling on the decaying mortal plane having approached the un-decaying immortal one, and having reflected upon the nature of enjoyment through beauty and sense pleasures, would delight in long life?"

A man who is dwelling in the mortal plane, decaying mortal plane, having approached the undecaying immortal one, and having reflected upon the nature of enjoyment through beauty and sense pleasures would delight in long life?

Is Happiness Always Best for You?

When you understand the root pattern of suffering in your life, just the understanding, the moment you understand, you will get out of it. And whenever you help others to understand their root pattern of suffering, you are really enriching them. If you go on finding the thought patterns - that is not giving up on you. In the same way, helping others to find deeper and deeper different thought patterns, the root pattern is not giving up on others.

When you are suffering with the same thought pattern, root pattern of suffering, it is ātma hatyā. When you help people to get out of their root pattern of suffering, that is the greatest enrichment you will do for the other person.

How do you delight in long life? Naciketa says, "When I know that any day you are going to come, how can I delight in a long life?" Prāyaścitta means restoring the completion. Incompletion is karma. Prāyaścitta is restoring completion. Apūrṇatva is karma. Restoring completion is pūrṇatva. Prāyaścitta for apūrṇatva is pūrṇatva. When you restore completion again and again, these tattvas become satya.

Take responsibility for others' inauthenticity. If you are a doctor, go with the same feeling of enriching. If you are an engineer, go with the same feeling of enriching. Even if you are selling shirts, go with the feeling. The buyer may give you hundred rupees for the shirt, but that hundred rupees he cannot wear. You are enriching him by making that hundred rupees into cotton, cotton to thread, thread to dyeing, dyeing to cloth, cloth to stitching, stitching to the final product. So you are enriching even if you take a hundred rupees for a shirt, because he cannot wear that 100 rupees. So everything you do in life is enriching. Go with the feeling you are enriching. These four are the sārvabhaumya vratāḥ. Naciketa in Kaṭhopaniṣad demonstrates his authenticity, Śraddhā.

One of the kings in the Pandya vamsa named Rajashekara Pandyan was the master of all sixty-three arts, but not the sixty-fourth - dance. So in the court, at one point, he had to give a judgment on who is the best dancer between two dancers. Suddenly, the court objected to the king, saying, "You are not qualified to give a judgment on this issue because you yourself don't know." See how rich the Pandya kings were - they had to know everything experientially to conduct the court! And the court was held as a democracy; it was not an autocracy. Anybody could question the authority of the king. People questioned the authority of the king; he said, "Alright, I'll not give judgment. I'll go and learn." He gets a teacher and starts learning. In a month, he realizes that his legs are in pain because of continuous training.

The next day when he goes to the temple, he cries to Mahādeva, "I have been trying to dance for a month and my legs are paining so much. From time immemorial you have been standing in this same posture. I know how painful it must be; please at least change the posture, relax." His love was so strong, his Ānanda Gandha was so pure that immediately Mahādeva started dancing, changing his leg. That is the līlā. So He danced in this place twice - once at the wedding party dance, and the second time for his son, Rajashekara Pandyan.

यस्मिन् इदं विचिकित्सन्ति मृत्यो यत् साम्पराये महति ब्रूहि नः तत् ।
यः अयं वरो गूढं अनुप्रविष्टो न अन्यं तस्मात् नचिकेतो वृणीते ॥ २९॥ yasmin idaṃ vicikitsanti mṛtyo yat sāmparāye mahati brūhi naḥ tat । yaḥ ayaṃ varo gūḍhaṃ anupraviṣṭo na anyaṃ tasmāt naciketo vṛṇīte ॥29॥

Naciketa is saying, "Oh Death, Oh Mahakala, that regarding which there is doubt, of the great hereafter tell us. Naciketa asks for no other boon than that which penetrates this hidden secret."

Naciketa asks for no other boon than that which penetrates this hidden secret.

When Naciketa has made it very clear, now Yama flowers. Here Naciketa took the responsibility for Yama's inauthenticity. He put his foot down authentically. He gets the best out of Yama. Yama did not trust Naciketa because Naciketa was a human being. But, Naciketa proved his authenticity, got the best out of Yama.

The best of Yama is opening up in the next verse. It is chapter 2, 1st verse.

अन्यत् श्रेयः अन्यत् उत एव प्रेयः ते उभे नानार्थे पुरुषं सिनीतः ।
तयोः श्रेय आददानस्य साधु भवति हीयते अर्थात् य उ प्रेयो वृणीते ॥ १॥ anyat śreyaḥ anyat uta eva preyaḥ te ubhe nānārthe puruṣaṃ sinītaḥ । tayoḥ śreya ādadānasya sādhu bhavati hīyate arthāt ya u preyo vṛṇīte ॥1॥

Yama said, "The good is one thing and the pleasant is another. These two having different ends, bind a man. It is well with him who chooses the good. He who chooses the pleasant misses the true end."

Authenticity matters, not happiness. When you choose authenticity you achieve happiness which is totally different. You can call that as that oozing of bliss. Yama says, "The good is one thing and the pleasant is another. These two having different ends, bind a man." Even goodness binds you to more and more good till you become best, highest. Pleasant binds you, leads you to a different bondage. Both bring certain bondage. Choosing pleasant over good is going to make you more and more bound. Good is going to liberate you more and more.

"It is well with him who chooses the good" - if you choose the good, it means you choose authenticity. "He who chooses the pleasant misses the true end" means the right goal is lost. He misses the true end. He misses the right goal of life. Choosing the pleasant is not wrong, but not right. A man who chooses the pleasant is neither wrong nor right, just left. He says choose authenticity.

"The good is one thing, and the pleasant is another." Always choose authenticity even if it does not look pleasant. Learn the lesson from Yama, only then you can go inside. Completion, Svapūrṇatva is not pleasant. You have to see all that - relive. But it is authentic, good for you. Medicine is not pleasant but good for you. Sugar is pleasant, but not good for you. He who chooses the pleasant misses the true end, means, misses the goal of life.

Yama says, "You have done well by not choosing inauthentic pleasure." Sometimes pleasure and authenticity will come together. That is a byproduct of authenticity. That's okay. But you always choose authenticity; nothing else.

श्रेयः च प्रेयः च मनुष्यं एतः तौ संपरीत्य विविनक्ति धीरः ।
श्रेयः हि धीरः अभि प्रेयसः वृणीते प्रेयः मन्दः योग-क्षेमात् वृणीते ॥ २॥ śreyaśca preyaśca manuṣyametaḥ tau samparītya vivinakti dhīraḥ |
śreyah hi dhīrah'bhi preyasa vṛṇīte preyah mandah yogakṣemādvṛṇīte ||2||

The good and the pleasant approach man; the wise examines both and discriminates between them; the wise prefers the good to the pleasant, but the foolish man chooses the pleasant through love of bodily pleasure.

Yama is not mincing words. He is strict. He can't mince words. Here Yama gives this as a boon. So he is very straight forward, sharp with the words. He is saying,

The good and the pleasant approach man; the wise examines both and discriminates between them; the wise prefers the good to the pleasant, but the foolish man chooses the pleasant through love of bodily pleasure.

Every moment life presents the choice of authenticity and inauthenticity to you. It is you who needs to choose. Continuously life presents authenticity and inauthenticity. Continuously life presents both the choices - authentic and inauthentic. Please understand, it is your responsibility to choose authenticity, to choose the right. No one else can save you. It is you who needs to make the choice.

Always Choose Long Term Rewards

The good and the pleasant approach man; the wise examines both and discriminates between them; the wise prefers the good to the pleasant, but the foolish man chooses the pleasant through love of bodily pleasure.

The good and pleasant approach man. Authenticity and inauthenticity approach man. श्रेयः च प्रेयः च मनुष्यं एतः – authenticity and inauthenticity both approach man. The wise examines both and discriminates between them.

An authentic being, a being who is interested in enriching himself and others, a jīvanmukta discriminates between them. Understand, authenticity and inauthenticity both approach man but a jīvan mukta discriminates between them.

The authentic and inauthentic both approach man; the wise examines both and discriminates between them. There is a beautiful word here. Yama uses the word – "Dhīraha." He uses the word Dhīra for wise. Dhī means awakened consciousness. If you are initiated into the Ānanda Gandha, your consciousness is awakened - chaitanya jāgrata. The awakened consciousness is called Dhī.

श्रेयः च प्रेयः च मनुष्यं - authenticity and inauthenticity both approach man. The person who discriminates and chooses authenticity becomes Dhīra. Between authenticity and inauthenticity, the one who is constantly choosing authenticity is a Dhīraha.

Please understand, Yama uses a very beautiful word, Dhīra, twice. He has always seen only frightened people in his life. Even big heroes, Vīras, are not Dhīras in front of him; they are shaken and frightened. So when he sees one such being in front of him, he calls them Dhīra. He uses this word twice.

The Dhīra, the wise one, is the person who prefers authenticity over inauthenticity. Inauthenticity always gives you the feeling of pleasantness saying, 'it is okay'. But the people who live by 'it is okay' do not achieve the true end of life. Yama does not say it is wrong; he says they do not achieve the true end of life. If 'it is okay' is your pattern, you are not going to reach the true end of your life. Wake up! Yama reminds you to align yourself again and again. Choose authenticity over inauthenticity. The good and the pleasant both approach man; the wise prefer authenticity over love of bodily pleasure.

Vīra is the courage you demonstrate at the level of ahamkāra. Dhīra is the courage you demonstrate at the level of mamakāra. The courage you demonstrate in anyakāra is compassion. The courage you demonstrate in ahamkāra is Vīra, like speaking in front of ten people. The courage you demonstrate with your mamakāra, with yourself, is Dhīra - choosing only authenticity, come what may.

Authenticity and inauthenticity approach man; the wise examines both and discriminates between them; the Dhīra – authentic wise man prefers the good to the pleasant, but the foolish man chooses inauthenticity because of the incompletion in the bio memory.

With completion, nothing is wrong. There are references to Shankara drinking country arrack, being a yoni Brāhmaṇa and Sannyāsī. His disciples questioned his authenticity. Then, he drank hot molten iron to prove that neither of them touched his body. He had to add the water component to his body; there was nothing else.

Shankara did not have any hangover from alcohol. Alcohol leaves the same five hangovers - the five incomplete bio-memories and muscle memories pertaining to sight, smell, touch and taste. All five were not present in Shankara. That is why he even used alcohol just to add the water component to his body. Ram Surat Kumar smoked. With incompletion, even pizza can hurt you. With incompletion, even alcohol can hurt you. When you are incomplete, even breathing can hurt you. With completion and authenticity, nothing can hurt you.

So whenever you are saying 'it is okay,' look within; it may be out of inauthenticity. Dhīra, the wise one, is someone who stands with authenticity, who chooses authenticity, who does not stand with the incompletions of bio-memory. Every time you choose inauthenticity with incomplete bio-memory, some part of your bio-memory says 'it is okay'.

Let the anyakāras of both student and teacher not create enmity between them. Because many times when both anyakāra rise, if you choose inauthenticity, you are not only choosing inauthenticity but also hatred. If you choose inauthenticity, you are dropping from his anyakāra; that is why you always carry hatred towards the Guru whenever you leave him. Otherwise, what is the reason for the Guru to tell the student, "Let us not have enmity towards each other"?

Now you have to complete with all your incomplete bio-memories. How to complete with food? Taste it intensely without any other memory. Any other patterns you have with food, do swapūrṇatva. If you have any incompletions with parents and all that they did; for instance not allowing you to eat, dig them out and complete with others and yourself. Then put the food in your mouth and taste it without any incompletions. And ultimately, if you want to do swapūrṇatva with food patterns, do Nirāhāra samyama. If you want to do pūrṇatava with food, taste it without incompletions.

It is a beautiful verse: "O Naciketa, after wise reflection thou hast renounced the pleasant and all pleasing forms. Thou hast not accepted this garland of great value for which many mortals perish." Now Yama is aligned with the authenticity of Naciketa. He says, "You have done a very nice job of rejecting inauthenticities, even if they come in the form of pleasant and pleasing things. You have not accepted the garland of great value, the navaratna Mālā, for which so many people die. But you are Dhīra - you have done the right thing by choosing authenticity. With authenticity, you have chosen the right thing.

स त्वं प्रियान् प्रियरूपान् च कामान् | अभिध्यायन् नचिकेतः अत्यस्राक्षीः ।
न एतां सृङ्कां वित्तमयीं अवाप्तः यस्यां मज्जन्ति बहवो मनुष्याः ॥ ३॥
sa tvaṃ priyānpriyarūpāṃśca kāmān abhidhyāyannaciketo'tyasrākṣīḥ |
naitāṃ sṛṅkāṃ vittamayīmavāpto yasyāṃ majjanti bahavo manuṣyāḥ ||3||

He says - O Naciketa after wise reflection thou hast renounced the pleasant and all pleasing forms. Thou hast not accepted this garland of great value.

Yama was about to give the Navaratna Mālā to Naciketa, and Naciketa said, "No, thank you. Keep it with you." Only a personality like Naciketa can say no to Yama. It takes guts. You have not accepted this Mālā of great value for which many mortals perish. People die for it, Yama says.

At the end of the Kaṭhopaniṣad, Yama offers chariots and other temptations to provoke Naciketa. Naciketa not only received authenticity but also all those offerings. Understand, when you stay in authenticity, whatever you carry in your Ānanda Gandha becomes reality. It is we who are responsible for everything. When we decide not to give up on ourselves and others, the energy and intelligence of Living Enlightenment expresses through us.

Please understand, incompletions related to taste, smell, and listening - all these stay in your muscle memory. But the incompletions related to the eyes and lust and touch stay in your bio-memory. It is at a deeper level. Do completion with all your patterns.

All human beings view and live life from their root thought pattern. So if we can distinguish that for them, they begin to live a transformed life.

स त्वं प्रियान् प्रियरूपान् च कामान् | अभिध्यायन् नचिकेतः अत्यस्राक्षीः ।
न एतां सृङ्कां वित्तमयीं अवाप्तः | यस्यां मज्जन्ति बहवो मनुष्याः ॥ ३॥
sa tvaṃ priyānpriyarūpāṃśca kāmān abhidhyāyannaciketo'tyasrākṣīḥ |
naitāṃ sṛṅkāṃ vittamayīmavāpto yasyāṃ majjanti bahavo manuṣyāḥ ||3||

The best way to show your love to others, or to truly love others, is to take responsibility for their inauthenticity. Whenever you take responsibility for someone else's inauthenticity, you prove that you love them. Love is expressed by taking responsibility for another's inauthenticity. If you love someone, don't even tell them - just take responsibility for their inauthenticity.

True love is nothing but taking responsibility for another's inauthenticity. When you see inauthenticity in others, you will not punish them; instead, you will decide to enrich them by bringing the right prāyaścitta. Prāyaścitta means sweet support to restore their completion. Real love means taking responsibility for the inauthenticity of the person you love.

2nd chapter 4th verse:

दूरं एते विपरीते विषूची | अविद्या या च विद्या इति ज्ञाता ।
विद्याभीप्सिनं नचिकेतसं मन्ये न त्वा कामा बहवोऽलोलुपन्त ॥ ४॥
dūramete viparīte viṣūcī avidyā yā ca vidyeti jñātā |
vidyābhīpsinaṃ naciketasaṃ manye na tvā kāmā bahavo'lolupanta ||4||

"Wide apart are these two - ignorance and what is known as wisdom - leading in opposite directions. I believe Naciketa to be one who longs for wisdom, since many tempting objects have not turned thee aside."

Yama says there is a big gap between inauthenticity and authenticity. Both of them lead in opposite directions. I believe, Naciketa, you belong to authenticity. Many inauthentic things, looking very pleasant and tempting, did not turn you away from authenticity and lead you to inauthenticity.

When you stand by authenticity without being tempted by inauthentic things, real pleasure comes to you. Authenticity and inauthenticity are wide apart, leading you in different, opposite directions. Take responsibility for authenticity and don't be swayed by inauthenticity, even though it may appear very pleasant and good. Even if it appears to be pleasant, don't pursue inauthenticity. Let us pursue authenticity. Let us live authenticity. Make authenticity a reality.

Please understand, 'Brahma vit brahmaiva bhavati'. Any knowledge, when you imbibe it, you become that. When the mind becomes subtle, subtle knowledge itself becomes experience. When your body becomes subtle, sensitive, and evolved, you become dual. In all evolved beings, duality is the core - whether it is Buddha, Śiva, or Kṛṣṇa - when the body evolves, you become dual.

When the mind evolves and becomes subtle, any knowledge becomes experience. Knowledge is masculine; experience is feminine. When your body evolves, both become one and you become dual. When your mind evolves, both become one and knowledge itself becomes experience.

Whether it is Mahādeva, Buddha, or Mahavira - the more you evolve and the more the body evolves - you become dual. This is a very subtle truth. Dual becomes non-dual means the masculine strength and the feminine grace merge into one. The integrity and authenticity of the masculine being, along with the responsibility and enriching nature of the feminine grace, become one in the body. The real yogic body will be dual - Mīnākṣī's body was dual, Sundareśvara's body was dual, Arunachala's body was dual, Buddha's body was dual, Kṛṣṇa's body was dual. When the body evolves, it becomes dual. Manu very clearly says that by 45 your body should become dual. If you have lived with your body authentically, by 45 it should become dual.

The scale based on which longevity is decided and whether it is a yogic body or not is determined based on delayed physical maturity and earlier it becomes dual. Knowledge itself becomes experience when your body also becomes dual. It is a very subtle phenomenon. Knowledge is always masculine; experience is always feminine. If your body is centered on one gender and rejects the other component of gender in your system, you will continue to struggle with either experience or knowledge. Only having experience without knowledge - you will not be complete; or having only knowledge without the experience - you will not be complete. The denied, incomplete part continues to harass you.

When the body evolves and matures, it becomes dual. When the mind evolves and matures, it becomes dual. No religion can touch this depth of duality in the body. The Hindu tradition was able to reach those heights. That is why there is the description of Ardhanārīśvara. It is not half and half. If you think the right side of Śiva does not have feminine qualities, you are wrong, and vice versa. It is a pictorial depiction; otherwise, it is both masculine and feminine on both sides. Right hand has masculine strength, left hand has masculine strength - both describe both.

You can never visualize Kṛṣṇa without feminine grace; you can never visualize Buddha without feminine grace; you can never visualize Mīnākṣī without masculine strength; you can never visualize Sundareśvara without feminine grace.

Knowledge directly becoming experience happens in a dual body just like that, instantly. Because in a dual body, you have not suppressed and denied the possibility of the other. You came out of both energies; how can you be just one energy? When the ingredients are mango and banana, how can you expect the juice to be only mango or only banana? But you go on imagining. Unfortunately, not only imagining but denying the other component. The love and lust of humanity is nothing but the denial of the other component. That is why it eternally ends in denial. Because it starts in denial, it ends in denial. Any human being's love and lust can be given this title - a long denial between birth and death, bed to tomb, cradle to grave – a long denial.

This passage beautifully expresses the truth about our dual nature and the importance of embracing both masculine and feminine energies within us. It highlights how denial of our complete nature leads to unfulfillment in love and life.

There are only two bodies on planet earth - denied or dual. Denied is slum; dual is palace. Which one you develop is based on the way you live. Knowledge becoming experience is authenticity. When you are authentic with your body, automatically it becomes dual. When you complete with all the incompletions of your body, it becomes dual. In the male body Kuṇḍalinī is the denied female component. In all female bodies the Kuṇḍalinī is the denied male component. When Kuṇḍalinī is awakened, simply your system becomes dual. Dual is not gay or lesbian or transgender, it is transcendental gender. It is not impotent it is omnipotent.

The denied part has to be incorporated and imbibed as part of you. Each one of you has a denied kid inside you. If you open your heart and see, 10 kids are sitting inside – one in anxiety, fear, anger; 2 or 3 men and women are rolling and fighting with each other. All of them put together are you.

One mad guy was sitting on a well and screaming, "16." Another guy went near and asked, "What 16?" This guy pushed him inside and said, "17, 17, 17!" The 5-year-old version of you, the 6-year-old version of you, the 8-year-old version of you, the 18-year-old version of you – one is sitting with a teddy bear, another with a motor car, another with a rose flower.

Understand that all those multiple personalities put together are you. That is why the most dangerous species on planet Earth are human beings. Once they become authentic and integrated, they become divine beings. Live with them.

Mahā Kālā, Yama is so sure that the knowledge will become just experience in Naciketa. He saw the authenticity. Ramakrishna says beautifully – during the Swati nakshatra, when the rain showers and the mother pearl comes up in the ocean, when that raindrop falls, the mother pearl makes a pearl. The Swati rain waits for the right mother pearl to come and open so that it can shower, and the mother pearl is waiting for the rain to happen. Here, rain found the right mother pearl. The rain now knows if it drops this water into this mother pearl, it will surely make one pearl. It will not be wasted.

Now Yama knows Naachiketa will make this knowledge into experience. Let us see what Yama says in the next verse – 2nd chapter, 5th verse.

अविद्यायां अन्तरे वर्तमानाः स्वयं धीराः मण्डितं मन्यमानाः ।
दंद्रम्यमाणाः परियन्ति मूढाः अन्धेन एव नीयमानाः यथा अन्धाः ॥ ५॥

avidyāyāmantare vartamānāḥ svayaṃ dhīrāḥ paṇḍitaṃmanyamānāḥ |
dandramyamāṇāḥ pariyanti mūḍhā andhenaiva nīyamānā yathāndhāḥ ||5||

Yama, Mahakala declares to Naciketa: "Fools dwelling in ignorance, yet imagining themselves wise and learned, go round and round in crooked ways, like the blind led by the blind."

Inauthentic ones yet imagining themselves as authentic just because they have knowledge which has not yet become experience go around and round in crooked way, like the blind led by the blind.

Inauthentic ones yet imagining themselves as authentic just because they have knowledge which has not yet become experience. Understand that knowledge which has not yet become experience means you ate and it did not get digested. Only dogs eat that way. If you eat something and do not digest it, what will happen? It will come out through the same hole from which it went in. If you see dogs, they vomit and eat only that. Even in a dog's case, they don't eat if another dog vomits. In your case, it is so unfortunate - you eat another's vomit.

All ideas and words by an unenlightened one are 'vomit'. Internalize this one word very sincerely. Even one wrong idea inside your system from the wrong book or wrong logic sometimes takes years to clean and get out of it. As if you don't have enough confusion already, why do you want more? Inauthentic ones yet imagining themselves as authentic just because they have knowledge which has not yet become experience go round and round in a crooked way, like the blind led by the blind.

Mahakala is clearly warning Naciketa about the people who don't have authenticity and yet try to lead others. He is using a very beautiful word: दंद्रम्यमाणाः परयिन्तमूढाः – means going round and round and round in crooked ways, conspired ways. An unenlightened being posing as an enlightened being is the conspiracy against the cosmos.

Don't waste your time going round and round in crooked ways, being led by the blind. And when you know you are blind, never attempt to lead another blind person. If you are blind and travel alone, at least it is suicide. If you are guiding another blind person, it is murder as well.

Mahakala says inauthentic ones, yet imagining themselves as authentic just because they have knowledge which has not yet become experience, go around and round in crooked ways like the blind leading the blind.

If you have anyakāra about somebody, immediately you have committed to fulfilling their anyakāra about you. Listen, if you have some expectation, imagination, or image about somebody, you have committed to fulfilling their image about you. If you have an expectation about your mother, you have to fulfill her expectation about you. It is a commitment. Somebody who is walking on the street - you don't have much anyakāra about him other than he should not kill or attack you. In the same way, you also fulfill his anyakāra that you should not kill or attack him. He does not have any anyakāra about you, so you don't have to fulfill his image of you because you don't have any significant image of him.

Only for people about whom you carry an image, you should also authentically take responsibility for their image of you. Anyakāra means others' expectations about you. Whose expectations you need to stretch yourself to fulfill and whose you don't need to take responsibility for - this is the understanding you should have.

For example, if you have an image of your mother, you should take responsibility for your mother's image of you. If you have an image of your master, you should take responsibility for your master's image of you.

Go on stretching; you will express miracle powers. For example, if 20 people need healing and I can heal only 10 with the given time, but if I decide I am going to heal all 20, naturally the divine takes its form and heals the other 10 people as well. Don't think it happens only for me; if you stretch, it happens for you also. When you start stretching, literally cosmos uses your form also - adds more hands to you, adds more bodies to you, adds more presence to you, adds more vibration to you, adds higher frequency to you.

The disciple-disciple relationship is the most dangerous because one unconscious person is talking about another unconscious person. When a disciple talks about guru to another disciple, he talks about guru as per his own unconscious projections. It is so unfortunate. Blind leading the blind is the most dangerous. Even if you are not a lead, you will be sitting in one corner of your house. But blind leading the blind is the most dangerous.

A person who has experience but no knowledge, is not as dangerous. The Bhakti yogis who do not have the knowledge to transmit to others but have experience are not dangerous. At most, they will have charisma and will inspire a few hundred people around them by singing and dancing. But people who have knowledge and no experience are like venomous snakes. They are very dangerous because they are like the blind leading the blind.

2nd chapter, 6th verse in Kaṭhopaniṣad:

न साम्परायः प्रतिभाति बालं | प्रमाद्यन्तं वित्तमोहेन मूढम् ।
अयं लोको नास्ति पर इति मानी पुनः पुनः वशं आपद्यते मे ॥ ६॥

na sāmparāyaḥ pratibhāti bālaṃ pramādyantaṃ vittamohena mūḍham |
ayaṃ loko nāsti para iti mānī punaḥ punarvaśamāpadyate me ||6||

The Hereafter never rises before the thoughtless child - the ignorant, deluded by the glamour of wealth. 'This world alone is, there is none other' thinking thus, he falls under my sway again and again.

Death keeps his secrets away from you by showing wealth. Ramakrishna says when a mother is cooking, the child is crying. She first tries all possible ways – she gives toys, candy, everything. If the child is pacified, she does not bother and goes on with her work. If the child throws away everything and still cries, she puts everything aside and picks him up onto her lap.

When your life evolves from fish to tortoise and then to pig and then to the next level after you enter into the human body, what is the more visible possibility? Wealth. There is an invisible possibility – siddhis. The visible possibility is wealth.

One more thing: don't take these good qualities for granted. If you are not swayed by wealth, don't think it's okay. No. You have already grown out of at least 10 bodies. Even if you have decided not to marry with integrity but without authenticity, it's okay. If you've decided not to marry with integrity, you have lived and passed through at least 25 human bodies. Each of these qualities has come to your bio-memory after going through the human body many times.

The same way, at least ten janmas(births) are gone in exploring the possibility of wealth. Please understand, first wealth gives joy. In that pattern, one life is wasted. Then, "Wow, let me accumulate and enjoy my next birth." Then, "Let me not waste time in accumulation, let me take birth in that kind of family." Please understand, even if you take birth in a family background where you don't need to accumulate, the in-sensitization of your senses happens. In-sensitization means being tired of so much pleasure, womanizing, and everything – the senses lose their vigor.

First, money gives pleasure and you run after it. That itself takes at least one janma. Then you explore various methods of making money and having pleasure. Then you say, "No, too much time is wasted in making money. Let me spend time in a family where there is already wealth and I can start spending" – straight pleasure. Then this in-sensitization of senses happens and you lose pleasure. Only after that do you land in a matured body which does not get swayed by wealth.

The deeper questions of life are not entertained in the brain which is aimed at wealth. Wealth makes you live in the superficial space of life. Superficial questions, superficial answers, superficial living. That is why Yama is so clear: The Hereafter never rises before the thoughtless child.

Please be very clear, all the wealthy countries are one-life based countries. Why this one-life based idea? When you are deluded by the glamour of wealth, the idea of what is hereafter never rises before the thoughtless child - the ignorant, deluded by the glamour of wealth. 'This world alone is, there is none other', thinking thus, he falls under my sway again and again.

A person who cognises one life theory, plans with a very sharp, narrow vision of life. A person who thinks there are so many births, the larger picture, plans more properly about life. If you cognize that what you see in front of you is the world, that's all. What will you do? Take up an IT job. Work to make money, have a boyfriend and girlfriend who will abuse you for entertainment. Morning you get up, go to work, evening come back, go to the movies and sleep. If you think life is only what is in front of you, your plan for life will be too small. If you plan to look at the larger picture of life, you will not sway for wealth and be caught by the trap of Yama, the net of moha (delusion) of wealth.

Create wealth out of completion – pūrṇa madah, pūrṇa midam – with a clear purpose, with clear cognizance. You know the larger picture of your life. Have the right reason for wealth. Have the right reason, right cognition, have the right context for wealth. Context is decisive.

Having wealth or not having wealth is neither right nor wrong. Why you are having, why you are not having decides whether you are right or wrong. Even now, having because of poverty is wrong. Even having out of ignorance is wrong. Whether you have or not is not the thing. The context with which you have is what you need to see. This is the right cognizance for wealth, this is the right cognizance for power, this is the right cognizance for sex. These are the 3 which run life. Authentic right cognizance of these 3 – power, wealth, sex – you are a jīvan mukta. Having them or not having them no way comes into the picture. You may not have sex because you are impotent; that does not bring jīvan mukti for you. If you have sex with wrong cognition, that does not bring jīvan mukti. Having or not having is not the decision-making factor. Why you are having it is the decision-making factor. Nothing else is required. An authentic right cognizance and right context for wealth, sex, and power, you become enlightened.

अयं लोको नास्ति पर इति मानी पुनः पुनः वशं आपद्यते मे ॥ ६॥
na sāmparāyaḥ pratibhāti bālaṃ pramādyantaṃ vittamohena mūḍham |
ayaṃ loko nāsti para iti mānī punaḥ punarvaśamāpadyate me ||6||

The Hereafter never rises before the thoughtless child - the ignorant, deluded by the glamour of wealth. 'This world alone is, there is none other', thinking thus, he falls under my sway again and again.

Mahakala describes very clearly here the wrong cognizance, the wrong context. Because once Naciketa is established in the right cognizance and context, Yama himself is giving all the gifts to Naciketa. He sends thousands of chariots, gaṇas, gandharvas, wealth, earth, everything along with Naciketa. If wealth itself is wrong, then why is Yama giving wealth to Naciketa? Does he want to take revenge on Naciketa? No. The right context, right cognizance, conscious cognizance, right context is all you need to have.

When you have the right context and conscious cognizance, after that you decide "I don't want to have sex, wealth, and power" from the right conscious cognizance, you are the ultimatesannyāsī, ultimate jīvan mukta. With the right context and authenticity, if you renounce and decide not to have wealth, sex, or power, you will not even have a struggle in your muscle and bio-memory. The decision whether to have wealth or not, the decision whether to get married or not, the decision whether to stay in the marriage or not, these decisions have to be made with this conscious cognition.

If you believe there is only one life, after that no life, you're just going to be lying down in your tomb, God will call you. If you believe that, actually you're going to be stuck like a stone with your dead body, and for ages, you're not going to move to the next body, because all your belief, action, cognition, everything was based on that. You will be just stuck, lying in your tomb, for ages, just like stone, caught in the causal layer. Neither you can move further, nor you can go back, because the cognizance with which you handled your whole body, and all the actions you did, you are not going to give it up so easily because you've vested interest in those principles you believed. That is why just taking birth in a community or society where the theory of reincarnation is given to you from a young age itself, half of the enlightenment is achieved.

The parental cognizance you receive is a very important thing. Until your completion, that is going to lead your life. Only after your completion, the parental cognizance influence on you is going to reduce. Only when you start completing, you understand it is not parental cognizance, it is parental conditioning. Until then, you think it is parental cognizance. Blessed are those who cognize reincarnation tattva as a parental cognizance, as a knowledge given to them by parents, where the society lives and breathes that truth.

Mahakala is very clear, the people who are deluded by the glamour of wealth think that this world is all that is there is and that there is nothing beyond it. Thinking this way, they fall under my sway again and again. If you have lived your whole life with the belief in no rebirth, even if you come to know about rebirth after death, you may not want to move away from your vested interests. You will maintain certain confusions and remain stuck in the causal layer.

When you live your life for about 50 years based on a certain principle - let's say atheism - and suddenly in old age, you start realizing that this theory is not right and does not represent the truth, remember that your entire 50 years were built on that theory. Your cognizance, your actions, your society, and your community created an atmosphere around you based on that belief. Now, even if you know in your heart that the theory is wrong, you may try to maintain some confusion so that you can justify sticking with what you have always believed.

The theory which you believed in is going to form a deep layer within you. That itself becomes independently alive. It will not die and will keep you in confusion so that it can continue to flourish. If you have lived your whole life with the belief in only one birth and no rebirth, when you die, even if someone tells you the truth, are you going to believe it? You will not, and you will continue to retain certain confusions.

Every action you perform based on certain cognizance is going to add a layer of muscle memory within you. If you accumulate too much muscle memory, even if you realize that your cognizance is wrong, the muscle memories will not let you move away from that cognizance. So before you perform actions, be clear about the cognizance that is prompting you to take those actions.

That is why an ordinary person who builds his body will not get enlightened, but ones who build their body every day by listening to these Hindu truths with this Hindu cognizance, conscious cognizance, will be the one to become enlightened.

This is the first step Mahakala Yama is teaching. He is speaking as an insider; he is making fun. Yama is not giving spiritual advice; he is mocking. That is why he says, "Thinking thus, they fall prey to me again and again." He is revealing insider secrets. He is saying, "Eh, this is how I run my business; this is how they fall under my sway again and again. This is how I keep all the fellows under control."

Please listen in the right context. This is not presented as spiritual advice; it's a business secret. Imagine if the head of the Wall Street Journal suddenly said, "There is nothing like currency. This is how we keep people under our illusion and sway. We just keep some zeros in some bank accounts, and in our meetings, whoever screams the loudest gets more zeros. That's all; this is how we function. We neither have a gold reserve for the currency we print nor any other resource. We just print, print, print and add more and more zeros while people continue to live believing this." What will happen then? Will you work for money after that? Will you think about zeros after that?

In the same way, Mahakala, the biggest cheater of the cosmos, and Yama, the biggest swindler of the cosmos, are coming out to reveal their business secrets. Listen, this isn't even just a business secret; it should be called a brand secret. There are some business secrets, like how Coca-Cola is made; that's kept as a secret. Yama is breaking the brand secret: "By showing wealth, I keep people swaying." After this revelation, will you still chase wealth? The brand secret of death has been revealed.

Here, Yama is revealing the trade secret. He says that the truth of the hereafter never reveals itself to the thoughtless ignorant - those who lack conscious cognizance and are deluded by the incompletion and glamour of wealth. Being deluded by the incompletion and glamour of wealth, and cognizing that this world is all there is, there is none other, he falls under my sway again and again. It's as if he feels someone is very close to him; he keeps that person close, makes them sit next to him, and says, "Hey, this is the trade secret; listen."

You should listen to this verse with these three contexts in mind. First, the one who knows the entire secret of death is speaking to another close person with whom he is committed, and you are eavesdropping. You must listen in that context.

Understand that you have to listen in that context - deluded by the incompletion and glamour of wealth, and cognizing that this world alone exists, thus unconsciously cognizing, he falls under my sway again and again. They fall under my sway, this is the first trade secret.

A few minutes ago, this is what he attempted. He offered Naciketa, "I will give you Rambha, Menaka, Urvashi, thousands of maids, chariots, musical instruments, large fertile lands, planet Earth, and a long life as long as you want." Now he is saying, "this is how I sway people." Listen with this cognizance. Don't listen as if it's moral teaching; don't listen as if it's a spiritual satsang. Listen to the trade secret of Death.

Now let's move to the next verse. What does Mahākālā have to offer us in the next verse?

2nd chapter 7th verse

श्रवणायापि बहुभिर्यो न लभ्यः शृण्वन्तोऽपि बहवो यं न विद्युः ।
आश्चर्यो वक्ता कुशलोऽस्य लब्धा आश्चर्यो ज्ञाता कुशलानुशिष्टः ॥ ७॥

śravaṇāyāpi bahubhiryo na labhyaḥ śṛṇvanto'pi bahavo yaṃ na vidyuḥ |
āścaryo vaktā kuśalo'sya labdhā āścaryo jñātā kuśalānuśiṣṭaḥ ||7||

Yama comes to the space where he is going to reveal the knowledge. He is about to deliver a message about whom many are not even able to hear, whom many cannot comprehend even after hearing. Wonderful is the teacher who can receive when taught by an able teacher.

Please understand, Naciketa is sitting very close to Yama, and Yama, with deep love in his eyes, is pouring out his trade secrets and heart to Naciketa with deep trust. After this knowledge, Naciketa will not push him out of his seat!

Yes, it's wonderful that somebody can transmit this knowledge, and it is wonderful that somebody can receive it when an able teacher transmits it. So, he appreciates Naciketa and himself. He makes Naciketa understand that this is truly a beautiful and wonderful occurrence.

Wonderful is the teacher; wonderful is he who can receive when taught by an able teacher. So he says, you can hear and see that among seven billion people, only one billion even hear about the concept of rebirth after death, this principle of reincarnation. In these seven billion, only one billion even hear this truth, and even within that one billion, many cannot comprehend it. Six million do not even hear it.

In seven billion, only one million understand. So, wonderful is the teacher, who is teaching, wonderful is he who can receive when taught by an able teacher. Understand, that is why, all of you are Bahuputras.

Brahmaṇyam Bahuputratām

Because in seven billion, six billion don't even hear. Among one billion who hear, nine hundred and ninety nine million don't even understand. Only one million even comprehend. Then, you have all the right to feel Brahmaṇyam Bahuputratām.

Second chapter, eighth verse:

न नरेणावरेण प्रोक्त एष सुविज्ञेयो बहुधा चिन्त्यमानः ।
अनन्यप्रोक्ते गतिरत्र नास्ति अणीयान् ह्यतर्क्यमणुप्रमाणात् ॥ ८॥
na nareṇāvareṇa prokta eṣa suvijñeyo bahudhā cintyamānaḥ |
ananyaprokte gatiratra nāsti aṇīyān hyatarkyamaṇupramāṇāt ||8||

When taught by a man of inferior understanding, this ātman cannot be truly known. Even though frequently thought upon, there is no way to know it. Unless it is taught by an illumined teacher, for it is a subtler than the subtle and beyond argument. Understand the keyword is aṇupramāṇāt. Master can handle the arguments in the beginning, once you are convinced to a certain extent, your vijnānamayakosha, logical body is penetrated to a certain extent, you should reach to a space where you don't argue even internally, just drink the words coming out of the master's mouth. Only in that space the knowledge is transferred. The light is transferred.

When taught by a man of inferior understanding this ātman cannot be truly known. When taught by an unenlightened being, this ātman cannot be truly known.

This tattva cannot become satya in you even though frequently thought upon, even if you were to think about it repeatedly, again and again, there is no way to know it unless it is taught by an enlightened being, an incarnation, who has landed to transmit this experience, because it is subtler than the subtlest and beyond argument. Only an incarnation can silence all the arguments in your inner space. Please listen, sometimes you will stop the argument outside but it'll be going on inside. Only an enlightened being, an incarnation can put you in the space where even inside arguments are stopped.

Learn from the Right Teacher

Understand that there are some things which have to be taught through the very essence of your being, just by your breathing, just by you living it. An unenlightened being will not be able to teach the subtlest truths. Unless your whole cognizance becomes conscious cognizance, you will not be able to teach; you will be caught.

Listening just transforms you. If you are listening, you will not be inauthentic and you will not lack integrity. Because even if you take one step lacking integrity, with listening you will come back to completion; from there you will function and move.

Integrity: If you are authentically integrated, you will not give a single false promise to yourself or to others. Literally, you will be moving around unclutched. You may not have destroyed the mind, but you will have the mind only to use when you need it.

When you practice integrity and authenticity, you will see that the completion level increases. Continuously and consciously cognizing that incompletions are getting healed leads to rising completion.

When your cognition increases, your ability to listen to yourself also increases. Authentic listening to your mamakāra leads to unclutching. If you are able to authentically listen to yourself with complete integrity and authenticity, you will be unclutched.

Living authentically is key to understanding whose anyakāra you should fulfill and whose you should not. This understanding comes from personal experience and testing. Questions that arise are often a result of being time-tested or space-tested. Some questions may even be spouse-tested, where you test them on your partner. By discerning the nature of the question, whether it is time-tested, space-tested, or perhaps wasted, clarity can be gained.

The questions you raise about the tatvas are proof of whether you have started living them or not. Allow me to share a story with you - A man was concerned that his wife's hearing might be declining and thought she might need a hearing aid.

Uncertain about how to approach her, he decided to seek advice from the family doctor. The doctor suggested a simple informal test for the husband to perform in order to assess his wife's hearing loss more accurately. "Here's what you do," said the doctor, "stand about 40 feet away from her and ask her a question in a normal conversational tone. See if she hears it. If not, move closer - go to 30 feet, then 20 feet, and continue until you receive a response."

This man thought that the test was harmless and that he could handle it informally. That evening, while his wife was in the kitchen cooking dinner, he said to himself, "I'm about 40 feet away, let's see what happens." Then, in a normal tone, he asked, "Honey, what's for dinner?" However, there was no response.

Subsequently, the husband moved closer to the kitchen, approximately 30 feet from his wife, and repeated, "Honey, what's for dinner?" Yet again, there was no response.

He then moved into the dining room, standing about 20 feet from his wife, and asks, "Honey, what's for dinner?" Once again, he received no response. Undeterred, he walks up to the kitchen door, now about 10 feet away, and asks once more, "Honey, what's for dinner?" Still his question was met with silence.

Finally, he approached right behind her and asked again, "Honey, what's for dinner?" Exasperated, she responded firmly, "For the fifth time I am telling you - mashed potatoes!"

If your hearing is impaired, you need a hearing aid. If your listening is impaired, you need authenticity. Listening aid is authenticity. When you bring authenticity, you start listening. When you bring integrity, you start listening.

न नरावरेण प्रोक्त एष सुविज्ञेयो बहुधा चिन्त्यमानः ।
अनन्यप्रोक्ते गतिः अत्र नास्ति अणीयान् हि अतर्क्यम् अणुप्रमाणात् ॥ ८॥
na nareṇāvareṇa prokta eṣa suvijñeyo bahudhā cintyamānaḥ |
ananyaprokte gatiratra nāsti aṇīyān hyatarkyamaṇupramāṇāt ||8||

When taught by an unenlightened being, this ātman cannot be truly known, this tattva cannot be truly known even though frequently thought upon. Even if you think about it again and again, it will not become known to you or become a part of you. There is no way to know it unless it is taught by an enlightened being, an incarnation, for it is subtler than the subtlest and beyond argument.

At one point, you simply need to feel that the person teaching you is living it. You need to feel their embodiment, not just be convinced. To truly understand, you must feel that they are living it.

Only when taught by an enlightened being or incarnation can you grasp this knowledge because it is subtler than the subtlest and beyond argument.

2nd chapter, 9th verse:

नैषा तर्केण मतिरापनेया प्रोक्तान्येनैव सुज्ञानाय प्रेष्ठ ।
यां त्वमापः सत्यधृतिर्बतासि त्वादृङ्नो भूयान्नचिकेतः प्रष्टा ॥ ९॥
naiṣā tarkeṇa matirāpaneyā proktānyenaiva sujñānāya preṣṭha |
yāṃ tvamāpaḥ satyadhṛtirbatāsi tvādṛṅno bhūyānnaciketaḥ praṣṭā ||9||

"O Dearest, this ātman cannot be attained by argument; It is truly known only when taught by another - a wise teacher a person who is living it, who has become it. O Naciketa, thou hast attained It. Thou art fixed in Truth. May we ever find a questioner like you."

The state of enrichment is not attainable through logical understanding alone. These truths can only be transmitted by a living being. Oh Naciketa ! You attained these truths through your Śraddhā - sincerity and authenticity. Oh Naciketa ! Will another authentic seeker like you ever be found?

The process of these principles becoming realities occurs only through living. The root cause of non-partcipation is engaging different personalities in an inauthentic manner instead of integrating them. For instance, if you have a lawyer friend, you may claim to become a lawyer to please them; similarly, with a doctor or engineer friend, you may express intentions to become one to appease them. This pattern extends even to interactions with your Spiritual Guru - claiming to become a Brahmachari or sannyāsī solely for their approval.

Initially, you may be aware that you are playing this game for a specific purpose. However, upon repeating these false declarations, you begin losing integrity over your consciousness and the words you speak. The second time you utter any statement is when it transforms into a declaration. While the first utterance like "I am a criminal" remains just words without impact, repetition solidifies its influence over you as the seed starts taking root within.

This cycle of projecting multiple inauthentic personalities poses dangers - initially leading to confusion, followed by deeper layers of inauthenticity. Eventually, scenarios like being questioned by a doctor while present at a lawyer's office arise; responding with evasive answers further entrenches this inauthentic behavior. It is crucial to recognize and break free from this pattern before it takes hold and distorts one's authenticity and integrity.

During Mīnākṣī's time, people had stone slabs in their homes that acted like televisions. By sitting on the seat and creating sound vibrations, they could immediately have Darshan of Mīnākṣī and receive instructions. If you restore your authentic integrity, every sound you create will yield results. When you are out of integrity, the sounds you produce have no impact on either yourself or others.

Patanjali states that simply by chanting Om, one can enter samādhi. Rāmanuja's guru advises repeatedly chanting "Om Namoh Narayana" to reach Vaikunta. Rāmanuja simplifies this by saying that chanting "Om Namoh Narayana" just once will lead one to Vaikunta. Shankara takes it further by suggesting chanting "Govinda" once and taking a drop of Ganges water will result in reaching a higher state.

You have become inauthentic. Integrity transforms your words into reality. Without integrity, your words will not manifest as reality. This especially applies to all the Pūjāris (priests) of Kailasa. It is essential to uphold a high level of integrity for your chants to invoke the presence and blessings of the gods and goddesses, reaching those to who you offer prayers. Only then can Hindu rituals truly become a science. Maintain high integrity and authenticity. Reclaim and restore integrity and authenticity to the required level, so when you perform prāṇa prathishta (invoking energy), that energy must manifest. When you operate with integrity and authenticity, the energy will be present. It is through your integrity and authenticity that sound vibrations are transformed into reality.

Only through authenticity can the sounds you create manifest as reality. Similarly, only with authenticity can powerful tools like Brahmāstra become a reality. In ancient Hindu tradition, everything operated based on sound - from Pushpaka Vimānas to Brahmāstras; they had advanced technologies like flight, helicopters, and even atom bombs operated through sound vibrations. In modern times, we rely on electricity because we have lost touch with our integrity and authenticity; hence, the sounds we create get distorted before even leaving our lips.

Before declaring victory, how many times have you already declared defeat within yourself? The depletion of sound energy has already occurred - leaving the cosmos puzzled before you. The highest levels of integrity and authenticity are imperative for integrating these potent energies into your reality.

This is the exact way the cosmos stands in front of you; it does not know your instructions, it does not know what you want! You may think you are manipulating the lawyer, engineer, doctor, or even your Guru, but in reality, you are only manipulating yourself. Realize that inauthenticity is unnecessary for achieving success and joy, whether you are strategizing internally or externally. Understanding this truth will lead to your success and glory.

It is crucial to comprehend that inauthenticity is never necessary. While we often believe that internal enlightenment does not require authenticity, we mistakenly think that external matters demand inauthenticity - labeling a lawyer as inauthentic, a doctor as inauthentic, or even a spiritual leader as inauthentic. However, if they truly lack authenticity, they are already living in a state of suffering. Do you wish to be trapped in such misery? Remember, the inauthenticity of others does not justify your own lack of authenticity. By embodying authenticity, you will naturally create an environment of genuineness around you.

Ramakrishna beautifully illustrates this concept with the analogy of a fisherwoman who cannot thrive in a flower shop setting. He narrates how a few fisherwomen went to the market to sell fish and on their way back requested shelter at a small flower shop owner's house. The kind owner welcomed them to stay overnight. As they settled down for rest, all three women found themselves rolling and tossing uncomfortably. They were not able to sleep. Then one lady said, "I know the reason now because the whole house is full of Jasmine smell." This lady brought the fish baskets, sprinkled water and they all slept nicely.

If you are carrying inauthenticity, you will naturally be drawn to a society that thrives on inauthenticity. Conversely, if authenticity is ingrained within you, you will naturally gravitate towards a community that embodies authenticity. No one can prevent this natural attraction.

When you embody authenticity, no external force can hinder you; nothing can impede your path. On the other hand, if you carry inauthenticity, even being in close proximity to guru will not aid you. It is crucial to understand that whether seeking success internally or externally, inauthenticity is unnecessary and ineffective as a strategy. Whether aiming for financial prosperity, harmonious relationships with a spouse or family, material wealth, success in the outer world, inner fulfillment, enlightenment - regardless of your aspirations, inauthenticity is not the right approach. Non-integrity and inauthenticity will not lead to success.

The state of enlightenment is not achievable through logical understanding alone. Only the beings who have enriched themselves with these truths can enrich others with these truths. Oh Naciketa! You have achieved the state of receiving these truths through your authenticity. Will another authentic seeker like you ever be found!

"When aiming for internal success, I require authenticity. However, for external success, I acknowledge that I can tolerate a little inauthenticity." This is akin to thinking, "I will keep a little poison inside this container of milk. When I decide to drink, I will consume only the milk; however, when giving it to my enemy, I will include the poison." How many of you consider this foolishness? Then why do you not recognize the folly in other actions? Just because you perceive a lawyer as being inauthentic does not justify engaging in similar behavior to interact with them. Understand that repeating this mistake involves mixing inauthentic poison with authentic milk - drinking only the milk separately and sharing the poisoned portion with others. It is comparable to someone bringing a glass of milk laced with poison; as poison naturally settles at the bottom, offering half to another person means both halves are contaminated.

When one stands with authenticity, arguments are destroyed and cease. While Mandana Mishra clung to his inauthenticity, Shankara persisted. However, upon recognizing the heat of his inauthenticities causing his garland to wither, Mandana Mishra chose to abandon all inauthenticity, leading to a sudden transmission of knowledge.

During the completion process, many may have experienced heat body pains. It is crucial to enrich oneself authentically with these principles. Authentic decision-making without relying on strategies of inauthenticity is key for personal growth and success. Inauthenticity may reinforce innate fear patterns and root thought patterns of suffering but does not lead to true achievement or practical success.

It is essential to understand that practical success does not align with inauthenticity. Holding onto poison for others while believing it will not affect oneself is akin to closing a manhole and remaining trapped inside a ditch. Just as drainage water returns to homes when the Ganges flows back into the ocean during high tide, one must handle situations properly to avoid facing consequences. The dynamics between the Ganges and the ocean at places like Ganga Sagar near Calcutta illustrate this interplay - during low tide, freshwater can be sourced from the Ganges up to 7 km inland; however, during high tide, salty ocean water flows into the Ganges up to 70 km inland. Understanding this natural phenomenon emphasizes the importance of managing situations effectively to prevent unwanted outcomes when high tides bring back drainage water if not managed correctly.

If you find yourself leaning towards inauthenticity, it is time to fully integrate and elevate yourself in authenticity, not in inauthenticity. No one has cheated or exploited you; the belief that someone has wronged you stems from foolishness that perpetually victimizes you. Even if you were to become a Prime Minister or President, you would still feel like a victim, as many individuals in positions of power often do.

The common misconception is that being in a position of power will bring completeness and happiness. However, some may also feel the opposite - that holding power leaves them feeling incomplete and unhappy. True fulfillment lies in internal authenticity; it is authenticity that brings a sense of wholeness and enables one to live in completion.

The Sanskrit root words for the four tattvas are as follows:

Integrity: Sampūrti, from Chandogya Upaniṣad 5th chapter, 3rd canto, 3rd verse

Authenticity: Śraddhā, from Katha Upaniṣad, 1st chapter, 1st canto, 2nd verse

Responsibility: Upāyanam, from Brihadaranyaka Upaniṣad, 2nd chapter, 6th canto

Āpyāyanam: Kena Upaniṣad - Sama Veda

These four tattvas represent essential principles with their respective Sanskrit root words - Sampūrti, Śraddhā, Upāyanam, and Apyayanam.

2nd chapter of the Katha Upaniṣad, 10th verse:

जानाम्यहं शेवधिरित्यनित्यं न ह्यध्रुवैः प्राप्यते हि ध्रुवं तत् ।
ततो मया नाचिकेतश्चितोऽग्निः अनित्यैर्द्रव्यैः प्राप्तवानस्मि नित्यम् ॥ १०॥

jānāmyahaṃ śevadhirityanityaṃ na hyadhruvaiḥ prāpyate hi dhruvaṃ tat |
tato mayā nāciketaścito'gniḥ anityairdravyaiḥ prāptavānasmi nityam ||10||

"The treasure and wealth of the world are transitory; can the unsteady ever hope to reach the eternal? The Naciketa fire was made attainable, but I have reached the state of eternity."

Real life is continuous and tireless completion that forms the foundation for the second level tirelessly. When attempting to identify the root pattern of suffering, one must revisit early memories around ages 2-3 years old. However, completion cannot be achieved by focusing solely on one incident; every impact of that root thought pattern needs to be addressed and completed.

Please understand, when you identify the root pattern of suffering, you must revisit the earliest childhood memories. By retracing each incident step by step, you need to complete the process continuously and tirelessly until today. It is crucial to comprehend that only when you achieve completion, extraordinary powers manifest as described in the Mahānārāyaṇa Upaniṣad - " Śrīśca Kīrtiśca Puṣṭiśca Kīrtiñcā'nṛṇyatām." When these three aspects - creative knowledge, natural resources, and extraordinary powers - are at your disposal, you can truly experience the reality of "BRAHMAṆYAM BAHUPUTRATĀM" - being the favorite inheritor of the Cosmos.

Completion must be carried out consistently throughout the prarabdha. Identifying the root thought pattern of suffering is just the beginning; the real work starts there. It is essential to continue completing at every level. Completing with those individuals whom you cannot find in your life is crucial.

The beauty of your consciousness lies in its innate intelligence to unclutch from any situation by its very nature. This is why, regardless of the suffering, time has the ability to heal it. Time possesses the quality of constantly unclutching you.

Vivekananda beautifully expresses, "Do not worry at all; even if you do not renounce, Maya will make you renounce." As time flows over you, it naturally leads to renunciation. In Buddhism, this is referred to as Kshanikavata. Imagine keeping a cloth in an airtight container for ten years - untouched and unmoved. When you finally take it out after a decade, it disintegrates into pieces due to lack of exposure to weather conditions causing decomposition and loss of its original state. The reason behind this phenomenon is that time acts as a solid mass affecting every object. By its very nature, time works on your mind, continuously healing and helping you unclutch. Remember the power of time in cleansing your inner mirror.

Time is literally a wiper of your inner mirror. The inner mirror you carry, even if it gets dusted by incompletions, the dust settles due to your incompletion; time acts as a mirror to wipe. The flow of time wipes away the dust, leaving the mirror shining once again. Time naturally cleanses and allows for reflection on matters. Time cleanses you organically; this is why we often say colloquially "time heals everything" However, time does not heal; it cleanses. Through this cleansing process, one may feel healed, but in reality, it is cleaning - pushing things aside and moving them away.

When is the first time you experienced the fear "time may not naturally cleanse my inner space; I may not have the quality of reflecting as innate intelligence." It could have been when you began memorizing multiplication tables. During those times, the pressure from teachers for upcoming exams may have been there. Perhaps when you were beginning to memorize and face the pressure of exams, or when your parents instilled negative ideas like "you won't make it, you can't do it," that's when you start forgetting. Your innate intelligence has the ability to memorize, store, and recall any information that comes into your inner space. Understand this well. Your inner space possesses the innate intelligence to hold, store, capture, reclaim, and restore any information presented before you. If you can retain all your past sufferings until the age of 50 and relive those experiences vividly, why can't you retain the school syllabus? You vividly remember who has hurt you or scolded you; why not apply the same ability to capturing academic knowledge?

Somewhere within, there lies a resistance towards storing, reclaiming, and restoring information. When it comes to the syllabus studied in school, you store it, recall it for exams, jot it down, but fail to truly restore it; instead, you discard it once the examination is over. The mindset of "the exam is done, so I should forget this" prevails. This difficulty in storing, reclaiming, and restoring information stems from this pattern ingrained within your system.

In the Hindu tradition, education primarily occurred through Śravaṇa - listening. In Sanskrit, we find the beautiful terms ekasanthagrāhya (listen once and repeat), dvisanthagrāhya (listen twice and repeat), trisanthagrāhya (listen thrice and repeat). If one cannot repeat after three times of listening (trisanthagrāhya), they are termed as buddhu and may not be permitted to participate in sessions with the master. Instead, they are given prāyaścitta - penance - involving sitting by the river to listen to its sound, sitting amidst bamboo groves to hear their rustle, or sitting with the breeze to listen to its whispers; all aimed at training one's ability to listen attentively - Śravaṇa.

You have been misled to believe that your mind operates like a limited storage capacity such as in email - with specific GB or MB limits. However, it's crucial to understand that your brain is not a hardware confined by memory size; rather, it serves as software connected to the cosmic memory. Your brain is not restricted by memory volume but functions as a high-speed connection to the vast cosmic memory. This shift in understanding is essential. Unfortunately, you have been fed incorrect beliefs that memorizing a certain amount of material will hinder your ability to remember more. This misconception treats information as volume and makes memorization seem challenging. In reality, your brain is not constrained by the volume of information; what's needed is an increase in bandwidth like a net connection. Therefore, it's important to address and correct this false belief instilled in you - whether by school, teachers, parents, or others who influenced you negatively regarding memory capacity limitations.

Recognize and heal this wrong cognition that has been imparted to you. Identify who first introduced this false notion that increasing information volume would impede your memory recall abilities. Understand that this belief is inaccurate and needs correction. It's crucial to rectify this misunderstanding for clarity and progress in learning and memory retention.

The ability to store, reclaim, and restore is not dependent on the volume you handle. You have been given the wrong idea and understanding of the volume concept of memory. Memory does not have a volume concept. You simply need a high-speed internet connection, which signifies a completed inner space that has access to all information. This is highlighted in Jung's theories of psychoanalysis, where he states that when your inner space is in restful awareness, 98% of what happens around you is consciously cognized; otherwise, only 2% is consciously cognized. He emphasizes that it is always either 2 or 98, with no in-between. Unfortunately, Jung had not encountered any enlightened beings, preventing him from acknowledging the existence of a state where one can be fully aware at 100%. It is regrettable that during his journey from Chennai to Tiruvannamalai to seek darshan of Ramana Maharshi, his car broke down near Chengi. In those days (around the 1940s), cars were operated by coal-powered taxis requiring manual intervention to restart if they stopped. Faced with this situation, Jung experienced a panic attack as he realized that meeting the master might challenge and potentially disprove his deeply held ideas and concepts upon which he had built his entire life - causing him to confront his vested interests.

The moment the vehicle started, he told the driver, "Turn back. Let's go back to Chennai." He returned to Chennai and flew back to his country. The absence of that one meeting is the greatest loss experienced by Western psychology. If that meeting had taken place, Western psychology would have approached life, Jīva, Īśvara, and Jagat in a completely different manner. The understanding of the world, God, consciousness, and humanity in Western psychology would have been transformed significantly. Unfortunately, fate intervened; his taxi stopped, preventing him from meeting Ramana Maharshi.

Jung's biography reveals that he was within a two-hour distance from Ramana Maharshi while in South India for three months but chose to avoid it. Despite being close by at Chengi near Tiruvannamalai (which was a 2-hour journey then), he experienced a panic attack near Gingi (Gingee) when his car stopped. He feared that encountering Ramana Maharshi might challenge his deeply held beliefs and teachings which could disrupt his vested interests and followers.

Psychology is likened to another form of religion - similar to communism - with its own set of beliefs and followers akin to papacy members without worshipping a deity. Jung's statement about conscious restful awareness revealing only 2% cognition holds truth when one fails to be fully present in awareness.

Listen, when you are in restful awareness, you cognize 98% of the information. If not, only 2%. It is essential to understand that the process of capturing, storing, reclaiming, and restoring information does not operate based on quantity but on quality.

Therefore, it is crucial to recognize and address the root pattern of who instilled this incorrect understanding within you.

If you have not, sit and contemplate, do manana. Catch who gave you this wrong cognizance. This process does not happen based on volume. Volume is not the basis on which the whole process occurs. The idea that having 2000 files will cause you to forget things and that discarding unnecessary files will make space for new ones is a misconception.

Any amount of information can be managed effectively. What is required is a powerful inner space of completion and restful awareness. Yes, it is either 2% or 98%. There is nothing in between. That is the truth for all common men. Of course, when you become enlightened, you will have 100%, which is very rare, with exemptions. Other than the exemptions, as a rule, it is either 2% or 98%. There's no in-between.

To address the root thought pattern that has given you the wrong understanding that memory functions based on volume, complete with the person who instilled this misconception. If reaching out to that individual is not possible, engage in self-reflection using a mirror and complete with false cognition. It's crucial to rectify each wrong cognition responsible for limiting and disempowering you.

A clear and correct understanding of memory is essential for any successful leader. While becoming a leader through chance or by undermining others may happen differently, proving your capability and becoming a true leader requires a broad and quality memory. Quality memory is a fundamental requirement for any successful leader.

Today, take the time to revisit the root pattern of when you were given the wrong understanding that memory operates based on volume. The processes of capturing, storing, reclaiming, and restoring do not function according to the volume of information. It is not like email storage where you have limited space. The brain is not a storage unit; rather, it serves as an interface for connection. Focus on enhancing the bandwidth of your mental connection rather than expanding storage capacity.

If you attempt to increase storage space, you may inadvertently create more stress in your brain. This can lead to vivid recollections of unpleasant memories such as arguments with family members while crucial information like your bank balance or emergency contact numbers fades into the background.

Memory does not operate based on volume; rather, it functions on the basis of restful awareness and the quality of your inner space. When you achieve completion, your inner space comprehends everything - every aspect of your surroundings is cognized through your innate completion. The potential for completion is what drives your cognition.

Why do we choose to respond, react in certain ways to certain situations, or the space. What is the reason for our response? This is the reason: Casual Curiosity. Nothing else. Neither sanchita, nor agamya, or prarabdha, trikarmas are not the reason for the way you respond, it is simple casual curiosity. You would have seen your mother responding that way. You would have seen your father responding that way. You would have seen your friend responding that way. The casual curiosity with which you collected that information, that's all, and you start responding. Unfortunately, once you show a certain response, you get affiliated with it, identify with it and decide – this is the way you respond, this is your individual identity. Later on, moving from one type of response to another type needs completion. How many of you cognize the casual curiosity as a tattva? Now, it is your responsibility to make this tattva into satya. Dig out where all you started responding out of casual curiosity. If it is a casual curiosity, why does it make such a big impact on us? When you make the first decision, it does not make a big impact on you. Because of the continuity, her first decision made a huge impact. Success writes the history. So, it is the success, the continuous reactions you do based on which you look back and sing or cognize about the impact of that casual curiosity. The continuous support you give to the casual, curious reaction makes that as agamya. Gamya means casual curiosity. Agamya means intense causal curiosity. When you bring the word intense, the word casual is taken away. Intense curiosity leads to casualty.

Understand the first thing. See, the first effect of the sun rising will be fog disappearing. Then, the temperature will rise, and then flowers will bloom. Many other effects will continue. But the first effect of the sun rising will be that the fog disappears. The first effect of authenticity is that you will stop spontaneously lying. Understand, if you are still spontaneously lying to save your skin, even the first step of authenticity has not happened. Spontaneous lying is a pattern that never allows any transformation in you; it does not allow the master's presence to work on you. You have a shield, an armor that never allows the master's energy to work on you - spontaneous lying is that shield.

Spontaneous lying is the pattern that stops the master from transforming you in the first step itself. Understand, whether in your office or house, anywhere you lie spontaneously, you lose life. When you have the pattern of spontaneous lying with your wife, she will never be able to add what she is supposed to add to your life. You may expect her to add love and romance to your life, but if you have the pattern of spontaneous lying, she will never be able to add that. Similarly, if you want your husband to add security to your life, and if you have the pattern of spontaneous lying, you will never feel secure with him. You have to complete and take responsibility and align yourself with it. Spontaneous lying is the silliest pattern with which you stop the master's grace on you. In the same way, if you have the pattern of spontaneous lying with your mother, nothing will be added to your life by her presence.

The right wife can get you out of death. See what Savithri did for Satyavaan - she brought him back from death through her authenticity; she even stopped the sun from rising. But if you have a spontaneous lying pattern, even a wife like Savithri cannot save you. Please understand, the pattern of spontaneous lying will stop guru from giving you any blessings.

The most difficult part, but the first step for transformation, is breaking this spontaneous lying pattern. When you are cornered or encountered, out of fear and anxiety, you start blurting out lies. The moment you decide guru's anyakāra about you is impractical, you have ditched yourself. It is like a seed looking at the banyan tree and saying, "Wow – how can I become like you? At least I need time, right?" But you don't understand that only after you decide, the clock starts ticking. Only when you decide that the master's anyakāra about you is doable and declare, "I am going to do it," does the time start ticking.

Yes, the seed needs time to become a tree. But when does the time start ticking? When does the clock start moving? After it decides, "I will become a tree, I have decided." After that sprouting only does the clock start ticking; not when the seed is in confusion or reasoning.

So the clock starts ticking the day you declare: undoubtedly I am standing by, for and with the anyakāra (expectation) image of my guru. If the seed is sitting and debating, it can be debating for 2,000 years and the clock does not start ticking. For example, if the chronological time between the seed and the tree is 1,000 years - if today a seed decides to become a tree it may take 1,000 years.

If you are stuck thinking "When am I going to be like Him?" for 1,000 years and you are stuck in an argument, it never happens. The clock does not start ticking. Only when the seed declares "Come on! I am deciding; I am standing for the anyakāra of this tree," even if you have one doubt like "Oh time! How can I become like him?" even then the clock has not started ticking for you; 1,000 years between the seed and the tree have not started.

So you give up on yourself. Anybody who gives up on himself does not need a separate hell for him; he will create such an amazing hell around himself. The first opening happens in the seed when it sprouts - that breakthrough is breaking through spontaneous lying patterns. When a seed has to break open its superficial layer, that superficial layer represents spontaneous lying.

If your thinking is conscious, the commitment you give should be sitting on your Ānanda Gandha alive, constantly driving you to take actions. Lack of integrity is when you feel the heaviness of this commitment in your Ānanda Gandha. If there is heat in your stomach, it will come out as foul odor from your mouth. If you take radish, naturally you will belch the radish smell. In the same way, if you have a lack of integrity here, your mouth will smell of spontaneous lying. When there is an ulcer in the stomach, heat in the stomach, or dehydration in the intestine, the mouth will smell. No matter how many times you use mouthwash, it will not go away.

In the same way, as long as you have inauthenticity and lack of integrity, your mouth will smell of spontaneous lying. Spontaneous lying is a pattern. It is like the skin of a seed that does not allow the seed to become a tree. Only when the seed breaks its skin can it become a tree.

I tell you, there is a beautiful verse by a great Tamil saint Manickavasagar. In his song, he says, "I am not afraid of wild animals charging at me, I am not afraid of wild fire engulfing me, but I am afraid of inauthentic beings who don't remember Mahādeva or who don't apply sacred ash on their body."

If you are not feeling the commitment you gave to the Master in your Ānanda Gandha (sacred energy center), pushing you continuously to work, then you are clearly thinking about something that is not required and is draining your life energy. If you are a boy, it is all about mūlādhāra (root cakra); if you are a girl, it is all about Svādhiṣṭhāna (sacral cakra); if you are a couple, it is all about confusion – maṇipūraka (solar plexus cakra). Only when you feel your commitment and understand your life's mission, raising yourself to the anyakāra (expectation) of the most important person in your life becomes your life's purpose. If you are authentic and integrated, the master's anyakāra (expectation) about you should be sitting in your being and continuously driving you, making you think, work, and live.

Surrender is building you to guru's anyakāra. Surrender means building yourself to the anyakāra (expectation) of the person to whom you have surrendered. Surrender is raising yourself to the anyakāra of the person to whom you surrender. Surrender means surrendering to a person whom you feel is an important relationship in your life, from whom you feel your life is happening. Building up to the anyakāra of the person to whom you surrender is true surrender. The moment you decide you have to build it, the master secretly helps you.

When you surrender, when you offer prayers to guru, stop talking on his behalf. This is where the first misunderstanding of surrender is going to happen. Surrender happens with the first step of not doing proxy talks and not giving dubbing voice. Devotion makes the master happen in your life. Dubbing voice stops you from listening to him. One of the worst things is that you build your dubbing voice so loudly that sometimes you fight with guru because he is not behaving as per your dubbing voice. You should know that you cannot speak for guru. Only then will you listen to guru when he speaks to you. This dubbing voice is the real distractor.

Pūrṇatva (completion) will become sahaja samādhi (natural state of enlightenment) only at the initial level when you practice the tattvas (principles) continuously. Sahaja samādhi will not become continuous unless you practice the tattvas completely. Continuous completion alone becomes sahaja samādhi. In every conflict, conflict resides on both sides, never on just one side. When a philosophy or spiritual philosophy is not useful for your conflict resolution, dump it as a fantasy theory. Whether it is Pūrvamimāmsa, Uttaramimāmsa, Pātānjala Yoga, Kāpālika, Śaiva, Lingāyat Sampradāya or any philosophy, you should know how to use that philosophy for conflict resolution. Only when they help you with conflict resolution do they become livable theories. Otherwise, we may have read volumes of philosophy and volumes of books; we may be sitting inside the knowledge, but it does not become knowledge.

The four rules of prāyaścitta (atonement) are:

1. You should not have anger towards the person to whom you are giving prāyaścitta.
2. You should not have favoritism towards the person to whom you are giving prāyaścitta.
3. You should also know what damage was caused inside the person and to the place because of this missing element.
4. Understand how the prāyaścitta can restore that damage.

Any tattva (principle), any spiritual principle, or any philosophy becomes a reality in our lifestyle only if it can be useful for conflict resolution in your life, whether it is a conflict between mother-in-law and daughter-in-law, a conflict between your boss and you, a conflict between your employee and you, or a conflict within yourself. The most unresolved conflicts in our lives are the conflicts between us and ourselves. If there is an ulcer in the intestine, bad breath cannot be avoided. Similarly, if there is inauthenticity in the being, conflict within yourself cannot be avoided.

Conflict resolution should be consciously decided whenever there is a conflict. Only by conflict resolution, tattva becomes satya; you discover your religion. You don't become religious by birth, you become religious only when you discover religion. Everyone who is born in Hinduism does not mean he is Hindu till he discovers Hinduism. Any religion - Buddhism, Judaism, Christianity, Śākta, Śaiva, Tantra, Vedānta, Yoga – any Sampradāya, any religion, tradition, philosophy only when you discover, it becomes part of you, you become part of it. Discovering religion makes you religious. Any tattva should be applied for conflict resolution with others and yourself. Only then it becomes Satya.

Further verses reveal the eternal truth.

कामस्याप्तिं जगतः प्रतिष्ठां क्रतोरानन्त्यमभयस्य पारम् ।
स्तोममहदुरुगायं प्रतिष्ठां दृष्ट्वा धृत्या धीरो नचिकेतोऽत्यस्राक्षीः ॥ ११॥

kāmasyāptiṃ jagataḥ pratiṣṭhāṃ kratorānantyamabhayasya pāram |
stomamahadurugāyaṃ pratiṣṭhāṃ dṛṣṭvā dhṛtyā dhīro naciketo'tyasrākṣīḥ ||11||

In the 11th verse of the second chapter of Kathopanishad, it speaks about the ultimate fulfillment of desires and the eternal foundation of the universe. The verse emphasizes that true stability and security come from understanding the deeper truths beyond mere desires.

When Nachiketa witnesses this profound truth, he becomes resolute and fearless. This revelation teaches us that while desires are a part of our existence, they should not be our ultimate goal. Instead, we must seek the eternal and unchanging reality that lies beyond them.

The essence is to cultivate a strong inner resolve and clarity, allowing us to transcend fleeting desires and connect with the everlasting truth. This is the path to true peace and fulfillment.

Nachiketa, with his courage, beheld the infinite nature of the sacrificial rituals ('kratorānantyam') and the state of absolute fearlessness ('abhayasya pāram'), and chose to transcend the ordinary, going beyond these worldly achievements. By perceiving the vastness of what is beyond, the ultimate goal of liberation and bliss, the 'urugāyaṃ pratiṣṭhā', Nachiketa saw through the layers of delusion. With firm determination, he sought the highest, not content with transient pleasures or achievements.

तं दुर्दर्शं गूढमनुप्रविष्टं गुहाहितं गह्वरेष्ठं पुराणम् ।
अध्यात्मयोगाधिगमेन देवं मत्वा धीरो हर्षशोकौ जहाति ॥ १२॥
taṃ durdarśaṃ gūḍhamanupraviṣṭaṃ guhāhitaṃ gahvareṣṭhaṃ purāṇam |
adhyātma yogadhigamena devaṃ matvā dhīro harṣaśokau jahāti ||12||

In the 12th verse of the Kathopanishad, it describes the Supreme Being as elusive and hidden, residing deep within the cave of the heart. This divine essence is ancient and profound, transcending ordinary perception.

The verse highlights that through the practice of spiritual yoga and deep inner realization, one can recognize this divine presence. A wise person, upon realizing this truth, transcends both joy and sorrow.

This teaching emphasizes that true understanding of the divine leads to liberation from emotional fluctuations, allowing one to experience a state of equanimity and peace. It encourages seekers to delve into their inner selves to discover this eternal truth that lies within.

Only the dhīra, the courageous one, who embarks on the journey of self-discovery can realize this truth and transcend both harṣa (joy) and śoka (sorrow). Realizing the Self means going beyond dualities, beyond the experiences that come and go in life. The wise person, realizing the truth of the Self, becomes free from both the excitement of success and the sorrow of loss.

एतच्छ्रुत्वा सम्परिगृह्य मर्त्यः प्रवृह्य धर्म्यमणुमेतमाप्य ।
स मोदते मोदनीयँ हि लब्ध्वा विवृतँ सद्म नचिकेतसं मन्ये ॥ १३॥
etacchrutvā samparigṛhya martyaḥ pravṛhya dharmyamaṇumetamāpya |
sa modate modanīyam hi labdhvā vivṛtam sadma naciketasaṃ manye ||13||

Upon hearing this profound knowledge and grasping its significance, a mortal being engages in righteous action and attains the ultimate truth.

The verse emphasizes that upon realizing this truth, one experiences immense joy and satisfaction. The term ‘modanīyam’ signifies that this joy is not just fleeting but is deeply rooted in the understanding of the eternal reality.

When one truly understands and internalizes this teaching about the Supreme Self, etacchrutvā - having heard this knowledge about the nature of the Self, and samparigṛhya - having grasped it deeply, the seeker who is still in the human form - martyaḥ - undergoes a complete transformation, a profound sense of joy that is beyond anything that can be derived from worldly achievements or possessions, the bliss born out of realizing the eternal truth within oneself.

This teaching encourages us to actively engage in righteous living and to seek deeper truths, leading to a state of blissful existence. It reminds us that true fulfillment comes from aligning our actions with higher principles and understanding the divine nature within ourselves.

अन्यत्र धर्मादन्यत्राधर्मादन्यत्रास्मात्कृताकृतात् ।
अन्यत्र भूताच्च भव्याच्च यत्तत्पश्यसि तद्वद ॥ १४॥
anyatra dharmādanyatrādharmādanyatrāsmātkṛtākṛtāt |
anyatra bhūtācca bhavyācca yattatpaśyasi tadvada ||14||

In this verse, Nachiketa is asking Yama to reveal that which is beyond all dualities and concepts. He asks for something that is anyatra dharmād anyatrādharmād—beyond dharma (righteousness) and adharma (unrighteousness). He wants to understand the reality that is not confined by the concepts of right and wrong, good and bad. The ultimate truth is beyond these dualistic notions; it transcends all moral and ethical constructs created by the mind.

He further asks for something anyatrāsmāt kṛtākṛtāt - beyond what is done and what is not done, beyond cause and effect, beyond action and inaction. The Self, the ultimate reality, is not bound by karma, by the results of actions, or the idea of what has been accomplished or yet to be accomplished. It exists beyond all ideas of doership and the results of action.

Nachiketa also asks for that which is anyatra bhūtācca bhavyācca - beyond the past and the future, beyond what has been and what will be. The truth is not bound by time, by the experiences of the past or the expectations of the future. It is ever-present, beyond the limitations of temporal existence.

Yat tat paśyasi tat vada - he requests Yama to reveal that which he perceives as beyond all these limitations. Nachiketa, in his deep yearning for the truth, seeks that which is beyond all dualities, beyond time, beyond cause and effect, beyond the concepts of morality. He is asking for the revelation of the ultimate, eternal, unchanging truth - the Self.

The truth of Paramaśiva is not something that can be confined by ideas of good or bad, right or wrong, past or future. It is the eternal, unchanging consciousness that lies at the core of your being. It is beyond all definitions and dualities, beyond all limitations imposed by the mind.

This verse is an invitation for you to go beyond the surface, beyond the limitations of conceptual thinking, and experience the truth directly. The ultimate realization is not about understanding concepts but about going beyond them, transcending all dualities, and merging with the pure, undivided consciousness - Paramaśiva.

Nachiketa's question is a powerful expression of his yearning for the absolute, and it is an inspiration for all of you to seek that which is beyond the grasp of the mind. The truth of who you are is beyond words, beyond thoughts, beyond time. Turn inward, transcend all these limitations, and realize the truth that is beyond - all that is, is Paramaśiva, and you are that.

सर्वे वेदा यत्पदमामनन्ति तपाꣳसि सर्वाणि च यद्वदन्ति ।
यदिच्छन्तो ब्रह्मचर्यं चरन्ति तत्ते पदꣳसंग्रहेण ब्रवीम्योमित्येतत् ॥ १५॥
sarve vedā yatpadamāmananti tapāgsi sarvāṇi ca yadvadanti |
yadicchanto brahmacaryaṃ caranti tatte padagm saṃgraheṇa bravīmyomityetat ||15||

This verse describes the supreme goal towards which all paths converge. It says that sarve vedā yat padam āmananti - all the Vedas speak of that ultimate state or goal. The Vedas, which are the source of all knowledge, aim to guide you toward the realization of this highest state of existence, that eternal truth which lies beyond all illusions and limitations.

All penances, austerities, and tapas are performed for the attainment of this truth. Whether it is austerity of the body, speech, or mind, all these disciplines are meant to purify you and make you ready to realize the ultimate reality.

yad icchanto brahmacaryaṃ caranti - out of a deep desire to know this truth, seekers practice brahmacarya, which means living a life of discipline, purity, and dedication to the pursuit of knowledge. Brahmacharya is not just celibacy; it is a commitment to focus all your energy on seeking the truth. This practice helps the seeker transcend worldly distractions and become one-pointed, fully absorbed in realizing the Self.

tat te padaṃ saṃgraheṇa bravīmi - now, I shall tell you in essence what that supreme goal is. I am going to reveal it in a concise, direct way, without ambiguity.

om ity etat - it is 'Om'. The sacred syllable Om is the essence of the entire Hindu knowledge. It is the sound representation of the Supreme Reality, the ultimate state that all scriptures, all practices, and all seekers aim to realize. Om is not just a sound; it is the vibration that encompasses the entire cosmos. It is the primordial sound from which the whole universe emerged and into which everything will eventually dissolve.

एतद्ध्येवाक्षरं ब्रह्म एतद्ध्येवाक्षरं परम् ।
एतद्ध्येवाक्षरं ज्ञात्वा यो यदिच्छति तस्य तत् ॥ १६॥
etaddhyevākṣaraṃ brahma etaddhyevākṣaraṃ param |
etaddhyevākṣaraṃ jñātvā yo yadicchati tasya tat ||16||

This very syllable Om is Brahman, the Supreme Reality. The entirety of existence, the ultimate truth, is symbolized and encompassed in this single sound, Om. It is the expression of Brahman, which is formless, all-pervading, and beyond comprehension through ordinary senses and intellect.

Om is not only the symbol of Brahman but also represents the supreme state, the ultimate goal of all spiritual practice. There is nothing beyond Om, for it is both the beginning and the culmination of all things.

Knowing and realizing this sacred syllable Om is the key to attaining everything. When you truly understand and experience Om, you transcend all limitations. You recognize that you are one with the cosmic consciousness, that your true nature is the same as the Supreme Reality.

Whoever knows and realizes this syllable attains whatever they desire. This means that by realizing the essence of Om, you reach a state of oneness with the Divine, where all desires are automatically fulfilled. In that state, you no longer have the cravings that bind you to the material world; instead, you experience the completeness of existence, where all desires merge into the experience of Advaita or oneness.

एतदालम्बनँ श्रेष्ठमेतदालम्बनं परम् ।
एतदालम्बनं ज्ञात्वा ब्रह्मलोके महीयते ॥ १७॥ etadālambanam śreṣṭhametadālambanaṃ param
etadālambanaṃ jñātvā brahmaloke mahīyate ||17||

Om is the supreme support, the best foundation for your spiritual journey. The word ālambana means support, something to hold onto as you traverse the path of self-realization. Of all the symbols, practices, and supports available for meditation and contemplation, Om is considered the most exalted, the most effective.

Om is the highest support, the ultimate means of connecting with the divine. When you use Om as your support, you are directly connecting with the Supreme Reality. It takes you beyond the limitations of the body, mind, and senses, guiding you to the highest truth, which is Paramaśivaṃ.

By knowing and realizing this support, by holding onto Om with unwavering focus and devotion, you reach a state of profound realization. The true nature of Om is not just in chanting it but in deeply understanding and internalizing its essence as the very foundation of existence.

The one who knows this support and uses it as a means to attain realization is exalted in brahmaloka, the realm of brahman, the Supreme Reality. This means that such a person reaches the highest state of consciousness, the state of oneness with Brahman – Paramashivoham.

न जायते म्रियते वा विपश्चिन् नायं कुतश्चिन्न बभूव कश्चित् ।
अजो नित्यः शाश्वतोऽयं पुराणो न हन्यते हन्यमाने शरीरे ॥ १८॥
na jāyate mriyate vā vipaścin nāyaṃ kutaścinna babhūva kaścit |
ajo nityaḥ śāśvato'yaṃ purāṇo na hanyate hanyamāne śarīre ||18||

This verse proclaims the truth about the ātman, the Self. It says, na jāyate mriyate vā vipaścin—the wise one, the Self, is neither born nor does it die. The Self, your true nature, has no beginning and no end. It is not subject to birth, growth, decay, or death. It is beyond the cycle of creation and destruction that governs the physical world.

Nāyaṃ kutaścin na babhūva kaścit - the Self does not come from anything, nor does it become anything. It is not produced from something else, nor does it evolve into something else. It is eternally the same, unchanging, and self-existent.

Ajo nityaḥ śāśvato'yaṃ purāṇaḥ - the Self is ajaḥ, unborn, nityaḥ, eternal, śāśvataḥ, everlasting, and purāṇaḥ, ancient. It is beyond time, untouched by change or the passage of time. The word purāṇaḥ indicates that it is both the most ancient and yet ever fresh and new, beyond all temporal limitations.

Na hanyate hanyamāne śarīre - the Self is not killed when the body is killed. The destruction of the body does not affect the Self. It is beyond all physical limitations, untouched by the destruction of the body. The Self is like space - it cannot be cut, burnt, wet, or dried. It is subtler than the subtlest and greater than the greatest. The death of the physical body is only an event in the external world; it does not touch the Self, which is eternally pure consciousness.

हन्ता चेन्मन्यते हन्तुँ हतश्चेन्मन्यते हतम् । उभौ तौ न विजानीतो नायँ हन्ति न हन्यते ॥ १९॥
hantā cenmanyate hantuṁ hataścenmanyate hatam |
ubhau tau na vijānīto nāyaṁ hanti na hanyate ||19||

This verse says, hantā cen manyate hantum - if someone thinks that they are capable of killing, and hataś cen manyate hatam - or if someone thinks that they can be killed, ubhau tau na vijānīto - both of them are ignorant; they do not know the truth.

The verse reveals that nāyaṃ hanti na hanyate - the Self neither kills nor is killed. The true Self, the ātman, is beyond the concepts of doership and experience as we understand them. It is not subject to the acts of killing or being killed. The one who thinks they can kill and the one who thinks they can be killed are both unaware of the true nature of the Self.

The ātman is eternal and changeless, untouched by the actions and events that take place in the physical world. It is Paramaśivaṃ, pure consciousness, and is beyond any form of violence or destruction. The idea of killing or being killed arises only in relation to the physical body, which is bound by time, space, and causation. However, the Self is beyond the body, beyond all dualities and beyond the limitations of action and reaction.

This verse emphasizes the ultimate truth that the Self, which is the real "I," cannot be destroyed, harmed, or affected by any physical or external force. The body can be destroyed, but the Self remains untouched. The physical plane is subject to change and decay, but the Self is ever-present, imperishable, and unaffected by all these changes.

अणोरणीयान्महतो महीयानात्माऽस्य जन्तोर्निहितो गुहायाम् ।
तमक्रतुः पश्यति वीतशोको धातुप्रसादान्महिमानमात्मनः ॥ २०॥
aṇoraṇīyānmahato mahīyānātmā'sya jantornihito guhāyām |
tamakratuḥ paśyati vītaśoko dhātuprasādānmahimānamātmanaḥ ||20||

This verse speaks of the ātman, the true Self, as aṇor aṇīyān mahato mahīyān - subtler than the subtlest and greater than the greatest. The Self, your true nature, transcends all limitations of size, space, and form. It is beyond all perceptions and beyond all quantifiable measures. It is both the most minute and the vastest, all-encompassing reality.

The verse says that this ātman is nihito guhāyām - hidden in the cave of the heart of every living being. The guhā is not just the physical heart; it refers to the deepest core of your consciousness. It is that sacred space within you where the unchanging, eternal Paramaśivaṃ resides.

To realize this Self, one must be akratuḥ - free from desires and distractions - in the space of unclutching. Unclutching is the eternal ultimate space and technique of witnessing the constant stream of thoughts, emotions, and desires. When you stop clinging to the mind, to its unending chatter, you become free from the bondage of the mind and see the truth of who you are. Only when you unclutch can you become akratuḥ - calm, pure, and ready to perceive the Self.

The verse continues, tam akratuḥ paśyati vītaśokaḥ - such a person, free from desires, with a purified mind, can see the Self, and in seeing it, they become vītaśokaḥ, free from all sorrows. All suffering arises because you identify with the mind, the body, and the world. When you realize that you are the unchanging, indestructible ātman, all these sorrows fall away. The practice of unclutching brings you to this space of clarity where you see that you are untouched by anything of the external world.

Dhātuprasādān mahimānam ātmanaḥ - through the purification of the mind and body, through the grace of the elements (dhātuprasāda), one comes to realize the magnificence of the Self. When your inner space is purified, the truth of the ātman shines forth in its full glory. This grace is not something that comes from outside; it is experienced when you begin to drop attachments and realize the essence of your being.

आसीनो दूरं व्रजति शयानो याति सर्वतः ।
कस्तं मदामदं देवं मदन्यो ज्ञातुमर्हति ॥ २१॥
āsīno dūraṃ vrajati śayāno yāti sarvataḥ |
kastaṃ madāmadaṃ devaṃ madanyo jñātumarhati ||21||

The verse describes the Self as āsīnaḥ dūraṃ vrajati - sitting still, yet it travels far. Even while it appears to be unmoving, it pervades the entire cosmos. It means that although the Self does not physically move, it is present everywhere, and its awareness transcends all distances. It is Paramaśivaṃ, the consciousness that is all-pervasive.

Who else but Me, who is beyond pride and delusion, can know this divine being? The ātman is described as madāmadaṃ - free from pride, free from any sense of doership, unaffected by the ego or identification with the physical body and mind. The divine Self is untainted by the ego and free from all forms of delusion.

This verse points to the subtle nature of the Self. It is beyond movement and stillness, beyond all dualities that the human mind can comprehend. To truly know the Self, one must go beyond the mind, beyond pride, beyond the illusion of individuality, which is possible in the space of unclutching.

अशरीरँ शरीरेष्वनवस्थेष्ववस्थितम् ।
महान्तं विभुमात्मानं मत्वा धीरो न शोचति ॥ २२॥
aśarīram śarīreṣvanavastheṣvavasthitam |
mahāntaṃ vibhumātmānaṃ matvā dhīro na śocati ||22||

This verse further talks about the qualities of the Ultimate. The Self is bodiless among bodies. The ātman is not limited by the physical body; it exists beyond it. It is the consciousness that is present within all bodies, yet it is aśarīra, without a body itself.

The Self is stable even among the unstable. It remains unchanging and steady, beyond all fluctuations. It is the only constant in an ever-changing world. It witnesses the impermanent play of existence, yet it remains unmoved, unaffected.

Realizing the Self as vast (mahāntaṃ) and all-pervading (vibhu), one becomes free from all sorrows. The Self is infinite, immense, and all-pervasive. When a wise one, a dhīra, realizes this truth, they recognize and experience the reality of the limitless consciousness that pervades everything.

Dhīro na śocati - such a realized being, a dhīra, does not grieve. Grief arises from attachment and identification with the impermanent - body, mind, relationships, and worldly possessions. But the one who identifies with the ātman is no longer touched by sorrow and in Oneness with the Pure Consciousness.

नायमात्मा प्रवचनेन लभ्यो न मेधया न बहुना श्रुतेन ।
यमेवैष वृणुते तेन लभ्यः तस्यैष आत्मा विवृणुते तनूꣳस्वाम् ॥ २३॥
nāyamātmā pravacanena labhyo na medhayā na bahunā śrutena |
yamevaiṣa vṛṇute tena labhyaḥ tasyaiṣa ātmā vivṛṇute tanūg svām ||23||

The Self can neither be attained through mere discourse or speeches nor can it be attained by mere intellect (medhā) or by hearing many scriptures (bahunā śrutena). The Self cannot be grasped by an analytical mind or by accumulating a lot of theoretical knowledge. Even if you study many scriptures or use intellectual prowess, the realization of the Self will not happen unless there is an experiential understanding.

Yamevaiṣa vṛṇute tena labhyaḥ - the Self reveals itself only to the one whom it chooses. This is a beautiful and subtle truth. The ātman is not something to be conquered or controlled; it is realized only through pure, intense ferocious seeking. That is when the formless Ultimate manifests in your life as the Guru in form, as Paramashivā as the avatār, sachala mūrti. When you are ready to drop the ego and merge into the oneness of Paramaśivaṃ, the Self reveals itself. The grace of the Self is essential for this realization, and it comes to those who are willing to surrender completely.

नाविरतो दुश्चरितान्नाशान्तो नासमाहितः ।
नाशान्तमानसो वाऽपि प्रज्ञानेनैनमाप्नुयात् ॥ २४॥ nāvirato duścaritānnāśānto nāsamāhitaḥ |
nāśāntamānaso vā'pi prajñānenainamāpnuyāt ||24||

This verse describes what are the qualities of the mind that show you are moving away form realizing the Ultimate. One who is not established in the space of unclutching, samādhi cannot experience the Ultimate.

The state of bliss, the space of unclutching is necessary to realize Paramaśivā.

Prajñānenainam āpnuyāt - it is through wisdom that the Self is attained. This wisdom is not just intellectual knowledge; it is the direct realization that arises by the grace of the guru, Paramaśiva, when one experiences Oneness with the Supreme Super Consciousness, Paramaśivā.

यस्य ब्रह्म च क्षत्रं च उभे भवत ओदनः ।
मृत्युर्यस्योपसेचनं क इत्था वेद यत्र सः ॥ २५॥
इति काठकोपनिषदि प्रथमाध्याये द्वितीया वल्ली ॥
yasya brahma ca kṣatraṃ ca ubhe bhavata odanaḥ |
mṛtyuryasyopasecanaṃ ka itthā veda yatra saḥ ||25||
|| iti kāṭhakopaniṣadi prathamādhyāye dvitīyā vallī ||

This verse describes the state of an enlightened being who has realized the ultimate truth - for whom both brahma (the knowledge, the priestly class) and kṣatra (the warrior class, the power) become like food. The metaphor here is that for the one who has realized the Self, all these distinctions of power, authority, and knowledge are as insignificant as a meal. The enlightened being is beyond all dualities and labels; they see everything as part of the same oneness and are unaffected by social classifications and hierarchies.

Mṛtyur yasyopasecanaṃ - for whom death itself becomes like a condiment. This powerful imagery means that even death has no significance to such a being. They treat even the idea of death as something ordinary, as a side dish to the main meal. The enlightened one sees death as just another part of existence, neither fearing it nor resisting it. They understand that death is simply a transition and that the true Self, Paramaśivaṃ, is beyond birth and death.

An enlightened being lives in this state of pure freedom, where everything - including power, knowledge, and even death - is seen as is beyond emotions. Such a being is beyond the grasp of ordinary understanding because they are established in the infinite consciousness of Paramaśivaṃ. They are beyond space and time, beyond concepts, and abide in the eternal bliss of oneness.

Thus ends the Chapter 1 2nd Canto of the Kaṭhopaniṣad.

Now the Chapter 2 1st Canto of the Kaṭhopaniṣad.

ऋतं पिबन्तौ सुकृतस्य लोके गुहां प्रविष्टौ परमे परार्धे ।
छायातपौ ब्रह्मविदो वदन्ति पञ्चाग्नयो ये च त्रिणाचिकेताः ॥ १॥
ṛtaṃ pibantau sukṛtasya loke guhāṃ praviṣṭau parame parārdhe |
chāyātapau brahmavido vadanti pañcāgnayo ye ca triṇāciketāḥ ||1||

The verse speaks of two beings drinking the essence of truth in the world of good deeds. The word ṛta represents the cosmic truth, the divine order, and the fundamental essence of existence. These two beings are partaking in the eternal truth in a space that is filled with positive karma, accumulated through righteous actions (sukṛta). This place is where the enlightened reside, experiencing the divine order and truth as a living reality.

The two beings are described as having entered the innermost cave (guhā), the deepest part of existence, which is the supreme and transcendent realm (parame parārdhe). The cave here is symbolic of the deepest core of our being, Ananda Gandha. To enter the cave is to go inward, to delve into the depths of the Self and realize the essence of who we are. It is in this innermost space that the ultimate realization takes place, where the seeker discovers the truth of Supreme Consciousness.

Those who know Brahman, the knowers of the ultimate reality, speak of these two as being like shadow and light (chāyā and tapa). The two aspects are the individual soul (jīvātman) and the supreme soul (Paramātman). Just as shadow and light coexist, the individual soul and the Supreme exist together in the innermost core of being. The realized ones understand that the shadow is nothing but an expression of the light, and ultimately, the individual soul is an expression of the supreme consciousness.

Those who have understood the concept of the five fires (pañcāgnayo) and those who have performed the triṇāciketa sacrifice which refers to the threefold wisdom imparted by Yama to Naciketa, comprehend the supreme truth and realize the Oneness of the Cosmos.

यः सेतुरीजानानामक्षरं ब्रह्म यत् परम् । अभयं तितीर्षतां पारं नाचिकेतँ शकेमहि ॥ २॥ yaḥ seturījānānāmakṣaraṃ brahma yat param |
abhayaṃ titīrṣatāṃ pāraṃ nāciketam̐ śakemahi ||2||

Brahman is the setu, the bridge, for all beings, especially those who are engaged in ritualistic actions or worship (ījānānām). Brahman is the imperishable (akṣaraṃ), the supreme reality beyond all change and beyond all that is perishable in this world. Brahman, as the bridge, is the link that helps seekers transcend the boundaries of ignorance, illusion, and ego. It is the ultimate support that allows one to reach the supreme truth.

For those who wish to cross beyond the ocean of fear, Brahman is the state of absolute fearlessness (abhayaṃ). The journey toward realizing Brahman is often described as crossing an ocean. It is a path that takes one beyond all the fears and attachments of worldly existence. Abhaya, fearlessness, is the state of realizing the oneness of all existence, where there is no other, and hence no cause for fear. Those who are willing to embark on this journey of crossing the ocean of illusion and fear find Brahman as the ultimate support and refuge.

Naciketa represents the authentic pure seeker, one who is willing to go beyond the transient pleasures of the world to seek the eternal truth. The realization of Brahman is the fruit of this intense pure seeking.

आत्मानँ रथितं विद्धि शरीरँ रथमेव तु ।
बुद्धिं तु सारथिं विद्धि मनः प्रग्रहमेव च ॥ ३॥
ātmānam̐ rathitaṃ viddhi śarīram̐ rathameva tu |
buddhiṃ tu sārathiṃ viddhi manaḥ pragrahameva ca ||3||

Here, the Upaniṣad describes the Self as the One who rides in the chariot of life. The Ātmā is your true essence, your pure consciousness, and it is distinct from the body and mind. The Self is the ultimate observer, the witness, and it is this consciousness that journeys through life, experiencing the world.

The body is like a chariot. The physical body, which we often mistakenly identify as our true self, is merely a vehicle. Just as a chariot is a means for transportation, the body is a tool through which the Self experiences the physical world.

Know the intellect (buddhi) to be the charioteer. The Upaniṣad gives the role of the charioteer to the intellect, which has the capacity to discern, judge, and make decisions. The buddhi is the guiding force that directs the chariot (body) and determines the course of action. It is through the power of the intellect that you can navigate the journey of life and make decisions that lead you towards the supreme truth.

Know the mind to be the reins. The mind (manas) functions like the reins that the charioteer holds to control the direction of the chariot. The mind is responsible for controlling the senses, much like how reins control the horses. The mind is the intermediary between the intellect and the senses, receiving inputs from the senses and responding based on the guidance of the intellect.

In this analogy, the Self is the rider, the body is the chariot, the intellect is the charioteer, and the mind serves as the reins that direct the senses. The horses of the chariot are the senses, which are drawn towards the external world, and it is the responsibility of the charioteer (intellect) to use the reins (mind) to properly guide the horses and keep them under control.

इन्द्रियाणि हयानाहुर्विषयाँ स्तेषु गोचरान् ।
आत्मेन्द्रियमनोयुक्तं भोक्तेत्याहुर्मनीषिणः ॥ ४॥ indriyāṇi hayānāhurviṣayām̐ steṣu gocarān |
ātmendriyamanoyuktaṃ bhoktetyāhurmanīṣiṇaḥ ||4||

The senses are called the horses. The Upaniṣad describes the senses as horses that pull the chariot (body). These horses represent the five senses - sight, hearing, touch, taste, and smell - which are constantly drawn towards the external world and are naturally inclined to run after sense pleasures.

The objects of the senses are their paths, their fields of activity. The word viṣayān refers to the objects of the senses - the things in the world that attract the attention of the senses. The senses are like horses running after these objects, which are their fields or pastures (gocarān). Without control, the senses run freely towards whatever attracts them, leading the mind away from inner stillness and truth.

The Self, joined with the body, senses, and mind, is called the experiencer (bhoktā), say the wise. The Upaniṣad teaches that when the Self is connected with the mind, senses, and body, it becomes the experiencer, the one who goes through the joys and sorrows of worldly life. The wise ones (manīṣiṇaḥ) understand that it is this combination of the Self, senses, mind, and body that creates the experience of life.

However, the Self itself is beyond experience - it is the pure consciousness, the witness.

यस्त्वविज्ञानवान्भवत्ययुक्तेन मनसा सदा ।
तस्येन्द्रियाण्यवश्यानि दुष्टाश्वा इव सारथेः ॥ ५॥ yastvavijñānavānbhavatyayuktena manasā sadā |
tasyendriyāṇyavaśyāni duṣṭāśvā iva sāratheḥ ||5||

The Upaniṣad describes an individual who does not have the proper knowledge or wisdom (avijñānavān). Such a person is unable to discern the true nature of the Self and remains caught up in the illusions of the mind and the senses.

When the mind is not yukta - not disciplined or aligned with the truth - it becomes restless and easily distracted. Such a mind is constantly influenced by the desires and attractions of the senses, leading one away from the realization of the Supreme.

The uncontrolled mind leads to uncontrolled senses, just like unruly horses that do not follow their charioteer. The senses become avaśyāni, meaning they are not under control; they take the individual wherever they wish, running after worldly pleasures and external distractions.

The Upaniṣad uses the analogy of unruly horses (duṣṭāśvā) that are not obedient to the charioteer. When a charioteer lacks the skill to control the horses, they go in all directions, putting the chariot and rider in danger. Similarly, when the mind and senses are not disciplined, they lead the individual into suffering and confusion, taking them far from the path of realization.

Practice unclutching to quiet the restless mind, to detach from the fleeting pleasures of the senses, and to cultivate inner discipline. Let your intellect take charge, guiding your senses and mind towards the realization of the supreme truth. In that mastery, experience the bliss of oneness, the unchanging reality of Paramaśivoham, beyond all distractions and limitations.

यस्तु विज्ञानवान्भवति युक्तेन मनसा सदा । तस्येन्द्रियाणि वश्यानि सदश्वा इव सारथेः ॥ ६॥ yastu vijñānavānbhavati yuktena manasā sadā |
tasyendriyāṇi vaśyāni sadaśvā iva sāratheḥ ||6||

This verse speaks of the individual who has vijñāna, which means knowledge combined with direct experience. Such a person has the discernment to understand the difference between the transient and the eternal, between the unreal and the real. They are guided by wisdom that leads them towards the ultimate realization of the Self.

When the mind is in a state of harmony, properly aligned, and connected to the highest truth, the senses of such a person are under control. The Upaniṣad teaches that when the mind is disciplined and guided by wisdom, the senses naturally come under control (vaśyāni). The senses are no longer restless or drawn toward fleeting pleasures. Instead, they are directed by the inner wisdom of the Self, allowing the individual to stay focused on the path to self-realization.

The senses are compared to well-trained horses (sadaśvā) that obey the guidance of the charioteer. Just as a skilled charioteer can easily direct well-trained horses to move steadily on the path, a wise and disciplined individual can control their senses to ensure they stay aligned with the highest goal.

यस्त्वविज्ञानवान्भवत्यमनस्कः सदाऽशुचिः । न स तत्पदमाप्नोति संसारं चाधिगच्छति ॥ ७॥ yastvavijñānavānbhavatyamanaskaḥ sadā'śuciḥ |
na sa tatpadamāpnoti saṃsāraṃ cādhigacchati ||7||

One who does not possess the right knowledge or understanding remains ignorant of the true nature of the Self, caught up in the illusions of the material world. Without wisdom, the individual continues to identifzy with the body, mind, and senses, and remains bound by the limitations of the ego.

A restless mind, filled with desires and attachments, leads to impurities that keep one away from the realization of the supreme truth. Such a person cannot attain the stillness required to perceive the deeper reality of the Truth.

A person with an unsteady mind and impure thoughts cannot reach the supreme state of realization, tat padam - the state of oneness with Brahman, the supreme consciousness. The mind, when filled with ignorance and attachments, becomes a barrier that prevents the individual from experiencing the truth of the Self.

Such a person falls into the cycle of birth and death, known as saṃsāra. The restless, indisciplined mind keeps one trapped in saṃsāra, the endless cycle of births and deaths, bound by karma and the consequences of actions. Without wisdom and discipline, the individual remains entangled in the dualities of pleasure and pain, unable to break free and realize the eternal truth.

यस्तु विज्ञानवान्भवति समनस्कः सदा शुचिः ।

yastu vijñānavānbhavati samanaskaḥ sadā śuciḥ |
sa tu tatpadamāpnoti yasmādbhūyo na jāyate ||8||

An individual who is vijñānavān, meaning one who possesses true knowledge combined with direct experience, has realized the ultimate truth of Paramaśivaṃ and understands the difference between the transient and the eternal. This wisdom is not just intellectual but is deeply rooted in direct experience of the Self.

One whose mind is steady, disciplined, and focused, who has mastered the mind and brought it into a state of harmony, no longer allowing it to be distracted by fleeting desires, being always pure both in thought and action, is essential for the realization of the Ultimate.

विज्ञानसारथिर्यस्तु मनः प्रग्रहवान्नरः ।

vijñānasārathiryastu manaḥ pragrahavānnaraḥ |

so'dhvanaḥ pāramāpnoti tadviṣṇoḥ paramaṃ padam ||9||

One who has wisdom as the charioteer of his life uses discernment, understanding, and insight to navigate through life. This wisdom helps distinguish between the real and the unreal, between what leads to liberation and what binds to the cycle of saṃsāra.

One who has control over the mind as the reins can direct the senses properly, just like how the reins guide the horses. The individual who has mastered the mind is not swayed by fleeting desires or distractions but keeps their focus on the ultimate goal - realizing the Self.

The Upaniṣad teaches that the individual who is guided by wisdom and has control over the mind successfully completes the journey of life, reaching the ultimate destination. This journey is not merely physical but is a journey from ignorance to knowledge, from bondage to liberation. By having wisdom as the guide and a disciplined mind, the seeker crosses over all obstacles and reaches the state of ultimate realization.

The Upaniṣad here refers to the supreme state as the abode of Viṣṇu, which represents the state of all-pervading consciousness. This is a reference to Brahman, the supreme consciousness that is omnipresent and eternal. The paramaṃ padam is the highest state of realization, the state of oneness with the supreme consciousness, where the individual soul merges into the infinite, experiencing the bliss of Paramaśivaṃ.

इन्द्रियेभ्यः परा ह्यर्था अर्थेभ्यश्च परं मनः ।
मनसस्तु परा बुद्धिर्बुद्धेरात्मा महान्परः ॥ १०॥
indriyebhyaḥ parā hyarthā arthebhyaśca paraṃ manaḥ |
manasastu parā buddhirbuddherātmā mahānparaḥ ||10||

The objects of the senses (arthāḥ) are higher than the senses. The verse begins by pointing out that the sense objects, such as sound, sight, touch, taste, and smell, are considered superior to the senses themselves. The senses (like eyes, ears, and nose) are merely tools through which we experience the external world, but it is the sense objects that they seek which give meaning and purpose to their function. Therefore, the objects are one step higher in the hierarchy of experience.

Higher than the sense objects is the mind (manaḥ). The mind is higher because it is the mind that perceives, interprets, and gives meaning to the sense objects. The mind serves as the processor of all the sensory information, forming perceptions, emotions, and thoughts based on what the senses convey. Without the mind's ability to integrate sensory input, the sense objects would hold no experience.

Higher than the mind is the intellect (buddhiḥ). The buddhi is superior to the mind because it is the seat of discernment, judgment, and understanding. While the mind is swayed by emotions, desires, and sensory inputs, the intellect has the power to discriminate between what is real and what is unreal, what is beneficial and what is harmful. The buddhi can guide the mind, control its tendencies, and lead the individual toward higher truth. Therefore, it is higher in the hierarchy of one's inner being.

Higher than the intellect is the mahān ātmā, often referred to as the "great Self" or the mahat, the cosmic intelligence. The mahat represents the universal consciousness, the cosmic intelligence from which the individual intellect derives its power. It is the macrocosmic intelligence that is beyond the limited understanding of the individual intellect. The mahat is closer to the essence of the Self, and it is through connecting to this cosmic intelligence that one can begin to perceive the true nature of the Self.

महतः परमव्यक्तमव्यक्तात्पुरुषः परः ।
पुरुषान्न परं किंचित्सा काष्ठा सा परा गतिः ॥ ११॥ mahataḥ paramavyaktamavyaktātpuruṣaḥ paraḥ |
puruṣānna paraṃ kiṃcitsā kāṣṭhā sā parā gatiḥ ||11||

Higher than the cosmic intelligence (mahat) is the unmanifest (avyaktam). The verse teaches that beyond the mahat - the great cosmic intelligence, which encompasses all creation and represents the universal aspect of intellect - there exists something even more subtle: the avyakta, the unmanifest. The avyakta is the state where all of creation lies in a potential form, not yet differentiated into the multitude of forms that we see. It is the undifferentiated, formless state of existence that holds the potential for all that is manifest.

Beyond the unmanifest is the Puruṣa, the supreme consciousness. The Puruṣa is higher than the avyakta, and it is the pure consciousness, the ultimate reality that transcends all manifestation, both gross and subtle. The Puruṣa is the supreme Self that is beyond all forms, beyond all differentiations, and beyond even the potentiality of creation. It is the source of everything - unchanging, eternal, and beyond the limitations of the manifest and unmanifest.

There is nothing higher than the Puruṣa. The Puruṣa, the supreme consciousness, is the ultimate reality. There is nothing beyond this state. It is the highest, the final truth, and there is no further level of existence that one can reach.

Puruṣa as the ultimate limit (kāṣṭhā) and the supreme destination (parā gatiḥ) of all spiritual seeking. It is the goal of every seeker, the state of complete liberation where one realizes their true nature as the infinite, the unchanging, the pure consciousness. Once this state is reached, there is no further journey, no higher reality to be attained - this is the state of eternal bliss and oneness.

एष सर्वेषु भूतेषु गूढोऽऽत्मा न प्रकाशते ।
दृश्यते त्वग्र्यया बुद्ध्या सूक्ष्मया सूक्ष्मदर्शिभिः ॥ १२॥
eṣa sarveṣu bhūteṣu gūḍho'tmā na prakāśate |
dṛśyate tvagryayā buddhyā sūkṣmayā sūkṣmadarśibhiḥ ||12||

This Self (Ātmā) is hidden in all beings and does not reveal itself. It is the very essence of every being, but due to ignorance, distractions, and identifications, the Ātmā does not reveal itself to the ordinary mind. It remains hidden behind the coverings of thoughts, desires, and worldly attachments.

This Self can be perceived by the refined intellect (agryayā buddhyā). The word agrya means sharp, subtle, or refined. It refers to an intellect that is free from distractions, purified through discipline and self-inquiry. Only such an intellect, focused and discriminative, is capable of perceiving the subtle presence of the Ātmā. It requires a deep sense of clarity, stillness, and focus to go beyond the layers of the mind and recognize the true Self.

The Self is of the most subtle nature, beyond all gross manifestations and beyond the comprehension of the senses. Only Those who have cultivated the ability to perceive the subtle can see it. Such seekers are called sūkṣma-darśibhiḥ - those who see with subtle insight. They are able to look beyond the surface, beyond the gross body, mind, and senses, to perceive the infinite consciousness that resides within.

यच्छेद्वाङ्मनसी प्राज्ञस्तद्यच्छेज्ज्ञान आत्मनि ।
ज्ञानमात्मनि महति नियच्छेत्तद्यच्छेच्छान्त आत्मनि ॥ १३॥
yacchedvāṅmanasī prājñastadyacchejjñāna ātmani |
jñānamātmani mahati niyacchettadyacchecchānta ātmani ||13||

A wise person should merge speech into the mind. The seeker should merge the power of speech (vāṅ) into the mind (manas). Speech arises from thoughts, and words are the expressions of the mind's activity. The wise one, the seeker of truth, must silence external expressions and direct all energy inward, turning the attention away from the outer world to concentrate on the inner journey. By doing so, you bring the scattered energy of speech and the mind into focus, enabling the mind to become calm and quiet.

One should merge the mind into knowledge, or the higher intellect. The next step is to merge the mind (manas) into the higher knowledge or the intellect (jñāna or buddhi). The mind is full of distractions, desires, and restless thoughts, while the intellect is capable of discriminating and guiding the mind towards truth. By surrendering the mind to the discerning power of the intellect, one brings clarity and focus, reducing the disturbances and gaining a deeper understanding of reality.

One should merge the intellect into the great Self (mahān ātmā). Beyond the intellect lies the mahān ātmā, which refers to the great cosmic intelligence, the universal Self that is beyond individual limitations. The seeker must transcend even the intellect, moving beyond analysis and reasoning, and merge into the mahān ātmā. It is the state where individual knowledge dissolves into the universal, where one moves beyond the limitations of personal identity to experience a greater sense of being.

The final step is to merge the mahān ātmā into the śānta ātmā, the ultimate Self - the supreme, peaceful consciousness. Śānta means peaceful, still, tranquil. This is the state where all dualities dissolve, and one experiences pure awareness, the eternal and infinite consciousness. It is the state of bliss of Oneness.

उत्तिष्ठत जाग्रत प्राप्य वरान्निबोधत ।
क्षुरस्य धारा निशिता दुरत्यया दुर्गं पथस्तत्कवयो वदन्ति ॥ १४॥
uttiṣṭhata jāgrata prāpya varānnibodhata |
kṣurasya dhārā niśitā duratyayā durgaṃ pathastatkavayo vadanti ||14||

Arise, awake. The verse begins with a powerful call to action: Uttiṣṭhata (arise) and jāgrata (awake). This is a call to every one of you to awaken from the slumber of ignorance, to rise from the illusions and distractions of worldly existence, and to become aware of your true purpose. It is a wake-up call to recognize that life is not just about mundane pursuits; it is an opportunity for spiritual growth and the realization of the Self.

Seek the guidance of realized masters - varān (great ones) - and learn from them. A guru can guide you on this journey, providing you with the knowledge, practices, and wisdom needed to overcome obstacles and realize the ultimate truth. The word nibodhata means to understand or realize. It is not merely about intellectual learning; it is about deep, experiential realization. Seek the guidance of those who have already walked the path and attained the truth, and learn from them to awaken to your own inner reality.

The Upaniṣad describes the spiritual path as being like a razor's edge - kṣurasya dhārā. It is subtle, sharp, and requires precision. Just as it is challenging to walk on the sharp edge of a razor, the path to self-realization is not easy. It demands complete focus, discipline, and dedication. It requires you to let go of attachments, desires, and distractions, and to maintain unwavering commitment to the truth. The journey is challenging, but it is also the most rewarding, as it leads to the realization of the Self.

The wise ones, kavayaḥ, those who have walked the path and realized the truth, have said that this journey is indeed difficult - durgaṃ. It is a challenging path because it requires you to face your own ego, to let go of all identifications, and to transcend the limitations of the body, mind, and intellect. The journey requires you to navigate the obstacles of desire, fear, and ignorance, and to stay steadfast in your pursuit of truth. The wise ones understand the difficulties involved, but they also understand the immense joy and bliss that come from realizing the Self.

अशब्दमस्पर्शमरूपमव्ययं तथाऽरसं नित्यमगन्धवच्च यत् ।
अनाद्यनन्तं महतः परं ध्रुवं निचाय्य तन्मृत्युमुखात् प्रमुच्यते ॥ १५॥
aśabdam asparśam arūpamavyayaṃ tathā'rasaṃ nityamagandhavacca yat |
anādyanantaṃ mahataḥ paraṃ dhruvaṃ nicāyya tanmṛtyumukhāt pramucyate ||15||

The Self is aśabdam (without sound), asparśam (without touch), arūpam (without form), and avyayam (imperishable). The Self is beyond all sensory attributes - it cannot be heard, touched, or seen, and it is beyond any form that can be perceived by the senses. It is not limited by the impermanence of the physical world; it is beyond all forms and beyond all qualities. The Self is the eternal, formless reality that underlies all existence.

The Self is also described as arasaṃ (without taste), agandhavac (without smell), and nityam (eternal). It is beyond the grasp of all the senses - it cannot be tasted or smelled, and it is not subject to change or decay. The Self is eternal, unchanging, and beyond the limitations of the sensory world. It is not something that can be perceived by the senses; it is the very essence that is beyond all sensory experience.

The Self is anādi (without beginning) and anantaṃ (without end). It is beyond time - it has no beginning and no end. It is mahataḥ paraṃ (greater than the great) - it transcends even the cosmic intelligence, the mahat, and is the ultimate reality. It is dhruvam (eternal), unchanging, and steady. The Self is beyond all concepts of beginning and end, beyond all that is limited, and is the highest, unchanging reality.

The one who realizes this truth about the Self is freed from mṛtyu-mukha - the jaws of death. Mṛtyu represents the cycle of birth and death, the bondage of saṃsāra that keeps beings trapped in suffering. When one realizes the true nature of the Self as eternal, formless, and beyond all limitations, they transcend death and attain liberation. They are no longer subject to the cycle of birth and rebirth, as they have realized the true nature of Oneness.

नाचिकेतमुपाख्यानं मृत्युप्रोक्तँ सनातनम् ।
उक्त्वा श्रुत्वा च मेधावी ब्रह्मलोके महीयते ॥ १६॥ nāciketamupākhyānaṃ mṛtyuproktaṁ sanātanam |
uktvā śrutvā ca medhāvī brahmaloke mahīyate ||16||

The teachings that Yama, the lord of death, are imparted to the young seeker Naciketa. The word upākhyānaṃ means narrative or story, and the story of Naciketa is not merely a tale but it is a source of profound wisdom that reveals the eternal truths of life, death, and the Self. The teachings given by Yama are sanātanam, meaning they are timeless and eternal. These teachings transcend all limitations of time and space, as they reveal the nature of the Self, the ultimate reality, which is beyond birth and death.

Both the one who teaches and the one who listens to these eternal truths are medhāvī, meaning wise or intelligent. The knowledge contained in the teachings is transformative, and it benefits both the teacher and the student. To share this knowledge with others, or to listen to it with an open heart and mind, is an act of great wisdom. It is not merely about the exchange of words but it is about the transmission of truth that awakens the seeker to their true nature.

Those who share, teach, and understand these teachings attain greatness in the realm of Brahman, the supreme reality. The phrase Brahmaloke refers to the state of oneness with the supreme consciousness. The one who teaches and the one who understands these teachings are exalted and honored in the ultimate sense - they attain liberation and reside in the state of eternal bliss and oneness with the divine. This is not merely a physical place; it is the state of consciousness where one experiences the infinite, unchanging truth of the Self.

य इमं परमं गुह्यं श्रावयेद् ब्रह्मसंसदि ।
प्रयतः श्राद्धकाले वा तदानन्त्याय कल्पते ।
तदानन्त्याय कल्पत इति ॥ १७॥
इति काठकोपनिषदि प्रथमाध्याये तृतीया वल्ली ॥
ya imaṃ paramaṃ guhyaṃ śrāvayed brahmasaṃsadi |
prayataḥ śrāddhakāle vā tadānantyāya kalpate |
tadānantyāya kalpata iti ||17||
|| iti kāṭhakopaniṣadi prathamādhyāye tṛtīyā vallī ||

The one who shares or recites these teachings in a gathering of spiritual seekers, brahmasaṃsadi, performs a sacred act. To speak of the supreme truth in the company of those who are devoted to seeking Brahman is to transmit the light of wisdom to others, inspiring and uplifting all who hear it.

This teaching can be shared either with devotion (prayataḥ), implying a state of purity, sincerity, and dedication, or at a sacred time, such as during a śrāddha ceremony (ritual conducted to honor one's ancestors).

Sharing this supreme secret leads to anantya, meaning eternity or liberation. Sharing this knowledge definitely leads to liberation. It is an affirmation that those who are dedicated to spreading the truth, to helping others awaken to their divine nature, will surely attain the supreme state of oneness with the eternal consciousness.

Now Part 2 Canto 1

पराञ्चि खानि व्यतृणत् स्वयम्भूस्तस्मात्पराङ्पश्यति नान्तरात्मन् ।
कश्चिद्धीरः प्रत्यगात्मानमैक्षदावृत्तचक्षुरमृतत्वमिच्छन् ॥ १॥
parāñci khāni vyatṛṇat svayambhūstasmātparāṅpaśyati nāntarātman |
kaściddhīraḥ pratyagātmānamaikṣa dāvṛttacakṣuramṛtatvamicchan ||1||

Svayambhūḥ, the Self-existent Creator, has designed the senses in such a way that they move outward. Parāñci means facing outward, and khāni refers to the senses - eyes, ears, nose, tongue, and skin - which naturally reach out towards the external world. The senses are directed outward to help us perceive and interact with the physical world. This outward movement keeps our attention engaged with sensory experiences, drawing us away from the inner reality.

The natural outward tendency of the senses makes people look only at the external world, parāṅ paśyati, and they fail to perceive the inner Self, antarātman. The senses constantly seek stimuli from the outside, and the mind becomes absorbed in the distractions of the world.

Kaścid dhīraḥ, meaning the rare wise one who possesses courage, determination and wisdom is able to turn the attention inward, pratyagātmānam aikṣata, to perceive the inner Self. It requires immense courage and determination to turn away from the distractions of the external world, to withdraw from sensory attachments, and to focus on the inner reality. It is this rare and courageous seeker who ultimately realizes the truth of the Self, the eternal consciousness.

This wise person turns the gaze inward, āvṛttacakṣuḥ, desiring amṛtatvam or immortality. The seeker who looks within understands that true fulfillment and immortality do not lie in the transient, ever-changing world of sensory experiences. Instead, they lie in the realization of the inner Self, which is beyond birth, death, and change. By turning inward and perceiving the Self, one attains amṛtatvam, the state of immortality and eternal bliss.

पराचः कामाननुयन्ति बालास्ते मृत्योर्यन्ति विततस्य पाशम् ।
अथ धीरा अमृतत्वं विदित्वा ध्रुवमध्रुवेष्विह न प्रार्थयन्ते ॥ २॥
parācaḥ kāmānanuyanti bālāste mṛtyoryanti vitatasya pāśam |

atha dhīrā amṛtatvaṃ viditvā dhruvamadhruveṣviha na prārthayante ||2||

The bālāḥ, the ignorant ones, chase after kāmān, or desires, that are directed outward (parācaḥ). These people are like children, naive and unaware of the deeper reality that lies within them. They become absorbed in the pursuit of sensory pleasures and material possessions, believing that these will bring them happiness. However, the external world is filled with transient experiences, and running after these desires only leads to attachment and suffering.

Those who chase outward desires are caught in the pāśa, the net of mṛtyu, meaning death. The net of death represents the cycle of saṃsāra, the continuous cycle of birth, death, and rebirth. Those who are attached to the external world, running after fleeting pleasures, remain trapped in this cycle, unable to realize the true Self. They become bound by karma, leading them from one life to another, without ever experiencing true freedom or liberation.

The dhīrāḥ, the wise ones, understand the nature of true immortality, amṛtatvaṃ. The wise understand that the pursuit of external desires does not lead to lasting fulfillment or liberation. They recognize that the true Self is beyond birth and death, beyond all that is transient. Having realized this, they know that immortality is not achieved through material possessions or external pleasures, but by experiencing oneness with the eternal consciousness.

The wise do not look for permanence (dhruvam) in that which is impermanent (adhruveṣu). They do not seek stability or lasting happiness in the external world, which is always changing and filled with uncertainty.

येन रूपं रसं गन्धं शब्दान् स्पर्शाꣳश्च मैथुनान् ।
एतेनैव विजानाति किमत्र परिशिष्यते । एतद्वै तत् ॥ ३॥

yena rūpaṃ rasaṃ gandhaṃ śabdān sparśāgśca maithunān |
etenaiva vijānāti kimatra pariśiṣyate | etadvai tat ||3||

Rūpa (form), rasa (taste), gandha (smell), śabdān (sound), sparśān (touch), and maithunān (pleasures or experiences of union) - all these sensory experiences are perceived through the senses. But it is the consciousness that underlies the senses which makes these experiences possible. Without the Ātmā, without that underlying awareness, there would be no perception at all.

The senses themselves do not have the power to perceive independently. It is only through the presence of the Self - the consciousness that flows through them - that they can perceive forms, tastes, smells, sounds, touches, and the pleasure of union.

It is by this consciousness alone that all knowing, all experiencing happens. It is not the eyes that truly see, nor the ears that truly hear, nor the tongue that truly tastes. It is the presence of the Ātmā, the pure consciousness, that makes all sensory knowledge possible. The mind and senses are merely instruments, while the true knower, the true experiencer, is the Self.

Beyond this consciousness, there is nothing else that remains. The essence of all experiences, the ultimate reality behind all perception, is the Self. It is the Ātmā that pervades every experience and every perception. There is nothing apart from it, nothing beyond it. All that exists is contained within this supreme consciousness.

"This indeed is that." This is a profound statement, pointing directly to the ultimate truth. It means that the consciousness by which all sensory experiences are known, the awareness that makes all perception possible, is itself the supreme reality. It is the ultimate essence of all existence. It is an affirmation that the very consciousness within you, which allows you to see, hear, taste, smell, touch, and experience, is itself the divine, the infinite, the supreme Self.

स्वप्नान्तं जागरितान्तं चोभौ येनानुपश्यति ।
महान्तं विभुमात्मानं मत्वा धीरो न शोचति ॥ ४॥

svapnāntaṃ jāgaritāntaṃ cobhau yenānupaśyati |
mahāntaṃ vibhumātmānaṃ matvā dhīro na śocati ||4||

There is an underlying awareness that witnesses both the svapna (dream) state and the jāgarita (waking) state. The Self, the Ātmā, is the consciousness that is present in all states of experience, whether it be the dream state or the waking state. It remains as the unchanging witness, silently observing all that unfolds in the world of dreams and the world of waking.

The wise one realizes the Ātmā, the Self, as mahāntaṃ (great) and vibhum (all-pervading). The Self is not limited to the body or the mind - it is infinite, vast, and beyond all limitations. It is present everywhere and in everything. To realize the Self as great and all-pervading is to understand that it is not confined to any particular state or form. It is the infinite consciousness that pervades all of existence.

The wise one (dhīraḥ), who realizes the true nature of the Self, becomes free from sorrow and suffering. Grief arises from identification with the changing experiences of the body, mind, and world. When one identifies with the impermanent, one becomes subject to fear, loss, and sorrow. However, when one realizes the Self as the unchanging, infinite consciousness, one becomes established in a state beyond suffering. The wise one knows that the Self is eternal, beyond all changes, beyond birth and death, and thus, they are free from grief.

य इमं मध्वदं वेद आत्मानं जीवमन्तिकात् ।
ईशानं भूतभव्यस्य न ततो विजुगुप्सते । एतद्वै तत् ॥ ५॥ ya imaṃ madhvadaṃ veda ātmānaṃ jīvamantikāt |
īśānaṃ bhūtabhavyasya na tato vijugupsate | etadvai tat ||5||

The one who realizes the Self (Ātmā), the essence of all life, as madhvadaṃ, which means 'the one who contains sweetness' or 'the one who is the essence of bliss.' The Self is described as the source of all bliss, the ultimate nectar that fills life with sweetness and fulfillment. It is not something distant; it is jīvam antikāt - the very life-principle within you, the essence that is closest to you. The Self is the vital force, the consciousness that animates and sustains all living beings.

The one who understands the Self as the true source of life, as the essence that brings bliss to every experience, comes to realize that the sweetness they seek in the external world is, in fact, their own true nature.

The Self is the īśānaṃ, the ruler or lord of all that exists, both past (bhūta) and future (bhavya). The Self is the supreme consciousness that transcends time; it is the ruler of everything that has been and everything that will be. It is the eternal, all-pervading presence that is beyond the limitations of time and space.

The one who realizes the Self in this way becomes free from all fear. Vijugupsate means to feel fear, aversion, or revulsion. When one understands that the Self is the essence of bliss, the vital force within, and the supreme ruler of all that exists, they realize their oneness with the infinite, unchanging reality. In that realization, all fear disappears. There is no longer any fear of loss, change, or death, for the Self is beyond all of these. The wise one sees themselves as the eternal consciousness, Paramaśivaṃ, which is beyond all dualities and untouched by any limitations.

This indeed is That. This statement emphasizes that the Self, the essence of bliss, the ruler of all time, is the ultimate truth.

यः पूर्वं तपसो जातमद्भ्यः पूर्वमजायत ।
गुहां प्रविश्य तिष्ठन्तं यो भूतेभिर्व्यपश्यत । एतद्वै तत् ॥ ६॥ yaḥ pūrvaṃ tapaso jātamadbhyaḥ pūrvamajāyata |
guhāṃ praviśya tiṣṭhantaṃ yo bhūtebhirvyapaśyata | etadvai tat ||6||

The Self is that which was born of tapasaḥ, or austerity, at the very beginning. Here, tapas refers to the cosmic creative force, the intense energy of pure consciousness that brings forth creation. It signifies the supreme potential of the Ultimate, which through its creative will, manifests the universe. The Self, Ātmā, is the very first manifestation, emerging from the power of this cosmic creative force, giving rise to all of existence.

This Self existed even before adbhiḥ, meaning water, which represents one of the primary elements of creation. The Self is the original cause, the first principle, from which even the elements such as water are born. It is the eternal reality that precedes everything else - beyond time, beyond space, and beyond the elements that form the physical universe. The Self is the origin, the primal force from which the entire cosmos emerges.

The Self resides in the guhā, the cave of the heart. The word guhā symbolizes the innermost core of our being. The Self is not distant or separate - it resides within each of us, deep within the heart, in the innermost recesses of our consciousness.

The Self is described as the consciousness that perceives through the elements (bhūtebhiḥ). The Self uses the elements of the body, such as the senses and mind, to experience the world. It is the awareness that looks out through the eyes, hears through the ears, and experiences the world through the senses.

This indeed is That. This declaration affirms that the Self, which is the source of all creation, which resides within the heart, and which perceives through the elements, is none other than the supreme reality.

या प्राणेन संभवत्यदितिर्देवतामयी ।
गुहां प्रविश्य तिष्ठन्तीं या भूतेभिर्व्यजायत । एतद्वै तत् ॥ ७॥ yā prāṇena saṃbhavatyaditirdevatāmayī |
guhāṃ praviśya tiṣṭhantīṃ yā bhūtebhirvyajāyata | etadvai tat ||7||

Aditi, who is described as devatāmayī, meaning composed of divine energy. Aditi is often understood as the infinite and boundless mother of all gods, the all-encompassing divine energy that gives birth to creation. This divine energy, Aditi, manifests through prāṇa, the vital life force that sustains all living beings.

The divine energy, Aditi, enters the cave of the heart – Ananda Gandha - and abides there as the life force, the essence that gives us vitality and consciousness. It is in this sacred space within us that the Self can be realized, as it is the source of all our experiences, of both the body and mind.

The body is composed of the five elements - earth, water, fire, air, and ether - and it is animated by the life force, prāṇa. This divine energy, Aditi, brings the elements together to form the physical body and sustains it as the life force. It is the same consciousness that animates the body and allows it to interact with the world.

This indeed is That. The divine energy, Aditi, the life force that resides in the heart and manifests through the elements, is none other than the supreme reality. The life force that sustains you, the divine energy that gives rise to creation, and the consciousness that resides within you, are all one and the same. This is the ultimate truth, the essence of all existence.

अरण्योर्निहितो जातवेदा गर्भ इव सुभृतो गर्भिणीभिः ।
दिवे दिवे ईड्यो जागृवद्भिर्हविष्मद्भिर्मनुष्येभिरग्निः । एतद्वै तत् ॥ ८॥
araṇyornihito jātavedā garbha iva subhṛto garbhiṇībhiḥ |
dive dive īḍyo jāgṛvadbhirhaviṣmadbhirmanuṣyebhiragniḥ | etadvai tat ||8||

Jātavedā, the all-knowing fire, representing the divine consciousness, is like the fire hidden within the two pieces of wood (araṇyoḥ), just waiting to be kindled. This imagery points to the divine essence, the Self, which lies hidden within every individual. Just as fire resides latent in the wood, waiting to be brought forth, the Self lies within each of us, waiting to be awakened through spiritual practice.

Here, the Self is compared to a fetus, garbha, carefully nurtured and protected within the womb of a mother (garbhiṇībhiḥ). This analogy signifies that the Self, like the unborn child, is safely contained within each individual, cared for and protected until it is ready to be revealed. The body and mind serve as the vessels that nurture and protect the divine consciousness, preparing it for realization.

The sacred fire, Agni, is revered and invoked daily by the awakened beings (jāgṛvadbhir), who are conscious of its presence. The fire is worshipped by those who offer oblations (haviṣmadbhir), representing devotion and the offering of one's thoughts and actions in dedication to the divine. This signifies that the awakened ones are aware of the divine presence within and continuously honor and invoke it through their practice, meditation, and devotion. Just as fire is invoked in rituals, the divine Self must be invoked and worshipped within through practices such as unclutching, meditation, and devotion.

This indeed is That. the hidden fire, the nurturing fetus, and the sacred fire being worshipped - all symbolize the Self. The Self is the divine presence that lies within every being, waiting to be realized. The divine fire within you is the same as the ultimate reality, and through spiritual practice, you can come to know this truth.

It is the Source from which the sun rises. The sun, in the Hindu tradition, represents light, energy, and the source of all life. The sun and its radiant energy originate from the supreme consciousness. The sun's power and light emerge from this eternal source, which is the very essence of existence.

The sun, after its journey across the sky, ultimately sets back into the same source from which it arose. The Self is both the origin and the dissolution of all things. Just as the sun rises and sets, all phenomena arise from and eventually dissolve back into the supreme consciousness.

All the devas, or divine beings, are established in this supreme consciousness. It is the foundation of all divine forces, all cosmic energies, and all forms of divinity. The gods, representing different aspects of the cosmos, are supported by and established in the supreme consciousness.

No one can go beyond this supreme reality. There is nothing higher or beyond It. It is the ultimate, all-encompassing consciousness that contains and transcends all of creation.

This indeed is That. The source from which everything arises and into which everything dissolves, the foundation of all divine beings, is none other than the Self. This is the truth of your own being, the essence of all that exists.

यदेवेह तदमुत्र यदमुत्र तदन्विह ।
मृत्योः स मृत्युमाप्नोति य इह नानेव पश्यति ॥ १०॥
yadeveha tadamutra yadamutra tadanviha |
mṛtyoḥ sa mṛtyumāpnoti ya iha nāneva paśyati ||10||

What is present iha (here, in this world) is the same as what is amutra (there, in the other world or higher realms). This means that the same divine essence, the Self, pervades both the physical and the spiritual realms. There is no difference between what exists in this material plane and what exists beyond it. The supreme consciousness is all-pervasive, existing equally in all planes of existence, from the most subtle to the most gross.

What exists in the higher realms (amutra) also exists here (iha). The same consciousness pervades everything, both within and beyond. The divine reality is not confined to a particular place or dimension; it is present in every atom, in every form, in every corner of existence. The divine presence of the Ultimate is equally present in both the seen and unseen, the manifest and the unmanifest. The Oneness of Existence is the fundamental truth, and the same consciousness permeates all.

Those who do not perceive this Oneness, who see separation and duality, fall into the cycle of birth and death, moving from one death to another. They become trapped in saṃsāra, the endless cycle of birth, death, and rebirth. The ignorance of seeing oneself as separate from the Whole, leads to suffering and repeated experience of mortality. The illusion of duality keeps one bound to the limitations of the body and mind, unable to transcend to the realization of the Self.

The one who perceives nāna (many, separateness) instead of unity is bound to this cycle of suffering. When one sees themselves as separate from the Source, from others, and from the rest of Existence, one is caught in ignorance and duality. This illusion of separation creates fear, attachment, desires, and ultimately suffering. It prevents one from realizing the truth of Oneness, the infinite consciousness, that is the true nature of all.

The ultimate truth, the realization of the Self, can be attained only through manasā, meaning through the mind or inner contemplation. The Self is beyond the senses and beyond the grasp of external instruments of knowledge. It is through seeking that one can directly experience this supreme truth.

There is no nānā, meaning no multiplicity or separateness at all. The truth is that there is only oneness, the infinite consciousness, that pervades all of Existence. When the mind transcends its usual state of identifying with the body, ego, and thoughts, it comes to recognize that the distinctions and separations it once perceived were merely illusions. The true reality is non-dual; there is no separation, no multiplicity; there is only Oneness.

Those who fail to realize this oneness, those who remain caught in the illusion of separateness and duality, move from one death to another. They are caught in the cycle of saṃsāra, bound by birth, death, and rebirth. By perceiving oneself as separate from the Whole, one becomes bound to the experience of suffering, limitations, and the repeated cycle of mortality. Ignorance leads to attachment, desires, fears, and, ultimately, suffering. The perception of separateness keeps us from realizing our true nature as the infinite, unchanging Self.

अङ्गुष्ठमात्रः पुरुषो मध्य आत्मनि तिष्ठति ।

The Self, of the size of a thumb, resides in the middle of the body, specifically in the Ananda Gandha (between the heart and navel region). It is ever-present, yet it remains hidden behind the layers of the body, mind, and ego. It is this divine consciousness that is at the center of our being, waiting to be realized.

The Self is the īśānaṃ, the ruler, or lord of everything that has existed in the past (bhūta) and everything that is yet to come (bhavya). The Self is the eternal ruler, beyond time, transcending past and future. It is the supreme consciousness that governs all of existence, from the smallest particle to the entire cosmos. It is the timeless essence that remains unchanged, regardless of the changes that happen in the world of phenomena.

The one who realizes the Self in this way becomes free from all fear. To understand the Self as the inner ruler, as the supreme consciousness that pervades all time and space, is to realize one's true nature as infinite, beyond all limitations, and beyond all dualities. When one comes to know the Self as the unchanging, eternal presence, one becomes fearless, as one understands one's true nature is untouched by birth, death, or any form of limitation. One experiences the state of fearlessness that arises from experiencing Oneness with the eternal, all-powerful consciousness.

This indeed is That. The Self described here, residing within the Ananda Gandha, ruling over all of Existence, is none other than the ultimate reality. It is the divine consciousness that lies at the core of each of us, the true essence that pervades everything.

The Self is compared to a flame, jyotiḥ, which is without smoke (adhūmakaḥ). This means that the Self is pure, clear, and untainted by any impurities or limitations. Just as a smokeless flame is bright and steady, the Self is the pure light of awareness, free from the impurities of the mind and untouched by ignorance or worldly distractions.

The analogy of a smokeless flame signifies the clarity and purity of the Self. The Self is luminous and radiant, illuminating all of existence, yet it remains unaffected by anything external. It is the inner light that shines within, guiding and revealing the truth, unclouded by any obscurations or dualities.

Rainwater, when it falls on a mountain, naturally flows down, spreading in different directions through numerous channels. The rainwater splits into various small streams and paths, eventually losing its unity. This imagery symbolizes the tendency of the mind to get dispersed, distracted, and fragmented. The mind, much like the rainwater on the mountain, tends to run in multiple directions, becoming preoccupied with the endless complexities and distractions of life.

Dharmān refers to duties or righteous paths. When an individual sees the many duties and paths of life as disconnected, without recognizing the underlying unity, they become fragmented in their approach, lacking the vision of the oneness of all existence. They see diversity and separation in their roles, their responsibilities, and the world around them.

A person who sees the paths and duties as separate ends up following them blindly, without understanding the greater truth of oneness. They are driven by the mind's fragmented perceptions, chasing after various worldly concerns, desires, and roles, without realizing the Oneness that lies beneath all these expressions. This blind following of fragmented dharmas keeps the individual bound to the external world, trapped in the cycle of saṃsāra, unable to realize the true Self.

|| iti kāṭhakopaniṣadi dvitīyādhyāye prathamā vallī ||

Pure water, when poured into another container of pure water, merges and becomes indistinguishable. This analogy highlights the concept of Oneness. Pure water, when combined with pure water, remains pure and loses all distinctions - it becomes one homogeneous whole. There is no separation, no difference between the two; they merge and become one. just like pure water merging with pure water, the Self, when realized, becomes one with the supreme reality. There is no difference between the individual consciousness and the universal consciousness - they are of the same essence.

This state of oneness is experienced by the muni, the realized sage, who has come to know the truth. The word muni refers to a silent, contemplative being - one who has gone beyond the distractions of the world and who has realized the essence of their true nature. For such a sage, the understanding of the Self is complete, and they experience the pure, undivided nature of Brahman. The verse concludes by addressing Gautama, who represents the sincere seeker of truth. The teaching is directed to Gautama, explaining that the Self, when realized, becomes one with the infinite, just as pure water merges with pure water.

Now Part 2 Canto 2

पुरमेकादशद्वारमजस्यावक्रचेतसः ।
अनुष्ठाय न शोचति विमुक्तश्च विमुच्यते । एतद्वै तत् ॥ १॥ puramekādaśa dvāramajasyāvakracetasaḥ |
anuṣṭhāya na śocati vimuktaśca vimucyate | etadvai tat ||1||

The body is as a pura, a city, which has ekādaśa dvāram, eleven gates. This city represents the human body, which is equipped with eleven openings or gates. These eleven gates are the two eyes, two ears, two nostrils, the mouth, the two excretory openings (one for waste elimination and one for urination), and the navel. Each of these gates allows interaction with the external world. This analogy likens the body to a well-fortified city, complete with entrances through which it interacts with its environment.

The Self that resides within this city of eleven gates is ajasya, meaning unborn and uncreated. It is the eternal consciousness that is beyond birth and death. The Self is also described as avakracetasaḥ, meaning unperturbed or unwavering in its awareness. It is the consciousness that is unchanging, unaffected by the fluctuations and changes that take place in the external world or the body. It remains still, ever-present, and untouched by the happenings within the city of the body.

The one who realizes the truth of the Self, knowing it to be unborn, unchanging, and eternal, transcends all grief. They are no longer affected by the ups and downs of life, the changing states of the body, or the dualities of the world. The realized one understands that their true nature is beyond all of this and experiences the freedom and peace that come from identifying with the unchanging Self rather than the transient body or mind.

The one who realizes the Self becomes vimukta - free from all bondage. The individual is liberated from the cycle of birth and death and from the limitations imposed by identification with the body, mind, and ego. They attain Mokṣa, the state of ultimate liberation, in which they are free from all karmic bonds and worldly attachments. This state of liberation is not something to be attained in some distant future; it is a state that can be realized here and now by recognizing the true nature of the Self.

This indeed is That. The realization of the Self is described here - the unchanging, eternal consciousness residing in the city of the body - is none other than the ultimate reality. This is the essence of one's being, the supreme consciousness that transcends all limitations and that can be realized by turning inward. The supreme consciousness resides within you, in the city of your body, which has eleven gates. These gates allow you to interact with the world, but they are not your true essence. The Self is the eternal, unchanging presence within you, beyond all experiences of the body and mind. When you realize this truth, you go beyond all grief, all limitations, and you experience the state of freedom and liberation.

हँसः शुचिषद्वसुरान्तरिक्षसद्होता वेदिषदतिथिर्दुरोणसत् ।

nṛṣadvarasadṛtasadvyomasad abjā gojā ṛtajā adrijā ṛtaṃ bṛhat ||2||

The Self is as a hamsaḥ, swan, and śuciṣad, dwelling in purity. The swan is a symbol of purity, grace, and wisdom. It is said that a swan has the ability to separate milk from water, signifying the ability to discern truth from illusion. The Self is like this swan, residing in pure awareness, untouched by any impurity or illusion.

The Self is described as vasu, meaning a life-giving force, and antarikṣasad, meaning dwelling in the sky or the intermediate space. The Self pervades the vast space of the universe, giving life to all that exists. It is present everywhere, from the earth to the sky, as the all-pervading essence of life.

The hotā is the priest who performs sacred rituals, and vediṣat means dwelling at the altar. The Self is described as the sacred presence that performs the cosmic ritual of creation, preservation, and dissolution. It is also described as atithiḥ, the guest, who dwells in every house (duroṇasat). This means that the Self is present in every home, in every being, as the divine guest. It is the sacred presence that is to be welcomed and revered within one's own heart.

The Self is described as nṛṣad, dwelling among human beings; varasad, dwelling in the best or the most excellent; ṛtasad, dwelling in ṛta, which is cosmic order or truth; and vyomasad, dwelling in the heavens. This means that the Self is present everywhere - in all beings, in all that is excellent, in the cosmic order that sustains the universe, and in the heavens above. There is no place where the Self is not present; it is the all-pervading essence of everything.

The Self is described in various forms: abjā, born of water; gojā, born of the earth or the cow; ṛtajā, born of truth; and adrijā, born of mountains. This signifies that the Self is the origin of all elements - water, earth, truth, and mountains. It is the source of everything in existence, from the physical elements to the cosmic order. Finally, it is described as ṛtam bṛhat, meaning the great truth, the ultimate reality that underlies everything.

ऊर्ध्वं प्राणमुन्नयत्यपानं प्रत्यगस्यति ।

ūrdhvaṃ prāṇamunnayatyapānaṃ pratyagasyati |
madhye vāmanamāsīnaṃ viśve devā upāsate ||3||

Prāṇa represents the upward-moving energy that gives life, vitality, and consciousness to the body. It is responsible for all our functions, our awareness, and our growth. This upward flow of prāṇa represents the elevation of energy, taking the individual beyond mundane existence toward higher levels of awareness and spiritual awakening.

Apāna is another vital force, responsible for downward movement and the elimination of waste from the body. The interaction between prāṇa (the upward-moving life force) and apāna (the downward-moving force), the balance between prāṇa and apāna is crucial for the harmonious functioning of the body and mind. This balance represents the equilibrium between the higher spiritual energies and the grounding, stabilizing energies within us.

The interplay of these two vital forces, prāṇa and apāna, represents the life process - constantly moving, balancing, and maintaining the functions of the body and mind. It is this movement that allows us to live, experience, and ultimately turn our awareness inward to realize the Self.

The presence of vāmanam, the 'tiny one,' seated in the middle refers to the Self, which resides in the middle of the body, specifically in the Ananda Gandha. Though described as tiny, the Self is not limited in size or power - it is the infinite consciousness that is present within each of us, symbolized here as being in the middle. It is the divine essence, the true source of our existence, residing at the center of our being, witnessing and guiding the movement of all vital forces.

All the devās (divine beings) worship this Self. The Self is the ultimate source of all divine energies. The gods, representing various aspects of cosmic order and creation, offer their reverence to this supreme consciousness. The Self is the highest reality, the divine presence that governs all of existence, and even the gods bow to its presence. This signifies that all aspects of creation, including the highest cosmic forces, recognize and honor the supreme consciousness within us.

अस्य विस्रंसमानस्य शरीरस्थस्य देहिनः ।
देहाद्विमुच्यमानस्य किमत्र परिशिष्यते । एतद्वै तत् ॥ ४॥ asya visraṃsamānasya śarīrasthasya dehinaḥ |
dehādvimucyamānasya kimatra pariśiṣyate | etadvai tat ||4||

The dehin is the one who resides in the body. The Self is the consciousness that inhabits the body, experiencing the world through it. Visraṃsamānasya suggests the process of leaving or separating from the body. It points to the moment when the Self begins to detach from its physical encasement, the body. The Self is not the body itself; it is the awareness that temporarily resides within the body, using it as an instrument to interact with the world.

The Self being vimucyamānasya is released from the body. When the Self, which has temporarily inhabited the physical body, separates from it, it is freed from the limitations imposed by the physical form. The body is just a vessel, a temporary abode, while the Self is the eternal, unchanging consciousness. When the Self leaves the body, it transcends all the limitations, sufferings, and constraints associated with the physical existence. The Self is beyond birth and death, untouched by the cycles of creation and dissolution.

What remains here after this? Once the Self separates from the body, what remains? This question emphasizes that the body, which we often identify ourselves with, is impermanent and perishable. It is not the true essence of who we are. The true Self is eternal and unaffected by the death or dissolution of the body. When the body is gone, the eternal Self remains, untouched and undisturbed.

The physical body is merely a temporary instrument, while the Self is the real essence. The question reminds us that what remains is the pure consciousness, the eternal Self, which cannot be destroyed.

This indeed is That. The physical body is merely a temporary instrument, while the Self is the real essence. The question reminds us that what remains is the pure consciousness, the eternal Self, which cannot be destroyed.

न प्राणेन नापानेन मर्त्यो जीवति कश्चन ।
इतरेण तु जीवन्ति यस्मिन्नेतावुपाश्रितौ ॥ ५॥ na prāṇena nāpānena martyo jīvati kaścana |
itareṇa tu jīvanti yasminnetāvupāśritau ||5||

No mortal being (martya) lives by prāṇa (the upward-moving life force) or apāna (the downward-moving life force) alone. These two forces are responsible for vital functions within the body: prāṇa governs the energy that moves upward and apāna governs the energy that moves downward, including exhalation and elimination. While these life forces are essential for maintaining the physical body, they are not the true source of life. They are merely expressions of something deeper.

The Upaniṣad here points out that while we tend to think that our life depends on the breath and the vital energies within the body, these forces alone do not constitute the true essence of our being. The breath and vital energies are important for physical existence, but there is a higher principle that truly sustains life.

All beings truly live by something other than prāṇa and apāna. This 'other' refers to the Self, the ultimate source of life and consciousness. The Self is the true essence that animates the body and gives it life. It is the eternal, unchanging consciousness that sustains the body and mind. The vital energies are instruments of the Self, but they are not the source of life itself. It is the Self that is the true source, the substratum that supports all existence.

Prāṇa and apāna, the vital forces, are dependent on this higher Self. These vital forces do not operate independently; they are sustained by and rooted in the Self.

The Self is the ultimate reality on which all life depends - it is the foundation for everything that functions within the body and the mind. Without the Self, the vital forces would have no direction, no power, and no existence.

हन्त त इदं प्रवक्ष्यामि गुह्यं ब्रह्म सनातनम् । यथा च मरणं प्राप्य आत्मा भवति गौतम ॥ ६॥
hanta ta idaṃ pravakṣyāmi guhyaṃ brahma sanātanam |
yathā ca maraṇaṃ prāpya ātmā bhavati gautama ||6||

The word hanta is an expression that conveys a sense of urgency, importance, and readiness to impart valuable wisdom. It signals to the listener to prepare themselves to receive the knowledge that follows. The teacher is about to share something profound and significant, urging Gautama, or the seeker, to be fully present and open to receiving it.

The guru speaks of the guhyaṃ, the secret or hidden knowledge of brahma, which is sanātanam, meaning ancient or eternal. This secret knowledge pertains to the ultimate reality, Brahman, which is the Self. It is called a secret because it is not easily accessible to the ordinary mind - it is subtle, profound, and must be realized through direct inner experience. The knowledge of the Self is eternal, unchanging, and beyond time. It is the truth that has always been and will always be. This knowledge pertains to the journey of the Self after maraṇaṃ prāpya, meaning after experiencing death. Death, which is often seen as the end, is actually just a transition. The true essence, the Self, remains, untouched by the dissolution of the physical form. The realization of this truth brings freedom from the fear of death and helps one understand the eternal, unchanging nature of the Self.

The verse concludes by addressing Gautama, the sincere seeker of truth. The teacher says that upon death, the Self becomes what it truly is - free from the limitations of the body, mind, and identity. It is the infinite consciousness which transcends birth and death. Death is simply the dissolution of the physical form, but the Self continues as the eternal reality.

योनिमन्ये प्रपद्यन्ते शरीरत्वाय देहिनः ।
स्थाणुमन्येऽनुसंयन्ति यथाकर्म यथाश्रुतम् ॥ ७॥
yonimanye prapadyante śarīratvāya dehinaḥ |

sthāṇumanye'nusaṃyanti yathākarma yathāśrutam ||7||

Some beings (dehinaḥ), those who have previously embodied a physical form, enter a yoni (womb) to be reborn in a new body. This refers to the process of rebirth that is experienced by those who are bound by desires and the results of their past actions. The embodied soul, carrying its unfulfilled desires, attachments, and karma, takes on a new body to continue its journey. This process is driven by saṃsāra, the cycle of birth, death, and rebirth, which continues until the soul attains realization of the true Self.

The verse continues by describing the path of other beings, who reach a state of stillness or stability. The word sthāṇu can mean a state of immovability or steadfastness, often associated with a higher form of existence where there is stability and freedom from the turbulence of saṃsāra. These beings, through their actions and deeper understanding, attain a higher plane where they are no longer subject to the continuous cycle of rebirth, but instead experience a more serene, stable existence.

The different outcomes - the continuation in the cycle of rebirth or the attainment of a stable, higher state - are determined by one's karma (actions) and śrutam (knowledge or learning). Those whose actions are driven by selfish desires and attachments, and whose understanding is limited, continue to take birth after birth. On the other hand, those who perform righteous actions, engage in spiritual practices, and seek true knowledge begin to transcend the cycle of birth and death, moving toward a more stable and elevated state.

य एष सुप्तेषु जागर्ति कामं कामं पुरुषो निर्मिमाणः ।

When the physical body and mind are in deep sleep, the awareness of the Self remains untouched. The consciousness that is ever awake, even when the mind and senses are inactive, is the true Self. It is the inner witness, the ever-present awareness that watches over all states - waking, dreaming, and deep sleep. It is never bound by the limitations of these states; it is the unchanging presence that observes them all.

The Self is the source from which all desires arise and through which they are experienced. The puruṣa, the Self, gives the energy and life force that enables individuals to have desires and to act on them. It is the underlying consciousness that makes all experience possible, including the experiences of desire and fulfillment.

This Self is pure (śukraṃ), it is Brahman, the ultimate reality, and it is called amṛtam, the immortal. The Self is pure and uncontaminated by the actions, thoughts, and desires that arise in the mind. It is Brahman, the infinite consciousness that is the essence of all existence. It is also amṛtam, the immortal, beyond the cycle of birth and death, beyond any change or decay.

All the lokas (worlds or realms) are established in the Self. This means that the entire universe, all planes of existence, are contained within the Self. It is the foundation of everything, the substratum on which all creation rests. There is nothing outside of it, nothing separate from it - all worlds, all beings, all forms are established in the infinite consciousness of the Self.

There is nothing beyond the Self. No being, no force, no reality can transcend or be outside of the Self. It is the ultimate reality, the infinite consciousness that contains everything within itself. All that exists is within the Self, and there is no separation or duality that can surpass it.

The one that remains awake even when all else sleeps, the source of all desires, the pure and immortal consciousness is none other than the ultimate reality. This is the essence of your own being, the true Self that pervades everything, beyond all limitations and distinctions.

Fire (agni), which, though one in essence, enters and pervades all of creation. Fire is a singular force, but it can manifest in many different places and forms. This fire symbolizes the pure consciousness which, like fire, is one but enters and pervades everything in existence. It is the one divine presence that expresses itself in multiple ways throughout the cosmos.

Fire, though it is fundamentally the same, appears in different forms according to the materials it burns. The same fire can take on different appearances depending on the type of fuel, such as wood, coal, or oil. In the same way, the Self is one in essence, but it appears in countless forms throughout creation, taking on different identities, forms, and characteristics.

The infinite consciousness of the Ultimate manifests in all beings and in all of nature, each expression unique, yet all arising from the same source. Just as fire appears differently in different settings, the Self manifests uniquely in each individual and each aspect of creation.

The Self, like fire, is one but is present within all beings. Sarvabhūtāntarātmā means the inner Self of all beings. The same infinite consciousness resides in every living being, in every form of life. It is the inner essence, the unchanging presence, within each one of us. Regardless of the external differences such as physical form, personality, or characteristics, the inner Self is the same in all beings. It is the one consciousness that pervades everything.

The Self appears in multiple forms both internally (antar, within) and externally (bahis, without). The same consciousness that is the inner Self of all beings also manifests outwardly in the forms of nature, objects, and the entire universe.

Air is a singular, invisible force, yet it fills everything in creation and reaches everywhere. This is symbolic of the nature of the Self, which is one, undivided consciousness that permeates everything. Just as air moves freely and fills every corner, the Self permeates all beings and all forms of life without discrimination.

Air, though one in its essence, manifests differently based on the form it inhabits or the medium it interacts with. The same air can feel like a gentle breeze or a powerful storm. Similarly, the Self is one, but it manifests in countless forms, expressing itself uniquely through each individual and each part of creation. The infinite consciousness expresses itself in many forms, though its essence remains unchanged.

The Self is the same consciousness that resides in the hearts of all beings. Sarvabhūtāntarātmā means the inner Self of all beings. The Self is the silent witness within each of us, the unchanging reality that remains present regardless of the body's form or the mind's state. Regardless of external differences whether in form, appearance, or personality, the inner Self is the same within all. This realization allows us to see the inherent unity behind the diversity of forms.

The Self takes on various forms both internally (antar) and externally (bahiś). The same consciousness manifests both as the inner Self of each being and as the entire external universe. The Self is not limited to being an internal presence within individuals; it is also the infinite essence that manifests externally in the world around us.

The sun is often described as the 'eye of the world.' The sun illuminates everything, allowing beings to perceive and see the world around them. The sun, in this analogy, represents the Self which is the source of illumination and awareness for all of creation. Just as the sun makes it possible for all beings to see, the Self is the consciousness that makes all experience possible. It is the light of awareness that allows us to perceive, understand, and experience reality.

The sun, though it provides light to all, remains unaffected by the impurities or faults of the world. For instance, even though The sun though shines on muddy waters or impure objects is not stained or altered by them. It remains pure and untouched. Similarly, the Self though pervading all beings and enabling all experiences, remains unaffected by the limitations, sufferings, or impurities of the world.

In the same way, the Self provides the light of consciousness that makes all perception and action possible, but it is not affected by the actions, desires, or sufferings of the body and mind. The Self is beyond all dualities and remains pure, regardless of what happens in the world of forms.

The Self, like the sun, is the one consciousness present in all beings. It is the sarvabhūtāntarātmā, the inner Self of all beings.

Just as the sun shines upon everything equally without distinction, the Self is present within every being, regardless of the form or identity. It is the unchanging, pure consciousness that resides within each of us, allowing us to perceive, experience, and be aware.

The Self is not affected by the suffering or the limitations of the world. The Self remains bāhyaḥ, beyond, untouched by the pain, sorrow, or imperfections of worldly existence. The suffering, challenges, and impurities of the world belong to the body, mind, and ego, but the Self remains pure, untainted, and beyond all of these experiences.

The Self is the one supreme ruler who exercises control over everything. This Self is the singular consciousness that governs all of existence, the inner Self of all beings. Sarvabhūtāntarātmā means the inner essence that resides within every being, animate and inanimate. It is the consciousness that directs and sustains all aspects of life, and it is the ruler because everything depends on it for existence.

The Self, though one in essence, takes on multiple forms (bahudhā). It is ekaṃ rūpaṃ, one form, but it manifests as many. This means that the infinite consciousness expresses itself in countless ways, taking on different forms, identities, and expressions throughout creation.

Those who realize this truth attain sukham śāśvatam, everlasting bliss. The bliss of realization is eternal, beyond the transient pleasures and pains of the world. When one realizes the oneness of the Self, they transcend the dualities of life and experience the unchanging bliss that comes from knowing their true nature as the Self.

This bliss is not dependent on external circumstances - it is the bliss of being established in the truth of oneness, the bliss of knowing that one is beyond all limitations, beyond all suffering, and that one's true nature is infinite and eternal. This eternal bliss is available only to those who realize the Self; those who remain caught in the illusion of duality, identifying with the body and mind, cannot experience this state of ānanda (bliss).

nityo'nityānāṃ cetanaścetanānām eko bahūnāṃ yo vidadhāti kāmān |
tamātmasthaṃ ye'nupaśyanti dhīrāḥ teṣāṃ śāntiḥ śāśvatī netareṣām ||13||

The Self is nityaḥ (eternal) among the anityānām (transient). The Self is the only unchanging reality, while everything else in creation is impermanent and constantly changing. The world, the body, the mind all are in a state of flux, subject to birth, growth, decay, and death. But the Self is beyond these changes; it is eternal, timeless, and unaffected by the fluctuations of the material world.

Though every living being possesses consciousness, the individual awareness arises from the supreme consciousness. The Self is the source of all consciousness, and without it, there would be no awareness, no experience.

Though the Self is one, it is the source of life and sustenance for all beings. It is the Self who provides the energy, the intelligence, and the means by which desires are fulfilled in the world. The many beings in creation have countless desires, and it is the one supreme consciousness that enables their fulfillment. The Self provides the substratum on which all experiences and actions take place, but it remains unaffected by the actions and desires themselves.

The dhīrāḥ, the wise ones, perceive the Self as being established within themselves (ātmasthaṃ). These are the seekers who have gone beyond the superficial identifications with the body and mind, who have looked deeply within and recognized the presence of the Self.

Such wise beings realize that the same consciousness that sustains the entire cosmos is their own inner essence.

Those who realize this truth attain śāntiḥ śāśvatī, everlasting peace. This peace is not the temporary calm that comes from favorable external circumstances; it is the deep, abiding peace that arises from the realization of one's true nature. It is the peace that comes from knowing that one is beyond birth and death, beyond pleasure and pain, beyond all limitations. It is the peace of being established in the eternal truth, the oneness.

Those who remain caught in the illusion of duality, identifying with the body, mind, and desires, cannot experience this state of true peace. They continue to be affected by the fluctuations of life, the ups and downs, the gains and losses. Only those who perceive the Self within themselves, who realize their oneness with Brahman, can experience the unchanging, eternal peace that is beyond all dualities.

तदेतदिति मन्यन्तेऽनिर्देश्यं परमं सुखम् । कथं नु तद्विजानीयां किमु भाति विभाति वा ॥ १४॥ tadetaditi manyante'nirdeśyaṃ paramaṃ sukham |
kathaṃ nu tadvijānīyāṃ kimu bhāti vibhāti vā ||!4||

The Self is considered to be anirdeśyaṃ, indescribable, and paramaṃ sukham, the supreme bliss. This means that the experience of the Self, the realization of oneness with Brahman, cannot be fully described or captured in words. It is beyond language, beyond the limitations of ordinary concepts and descriptions. It is an experience that transcends the mind and the senses, an experience of bliss that is beyond all understanding.

It is the paramaṃ sukham, the highest bliss that arises from being established in the truth of oneness, the bliss of realizing one's true nature as the infinite consciousness.

How indeed can one know it? How can one truly understand this supreme bliss, this indescribable reality that is the Self? This question expresses the challenge faced by seekers on the spiritual path. The realization of the Self is not something that can be grasped through intellectual understanding or sensory perception. It is not something that can be known in the same way that we know objects in the world.

Does it shine forth, or does it not shine forth? This question points to the subtle nature of the Self. The Self is the source of all light, the light of consciousness that illuminates everything. It is the very essence that makes all perception and experience possible. Yet, it is not an object that can be seen or perceived like other things in the world. It shines forth as the light of awareness, but it does not shine forth in a way that can be grasped by the senses.

न तत्र सूर्यो भाति न चन्द्रतारकं नेमा विद्युतो भान्ति कुतोऽयमग्निः ।
तमेव भान्तमनुभाति सर्वं तस्य भासा सर्वमिदं विभाति ॥ १५॥
इति काठकोपनिषदि द्वितीयाध्याये द्वितीया वल्ली ॥
na tatra sūryo bhāti na candratārakaṃ nemā vidyuto bhānti kuto'yamagniḥ |
tameva bhāntamanubhāti sarvaṃ tasya bhāsā sarvamidaṃ vibhāti ||15||
|| iti kāṭhakopaniṣadi dvitīyādhyāye dvitīyā vallī ||

There, the sun does not shine, nor the moon and the stars. In the realm of the Self, the sun, moon, and stars do not shine. This means that the Self is not dependent on any external source of light. The sun, moon, and stars are powerful sources of illumination in the external world, but they are not needed to reveal the Self. The Self is self-luminous, shining by its own light. It is the light of all lights, the source of all illumination, and it is beyond the physical light of the sun, moon, or stars.

The Self is the pure consciousness that illuminates the entire universe. It is the light of awareness, the light that makes perception possible, but it is not something that can be seen by the external light of the sun, moon, or stars. The Self is beyond the reach of the senses, and it shines independently, without any need for external sources of light.

Even lightning or fire cannot illuminate the Self. Lightning and fire are also sources of illumination, but they are limited and temporary. The light of the Self is eternal and infinite, whereas the light of lightning or fire is momentary and confined. The Self is the source of all illumination, and no external light, whether it is lightning, fire, or anything else, can reveal it. The Self does not need any external source to be known; it shines by its own light, illuminating everything else.

All things shine because of the light of the Self. It is the light of the Self that makes all perception possible. All forms, all experiences, everything in creation, shines because the Self shines. The Self is the ultimate light that illuminates the mind, senses, and objects of perception, allowing us to experience the world. The mind and senses derive their ability to perceive from the light of the Self, which is the true source of all awareness.

By the light of the Self, everything shines. The entire universe, all beings, all forms, and all experiences are illuminated by the light of the Self. The Self is the substratum, the ultimate reality that makes everything else visible and knowable. It is the source of all illumination, the light that pervades everything and makes all perception possible.

Now Part 2 Canto 3.

ऊर्ध्वमूलोऽवाक्शाख एषोऽश्वत्थः सनातनः ।
तदेव शुक्रं तद्ब्रह्म तदेवामृतमुच्यते ।
तस्मिँल्लोकाः श्रिताः सर्वे तदु नात्येति कश्चन । एतद्वै तत् ॥ १॥ ūrdhvamūlo'vākśākha eṣo'śvatthaḥ sanātanaḥ |
tadeva śukraṃ tadbrahma tadevāmṛtamucyate |
tasmimllokāḥ śritāḥ sarve tadu nātyeti kaścana | etadvai tat ||1||

The aśvattha (the fig tree), which is depicted as having its roots above and branches spreading downward. This tree is used as a symbol for the entire universe, with its roots in the higher realms and its branches extending down into the material world.

The term sanātanaḥ means eternal, indicating that this tree is not bound by time. It is a representation of the entire universe, with the Self as its eternal source, sustaining all that exists. The tree is a metaphor for the cycle of creation, with its branches spreading out in various forms and its roots firmly anchored in the divine source.

This Self, represented by the aśvattha tree, is śukraṃ (pure), brahma (the ultimate reality), and amṛtam (immortal). This means that the Self is the essence of purity, the ultimate reality behind all of existence, and the eternal, undying consciousness.

While the branches of the tree - the forms of the world - may change, grow, and decay, the root - the Self - is always pure, eternal, and unaffected.

All the lokas (worlds or realms) are established in this Self. The entire universe, all planes of existence, are contained within the Self. Everything that exists is dependent on the Self for its existence, just as the branches of a tree depend on its roots for nourishment. All realms, whether physical, mental, or spiritual, are manifestations of the one Self, which is the substratum of everything.

The different worlds and planes of existence are like the branches of the aśvattha tree, which grow and spread from the root. All creation, all dimensions, are ultimately rooted in the Self, and everything derives its existence from this one supreme consciousness.

There is nothing beyond the Self. No being, no force, no reality can transcend or be outside of the Self. It is the ultimate reality, the infinite consciousness that contains everything within itself. All that exists is within the Self, and there is no separation or duality that can surpass it.

This indeed is That. The Self is the one represented by the eternal aśvattha tree, which is the source of all worlds and beyond which nothing exists, is the ultimate reality. It is the true essence of all existence, the foundation of everything, and the eternal presence that underlies all forms and names.

यदिदं किं च जगत् सर्वं प्राण एजति निःसृतम् ।
महद्भयं वज्रमुद्यतं य एतद्विदुरमृतास्ते भवन्ति ॥ २॥
yadidaṃ kiṃ ca jagat sarvaṃ prāṇa ejati niḥsṛtam |
mahadbhayaṃ vajramudyataṃ ya etadviduramṛtāste bhavanti ||2||

Everything in the universe, yad idaṃ kiṃ ca jagat sarvaṃ (all that exists in this world), moves because of the Prāṇa, the vital life force. The term ejati means 'moves' or 'vibrates', indicating that Prāṇa, the universal life force, is the underlying power that causes all things to be in motion.

Prāṇa is the vital energy that sustains all of creation. It is the force that animates life, giving movement to beings, and it is the power that makes the entire cosmos function. Whether it is the movement of celestial bodies, the growth of plants, or the activities of living beings, everything is sustained by the power of Prāṇa. This vital energy emerges from the Self, and pervades the entire universe. Without Prāṇa, there would be no movement, no life, and no activity.

A sense of great fear, mahad bhayaṃ is present in the universe. This fear is compared to a vajra (thunderbolt). The thunderbolt is a symbol of immense power, something that has the potential to destroy. This great fear refers to the fear of the supreme law, the cosmic order, the inescapable truth of the Self.

All beings in the universe are governed by the cosmic law, the law of Dharma. This law is as powerful as a thunderbolt - it is something that cannot be evaded or escaped. It governs the cycle of birth, death, and rebirth, and those who are unaware of the true nature of the Self are subject to the fear of this cosmic order. They are afraid of the consequences of their actions, the fear of death, and the unknown.

Those who understand this truth become amṛtāḥ (immortal). This means that those who realize the true nature of Prāṇa, and understand that it emerges from the supreme Self attain liberation and freedom from the cycle of birth and death. To realize that Prāṇa - the life force that sustains the entire universe - emerges from the Self is to understand the oneness of all existence. It is to recognize that the vital energy that animates life is not separate from the infinite consciousness that underlies everything. Those who have this realization go beyond the fear of death and experience the state of immortality, knowing that their true essence is beyond all limitations, beyond birth and death.

भयादस्याग्निस्तपति भयात्तपति सूर्यः ।
भयादिन्द्रश्च वायुश्च मृत्युर्धावति पञ्चमः ॥ ३॥ bhayādasyāgnistapati bhayāttapati sūryaḥ |
bhayādindraśca vāyuśca mṛtyurdhāvati pañcamaḥ ||3||

Agni (fire) burns out of bhaya (fear or reverence) for the supreme Self. Fire burns and fulfills its duty with precision, maintaining its natural order, because it is subject to the power of the supreme Self. Fire, as a natural element, carries out its function as a manifestation of the divine will of the Supreme.

Similarly, the sun, sūryaḥ, shines because of the reverence it has for the supreme Self. The sun, which is a vital source of energy and sustains all life on Earth, carries out its role under the power and order established by the Self. The sun rises and sets, providing light, warmth, and energy, driven by the sense of awe and reverence for the cosmic law upheld by the Self.

Even Indra, the king of the gods, and Vāyu, the wind god, perform their duties out of reverence for the Self. Indra is responsible for rain, thunder, and the balance of natural elements, while Vāyu is the life-giving wind that pervades everything, bringing movement and vitality. Both Indra and Vayu fulfill their cosmic roles under the authority of the Supeme, recognizing the divine power that governs all aspects of creation.

Even mṛtyu (death) operates under the influence of this great reverence for the Self. Mṛtyu represents the natural cycle of life and death, which is part of the cosmic order. Even death, which brings an end to physical forms, functions according to the divine law established by the Ultimate. Death, too, respects the supreme authority of the Self, fulfilling its role in the cycle of creation, preservation, and dissolution.

इह चेदशकद्बोद्धुं प्राक्षरीरस्य विस्रसः ।
ततः सर्गेषु लोकेषु शरीरत्वाय कल्पते ॥ ४॥ iha cedaśakadboddhuṃ prākṣarīrasya visrasaḥ |
tataḥ sargeṣu lokeṣu śarīratvāya kalpate ||4||

If one cannot realize this here before the departure from the body, then one becomes subject to embodiment in the worlds of creation.

The body is not an obstacle but a unique opportunity to experience the highest realization. Through the experiences of life, the practice of turning inward, and the path of unclutching, one can awaken to the truth of the Self. If this realization is missed during this lifetime, the individual continues in the cycle of rebirth.

यथाऽऽदर्शे तथाऽऽत्मनि यथा स्वप्ने तथा पितृलोके ।

यथाऽप्सु परीव दृदृशे तथा गन्धर्वलोके छायातपयोरिव ब्रह्मलोके ॥ ५॥
yathādarśe tathātmani yathā svapne tathā pitṛloke |
yathā'psu parīva dadṛśe tathā gandharvaloke chāyātapayoriva brahmaloke ||5||

The Self can be perceived in oneself as clearly as an image in a mirror. When the mind is pure, calm, and free from impurities, it becomes like a clean mirror, reflecting the true nature of the Self without distortion. Just as a mirror reflects objects with perfect clarity when it is free from dust and smudges, a mind that is uncluttered and purified can reflect the pure consciousness of the Self without distortion.

As in a dream, so in the world of ancestors. Just as in a dream, the perception is less clear and subject to the fluctuations of the dream state, the understanding of the Self in pitṛloka is not fully awakened or realized. It is veiled and influenced by the residual impressions and karmas from the past.

The world of ancestors is the realm where the soul goes after death, and the perception there is not as clear as in a fully awakened state. The perception of the Self in this state is influenced by the karmas and impressions carried over from the past, much like the unclear and fluctuating experiences of a dream. It indicates that the understanding of the Self can vary depending on one's state of consciousness.

As seen in water, so in Gandharva-loka. When you look into a body of water, the image may appear, but it is often distorted or unclear due to the ripples and movement of the water. This is how the Self is perceived in the Gandharva-loka, the celestial realm of Gandharvas (celestial beings).

As light and shadow, so in the world of Brahman. The verse concludes by comparing the perception of the Self in the Brahmaloka, the highest spiritual realm, to that of light and shadow. In the Brahmaloka, the realization of the Self is more complete, but there is still a distinction, much like the interplay of light and shadow. In Brahmaloka, there is a very high level of awareness, but it is still not the absolute oneness of complete realization. It is like seeing both light and shadow - awareness is present, but there is still a trace of distinction or duality. The perception is very refined and close to the ultimate, but it is not yet the non-dual experience of oneness with Paramaśiva.

इन्द्रियाणां पृथग्भावमुदयास्तमयौ च यत् ।
पृथगुत्पद्यमानानां मत्वा धीरो न शोचति ॥ ६॥ indriyāṇāṃ pṛthagbhāvamudayāstamayau ca yat |
pṛthagutpadyamānānāṃ matvā dhīro na śocati ||6||

The rise and fall of the senses happens independently each functioning in its own capacity without depending on the others.

The senses such as seeing, hearing, tasting, touching, and smelling have their own distinct functions and come into play depending on external stimuli. They rise when they interact with their respective objects, and they fall when they are no longer active. The senses function independently, responding to the environment based on their nature. They arise when there is contact with an object, such as the eyes perceiving light or the ears hearing sound, and they withdraw when the contact ceases. This rise and fall are simply the natural rhythm of the senses and their interactions with the world.

The dhīraḥ, the wise one, who understands the independent and transient nature of the senses, does not experience grief (na śocati). This means that the one who has realized the true nature of the senses and their temporary and external nature becomes free from sorrow.

The wise one recognizes that the senses are instruments that gather information from the external world, but they are not the true Self. The experiences gained through the senses, whether pleasurable or painful, are fleeting. By understanding that the senses have a separate existence, rise, and fall, the wise one becomes detached from the fluctuations and disturbances caused by sensory experiences. They no longer identify themselves with the body and senses but instead remain established in the awareness of the Self which is beyond all sensory experiences.

This realization brings freedom from suffering. Sorrow arises when there is attachment to the sensory experiences and identification with the body. When you understand that the senses are independent and temporary, and that they do not define your true nature, you naturally become free from the suffering associated with sensory interactions. You transcend the ups and downs of sensory experiences, recognizing that your true Self is beyond them.

इन्द्रियेभ्यः परं मनो मनसः सत्त्वमुत्तमम् । सत्त्वादधि महानात्मा महतोऽव्यक्तमुत्तमम् ॥ ७॥
indriyebhyaḥ paraṃ mano manasaḥ sattvamuttamam |
sattvādadhi mahānātmā mahato'vyaktamuttamam ||7||

The manas (mind) is beyond the indriyāṇi (senses). The senses such as seeing, hearing, tasting, touching, and smelling gather information from the external world. However, it is the mind that interprets and processes this information. The mind is subtler and more powerful than the senses because it is responsible for creating our perception of the world based on the sensory inputs it receives.

Beyond the mind is sattva, which refers to the buddhi (intellect). The buddhi is the faculty of discrimination, decision-making, and higher reasoning. It is the part of our consciousness that can discern, analyze, and make judgments. The intellect is subtler and superior to the mind because it allows us to discriminate between right and wrong, truth and illusion, and to make conscious choices. It has the capacity to guide the mind and help us overcome the instinctual tendencies of the senses. Beyond the intellect lies the Mahān Ātmā, the Great Self. This refers to the cosmic intelligence, the Hiranyagarbha, which is the collective consciousness and the source of individual intellects. It represents the universal aspect of the Self that is beyond individual identity and the limited functioning of the intellect. Beyond the Mahān Ātmā is the Avyakta, the unmanifested reality. Avyakta means that which is beyond manifestation, the unmanifested potential of existence. It is the state of pure potentiality, from which all forms and names arise. It is beyond all that can be perceived, thought of, or conceptualized.

अव्यक्तात्तु परः पुरुषो व्यापकोऽलिङ्ग एव च ।
यं ज्ञात्वा मुच्यते जन्तुरमृतत्वं च गच्छति ॥ ८॥ avyaktāttu paraḥ puruṣo vyāpako'liṅga eva ca |
yaṃ jñātvā mucyate janturamṛtatvaṃ ca gacchati ||8||

Beyond the avyakta, the unmanifest reality, lies the Puruṣa, the supreme Self. Avyakta refers to the unmanifest, the pure potential from which all creation arises. It is the state that is beyond all forms, names, and manifestations. But even beyond this unmanifest potential lies the Puruṣa, the Supreme Consciousness, Paramaśiva.

Puruṣa here is the ultimate reality, the infinite consciousness that is beyond both the manifested and the unmanifested aspects of existence. It is the absolute, beyond all dualities, beyond the manifest world and even beyond the potential unmanifest. The Puruṣa is the essence of all that exists, the ultimate substratum that supports everything, all-pervading and without attributes. By knowing this Puruṣa, the supreme Self, a jantuḥ (being) becomes mucyate (liberated) and one attains amṛtatvaṃ (immortality) and goes beyond birth and death.

न संदृशे तिष्ठति रूपमस्य न चक्षुषा पश्यति कश्चनैनम् ।
हृदा मनीषा मनसाऽभिक्लृप्तो य एतद्विदुरमृतास्ते भवन्ति ॥ ९॥
na saṃdṛśe tiṣṭhati rūpamasya na cakṣuṣā paśyati kaścanainam |
hṛdā manīṣā manasā'bhiklṛpto ya etadviduramṛtāste bhavanti ||9||

The Self does not exist in a way that can be directly seen or grasped by the senses. The Self does not have a physical form that can be observed with the eyes. It is beyond the realm of form, name, and visible characteristics. It is subtle, formless, and cannot be captured by the senses. no one can see the Self with their physical eyes. The physical senses are limited; they can only perceive the external world, the forms, colors, and attributes that belong to the material plane. The supreme Self is beyond all these attributes and cannot be grasped by the physical senses but through the power of inner awareness, through the purified heart, the sharp intellect, and the focused mind. When these three aspects work in harmony, the realization of the Self becomes possible. Those who realize the Self become amṛtāḥ (immortal), attain freedom from the cycle of birth and death.

यदा पञ्चावतिष्ठन्ते ज्ञानानि मनसा सह ।
बुद्धिश्च न विचेष्टते तामाहुः परमां गतिम् ॥ १०॥
yadā pañcāvatiṣṭhante jñānāni manasā saha |
buddhiśca na viceṣṭate tāmāhuḥ paramāṃ gatim ||10||

The verse begins by describing a state in which the five senses (pañca jñānāni) come to rest along with the mind (manasā saha). When the senses and mind are withdrawn from the distractions of the external world, the consciousness turns inward. This inward journey is what allows one to realize the deeper truths of existence. The buddhi (intellect) also becomes still and no longer engages in activity (na viceṣṭate). The intellect is the faculty that analyzes, discerns, and makes decisions, and it is usually active in trying to understand, interpret, and judge experiences. In this state, the intellect also becomes silent, no longer attempting to grasp or understand through reasoning. This state, in which the senses, mind, and intellect all come to rest, is known as the paramāṃ gatim, the supreme state

तां योगमिति मन्यन्ते स्थिरामिन्द्रियधारणाम् ।

tāṃ yogamiti manyante sthirāmindriyadhāraṇām |
apramattastadā bhavati yogo hi prabhavāpyayau ||11||

Authentic yoga is considered to be the steady control of the indriyāṇi (senses). Sthirā means steady or firm, and dhāraṇām refers to control or restraint. Yoga is not merely about physical postures or breath control; it is the state of steadying the senses, bringing them under control so that they are no longer scattered or restless. One is established in the space of unclutching and is fully aware of the present moment and deeply connected with the inner Self. Yoga is the union that allows one to understand the source of all creation and its dissolution. In the state of yoga, one realizes the origin of everything - the Supreme Self.

नैव वाचा न मनसा प्राप्तुं शक्यो न चक्षुषा ।

naiva vācā na manasā prāptuṃ śakyo na cakṣuṣā |
astīti bruvato'nyatra kathaṃ tadupalabhyate ||12||

The Self cannot be attained through vācā (speech), manasā (mind), or cakṣuṣā (eyes). Speech, the mind, and the eyes are all limited by their dependence on form, language, and sensory perception. The Self, being formless and infinite, cannot be grasped by these faculties. The Self can only be experienced and realized as "It is".

अस्तीत्येवोपलब्धव्यस्तत्त्वभावेन चोभयोः । astītyevopalabdha vyastattvabhāvena cobhayoḥ |

astītyevopalabdhasya tattvabhāvaḥ prasīdati ||13||

The realization of the Self starts with the understanding that asti, meaning "It is."

यदा सर्वे प्रमुच्यन्ते कामा येऽस्य हृदि श्रिताः । अथ मर्त्योऽमृतो भवत्यत्र ब्रह्म समश्नुते ॥ १४॥
yadā sarve pramucyante kāmā ye'sya hṛdi śritāḥ |
atha martyo'mṛto bhavatyatra brahma samaśnute ||14|||

When all desires that dwell in the heart are completely let go, then the mortal becomes immortal and realizes Brahman. Brahman is the infinite, all-pervading reality, which is beyond all limitations and dualities. By letting go of desires and realizing one's true nature, one experiences oneness with Brahman, the supreme consciousness, Paramaśiva.

यदा सर्वे प्रभिद्यन्ते हृदयस्येह ग्रन्थयः

yadā sarve prabhidyante hṛdayasyeha granthayaḥ |
atha martyo'mṛto bhavatyetāvaddhyanuśāsanam ||15||

When all the knots of the heart - the accumulated karmas, desires, and identifications that create bondage and prevent us from realizing the Self - are completely broken, then the mortal becomes immortal and goes beyond life and death. this is the essence of the teaching (anuśāsanam). The teaching of the Kaṭhopaniṣad is ultimately about breaking free from the bondage of the heart, letting go of all attachments and desires, and realizing the true, immortal nature of the Self. This is the culmination of all spiritual instruction: to transcend the limitations of the body and mind, break free from the knots that bind us, and realize our oneness with the Self.

शतं चैका च हृदयस्य नाड्यस्तासां मूर्धानमभिनिःसृतैका ।
तयोर्ध्वमायन्नमृतत्वमेति विष्वङ्ङन्या उत्क्रमणे भवन्ति ॥ १६॥
śataṃ caikā ca hṛdayasya nāḍyastāsāṃ mūrdhānamabhiniḥsṛtaikā |
tayordhvamāyannamṛtatvameti viṣvaṅṅanyā utkramaṇe bhavanti ||16||

There are śataṃ (a hundred) plus ekā (one), making śataṃ caikā - a hundred and one nāḍyaḥ (subtle channels or energy pathways) that emerge from the hṛdaya (heart). In the subtle anatomy of the body, nāḍis are energy pathways through which prāṇa (vital energy) flows, similar to how nerves function in the physical body.

Among these hundred and one nāḍis, one of them rises to the crown of the head. This special channel is called the suṣumṇā nāḍi, the central channel that passes through the spine and reaches the sahasrāra chakra, the crown center, located at the top of the head. The suṣumṇā nāḍi is considered the most important channel in the subtle body because it is through this channel that the energy ascends to the crown of the head, leading to the experience of oneness with the Self.

By moving upward through this central channel, one attains amṛtatvam (immortality). This means that when the energy and consciousness rise through the suṣumṇā nāḍi to the sahasrāra chakra, the individual experiences the realization of the Self and Oneness with the Supreme Consciousness. The other channels lead to different states of departure. If the life force energy leaves the body through any of the other channels, the individual may experience different realms of existence, leading to rebirth in various forms according to one's karma. The nāḍis other than the suṣumṇā are associated with different aspects of life and different planes of existence. When the energy leaves through these channels, it results in continued participation in the cycle of saṃsāra - birth, death, and rebirth. Only through the central channel, the suṣumṇā nāḍi, can one attain liberation and transcend the cycle of rebirth.

The Puruṣa, the Inner Self, about the size of a thumb, is ever seated in the hearts of all beings. One must extract it from one's own body like a reed from its sheath, with steadiness. Just as a reed is carefully and delicately pulled out of its covering without breaking it, the Self must be discovered and realized by peeling away all the layers of identification - attachments, desires, conditioning, and limiting beliefs. This process requires dhairya - courage, patience, and steadiness. The seeker must go inward with determination and subtlety, separating the eternal Self from the temporary identifications with the body, mind, and ego. One must vidyāt (know) the Self as śukram (pure) and amṛtam (immortal).

मृत्युप्रोक्तां नचिकेतोऽथ लब्ध्वा विद्यामेतां योगविधिं च कृत्स्नम् ।

brahmaprāpto virajo'bhūdvimṛtyuranyo'pyevaṃ yo vidadhyātmameva ||18||

Mṛtyu (Death), represented here by Yama, imparted the knowledge to Nachiketa. Nachiketa was a sincere seeker who had questioned Yama about the nature of the Self, death, and the ultimate truth. Yama, pleased with Nachiketa's unwavering focus and authentic quest for truth, provided him with profound spiritual teachings. Nachiketa received both the vidyā (knowledge) and the complete yoga-vidhi (method of yoga). Nachiketa, having received this knowledge and practiced yoga as instructed, attained Brahman, the supreme consciousness, Paramaśiva. He became virajaḥ - free from impurities, meaning that all his attachments, desires, and limitations were dissolved. He also became vimṛtyuḥ, which means he transcended death, realizing his immortal nature. Anyone else who understands and follows the same process can also attain the Self, Ātma. This means that the teachings given to Nachiketa are not limited to him alone. Anyone who sincerely follows the path of knowledge and practice, as instructed by Yama, can attain the same state of realization and oneness with Paramaśiva

BHAGAVAD GITA DECODED

Chapter 1
Arjunaviśāda Yogaḥ

Spiritual literature can be classified into three categories. First we have śāstras: Sāstras give us clarity about the aim of life, the goal of human life. They teach us how to live life, the purpose of life. They give intellectual understanding about the ultimate truth of man and God.

Śāstras are the scriptures which guide us to have the right cognitions of life. They logically and intellectually answer all major questions so that we can be logically convinced to follow the ultimate path.

The second category of literature is stotra. It is the expression of someone who has realized the ultimate truth; who has had the glimpse of divine love.

The literature from the heart is stotras; literature from the head is śastras. The third type of literature, called sūtras, gives us techniques to realize the state of uniting with the Divine.

Śāstras give us intellectual understanding, stotras give emotional feeling connection, Sūtras give the being level experience. Stotras enrich us to surrender to the Divine. Sūtras give us techniques to achieve devotion or enlightenment.

Our Hindu seers created śāstras - the absolute science of living in completion - while creating our peak possibility. They logically taught us the path and the goal, and why we are asked to do what we do and why we need spirituality, even in our day-to-day living. All these major questions are answered and proven logically in śastras and the conclusions are given to us. Doubt is a devil. Once a doubt enters our mind in the form of self-doubt, self-hatred and self-denial, we can't sleep, we can't rest until we clear and complete with it. Śāstras help us get rid of these doubts intellectually, scientifically.

Our cognition is not complete cognition till the śāstras of integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching become the basis of our cognition. Till then our cognitions are nothing but confusions, self-doubts.

A person asked the great master Vivekananda, 'Master, what is the importance of Vedas and why should we study the scriptures?' Vivekananda said, 'If you study the scriptures, all your faith and sincerity will become so strong that nobody will be able to shake you.'

Otherwise, any fool can tell us that what we are doing is superstitious and we can start thinking, 'Am I really doing superstitious things? Am I really following the right path?' We will start having doubts about ourselves.

Unless we have the deep foundation of śāstras, not only we will not be able to believe in anything, we will be doubting and hating our very own self. We will not be authentic and integrated to the truth.

Understand, even our emotions are not so deep. We think we have love, we think we believe. Śāstras, the science of living Enlightenment, gives a powerful base of the 'great why of life' so that all our cognitions, all our faith can enter into our being and start creating our possibilities.

Devotion is Authenticity with God

Bhakti, devotion, is just an alchemy process. It is as if a touchstone has touched us. Ramakrishna says beautifully, 'If a touchstone touches any metal it becomes gold; just a touch of the stone is enough for any metal to be converted into gold.'

Devotion is a touchstone. The moment devotion touches us, we become God, we become divine. The problem is, we never allow devotion to touch us; we never allow devotion to penetrate our being. We think we want God, but we are continuously afraid of the Divine.

God is only one more choice in our lives. Until we have an intellectual conviction about life, God is just one more choice; just one more shop like Walmart; it is Spiritual mart. This is our relationship with God. We remember God only when we need something. When things go well according to our chosen route, then God is great, else throw away the God

Our faith is pseudo if it is not life transforming. We do not allow devotion to work on us. Śāstras give us that intellectual clarity, that completion cognition. All the great devotional people like Caitanya, Rāmānuja and Mādhva had a strong intellectual base of this science. It is only when you reach the peak of logic, can you fall into the valley of love; only then you are qualified to fall in love. All great masters and devotees who reach the peak of intellect have a strong śāstras base.

Stotra means expressing our experience, our deep love or devotion to our master or God. Many people ask, why Hinduism has idol worship. Hinduism does not have idol worship. Understand, in Hindu tradition, even God is a stepping-stone for enlightenment. All the forms and names of the Gods, everything is used for attaining enlightenment, for nirvikalpa samādhi. When the devotion, the feeling connection is awakened in you, you automatically go towards enlightenment.

Please understand, learning śāstras means bringing integrity and authenticity to our mind. Going around and practicing śāstras is living authenticity and being responsible. Being in integrity with the Master or God is feeling connection and being enriched with Enlightenment.

When integrity comes through the head, it is intellect, śāstra. When it comes through your heart, it is stotra. When it comes through your being, it is sūtra.

When authenticity expresses through our head, it is power of śāstra, the knowledge weapons to fight our patterns, our dilemmas. When authenticity expresses through our heart, it is love, stotra. When authenticity expresses through our being, it is meditation, sūtra.

There are three kinds of human beings: head oriented, heart oriented and being oriented. To fulfill everyone, our enlightened sages have created three kinds of literature - śāstras, stotras and sūtras. Bhagavad Gītā is the only book that is a combination of śāstras, stotras and sutras. In Bhagavad Gītā, all three are combined together, with something more.

Gītā is śāstra; it gives a clear intellectual understanding about life, death, soul, about the 'great why of life' as well as the 'what of life,' the do's and don'ts, rules and regulations. Gītā is directly from Bhagavān, God Himself, from a pūrṇāvatāra - a perfect, complete Incarnation, Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Among the Incarnations, Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa is considered pūrṇa, complete, a full Incarnation.

Kṛṣṇa, the Pūrṇāvatāra

The most worshipped Incarnation on planet Earth is Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Only Kṛṣṇa can be called the most worshipped being.

First, let us understand why Incarnations come to planet Earth. An Incarnation is someone who comes down to tell and enrich others about the blissful place that he experienced. The man who descends from the Divine to express the bliss of that divinity is an Incarnation. The person who returns to planet Earth to tell and enrich you about divinity and to also make you realize what he has experienced, is an Incarnation.

An enlightened spiritual Master is a person who creates a formula to reproduce his inner world experiences. Scientists create formulae for the outer world, whereas a master creates a formula to recreate the experience of the inner world. Meditation techniques are these formulae.

An Incarnation is a person who can directly give the experience without even using the formula. All these great Incarnations come down to planet Earth to make people realize that they too are divine, that they too are God, to tell and enrich people that the other side is beautiful. 'There's a very big paradise. Come, let us go and enjoy. Come, join me,' they say.

An Incarnation is a person who has descended to teach divinity to the world. Why is Kṛṣṇa a perfect Incarnation? He has all the qualities needed to push human beings to divinity, to the space of completion.

It is Śrī Kṛṣṇa who is responsible for all the good things we have in our lives. Please understand, it is Kṛṣṇa who is responsible for anything good, anything joyful, and anything auspicious in our lives. The science of living life out of completion and joy - living life out of completion will lead to enlightenment in whatever we are doing without renouncing -this science is introduced to the world for the first time by Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

Understand, till Śrī Kṛṣṇa all Incarnations were teaching only the science of leaving, renouncing the world if one wanted Enlightenment. But it is Śrī Kṛṣṇa who gave this science of living in the space of completion, pūrṇatva, that you don't need to renounce anything; wherever you are, you will be radiating life and enjoying life.

The person who can push human beings to divinity, to the space of completion is called Jagadguru - the guru who awakens. He is the teacher, the Master of the whole Universe.

The life of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, pūrṇāvatāra is an example of living in the space of completion, pūrṇatva. He has not done anything out of incompletion. He has done everything out of completion and He has done everything, which we think will be done only out of incompletion.

This science of completion is the most sacred secret revealed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa in the Bhagavad Gītā, which is the most powerful rāja vidyā rāja guhyaṃ, royal sacred knowledge and royal sacred secret. This royal sacred science of completion keeps us eternally in love with life, eternally experiencing life.

Please understand, some religions teach what completion is; some religions show us what completion is not, some religions show us the effect of incompletion. This science of completion is the essence of all religions, the essence of Hindu knowledge, the source of the knowledge of Hindu tradition. Completion means living and acting without any hangover of the past incidents, words, actions or memories. Not having a hangover does not mean that you will not remember your past at all. When you are in completion, you will remember past incidents and actions, but they will no longer have the power to cause pain or anger or guilt in you anymore.

Completion is nothing but reclaiming the bits and pieces you threw away in unconsciousness. The parts of you, bits of you, pieces of you that you shared or threw them with so many things and people in your life unconsciously; reclaiming all those parts back and becoming complete with you, is Completion.

If you are intellectual, He gives you the Gītā; He is Gītā Kṛṣṇa. If you are emotional, you can have Rādhā Kṛṣṇa, the beloved of Rādhā. He can sing and dance; He can play; He can give you the ultimate emotional fulfillment. Understand, making each one feel that he belongs to them, is the basic need for the romance to happen. Kṛṣṇa was able to do that. And He has the ability to handle all the anger and jealousy of people who were not able to raise themselves to His level.

At the being level, you straightaway want the technology of enlightenment. Again, He offers the truth, Dhyāna Yoga, the path of meditation techniques in the Gītā.

When you see the way He radiates knowledge, love, romance, intelligence and strategy planning; only He can be called as pūrṇāvatāra. The word pūrṇāvatāra can be given only for Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the unimaginable expression of ultimate Consciousness.

Kṛṣṇa is complete fulfillment. He is such an embodiment of completion. The very life of Kṛṣṇa is a technique that leads you to enlightenment. The body language of an enlightened person is a sūtra, a technique. Kṛṣṇa is the being whose body language straightaway leads you to enlightenment. Understand that Rāma will lead you to dharma, righteousness. If you follow what Rāma did, you will have dharma, but with Kṛṣṇa, you will straightaway have mokṣa, liberation!

The power of Kṛṣṇa's presence and the amount of suffering and opposition that He has to go through due to His pure love, His pure energy, and His pure intelligence! Even after creating His own kingdom at Dvārikapuri, He has to face so much. The sacrifice that He has done to establish dharma and the way He lives dharma and protects dharma. And He is such a powerful strategy planner that when needed He even escapes from the war field. When needed He even hid Himself.

The space of completion that He holds and the space from which He operates! Please understand that when you operate from the space of completion, whatever you do is līlā - a divine play. It is not boring life.

Krsna is the first Incarnation who demonstrates the concept of lila on planet Earth; the first Incarnation who demonstrates that life can be lived from the space of completion; life can be lived from the space of joy. Kṛṣṇa is the embodiment of joy, embodiment of bliss, embodiment of life.

When we experience the being of Kṛṣṇa, when we understand Kṛṣṇa, His very being is a technique. His very life is a technique. That is why there is a beautiful word in the Bhāgavatam (Hindu epic glorifying devotion onto Incarnations) called līlā dhyāna. Just remembering the līlā, the playful pranks of Kṛṣṇa, is dhyāna, meditation. No other incarnation is given the word līlā dhyāna. No other Incarnation is praised like this. Just remembering His acts is meditation. Just remembering His līlā, divine acts, we are led to completion and liberation.

An Incarnation's līlā or pastimes always leads you to completion. Your past always leads you to incompletion. If you constantly remember what you did when you were a child, you will be in more and more incompletion. If you constantly remember what Śrī Kṛṣṇa did when He was a child, you will be more and more in the space of completion. Remembering the Incarnation's pastimes, līlā dhyāna creates more and more completion and the higher space.

Bhaktas are the ones who experience completion out of the emotion which happens due to the higher consciousness līlā or pastimes. Kṛṣṇa also appeals to the being level people who are continually aspiring, seeking an experience straightaway. Just by His will, He can give that experience to them. Just by will, Kṛṣṇa can give the experience of enlightenment, eternal bliss to Arjuna. He can give the Divine experience of infinity to Arjuna, by just showing him His cosmic form, viśvarūpa darśan.

Kṛṣṇa shows that He is in everybody, that everybody is in Him. Whether we are intellectually oriented, emotionally oriented or being level oriented, we can find our completion in Kṛṣṇa.

When intellect ripens, it becomes intelligence; when emotion ripens, it becomes devotion; when our being ripens, we become enlightened, complete. All these three enlightenment spaces of completion - being, devotion and intelligence - express at their peak in Kṛṣṇa. Hence, Kṛṣṇa can fulfill and complete every being. That is why He is called Jagadguru, master of the whole Universe.

Just through His logic, He has not convinced us about His greatness. The way Kṛṣṇa handles every moment of His life, the way He lives every moment of His life, the way He holds Himself, the way He expresses Himself, He has stolen our hearts. Kṛṣṇa is the Jagadguru. Kṛṣṇa appeals to every being. He has created keys to open all the locks. He has created methods to give the spiritual experience to the whole of humanity, to people who have come, people who are here, and those yet to come. He has created the technology even for the future generations. He is nitya-ānanda - eternal bliss. Gītā is the ultimate scripture - śāstra, stotra and sūtra.

Kṛṣṇa is beyond scriptures. We can't speak about any dimension of Kṛṣṇa. He is the Whole. Whenever we try to describe any of His dimensions, the words look so futile. His is endowed with ananta-kalyān-guṇa, His innumerable spiritual energies and infinite auspicious qualities.

When Kṛṣṇa says,

nainaṃ chindanti śastrāṇi nainaṃ dahati pāvakaḥ |
na cainaṃ kledayanty āpo na śoṣayati mārutaḥ || 2.23

Weapons do not cleave, nor fire burns the Ātman.

Water does not wet it and wind does not dry it.

When He talks about the basic truths of life and spirituality, it is śāstra. He is giving intellectual knowledge of completion.

When Arjuna says,

namaḥ purustād atha pṛṣthatas te namoʻstu te sarvata eva sarva |
ananta-vīryāmita-vikramas tvaṃ sarvaṃ samāpṇoti tato ʻsi sarvaḥ || 11.40

Oh Lord, I bow down to you from the front, from behind, from all sides; You are infinitely mighty, pervading everything, you are the Ultimate Arjuna is expressing the stotra; he is praising the Lord with his devotion.

Krṣṇa says,

yaṃ yaṃ vāpi smaran bhāvaṃ tyajaty ante kalevaram |
taṃ taṃ evaiti kaunteya sadā tad-bhāva-bhāvitaḥ || 8.6

Whatever your state of thought is when you leave this body, absorbed in that thought, that alone you attain, without fail, O Arjuna

Here Kṛṣṇa provides Arjuna the technique, the most powerful sūtra that helps anyone attain and create his reality as what he wants to.

Bhagavad Gītā is the only complete scripture that combines the wisdom of śāstras, the depth of feeling connection of stotras and the practical reality of sūtras. It is a means to enlightenment for all, a means for enlightening our being with completion, delivered by the Master of masters, by the Incarnation of incarnations, Bhagavān Śrī Krṣṇa.

Arjuna's Dilemma and Four Identities

In this first chapter of Bhagavad Gītā, arjunaviśāda-yogaḥ, we see Arjuna, the most courageous fighter amongst the Pāṇḍava princes and the darling of all his teachers, winner of Draupadī and the close friend of Kṛṣṇa, in deep dilemma, incompletion.

Arjuna is both the yogi and the kṣatriya. As a yogi, he is deeply spiritual, centered and complete within himself, and deeply aware and integrated to his moral and ethical obligations. As the kṣatriya, Arjuna is the warrior leader, empowered with responsibility, ready to avenge, ready to impose order and control for protecting and upholding dharma; he is the typical kṣatriya prince.

Only with enlightenment, is it possible to continuously and consistently proceed with both these personalities of inner completion as a yogi and outer responsibility to enrich as a warrior leader without faltering. Arjuna falters as he faces his enemies on the battlefield of the great Mahābhārat War. His dilemma unfolds.

Arjuna's dilemma is such that he is now able to be neither a yogi nor a kṣatriya. Known as parantapa, the destroyer of enemies, as vijaya, the undefeatable warrior and as dhanañjaya, the unconquerable archer, the winner of wealth, Nara Arjuna, the best among men, loses his detachment as a yogi. In turn, he loses his courage as a kṣatriya, a warrior hero. He loses his space of completion and falls into such deep grief that bewilders his mind - bhramatīva ca me manaḥ (1.30) and burns his sense coverings - tvak caiva paridahyate (1.29).

He sees his enemies and identifies himself with them. In front of him are his mentors, family and friends, his svajanam. They are his extension, his lineage and his inner identity. He can no longer pretend with his outer identity that he is the ultimate warrior, the kṣatriya, who can dispassionately dispatch them to death.

Arjuna's dilemma is the dilemma of humanity. It represents the collective root patterns of humanity. It is an internal conflict between what we feel as us, what we feel we can actually do, our inner identity- mamakāra; what we project as us to others, what we feel we want to actually do, our outer identity - ahaṁkara; what others think and perceive as us - anyakāra; and what we think about life and others or what we perceive as our value systems and beliefs, our svānyakāra. You don't have just one identity, as you imagine. You have four identities. At all times you carry four identities or dimensions together.

Your own expectation about you is mamakāra or Inner Image. It is the inner idea and the experience you carry about yourself like - I am healthy, I am ugly, I am intelligent, I cannot tolerate hard work, I love people etc. But, the idea you carry about you is always less than what you project yourself to be for others.

The second identity is how you show or project yourself to others called ahaṁkāra or Outer Image. Unfortunately, what you project is always far more than what you believe yourself to be.

The third identity you carry is the image that others have about you, how others expect you to be, called anyakāra or Others' Image. How others perceive you may be different from how you project yourself to them, because people create their opinion about you from the subtle signals you give them, rather than what you openly project. Human beings are intelligent enough to catch even what you don't say or especially what you don't say.

And the fourth identity is very subtle, because it is not directly related to you. It is how you experience life to be for you and what you expect others to be, called svānyakāra or Life Image. For example, you may feel, life is lonely, life is complicated or life is sacred or life is scary, or life and people are always showering me with everything. Please understand, this is also your identity, because it defines the exact experience you will be receiving from the people and situations from life!

Living in your peak capacity in all the four identities, aligning your life to all the four dimensions, and expressing your peak potential in all these four, is Authenticity, Śraddha.

It is the confusion, the non-alignment between all these identities that is responsible for all our dilemmas, our inauthenticies, our sufferings, everything. What is the only obstruction for this alignment? Our root thought patterns. The first attack of any strong emotion happening in us and imbalancing our whole cognition, giving birth to our mind - the pattern we develop from that moment, is root thought pattern. The root thought pattern is the source of our every response to life.

Arjuna understood his kṣatriya code of conduct and responsibility very well. This code demanded that he cannot turn down a righteous challenge to fight and gamble. This kṣatriya code was not only his ahaṁkāra or outer image - how he showed himself to others but also the anyakāra or others' image also - how his clan expected him to be. However, his own feeling about him, his mamakāra was based on his deep-rooted attachment to his clan and lineage that proved stronger than his ahaṁkāra, what he perceived and projected to be his responsibilities. These doubtful feelings were far stronger than code of his conduct, and overpowered even his outer image, which he projected as the most powerful and responsible warrior on the face of Earth.

In effect, Arjuna's life image or svanyakāra became seeing life as a cause of just the opposite of auspiciousness; clearly saying how he perceives his life, he cries out, 'nimittāni ca paśyāmi viparītāni keśava (1.30) - I see only causes of misfortune, O Keśava!

With all these non-aligned four identities, Arjuna is unable to stand any longer on the warfield. His powerless inner image, a deep self-doubt about himself that arise from his root patterns, make him derive power from his people, svajanam and identify himself only through them.

Understand, there are four kinds of religions or philosophies - philosophy that encages you; philosophy that enslaves you; philosophy that engages you; and philosophy that enriches you. The philosophy that encages you makes you animal. You are neither useful to others nor useful to you. All philosophies that make you fanatic, that encage you, are terrorist philosophies. When you are encaged, you become fanatic.

Next, comes the enslaving philosophies where the introduction about you is completely enslaving. They do not make you a terrorist, but you become a slave. Ideologically, you do not have freedom, independence. You are no more fresh.

Then come the philosophies that engage you. They tend to convince you with dialogue. The more and more you get engaged, the more and more you get attracted.

Then comes the philosophies that enrich you. For that, I will give the example of the traditions of aghoris, the tradition of advaitis, the tradition of yogis and siddhas. Yoga, Siddha, Aghori, and of course Vedānta, Sāṅkhya Yoga - all these philosophies are very powerful, enriching philosophies. Because Vedānta introduces yourself to your Self as

'amṛtasya pūtrāḥ - children of immortality' with a beautiful declaration of completion: Om pūrṇamadaḥ pūrṇamidaṃ pūrṇāt pūrṇamudacyate I pūrṇasya pūrṇamādāya pūrṇameva avaśiṣyate

Please understand, human beings because of the societal upbringing with rules and regulations, with do's and don'ts suffer a gap between the inner image, mamakāra and outer image, ahaṁkāra. The gap between the inner image and outer image creates a deep self-doubt. This self-doubt is Arjuna's dilemma. So, understand, whenever the gap between the inner image and outer image is established in us, we suffer with self-doubt. This self-doubt leads to self-hatred and then to self-denial.

Some philosophies teach us that we are the sinners, which is self-denial. Some philosophies teach that we are the slaves; that we are supposed to be the followers. This is nothing but self-hatred. These philosophers exploit our root thought pattern of self-doubt by introducing our self to our self as sinners. In the spiritual sense, there is no such thing as sin. There is nothing that is totally good or bad. When you become truly complete, you realize that there are no sins.

Vedānta is the only honest, integrated, authentic, responsible, and enriching philosophy which does not exploit our self-doubt pattern and which reminds us that even when we feel that we are removed from the Whole, we remain as Whole. Even when we have self-doubt, understand we are the Self. Even when you have self- doubt, you are Self. Self-doubt is only self doubt.

This should be the scale, the introduction we should be given about us to ourselves. What kind of an introduction a philosophy gives to us about us, only based on that we can classify that philosophy; whether it is encaging or enslaving or engaging, or enriching philosophy. The whole Vedānta system is all about enriching. The whole Bhagavad Gītā is all about enriching. It is the greatest enriching philosophy that introduces you to yourself as the Self.

Whatever happens to us happens as a result of natural laws or dharma. Dharma means the natural law of the Cosmos. Morality, ethics, orders, and rules and regulations vary from time to time. They change by geography, from country to country, and from society to society. But the science of completing root patterns and living with the four spiritual principles of life, the dharma of Integrity, Authenticity, Responsibility and Enriching self and others, is an absolute principle.

Arjuna's progress on this path of dharma, unto his self-discovery to re-establish himself in the space of Completion is the path of Bhagavad Gītā. That can also be our path of dharma, if we internalize the message of the Gītā. When there is no conflict between what we feel as us, what we wish to be for us and for others; what we project ourselves to be, and what others feel about us and wish from us, then we have no dilemma, no incompletion. When we are complete with our root thought patterns and we act in total completion, we have no dilemma. We are established in the space of completion.

All of us are born with pre-existing desires. This is called prārabdha karma, those desires that we choose to complete when we take birth. They carry their own energy for completion in that lifetime. The trouble is that the time between death and the next birth is quick and painful. The body-mind system lapses into unconsciousness, a coma, as the energy leaves matter (the body). As the energy enters another piece of matter, another body-mind, the memory of the prārabdha karma is erased. Therefore, when we are reborn in another body, we no longer remember why we were born or with what desires and purpose we have chosen this birth. This non-remembrance of our 'great why,' our true desires and purpose creates the self-doubt in us. This is the root cause of our dilemma. This is the root of our root pattern.

Incarnations and enlightened beings choose a conscious birth out of their energy of completion with full awareness of their reason for birth. They know what they are here for. They have no confusion, no dilemma, no patterns. Arjuna is not at that stage, nor are most of us.

Fortunately, it is possible to become aware of our prārabdha karma, our opening balance of desires. We can then work towards their completion during each life without accumulating more karma in this lifetime. Āgāmya karma is the 'current account' of desires that we accumulate this lifetime. By exhausting the prārabdha, the incompletions that we brought with us to complete and by not accumulating more āgāmya, we reduce the overall 'account' of total karmas that we collect over millions of births. This total account is called sañcita karma.

These karmas or unfulfilled desires are also referred to as saṃskāras or mūla vāsanas, the root thought patterns stored in our unconscious space, stirring up these desires. They are also called vāsanas or conflicting patterns, which in turn create the desires and store them as incomplete memories. These three words can be used interchangeably for all practical purposes, although they do have separate deeper meanings. By understanding the nature and types of saṃskāras or mūla vāsana, vāsana and karma, root patterns, conflicting patterns and incompletions that we carry over into this birth, we can work towards their completion. Then, our stock of root patterns diminishes.

This science of completion and creation is also the process of yoga, the Yogaśāstra that Kṛṣṇa takes Arjuna through in these eighteen chapters of Bhagavad Gītā. These teachings are not meant for Arjuna alone. They are meant for us, so that we complete with our dilemmas and self-doubts, drop everything and surrender to Existence, and experience the ultimate truth of Enlightenment, mokṣa. The Gitopaniṣad, the science of Kṛṣṇa Consciousness, is the science of completion, pūrṇatva which is the science of Eternal Bliss, nityānanda

1.7 Best of the Brāhmaṇas, let me tell you about the powerful leaders who command my army, so that you know.

It is significant that a blind man gave the opening statement of this great scripture. Not only had he lost the power of sight, but also the power of insight, the wisdom to distinguish between right and wrong.

Dhṛtarāṣṭra's brother Pāṇḍu handed over to him his throne, as well as the care of his five children. From the point of view of any righteous person, these five Pāṇḍava princes were Dhṛtarāṣṭra's responsibility as well. However, the separation born out of the self-doubt in Dhṛtarāṣṭra's mind was clear when he said, 'My sons and the sons of Pāṇḍu.'

'What are they doing?' he asked Sañjaya plaintively, 'These sons of mine, the hundred Kaurava princes, and those five sons of Pāṇḍu, the Pāṇḍava princes?' He claimed no ownership of the Pāṇḍava princes and no responsibility or concern for their welfare. His concern was for his own sons.

Dhṛtarāṣṭra is the embodiment of self-doubt which is always blind. His attachment to his sons, especially the crown prince Duryodhana, had blinded his powers of reasoning. Whatever his son did received his endorsement. From early adolescence, Duryodhana had been plotting to kill his Pāṇḍava cousins. Although Dhṛtarāṣṭra pretended ignorance of his son's evil deeds, he was aware of what his son was up to. Even when Duryodhana and his brother Duśśāssana went to the extreme extent of disgracing Draupadī, the wife of the Pāṇḍava princes, by trying to disrobe her in public in his court, Dhṛtarāṣṭra seemed powerless to act. When Duryodhana finally refused to give the Pāṇḍavas even a needlepoint of land, still Dhṛtarāśṭra kept quiet, ensuring that blood would be shed.

The sad part of the tale was that Dhṛtarāśṭra was aware that he was non- integrated and inauthentic, following the path of evil and that it would result in the destruction of his clan. Yet he seemed powerless to act otherwise. Dhṛtarāśṭra's tale is common to humankind. Often, we follow wrong paths even though we know it is wrong, we go out of integrity and authenticity almost as if under a hypnotic spell of doubting ourselves. We know that the result may not be in our best interests in the long term but we can't stop ourselves. Gītā, therefore, begins from this premise of blinding self-doubting pattern, the primal pattern that invokes all other patterns in us.

It is not merely the fight between good and evil. Far from that, it is about our root patterns, our inner conflict in being unable to do the right thing, not being courageous enough to stand for what is right, and not taking responsibility to be complete. It is about the lack of awareness, clarity and courage to follow the path of righteousness, dharma of integrity, authenticity, responsibility, and enriching. It is a fight between good and evil within us, not merely outside of us. It is actually a fight between the completions and incompletions within us, between possibilities and patterns within us. Kṛṣṇa, the Superconscious, constantly looks over our being eternally reminding us of our space of highest positivity, possibility, divinity and enlightenment with His tremendous patience and infinite compassion. Yet we ignore this divine call within us, caught in the self-doubting illusion that what we choose to do instead will make us happy.

Dhṛtarāṣṭra refers to Kurukṣetra, the site of this world war, as a holy land or place of righteousness, dharmakṣetra.

dharmakṣetre kurukṣetra samavetā yuyutsavaḥ | māmakāḥ pāṇḍavāś caiva kim akurtava sañjaya || 1.1

People ask, 'How can a battlefield be called a holy land?' If you study the history of humanity, you find that it has always been a battlefield. Whether these wars were morally guided or misguided is a matter of opinion. What is right for one need not be right for another.

Mahābhārat beautifully says, 'Let the fight be in kurukṣetra!' In Saṃskṛit, kurukṣetra means space of creation. Kuru means doing. Let the fight be in the space of creation. The whole place of fight should not be with the lowest realm, but with the highest realm. So, you will always be in the middle. In the fight itself, you will always be in the middle, and in the end you will be at the peak.

Let the fight always be in kurukṣetra, the zone of creation, not in the zone of destruction. All your worrying, all your thinking, all your basic cognition is, 'Will I lose this job or not?' Even in your nightmare dreams, you will only be worried about, 'Will I lose this job or not?' No! Always let your fight be, 'Will I become CEO or not?' not 'Will I lose this job or not?'

Shift the battlefield onto the land of creation. Let kurukṣetra be the battlefield - dharmakṣetre kurukṣetra. The fight in your life, if it is in the field of creation, you are living in dharma. If it is in the field of failure, you are living in adharma. This is the meaning of this first śloka (verse) of the Gītā.

Practically every century, if not every decade, there have been battles in some part of the world. Almost all were created out of the belief that one party was morally right and the other wrong. In that sense, each battle was fought to restore righteousness, as believed by both parties. So, in that sense every battlefield was a holy site according to someone's belief, restoring the highest values and beliefs. In the case of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, he had an additional reason. He implicitly recognized the divinity of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, whose mere presence on this battlefield conferred upon it the mantle of righteousness. Wherever Kṛṣṇa was, that was where dharma, righteousness would prevail. Even in his confused state of doubtful thinking, there was enough clarity in Dhṛtarāṣṭra's mind to acknowledge the supremacy of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. This revealed itself in his choice of words. It was as if, at one level, Dhṛtarāṣṭra knew that the fate of his Kaurava clan was sealed.

Life is a fight till you are enlightened. But, let your fight be in kurukṣetra, the field of creation, not in the field of losing. Don't be constantly fighting with, 'Will I get heart-attack and die?' 'Will my health collapse?' 'Will others leave me?' 'Will I become bankrupt?' No! The ground on which the battle happens decides your existence and expansion. Let your visualization be 'Will I become CEO or not?' 'Will I become yogi or not?' 'Will I become jñani or not?' 'Will I become a rich guy or not?' 'Will I become a leader or not?' 'Will I become enlightened or not?'

If your fight is in the direction of kuru, you will win the game very easily with least or no stress. It does not take more than forty-eight hours to convince yourself to shift the battleground. You just need to complete some of the self-doubts that you got from your elders, family and societal conditioning. Complete with them. So, all you need to do is just shift your core visualization, your core cognition, your core energy.

Change the battlefield and enter the energy-field of dharma, led and controlled by Śrī Kṛṣṇa, immediately you will experience so much of completion. Kṛṣṇa is the epitome of dharma (righteousness), and Kṛṣṇa was on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, then how could they lose? The tragic fate of Dhṛtarāṣṭra was that he knew that the destruction of his clan was inevitable, and yet his self-doubts had turned into self-denial, making him powerless and deny the obvious path of dharma.

The moment you change the battlefield from adharma to dharma, you may even become enlightened; because it is your default parking spot that decides whether you are enlightened or not. Otherwise you ARE enlightened! You just need to remember and reclaim it. The best way to remember and reclaim it is to complete with your self-doubting patterns and shift the battlefield itself. See, now your battlefield is 'Any one day I am going to become bankrupt. Let me delay it as much as possible!' Instead, let it be 'Any one day I am going to become the richest being. Let me do it as early as possible.'

We can all be like Sañjaya, with our third eyes open instead of being blind like Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This is one of the messages of Gītā. Whether you are blind or have physical eyes, you continue to see through your inner eyes. Dhṛtarāṣṭra blinded by his self-doubts, saw only his sons, who represent his incomplete identity. The third eye is not just an eye; it is the very source of consciousness. Third-eye is nothing but conscious-seeing. Consciously seeing our incompletions, our inner conflicts is the first step in opening the third eye, the energy center located between the eyebrows. Third eye can be awakened with right thinking, the thinking based on dharma. Aligning all your thinking based on the cognition of the four principles - tattvas of integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching is right thinking.

Duryodhana then started praising the strength of the great Pāṇḍava warriors, such as Bhīma and Arjuna, who too were students of Droṇa, as well as a number of other great warriors fighting for the Pāṇḍavas. He did this not because he genuinely wanted to, but mainly to point out to Droṇa the mistakes he felt Droṇa had committed. Duryodhana then decided to explain to Droṇa about the great warriors on the Kaurava side. Duryodhana was no longer a disciple addressing his master. It was as if Duryodhana had hired Droṇa as a mercenary to wage a battle for him. He alternately berated Droṇa's lack in foresight in training his potential killers, who now led the opposing army and then pacified him by listing him at the head of his own great warriors.

Duryodhana is embodiment of self-denial. He was in deep inner conflict. His whole life was filled with deep, painful reactions as he was fully convinced that he is a failure, the feeling of 'I cannot make it!' So, constantly he has to prove his failures to himself by destroying others, never creating anything by himself. He had no sense of guilt going to war against his brothers, as he desperately wanted to keep the kingdom for himself and did not believe that he would be safe as long as the Pāṇḍava princes were alive.

If you are suffering with greed, your root pattern will be fear. If you are suffering with insecurity, your root pattern will be worrying. Understand, once the patterns are formed they act in a completely different way so that we can never discover them. Duryodhana's inner identity, mamakāra was rooted in deep fear and insecurity born from self-denial. Self-denial was his root pattern. And his outer identity, ahaṁkāra, the image he projected to others was greed to possess, which led to anger, hatred, violence, and ultimately his destruction. His problem was not one of doing right or wrong. His pattern was might is right. Whatever he did was right, according to him. He was not a man given to deep thinking. All incompletions boil down to just two patterns: violence and fear. Both are one and the same. When fear comes, violence comes. When violence comes, fear comes.

Incompletions are nothing but not looking at the fact and trying to pervert it, interpret it, manipulate it. All your plans to manipulate, pervert and exploit is incompletion.

Duryodhana tried to pervert, manipulate, push and pull as he wanted to possess and conquer everything. But victory remains as victory wherever dharma is, wherever Kṛṣṇa is.

However, Duryodhana had no trust in many of the great warriors who had taken his side. Please understand, all distrust, all doubting others is self-doubt. This is the rule of thumb. When you are in incompletion driven by your root pattern, you will never be able to trust anybody. You will go on doubting others and you. All self-doubting is not having the right reason or adequate reasons. Duryodhana did not have right or adequate reasons for his action to wage the war. So, he constantly kept on doubting and distrusting others. He knew that many, especially Droṇa, Bhīṣma, and Kṛpa, who were also the teachers of the Pāṇḍava princes, did not want to fight the Pāṇḍava army. He knew that they were compelled from a moral standpoint to fight for him and not as directed by their consciousness. This was the source of his conflict, uncertainty, and incompletions.

Duryodhana's root pattern of self-denial was steeped in deep fear of survival. His pattern of self-doubting, ātma saṇdeh led to self-denial, ātma droḥa, leading to his self-destruction, ātma hatyā. The worst killer is the self-doubting pattern. The one who doubts himself and doubts others is already in hell. Hell is sponsored by the people who doubt themselves and others. It was also strange that at the beginning of the war Duryodhana chose to go to Droṇa, and not Bhīṣma, his great grandfather and Commander-in-Chief.

Droṇa was a subject of the king, to whom Duryodhana could talk abrasively. Bhīṣma, on the other hand, was his great grandfather, the one who had given up his chance to be king to fulfill his own father's moral obligations, and to satisfy his father's lust. Duryodhana could not have said the same words to Bhīṣma at this stage of the war.

1.12 Bhīṣma, the mighty patriarch of the Kuru dynasty and grandsire,

Then blew upon his conch loudly, roaring like a lion and Duryodhana was joyful.

Bhīṣma was the first Kaurava Commander-in-Chief and Duryodhana wanted to make sure that the entire Kaurava army was committed to his leadership. In the past, Duryodhana had not hidden his feelings that Bhīṣma was partial to the Pāṇḍavas. Now, however, the die was cast, and Bhīṣma, the greatest warrior either side had known, was leading the Kaurava army. Duryodhana wanted to take no chances that his past hatred towards Bhīṣma would affect his assembled supporters. Though he knew that Bhīṣma and even Droṇa would have gone with the Pāṇḍava princes and Kṛṣṇa, had it not been their strong bonds of duty, he could not afford to antagonize them.

The Qualities of Dharma

Bhīṣma is the embodiment of dharma, righteousness. It is one of the greatest ironies of Mahābhārat that wise men like Bhīṣma and Droṇa chose to be on Duryodhana's side, knowing fully well that whatever path Duryodhana was following was not only morally incorrect, but also against dharma, the cosmic law, being out-of-integrity and inauthentic.

In the highest spiritual sense there is no right or wrong morally. Everything is neutral. Bhīṣma and Droṇa were not ordinary people, they were highly matured souls, adept in living the scriptural truths. Moreover, they were fully aware that Kṛṣṇa is a divine Incarnation, and the very fact that Kṛṣṇa sided with the Pāṇḍavas was a clear indication to them as to how the war would unfold. As great warriors themselves, they had no fears about their own deaths; and more importantly they had no guilt, no incompletions about what they had embarked upon.

Please understand, integrity is not morality or ethics of the society. Integrity is a spiritual value. Integrity is you fulfilling the word and thought you give to yourself and others, and experiencing a state of pūrṇatva, completion with yourself and others.

Integrity is not ethics. Ethics is different, integrity is different. Morality and ethics vary from time to time. Integrity is absolute. These warriors disapproved of Duryodhana's insult of the Pāṇḍava princes and Draupadī in the court but did not protest. They disapproved of Duryodhana's instigation of this war and yet took his side, knowing fully well that what lay ahead was destruction.

Bhīṣma understood the desperate fear running through Duryodhana's mind, and he felt the need to reassure him. In response to these exaggerated claims of Duryodhana, Bhīṣma blew his conch as a sign of resounding affirmation of whatever had been said by Duryodhana. Sañjaya said that Bhīṣma's conch sounded like the roar of a lion, coming from the oldest and the bravest of all the warriors assembled on the battlefield. It was also an affirmation of Bhīṣma's own support to the Kaurava prince and the signal for the war to begin. Bhīṣma's conch was a celebratory signal, seeking victory.

1.17 That great archer, the king of Kāśī, the great fighter Śikhaṇḍi, Dṛṣṭadyumna, Virāṭa and the invincible Sātyaki,

1.18 Drupada, the sons of Draupadī, and the others such as the mighty-armed son of Subhadrā, all sounded their conches.

Conches, called śankha in Saṃskṛit, are the shells of mollusks that live in the sea. From time immemorial, Hindu scriptures have referred to the use of conches during ritualistic, devotional and celebratory occasions. In general, a conch is blown to signify obeisance to the Divine or royalty, or in celebration of an auspicious and victorious occasion. Blowing the conch signified joy and victory.Each of the great warriors in the Mahābhārat war had his own personal conch with its unique sound signature. Most of the great warriors also had their own flags that flew on their chariots and their weapons, especially their bows, had great spiritual significance. The Divine often bestowed them upon the warrior after a long penance. It is said that even if his flag were masked by dust and distance, Arjuna's presence in any part of the battlefield would be known by the sound of his conch and the twang of his bow.

When Bhīṣma blew his conch in support of Duryodhana, the response was tumultuous on both sides. Every warrior on the battlefield took out his conch and blew his signature note. Of all the sounds that emanated at that moment, a few were heard above the rest. Kṛṣṇa sounded His Pāñcajanya, the conch of Viṣṇu. The sound of Kṛṣṇa's Pāñcajanya drowned out all other sounds on the battlefield. It was the victorious announcement for all that the Divine was already present with the Pāṇḍava army.

Vyāsa, through Sañjaya, says that Kṛṣṇa sounded His divine conch. This is significant since Vyāsa attributes divinity only to Kṛṣṇa's conch, not to anyone else's. He refers to Kṛṣṇa as Mādhava, and later as Hṛiṣīkeśa. Mādhava signifies that Kṛṣṇa is an Incarnation of Viṣṇu, who is the husband of Lakṣmī, goddess of wealth and fortune. In this context, it signifies that whoever Kṛṣṇa sides with would be invincible. Kṛṣṇa is then referred to as Hṛiṣīkeśa, controller of the senses, the superconscious, who has created the māyā, the illusion that is this great war of Mahābhārat. Vyāsa implies that all that happens is a creation of Kṛṣṇa. For what purpose? He alone knows. The Divine truly has no purpose. The Divine IS, that's all.

Kṛṣṇa was Arjuna's charioteer. The chariot was a blessing from Agnī, the fire god. This chariot was said to be capable of traversing all the three worlds. His bow Gāṇḍīva was also a gift from Agni. Arjuna is referred to as Dhañanjaya, winner of wealth, in reference to his ability to generate the wealth needed by his brother Yudhishṭra. Not to be outdone, Bhīma blew on his conch Pauṇḍra, a fearsome sound that invoked dread amongst the Kaurava army. Here Bhīma is called Vrikodara, one with the stomach of a wolf; Bhīma was forever hungry and ate more than all his brothers combined, and yet had a lean and flat stomach of a wolf, and like that predator, he was feared by his enemies for his strength and anger.

The other three Pāṇḍava princes, Yudhiṣṭra, Nakula and Sahadeva and then the great warriors, Drupada, Virāṭa, Sātyaki, Śikhaṇḍī, Dṛṣṭadyumna, Abhimanyu and others followed, all blowing their conches in celebration of their impending victory.

Each of these warriors had a great history. Yudhiṣṭra, the eldest of the Pāṇḍava princes, was born to his mother Kuntī through the grace of Yama, the god of justice and death, and was universally known as Dharmrāja, the king of truth, as he was established in dharma, an embodiment of integrity with the power of words, never known to tell a lie. Nakula and Sahadeva embodied enriching, the power of living who were born to Mādri, the second wife of Pāṇḍu, through the grace of the Aśvini Kumāras, celestial beings.

Drupada, the king of Pāñchāla, was the father of Dṛṣṭadyumna and Draupadī, wife of the Pāṇḍavas. Dṛṣṭadyumna was born to Drupada, when he prayed to Lord Śiva to give him a son who would match Droṇa in valor and vanquish him in battle. Virāṭa was the king in whose kingdom the five Pāṇḍava princes and Draupadī spent a year in hiding. His daughter married Abhimanyu, Arjuna's son by Subhadrā, Kṛṣṇa's sister.

Śikhaṇḍi was born as Bhīṣma's nemesis, when Ambā, a princess whom Bhīṣma captured as a bride for his stepbrother Vicitravīrya, immolated herself to be reborn to avenge her shame.

It is as if Sañjaya, the narrator of the incidents of war, repeatedly tries to impress upon the blind king Dhṛtarāṣṭra the caliber of the Pāṇḍava warriors and their glorious antecedents, so that the shock of the impending disaster to the Kuru clan of Dhṛtarāṣṭra would not be so unexpected. Sañjaya specifically refers to these warriors as 'aparājita', invincible, always victorious in whatever task they undertook, with the clear implication that they would be victorious in this war.

It is significant that Bhiṣma's conch, sounded by him as the Commander-in-Chief of the Kaurava army, to signify the beginning of the war, was responded to by Kṛṣṇa, and not by Dṛṣṭadyumna, the Pāṇḍava Commander-in-Chief, or any of the other Pāṇḍava princes. Kṛṣṇa's was a response of victory, not a reaction to the challenge issued by Bhiṣma.

Law of Cosmos is Responsibilism

Understand, if you feel that you are not responsible, you react. If you feel that you are responsible, you respond. When all your actions are responses and not reactions, you are a karma yogi; no karma binds you - you are living in completion and expressing completion. The cosmic vibration of Kṛṣṇa's Pāñcajanya conch was a declaration of His responsibility for everything in and around Him, an acceptance of the fact that whatever was thrown at the Pāṇḍava army was being accepted by Him, Divinity Incarnate.

Kṛṣṇa, as the superconscious guide of the Pāṇḍavas, the five embodiments of dharma, absolves them of any incompletions, any guilt or wrongdoing by taking upon Himself the responsibility for everything happening and is to happen.

Responsibility, the power of feeling, prema śakti, means living, thinking, feeling, acting and cognizing life from the truth that YOU are the Source of everything and therefore, you are responsible for all happenings inside you and around you.

The biggest question we have in our mind is, 'How can I be responsible for everything happening around me? I can be held responsible for what is happening inside me. How can I be held responsible for what is happening outside me? For example, if an accident happens in my life, how can I be responsible?' There is an important difference between being the cause for something, and being responsible for it. Sometimes you may not be the reason for a certain happening, but if it is affecting your life, you are responsible for that happening. For example, you may not be the cause of political corruption in your country, but as a citizen of the country, you are responsible for it. You may not be the reason for it, but that doesn't mean that you are not responsible in truth.

You need to know that unless you take responsibility, you are neither going to improve the situation, nor are you going to expand your inner space. A person who does not feel responsible even for his own actions is an animal. He lives in a very low-level consciousness! Duryodhana along with the Kaurava army represents this low-level consciousness.

A person who feels responsible for his own actions is a human being. He lives in a middle-level consciousness. There were many warriors who felt responsible for their actions, their duties and even supported Duryodhana, they represent this middle level consciousness.

A person who takes responsibility even for others' actions is Divine. He lives in leadership consciousness, Īśvaratva. Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the Īśvara, the leader of the Universe, responsible for the whole Cosmos, with the ability to do anything with the Cosmos.

We always feel that responsibility is a burden. No! It is a power. Responsibility makes you powerful. Responsibility directly leads you to leadership consciousness, Īśvaratva. As long as you feel responsible only for your family, you remain as the head of just your family. When you feel responsible for the community, you become a leader of the community. As your feeling of responsibility expands in you, your leadership quality also expands as a power.

The decision to feel responsible for the whole Cosmos is Enlightenment. Feeling responsible for the Whole and declaring to live by your feeling is responsible declaration, known in Hindu spiritual practice as nidhidhyāsana. Responsible declaration unlocks the power of feeling or prema śakti in you.

Cosmos functions on 'responsibilism.' The law of Cosmos, the natural law of Existence - dharma is responsibilism. The law of nature is responsibilism. Kṛṣṇa leads the whole war with this one truth, satya of 'responsibilism.' The whole Mahābhārat war is Kṛṣṇa's expression of the power of His responsibilism, Īśvaratva.

Even though Kṛṣṇa or His actions are not responsible for the war, even though He is not the reason for the war, He takes the responsibility even for others' inauthenticity and others' irresponsibility and reestablishes dharma, the cosmic law of responsibilism. This is the job of an Incarnation.

1.22 that I may behold those who stand here desirous of fighting and, on the eve of this battle, let me know with whom I must fight.

When Bhīṣma sounded his conch, it invited in return the resounding response of the conches of the Pāṇḍava warriors. There is no mention by Sañjaya tha Bhīṣma's conch or the accompanying sounds of drums and trumpets from the Kaurava army caused any concern amongst the Pāṇḍava army.

What he says now is different. With the roar of the conches of the Pāṇḍava warriors, led by Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, Sañjaya says that the hearts of the sons of Dhṛitarāṣṭra were shattered.

The words used here are significant. He says that the blowing of the conches created vibrations in the sky and upon the earth. The conches of the Pāṇḍava princes and the great warriors were not mere musical instruments; they were imbued with divine presence. The sound that they produced when activated by their owners, were filled with great spiritual power. They were in fact mantra or sacred sounds, which created powerful vibrations affecting the environment. That is the uproar Sañjaya was talking about.

Sañjaya was able to see far beyond the superficial responses of individuals on the battlefield. With his powerful ājña, third eye vision, Sañjaya was able to fathom the unconscious and unravel the deep rooted patterns, emotions and responses of the warriors. Whatever may have been the perceived reaction of the Kaurava army to the response from the Pāṇḍava warriors, Sañjaya concludes that the Kaurava princes were demoralized, imbalanced. The armies went face-to-face. They were in military formation. The conches had sounded in anticipation. The warriors on both sides were waiting for their commanders to signal the first move in offense. Arjuna was at the forefront of the Pāṇḍava army. He had blown his conch, Devadatta, at the same time as Kṛṣṇa. Arjuna had taken up his divine bow Gāṇḍīva, and had fixed the arrow to the bow. However, instead of releasing the arrow, Arjuna looked at the Kaurava army amassed in front of him, with all the Kaurava princes, his cousins, facing him. He then addressed Kṛṣṇa, his friend, mentor, divine guide and charioteer.

Arjuna's chariot was a gift from Agni, the fire god. The chariot flew the flag of Hanumān, the monkey god, son of the wind god Vāyu, and the close confidante and disciple of Lord Rāma, the Incarnation of Viṣṇu prior to Kṛṣṇa. Hanumān had once blessed Bhīma that he would be with the Pāṇḍava princes at all times, and that he himself would ride upon Arjuna's flag, on his chariot. It is said that wherever Hanumān is, Śrī Rāma is present. So Arjuna is accompanied not only by Śrī Kṛṣṇa, but also by His earlier Incarnation Śrī Rāma. Arjuna and the Pāṇḍava princes were twice blessed.

The fire god Agni had requested Kṛṣṇa's help when Indra, chief of the demigods threatened to quench his fire with rain. Kṛṣṇa, accompanied by Arjuna, helped him by offering a forest that Agni could consume. Very pleased with this help, Agni gifted Arjuna with the Gāṇḍīva bow, a team of four horses, a chariot and two inexhaustible quivers and armor. For the first time in this scripture, Arjuna speaks. Arjuna is not the mere hero of Mahābhārat in this Gītā scripture. He is the embodiment of all humanity. He is Nara, the human aspect of Narāyaṇa, Lord Viṣṇu, who in turn is Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, as Narāyaṇa and Nara, as the Divine and human, is the theme that runs throughout Bhagavad Gītā and also much of the epic Mahābhārat.

'Achyuta, O Infallible One,' said Arjuna to his friend and mentor, 'Please take me to a vantage point between the two armies so that I can see for myself who I am fighting with. Let me see who is assembled here on this battlefield. Who has taken up arms to fight, and who are those I must be prepared to fight. Kṛṣṇa, please show me,' he says. 'Show me who I must vanquish.'

Arjuna already knew to the last man, each one who was on that battlefield at Kurukṣetra. He had no confusion about whom he was fighting and whom he had to face. All these decisions, the changing of loyalties, the dropouts, all these happened in the days before the war. The negotiations had all come to an end; the lines had been drawn very clearly, even if unwillingly in some cases.

It made no sense at all for Arjuna to ask Kṛṣṇa at this last minute to show him clearly who he was fighting against. It was as if he was hoping that at the last minute something would occur to change the course of events. If that were to happen, he knew that it could only take place through the grace of his charioteer, friend and guide. It is as if Arjuna was making a desperate plea to Kṛṣṇa, 'Please show me something that I do not know. Show me something that You alone know, Oh Achyuta (Infallible Divine). Take me there, where You will, and show me.'

1.24 Sañjaya said: O descendant of Bhārata, being thus addressed by Guḍākeśa (Arjuna), Hṛṣikeśa Kṛṣṇa then drew up the fine chariot in the midst of both armies.

Arjuna starts out on a challenging note. He says he would like to see all those who had assembled to fight him, in support of the evil minded Duryodhana. Accordingly, Kṛṣṇa drew up the chariot between the two armies so that Arjuna could have a good look at all those who had gathered.

Arjuna is being called Guḍakeśa in this verse - Guḍakeśana Bhārata, the one who has transcended sleep or the need to sleep. Sleep, here, also refers to the unconscious mind, the incomplete inner space. Please listen. Sleep is nothing but the rest we need to give to our tired inner chatter. Sleep is related to the incompletions of the mind. All our incompletions, that drive our actions, reside in our unconscious space as root thought patterns. Only thing we need to go beyond sleep is a complete inner space. Integrity brings deep sleep to us, makes us conquer tiredness and ultimately conquer sleep.

Arjuna's Integrity, the power of words

Integrity, the first spiritual principle, is the key which unlocks the power of words, or vākśakti.

Integrity is you fulfilling the word or thought you give to yourself and to others, and experiencing a state of completion, pūrṇatva with yourself and with life.

Integrity has two dimensions: honoring the words you give to yourself and honoring the words you give to others. Integrity means not just fulfilling, but honoring the word you give to you and others as your very life. Honoring the word you give to you is the key point.

Who is the first person to hear the words you utter? You. When you honor the words you give to yourself, your confidence in yourself grows and your self-doubt melts away. You become powerful. When you honor the words you give to others, others' confidence in you grows. Your relationship with that person becomes powerful. The words you utter are you. You become the words you speak to yourself and others. If you go on saying, 'I am sick, I am sick', you simply will become sick. In the same way, if you constantly tell yourself, 'I am healthy', your energy will wake up. You will be very healthy. Cosmic energy awakens in your system and makes your declarations a reality. It is important to choose the right words, because you can create your reality with the power of your words.

Every thought we complete is the word we give to us. We have to honor it. The first step of integrity is completing all the negative words we created within us about us and life and completing all of them. With integrity, our inner chatter disappears, it never becomes tired.

A person who does not have even one moment of powerlessness or incompletion in his life is an enlightened being. A person who never had any patterns, any incompletions in his life, right from his birth, is an Incarnation. Physically, mentally, and spiritually, Śrī Kṛṣṇa is the space of eternal completion. His senses are complete as He knows what He experienced through them is not the source of happiness. The relationship between Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna is the highest form of interaction between the Divine and the human.

You see, for one who is caught in the sleep of unconscious patterns, this world of illusion, māyā, appears utterly real. But the enlightened Master has awakened to the level of pure consciousness and knows that this world is just another type of dream. When the disciple is able to completely trust the Master's senses that this world is illusion, and not his own senses that give the incomplete pseudo-idea that this world is real and is the source of his happiness, then the surrender is total. When approaching the Divine or one's Master, the ultimate step is one of complete surrender.

Stages of Surrender

This surrender happens in three stages. At the first level it is an intellectual surrender - the intellectual acceptance of what the master represents and what he means to you. A true seeker reaches this stage when he encounters the real master destined for him. The seeker sees in the master, qualities he has been searching for, and answers to questions that have long arisen in his mind. At this stage, when the disciple meets the master, questions start dying down. It is as if answers come to one's mind even before questions happen.

Intellectual surrender to the master replaces inadequate questions with adequate doubts. Doubts are not violent or inauthentic questions. They do not arise from the root patterns or ego. They arise from a genuine, authentic need to know, to understand, and to create adequate, complete cognition. Despite his high level of surrender, one does see Arjuna initially in this state of questioning as well, perhaps as a lesson to us. Arjuna progresses during Gītā from the stage of questioning, to the higher stage of intellectual surrender and doubts. Ultimately, we must move beyond both doubt and faith to completion that creates a deep trust in the master, recognizing that everything the master expresses is for our liberation.

At the next level, one reaches the state of emotional surrender. From śāstras one moves to stotras, from the head to the heart. It is like coming home when the heart surrenders. One feels a deep connection with the master and without any effort remembers the master. It is impossible to forget Him. His memory brings tears to one's eyes, tears of gratitude that are impossible to hide.

Ramakrishna says so beautifully, 'When thinking of the Divine or the Master, if you have tears streaming down your cheeks, be very sure that this is your last birth.' Emotional surrender leads one close to liberation.

At the final level, there is the surrender of the senses. One truly realizes Hṛṣīkeśa and gives up one's distorted, incomplete sense of reality and embraces the truth of absolute reality of non-duality that the master and every enlightened sage have expressed. Arjuna is at that level of surrender and through the progression of the Gītā, layers of Arjuna's incompletions peel off.

Arjuna calls Duryodhana evil minded. This was to paint a contrast of his own state of mind to that of Duryodhana and rest of Kauravas. When one's mind is filled with patterns of greed, lust, envy and fear, there is a single-minded focus on the potential material benefits of these negative and evil emotions. There was no confusion in Duryodhana's mind as to what he should do. His objectives were clear - do away with the Pāṇḍava princes and usurp the entire kingdom, that's all.

Duryodhana was like an animal, operating out of instinct from his low-level consciousness. Unlike Arjuna, he was not an intelligent man and did not suffer from doubts and guilt. Animals suffer no guilt. They do not consider hunting their prey as something that needs discussion. If they are hungry, they hunt, kill and eat naturally. So it is with Duryodhana. He needs power, and whatever might be the means to achieve that power he will employ without any reservation.

A human being has a level of consciousness higher than that of animals; he can discriminate between right and wrong, between completion and incompletion, and has the free will to act based on such awareness. When a human behaves the way Duryodhana does, he is in an unconscious space, blindly driven by his self-denial patterns. Please understand, when we are driven by root thought patterns, we don't even know what we do, why we do, why we are making money, why we have married, why we are living.

As long as one is in darkness, one does not miss light. A person born blind has no idea what sight is, what light is and what he is missing. Whatever he may think he is missing is based on what others tell him, not because of his own experience. However, someone who is born with sight and subsequently loses it will miss it. He would be afraid of that darkness, which a person born blind would never fear because that would have always been his experience. Arjuna is in the state of a person who has had sight and has now lost it, who was in the light of completion, but fell into the darkness of incompletion. Yet, only in its own light, can a moon even see its dark patches. And so is Arjuna now seeing his incompletions face-to-face and blessed to have the Source of light, Kṛṣṇa to enlighten him. He is an intelligent man, but suddenly wondered whether what he was doing might be wrong and evil. So he is disturbed.

Duryodhana on the other hand has a mind that is always in darkness. He has never experienced true intelligence or completion. Therefore, words like 'immoral' or 'unethical,' 'out-of-integrity' or 'inauthentic,' 'dharma or adharma' would make no sense to him.

Kṛṣṇa parked the chariot between the two armies and said to Arjuna, 'Here are the people you wished to see.' Arjuna wanted to see those who were about to fight him and die, and Kṛṣṇa, with no mercy at all, showed him that these were Arjuna's near and dear ones.

Assembled in front of Arjuna were compatriots of his father Pāṇḍu, grandfathers and great grandfathers such as Bhīṣma, his own teachers such as Droṇa and Kṛpa, uncles such as Śakuni, brothers and cousins as all the Kaurava princes were, friends and well wishers. At one time or another, each of them had been an object of affection and respect to Arjuna. Now, they were part of this enemy army.

Arjunaviśāda - Root Pattern of a Thinking Man

The expression of Arjuna's dilemma starts here. The theme of Gītā is the story of Arjuna's dilemma, his incompletion and its completion by Kṛṣṇa.

As a warrior, as a kṣatriya, Arjuna was used to killing in battle. He was no stranger to death and violence. As long as those who faced him were his enemies Arjuna had no difficulty in carrying out the execution. However, those in front of him now were his relatives, people who actually were like his father, grandfathers, uncles, brothers, sons and grandsons, tied to him with bonds of blood. Many others were his friends with whom he had previously enjoyed bonds of loyalty and kinship. Arjuna's dilemma was not one of nonviolence, ahiṃsā. As a kṣatriya, this word had no place in his dictionary. His dilemma was one of violence, violence born out of his ego, his identity. He could kill people he did not identify with, but he could not bear to kill those whom he could relate with himself in one way or another. The bonds of family were far stronger than Arjuna had imagined. These bonds were rooted in his ego, and to cut these bonds was to destroy himself. This was Arjuna's dilemma.

What follows now is a bunch of fantasies, inauthenticies that Arjuna's mind weaves in an attempt to justify his dilemma. It is what the human mind conjures up time and again as its projection of the unconscious root thought patterns, trying to justify as authentic action.

Sañjaya says that Arjuna was overwhelmed with pity. Some translate this as compassion. Compassion, true compassion, which is the hallmark of an enlightened being, is non- discriminatory; it does not differentiate. When responsibility expresses through your heart, it is compassion. To the truly compassionate person, the whole world, of both living and nonliving beings, is an extension of his own self. Anything that hurts any object around such a person would hurt him, and he too would feel the pain.

However, Arjuna's emotion was discriminatory, inauthentic. He felt pity only because they were his kinsmen, only because he identified with them, not because of his authenticity and responsibility to enrich them, not because he felt that all of them were his own extensions, and so by not fighting them he would in turn not fight himself.

This was not compassion born out of ahiṃsā, nonviolence, but pity born out of hiṃsā, violence. Arjuna's emotions arose from his root pattern, his ego.

True compassion arises from a state of integrity and authenticity, the absence of ego where one's inner and outer identities are aligned, and one expresses peak of one's positivity and possibility. It arises from a state of responsibility and enriching, no-mind and no-thought, where the feelings of 'I' and 'mine' have disappeared and one realizes that one is the Source of everything and so one is responsible for everything, and that life is for enriching others. True compassion is a state of completion and bliss, one of true surrender to the Universe.

When we live these spiritual principles and express these four great powers, the individual self merges with the universal Self, and true compassion happens out of the space of completion with the cosmic consciousness; from the experience that one is part of that Brahman.

Arjuna's pity arose out of fear of losing his identity, his fear of expansion, his root pattern or ego. Arjuna was mortally afraid. He claimed that his throat was parched, his hair was standing on edge and his divine bow was slipping from his sweaty hands. If one did not know Arjuna better, one would have considered him a coward.

Arjuna was no coward. He had no fear for his own physical safety. He was not concerned that he might be injured or that he might die. As a warrior of warriors, these feelings were beneath him. But, Arjuna was afraid of breaking social and ethical laws. His values and beliefs, his bio-memories, his root thought patterns, told him that what he was doing was wrong and unacceptable. So powerful was this feeling that he was reeling, quivering, dazed and unable to think or function.

Can something like this really happen? Can a hero lose his composure and exhibit the physical symptoms of a frightened coward? A true hero to whom death is play, who is trained from childhood by the greatest of masters not only in the control of his body, his sleep, but of his mind as well? Arjuna's situation shows how the mind can play games with the best of us, how the root patterns can take over the mind in so powerful a manner as to make us powerless, without our awareness.

Arjuna was frightened that he would be held responsible for the death of his kinsmen, people who were father, grandfather and other such important figures to him. He was afraid that even if others did not blame him, he would suffer the guilt and regret for his actions for the rest of his life. So great was this fear root pattern of potential guilt, that it drove Arjuna into behaving inauthentically like a coward. All he could foresee was disaster and evil all around him.

At another, far deeper level, Arjuna was terrified of his own destruction. The moment one starts identifying with kinsmen, family, friends and relatives, it is a material identification. It is an identification born out of possession arising from one's ego, from the incomplete feeling of 'I' and 'mine.'

Possession is born of attachment, and leads to attachment as well. There can be no feeling of possessing something unless one is attached to it. People speak of attachment, liking and love. All these are valid only as long as a sense of possession exists. The moment the object of love turns around and displays independence and unwillingness to be possessed, the liking and the love disappears.

Possession arises out of our survival need, from our mūlādhāra cakra, an energy center located at the base of the spine. It is a primal feeling that yokes us to mother Earth. Out of the need for possession, feelings of lust, greed and anger arise. Often what one cannot possess, one wants to destroy.

'What I cannot have, let no one have,' we often feel, out of our incompletion.

Possession leads to violence. It is also the deep-rooted desire for possessions, the feeling of 'mine,' that gives rise to your identity 'I.' The need to possess does not stem from your identity. It is the other way around. 'Mine' leads to 'I,' not 'I' to 'mine.' This is why you cannot eliminate your identity till you renounce your attachment to all your desires and possessions. You need to get rid of the 'mine' first. Only then the 'I' disappears.

Understand, incompletions will make you feel the whole world should be yours. Incompletions will continue to make you feel you can own, possess the whole world. Incompletions continuously make you exploit others.

Arjuna is in this mood and frame of mind. It strikes him at the moment of waging war, that what he is about to destroy are his own possessions. These are his own kinsmen, a part of his own identity. If he were to destroy them he will be destroying a part of his own self, his own mind-body system. It is true that when someone dear to us dies, a part of our mind-body system dies with them. Arjuna was aware of this. He knew that the destruction of so many of his near and dear ones, his kinsmen, would take a massive toll on him. It would be akin to committing suicide.

Arjuna's dilemma was an existential one. What is the point of eliminating others, if it results in one's own elimination? It is a dilemma born out of partial understanding, an incomplete cognition, a peek into the truth of collective consciousness. If Arjuna were to be as unaware as Duryodhana, this doubt would have never entered his mind. Were he enlightened as Kṛṣṇa was, the answer would have been obvious. Arjuna was in between, hence his dilemma.

Why should I destroy myself? What for? These are the questions that naturally follow this line of reasoning. Arjuna was far wiser than many modern philosophers in posing this as a doubt, without venturing into any answers himself.

Here, Arjuna is undergoing a process of transformation; he is going to rewrite his future. He started off in this war with the basic assumptions of the kṣatriya codes of conduct, on which his outer image, ahaṁkāra was formed. When challenged, a kṣatriya must fight; that is his code of honor. Arjuna had no self-doubt in doing this as he was brought up in this belief system, this default societal pattern.

Utter confusion, dilemma is the first thing any person has to face in his life for Enlightenment. Arjuna has become a seeker of Truth. He was no longer satisfied with what he had imbibed all these years - śāstras, stotras and Sūtras. He wished to go beyond. He questioned them, as he had doubts. He was in a dilemma.

Arjuna Viśāda Yogaḥ is the name given to this first chapter of Gītā. Viśāda can mean many things in Sanskṛit - grief, sorrow, despondency, despair, depression, powerlessness, dilemma and such. Here what we see is the dilemma that Arjuna was in, not knowing whether what he had been taught all his life, and what he had believed to be true, was really true after all.

Arjuna's actual inner image, his whole mamakāra that was hidden from him, his root pattern of attachment, his deep fear of expansion, and his inauthenticities are now being exposed by Kṛṣṇa.

The transformation that Kṛṣṇa leads him to over the eighteen chapters is the revelation of truth to Arjuna, and to all humanity.

1.36 Killing these sons of Dhritarashtra, what pleasure can be ours, O Janardana? Sin alone will be our gain by killing these felons.

Arjuna now started developing his theme in detail. He started expressing his doubts with clarity. One may ask, 'How can such doubts be clear?'

Doubts need to be clear if they are to be resolved. Thoughts need to be integrated if they need to be complete. A clearly expressed word is fulfillment. The word which constantly keeps you in completion and expands you is Integrity.

Everything starts with the word. Unclear doubts lead only to more confusion. Thoughts and words lacking integrity lead to more and more incompletions. Unintelligent beings that lack integrity have unclear doubts.

Integrated Listening to Yourself

Arjuna's doubts were precise. Arjuna started listening to himself. Listening to you is the first step to spirituality. Constantly listening to your inner space is the beginning of integrity. Listening brings integrity into our words. We never ever really listen, either to ourselves or to others. When you really start listening to yourself, you will naturally become more aware of the words you give to yourself and others. You will also have the ability to listen to others' words with integrity.

Listening is directly connected to your ability to handle reality as it IS, without creating your own unconscious ideas and conclusions. When you don't have listening, you always come to a conclusion even before the information is cognized in you. That is why the very first step of Hindu spiritual practice is śravana, Integrated Listening.

Because Arjuna was listening to himself, he started thinking with integrity. When we bring integrity in our thinking, the first thing is that we will know what is happening inside us. Arjuna has clarity about the doubts arising inside him, and is now exposed to his own inauthenticities. How could he seek happiness through destruction of his kinsmen, he asked. How could any good come out of this action? How could he desire power, possessions and pleasures through such action? And if he did gain those things as a result of killing his family, of what use would such a life be to him?

Though Arjuna was in a dilemma, it was a dilemma born out of intelligence, not out of ignorance. Arjuna had been taught all his life to seek power, possessions and pleasures, and he had done it. Up to this point, he had not come across a single situation where the cost of acquiring these had seemed to be greater than the accruing profit, the resulting enjoyment. Perhaps he had never bothered to evaluate the cost and benefits.

The ideas we carry about our old failures - every idea we carry about the past - is wrong. Before changing our future, by avoiding or replicating our past, we need change our past. Unless we change our past, we cannot change our future. We will immediately think, 'How can I change my past? It has already happened.' No! The idea we carry about our past is completely wrong. We are not carrying it as it happened. We are carrying the edited version, with all the sound effects, volume effects and music effects, etc.

People usually say, 'Don't bother about the past, change your future!' I tell you, don't bother about the future; change your past. Because your future lies in the past. Change your past. The hangover you carry about the past is the disease you carry. Unless you complete with the past, your past cannot be transformed.

Not having the hangover with the words you committed with you and with others, is Integrity. Not having the load of the past negativity is Integrity. Positivity means absence of the load of the past negativity. Integrity starts only when we are in a state of completion, when we complete with root thought pattern.

Very few of us stop and bring integrity to our thinking and question the purpose and value of our actions. With few exceptions, we are taught how to live and what to do with our lives, first by our families and later by society. We do our best to seek fulfillment and make a contribution in the way our earliest life incidents, our patterns drive us. Most often, we are taught the wrong mediocre ideas about life, and we are so busy just trying to keep up with our personal and professional commitments, that it never occurs to us to ask ourselves whether we are truly fulfilled and successful. Never do we doubt, 'Why am I doing what I am doing?' Instead, our lives become a constant series of 'what next, what next?'

'What is the Why of my Life?' cries Arjuna

It takes a lot of courage of authenticity to bring integrated listening to our thinking, to stop and question our lives, our actions and society's plan for us. Understand, the attitude of asking 'WHY' needs awareness, but we forget to ask the 'why'. We don't take our thoughts, words and deeds to the logical conclusion. It takes authenticity, the power of thinking, the inner strength to say to the world, 'Stop, I want to get off; I want to know why am I doing, what I am doing? I want to seek true inner bliss!'

'What is the purpose of my life, Kṛṣṇa?' wailed Arjuna. Arjuna is now thinking with integrity and questioning himself, his training and his purpose when faced with the task of fighting against his kinsmen. The scene from his chariot has taken him off balance. In his heart he knows that what he is about to do is correct. All of his training as a kṣatriya confirms this as well. But when faced with the reality of actually killing those who have been near and dear to him, he loses his will. He is feeling completely powerless. Why?

Arjuna is a courageous man. Only a courageous person will have the confidence to open himself up so transparently and expose his innermost fear patterns, his lack of integrity and inauthenticities and seek help. Arjuna was not depressed or He was not afraid in the obvious sense.

Arjuna was confused. Based upon all his training and society's guidance, Arjuna could certainly differentiate between right and wrong. His sudden confusion grew out of his awareness of his parental and societal patterns that what he had been taught throughout his life might be wrong. Fortunately for Arjuna, his charioteer is none other than Kṛṣṇa Himself, Lord of all beings and knower of all. Only He can see what is at the heart of Arjuna's grief. Only He could provide answers to Arjuna's doubts and completion to Arjuna's dilemma.

Arjuna's dilemma had now become deeper and more complicated. He had now got into justifications as to why he should not kill. Justifications that have no merit from the standpoint of a warrior. He began giving reasons after reasons to justify his lack of integrity and authenticity. To any observer, his dilemma had validity. But now, he tries to convince himself through further arguments that actually lack strength. Arjuna's mind was playing tricks on him.

Constantly functioning at your peak possibility is Authenticity. Authenticity is the key that unlocks the power of thinking, mano śakti.

Arjuna said he would not kill even if he were to be killed. This is just a spontaneous lie that his mind is imposing on him. Spontaneous lying means you feel powerless. You are inauthentic to yourself. It is Arjuna's own loss of identity that is bothering him, the loss of identity that would result from the destruction of his lineage. Arjuna then went on to say that he would not consider killing his kinsmen and teachers, even if he were offered all the three worlds of this universe in return. Why then, he queries, would the reward of just this planet Earth, be attractive to him?

Arjuna was afraid to lose his own identity through the loss of so many well- established relationships in his life. However, that truth would hurt him and he was not prepared to see it. It might have been well hidden in his unconscious root patterns. For the majority of us, our identity lies in the roles we play, the responsibilities that we have, the worrying we do and the acceptance that we receive from others. Without these possessions and relationships to form the foundation of our personalities, without the foundation of 'mine,' we feel lost and have no 'I.' Like us, Arjuna found it better to invent a host of other inauthentic reasons to avoid facing the truth.

We create illusions in our mind about the situations we face, about how critical they are to our existence. Then we create fantasies in our minds about what is going to happen to us, be it an imagined good result or a difficulty. We do everything except being in integrity and authenticity with our space of positivity and possibility, and facing the present moment with completion.

As we will see later, facing the present moment with the space of completion, pūrṇatva; living the four spiritual principles of life - integrity, authenticity, responsibility and enriching - and awakening the four great inner powers is precisely what Kṛṣṇa forces Arjuna to do.

When Arjuna is able to surrender to Kṛṣṇa's teachings and brings completion to his root patterns, his self-doubts and illusions dissolve. Arjuna then realizes the truth, satya of these sacred tattvas and reaches his highest possibility of living enlightenment, jīvan mukti. He understands what he needs to do and becomes a spiritual warrior, a pure instrument of Kṛṣṇa and goes about powerfully radiating responsibility, enriching himself and the world with Divine purpose.

Good Men Do Not Kill

kathaṃ na jñeyamasmābhiḥ pāpādasmānnivartitum

kulakṣayakṛtaṃ doṣaṃ prapaśyadbhirjanārdana 1-39

1.39 Why should not we, who clearly see evil in the destruction of the family-units, learn to turn away from this sin, O Janardana?

Here is Arjuna's dilemma spoken plainly. He had two options and is looking to be convinced of one or the other. The first was that going to battle was wrong, especially against his kinsmen. Therefore he should cease and resist, walk away from the war before it starts. All his arguments up to this point were in this line of thinking. At the same time, Arjuna was open to the possibility that what he had set out to do was indeed correct, in which case he would go back into battle mode, as a true kṣatriya would do.

To begin with had Arjuna been totally convinced that war against his kinsmen was wrong, he would not have come to the battlefield. It was his lack of integrity that raised within him the question of retreat from his duty. To Arjuna's credit, he listened to himself, to what his mind had to say and turned to the Master for guidance. He allowed Kṛṣṇa to speak into his listening. Understand, the whole spiritual life starts with authentic listening. Arjuna's mind now brings up one more argument. Arjuna agreed that Duryodhana and his allies were the aggressors and wrongdoers. Whatever they had done to him, his brothers and his wife was not pardonable, and they needed to be punished for that. The laws of the land would concur. By all rights Arjuna would have been quite justified in attacking and killing those wrongdoers for what they had done. 'But,' Arjuna asked, 'Would one wrong be corrected by another wrong? How can I be happy killing my kinsmen, however justified I might be in doing that? Their misdeeds cannot be remedied by my misdeed and that would only make me miserable.'

Arjuna's Violence Erupts

There are two incompletions central to Arjuna's dilemma. The first incompletion is that of relationship. The problem that Arjuna faced is one that we all face when asked to do unpleasant things to people we know. It is always easier to criticize and punish people one does not know. To be faceless is to be fearless. With people one knows, there is a danger of breaking the relationship through perceived negative behavior, even when it may be fully justified. To face this incompletion in one's relationships, one must first break the connection or develop a sense of detachment that allows action without worrying about the consequences. This detachment only comes from completion with every relationship with oneself and with others in one's life. One follows the path of completion and leaves the result to the process. As long as the path is right, whatever destination the path takes one to, will also be right.

Completion is removing the delusion of incompletion, which makes you cognize that the other is separate from you. Understand, incompletion has no existence; it is only a delusive cognition. Incompletion is the delusive cognition that stands between you and the Whole. Complete with everything.

To overcome this isolation, this incompletion we need to realize that no man is an island. We are all connected at the spiritual level. When we complete with everything, animate and inanimate, we will experience the space of non-duality, advaita, where there is no one, no two but infinite, everything is infinitely powerful. See, relationships are nothing but our own extensions. Relationships are not outside; they are just our own extensions. The 'you' extended outside you is our relationships. Completing with all our extensions, we will learn to complete the incomplete 'you,' if present in other.

The other incompletion that Arjuna faces is the problem of directness of action. In a war of this type, Arjuna faced transparent consequences of his action. If he shot an arrow and killed a kinsman, death was a direct result of his action. Arjuna did not have the luxury of remote destruction. He had to look the victim in the eye before releasing his arrow. He was aware of whom he was killing and why. He felt the destruction within himself when he killed someone else.

Arjuna was affected by the combination of these two delusory incompletions: that of being connected by kinship to his enemies and the fact that he had to kill them directly and personally. It affected him because he was not a Duryodhana, who was in self-denial about the consequences of his actions. It affected Arjuna because he was not a Kṛṣṇa who would have taken responsibility for his and everyone's good or bad actions, being in the powerful space of completion at all times. Arjuna was neither Kṛṣṇa nor Duryodhana. His mind was doubting that he might be doing wrong, but his mind had not yet ascended to be able to complete with his kinship bonds. This was Arjuna's dilemma. This was Arjuna's incompletion.

Earlier Arjuna said that even if his kinsmen had made big mistakes, he should not repeat the same mistakes; even if offered the entire Universe. He said that his kinsmen blinded by greed for power, were in darkness that saw nothing wrong in destroying one another and their own kinsmen. He asked Kṛṣṇa, 'Shouldn't we be distancing ourselves from these people and their attitudes, we who are not ignorant, not in darkness and not blinded?'

Now, he condemned the same kinsmen, his svajanam that he had referred to so passionately a few moments earlier; the same people who he claimed to hold in great respect and affection and therefore did not wish to kill. He shifted gears now and moved from the position of not killing them because they were his flesh and blood to a greater moral position of not wishing to kill them because it was morally reprehensible.

Arjuna said that destruction of the lineage, the dynasty, is evil, and that he recoiled from such a deed even though his opponents had no such compunction, blinded as they were by greed. Arjuna's dilemma now jumps to a larger arena. It was now a matter of tradition and respect for the lineage that could be traced back to the moon and divine beings, and an old, established tradition that would be a sin to dismantle and destroy. It's no longer about individuals; it is about the destruction of a race that had existed for thousands of years. How could he be expected to carry out such a horrible act, he pleaded.

In Arjuna's mind this was a big self-doubt. Killing a few individuals, even if kinsmen, was a mistake. Killing a whole generation was a far bigger sin, and now he was expected to destroy a whole race, the foundations of a proud and legendary dynasty. How could the future generations forgive him? This was how the argument of Arjuna's dilemma shifted. His incompletions led to greater and greater delusory incompletions, from individual to racial destruction. When Arjuna talks about the threat to his dynasty, it arises out of a fear of his own mortality.

He has asked, 'Even if I am to die, as I must, should I not ensure the continuance of my dynasty that bears my signature, my identity, my DNA?'

Arjuna is pleading with Kṛṣṇa, 'Please tell me, am I right? Please tell me, should I withdraw from this battle?' Arjuna is now violently asking for a single instruction to escape the fear of losing his identity on which his mamakāra, inner image is built. Understand, Arjuna's identity is based on his kṣatriya up-bringing, the mentality of a warrior. Asking for one single instruction comes from his mentality of fighting, of violence that always excludes. In a fight who is the winner? Only one. In survival instinct, who is the winner? Only one.

The Plot Thickens

utsannakuladharmāṇāṃ manuṣyāṇāṃ janārdana
narake niyataṃ vāso bhavatītyanuśuśruma || 1.44 ||

1.44 O Janārdana, I have heard that those who destroy family traditions dwell always in hell.

By now, Arjuna had become desperate. His arguments seemed weak, even to him. They include the tragic impact this war would have on future generations and the entire Kuru race. Arjuna starts quoting the scriptures of social laws to explain to Kṛṣṇa the evil his destructive actions would bring to the noble lineage, which would lead to the decline in commitment to the rites and rituals that make society civilized and moral. He then elaborated upon these immoral and unrighteous acts.

Arjuna's doubts about caste pollution had no scriptural base or merit. What he referred to became the societal norm because of human greed, the collective root patterns of society. There were many instances of caste mixture even in the great Kuru lineage that Arjuna claimed would be destroyed. Satyavati, his great grandmother, was a fisherman's daughter who his great grandfather, Śāntanu, became infatuated with. Arjuna himself had wives who were not of kṣatriya lineage by birth. He talked as if mired in total confusion when he linked practice of rites and rituals with morality and chastity. His logic was distorted.

Rites and rituals, as prescribed in the scriptures, are an expression of one's inner completion. Completion is not created by blind practice of rites and rituals. Arjuna voiced the sentiments of organized religion and priesthood, which derive their power and monetary base from such rites and rituals. This is how, in each culture and religion, the power of the priestly class was established, as if they were the sole mediators to God.

Arjuna talked about ancestral worship and implied that the offspring of mixed caste have no right to make offerings to their ancestors, leaving them lost in the realms beyond death. It is the confusion that has prevailed over the ages that Arjuna captured and presented. He raises doubts on behalf of mankind and seeks clarification. There are no ancestral spirits waiting to be pacified by us. If the spirit is enlightened it merges with the infinite energy. If not, it gets reborn within three kṣanas, three moments.

Completion is the space and state where you will be totally connected with life and with people in your life in the present moment without any limiting, restraining influence of the past happening in your life.

The essence of the Gītā is about living in the space of Completion in the present moment. Ramakrishna Paramahamsa used to say that the Gītā is 'tāgi', a corruption of the word 'tyāg' that means renunciation or surrender. Gītā is about surrendering the past and the future incompletions to the present and experiencing completion.

The Breakdown Into Powerlessness

सञ्जय उवाच ।
एवमुक्त्वार्जुनः सङ्ख्ये रथोपस्थ उपाविशत् ।
विसृज्य सशरं चापं शोकसंविग्नमानसः ॥ १-४७॥ sañjaya uvāca
evamuktvārjunaḥ saṅkhye rathopastha upāviśat
visṛjya saśaraṃ cāpaṃ śokasaṃvignamānasaḥ || 1.47 ||

1.47 Sañjaya said: Having said this on the battlefield, Arjuna cast aside his bow and arrows and sat down on the chariot, his mind overwhelmed with grief.

Arjuna was ready to give up on himself. He had collapsed both psychologically and physiologically. His cognition was totally imbalanced and he was now completely powerless. He was all set to run away from the battlefield and escape from the reality of his responsibility.

He had convinced himself through his own illusory arguments that what he had embarked upon was pure evil, nothing but evil, and therefore he wanted no part of it. He said, 'I am ready to lay down arms and be defenseless. Let Duryodhana and his men kill me.'

For a kṣatriya to say this means one of two things: His act is one of total surrender, or the powerlessness of extreme confusion born out of his root patterns. A kṣatriya warrior, a supreme warrior such as Arjuna knows no fear. It is neither fear of death nor fear of injury that compels him to say what he did.

Arjuna was not in a space of total surrender yet. Nor was he in the space of ahiṁsā, nonviolence. He was not in tune with the cosmic consciousness, the space of non-duality, advaita, the experiential expression of infinity to say 'Killing others is killing myself, as I feel they are one with me.' His arguments about not killing his kinsmen being like killing himself were born out of his incompletions, and not out of self-realization or completion.

Arjuna's desperation, his feeling of powerlessness and helplessness arose from his dilemma, which was becoming more extreme by the minute. Arjuna was an intelligent man, a thoughtful man who was accustomed to the light of clarity but who was now in darkness. He was torn between his responsibilities as a kṣatriya prince, and the scriptural codes of morality.

Arjuna was now a true example of mankind. He was being human. He was torn between darkness and light, between patterns and possibility. He was experiencing the deep conflict between the unconscious patterns that were driving him and the possibility, the reality of what he ought to do. The clarity that would come about with the grace of the greatest Master, would be his Enlightenment, his complete Completion.

The darkness that surrounded Arjuna at this stage was māyā, the illusion that prevents all human beings from perceiving the Truth of Reality that pervades all our experiences. Yā mā iti māyā - that which is not real but appears as absolute is māyā. Māyā is not unreal in the sense that it does not exist. Māyā truly exists as reality. It veils, it covers Reality, the ultimate Truth, the Truth of our inner divinity, our infinite powerfulness; and therefore it is unreal, an illusion.

Had Arjuna been enlightened as Kṛṣṇa, he would not have been tormented by the play of his māyā. Had Arjuna been a Duryodhana, or even a Bhīma whose individual consciousness was not awakened, he would have accepted the māyā without question and yet not been tormented by it. But, Arjuna is Nara, he is intelligent and he is partially awakened, a seeker. He is in the presence of the greatest of all Masters. He is struggling to rid himself of his māyā and seek clarity.

It is Arjuna's root pattern that created the māyā of powerlessness in him. His own unaligned identities and his own identification with who he was, along with his conviction that he should preserve his lineage - all these delusory incompletions created the illusion in him that he was something other than who he was. These gaps between his identities created the self-doubt in him that he should do something other than what he was there to do.

Just as we learned how to stop feeling blissful, we can also learn how to 'un-stop' that stopping of bliss. We can relearn how to connect with our blissful nature again. That is the process Arjuna was going through. He had lost his awareness of inner bliss because of his root patterns and was in the deep throes of despair arising from his incompletions. The process of relearning, the process of inner awakening at the hands of the Master was about to begin. If we become integrated and authentic of that process, if we follow that process carefully over the eighteen chapters that the Master takes His disciple through, we too can become awakened, complete and blissful.
